1. Quest. Whether is a man bound to forgiue all debts? Ans. The word debt, in this place is not vnderstood of debt that is ciuill & comes by lawfull bargaining, but of hurts and damages which are done vnto vs in our bodies, goods, or good name. As for the former ciuill debts, a man may exact them, so he doe it with shewing of mercy.

2. Quest. How may any man forgiue trespasses, seeing God onely forgiues sins. Ans. In euery trespass which any doe to their neighbours, there be two offences, one to God, another to man. In the first respect, as it is against God and his commandement, it is called a sinne; and that God onely forgiues; in the other respect it is called an iniurie or damage, and so man may forgiue it. When a man is robbed, the law is broken by stealing, and the iniury that is done, is against a man that hath goods stolen. This iniury, as it is an iniury, a man may forgiue; but as it is a sin, he cannot, but God onely.

3. Quest. whether may a man lawfully pray this petition, and yet sue him at the law, who hath done him wrong? Answer. A man may in an holy manner sue another for an iniury: and as a soldiour in lawfull warre may kill his enemy, and yet loue him: so may a man forgiue an iniury, & yet seeke in a Christian manner the remedie: but in doing of this we must obserue three things. 1. We are to take heede of all priuate reuenge in inward hatred; which if we conceiue, we doe not forgiue. 2. We must take heede of offence, and haue care that our doings bee not scandalous to the Church. 3. Our suites must be taken in hand to maintaine godly peace: for if all iniuries were put vp, there would be no ciuill state or gouernment. 4. This must be, that the partie offending may be chastised, and be brought to repentance for his fault: for if many men were not repressed, they would grow worse. 5. Law must be the last remedie. As Physicians vse desperate remedies, when weaker will not serue: euen so must we vse law, as the last meane when all others faile. The dealing of the world in this case is no example for vs to follow. For through rage and stomacke men will abide no priuate agreement, and therefore they vse the law in the first place, as the Corinthians did: but what saith Paul, 1. Cor. 6. 7. It is utterly a fault among you. But if the law be vied aright, a Christian man may sue his neighbour at law, and loue the partie sued: for there is difference betweene dealing against a man before a magistrate, and the dealing of one priuate man with another. For priuate dealing is commonly reuenge, and therefore vnlawfull.

3. The vs.

The vse of this clause is very profitable, for it shewes vs a liuely signe, whereby our consciences may be assured of the pardon of our finnes, namely, a readinesse and willing desire to forgiue men. Many vse these words long and often, yet finde no assurance of pardon: and the cause is; because they haue no desire of Gods mercie, nor willingness to forgiue others, which if indeed they had, then no doubt the forgiuenesse of their finnes should by this meane be sealed vnto them. Wherefore if any would be persequed of Gods mercie in this point, let them descend into their owne soules and search narrowly, if they can finde their hearts as ready to forgiue, as they are ready to desire forgiuenes at Gods hand, then they may assure themselves of Gods mercie in Christ, as we are taught by our Saviour Christ, Math. 5. 7. Blessed are the mercifull, for they shall obtaine mercie. Consider these comparisons. A man walking vnder a wall in a colde sunny day, is heated of the wall, which first receiued heate from the Sunne: so he that sheweth mercie to others, hath first receiued mercie from God. Also take a piece of waxe, and put to a seale; it leaueth an impression or marke like it selfe in the waxe; which when a man looks on, he doth certainly know that there hath bin a seale, the print whereof is left behinde. Euen so it is in euery one that hath a readinesse to forgiue others: by which a Christian may easily know that God hath sealed to him the forgiuenesse of his finnes in his very heart: therefore let men look into their hearts, whether they haue any affection to forgiue others, for that is as it were the print in their hearts of Gods mercie towards them in forgiuing them.

Many there are which pray for pardon at Gods hands, but they cannot brooke it, that they should forgiue their neighbours. Hereupon come these sayings: I may forgiue him, but I will not forget him: he may come in my Psalm, but he shall neuer come in my Creed. Behold the diuels logick, which makes malice to be charitable. Blinde people play with the Lords prayer, as the fle doth with the candle till thee be burnt: for the more they pray these words, the more they call for vengeance against themselves, 1. Iam. 2. 13. Neither will it help to omit this clause, as some haue done in Chrysostome daies: for this is euen to mocke God: & if we doe not forgiue, we shall not be forgiuen.

Leade vs not into temptation, but deliuer vs from euill.

1. The Coherence.

It might seeme to some, that this petition is superfluous, for what need he care for temptations, that hath the pardon of his sins? but our Saviour did not reach vs thus to pray with our speciall reason. 1. Because forgiuenesse of sins, and grievous temptations be inseparable companions in this life: which thing we find to be true, both in Gods word & in Christian experience: for there is no man in this world so beaten and buffeted with temptations, as the penitent sinner that cries most bitterly for the pardon of his finnes. This is the estate that few men in the world are acquainted with. For many are neuer troubled with temptation, but lue in all peace and quietnes both in body and soule. Luk. 11. 21. When the strong man armed keeps his hold, the things that he possesseth are in peace. Whereby is signified, that the wicked of the world being possessed of Satan, are not a whit molested by him with any temptations: neither neede hee trouble

them, seeing he hath them at commandment to do what he will. But when a man once begins to make conscience of sinne; and to sue vnto the Lord for pardon of his offences, and still continues in dislike of sinne and Satan; then the enemie belittles him, and vntill he meanes to bring that man to confusion: hee offereth all manner of temptations to molest him, and neuer affords this poore sinner any rest. Hereupon, for feare of being overcome, he must pray continually vnto the Lord, that he may not be led into temptation.

Here some Christian conscience may reason thus: No man is so troubled with sinne and Satan, as I: therefore I am not in Gods fauour, but am a plaine cast-away. Ans. If pardon of sinne and temptations goe together, all is contrary. If thou hadst no griefe for sinne, no buffetings of thine enemies, the flesh, the world, and the diuell; thou couldst not be in Gods fauour; but vnder the power of Satan: now this great measure of the spirituall temptations, is a signe rather of Gods loue. For whom God loues, the diuell hates; and where God works in loue, the diuell works in malice.

2. Secondly, this petition is ioyned with the former, to teach vs, that as we must be careful to pray for pardon of sins past; so also we must endeavour to prevent sinnes to come; we must not fall againe into our old sinnes; neither must we be overtaken with new sinnes.

2. The meaning.

These words be but all one petition; which hath two parts, the later being a declaration of the former. Leade vs not into temptation: how is that done? by deliuering vs from euill.

Temptation. Temptation is nothing else, but the enticement of the foule or heart, either by the corruption of mans nature, or the allurements of the world, or the diuell, to any sinne. 1. Sam. 1. 13. God temptes no man: that is, God moues no man to sinne.

Leade vs not. Or carry vs not into temptation. To be led, isto be overcome of the temptation, when it preuailes and wholly gets the victory, so as men tempted are brought to perdition. Then the meaning is this; When we are moued or enticed to sinne, Lord keepe vs that we be not overcome; and thus thou art in sinne with the temptation.

Quæst. God is iust and cannot sin: but if he leade men into temptation, shall he not be the author of sinne? Ans. Indeed many fearing to charge God with sinne; reade the words thus, Suffer vs not to be led. But the text is very plaine, Leade vs carry vs not. And the Scriptures elsewhere vse the like phrases of God: Exod. 7. 2. God is said to harden Pharaohs heart. 2. Ez. 24. 1. The Lord moued Dauid to number the people.

2. Thes. 2. 1. 1. God hath strong delusions that men might beleue lies. These and such places haue a special meaning, thus to be gathered: There is no action of man, or of the diuell, absolutely euill; but although in some respects it be euill, yet in some other it is good: for we are not to think that as there is a maine or absolute good, so also there is a maine or absolute euill. Thus then, temptation being an actio, it is not in euery respect euill; but in some good, in some euill. And so farre forth as it is good, the Lord workes it; but as it is euill, he doth not worke it, but willingly permits it to be done by man & Satan.

And there be foure respects in which God may be a worker in temptations, and yet bee free from sinne: 1. First, hee tempteth by offering occasions and obiects to trie whether a man will sinne or not. A master suspecting his seruants, which in word professeth fidelitie, laies a purse of money in his way, to try if he will steale it: which if he stealeth, he hath found by watching him, a secret thiefe; and so hath laid him open for deceiuing any more. Now, this trying of him is no sin, though hee sinne in stealing. In the same manner God tempteth his owne seruants, to proue and trie them. Deut. 1. 3. 3. Thou shalt not hearken vnto the words of the prophets or dreamers of dreames: for the Lord thy God proueth you, to know whether ye loue the Lord your God with all your heart.

2. Secondly, God leades into temptation by withholding his grace. Neither can this be a sinne in God: because he is bound to no man to giue him grace. And here is a difference betweene the tempting of God and Satan. God holdes backe grace when he tempts, the diuell suggels euill motions.

3. Euery action, so farre forth as it is an actio, is good, & of God. Act. 17. 28. In him we liue moue, and haue our being. Therefore God is a worker in temptations so far forth as they are actions. One man kills another the very mouing of the body in the doing of this villany is of God: but the wickednesse of the action is from man and the diuell. A man rides vpon a lame horse, and stirres him: the rider is the cause of the motion, but the horse himselfe of the halting in the motion: So God is author of the action, but not of the euill of the action.

4. The fourth way is in regard of the end. God tempts his seruants onely to correct and humble them for their sins, to trie how they will abide the crosse, and to moue them the more to loue him. Deut. 8. 1. God afflicts the children of Israel, so tryeth them whether they would keepe his commandments. 2. Chr. 32. 31. He trieth Ezechias so for what was in his heart. The diuels end in tempting, is onely to bring the partie to destruction. Thus wee neede not feare to say, that God in some respects doth tempt his owne seruants.

Deliver vs from euill. That is, free vs from the power of the flesh, or the diuell, & the world. Some take euill in this place only for the diuell, but we may take it more largely for all spirituall enemies. 1. Ioh. 1. 9. The whole world lies in euill. viz. vnder the power of sin and Satan. These words (as I haue said) are a prooffe & explanation of the former: for when a man is deliuered from euill, he is not led into temptation; the cause being taken away, the effect ceaseth.

3. The

3. The vses.

1. Hence we learne what a righteous God, Iehouah is, that can worke in euill actions, and yet be void of sinne.

2. Whereas wee say, leade vs not, &c. Wee note that the diuel in temptations can goe no further then God permits him.

3. We are not to pray that temptations be quite taken from vs, or that we be wholly freed from them: but that they doe not overcome vs. For it is the Lords will that his Church should be tempted. Nay, Dauid desired some kinde of temptations. Psal. 26. 1. Proue me, O Lord. And Iames saith, Account it for exceeding ioy, when yee shall fall into diuers temptations. 1. am. 1. 2.

4. Note also that euery man by nature is the bondslane of sinne and Satan. For where is deliuerance, there was a bondage first. This confutes the Papists who maintaine freewill for we are dead in sinne by nature, as a man in a graue; and we must still pray thus till wee be fully deliuered.

4. Wants to be bewailed.

The corruption, which in this petition wee ought to mourne for, is the continuall rebellion of our wicked natures; and our pronenesse to yeld vp our felues in euery temptation to sinne and Satan. And the remnants of the old bondage vnder Satan must be grievous & irksome vnto vs, and we must beaile them bitterly. The Iewes in a bodily captiuitie, wept when they remembered Sin. Pl. 137. How much more should we weepe, when we feeble the law of our members rebelling against the law of our mindes, and leading vs captiue to sinne?

5. Graces to be desired.

The contrary blessing to be desired, is that God would stablish vs by his free spirit, Psal. 51. 12. Which is so called, because it sets vs euery day more and more at libertie out of the reach of sinne and Satan.

For thine is the kingdom, the power, and glorie, for euer.

1. The meaning.

These words containe a reason of all the former petitions: whereby we are moued to craue things needfull at Gods hand.

Thine is Earthly kings haue Kingdome, power, and glory, Dan. 2. 37. yet not from themselves, but from God, whose vicegerents they are on earth. Therefore to make a difference betweene Gods kingdom, power and glory, & those of earthly kings, it is said, Thine is the kingdom, &c. that is, that God hath all these in himselfe, and from himselfe, & men from him.

The kingdom. These words, 1. Chron. 29. 11. are fully expounded, Thine, O Lord, is greatness, power, and victory, and praise: and all that is in heauen and earth is thine: thine is the kingdom, and thou exaltest as head over all, &c. The kingdom is said to be Gods, because he is absolute possessor.

A seffour and owner of all things that are; and also hath foueraigne rule ouer all things at his will. Now out of the first propertie of God we may gather a strong motive to induce vs to pray vnto him alone. For seeing all things are his, both in heauen and earth whatsoeuer; therefore we must come to him for the graces and blessings which wee desire.

The power. Oftentimes earthly Princes haue kingdomes, yet want power: but God hath kingdom and power also: yea his power is infinite, and he can doe all that he will, and more then he wilt: as for those things which come of impotencie, he cannot doe them; and if hee could, he should not be omnipotent. And as hee is omnipotent in himselfe, so all the power which any creature hath is from him alone.

Quæst. How can this be, seeing the diuell hath power to sinne; which is not from God?

Ans. To sinne is no power, but rather a want of power: otherwise all the strength and power Satan hath, is of God.

And from this second propertie is taken another motive to moue vs to pray vnto God. Because all power being his, we can neuer doe any of the things which we aske, but by power receiued from him.

Thine is the glorie. The third propertie of God, ariseth from the two former, for seeing the title and interest in all things, & the power whereby they are disposed and gouerned is of God: therefore it followes, that all glory is his yea in him is fulnesse of glory, & the glory of the creatures is all of him. To sinfull men belongs nothing but shame & confusion. Dan. 9. 7.

The third propertie minisheth a third motive to induce men to pray vnto God alone. For seeing all glory by right is his, therefore we must inuocate his holy name, that in so doing, we may giue him the glory due vnto him.

For euer. The words in the original are, for ages. Now an age signifies the space of an hundred years: but here it is taken for eternitie, because eternitie is nothing but multiplication of ages. And as eternitie is here noted by ages, so on the contrary we reade, that eternitie is taken for a certain and distinct time, Gen. 1. 7. 8. God promitteth Abraham to giue him the land of Canaan for an everlasting possession: that is, for a long season. For else Abrahams feede should inherit the land vntill this time, which it doth not. Wherefore, as often the whole is put for the parts, viz. eternitie for a certaine time: so here the part is put for the whole, ages for eternitie. This also makes a difference betweene earthly princes and the mightie Iehouah. They haue kingdom, power, and glory for a short time, but he absolutely and for euer.

2. The vses.

2. Here wee learne in prayer to abase our felues before God, & vtterly to denie all that is in vs: Kingdom, power, and glory is all his, not ours: wee are no better then rebels and traitours to him: if we haue any good thing, it is from him, and the grace whereby we pray,

And hee that in prayer will not confesse this, shall no more be heard, then the insolent beggar that will not acknowledge his want.

3. Secondly, in prayer we learne, that wee must be perswaded of two things, & build vpon them; Gods power and will: his power, in that he is able; his will, in that he is careful to performe our request, as it was noted in the preface: the first of these is signified by kingdome & power, the second is noted in that glory is his. 2. Cor. 1. 20. For all the promises of God in him, are yea, and Amen, unto the glory of God.

3. Again, we gather that Prayer & thanksgiving must go together: for as in the fixe petitions wee make request vnto God; so in these words we praise him, and thereby giue him thanks. Phil. 4. 6. But in all things, let your requests be shewed to God in prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving.

There is none but in want will be ready to pray; but when we haue received, we are slack in giuing thanks: but hee which will pray aright, must ioyne them both together. And the summe of all Gods praise stands in these three points. 1. That he is an absolute King. 2. That hee hath absolute power to rule all things. 3. That hauing power and a kingdome, he hath glorie also, which appears in the holding of his kingdome; and the shewing of his power in governing of it.

4. Whatsoeuer we aske, we must referre it to Gods glory: this is the first thing which we are taught to craue, and the last weare to performe, because it is noted both in the beginning, and in the ende of the prayer.

Thus much of the vse of these words altogether: now let vs make vfe of them particularly. 1. Whereas we say, Thine is the kingdome, Magistrates and rulers must know, that all the authoritie & rule which they haue is from the Lord; & therefore they must remember to order themselves as Gods vicegerents, yfing their power to bring men in subiection to Gods lawes, & referring all their callings to his glory.

2. Where we say, Thine is the power, we are admonished, when wee are to performe any worke, as to doe seruice to God, to keepe our selues in the compasse of our callings, that we haue no power of our selues: and for this cause we must aske power at Gods hands, that wee may be enabled to walke vprightly before him, and doe our duties. 3. In saying, Thine is the glory, we learne, that if we would haue a good report and praise among men, we must aske all things of Gods glory, not regarding so much our owne. If he giue the praise among men, giue him thanks: if not, be content because all glory is his.

Amen.

1. The meaning.

WE haue heard the preface, & the petitions, what they are: now followeth the third part, which is the assent or testimony of faith required in prayer in this word,

Amen. And it contains more then men at the first would imagine. It signifies, certainly so be it, or it shall be so. 2. Cor. 1. 20. It is often taken for a bare assent of the people, saying Amen to the Minister: but in this place it contains more: for euery point in this prayer is not only a direction for publike prayer, but for priuate also, and must be said as well of the minister as of the people. Now then there being two principall things in prayer: the first, a desire of grace; the second, faith, whereby we beleue that God will graunt things desired; The first is expressed in the fixe Petitions: the latter is set forth in this word Amen, carrying this sense in effect. As wee haue craued these things at thy hands, O Lord; so we doe beleue that for Christs sake, in thy good time thou wilt graunt them to vs. Therefore this part is more excellent then the former, by how much our faith is more excellent then our desire. For in this word is contained the testification of our faith, whereas the petitions are onely testifications of our desires. And as it is the end, so also it is the seale of our prayers to make them authenticall, & it is not only to be vsed (as men commonly take it) for this end to answer the Minister, praying in the Congregation, but also to testifie our faith for the thing desired.

2. Graces to be desired.

Hereby we are taught, what grace we are to shew in prayer. We must labour to giue assent to Gods promises when we pray, and stricke against doubting and vnbeliefe. Mark. 9. 24. Lord I beleue, Lord helpe mine vnbeliefe. Ps. 42. 11. Why art thou cast downe my soule, and why art thou disquieted within me? waike on God.

Many there are that will stand vpon the strength of their faith, & pleade for themselves that they neuer doubted, but they are far wide: for true faith being imperfect, is alwaies accompanied with doubting more or lesse. Wherefore the heart that neuer felt doubting, is not filled with faith, but with presumption. As for them which are molested with doubtings, and complaint of them, they haue lesse cause to feare: for as fire and water doe neuer thirill till they meete; no more doth doubting and faith, till faith be wrought in the heart.

To conclude, we see what an excellent worke prayer is: in which two most excellent graces of a Christian may be shewed forth, hungering after mercy; and faith, whereby we beleue the obtaining of it. This might moue men to learne to pray, prayer being the exercise of grace.

Of the vse of the Lords prayer.

The principall vse of the Lords prayer, is to direct Gods Church in making their prayers in all places, at all times, & vpon all occasions, though their prayers should be innumerable: and vlesse they be framed after this Prayer, they cannot be acceptable vnto God. In the vjing of it there be three things required. 1. The first is, the knowledge of the Lords praier and all the parts thereof. He that would pray

by it, must vnderstand the meaning thereof, the wants therein to be bewailed, and the graces to be desired, for which end it hath bene expounded. 2. Knowing this, there is in the second place required thus much skill, that he be able to referre euery want and grace to one of the fixe petitions; for example, feeling in himselfe pride of heart, hee must be able to say, this is a want in the first petition: and feeling a rebellion and slownesse in doing Gods commandements, he must be able to say, this is a sinne to be prayed against in the third petition. Thus euery want hee must referre to his proper need: againe, hee must referre euery grace to be desired to one of the fixe petitions: as strength in temptation, to the sixth; assistance in Gods providence, to the fourth; knowledge of God, to the first, &c. and so in the rest. 3. In the third place, hee must before he pray, consider what be his wants & imperfections which most trouble him, as also the graces which he would obtaine: then for the helping of his memory, hee must goe to the petitions, & hee must set those things first in his minde, which concerne the first petition: and those which concerne the second petition, must haue the second place in his minde, and so hee must proceed in order as hee shall haue occasion. Thus a man keeping in minde the order of the petitions as they stand, shall be able by referring euery grace & want to his proper head, to make distinct prayer: and to vary as time, place, and other occasions shall moue him.

Quest. Must we necessarily follow all the petitions in concealing a prayer? Ans. No, but onely those which doe principally belong to the time, place, and occasion: as Paul maketh a prayer, Coloss. 1. 9. 10. and all the points of it may be referred to the third and last petitions.

Again, a Christian man may make an excellent confession of his sinnes by this prayer: if hee shall, keeping the order of the petitions, confesse and bewaile the sinnes which euery petition requires vs to pray against. And it serues to make a thanksgiving to God, thus: let a man remember all the graces which hee hath received from God, let him then referre them to the petitions, & giue thanks to God after the order of them, turning euery petition into a thanksgiving.

Quest. 1. Whether a man is to vse a voyce, in prayer? Ans. In publike prayer: it is requisite that there be a voyce: for the Minister is the mouth of the people, and to the prayer which hee conceales, they giue assent. For priuate prayer, yfing of voyce is conuenient; yet so as it may be done in silence. 1. The Lord gaues the voyce, as well as the heart to blesse him withal, Iam. 3. 9. 11. God created the tongue as well as the heart, and so will be praised by both. III. The voyce often stirres vp the heart: and againe, the vehemency of affection doth often draw out a voyce: the voyce then in priuate prayer is requisite, yet in some cases may be omitted, for it is not absolutely necessarie. Matt. 6. 2. and Anna prayed in silence.

Quest. 2. What gesture is to be vsed in prayer? Ans. The word doth not afford any particular direction. Our Saviour and his disciples praied in diuers gestures: kneeling, standing, grooueling, looking vp to heauen, looking downe to the earth, sitting, lying, &c. Luk. 11. 41. Act. 7. God respects not the gesture, but the affection of the heart: yet two things must alwaies be in gesture: first, that it be comely: secondly, that it doth fitly expresse the affection of the heart: as when wee aske mercie, to looke to heauen; when we bewaile our sinnes, to looke downward, and to humble our bodies, &c.

Quest. 3. What place must we pray in? Ans. The place is set downe, 1. Tim. 2. 8. Wee may pray in all places: of which there is no difference. Some will say, that in the time of the law the tabernacle and temple were places of diuine prayer. Ans. The temple and tabernacle were types of Christ & his Church, and the vnity of it: but now wee haue the thing it selfe signified thereby, may pray in all places. Our Saviour prayed in the wilderness, on the Mount: Peter on the house toppe, Paul by the sea shore: yet so, that publike prayer must be vsed in publike places, as Churches, Chappels, &c. not because in them is more holinesse, but for order sake.

Quest. 4. What is the time appointed for prayer? Ans. Pray continually. 1. Thess. 5. 17. that is, vpon all occasions: or when a man begins any businesse, whether it be in word or deede, Coloss. 3. 17. or as David, who prayed thrice every day, Ps. 119. 17. or as David, who prayed at evening and morning, and noone tide. Ps. 119. 18. and seuentimes a day: that is, many. Ps. 119. 364. Thus we shall pray continually. Euery day affords three specially occasions. 1. The entrance to our callings in the morning. 2. The receiving of Gods creatures at noone tide. 3. The going to rest at night. Again, beside these and solempne prayers, there be certaine kinds of short prayers, which the Fathers call ejaculations, that is, the lifting vp of the heart into heauen secretly and suddenly: and this kinde of prayer may be vsed as occasion is offered euery houre in the day.

Quest. 5. Whether may we pray for al men or not? Ans. We may, and we may not. Wee may, if al men, or al mankind be taken distinctly, or severally. For there is no particular country, kingdome, towne, person, but wee may make prayers for it. And though men be Atheists, Infidels, Hereticks, yea diuels incarnate, yet for any thing we know, they may belong to the election of God: except they sin against the H. Ghost, which sin is very seldome & hardly discerned of men. And in this sense must the commandment of Paul be vnderstood: Exhort therefore that first of all supplications, prayers, &c. be made for all men. 1. Tim. 2. 1. We may not pray for all men, if all men or

mankinde be taken collectively, that is, if all men be considered wholly together as they make one body or company, and be taken as we fly in grouse: for in this body or masse of mankind there be some, though they be unknowne to vs, yet I say, there be some whom God in his iust iudgement hath refused, whose saluation by prayer shall neuer be obtained.

Quest. 6. Whether it is possible for a man to pray in reading a prayer? Ans. It pleaseth some to moue this question; but there is no doubt of it. For prayer is a part of Gods worship, and therefore a spiritual action of the heart of man standing specially in a desire of that which we want, and faith whereby we beleue, that our desire shall be granted. Now the voice or vtterance, whether it be reading, or otherwise, is no part of the prayer, but an outward means whereby prayer is vttered & expressed. Therefore there is no reason why a forme of prayer being read, should cease to be a prayer, because it is read; so be it the spirit of grace and prayer be not wanting in the party reading and the hearers. Obiect. To read a sermon is not to preach and therefore to read a prayer is not to pray. Ans. The reason is not like in both. For the gift of preaching or prophecy cannot be shewed or practised in the reading of a Sermon; & for this cause the reading of a Sermon is not preaching or prophecy; but the grace & gift of prayer may be shewed in reading of a prayer: otherwise it would govery hard with them that wait conuenient vtterance, by reason of some defect in the tongue, or bashfulness in the presence of others.

Hitherto we haue spoken of the making of prayer to God, a word or twaine of Gods hearing our prayers.

Quest. How many waies doth God heare mens prayers? Ans. Two waies. The first, in his mercy, when he grants the request of such as call vpon him in the feare of his name. Secondly, he heares mens prayers in his wrath. Thus hee gaue the Israelites Quails according to their desire, Ps. 78:29, 30, 31. Thus often men curse the felices, & wish that they were hanged or dead, and accordingly they haue their wish.

Quest. 2. Why doth God deferre to heare the prayers of his seruants? Ans. First, to proue them by delay. Secondly, to exercise their faith. Thirdly, to make them acknowledge that the things which they receive are Gods gifts, and not from themselves. Fourthly, that graces quickly giuen might not be lightly esteemed. Fifthly, that an hungering after grace might be sharpened and increased.

Quest. 3. After what manner doth God heare his seruants prayers? Ans. Two waies. First, by granting the thing which was asked according to his will. Secondly, by denying the thing desired and by giuing something proportionall to it. Thus Gods denies temporarie blessings, & in the roome thereof giues eternal in heauē. Thus he refuseth to remoue the croffe from his seruants, and giues in stead thereof strength & patience. Christ prayeth that the cup might be remoued. It was not remoued, he yer in his manhood was enabled to beare the wrath of God. When Paul prayed three times that the prick in the flesh might be remoued, it was answered, My strength is sufficient for thee. 2. Cor. 12:7, 9.

Quest. 4. Why doth not God alwaies heare mens prayers? Ans. There be many causes of this. The first, because oftentimes we know not to aske as we ought, Mat. 20:22. The second, because we aske amisse, 1. Sam. 4:3. The third, because otherwhiles, the things which we aske, though they be good in themselves, yet they are not good vnto vs, and for that cause are withheld, 2. Cor. 12:7. The last, because God will for some long time deferre the granting of that which we aske, that he may stirre vpon our faith and hope, and our diligence in prayer, and that we might the better esteeme of the gifts of God when we haue them, and shew our felices more thankfull.

To the Reader.

Paul in his Epistles, hath set downe the sum of many of his prayers: they are very gracious and heavenly, & I haue here set them downe, that thou mightest know them, & in thy prayers follow them.

Ephes. 1.

16. I cease not to giue thanks for you, making mention of you in my prayers.

17. That the God of our Lord Iesus Christ, the Father of glorie, might giue vnto you the spirit of wisdom, and of reuelation, in the acknowledgement of him.

18. The eyes of your minde being enlightened, that we may know what the hope is of his calling, and what the riches are of his glorious inheritance in the Saints.

19. And what is the exceeding greatnes of his power in vs that beleue; according to the working of his mightie power.

20. Which he wrought in Christ, when he raised him from the dead, and set him at his right hand in heavenly places.

The exposition.

In this excellent prayer we are to make two things: the first, to whom it is made: the second is the matter.

For the first, it is made to God the Father, who is described by two titles: The first, The God of our Lord Iesus Christ, namely, as Christ is man: for as Christ is God, he is equal with the Father. The second, The Father of glorie, that is, a glorious Father, and he is so called to distinguish him from earthly fathers.

The matter of the prayer stands in two principall points. First, he asketh of God, the spirit of wisdom, and the seruants of God are enabled to discern out of the world, in euery business, which way is right, whether it be in word or deed, what ought to be done, and what ought to be left undone: as also the circumstances, the time, place, manner of doing any thing.

Secondly, he prayeth for the spirit of reuelation,

tion, whereby the faithfull haue their whole estate before God reuealed vnto them according to the word: the thing is selfe being otherwise secret and hidden. 1. Cor. 2:9, 10, 12. Further, the work of this spirit in the godly is two-fold, the one concerneth God himselfe, the other the things of God.

The work of the spirit of reuelation, which respecteth God himselfe, is an acknowledgement of the Father, or of Christ. Now to acknowledge God the Father, is not onely to know, and confesse that he is a father of the faithfull, but also to be resolved in conscience that he is a father to me in particular. Secondly, that Christ is not onely in general a Saviour of the elect, but that he is in speciall my Saviour and Redeemer.

The second work of this spirit, is an illumination of the eyes of the minde to see & know the things of God which he hath prepared for them that do beleue; and they are two. The first, is life eternal, which is described by 5. arguments. 1. It is the Eternall hope, that is, the thing hoped for in this life. 2. It is the hope of the calling of God: because by the preaching of the Gospel it is offered, & men are called to waite for the same. 3. An inheritance, properly to Christ, because he is the natural Sonne of God: and by him to all that shall beleue. 4. The excellencie, because it is a rich and glorious inheritance. 5. Lastly, it is made proper to the Saints.

The second thing is the greatnes of the power of God, whereby sinne is mortified, the corrupt nature renewed, and mightily strengthened in temptation. This power is set forth by two arguments. The first is the subiect or person in whom this power is made manifest. In them that beleue. Because none can feele this, but they which apprehend Christ by faith. The second, is the manner of manifesting this power in them; which is according to the working of his mighty power, which he shewed in Christ. And that was in three things. First, in putting all his enemies vnder his feete. 2. Secondly, in raising him from death. Thirdly, in placing him at his right hand. Now therefore Paul prayeth that this wonderfull power of God, which did shew forth in selfe in the head Christ, might likewise shew it selfe in the members of Christ. First, in treading Satan & sin vnder their feet. Rom. 16:10. Secondly, in iuoynting them from sin, as out of a graine to holinesse of life. Thirdly, in aduancing them in the time appointed to the kingdom of glory in heauen.

Ephes. 3.

14. For this cause I bow my knees vnto the Father of our Lord Iesus Christ.

15. Of whom is named the whole family in heauen and earth:

16. That he would grant you according to the riches of his glory, that ye may be strengthened by his spirit in the inner man.

17. That Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith.

18. That ye being rooted and grounded in loue, may be able to comprehend with all Saints, what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height.

19. And know the loue of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that ye may be filled with all fulnesse of God.

20. Vnto him therefore that is able to do exceeding abundantly, aboue all that we aske or thinke, according to the power that workes in vs.

21. Be praife in the Church by Christ Iesus, throughout all generations for euer, Amen.

The Exposition.

The words containe two parts, a prayer, and a thanksgiving. In the prayer, these points are to be marked. First, the posture, I bow my knees, whereby Paul signifies his humble submission to God in prayer. Secondly, so whom he prayes, To the Father, who is described by two titles: the first, the Father of our Lord Iesus Christ, and that by nature as he is God, and as hee is man by personall union. The other title, Of whom the whole family which is in heauen and earth is named: In which words is set down a description of the Church: first, it is a family, because it is the companie of Gods elect children vnder the government of one Father, 1. Tim. 3:15. It is called the house of God, Eph. 2:19. They that beleue are said to be of the household of God: secondly, the parts of the Catholike Church are noted, namely, the Saints in heauen departed, and Saints liuing on earth: thirdly, it is said to be named of the Father of Christ, because as the Father of Christ, so the Father of this family, so also this family is called by him. Gen. 6. 2. Dan. 9:19. Thirdly the matter of this prayer stands of 4. most worthy points.

The first strength to beare the croffe, & to resist spiritual temptations, v. 16. where the strength is set out by diuers arguments. First, that it is the meere gift of God, that he would grant you: Secondly, the cause of strength by his spirit: thirdly, the subiect or place where this strength must be, in the inner man; that is, in the whole man, so farre forth as he is renewed by grace, Eph. 6:14. The second is the dwelling of Christ in their hearts by faith: Faith is when a man being seriously humbled for his sinnes, is further in conscience perswaded and resolved of the pardon of them, and of reconciliation to God. Now where this perswasion is indeede, there followes necessarily Christs dwelling in the heart, which stands in two things: the first, is the ruling and ordering of the thoughts, affections, and desires of the heart, according to his will; as a master rules in his house: the second, is the continuance of his rule. For hee cannot be said to dwell in a place, who rules in it but for a day.

The third, is the knowledge & the acknowledgement of the infinite greatnes of Gods loue in Christ, an effect of the former, v. 18, 19. the words are thus explained: Rooted and grounded. Here the loue of God wherewith he loues the elect is as a root and foundation of all Gods benefits, election, vocation, justification, & glorification. Men are rooted & grounded in loue, when Gods spirit affures their hearts of Gods loue, & doth giue them some inward sense and feeling of it. For then they are as it were firmly put into the root, and laid on the foundation. With all Saints: Paul desires this benefit, not onely to the Ephesians, but also to all the faithfull with them. What is the length, the breadth: Here is a speech borrowed from the Geometricians, and it signifies the absolute greatnesse or infinitenes of Gods loue, and that it is like a world, which for length, breadth, height, and depth is endless. Here note the order of receiving grace. First, Christ dwells in the heart by faith. Secondly, then comes a sense and feeling of Gods loue, as it were by certain drops thereof. Thirdly, after this ariseth a plentiful knowledge, and apprehension of Gods loue, and as it were the pouring out of a sea into a mans heart, that for greatnesse hath neither bottom nor bank. And know the loue of Christ: These words (as I take it) are an exposition of the former: for to comprehend the loue of God, is nothing else, but to know the loue of Christ: considering that all whom the Father launeth, hee launeth them in Christ: which passeth knowledge, that is, which for the greatnesse of it no man can fully know.

The fourth thing is, the fulnesse of Gods graces, verse. 19. Here the fulnesse of God, doth not signifie the fulnes of the Godhead or diuine nature, but the perfection of the inner man, which shall not bee till after this life.

Now following the thanksgiving, or the praise of God, verse. 20. 21. containing these points. The matter of praise, his power & bountyfulness where-by he can work exceeding abundantly above all we aske or thinke; and both these are not only to be conceived in minde, but also may be felt in the heart, according to the power that worketh in vs. 1. The forme of praise, glorie vnto God by Christ, as all benefits are received from the Father by Christ. 2. The proper place of true praise of God, the Church. 4. The continuance of the praise, thorough all generations for euer.

9. And this I pray, that your loue may abound yet more and more, in knowledge and all sense.

10. That ye may discern things that differ: to the end, yee may be pure and without offence to the day of Christ.

11. Filled with fruites of righteousness, which are by Iesus Christ, vnto the praise and glory of God.

The Exposition.

His prayer contains three parts. In the first Paul prayeth for increase of loue in the Philippians; whether it be to God or men, verse. 9. and he shewes the means of increase, which are two: knowledge, and sense or feeling. For to go backward the more a godly man steales Gods loue, and hath experience of Gods word in himselfe, the more hee knowes of Gods word, and perceiues his loue vnto him: the more hee loues God againe, and his neighbour for his sake.

The second thing prayed for, is the gift of discerning, whereby men know, what is true, what false: what is to be done, what is to be left, whence the ends of this gift are two. The first, that by means of it, they may be pure & sincere: that is, keep a good conscience before God & men in their lues and calling. The second, it is to be without offence: that is, innocent, giving no occasion of enuill to any, & not taking them offered by others: and the continuance of these is noted to the day of Christ: which is the time in which he commeth to vs, either by our death, or by the last iudgement.

Thirdly, he prayeth that they may abound in good works, which are described by a similitude, fruites of righteousness: Christians being fruitful trees. Ezech. 47. 12. Esa. 61. 2 3. By the cause efficient, which are by Christ. 3. By the end, vnto the glorie and praise of God.

9. I cease not to pray for you, and to desire that ye might be filled with knowledge of his will, in all wisdom & spiritual vnderstanding. 10. That ye might walk worthy of the Lord, and please him in all things, fructifying in all good works, and increasing in the acknowledgement of God.

11. Strengthened with all might through his glorious power, vnto all patience and long-suffering with ioyfulness.

12. Giving thanks to the Father which hath made vs fit to be partakers of the inheritance of the Saints in light.

13. Who hath deliuered vs from the power of darkenesse, and hath translated vs into the kingdom of his owne Sonne.

The Exposition.

These words containe a prayer, and a thanksgiving. In the prayer three things are asked. The first, is the increase of the knowledge of Gods revealed will in his word, and he diuides it into two parts: wisdom, which is not only to know Gods word, but also to apply it to every action for the right and holy performing thereof; and spiritual vnderstanding, which is, when men by the assistance of Gods spirit, doe conuenie the will of God in general without applying.

Secondly, Paul prayes for the fruits of this knowledge, which are foure. 1. To walke worthy of God, as good seruants doe, who in their apparell, gesture, and all their doings, so beaue themselves that they may credit their masters. 2. To please God in all things, by approving their hearts vnto him. 3. To be plentiful in all good works. 4. To increase in the acknowledgement of God. For the more any increase in knowledge & experience in Gods word, the more shall they acknowledge God the Father to be their father, Christ to be their Redeemer, and the Holy Ghost their sanctifier.

Thirdly, he prayes that the Colossians may be strengthened, v. 11. Where he notes the cause, Gods glorious power; and the effects, which are three. 1. Patience, because it is necessarie that the godly suffer many afflictions. 2. Long suffering, because oftentimes the same afflictions continue long. 3. Ioyfulness, because the crosse is bitter.

The thanksgiving is for a benefit, that God had made the Colossians fit for the kingdom of glorie: and the reason is, because he had made them members of the kingdom of grace.

1. Thess. 3.

12. The Lord increase you, and make you abound in loue one towards another, and towards

wards all mens: euen as we doe towards you.

13. To make your hearts stable and blameable in holinesse before God, euen our Father, at the coming of our Lord Iesus Christ with all his Saints.

2. Thess. 2.

16. Iesus Christ our Lord, and our God, euen the Father which hath loued vs, and hath giuen vs euertlasting consolation and good hope through grace:

17. Comfort your hearts, and stablish you in euery word and good worke.

1. Thess. 5.

23. Now the very God of peace, sanctifie you thoroughout: and I pray God, that your whole spirit and soule, and body may be kept blamelesse vnto the coming of our Lord Iesus Christ.

TO THE RIGHT WORSHIPFULL AND MY CHRISTIAN FRIEND MASTER VALENTINE KNIGHTLY ESQUIRE, ONE OF HER MAIESTIES IUSTICES OF peace in Northampton-shire.

SI pray you consider with mee an especiall point of Gods word, carefully to be weighed : it is this, Many professors of Christ in the day of grace, persuade themselves that they are in the estate of grace, and so the true Church esteemeth of them too : yet when the day of grace is past, they contrariwise shall finde themselves to be in the estate of damnation remediable. A dolefull case, yet a most resolute truth, and the reason is plaine. Men that liue in the Church are greatly annoyed with a fearful scurritie and deadnesse of heart, by which it comes to passe that they thinke it enough to make a common profession of the faith, not once in all their life times, examining themselves whether they be in the estate of grace before the eternall God or not. ^a And indeede it is a grace peculiar to the man elect to trie himselfe whether he be in the estate of grace or not.

The further opening of the truth of this point, as also the danger of it, I haue enterprised in this treatise ; which I am willing to bestow on you, both for the profession of the faith, which you make, as also for that Christian friendship you haue shewed to me. Accept of it I pray you and vse it for your edification. ^b Thus I commend you to God, and to the word of his grace, that is able to build you vp further, and giue you an inheritance among them which are sanctified. To the Christian Reader.

Good Reader it is a thing to be considered, that a man may seeme both vnto himselfe & to the Church of God to be a true professor of the Gospel, & yet indeede none. All professors that be of this sort, are excellently described in these words. And they which are vpon the stony ground are they, which when they shall heare receive the word with ioy : but hauing no root, beleeue for a time, and in the time of temptation goe away. Where are to be noted three things. 1. that they are said to beleeue for a season : 2. the fruits of that faith, in that they are said to receive the word preached with ioy. 3. their vnfoundnesse, in that they are compared to stony ground, and in time of temptation goe away.

Concerning their faith, whereas the spirit of God saith, that they doe beleeue, those things are to be considered. First, that they haue the knowledge of Gods word. Secondly, that they both can and doe giue assent vnto Gods word, that it is most true. Thirdly, in more speciall manner they giue assent vnto the command of grace made in Christ, that it is most certaine and sure : and they are perswaded in a general and confused manner, that God will verifie the same covenant in the members of his Church. This is all their faith : which indeede proceedeth from the holy Ghost, but it is not sufficient to make them sound professors. For albeit they doe generally beleeue Gods promises, yet herein they deceiue themselves, & that they neuer apply the same to their owne soules. An example of this faith we haue, Ioh. 2. 24. When our Saviour came to Ierusalem at the feast of Easter, many beleeued in his name; and yet he would not commit himselfe vnto them, because he knew them all, and what was in them.

To come to the second thing : those professors which are indued with this much grace, as to beleeue in Christ in a confused manner, goe yet further : for this their faith, though it be not sufficient to saluation, yet it sheweth itselfe by certaine fruits, which it brings forth : for as a tree or a branch of a tree that hath no deep rooting, but either is covered with a few moules, or els lies in the water, at the season of the yere brings forth leaues and blossomes, and some fruit too, and that for one or two, or more yeeres ; so one that is a bearer of the word, may receive the word, and the word as seed, by this general faith may be somewhat rooted in his heart, and seld for a season, and may bring forth some fruits in his life peraduenture very faire in his owne and other mens eyes : yet indeede neither found nor lasting, nor substantiall. What these fruits are it may be gathered forth of these words, where it is said, that they receive the word with ioy, when they heare it : for here may be gathered ; First, that they doe willingly subiect themselves to the ministry of the word. Secondly, that they are as forward as any, and as ioyfull in frequenting sermons. Thirdly, that they reuerence the ministers whom they so ioyfully heare. Lastly, they condemne them of impiety, which will not be hearers, or be negligent hearers of the word.

Now, of these suchlike fruits, this might be added, though they are not found, yet they are void of that grosse kind of hypocrisie. For the minds of those professors are in part enlightened, & their hearts are endued with such a faith as may bring forth these fruits for a time, and therefore herein they differ not that faith which they haue : but rather shew that which they haue. Adde hereto, that a man being in this estate, may deceiue himselfe, and the most godly in the world, which haue the greatest gifts of discerning, how they and their brethren stand before the Lord : like as the fig-tree with greene leaues deceiued our Saviour Christ, as he was man : for when in his hunger he came vnto it to haue had some fruit, he found none.

If this be so, it may be then required, how these vnfound professors differ from true professors. I answer, in this they differ, that they haue not sound hearts to cleaue vnto Christ Iesus for euer. Which appeareth in that they are compared to stony ground. Now stony grounds mingled with some earth are commonly hot, and therefore haue as it were some alacrity and hastinesse in them, and the corne as soone as it is cast into this ground, it sprouteth out very speedily, but yet the stones will not suffer the corne to be rooted deeply beneath, and therefore when summer cometh, the blade of the corne withereth with waues and all. So it is with these professors : they haue in their hearts some good motions of the holy Ghost, to that which is good : they haue a kinde of zeale to Gods glory, they haue a liking to good things, and they are as forward as any other for a time, and they doe beleeue. But these good motions and graces are not lasting, but like the flame and flashing of straw and stubble : neither are they sufficient to saluation.

With true professors it is far otherwise : for they haue upright & honest hearts before the Lord. And they haue faith which worketh by loue. And that Christian man which loues God, whatsoever shall befall, yet though it were a thousand deaths, yet his heart can neuer be severed from the Lord, & from his Saviour Christ, as the Spouse speaketh vnto Christ of his owne loue. Set me as a scale on thy hart, as a signet vpon thy arme : for loue is as strong as death, iacaloufie is as cruel as the grane, the coales thereof are fiery coales, & a vehement flame. Much water cannot quench loue, neither can the floods drowne it : if a man should giue all the substance of his house for loue, they would greatly contemne it.

Wherefore (good Reader) seeing there is such a similitude & affinity between the temporary professor of the Gospel, & the true professor of the same, it is the duty of every Christian to try & examine himselfe whether he be in the faith or not. And when as it is an hard thing for a man to search out his owne heart, we are to pray vnto God that he would giue vs his spirit to discern between that which is good & euil in vs. Now when a man hath found out the estate of his heart, by searching it, he is tured to obseue & keep it with all diligence, that when the buere of death, or the day of trial shall come, he may stand sure, & not be deceiued of his hope. And for this purpose I haue described the most of these final treatises which follow to minister vnto thee some help in this examining & obseruing of thine owne heart. Read them, and accept of them, & by the blessing of God they shall not be vnprofitable vnto thee. And if they shal any whit help thee, help me also with thy prayer.

H D CERTAINE

CERTAIN PROPOSITIONS DECLARING HOW FARRE A MAN MAY GOE IN THE PROFESSION OF THE GOSPEL, AND yet be a wicked man and a Reprobate.

1.3.

Reprobate hath in his mind accerten^a knowledge of God, of common equitie among men, of the difference of good from bad: & this is partly from nature, partly from the contemplation of Gods creatures, in which the wisdom, the power, the loue, the mercie, the maiestie of God is perceived.

II.

This knowledge is onely general and imperfect, much like the ruines of a Princes palace: it is not sufficient to direct him in doing of a good worke. For example; he knows that there is a God, & that this God must be worshipped: come to particulars, who God is, here his knowledge failes him, and he is altogether vncertaine what to doe to please God.

III.

By reason of this knowledge, the Reprobate doth giue consent, and in his heart subscriveth to the equitie of Gods law; as may appeare by the saying of Medea: Vidit meliora probosque detorsora sequor. That is, I know what is best to be done, and like it yet I doe the worst. This approbation in the Reprobate commeth from constraint, & is ioyned with a disliking of the law: in the elect being called, the approbation of the law, proceedeth from a willing and ready mind, and is ioyned with loue & liking.

And by reason of this light of nature, a meere naturall man, and a reprobate may be subiect to some temptations: for example, he may be tempted of the diuell, and of his owne corrupt flesh, to beleuee that there is no God at all. As Ouid saith of himselfe, Eleg. 3. Solicitor nullus esse putare deos: I am often tempted to thinke there is no God.

V.

The reprobate for all this knowledge, in his heart may be an Atheist as Daniel saith: The fool hath said in his heart: there is no God. And a man may now a daies finde houses and townes full of such fooles: Nay, this glimmering light of nature, except it be preferred with good bringing vp, with diligent instruction, & with good companie, it will be so darkened, that a man shall know very little, & leade a life like a very beast: as experience telleth, and Daniel

^a knew very well: who saith, Man is in honour, & vnderstandeth not; he is like to beasts: thus perisheth.

VI.

Wherefore, this knowledge which the reprobate receiveth from nature, and from the creatures, albeit it is not sufficient to make him doe that which shall please God: yet before Gods iudgement fear, it cuts off all excuse, which he might alledge, why he should not be condemned.

VII.

Beside this naturall knowledge, the reprobate may be made partaker of (f)alse preaching of the word, and bee illuminated by the holy Ghost, and so may come to the knowledge of the revealed will of God in his word.

VIII.

Thus when they heare the preaching of the word, God profereth saluation to them, and calls them, & yet this calling is not so effectual in them as it is in the elect children of God. For the reprobate when he is called, he liketh himselfe in his owne blindness, and therefore neither will he; and if he would, yet could hee not answer, and be obedient to the calling of God. The elect being called, with speede he answereth and commeth to the Lord, and his heart being ready, giueth a strong and loud echo to the voice of the Lord. This echo we see in Daniels heart: When (saith he) thou saidst, Seek ye my face: mine heart answered vnto thee. O Lord, I will seek thee by face. And God himselfe speaketh the fame of his children. Zach. 13. 9. They shall call on my name, and I will heare them: I will say, he is my people (now marke the echo) and they shall say, the Lord is my God.

IX.

After that hee hath an vnderstanding of Gods word, he may acknowledge the truth of it, and confesse it: and if neede require, be a defender of it: As Iudas was, and William the Apostata.

The reprobate may haue a feeling of his finnes, and so acknowledge them: and the punishment due vnto them: (as Saul did; who said, I haue sinned: come againe my forme David: for I will doe thee no harme, because my soule was as pretious in thine eyes this day: Behold I haue done foolishly, and haue erred exceedingly. Thus did Cain, when he said, My punishment is greater then I can beare. Galerius Maximus, a vile persecutor of Christians, had his bowels rotting within him: so that an infinite number of wormes continually cranked forth of his body, & such a poysoning stinke came from him, that no man could abide him: being thus plagued with the hand of God, hee began to perceiue his wickednes in persecuting Christians, and he confessed his sins to the true God: and assembling the chiefe rulers about him, he commanded that all within his dominions should cease to trouble Christians, and in all halte he made a law for the peace and libertie, and the publike meetings of Christians.

XI.

The reprobate hath oftentimes feare and terror of conscience: but this is onely, because he considereth the wrath & vengeance of God, which is most terrible. When Paul preached before Felix: and by the maiesty of Gods spirit, did (as it were) thunder from heauen against his sins, doubtlesse he made his heart to ake, and eury ioynt of him to tremble. Eccebius a Philosopher of Constantinople, in the daies of Constantinus, professed Christian religion, and went beyond all other in zeale for the same religion: yet afterward vnder Julian he fell from that religion vnto Gentilisme. But after Julians death making meanes to be received into the Church againe, ouerwhelmed with the horror of his owne conscience for his wicked reuolking, he cast himselfe downe on the ground before the doores of the Church, crying aloud, Calcate me solum in spidum: Trample on me vnlauorie Salt. And the diuell beleueeth the word of God, and at his owne damnation he trembleth, Iam. 2. 19. These seruile feares, though they harden the heart of the reprobate, as heate doth yron, after it hath bin in the furnace: yet these feares in the children of God ^a are very good preparations, to make them fit to receiue grace: like as we see the needle which soweth not the cloath, yet it makes a passage and entrance for the thread, which serueth for this vse, to sow cloath together.

XII.

A reprobate before he commit a sinne, is often vexed within himselfe, and feareth to commit it: not because he hateth and disliketh the sinne for it selfe, but because he cannot abide the punishment due vnto the sin. C When the daughter of Herodias danced before Herod, and pleased him: that he might do her a pleasure, he bad her aske what she would: shee asked Iohn Baptists head in a platter: Herod did graunt her request, but yet he had a grudging in heart, and he was foregrieved at it. In like manner, Pilate was very much troubled inwardly before hee condemned our Saviour Christ.

XIII.

After hee hath committed a sinne, hee sorroweth and repenteth: yet this repentance hath two wants in it. Firft, he doth not detest his sinne, and his former conuersation when hee repenteth: he doth bewaile the losse of many things which hee once enjoyed, he cryeth out through very anguish & through the perplexities which God in his iudgement laies on him:

yet for his life, he is not able to leaue his filthy sinne: and if he might be deliuered, he would sinne as before. Esa wept before his father with great yelling and crying, but after hee was gone from his fathers presence hee hated his brother, who had got his blessing, and in contempt of his father, chose him a wife against his liking. Pharaoh, as oft as the Lord laid any calamitie on him, hee euermore desired to be deliuered from it, yet afterward alwaies he returned to his old byas againe. Felix trembled before Paul: for all that, he could not leaue his couetousnes, but euen then he fought for a bribe. Secondly, the reprobate, when he repenteth he cannot come vnto God, and seeke vnto him: he hath no power, no not so much as once to desire to giue one little sob for the remission of his finnes: if he would giue all the world he cannot so much as giue one rap at Gods mercie-gate, that hee may open to him. He is vray like a man vpon a racke, who cryeth and roareth out for eury paine, yet cannot desire his tormentor to ease him of his paine: Cain would haue bene voide of his trembling, but he could not aske pardon of his sin from his heart: neither could Saul, or Iudas, or now can the diuell.

XIV.

The Reprobate may humble himselfe for some finnes which hee hath committed, and may declare this by fasting and teares. When Eliab reprooued Ahab for his Idolatrie, and threatened him from the Lord, it is said, that when he had heard these words, Hee rent his clothes, and put sackcloth vpon him, and fasted and went sily in token of mourning: and this humiliation stayed Gods wrath for a time.

XV.

He may confesse his finnes, euen his particular finnes before men: but this is onely then, when his soule is tormented for them, and can finde no ease. For then hee sticketh not to vtter his secret filthines to the hearing of all men, and to the open shaming of himselfe. When God smote all that was in the fields of Egypt with haile, then Pharaoh sent, and called for Moses and Aaron, and said vnto them, I haue now sinned, the Lord is righteous but I and my people are wicked: pray ye vnto the Lord (for it is enough) that there be no more mighty thunders, &c. So Iudas, when hee saw that Christ was condemned, and felt an hell in his conscience, brake out, and said, Matth. 27. 4. I haue sinned in betraying the innocent blood. And the experience of these daies giueth fearefull examples for the prooffe of this point.

XVI.

He hath often a desire to bee like the children of God in happines, and to be faued: not because he hath any loue to the kingdom of God, but because he is afraid of hell. As Balaam ouerpressed with the feare of Gods iudgement, prayed thus: Num. 23. 10. O that my soule might die the death of the righteous, and that my last end might be like his!

XVII.

X V I I.

The wicked in their distresse may pray to God, and God may heare their prayers, and graunt them their request, ^a as the Israelites wickedly murmuring against God, desired flesh in the wilderness: God heard their cry, and rained Quails among them. But God heareth the wicked after one sort, and them that feare him after another: them that feare him, hee graunteth their requests of loue and mercie: to the other of indignation and anger. ^b As may appeare in the Israelites, who when they were in eating of their Quails, and the meate was within their teeth, God in his anger strok them with a fore plague. And (which is more strange then this) God hath performed that which he hath promised to the vnbelieuers, though they refused to aske it at his hands, euen then when they were particularly commanded: ^c of this thing we haue a worthy example in King Achaz, who vterly refused to haue a signe of his deliuerance, and the confision of his enemies, when GOD offered it to him, and yet the Lord deliuered him.

X V I I I.

The reprobate may goe further in the profession of religion, and may seeme for a time to be planted in the Church, for he doth beleeue the promises of God made in Christ Iesus, yet so that he cannot apply them to himselfe. In this thing the elect and the reprobate differ. The reprobate ^a generally in a confused manner beleueth that Christ is a Saviour of some men: and he neither can, nor desireth to come to the particular applying of Christ. The elect beleueth that Christ is a Saviour of him particularly. The reprobates faith may perish in this life, but the faith of the Elect cannot. The reprobate may be perauaded of the mercie and goodnes of God towards him for the present time in the which he feelles in the elect is not only perauaded of the mercies he presently enioyeth, but also he is perauaded of his eternall election before the foundation of the world, and of his euertlasting life, which yet he doth not enioy: Yea ^b if God would confound him, and hee saw nothing but present death, and hell fire: yet such is his nature, that still he would beleue: for faith and hope are not grounded vpon sense and feeling; but are the euidence of those things which were neuer yet sene or felt. The life of the faithfull is hid in Christ, as the sap in the root of the tree: their life is not in sense and feeling, but in hoping and beleueing: which oftentimes are contrary to mans sense and feeling.

X I X.

After that he hath receiued a generally, and a temporary faith in Gods heavenly word, and his most mercifull promises of euertlasting life contained therein, by the power of the spirit of God, ^a he cometh to haue a raffe in his heart of the sweetnes of Gods mercies, and a reioicing in consideration of the election, adoption, iustification, and sanctification, of Gods children. But

A what is this taste? I expresse it thus, after the meaning of Gods word. Suppose a banquet prepared, in which are many sweet, & pleasant and daintie meats. At this banquet, such as are the bidden guests, they must be set downe, they fee the meats, they taste them, they chaw them in their mouths, they digest them: they which are not bidden to this feast, may see the meates, handle them, and tast of them to feele how good they are: but they must not eate and feed of them. The first resemble the Elect, which truly eate, digest, and are nourished by Christ vnto euertlasting life, because they haue great abundance of the vitall heate of Gods holy spirit in them, and doe feele sensibly his grace and vertue in them, to strengthen them and guide them. The second sort truly resemble the reprobates; which neuer in truth enioy Christ, or any of his benefites appertaining to saluation: but onely see them, and haue in their hearts a vanishing, but no certen or found feeling of them; so that they may be changed and strengthened, and guided thereby. To vse another similitude. The reprobates haue no more feeling, and enioying of Christ and his benefites, then those men haue of the Sunne, which see onely a glimmering of his light at the dawning of the day, before it riseth. ^a Contrariwise, the elect, they haue the day star, euen the Sunne of righteousnesse, Iesus Christ, rising in their hearts: the day spring from an high deth visit them, the glory of God deth rise vpon them: they haue their eyes anointed with the cyment of the spirit, which is the true eye-salue, and do plainly behold the Sun of righteousnesse: they enioy his presence, they effectually feele his comfortable heart to quicken and reuiue them.

X X.

From this sense and taste of Gods grace proceede many fruits: as first, generally, he may do outwardly all things which true Christians doe, and he may leade such a life here in this world, that although he cannot attaine to saluation, yet his paines in hell shall be lesse: which appeareth in that our Saviour Christ faith, ^b It shall be easier for Tyrus and Sydon, for Sodom and Gomorrah; then for Capernaum, and other cities vnto which hee came, in the day of iudgement.

X X I.

Also the reprobate may haue a loue of God: but this loue can be no sincere loue, for it is only because God bestoweth benefites and prosperitie vpon him, as appeareth in Saul, who loued God for his aduancement to the kingdom: and here is a difference betweene the elect & the reprobate: the elect loue God, as children their fathers: but reprobates, as hirelings their masters, whom they affect not so much for themselves, as for their wages.

X X I I.

Also a reprobate hath often a reioicing in doing those thing which appertaine to the seruice of God, as preaching and prayer. & the Herod heard Iohn Baptiste preach gladly: & the second

X X I I I.

A reprobate often desireth them, whom he thinketh to be the children of God, to pray for him. ^a As Pharao desired Aaron and Moses to pray for him. ^b So did Simon Magus desire Peter that none of the things which hee had spoken against him, should come to passe. But yet they cannot pray themselves, ^c because they want the spirit of Christ.

X X I V.

He may shew liking to Gods Ministers, hee may reuerence them, and feare to displease them. ^d Thus did Simon Magus, who at Philips preaching blest, wondered at his miracles, and kept company with him. And Miracles is said to fear Iohn, knowing that he was a iust man and holy: also he gaue reuerence to him. Antoninus the Emperour, called Pius, though he was no Christian, ^e yet in a general Parliament held at Ephesus, hee made an act in the behalfe of Christians: that if any man should trouble or accuse a Christian, for being a Christian; the party accused should goe free though he were found to be a Christian, and the accuser should be punished. ^f And Plinius Ieccandus, gouernour of Spaine vnder Traianus the Emperour, when he saw an innumerable company of Christians to be executed; being moued with compassion, he wrote in their behalfe being no Christian, vnto Traianus to spare them that could bee charged with no crime: and his letter is yet extant.

X X V.

Hee may bee zealous in the religion which hee professeth, and fall from that profession, as the Galatians did. ^a who after they had receiued Paul as an Angel, and would haue plucked out their eyes to haue done him good: yet they fell from the doctrine which hee had taught them, to iustification by the workes of the law, which flatly ouertrowes iustification by faith alone. The ^b same appeareth in Iehus; who was very zealous for Gods cause, and for the defacing of idolatry, and thereupon God blessed him in his children: yet neuertheless he was a wicked man, ^c and followed the vile sinnes of Ieroboam his father.

X X V I.

yet some one fault or other, he cannot abide to haue it reformed; and by that, in a vile manner the diuell wholly possesseth him. As Herod, who did many things, yet would not leaue his brothers wife. And no doubt, in Indus most of his finnes in appearance were mortified and yet by conseruance the diuell possesseth him, and held him fast chained in bondage vnder him. For one sinne is sufficient to him, that by it he may bring a man to damnation. Secondly, in infidels liuing honestly, the spirit of God bridlith the force of sinne, and the corrupt nature that it break not out, as it doth in many other. But in Christians that are indeede godly, the same spirit not only represseth the corruption of nature outwardly; but also mortifieth it within at the root, & regenerateth the whole man in to a new creature. Thus then neither the faithfull nor infidels doe effect any thing that is laudable but by the spirit of God: the faithfull by the spirit of regeneration: infidels by the same spirit, only suppressing the outward act of sin.

X X V I I.

Beside this, he may haue the gift of working miracles, of casting forth diuels, of healing, and such like: ^a and this power of doing strange miracles, shall bee vsed as an excuse of some of the reprobates in the day of iudgement.

X X V I I I.

C Oftentimes, vnto him is giuen the gifts of the holy Ghost, to discharge the most weighty calling that can bee in any common wealth. And this is meant, when God is said ^a pro gine Saul another heart; that is, such vertues as are meete for a king.

X X I X.

A reprobate may haue the word of God much in his mouth, & also may be a Preacher of the word: ^a for so prophesying in Christs name, shall bee vsed as an excuse of reprobates: and we know that among the 12. Apostles ^b Judas was a reprobate. And this may be well perceived in the resemblance of tasting, which the Author to the Hebrewes vseth. Wee know, that cooks commonly which are occupied in preparing of bankets, haue as much feeling & feeling of the meate, as any other: yet there is none that careth lesse of it then they: for their stomachs are cloyed with the smell & taste of it: so, in like manner it may come to passe, that the minister which dresseth and prouideth the spirital food, may eate the least of it himself; and so labouring to faue others, hee may bee a reprobate. And it is thought, that some of them which built the Arke, were not saved in the Arke, but perished in the flood.

X X X.

When as a reprobate professeth such much of the Gospel, though indeed he be a goat, yet he is taken for one of Gods sheepe: he is kept in the same pastures, and is folded in the same fold with them. Hee is counted a Christian of the children of God, and so he taketh himselfe to be; no doubt because through the dullnesse of his heart, he cannot try and examine

himselfe, and therefore truly cannot discern of his estate, whether he be in Christ or not: & it may be thought that Satan is ready with some false persuasion to deceive him. For this is his properie, that vpon whom God threatneth death, there Satan is bold to pronounce life and saluation: as on the contrary, to those, to whom God pronounceth loue and mercie, to those (I say) hee threatneth displeasure and damnation: fith malice hath hee against Gods children:

XXXI.

And hereby it cometh to passe, that (a) hypocrite may bee in the visible Church, and obey it in the word and discipline and so bee taken for a true member of Christ, when as a man indegred regenerate may be excommunicate, and end his life before hee received againe: for this is the end of excommunication, (b) that hee fleeth, that is, the part vregenerate, (c) that hee is destroyed: and the spirit, that is, the part regenerate, may be kept alive in the body of the Lord. Now the man in whom is spirit and flesh, (e) must needs bee the childe of God, because this argueth that he hath the sanctifying spirit of Christ. Againe, Paul when he biddeth the Corinthians to comfort the incestuous man, (d) left through the sleight of Satan he should bee overwelmed of overmuch heaviness, giueth men to understand, that he might haue ended his life in great extremitie of sorrow, before hee had bene visibly received into the Church againe.

Though God will neuer adopt any reprobate, yet by the adoption of the elect they may receive profit. For they finde the blessing of God to bee on them by reason that they dwell together, and haue societie with the children of (e) God. For Noahs sake euery one in his family is saved in the flood. For Lots cause the men of Zoar are preserved from the fire. And God would haue spared Sodom, if there had beene but tenne good men in it. For Rahabs cause, her family and kindred are at libertie in Iericho. When Joseph was in Putiphars house, all things prospered well. (f) For Samuels cause the Israelites were deliuered from the Philistines. (g) And for Pauls cause they which were with him in the shippe were preserved. And againe, a reprobate by means of the faith of either of his parents may bee within Gods covenant, and so bee made partaker of Baptisme, one of the seales of the coveynant. For to God made his covenant with Abraham, (h) that he would be not onely his God, but also the God of his seede after him: (i) which Paul expoundeth not of a few, but of all nations. Also he saith manifestly that those children, either of whose parents are beleeuers, (k) are holy, which holinesse is not inherent in their persons, but onely outward: and it is a speciall prerogative graunted them of God, in that hee vouchsafeth them to bee in his covenant: whereby they are distinguished

A from the wicked and prophane men of the world.

XXXIII.

B Besides this, reprobates haue some prerogatives of God; (l) and that hee is patient towards them: that before he will destroy them, he vseth many meanes to winne them, that they commonly spend all the daies of their liues in prosperity: in so much, that it is said of them in the Psalmes: (m) what they goe in continually prospereth vnto their death, & pine not away as the children of God doe. But (n) after a certaine time God in his iust iudgement hardeneth their hearts, blindeth the eyes of their mindes, he maketh their heads giddy with a spiritual drunkenesse, and by the strength of their inward lust, as also by the effectual operation of Satan, they fall to open infidelitie and contempt of Gods word, and so run headlong to their owne damnation, and perill finally. And in this they are like haukes, which so long as they liue are carried on the hands of noble men: but when they are dead, they are cast on the dunghill. (o) Iudas the Apostata was first a man learned and eloquent, and professed the Religion of Christ, but afterward he fell, & wrote a booke against the Religion of Christ, answered by Cyrill: and one time, in a battell against the Persians, was thrust into the bowels with a dart, no man the knew how, which dart he pulled out with his owne hand, & presently blood flowed, which as it gushed out, hee took it in his hand, and flung it into the aire, saying, Veniis Galilee, uicissis. O thou Galilean (meaning Christ) thou art the Conquerour: thus hee ended his dayes in blaspheming Christ whom he had professed.

C The reason of this apostacie is euident. (p) Seede, that is not deeply rooted in the earth, at the beginning of the yeare, springeth vp: it is greene, and bringeth forth leaues and flowers and (it may be) some kinde of fruit too: when the heat of summer cometh, it parcheth the earth, and the come wanting deepe rooting, & therefore wanting moisture, withereth away. Gods word is like seed, which that it may bring forth fruit vnto euermlasting life, it must be first receiued of the ground: Secondly, it must be rooted: the receiuing of it, is when the minde vnderstandeth it, and remembereth it: the rooting of it, is when being beleued, it pierceth to the heart, and taketh holde of the affections. This rooting is of two sorts: the first, is when the word rooteth, but not deepe enough, as when the word is receiued into the minde, and into the heart, by the ioy of the heart, but not with the residue of the affections. The second is a deepe and liuely rooting of the word, when the word is receiued into the minde and into the heart by the will and all the affections of the heart. The first kind of rooting of the word, befalleth to a reprobate, who vnderstandeth & receiveth in the promises of saluation, yet he doth not put any confidence in them: hee can not rest in them, hee doth not reioyce that his name is written in the booke of life; hee doth not worke out his saluation with feare and trembling. In a word, his heart is in part solicted to reioyce at the preaching of the word of God; (a) yet his heart is not opened as Lydius was; nor enlarged (as David saith) to embrace the truth: but the Elect, hee receiveth the word, not only into his minde, lest it should be onely an imagination, but also it is deeply rooted in his heart. For,

1. In sure confidence he resteth himselfe on Gods promises. Rom. 8. 38. Heb. 10. 22.
2. He hopeth and longeth to see the accomplishment of it. 1. Thess. 1. 10.
3. He heartily longeth God, for making such a promise to him in Christ. 1. Job. 4. 10.
4. Hee reioyceth in it, and therefore doth meditate on it continually, Luke 10. 20. Rom. 5. 2.

5. Hee hateth all doctrines, which are against it.

6. Hee is grieved when he doth any thing that may hinder the accomplishment of it. Math. 26. 75.

7. He vseth the meanes to come to saluation, but with feare and trembling. Phil. 2. 12.
8. He burneth with zeale of the spirit, &c. And so the rest of the affections are exercised about the promises of God in Christ, and by this means, is the deepe rooting of the word in the heart.

Thus it cometh to passe, that the Reprobate fallth away from faith in the day of trial and temptation, but the Elect cannot bee changed.

XXXIII.

Thus it appeareth, how farre a reprobate may proceed in religion; the consideration of this point I direct vnto two sorts of men. Carnall Gospellers, and Papiists. Carnall Gospellers are such among vs, as know the word, but obey it not; or such, as bearing a profession neither know it, nor obey it. And the best of these come forth of reprobates in two points. 1. In faith, they come short of the diuine most of them. The diuine beleueth and trembleth; but they contrariwise liuing in their sins, beleue, and hope. How comes this to passe? The diuill knoweth the Gospel, & the points of it: and withall hee beleueth the terrible threatnings of the law: & therefore trembleth. Drowie Protestants beleue the Gospel as the diuill doth; though hee coceiues the points of it better then they doe: as for the law and the threatnings thereof, they doe not beleue them: and that makes them euen when they liue in their finnes to hope and presume of mercy. Therefore the diuill beleues more of Gods word then they doe. Secondly, they come short of wicked men in outward obedience. The young man not yet conuerted to Christ, when he was bidden to keepe the commandments of the second Table, answered, that he had kept them from his youth: and therefore our Sauour Christ looked vpon him, and loved him: although the externall obedience was not sufficient for Christ telleth him, that one thing is wanting vnto him. And in another place he saith, Except your righteousness exceede the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees, you cannot enter into the kingdom of heauen. Now the careless Gospeller is farr from performing this; in so much that commonly hee makes an open practise of sinne one way or other.

The causes of their carelesnes are, first a persuasion that a man may repent when hee will: because the Scripture saith, At what time soeuer a sinner doth repent him of his finnes from the bottom of his heart, God will put all his wickednesse out of his remembrance. But indeede late repentance is seldom true repentance: and it may bee iustly feared, lest that repentance, which men, when they are dying frame to themselves, die also with them. Secondly, they flatter themselves, imagining that the best man that is, hath seuen fales euery day into grosse finnes; whereas the place which they abase out of the Prouerbes, The righteous man falleth seuen times in a day and riseth againe: is rather to be vnderstood of fals into affliction, then fals into actuall finnes. Thirdly, they deceive themselves, most falsly thinking, small finnes, or hidden finnes, to be no finnes: and grosse finnes in which they liue, and lie most dangerously, to be but finnes of infirmite.

XXXV.

By this which hath bene said, the professors of Christian religion are admonished of two things. First, that they vse most painefull diligence in working their saluation, in attaining to faith, in dying to sinne, in liuing to newnesse of life: and their hearts be neuer at rest, till such time as they goe beyond all reprobates in the professio of Christ Iesus. Seceit thou how far a reprobate may goe? preffe on to the straight-gate with maine and might, with all violence lay hold on the kingdom of heauen. Shall Herod feare and reuerence Iohn Baptist, and heare him gladly? and wilt thou neglect the Ministers and the preaching of the word? Shall Pharisee confesse his sin, say shall Satan beleue and tremble? and wilt not thou bewaile and lament thy finnes, and thy wicked conuersation? It behooueth thee to feare and take heede, least wicked men, and the diuill himselfe rise in iudgement and condemne thee. For if thou shalt come short of the duties of a reprobate, and doe not goe beyond him in the professio of the Gospel, sure it is thou must looke for the reward of a reprobate.

The second thing is, that the professour of the Gospel, diligently try & examine himselfe, whether he is in the state of damnation, or in the state of grace: whether he yet beare the yoke of Satan, or is the adopted childe of God. Thou wilt say, this needs not, thou professest the Gospel, and art taken for a Christian: yet marke and consider, that this often befallth reprobates to be esteemed Christians:

and they are often so like them, that none but Christ can discern the sheepe from the goats, true Christians from apparant Christians. Wherefore it behooveth all men that shew themselves to be Christians, to lay aside all pride, and selfe-love, and with singleness of heart to put themselves into the ballance of Gods word, and to make iust trial, whether in them, repentance, faith, mortification, sanctification, &c. give weight answerable to their outward profession: which if they doe, let them praise God: if not, let them with all speede vñe the meanes that they may be borne anew to the Lord, and may be inwardly guided by his holy spirit, to give obedience to his will, least in the day of Gods triall, they start aside from him like a broken bow, and fall againe to their first vñeancesse.

XXXVI.

To come to the second sort of men and to conclude: let the most zealous Papist that is, trie himselfe & his whole estate with a single heart as in the presence of Gods maiestie, and he shall finde that by his whole religion and profession he doth come short of a reprobate, or at the least not goe beyond him in these points before named: The Lord open their eyes that they may see it. Amen.

4,5,6,7.

The Elect are they whom God of the good pleasure of his will hath decreed in himselfe to chooseth to eternal life, for the praise of the glory of his grace. For this cause the Elect only are said to haue their names written in the Booke of life.

Vocation.

Whom God electeth, them he calleth in the time appointed for the same purpose. This calling of the Elect is nothing else but a singling out and a seuering of them out of this vile world, and the customes thereof, to bee Citizens of the kingdome of glorie after this life. And the time of their calling is tearmed in Scripture, The day of visitation, the day of salvation, the time of grace.

This seuering and choosing of the Elect out of the world, is then performed, when God by his holy spirit indueth them with true saving faith: a wonderfull gift, peculiar to the Elect. For the better knowing of it, there is to be considered: First, what faith is: Secondly, how God doth worke it in the heart of the Elect. Thirdly, what degrees there bee of faith: Fourthly, what are the fruits and benefits of faith.

IV.

What
faith is.

Faith is a wonderful grace of God, by which the Elect do apprehend and apply Christ and all his benefits vnto themselves particularly.

Here first it is to be considered, that the very nature of faith standeth in a certaine power of apprehending and applying Christ. This is declared by Paul when he saith, Ye are buried with him through baptism, by whom ye are also risen againe with him by the faith of the power of God, who raised him from the dead. Where it appeareth that faith is made a means to communicate Christ himselfe, his death & buriall, and so all other benefits to the beleuer. Again, to beleue in Christ, and to receiue or to lay hold on Christ, are put one for another by Saint Iohn: which declareth that there is a speciall applying of Christ: euen as wee see,

what a man hath any thing given him, he reacheth out his hand and pulleth it to himselfe, and so makes it his owne. Moreover, faith is called the putting on of Christ: which cannot be vñesse Christs righteousness be specially applied to the heart, as the garment to the backe, when it is put on. Lastly, this may appear, in that faith is called the eating and drinking of Christ: for there is no eating of meat that nourisheth, but first it must be tasted and chewed in the mouth, then it must be conueyed into the stomack, and there digested: lastly it must be applied to the parts of the body that are to be nourished. And Paul prayeth for the Ephesians, that Christ may dwell in their hearts by faith: which plainly importeth, this apprehending and applying of Christ.

I adde further, that faith is a wonderfull grace of God, which may appear: first, in that Paul calleth it the faith of Gods power, because the power of God is especially scene in the begetting of faith. Secondly, experience sheweth it to be a wonderfull gift of God: when a man neither seeth, nor teeleth his sins, then to say he beleueth in Gods mercy, it is an easie matter; but when a man shall feelee his heart pressed downe with the weight of his finnes, and the anger of God for them; then to apply Gods free mercy to his owne foule, it is a most hard matter: for then it is the property of the cursed nature of man to blasphemous God, and to despair of mercy. And who (no doubt) of them preached mercy & redemption by Christ in the security of his heart, when Gods hand was vpon him, and the Lord made him see the vñessence of his treachery: hee could not comfort himselfe in Christ, if one would haue giuen him ten thousand handes, but in an hellish horror of conscience hanged himselfe desperately: which sheweth what a wonderfull hard thing it is at the same instant when a man is touched for his finnes, then to apply Gods mercy to himselfe. Yet a true Christian by the power of faith can doe this, as it may appear in Dauid, in the day of my hauen not scene that ougly taile of the curfe of A God, that euery finne draweth after it.

IX.

The meanes to attaine to the fight of fin, is by a diligent examination of a mans owne selfe. This was the praeface of the children of Israel in affliction: (a) Let vs trie (say they) and search our waies, & saye againe to the Lord. And Dauid giueth the same counsel to Sauls Courtiers: (b) Tremble and sinne not, examine your own heart on your bed, and be still. This examination must be made by the commandments of the Law, but specially by the tenth, which ransacketh the heart to the very quick: and was the meanes of Pauls conuersion. For he being a proud Pharisee, (c) this commandment shewed him some sin, which otherwise he had not knowne, & he killed him, that is, he humbled him. If so be it, that after examination a man cannot find out his finnes (as no man shall find out all his finnes, for (d) the heart of a man is a vast gulf of sinne, without either bottom or banke, and hath infinite and hidden corruption in it) then he must in a godly iaculose, suspect himselfe of his vnknownne finnes: as Dauid did, saying, (e) Who can understand his faults? cleanse me from my secret faults. And as Paul did, (f) I know nothing by my selfe, yet I am not thereby iustificd. And good reason it is, why men should suspect themselves of those finnes which as yet they neuer saw in themselves: (g) For that which is highly esteemed amongst men, is abomination in the sight of God: and the very (h) Angels are not cleane in his sight.

The third, is a sorrow for sinne, which is a paine and pricking in the heart arising of the feeling of the displeasure of God, and of the iust damnation which followeth after sinne. This was in the (i) Lewes after Peters first sermon: and in Habacuk at the hearing of Gods iudgement: (k) When I heard (saith he) my belly trembled: my lips shooke at thy voice: rottennesse entred into my bones: and I trembled in my selfe, that I might rest in the day of trouble. This sorrow is called the (l) spirit of bondage to feare: because when the spirit hath made a man fee his finnes, he seeth further the curfe of the Law, & so he findes himselfe to be in bondage vnder Satan, hell, death, and damnation: at which most terrible sight his heart is smitten with feare and trembling, through the consideration of his helth and damnable estate.

This sorrow if it continue and increafe to some great measure, hath certain symptoms in the body, (m) as burning heat, & routing of the intralls, (n) as paining and fainting of the solide parts.

XI.

In the feeling of this sorrow, three things are to be obserued. The first: all men must looke that it be seriously and soundly wrought in their hearts: for looke as men vie to breake hard stones into many small peeces and into dust, so must this feeling of Gods anger for sin bruite the heart of a poore sinner and bring it to nothing. And that this may be so, sorrow is not to be felt for a brunt, but very often before the end of a mans life. The godly man (p) from his youth suffereth the terrors of God: Isaac wrestling with the Angel gets the victorie of him, (q) but he is faine to goe halting to his grave, and traile one of his loynes after him continually. (r) The pashallamb was neuer eaten without swire heauies, to signifie that they which will be free from the wrath of God by Iesus Christ, must feele continually the smart and bitteresse of their owne finnes. The second, all men must take heede, least when they are touched for their fins, they besnare their owne consciences: for if the sorrow be somewhat ouer-sharpe, they shall see themselves euen brought to the gates of hell, and to feele the pangs of death. And when a man is in this perplexitie, he shall finde it a most hard matter to be freed from it, without the marvellous power and strength of Christ Iesus, who onely is able to helpe him and comfort him: yea many when they are once plunged in this distresse & anguish of soules, shall neuer escape it, as may appeare in Car. Saul, Achitophel, Judas & now of late in Iohn Hofmeister a Monk, and Latomus, who for the space of certaine daies neuer left crying, that he was damned, because that he had wilfully persecuted the Gospell of Christ, and so he ended his life.

Therefore most worthe is Pauls counsell for the moderating of this sorrow: (s) It is sufficient (saith he) vnto the ineshuous man, that he be rebuked of man, so that now contrariwise ye ought rather to forgive him and comfort him, least he should be swallowed up with ouer much heauinesse. And further he giueth another reason, which followeth, *least Satan should circumtise vs: for we are ignorant of his enterprises. And indeede common experience sheweth the same, that when any man is most weak, then Satan most of all bestirreth himselfe to worke his confusion. The third is, that all men which are humbled, haue not like measure of sorrow, but some more, some lesse. Job felt the hand of God in exceeding great measure, when he cried, o that my griefe were well weighed, and my miseries were laid together in the ballance, for it would bee now heauier then the sand of the sea: therefore my words are now swallowed up, for the arrows of the Almighty are in mee, and the venome thereof doth drinke up my spirit, and the terrors of God fight against mee. The same did Ezechias, when on his death-bed he said, Hee brake all my bones like a Lyon, and like a crane or a swallow, so did I chaster: I did mourne like a doe, &c. Contrariwise, the theefe vpon the crosse, and Lydia in her conuersion neuer felt any such measure of griefe: for it is said of her, that God opened her heart to be attentive to that which Paul spake, and presently after shee intertained Paul and Silas cheerefully in her house, which she could not haue done if shee had bin pressed downe with any great measure of sorrow: neither are any to dislike themselves, because they are not so much humbled as they see some others: for God in great wisdome giueth to euery one which are to be fained, that which is conuenient for their estate. And it is often scene in a festered sore, that the corruption is let out as well with the pricking of a small pinne as with the wide lance of a safer.

XII.

The fourth thing in true humiliation, is an holy deporation: which is when a man is wholly out of all hope euer to attaine saluation by any strength or goodnes of his owne: speaking and thinking more vily of himselfe then any other can doe; and heartily acknowledging himselfe to haue deserved not oncomely, but euen ten thousand damnations in hell fire with the diuell and his angels. This was in Paul, when he said of himselfe that hee was the (a) chiefest of all sinners. This was in Daniel, when in the name of the people of Israel he prayed and said, (b) O Lord, righteousness belongeth vnto thee, and so vs open shame, as appeareth this day, &c. The same was in the prodigall child, who said, (c) Father, I haue sinned against heauens and against thee, and I am no more worthy to be called thy sonne. Lastly, it was in Ezra, (d) who said, O my God I am confounded, and am ashamed to lift up mine eyes vnto thee, my God: for our iniquities are increased ouer our head, and our treispassed is growne vp vnto the heauen.

XIII.

Many are of opinion that this sorrow for sin is nothing els but a melancholike passion: but in truth the thing is far otherwise, as may appeare in the example of Daniel: who by all coniectures was least troubled (e) with melancholy, and yet neuer any tasted more deeply of the sorrow and feeling of Gods anger for sinne then hee did, as the booke of Psalms declareth. And if any desire to know the difference, they are to be discerned thus. Sorrow for sinne may be where health, reason, senses, memorie, and all are found: but melancholike passions are where the bodie is vnfound, and the reason, senses, memory dilled and troubled. Secondly, sorrow for sinne is not cured by any physicke, but only by the sprinkling of the blood of Iesus Christ: melancholike passions are remoued by Physicke, dyet, musicke, and such like. Thirdly, sorrow for sinne is the anger of God, that woundeth and pierceth the conscience: but melancholike passions rise only of meere imaginations strongly conceiued in the braine. Lastly, these passions are long in breeding, and come by little and little: but the sorrow for sinne usually cometh on a suddaine as lightning into a house. And yet howeuer they are differing, it must be acknowledged that they may both concur together: so that the same man which is troubled with melancholy, may feele also the anger of God for sinne.

XIII.

Thus it appeareth how God maketh the heart fit to receiue faith, in the next place it is to be considered how the Lord causeth faith to spring and to breed in the humbled heart. For the effecting of this so blessed a worke, God worketh foure things in the heart: First, when a man is seriously humbled vnder the burden of his sinne, the Lord by his spirit makes him lift vp himselfe to consider and to ponder most diligently the great mercie of God offered vnto him in Christ Iesus. After the consideration of Gods mercie in Christ: he comes in the second place to see, feele, and from his heart to acknowledge himselfe to stand in neede of Christ, and to stand in neede of euery drop of his most precious blood. Thirdly, the Lord stirreth vp in his heart a vehement desire and longing after Christ and his meritis: this desire is compared to a thirst: which is not only the feeling of the drinnes of the stomacke, but also a vehement appetite after drinke, and Dauid fitly expresth it when he said, (f) I stretched forth my hands vnto thee: my soule desired after thee as the thirsty land. Lastly, after this desire he begins to pray, not for any world benefit, but only for the forgiveness of his finnes, crying with the poore Publican, O God be mercifull to me a sinner. Now this prayer, it is made, not for one day onely, but continually from day to day: not with lips, but with greater sighes and groanes of the heart: then that they can be exprest with the tongue. Now, after these desires and prayers for Gods mercie, ariseth in the heart a lively assurance of the forgiveness of sinne. For God, who cannot lie hath made this promise, (g) Know, & it shall be opened: and againe: before they call I will answer, and while they speake I will heare. Therefore when an humbled sinner comes crying and knocking at his mercy gate for the forgiveness of sin, either then or shortly after the Lord worketh in his heart a lively assurance thereof. And (h) whereas he thirsteth in his heart, being scorched with the heat of Gods displeasure beating vpon his conscience, Christ Iesus giuing him to drinke of the well of the water of life freely: and hauing drunken thereof, he shall neuer be more athirst, but shall haue in him a fountaine of water springing vp into euermlasting life.

XV.

For the better vnderstanding of this, that God worketh sauius faith in the heart of man after this manner; it must be obserued, that a sinner is compared (k) to a sick man oit in the Scriptures. And therefore the curing of a diseased sinner resembleth the curing of sinne. A man that hath a discafe or sore in his body, before he can be cured of it, he must see it, and bee in a feare lest it bring him into danger of death: after this hee shall see himselfe to it in neede of Physicke, and hee longeth till hee bee with the Physician: when hee is once come to him, hee desireth him of all loues to helpe him, and to shew the best skill hee can: hee will not spare for any cost: then hee yields himselfe into the Physicians hands, hands perswading himself, that by Gods blessing he both can and will helpe him: after this he comes to his former health againe. On the same manner, every man is wounded with the deadly wound of sinne at the very heart: and he that would be saved and escape damnation, must see his sinne, be sorrow full for it, and utterly despaire of his own strength to attaine saluation thereby: furthermore, he must see himselfe to stand in neede of Christ, the good Physitian of his soule, and long after him, and cry vnto him with deepe sighes and groanes for mercie: after this, Christ Iesus will temper him a plaister of his owne heart blood; which being applied, hee shall find himselfe reuiued, and shall come to a liuely assurance of the forgiveness of all his sinnes. So it was in Dauid, when he repented of his adulterie and murder. First, God made him see his sinnes: for he saith, (a) I know mine iniquities, & my sinnes are euer before me. Secondly, he felt Gods anger for his sins. (b) Make me (saith he) to heare voy and gladnesse, that the bones which thou hast broken may reioyce. Thirdly, he utterly despaired of his own strength, in that he said, (c) Stablish me with thy force Spirit; signifieth thereby, wile the Lord would stay him with his glorious power, he should runne headlong to his owne confusion. Fourthly, he comes to see himselfe stand in great neede of Gods fauour: (d) one mercie will not content him: he prayeth for the whole innumerable multitude of his merities to be bestowed on him, to doe away his iniquities. Fifthly, his desire and his prayer for the forgiveness of his sinne, are set downe in the whole Psalm. And in his prayer his gathereth some comfort and assurance of Gods mercie towards himselfe, in that he saith, The sacrifices of God are a contrite spirit: (e) a contrite and a broken heart O God thou wilt not despise. Against the like appeareth in Dauid, Psal. 32. 5. When I held my tongue, my bones consumed in my roaring all the day. 4. For thy hand was heauie vpon me day and night: my moisture was turned into the drouge of summer. Sels. 5. Confessed my sinnes vnto thee, neither hid I mine iniquities: I said I will confesse, against my selfe my wickednesse vnto the Lord, and thou forgatest the iniquitie of my sinne.

To this purpose is the example of R. Glouers, Martyr, who being somewhat troubled at his entrance into prison, testifieth thus of himselfe. So (saith he) I remained without any further conference of any man by the space of eight daies, and till the bishops comming: in which time I gaue my selfe continually to prayer and meditation of the mercifull promises of God made to al without exception of persons that call vpon the name of his deare sonne Iesu Christ. I found in my selfe daily amendment of health of bodie, increase of peace of conscience, and many consolations from God by the helpe of his spirit: and sometime as it were a taft and glimmering of the life to come: al for his onely sonne Iesu Christs sake.

There are diuers degrees and measures of this vnaid faith, according as there be diuers degrees of Christians: some (f) are yet in the wombe, and haue their mother the Church nursing of them: some (g) are now borne babes, feeding on the milke of the word: some are (h) perfect men in Christ, come to the measure of the age of the fullnesse of Christ.

X V I I.

The least measure of faith that any Christian can haue, is compared to the (i) graine of mustard seed, the least of all seedes that will growe: (k) that hath fire in it, but so weak that it can neither giue heat nor light, but onely maketh a smoke, and is called by the name of a (l) little faith; and it may be thus described. When a man of an humble heart doth not yet fee the assurance of the forgiveness of his own sinnes, and yet he is perswaded that they are pardonable, desiring that they might be pardoned: and therefore prayeth to God that he would pardon them, and giue him strength to leaue them.

X V I I I.

A little faith may more plainly be knowen by considering of these four points: first, that it is onely in this heart, who is humbled for his sin: (m) For the Lord dwelleth in him that is of a contrite and humble spirit: to reuise the spirit of the humble, and to giue life to them that are of a contrite heart. Secondly, it is in a man especially at the time of his conversion, and calling to Christ, after which he is to grow from faith to faith. Thirdly, this faith is thought to be in the heart, yet it is not so much felt in the heart: this was in Dauid at some times. (n) My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me, saith he: The first words, My God, my God, are speeches of faith: yet the latter, why hast thou forsaken me? shew that then hee had no feeling of Gods mercy. A little faith then is in the heart of man, as in the spring time the fruit is in the budde, which yet appeareth not, but onely hath his nature and substance in the budde. Lastly, the beginnings and seedes of this faith, or at the least, signes and effects thereof, are three.

The first is a perswasion, that a mans owne sinnes are pardonable: this perswasion though it be not faith, yet it is a good preparation to faith: for the wicked cutte themselves off quite from Gods mercie, in that with Cain (o) they say, their sinnes are greater, then that they can be forgiven. The second, is a desire of the fauour and mercie of God in Christ, and of the meanes to attaine to that fauour. (p) This desire is a speciall grace of God, and it hath the promise of blessednes; and it must be distinguished from that desire which wicked men haue: who though they desire life eternal, as Balaam did: yet they cannot sincerely desire the meanes, as faith, repentance, mortification, reconciliation, &c. The third, is prayer for nothing in this world, but onely for the forgiveness of their sinnes, with great sighes and groanes, from the bottom of the heart, which they are not able to expresse, as they feele them. Now this heart praying & desire for the pardon of sin can neuer come from the flesh, but only from the spirit, who stirreth vp these heavenly motions of longing, desiring, fighting after remission of sin, and all other graces of God which he bestoweth vpon his children. And where the spirit of Christ dwelleth, there mult needs be faith: for Christ dwelleth in the hearts of the faithful by faith. Therefore as Rebecca, when shee felt the twines strue in her wombe, though it pained her, yet she knew, both that she had conceived, and that the children were quicke in her: so they who haue these motions, and holy affections in them before mentioned, may assure themselves that the spirit of God dwelleth in them; and consequently that they haue faith, though a weak faith.

X I X.

Examples of this small faith are euident in the Apostles, who though they beleued that Christ was the Saviour of the world, yet they were ignorant of his death and resurrection, which are the chiefe means of saluation. After his resurrection they were ignorant of his ascension, & of his spirituall kingdom, for they dreamed of an earthly kingdom: and at his death they all fled from him, and Peter fearfully denied him. They being in these estates are not said to haue no faith, but to be of a little faith. Another example we haue in Dauid, who hauing continued a long space in his two great sinnes, adultery, & murder, was admonished thereof by Nathan the Prophet: being admonished he confessed his sin, and straightway Nathan declared vnto him from the Lord the forgiveness of them. Yet afterward Dauid humbled himselfe, as it appeareth in the 51. Psalm, and prayes most earnestly for the forgiveness of those and all other his sinnes, euen as though it had not bin true, that they were forgiven, as Nathan told him: the reason is: how often they were remitted before God, yet Dauid at his first repenting of them felt no assurance in his heart of the forgiveness of them, onely hee had a perswasion, that they might be pardoned: and therefore he vehemently desired and prayed to the Lord, to remit them, and to sanctifie him anew. This then being the least measure of faith, it must be remembered, that he who hath not attained to it, hath as yet no fauing faith at all.

X X.

The greatest measure of faith is a full perswasion of the mercy of God, For it is the strength and ripeness of faith, Rom. 4. 20, 21. Abraham was weak in faith, but being strengthened in the faith, was fully perswaded, that he who had promised was able to doe it. This full assurance is when a man can say with Paul, Rom. 8. 38. I am perswaded that neither life, nor death, nor Angels, nor principalties, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Iesus our Lord. And least any should thinke this saying is peculiar to Paul, he himselfe of himselfe that for this cause he was receiued to mercie, that he might be an example to them which after should beleeue in Christ to life eternal: and the whole Church in the Canticles vseth the same in effect: saying, Cant. 8. 6, 7. Love is as strong as death, jealousie is as cruel as the grave, the coales thereof are fierie coales, and a vehement flame. Much water cannot quench love, neither can the floods drowne it: if a man should giue all the substance of his house for love, he would contemne it.

X X I.

No Christian attaines to this full assurance at the first, but in some continuance of time, after that for a long space he hath kept a good conscience before God, and before men: and hath diuers experiences of Gods loue and fauour towards him in Christ. This Paul declared to the Romanes: in afflictions God sheds abroad his loue in their hearts, by the holy Ghost, which is giuen to them: but how by degrees from affliction ariseth patience, from patience cometh experience, from experience, hope: and hope neuer maketh ashamed, or disappointeth him of eternal life. This is euident in Dauid: he saith, (k) Doubtlesse, saith he, kindeesse and mercie shall follow mee all the daies of my life, & I shall liue a long season in the house of the Lord. Marke this his absolute perswasion: & consider how he came vnto it, namely by experience of Gods fauour sundry times, and after sundry manners. For before he set down this resolution, hee numbered vp diuers benefits receiued of the Lord: that hee had fed him in greene pastures, & led him by the refreshing waters of Gods words: that hee restores him, and leads him in the pathes of righteousness: that hee strengtheneth him in great dangers, euen of death, and preferreth him: that in despite of his enemies, hee enriched him with many benefits. By means of all these mercies of God bestowed on him, hee came to be perswaded of the continuance of the fauour of God towards him. Again, Dauid said before king Saul, 1 Sam. 17. 32. Let not mine heart faile because of Goliath: for I seruant will go & fight with the Philistin. And Saul said to Dauid, v. 33. Thou art not able to go against this Philistin to fight with him: for thou art but a boy, & he is a man of war from his youth. Dauid answered, that he was able to fight with, and to slay the vncircumcised Philistin. And the ground of his perswasion was taken from experience: for thus he said, ver. 34. Thy seruant kept his fathers sheep: & there came a Lyon, and likewise a Beare, and took a sheepe out of the flocke, and v. 35. I went out after him and smote him, and took it out of his mouth, and when hee arose against mee, I caught him by the beard, and smote him and slew him. ver. 36. Sothy seruant slew both the Lyon and the Beare: therefore this vncircumcised Philistin shall be as one of them, seeing he hath railled on the host of the living God. The like proceeding must be in matters concerning eternal life. Little Dauid resemblen every Christian:

and iustification, and indeed with hope (:) by which they looke patiently for the accomplishing of all good things which God hath begunne in them. And therefore they vndergoe all crosses and afflictions with a quiet and contented mind: because they know that the time will come when they shall have full redemption from all euils. This was (b) the patience of Paul, when he said, that nothing in the world could fener him from the loue of God in Christ. And like to this was the patience of Policarpe, and of Ignatius, who when hee was condemned & iudged to be throwne to wild beafts, and now heard the Lyons roaring, he boldly and yet patiently layd; I am the wheate of Christ, I shall bee ground with teeth of the wilde beafts, that I may bee found good bread. Also the same was the patience of the blessed Martyr S. Lawrence, who like a meeke lambe suffered himselfe to be tormented on a fiery gridiron: and when he had bin pressed downe with fire pikes for a great space, in the mightie spirit of God, spake vnto the Emperour that caused him thus to be tormented, on this wise,

This side is now roasted enough; turne up, O tyrant great: Assey, whether roasted or rawe, thou shalt finde the better meat.

XXXII.

The third maine benefit, is (c) in vnder sanctification: by which a Christian in his minde, in his will, and in his affections is freed from the bondage and tyranny of sin and Satan, and is by little and little inabled through the spirit of Christ to desire and approue that which is good, & to walke it. And it hath two parts. (d) The first, is mortification, when the power of sin is continually weakened, consumed, and diminished. (e) The second, is vniuersification, by which inherent righteoussesse is really put into them, and afterward is continually increased.

XXXIII.

This sanctification is wrought in al christians after this manner: After that they are ioyned to Christ, & made mystically bone of his bone, and flesh of his flesh, Christ worketh in the effectually by his holy spirit, & his workes are principall three. First, (f) hee causeth his owne death to worke effectually the death of all sin, and to kill the power of the flesh. For it is a coraſie, which being applied to the part affected, eates out the venome & corruption: so to the death of Christ by faith applied, fretteth out and consumes the concupiscence & the corruption of the whole man. Secondly, his buriall causeth the buriall of sinne, as it were in a graue. (g) Thirdly, his resurrection sends a quickning power into them, & serueth to make them rise out of their sinne, in which they were dead & buried, to worke righteousness, & to liue in holines of life. Lazarus body lay fourte daies & stae in the graue, yet Christ raised it, & gaue him life againe, and made him do the same workes that liuing men doe: so also Christ dealeth with the foules of the faithfull;

they rot & stinke in their sins, and would perishe in the, if they were left alone: but Christ puts a heavenly life into them, and makes them active and lively to doe the will of God in the works of christianity, & in the works of their callings. And this sanctification is throughout the whole man in the spirit, soule, and bodie, 1. Thee. 5. 23. And here the spirit signifieth the mind & memory; the soule, the wil & affections.

XXXIV.

The sanctification of the minde is the enlightning of it with the true knowledge of Gods word. It is of two sorts, either Spiritual understanding, or spiritual wisdom. Spiritual understanding, is a general conceiving of every thing that is to bee done, out of Gods word. Spiritual wisdom, is a worthy grace of God, by which a man is able to vnderstand out of Gods word, what is to be done or not to be done in any particular thing, or action, according to the circumstances of person, time, place, &c. Both these are in euery Christian, otherwise Paul would neuer haue prayed for the Colossians, Col. 1. 9. that they might be filled with knowledge of Gods wil, in all wisdom and spiritual understanding. In both these excelled Dauid, who reifisteth of himself, that Gods word (h) was as a lantern to his feet, & a light to his path: and that God (i) by his commandments had made him wiser then his enemies: that he had more vnderstanding then all his teachers, because Gods testimonies were his meditations, (k) that he understood more then the ancients, because he kept Gods precepts. The properties of the minde enlightened are specially two. The first is, that by it a Christian sees his owne blindness, ignorance, and vanity, as appeareth in Dauid, who being a Prophet of God, yet prayed, (l) Open my eyes (O Lord) that I may see the wonders of thy lawes. And thence it is that the godly so much bewailed the blindness of their mindes. Contrariwise, the wicked man in the midst of his blindness, thinks himself to see: The second is, that the minde runneth, and is occupied in a continual meditation of Gods word. So Dauid saith, Psal. 1. 2: the righteous mans delight is in the law of the Lord, and in his law dar he meditate day and night.

XXXV.

The memorie also is sanctified in that it can both keepe & remember that which is good and agreeable to Gods wil; whereas naturally it beft remembreth lewdnes, and wickednes, and vanitie. This holy memorie was in Dauid: Psal. 119. 11: I haue hid thy promises in mine heart, that I might not sin against thee. And Mary, Luke 2. 19, kept all the sayings of Christ, and pondered them in her heart. And to the exercise of this memory, Salomon hath a good lesson, Prov. 3. 1: My sonne hearken vnto my words, incline thine eares vnto my sayings, let them not depart from thine eyes, but keepe them in the midst of thine heart.

XXXVI.

Furthermore, the will of a Christian is renewed and purified by Christ, which appeareth

Sanctification of the minde,

Sanctification of the affections,

Sanctification of the memory,

Sanctification of the will,

Sanctification of the memory,

Sanctification of the will,

in that it is so farre forth freed from sin, that it can will and choofe that which is good and acceptable to God, and refuse that which is euill, according to that of Paul, It is Gods will that ye should not be bound to sin, but to righteousness, to holiness, to the love of God, to the love of your neighbour. Now if a man be considered as hee is naturally, he can neither will, nor performe that (b) which is good, but only that which is euill: for he is folde vnder sin, as the ox or the asse, & committeth iniquities as the fish draweth in water; yea he is in bondage vnder Satan, who inspireth his minde with vile motions, and boweth his will, affections, and the members of his body to his cursed will: so that for his life, he is not able to doe any thing but sinne and rebell against God. And it must bee remembered, that although the Christian mans will be freed in part from the bondage of sin in this life, yet it shall not be free from the power of sinne vntill the life to come: for (c) Paul that worthy Saint saith of himselfe being regenerate, that he was carnall and sold vnder sinne.

XXXVII.

Sanctified affections are knowne by this, that they (d) are moued and inclined to that which is good, to embrace it: & are not commonly affected and stirred with that which is euill, vntill it be to eschew it. Examples hereof are these which follow, (e) To reioyce with them that reioyce, & to weepe with them that weepe. (f) To reioyce, because a mans name is written in heauen. (g) To desire Gods presence and fauour as the dry land desireth water. (h) To feare & tremble at Gods word. (i) To long and to faint after the places where God is worshipped. (k) To be vexed in soule from day to day in seeing and hearing the vniuersall deeds of men: and to shed riuers of teares because men breake Gods commandments. (l) Inferuency of spirit to serue the Lord. (m) To put on the bowels of compassion towards the miseries of men. (n) To be angry and sinne not. (o) To sorrow for the displeasing of God. (p) To loue the brethren in Christ. (q) To admire at the word of God. (r) To loue Gods commandments above golde. (s) To admire the graces of God in others. (t) In feare to serue God, and to reioyce in trembling. (u) To walke in the feare of God, and to be filled with the ioy of the holy Ghost. (v) To be heauie through manifold temptations. (w) To reioyce in being partaker of the sufferings of Christ. (x) To wait on the Lord, to reioyce in him, and to trust in his holy name. (y) To wait for the full redemption. (z) To fight, desiring to enioy eternall life. (a) To loue the habitation of Gods house, and the place where his honory dwelleth. (b) To eschew all things as lesse and dung in respect of Christ.

XXXVIII.

But among al these sanctified affections, there are four specially to be marked. The first is, a zeale for Gods glory: by which a Christian is thus affected, that rather then God should lose his glory: he could be content to haue his owne foule damned. As it was with Moses, who feared lest God should lose his glory, if he did vnto destroy the Israelites for their idolatry, whom he had chofen to be his people:

And therefore in this respect prayed vnto the Lord, Therefore now if thou pardonest their iniquities, thy mercy shall appeare: but if thou wilt not, I pray thee raise me out of the booke which thou hast written. Exod. 32. 42. And, Rom. 9. 3. Paul could haue wished with all his heart to be cut off from all fellowship with Christ, & to be giuen vnto eternall destruction, for his countrey-mens the Iewes, and for Gods glory specially. Some may say, this affection is not common to all, but peculiar to such as are led with such an exceeding affection, as these holy men were, and which haue their hearts so pierced & kindled with diuine loue, & so rauished with the fame out of themselves, that they forget all other things, yea themselves, hauing nothing before their eyes but God, and his glory. To this I answer, that this affection is common to all, though the measure of it be diuerse, in some more, in some lesse: which appeareth in that our Saviour Christ teacheth euery one in his prayer which he made, before he craue any other thing, either concerning God, or himselfe, to pray that Gods name may be sanctified. For by this all Christians are taught that they are to ouer-passe all considerations of themselves, their owne pleasure & profit: their saluation or damnation: and absolutely with an hearty affection, to seeke after the glory of God in all their doings, that as Gods glory is most deare vnto himselfe, so it may appeare also that it is most deare vnto thee. If any thinke it strange that Moses, Paul, or any other should be content to fall into miserie, to lose their liues, and to be cast into eternall perdition in hell-fire with reprobate and damned spirits, rather then Gods honour should be turned into dishonour & blasphemie: let them consider that wonderfull is the power of true loue, which maketh all things easie: which is as strong as the graue, that ouercomes all, and was neuer yet overcome: which is as flaming fire, that a whole sea of water cannot quench. And the loue which these men had to God did so rauish them, that they felt no feare of hell-fire.

XXXIX.

The second affection is the feare of God, a most excellent and wonderfull grace of God: Salomon & matcheth it, yea preferreth it too, before all things in this world, making it the end of all. Without it a man cannot be wise, it is the first step to wisdom. In it is assured strength; also it is a well-spring of life to eschew the snares of death. The Churches of Iudea being in peace, were edified, & walked in the feare of God, and were abundantly filled with the comfort of the holy Ghost. In this feare of God there be two parts: the first, is a persuasion in the heart, that a man is in Gods presence whosoever he is; and when he by infirmities forgets God, a drawing of himselfe into Gods presence. As it was in Dauid, I haue (saith he, Psal. 16. 8.) for the Lord alwaies before me. For he is at my right hand, therefore I shall not slide. And this his being in Gods presence, he fetterh downe most excellently in the 139. Pharao Enoch walked with God, Gen. 5. 22. Abraham is commanded to walke before God & robe bright, Gen. 22. 1. The second part of the feare of God, is in Gods presence stand in awe of him; which is when a man takes heede to his waies left he offend God. This aduise, Dauid giues to Saule Counsellors, Psal. 4. 4. Stand in awe and sinenot. Pharao commanded the midwives of Egypt, to kill all the male children of the Israelites at their birth they did it not, because (a) they stood in awe of God, fearing to displease him. And hence it is, that the (b) godly feare Gods word with feare and trembling.

X L.

The third, is the hatred and detestation of sin, because it is sin, and specially of a mans owne corruptions; wherewith a Christian is so troubled, that in regard of them and for no other cause, he most heartily desireth to be forth of this most miserable world, that he may be disburdened of his sin, and leaue off to displease God. Paul feelth in himselfe a huge mass of deadly corruption, it makes him deeme himselfe most miserable; and to mourne because he was not deliuered from it, saying, Rom. 7. 24. O miserable man that I am I who shall deliuer me from this body of death? Again, it is sinne that maketh the Church complaine, Cant. 1. 4. that he is blacke; that the Sonne hath looked upon her, and therefore three cries, Ren. 22. 20. Come Lord Iesus, come quickly.

The fourth, is ioy of heart in consideration of the neerenes or presence of the terrible day of iudgement. The (c) reprobate either trembleth at the consideration of the day of iudgement, or else in the securitie of his heart hee regardeth it not. And when he shall see the signes of the coming of Christ, (d) his heart shall faile him for very feare, & he shall call the bills to fall upon him; but contrariwise, the faithfull loue the second coming of Christ, and therefore waite and long for it, they shall (f) lift vp their heads, because the accomplishment of their redemption is at hand.

X L I.

The sanctification of the body, is when all the members of it are carefully preferred from being meanes to execute any sinne; and are made the instruments of righteousness and holines. So Paul prayed for the Thessalonians that they might know how to possesse their vessels in holinesse, and in honour, and not in the lust of concupiscence, as the Gentiles do which know not God. And Job (1) made woement with his eyes not to looke on a woman; in whose example it appeares how euery member is to be kept pure & holy.

X L I I.

If any humbled Christian finde out this measure of sanctification in himselfe; yet let him not be discouraged. For if any man haue a willinges & a desire to obey all Gods commandements, he hath the spirit; and hee who hath the spirit is in Christ, & he who is in Christ shall neuer see damnation. And though hee faile greatly in the action of obedience; yet God will accept his affection to obey, as obedience acceptable vnto him. God will approve of thee for his owne worke which hee hath wrought in thee, and not rectifie thee for thine.

X L I V.

From sanctification ariseth repentance. For a man cannot hate his owne sins before he be sanctified; & he cannot truly repent for them before he hate them. Repentance is when a man (1) turnes to God, & brings forth fruits worthy amendment of life. This turning vnto God hath two parts. The first, a purpose & resolution of heart neuer to sin any more; but to leade a new life. This was in Dauid, who fully purposed to keep Gods commandments; & applied his heart to fulfill his statutes vnto the end. And vnto this did Baruch exhort the brethren at Antich, that with full purpose of heart they would cleane vnto the Lord. The second part is an holy labour in mans life & conseruatiō to purifie & cleanse himselfe from sin: of this speaketh John, 1. Job. 3. 3. And euery one that hath this hope in him, purgeth himselfe euen as he is pure. This did Dauid practise, as may appeare in that he said, Psal. 73. 13. Certainly, I haue closed my heart in vaine, and washed my hands in innocency. If any maruell how repentance followes sanctification, considering it is the first thing of all, that the Prophets, Apostles, and Ministers of God preach vnto the people whom they would winne to Christ: I answer, that all other graces are more hidden in the heart, whereas repentance is open, & sooner appeareth to a mans owne selfe, and to the eyes of the world. It is like the bud in the tree, which appeareth before the leafe, the bloosome, the fruit; and yet in nature, it is the last: for a man must be renewed, and come to an utter disliking of his owne finnes, before he will turne from them, and leaue them.

X L V.

By this it may appeare, that there is one manner of sinning in the godly, and another in the vngodly, though they fall both into one sin. A wicked man who he sinneth, in his heart he giueth full consent to the sin; but the godly though they fall into the same finnes with the wicked, yet they neuer giue full consent: for they are in their minds, wills, and affections partly regenerate, and partly vngenerate, and therefore their wills doe partly will, and partly abhorre that which is euill: according as Saint Paul saith of himselfe, Rom. 7. 23. I delight in the law of God according to the inner man, but I see another law in my members rebelling against the law of my minde, and leading me captive, &c. And that the godly man neuer giueth full consent to sinne, it is euident by three tokens: First, before hee cometh to doe the sinne, he hath no purpose nor desire to doe it; but his purpose and desire is to do the will of God contrary to that sinne. Secondly, in the act of doing of the sin, his heart ariseth against it; yet by the strength of temptation, and by the mightie violence of the flesh, he is haled and pulled on to doe wickednes. Paul saith of himselfe, that he was bold vnder sinne, that is, he was like a slave, who desired to escape out of his masters hands, and yet is faime in great misery to serue him. Thirdly, after he hath sinned he is sore displeased with himselfe for it, and truly repenteth. As Peter before the denying of his matter, had no purpose to doe it, but rather to die in his cause. In the act hee had a striving with himselfe, as appeareth by this, that first he answered faintly, I know not what thou sayest; and yet after when the assault of Satan more pretailed, he fell to swearing, cursing, and banning. And after his fall he repented himselfe and wept bitterly for it. All was contrary in Judas, who went to betray his master with full intent and purpose: for the diuill long tempting him vnto it, enured into him, that is, made him yeeld, and resolute himselfe to doe it. b Afterward when Christ was betrayed and condemned, Judas was not sorrowfull for his sinne with a godly sorrow, but in despair of mercy hanged himselfe.

X L V I.

Fruits worthe of amendment of life, are such fruits as the trees of righteousness beare, namely, good workes: for the doing of a good worke there be three things requisite: First, it must proceede from iustifying faith. For the worke cannot please God except the person please him, and the person cannot please him without this faith. Secondly, it is to be done in obedience vnto Gods revealed word; As a obey is better then sacrifice, and to hearken is better then the fat of Rams. Thirdly, it is to be referred to Gods glorie, Whither ye eate or drinke (saith Paul) or whatsoever ye doe, doe all to the glorie of God. The speciall workes of Christians, which they and none but they truly performe, are these five which follow.

X L V I I.

The first, is the good hearing of the word, My sleepe (saith Christ) heare my voice & follow me. And againe: he which is of God heareth his voice. And this was one note of the faithfull in the primitive Church to assemble to heare the word. This good hearing of the word, is the fauing hearing that bringeth life eternal. In this action Christians are vially thus disposed. Before they come to heare the word of God they make themselves readie to heare it, as the men of Berea did, who receiued the word with all readiness. This preparation standeth in two points: First, they disburden themselves of all impediments, that like vnto runners in a race, they may (b) be swift to heare: these impediments, are sin and troubled affections; and they come with humble hearts: as fooles, that they may become wise. Secondly, they quicken vp themselves, and come vnto the assemblies, hanging and thirsting after the word of God as men doe after meate and drinke.

that which is spoken, as Lydia was. Secondly, they truly beleue the word of God, and carefully apply it to their owne foules. Thirdly, they feelthe lively power of it in themselves: it is as (f) fire in them, to draw out their inward corruption; it is to them the (m) sword of the spirit, and as a sacrificing knife in the hand of Gods minister, by which their flesh is killed, and they are offered up in a living sacrifice to God: it is (n) spirit and life to quicken and reuiue their foules that are dead in sinne: and the reason of this is plaine: The word of God preached is as a cup of wine: the true christian is the Lords guesse, but he that hath fauce of his own, he bringeth his sugar with him, namely, his true faith, which he tempereth and minglith with Gods word, & so it becometh vnto him as a cup of sweet wine; and as water of life. Now the hypocrite, because he bringeth no faith with him, drinketh of the same, but he findeth the wine to be fowre and tart, & void of relish, and in truth it is vnto him as a cup of ranke poison. Again, they heare the word of God in Gods presence, and therefore their hearts are full of feare and trembling. And they receiue the Word, not (r) as from man, but as from Christ Iesus the onely Doctor of the Church; and they regard not so much the Embassadour, or his ability, as the Embassage of reconciliation sent from the king of heauen.

After they haue heard the Word, they are bettered in knowledge and in affection, and they remember it and meditate vpon it continually, that they may frame all their doings by it. Worldly men vse to buy bookes of statutes, and to haue them in their houses to read on, that they may know how to aoid danger of law. And so the faithfull doe alwaies set before them Gods word, and in all their doings it is their Counsellor, least they should come into danger of Gods displeasure.

X L V I I I.

The second worke is, the receiuing of the Sacrament, of Baptisme once only, when a man is openly and solemnly addmitted into the Church: and of the Lords supper often. The first fealeth vp to the heart of a Christian, that he is vnto Christ, and hath true fellowship with him in being fully iustified before God, and inwardly sanctified. The second ferueth to scale vp in the heart of a Christian the continual growing and increasing of the same graces. This thing euery true beleener shall haue often experience of, either in or after the receiuing of the Sacrament; and yet it shall not be so alwaies, for sometimes the Church being brought into Christs wine-celler, shall fall into a swoone, and not feele any refreshing there. Yet the beleener is not to be dismayed, if he feele not alwaies comfort presently after the Sacrament. A sicke man feeles no comfort or nourishment, when he eateth meate, and yet it prefermeth his life: So the weak Christian though he feele himselfe not nourished at the Sacrament by Christs body and blood, yet hee shall see in time that his soule shall bee preferred thereby vnto euertlasting life. Furthermore, when a Christian feeleth no comfort by the Sacrament, let him then humble himselfe before the Lord more heartily then euer before, confessing his finnes, and praying for increase of grace, and then he shall feele the fruit of the Sacrament.

X L I X.

The third worke, is a relieving of the poore brethren in Christ, proceeding of a brotherly kindnes towards them. This is a speciall work not to be done to all men alike, as Saint Paul faith, a Doe good to all men, but especially to them of the household of faith. Direction for this matter are the faithfull of Hierusalem, who were all in one place, and had all things common: namely, in use. And they sold their possessions and goods and parted them to all men, as every one had need. Also the brethren at Corinth in their extreame pouterie, released the Churches of Macedonia liberally, not onely according to their power, but also training themselves beyond their power. Yea this reliefe must goe further, even to the bestowing of a mans life, if neede so require, (as Saint Iohn faith) Hereby we haue perceiued liue, that he laid downe his life for vs: therefore we ought also to lay downe our liues for the brethren.

The fourth worke, is true praier and Saint Luke setteth out the faithfull, and the children of God, by this description: That they call on the name of the Lord: As on the contrary it is said of the wicked, (Y) That they call not vpon God. The true Christian calleth on the Lord in truth, For the spirit of adoption, which is the spirit of prayer, is his Schoole-master to teach him to doe it.

In praier he is thus disposed: first, before he praierh, he is stricken with some feare and reuerence in regard of Gods maiestie, for hee considereth that prayer is a familiar talking with God.

Secondly, he is inwardly touched with a liuely feeling of his wants, but especially he is vexed and grieved at his owne sinne and rebellion: to this sence of his miserie is as a spurte to quicken his benumbed heart.

Thirdly, hee humbleth himselfe before his God, and layeth (m) open his heart before the Lord, shewing a feruent and longing desire to obtaine those things of which hee findeth an extreame want in himselfe, as the Prophet Dauid did, whose desire was like the yawning of the drie ground; and this proceedeth from the spirit of God which a man oftentimes for his life cannot expresse.

Fourthly, when he maketh his request, hee doubteth not, but by faith hee beleueeth that God will grant his request, which he maketh according to his word. The ground of his persuasion is double: the first is, Christ Iesus, by whose merits as hee hath ordained remission of finnes, so hee looketh to obtaine all things else: The other ground is, the comfort table promises of God which hee hath made, that he will heare the truly call vpon him. Fifthly, he praierh not for a brunt or two, but he continueth in prayer: And although God seeme not to heare him at the first, yet he patiently waiteth on the Lord, and still calleth vpon him.

L I.

The fifth worke, is to walke in some lawfull calling with painefullnesse, and vprightnesse, so that in performing all the duties of it, a man may keepe a good conscience before God and man. Thus Dauid determined to walke in the government of his house and kingdom. I will doe wisely (faith he) in the perfect way rill thou comest to me; I will walke in the vprightnesse of mine heart, in the midst of mine house: I will let no wicked thing before mine eyes: I haue the worke of them that fall away: it shall not cleaue vnto me. This sinceritie of Dauids behauiour in his calling made him bolde to offer himselfe to be tried not onely by men, but much more by the Lord God himselfe, and to be punished accordingly. I Iudge me O Lord (faith he) for I haue walked in mine innocencie: Proue me O Lord, and trie me, examine my reines and mine heart: So vpright and cleere was hee in all his doings.

L I I.

Thus much of faith and the benefits that come by faith: Now followeth the spirituall exercise of a Christian in his manifold temptations, which are in this life inseparable companions of grace. The reason is, because the diuell hateth Christ with a deadly hatred, and sheweth this hatred in a continuall persecution of his members: as Saint Iohn faith (Y) The dragon was wroth with the woman, and went and made warre with the remnant of her seede, which keepe the commandmentes of God, and haue the testimony of Iesus Christ. Now therefore as soone as Christ Iesus beginneth to shew any token of his loue to any man, the diuell contrariwise sheweth forth his enmitie, and stirres vp his fellow champions, the flesh and the world, to warre against him for his confusion. And furthermore the Lord in great wisdome permits temptations to the last end of a Christian mans life (A) to trie his faith, to purge him of his sinne, to humble him, and to make him depend on his maiestie; to quicken and reuiue the graces of his spirit, which otherwise would be dead, and decay.

L I I I.

The temptations of a Christian are specially sixe. The first is, when inwardly in his heart (A) he is drawne away and inticed by his owne concupiscence vnto any sinne. The Christians exercise in temptation, is a fight and battell betwixt the flesh and the spirit. And this fighting standeth in foure things: First, the flesh stirres vp euill thoughts and desires, as a burning furnace continually sendeth vp smoke & sparkes of fire; and it eggett a man forward to euill words and deedes, according to that of Saint Marke, For from within, euen from the heart, beats of a man proceede euill thoughts, adulteries, fornications, murders, thefts, concupiscence, wickednesse, deceit, uncleannes, a wicked eye, backbiting, pride, foolishnesse.

II. The flesh hindereth and choketh the good motions and desires of the heart, as Paul faith, I see another law in my members rebelling against the law of my minde, and leading me captive to the law of sinne which is in my members. Again, the same flesh smyleth euery good motion and desire with some corruptions: so that the godly milke the best things that they doe. Esay faith of his owne & the peoples righteousness, that it is but a menstruous clout: the prayers of the Saints must bee perfumed with sweet odours, before they can ascend vp sweet and sauiour into the nostrils of God. And Paul said of himselfe, he did that which he disliked: not that he was ouertaken with grosse sinnes; but because when he was to doe his duty, the flesh hindered him, that he could not doe that which he did, exactly and soundly according to his will and desire: euen as a man who hath a iourney to goe, his mind is to dispatch it in all hast, yet when he is in his trauell, he goes but slowly by reason of a lamenesse in his ioynts.

III. The spirit on the contrary, kindles in the heart good motions and desires, and puts a man forwards to good workes and deedes, as it was in Dauid, I will praise the Lord (faith he) who hath giuen mee counsel: my reines also teach in the night season.

IV. The spirit rebukes a man for his euill intents and desires, and redresteth the force of them, and as it were nips them in the head. Thus Esay describeth the inward motions of the spirit, And thine eares shall heare a word behind thee, saying, This is the way, walke yee in it, when thou turnest to the right hand, and when thou turnest to the left. And Saint Iohn faith, The spirit indgeth the world of sinne. This was in Dauid, who when he did any euill, his heart smote him. 2. Sam. 24. 10. Out of this doctrine issueth a notable difference betwixt the wicked and the godly: In the godly when they are tempted to sinne, there is a fight betwixt the heart and the heart; that is, betwixt the heart & it selfe: In the wicked also there is a fight, when they are tempted to sin: but this fight is only betwixt the heart and the conscience. The wicked man whatsoeuer hee is, hath some knowledge of good and euill: and therefore when hee is doing any euill, his conscience accuseth, checketh, and controuleth him, and hee feels it stirring in him, as if it were some lining thing that crueld in his body and gnawing vpon his heart, and thereupon he is very often grieved for his sins, yet for all that he liketh his sins very well, and loueth them, and could find in his heart to continue in them for euer: so that indeed when he sinneth, he hath in his heart a straining and a conflict; but that is onely betweene himselfe and his conscience. But the godly haue another kind of battell and conflict, not only their consciences prick them and reprove them for sin, but also their hearts are so renned, that they rife in hatred & detestation of sinne; and when they are tempted to euill by their flesh and Satan, they feele a lust and desire to doe that which is good.

L I V.

The second temptation, is a disquietnes in the heart of a Christian, because he cannot according to his desire, haue fellowship with Christ Iesus, he is exercised in this temptation on this manner.

I. Christ lets him see his excellency, and how he is affected towards him.

II. Then the Christian considering this, desireth Christ and his righteousness.

III. He delighteth himselfe in Christ, and hath some enioying of his benefites.

IV. Then hee comes into the assembly of the Church as into Godes wine-cellar, that in the Word and Sacraments hee may feele a greater measure of the loue of Christ.

V. But he falls lone-sicke: that is, he becomes troubled in spirit, because he cannot enioy the presence of Christ in the said manner, as he would.

VI. In this his spirituall sicknes hee feels the power of Christ supporting him, that the spirit be not quenched, and he heares Christ as it were whispering in his heart, as a man speaks to his friend when he is coming towards him asse off.

VII. After this Christ comes neerer, but the Christian can no otherwise enioy him: then a man enioyes the company of his friend, who is on the other side of a wall looking at him through the grate or lattise.

VIII. Then his eyes are opened, to see the causes, why Christ to withdraws himselfe, to be his owne securitie and negligence in seeking to Christ, his slacknesse in spirituall exercises, as in prayer and thankgiuing, the deceitfulness and malice of false teachers.

IX. Then he comes to feele more liuely his fellowship with Christ.

X. Lastly, he prayeth that Christ would continue with him to the end.

L V.

The third temptation, is trouble of minde, because there is no feeling of Christ at all, who seemeth to be departed for a time. The exercise of a Christian in this tentation is this.

1. The poore soule lying as a man desolate in the night without comfort, seeks for Christ by priuate prayer and meditation, but it will not preuaile.

2. He vseth the helpe, counsell, & praier of godly brethren, yet Christ cannot be found.

3. Then hee seeks to godly Ministers, to receive some comfort by them, by their meanes hee can feele none.

4. After that all meanes haue bene thus vied, and none will preuaile, then by Gods great mercy, when hee hath least hope; hee finds Christ, and feels him come againe.

s. Pre-

5 Presently his faith reuiueth, and layeth A fast hold on Christ.

6 And he hath as neere fellowship with Christ in his heart as before.

* Verſ. 5. 7 Then comes againe the ioy of the holy Ghost: and the peace of conscience as a sweete sleepe falls vpon him.

* Verſ. 6. 8 Then his heart ariseth vp into heauen by holy affections and prayers, which doe as pillars of smoke mount upward: sweet as mirrhe and incense.

* Verſ. 8, 9, 10. 9 Also he is raiſhed there with the meditation of the glorious estate of the kingdome of heauen.

* Verſ. 11. 10 He labours to bring others to conſider the glory of Christ and his kingdom.

* Cap. 4. verſ. 1. to the 15. 11 After all this Christ reueales to his ſervant, what his bleſſed eſtate is, both in this euer, and in the life to come, more clearly then euer before, and makes him ſee thoſe graces which he hath beſtowed on him.

* Verſ. 16. 12 Then the Christian prayeth that Christ would breath on him by his holy ſpirit, that he may bring forth the fruits of thoſe graces which are in him.

* Verſ. 1. 13 Laſtly, Christ granteth him this his requeſt.

LVI.

The fourth temptation, is ſecuritie of heart, riſing of ouer-much delight in the plea-ſures of the world. The exerciſe of a Chri-ſtian in this temptation is this.

1 Hee ſlambers and is halfe aſleepe in the pleaſures of this world.

2 Christ by his word and ſpirit labours to withdraw him from his pleaſures, and to make him more heartily receiue his beloved.

3 But he delayeth to doe it being loath to leaue his eaſe and ſweete delights.

* Verſ. 4. 4 Then Christ awakes him and ſtirres vp his heart, by making him to ſee the vanitie of his pleaſures.

5 He then begins to be more earnestly affected towards Christ.

* Verſ. 5. 6 With sorrow he ſets his heart to haue fellowſhip with Christ after his old manner:
and this he expreſſeth by bringing forth ſweet fruits of righteouſneſſe.

* Verſ. 6. 7 Then hee feeleth that Christ hath with-drawne his ſpirit.

8 He almoſt deſpaires for this.

9 Yet by priuate prayer ſeekes for Christ.

* Verſ. 7. 10 When that will not helpe, hee reports to the Miniſters of the word, at whoſe hands he finds no comfort.

* Verſ. 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16. 11 Not recovering his firſt eſtate, through impatience of the loue of Christ, he makes his miſery knowne to ſtrangers, to ſee if they can comfort him, and he ſomewhat comforts him-ſelfe in deſcribing Christs excellency to them.

* Verſ. 17. 12 They then are raiſhed with him to ſeeke Christ, and require then to know where to finde him.

* Cap. 6. 13 Anſwer is made in the aſſemblies of the Church.

14 After this communication the Chriſtians faith and feeling reuiueth, Christ returning to him againe.

15 Then Christ aſſureth him in his heart of his loue and liking towards him.

16 Gaiuing further aſſurance to him that he ſhall grow vp and bee made fruitfull in euery good grace.

17 After this, the Christian comes in ſuch a high meaſure to loue Christ, that nothing ſhall be able to ſeuer him from Christ.

LVII.

The ſift temptation is a fall into ſome great finne, as Noah into drunkenneſſe, Dauid into adulterie, and murder, Peter into the deni-all of Christ. The exerciſe of a Chriſtian in this temptation is this:

1 At the firſt his heart is vſually dulled and made ſecure with ſinne.

2 Yet after a while, there by ſome meanes ariſeth in his heart a godly ſorrow: which is when he is grieved for this onely cauſe, that by his ſin he hath diſpleaſed God, who hath beene to him ſo louing and mercifull a father, whoſe fauour hee would bee content to purchaſe, (ſo hee might haue it and obtaine it) euen with the damnation of his owne ſoule.

3 Then hee begins to repent himſelfe of his finnes, reuiuing aſreſh his former repentance.

4 This repentance hee ſheweth by ſeu-en ſignes.

1 A care to leaue that ſin into which hee is fallen. As they which crucified our Sauour Christ, when they were pricked in their hearts
at Peters ſermon, they ſhewed this care in ſaying, Men and brethren what ſhall we doe to be ſaued?

2 An Apologet, which is when a man in the heauineſſe of his heart, ſhall not excuſe or defend his ſinne, but confeſſe it to the Lord, and vterly condemne himſelfe for it, acknowledging withall that there is no way to escape the wrath of God, but by hauing Gods free pardon in Christ.

3 Indignation, which is an inward anger and fretting againſt his own ſelfe, becauſe he was ſo careleſſe in looking to his own waies. Peter when he had denied his maſter, hee wept, and that bitterly, which ſheweth that with ſor-row, he had alſo an anger againſt himſelfe.

4 A fear riſing not ſo much from the judgments of God, as from this, left he ſhould hereafter fall into the ſame ſinne againe, and by ſo doing more grievouſly diſpleaſe God.

5 A deſire euer after more carefully to pleaſe God.

6 Zeale in the ſeruiſe of God.

7 Reuenge vpon himſelfe for his former offeſſes: for example, if a man ſinne in ſurfeit-ing and drunkenneſſe, if hee euer repent, he will bring vader his corrupt nature by ſparing and moderating himſelfe.

LVIII.

The ſixt temptation is outward afflictions,

which the godly in this life muſt ſuffer. (a) If any will go after Christ, he muſt denie himſelfe, take up his own croſſe, & follow him. And S. Peter ſaith, (b) That indgement begins at Gods houſe. (c) And Paul, that we muſt enter into the kingdom of heauen through many ſuch temptations. The exerciſe of a Chriſtian in affliction is this:

1. (a) At the firſt they are very heauie and bitter.

2. He ſuffereth them with great lenitie and patience, ſubmitting himſelfe vnder the hand of God. Yet (e) if they bee in great meaſure, they will drie him to impatience.

3. If they continue, he ſhall feele (according to his owne iudgement) the (f) waſh and diſpleaſure of God in his heart.

4. (g) His old ſins will come aſreſh into his remembrance, and trouble him. He is ſleepey, (h) and in his ſleepe hee hath viſions, and dreames, and anxietie of ſpirit.

5. (i) In this miſeric God ſupports his faith, that it faile not, and he then forſake Christ.

6. (k) Hee feeling thus Gods power to ſtrengthen him, hath experience of it in himſelfe.

7. From experience proceeds hope, that the grace of God ſhall neuer be wanting vnto him in any afflictions to come: and as hee hopech, ſo it comes to paſſe.

8. With this hope is ioyned (l) a ſerious humiliation before the Lord (m) with the fruit of peace and righteouſneſſe.

If the afflictions bee for Christs cauſe vnto death, then hee in more ſpecial manner is filled with the ioy of the holy Ghost, and hee is then ſtabliſhed with the greateſt meaſure of the ſtrength of Christ, that no torment is able to foile & to bring him from Christ, though the Chriſtian ſhould die a thouſand times for it.
According to that of Paul, (n) To you it is giuen for Christ, not onely to beleeue in him, but alſo to ſuffer for his ſake. And this is grounded vpon the promiſe of God, (o) Who thou paſſeſt through the waters I will be with thee, and through the flouds, that they doe not ouerflow thee: when thou walkeſt through the very fire, thou ſhalt not be burnt: neither ſhalt the flame kinde thee.

LIX.

Hence ariſeth a notable difference, betweene the godly and the wicked, in the ſuffering of afflictions. A reprobate the more the Lord laiech his hand on him, the more hee (p) mur-mureth & rebelleth againſt God: it is contrary with the true Chriſtian: none feeleth more the power and rebellion of ſinne then he, none is more afflicted by Satan the he, & oftentimes it cometh to paſſe that God withdraweth the ſignes of his fauour from him, and lets him feele his wrath. And this is the greateſt temptation of all other when a man ſhall ſee the Lord to be his enemy, and to his thinking to arme himſelfe againſt him to his deſtruction. As
(q) Ezechias did who ſaith, that the Lord did crash his bones like a Lyon. Or (r) as Iob ſaith, that the arrows of the Almighty were in him, and the venime thereof drunke up his ſpirit, & the terrors of God did fight againſt him. Yet the true Chriſtian when the world, the fleſh, and the diuell, & God himſelfe too are againſt him, doth euen then moſt of all reſt in the Lord, and by faith cleaue to him. (s) Though God ſhould deſtroy me yet would I truſt in him, (faith Iob.) (t) And Dauid ſaith, My God, my God, why haſt thou for-ſaken me? When hee ſaith that God hath forſake him, it may ſeeme to be the complaint of a deſe-perate man, not hauing ſo much as one ſpark of faith yet then hee ſaith, My God, My God:

which words containe a confeſſion proceeding from true faith: ſo that in Dauid it appeareth, that the faithfull when they feele themſelves forlorne, and vterly reiected of God, according to the ſenſe and iudgement of the fleſh, yet by faith they can apprehend his hidden mercy, and behold it aſaſe off in the glaſſe of his promiſe. And ſo they doe often ſhew contrary affectiōs in their prayers, as Dauid doth.

(u) Jacob when hee wratleth with the Angell for life and death, neuer gaue ouer: and when hee was toiled hee would not ceaſe before the Lord had bleſſed him. This his wratling is a type of the conflicts which the faithfull are to haue with the Lord himſelfe, who vſeth to bring his owne childre (as it were) to the field:
and aſſaileth them with the one hand, and with the other hee holdeth them vp, that ſo he may prooue and exerciſe their faith. And for this cauſe the Church (x) is called by the name of Jacob. An example may be had in the woman of Canaan. (y) Firſt our Sauour Christ gaue her faith, & by that faith ſhee was moued to ſeke to him: but when ſhe was once come to him, hee gaue her three repulſes. Firſt, by ſaying nothing. Secondly, by denying her. Thirdly, by calling her dogge. Thus Chriſt in appearance made theſe, as though hee would neuer haue granted her requeſt. But ſhe at euery repulſe was more inſtant, crying more earnestly vnto him: and the plainly oppoſed her ſelfe to him, and would take no denial: for ſuch is the nature of true faith. Wherefore this faithfull when they feele themſelves ouerwhelmed with ſin, turmoiled with conflicts of Satan, when they feeel the anger of God offended with them, yet they can euen then liſt vp their eye-lids, and giue a glimps at the brazen ſerpent Ieſus Christ, and can ſling themſelves into the armes of Gods mercy, and catch hold on the hand of God buſteting them, and kiſſe it.

LX.

By theſe temptations it comes to paſſe, that a Chriſtian though he cannot fall finally from Christ, yet he may fall very dangerously from his former eſtate. Firſt, the graces of God may be by his default leſſened in him: elſe Paul would not haue giuen out theſe exhortations, Quemot neſt ſpiritu, a Griue neſt the holy ſpirit of God, by whom ye are ſealed vnto the day of redemption. Secondly, the graces of God may be buried in him, and couered for a time, ſo that hee may bee like a man in a trance, who both by his owne ſeaſe and by the judgement of the Physician is taken for dead. This was the estate of Peter, who though he confessed that Christ was the Sonne of the living Lord, (a) yet he denied him & forswore him at the voice of a damfell. Thirdly, he may fall againe into the same sinne after repentance. Indeepe this is a dangerous case; yet it may befall a true Christian. Otherwise when as the Israelites (Gods people) had fallen away from him by their finnes, and idolatries, hee would not still have offered them merice, (b) as he doth by his prophets. And (c) Paul praeth the Corinthians in Christs stead that they would be reconciled to God: who neuertheless were before reconciled to God. Fourthly, hee may commit a sinne of presumption, which is a fearful sinne, beeing done wittingly of knowledge, and willingly, and with some wilfulness. Therefore David praied, (d) Keep thy servant from presumptuous finnes: and to them himselfe to be in danger of it, he prayeth further, let them not have dominion over mee. Lastly, he may fall into despaire of Gods mercy for a time, and this is a dangerous sin. For he which despaire, makes all the promises of God to be false, and this sinne of all other is most contrary to true fauing faith. In this estate was David when being in trouble, he said; (e) this is my death. And Paul shewes that the incestuous man might have fallen into desperation, (f) when he faith, Comfort him, lest hee bee swallowed vp of ouermuch ieiuness. And it must be remembered that the Church of Rome erreth in this, that she teacheth desperation to be a sinne against the holy Ghost. This sinne against the holy Ghost is a blasphemie spoken against the knowne truth of Gods word, or a deniall of Christs of a willfull and obdurate malice. But desperation may arise through ignorance of a mans owne estate: through horror of conscience for sinne: through an often relapse into some sin: through the ouerdeepe consideration of a mans owne unworthinesse: lastly, by aburration of the truth, through compulsion and feare. (g) This befell Francis Spira, who after his apostasie despaired. Yet they are much ouerseen that write of him as a damned creature. For first, who can tell whether he despaired finally or no? Secondly, in the very midst of his desperation, hee complaineth of the hardnesse of his heart, which made him that hee could not pray: no doubt then he felt his hardnesse of heart: and the feeling of corruption in the heart, is by some contrarie grace; so that we may consequently thinke, that hee was not quite bereft of al goodnesse: though hee neuer felt it then, nor shewed it to the beholders.

LXI.

The cause why a Christian cannot quite fall away from grace, is this: after that he is sanctified he receiveth from God another speciall grace, which may be called Corroboration. For he hath in him not onely the sanctifying, but also the strengthening power of Christ.

Therefore Paul praeth for the Ephesians, (b) that they may be strengthened in the inner man: for the Colosians (c) that they may be strengthened with the glorious power of Christ. And of himselfe he saith; (k) that he is able to doe all things through the power of Christ that strengtheneth him. David saith, that God reneweth them that feare him, as the Eagle reneweth her decayed strength. From hence as from a speciall cause ariseth Patience and Perseuerance vnto the end: for when a man is supported by the power of Christ, hee may be able to beare many crosses patiently with a contented minde, and perseuere in bearing of it how long looser the crosse endureth.

LXII.

Thus much of the estate of a Christian in this life. Now I will adde some reasons in the way of perswasion to all men, but especially to worldlings, and to loose professors of the Gospell, that they would vterly denie themselves, (m) and vse all means to become true Christians by being made new creatures in Christ, and (n) by leading such a life as may adorne the Gospell of Christ.

My first reason is this; the man that liueth in this world, not being a true Christian, is far more vile then the basest creature of all, euen the dog or toade. For first hee is nothing els but a filthy dunghill of al abomination and vncleannes, the (o) sinke whereof hath infected heauen and earth, and no perfumes could euer delay it in the nostrils of God, but onely the suffering of Christ, beeing a (p) sacrifice of a sweet smelling sauour to God. We make it verie dauncy to come nere a lazar man that is full of botches, blaines, and sores; but much more are those men to be abhorred, who haue lien many yeares starke (q) dead in finnes and trespasses: and therefore now doe nothing els but rot and stinke in them like vgly loathsome carriages.

Secondly, hee which is no Christian is vnder the power of darkenesse, hauing Satan for his prince (r) and God, and giuing vnto him in token of homage his best parts, euen his minde and conscience (s) to be his dwelling place: and his whole conseruation is nothing els but a perpetual obedience to Satan. If Atheists and worldlings, and carnall Gospellers were perswaded of the truth of this (as it is most true) it would make them howie and drie, though now they liue at ease without feeling any pricke of conscience for sinne. And if they had but the least sense of it in the world, it would make their finitie hearts to bleed, and it would make them shedde riuers of teares. But how long shall they continue in this vile estate? Truly, vntill they come to Christ: awake therefore thou that sleepest, and stand vp from the dead, and Christ shall giue thee light: open thine heart to receiue Christ, and then hee will come and binde the strong man Satan, and cast him out, and dwell in thee himselfe.

Thirdly, he which is no Christian is danger of all the iudgements of God; so that euery moment some of them may befall him. Hee may perish suddenly by water with the old world, hee may be consumed with fire and brimstone with Sodome and Gomorrah, hee may be swallowed vp of the earth with Dathan, and Abiram, he may hang himselfe with Iudas, he may haue his braines dashed against the ground and be eaten vp of dogs with Iesabel, he may dye in hardnes of heart with Pharo; he may despaire with Cain and Iudas, he may be stricken with sudden death with Ananias & Saphira his wife, he may be eaten vp with wormes with Herod, hee may be smitten with trembling that hee cannot heare Gods word: with Felix, he may void his guts at the stoole with Arius, he may crye at his death that hee is damned with Latomus, hee may be leste vnto himselfe to mocke, blaspheme, and renounce Christ with Iulian: and hee may suffer many more fearful iudgements, whereof the Lord hath (a) great store, and all tend to the confounding of them which will not be humbled vnder his hand. Contrariwise, the true Christian is for out of the reach of Gods iudgements that they cannot hurt him (b). Christ is a covering and a cloud against the heat and tempest of Gods iudgements; (c) when a mans heart is sprinkled with the blood of this immaculate Lambe, all the plagues of Gods passe ouer him. In the destruction of Ierusalem the (d) righteous beare a mark in their forehead: and are saved. Therefore let him that hath regard to his owne safetie become a Christian.

Fourthly, the man which is no Christian is in danger of eternal death and damnation in hell fire: and they which fall into this estate, it had beene ten thousand folde better for them if they had neuer bin borne: 2. Thes. 1. 9. for they are quite separated from the presence of God and from his glory: all the company they haue is with the diuell and his angels. Their bodies and soules are tormented with infinite horror and anguish, arising of the feeling of the whole wrath of God, in which as into a bottomlesse sea, they are plunged. Thus they are alwayes dying, and yet are neuer dead. Furthermore, the length of this torment must be considered, which greatly aggravates the paine. If a man might bee deliuered from the paines of hell when hee had suffered them so many yeares as there be drops in the sea, or little sands in the whole earth, it were some comfort: but after those yeares be expired there shall come no release, but the damned shall continue in shrieking, yelling, and gnashing of teeth, enduring the consuming heate of Gods wrath without any end for euer and euer. Yea, to goe further, a wicked man carrieth an hell about him in this life, namely, an euill conscience, which if it bee neuer so little touched with any part of Gods anger, a man shall feelee himselfe to haue euen the pangs of hell in his heart. Now therefore they that would escape out of this hellish and damnable estate, while they haue time let them

A pray for the pardon of their finnes in Christ, and walke according to the spirit in newnes of life; and then they may assure themselves, that there is no condemnation can belong to them. And it must be alwayes remembered, that hee which would liue when he is dead, must dye while he is alieue, namely to sinne. And againe, hee which would rise to eternall life in the day of iudgement, must rise from sinne before hee die, vnto newnes of life.

The fift reason: God hath appointed vnto euery man that liues in the Church, a certaine time of repentance, and of coming to Christ: And he which mispendeth that time, and is not made a Christian then, can neuer bee saved. This made our Sauour Christ weepe for Ierusalem, and say, Luk. 19. 42. O if thou hadst known at the least in this thy day, the things which belong to thy peace, but now they are hidde from thine eyes. And hee further signifieth the destruction of Ierusalem, v. 44. because he knew not the time of her visitation. Againe, the neglecting of this time is one cause, why not one or two, but many (e) shall seeke to enter into the kingdome of heauen, and yet shall not be able. It is a maruolous thing, that they which seeke to bee saved should perish, but the fault is theirs which seeke when it is too late. Now therefore thou secure worldling, thy conscience tels thee that thou hast not yet repented, and that thou art not yet a iaiely member of Iesus Christ. And thou knowest further, that howsoeuer thou art alieue at this time, yet thou hast no lease of thy life. God may call thee forth of this world the next year, the next weeke, the next hour: yea hee may strike thee with sudden death at this very present. And in very truth, if thou goest forth of this world beeing no repentant sinner, thou goest damned to hell. Wherefore delay not one minute of an houre longer, but with all speed repent and turne vnto God, and bring forth fruits worthy amendment of life, that all thy finnes may be done away: when the day of death, or the day of iudgement shall bee. And doe not thinke with thy selfe, that it shall be sufficient to deferre thy turning vnto God till the last end. For late repentance is seldom true repentance. And he which continueth long in any sinne, is in a dangerous case. If a man lie long in any disease hee will scarce recover his former health: and he which is growne in the custom of any sinne, and the sinne is become ripe in him, it is a thousand to one, he is neuer cured; according to that of S. Iames: Jam. 1. 13. sinne being perfected bringeth forth death.

The sixt reason, Eternall life is a thing desired of all men: yet none shall bee made partakers of it, but the true Christian; and the glorious estate of this life would moue any man to bee a Christian. First of all, they which haue eternall life are freed from all paines, sicknesses, infirmities, hunger, thirst, cold, wearines; from all sinne, as anger, forgetfulness, ignorance, from hell, death, damnation, Satan, and

From every thing that causeth miserie: according to that of S. Iohn, Reu. 21. 4. And God will wipe away all tears from their eyes: and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, neither crying, neither shall there be any more paine; for the first things are passed. Secondly, the faithfull shall be in the presence of Gods maiestie in heauen there to behold his face, that is, his glory, as our Saviour Christ saith, Ioh. 17. 24. Father, I will that they which thou hast given me, bee with mee when where I am, that they may behold my glory which thou hast given me. And David saith, Psalm. 16. 11. In thy presence is fulnes of ioy, and at thy right hand there are pleasures for euermore. Reuelat. 22. 4. Thirdly, 1. Cor. 15. 28. they shall haue such an excellent communion with God, that he shall be vnto them all in all. For in the end of the world when the whole number of the elect is accomplished, Christ shall present them to his Father, and as he is Mediatour he shall cease to be a King, a Priest, a Prophet: for though the efficacy of his offices be euermlasting: yet the execution of them shall cease, as Paul saith, 1. Cor. 15. 24. Then shall be the end, when he hath deliuered up the kingdom to God euen the Father, when he hath put downe all rule, all authoritie and power. Again, among the elect there shall not be king and subiect, father, mother, childe, master, seruant, noble, ignoble, rich, poore, liuing, dead. Some will say, what then shall be? I answer, one glorious & euermlasting God, the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghost, shall be in all the elect, all that heart can wish and desire. Men shall not be in darkenes, neither shall they need the light of the Sonne, Moone, or Starres. God himselfe immediately shall be their light, as Iohn saith, Reu. 21. 23. And the Citie hath no need of the Sonne, neither of the Moone to shine in it, for the glory of God doth light it, and the Lambe is the light of it. Men shall not then need meate, drinke, cloathing, sleepe, recreation, fire, shade, respiration, or any other such like, but God himselfe immediately shall be their life, and all things concerning life by Christ. Which Iohn signifieth when he saith, Reuel. 22. 1. 2. that he saw a pure river of water of life, cleere as Crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God, & of the Lambe: there being by either side of it the tree of life which beare twofower of fruites, and gaue fruite euery month. And whereas God is continually to be worshipped in heauen: they need no other tabernacle or temple therunto, but God himselfe shall be their temple: as Iohn saith, Reu. 21. 22. I saw no temple therein, for the Lord God Almighty, and the Lambe are the temple of it. Fourthly, from this glorious communion which is betwene God & Christ as he is man, and all the Saints which are his members, there ariseth an vnspcakable ioy and gladnes, where-with they are filled. David saith, Psalm. 36. 8. Gods children shall be satisfied with the fauours of his house, and that he shall giue them drinke out of the riuers of his pleasures. This vndoubtedly is infinite, and the Saints are not only replenished with it, but they are also swallowed vp of it as with an huge and infinite sea of waters, as may appeare in Peter, who at the transfiguration of Christ was so rauished out of measure with ioy at the sight of it, that he quite forgot himselfe, saying, Matth. 17. 4. Master, it is good being here: let vs make three Tabernacles, one for thee, one for Moses, and one for Elias. Lastly, out of this communion ariseth a perfect loue of God, whereby the Saints loue God with all their hearts, with all their soules, and strength, and this loue sheweth it selfe in that they are eternally occupied in (a) worshipping God, by singing of songs of praise & thanksgiving vnto him. Now then seeing the kingdom of heauen is so glorious, and none can haue it but the true Christian, let all men account the best things in the world (b) as drosse and dung, so that they may obtaine Christ and his righteousness.

The last reason is the endless loue of Iesus Christ shewed in his death and passion. Thou art by nature the child of wrath and vengeance: Satan hath wounded thee with many a deadly wound of sinne: thou liest bleeding at the heart, and art like to die eternally. Thou being in this estate, there is no man on earth, no Saint in heauen, no Angell, no creature at all, is able to helpe thee; Christ onely was able: he therefore came downe from heauen and became man, for this cause, to worke thy deliuerance. Furthermore, in the curing of the wound of sinne, no hearbe, no water, no plaister, no physicke can doe thee any good: onely the bodie and blood of Christ is soueraigne for this matter, being steeped in the wrath of God. He therefore subiected himselfe to the death of the crosse, vpon which he suffered the wrath of God due to the finnes of mankind: and of his owne heart blood he tempered for them a soueraigne medicine to heale all thy woundes and forces. Now therefore despise not this mercie; seeke vnto Christ, lay open all thy sores, pray him that hee would vouchsafe thee if it bee but one droppe of his blood; then he will come vnto thee by his holy spirit, he will wash and supple thy wounds in his blood, and binde them vp. He is the tree of life, the leaues whereof heale the nations, Reu. 21. 23. If thou get but one leafe of him thou art well, it will heale thee and restore thy dead soule, that thou maiest liue eternally in the kingdom of heauen. If this reason will not moue thee to be a Christian, thy case is desperate. It is the best reason that Peter could vse to this purpose. As obedient children (saith he, 1. Pet. 1. 14. 15.) fashion not your selues vnto the former lusts of your ignorance, but as hee which hath called you is holy, so ye be holy in all manner of conuersation. His reason followeth, 1. 18. 19. Knowing that ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and golde, from your vaine conuersation received by the tradition of the Fathers, but with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lambe without spot and without spot.

Thus much haue I spoken to the worldling, who who in his heart makes no more account of Christ then of his old shooes; and who had rather bee without Christ, then bee without his pigges, with the Gadarenes, Matth. 8. 32. Now for the true Christians I haue nothing to say but this: The Lord increase the number of them. And, Coloss. 19. 10, 11. the Lord fulfill them with the knowledge of his will in wisdom and spiritual vnderstanding, that they may walke worthy of him, and please him in all things, being fruitfull in all good works, and increasing in the knowledge of God. And whereas they are at continuall waire against the flesh, the world, and the diuell: Lord Iesus strengthen them with all might through thy glorious power, vnto all patience and long suffering with ioyfulness. And deare Father of all mercie, plant that gouernement in thy Church euer where which thou hast reuealed in thy word, that thy Saints may worship in those meanes, in that order and comeliness, which thou hast appointed, abounding in righteousness, peace of conscience, and ioy of the holy Ghost. Amen, Amen.

Timothew. Because of our ancient acquaintance and familiarity (deare friend Eusthim) I will make bold with you to aske such questions as may bee for my edification & comfort, and of no other matter but euen of religion, wherof I see you are an old professor. And first of all, let me be bold to aske this question of you, how it pleased God to make you a true Christian, and a member of Christ Iesus, whom I see you serue continually with a feruent zeale?

Eusth. For that old acquaintance that was betwene vs, and for that you are desirous to liue a godly life in Christ Iesus, I shall not conceale the good worke of my God in me: therefore I pray you make a little what I shall say, and I will declare vnto you the truth euen forth of the feeling of mine owne conscience. The fall of Adam did make me the heire of vengeance and wrath of God, and heire of eternall damnation, and did bring me into captiuitie and bondage vnder the diuell: and the diuell was my Lord, my ruler, my head, my gouernour, and my prince, yea, and my God. And my will was locked and knitted faster vnto the will of the diuell, then could a hundred thousand chaines binde a man vnto a post. Vnto the diuells will I did I consent with all my heart, with all my minde, with all my might, power, strength, will, and life: so that the law and will of the diuell was written as well in my heart, as in my members, and I ran her along after the will of the diuell with full faile, and the whole fwing of all the power I had; as a stone cast into the ayre cometh downe naturally of it selfe with all the violent fwing of his owne weight. O with what a deadly and venomous heart did I hate mine enemies? With how great malice of minde inwardly did I slay and murder? With what violence and rage, yea with what feruent lust committed I adulterie, fornication, and such like vncleanenesse? With what pleasure and delectation like a glutton seued I my belly? With what diligence deceiued I? How busily sought I the things of the world? Whatfoeuer I did worke, imagine, or speake, was abominable in the sight of God, for I could referre nothing vnto the honour of God: neither was his law or will written in my members, or in my heart, neither was there any more power in me to follow the will of God, then in a stone to ascend vpward of it selfe. And besides that, I was asleepe in so deepe blindness, that I could neither see nor feelee in what misery, thralldom, and wretchednesse I was, till Moses came and awaked me and published the law. When I heard the law truly preached, how that I ought to loue and honour God with all my strength and might from the low bottom of the heart, because he that did create me is Lord ouer it; and my neighbour, yea mine enemies as my selfe inwardly from the ground of my heart, because God hath made them after the likeness of his owne image, and they are his finnes as well as I, & Christ hath bought them with his blood, and made them heires of euermlasting life as well as I: and how I ought to doe whatfoeuer God biddeth, and to abstaine from whatfoeuer God forbidderth, with all loue and meekenesse, with a feruent and burning lust fro the center of the heart: Then began my conscience to rage against the law and against God. No fea, be it neuer so great a tempest, was so vnquiet, for it was not possible for mee a naturall man to consent to the law that it should be good, or that God should be righteous which made the law: in as much as it was contrarie vnto my nature, and damned me and all that I could doe, and neuer shewed mee where to fetch helpe, nor preached any mercie, (a) but onely let me at variance with God, and prouoked and stirred me to raile on God, and to blasphem him as a cruel tyrant. And indeed it was not possible to doe otherwise, to thinke that God made me of so poisoned a nature, and gaue me an impossible law to performe: I being not borne againe by the Spirit, and my witte, reason, and will teeing fo fast glued, yea nailed and chained vnto the will of the diuell. This was the captiuitie and bondage whence Christ deliuereth mee, redeemed and loosed mee. His blood, his death, his patience in suffering rebukes and wrongs, and the full wrath of God, his praiers and fastings, his meeknesse and fulfilling the vttermost points of the law, appeased the wrath of God, brought the fauour of God to me againe, obtained that God should loue me first, and be my Father, and that a mercifull Father that would consider my infirmity and weaknesse, and would giue me his spirit againe, which he had taken away in Adam, to rule, gouerne and strengthen me, and to breake the bands of Satan, wherein I was so straight bound. When Christ was on this wise preached, and the promises rehearsed which are contained in the booke of God (which preaching is called the Gospell or glad tydings,) and I had deeply considered the same: then my heart began to waxe soft and melt at the bounteous mercy of God, and kindnes shewed of Christ. For when the Gospell was preached, the spirit of God (me thought) entred into my heart, and opened my inward eyes, and wrought a liuely faith in me, and made my wofull conscience feeble & taste how sweete a thing the bitter death of Christ is, and how mercifull and louing God is through Christs purchasing merits, and made me to begin to loue againe, and to consent to the law of God, how that it is good and ought so to be, and that God is righteous that made it lastly: it wrought in me a desire to be whole, and to hunger and thirst after more righteousness, and strength to fulfill the law more perfectly, and in all that I doe or leaue vndone, to seeke Gods honour and his will with meeknesse, euermore condemning the imperfectnesse of my deedes by the law.

Now then this good worke of God to my saluation, standeth in two points, the working of the law, and the working of the Gospell: the preaching of the law was a key that bound and damned my conscience: the preaching of the Gospell was another key that loosed mee againe. These two falues (I meane the law and the Gospell) vsed God & his Preacher to heale and cure me a wretched sinner withall. The law did driue out my disease, and made it appeare, and was a sharpe falce, and fretting corrasie, and killed the dead flesh, and loosed and drew the fore out by the root, and all corruption. It pulled from me all trust and confidence I had in my selfe, and in mine owne works, merits, desertings, and ceremonies, and robbed me of all my righteousness, and made mee poore. It killed me in sending me downe to hell, and bringing me almost to vtter desperation, and prepared the way of the Lord, as it is written of Iohn Baptist. For it was not possible that Christ should come vnto mee as long as I trusted in my selfe, or in any worldly thing, or had any righteousness of mine owne, or riches of holy works. Then afterward came the Gos-

ple a more gentle plaister, which suppled and swaged the wounds of my conscience, and brought me health: it brought the Spirit of God, which loosed the bands of Satan, and coupled me to God and his will through a strong faith and feruent loue. Which bands were too strong for the diuell, the world, or any creature to loofe. And I a poore & wretched sinner felt so great mercy, that in my selfe I was most sure that God would not forsake me, or euer withdraw his mercie & leue from me. And I boldly cryed out with Paul, saying, Who shall separate me from the loue of God? &c. Finally, as before when I was bound to the diuell and his will, I wrought all manner of wickednesse, for I could doe no otherwise, it was my nature: euen so now since I am coupled to God by Christs blood, I doe good freely because of the spirit, and this my nature. And thus I trust I haue satisfied your first demand.

Timoth. Yea, but me thinkes you doe too much condemne your selfe in respect of sinne. For I can remember that from your childhood you were of a good and gentle nature, & your behauiour was alwayes honest and ciuill, and you could neuer abide the companie of them that were roysters and ruffians, and swearers, and blasphemers, and contemners of Gods word, and drunkards, which now are teamed good fellows. And your dealing with all men hath bene euer commended for good, faithfull and iust. What meane you then to make your selfe so abominable and accursed, and to say you were so wholly addicted vnto wickednesse, and your will so fearfully and miserably in captiuitie vnto the will of the diuell?

Ensb. Brother Timothy, I know what I say, God giue me grace to speake it with more liuely feeling of my weaknesse, and with a more bitter detestation of my sinne. By nature through the fall of Adam am I the child of wrath, heire of the vengeance of God by birth: yea and so from my first conception: and I had my fellowship with the damned diuells vnder the power of darknes and rule of Satan, while I was yet in my mothers womb: and although I shewed not the fruits of sinne as loone as I was borne nor long after: yet was I full of the naturall poison, from whence all wicked deedes do spring, and cannot but sinne outwardly, as soone as I am able to worke (be I neuer so young) if occasion be giuen: for my nature is to sinne as is the nature of a serpent to sting: and as a serpent yet young, or yet vnbrought forth, is full of poyson and cannot afterward (when time and occasion is giuen) but bring forth the fruites thereof: And as an adder, a toad, or a snake, is hated of man, not for the euill it had done, but for the poyson that is in it, and hurt which it cannot but doe: so am I hated of God for that naturall poyson which is conceived and borne with mee before I doe any outward euill. And as the euill which a venomous worme doth, maketh it not a serpent, but because it is a venomous worme, therefore doth it euill, and poisoneth: euen so doe not our euill deedes make vs euill first, but because we are of nature euill, therefore doe we euill, and thinke euill, to eternall damnation by the law, and are contrary to the will of God in our will, and in all things consent vnto the will of the fiend.

Timoth. As yet I neuer had such a feeling of my finnes as you haue had, and although I would be loath to commit any sinne, yet the Law was neuer so terrible vnto mee, condemning mee, pronouncing the sentence of death against mee, and stinging my conscience with teare of euermolting paine; as I perceine it hath bin vnto you: therefore I feare oftentimes lest my profession of religion should bee onely in truth meere hypocritie, I pray you let mee heare your mind.

Ensb. A true lying it is, that the right way to go vnto heauen, is to saile by hell, and there is no man liuing that feeleth the power and vertue of the blood of Christ, which first hath not felt the paines of hell. But yet in these paines there is a difference: and it is the will of God, that his children in their conversion shall some of them feele more, and some lesse. Ezekiel on his death-bed complaineth, Esa. 38. 13. 14. that the Lord breake his bones like a Lyon, that he could not speake by reason of paine, but chattered in his throat like a crane; and warmed like a Dove.

Iob saith, that God is his enemy, and both set him as a marked house at, and that the arrows of the Almighty are upon him, and that the poison of them both drinke up his spirits. David bewaileth his estate in many Psalmes, but especially in the 130. Psalm, where hee begetteth on this manner: Out of the deepe places haue I called vnto thee, O Lord: which is as though hee should say, O my poore soule fall not flatte downe, vex not thy selfe out of measure: the burden of thy finnes presse thee fore indeede, but bee thou not for all that quite ouerwhelmed, thou art thrust downe so low into the depth of deepes, that thou hast neede cry aloud to bee heard of him which dwelleth in the highest heights: and the euer-burning hell fire is not farre from that Lake whether thine iniquities haue plunged thee, so that thou maist receive as it were the Echo of thy cries and desperate howlings, which bee there cast out of all hope of euer coming forth. But the Lord which bringeth forth euery to the borders of hell his best beloued when they forget themselves, knoweth also how well to bring them backe againe. Goe no further then downward, but lift vp thy heart together with thine eyes, and seeke vnto the Lord, to reach vnto thee his mercifull and helping hand.

Againe, in the Scriptures wee finde examples of men conuerted vnto the Lord without any vehemence forrow of their finnes. What anguish of conscience had the thiefe vpon the crosse for his former life in his present conversion at the houre of Death? How was Lydia dismayed and cast down in respect of her wickednesse, like as Dauid was or Iob, whose heart God onely is said to haue opened to giue attendance to the preaching of Paul and Silas, who also euen presently after was ready to entertaine them and to make them a feast in his house, which hee could not haue done, if hee had bin in the perplexities of Ezechie, or Dauid. The same may bee spoken of the Iaylor, and of them which heard Peter sermon at Ierusalem, who for all they had murdered our Saviour Christ, yet in their conversion, their hearts were only for the time pricked. So then God in preparing vs, which in truth are nothing but fleshly and thinking dungbills of sinne, nay, very vncleanenes and pollution it selfe, I sa, in preparing vs to bee the Temples of his holy Spirit to dwell in, and the forth-putts to hoord vp his heavenly graces in, doth otherwhiles vse a milde and gentle remedie, and maketh the Law to looke vpon vs, though with no louing & gentle, yet with no fearefull countenance; and otherwhiles in some hee setteth a sharpe edge vnto the Law, and maketh it to wound the heart very deepe, and as a strong corrasie to torment them, and to frette and gnaw vpon their consciences. And yett by experience, that a botch or a bitt in a mans body, is as well eased of the corruption that is in it by the pricking of the point of a small needle, as by the launcing of a great raser. Wherefore if God by his Spirit haue wrought in you sorrow for sinne in any small measure, though not in as great measure as you desire, you haue no cause to complaine: and in that you are grieved with a godly sorrow for your sins, it is a good token of the grace of God in you.

Timoth. Surely this is a great comfort you giue me, God make me thankfull for it. And I pray you more plainly shew me the state of your life till this houre, that I and aliother may take warning by it.

Ensb. That which may doe good vnto other men I will neuer conceale, though it bee to my perpetuall shame. As I was conceived and borne in sinne, so my parents brought mee vp in ignorance, and neuer shewed mee my shame, and misery by Gods law: and I llied along time, euen as a man in a dead slepe or trance, and in truth I llied as though there were neither heauen nor hell, neither God nor diuell. And the diuell himselfe (as I now perceiue) did often perfwade my secure conscience that I was the child of God, and should be saved as well as the best man in the world: and I yielded to his perswasion, and did verily thinke it: so that when the Preacher for wickednesse and securitie denounced Gods iudgements and hell fire, I haue fid vnto my neighbours, that I hoped I should be saved, and hee should goe to hell: and when I was asked whether I could keepe all the commandments of the law, I said that I could: and being asked whether I neuer sinned, I said I thought that otherwhiles I did: but for them which were but fewe, I hoped God would haue mercie, and haue me excused, and all my neighbours were glad of my companie, they spake well of me, and I was taken for an honest man, when as indeede before God, I was a vile beast and the child of wrath, inspired with the spirit of the diuell continually. Well, after I heard the Law preached, and saw & remembered many fearful iudgements of God vpon men, whom I in reason thought were as good men as I, then I began to consider mine owne estate, and to perceiue my finnes, and my cursednesse, and vpon a time aboue all other, the curse of the law made me inwardly afraid, and my flesh then began to tremble and quake: then I could not sleepe in the night season, I was afraid of euery thing. If I were in my house, I thought the house would fall on my head: if abroad, I thought euery crannie of the earth would open it selfe wide, and swallow me. I started at euery straw, and at the moouing of a flie: my meate was loathsome vnto me, and I thought I was not worthy of so good a creature of God, and that God might iustly turne it to my bane: the griefe of my heart for my life past made me shed abundance of teares: and vpon that I remembred in Deuils Psalmes, that his teares were his drinke, and that he did wet his bedde with teares. And now the diuell changed both his coate and his note, and in fearful manner cried in my eares, that I was a reprobate, his child: that none of Gods children were as I am, that this griefe of my soule was the beginning of hell. And the greater was my paine, because I durst not open my minde vnto any for feare they should haue mocked mee, and haue made a iest of it. Wherefore I was faine to goe to a godly learned Preacher: I shewed mine estate vnto him; after I had continued with him the space of two or three daies, I receiued comfort both by the promises of mercie, which he shewed me in the booke of God, and by his feruent, godly, and effectuall prayers: and I thanke God euer since I haue had some assurance (in spite of the diuell) that I doe appertaine to the kingdom of heauen, and am now a member of Iesus Christ, and shall so continue for euer.

Tim. How know you that God hath forgiven your sinne?

Eufr. Because I am a sinner, and he is both able and willing to forgive me.

Tim. I grant that he is able to forgive you, but how know you that he will? you know your finnes are very great.

Eufr. I grant: but Christs passion is farre greater: and although my finnes were as red as skarlet and as purple, yet shall they be as white as snow, and as soft as wooll.

Tim. Oh but you haue sinned very often.

Eufr. Tell mee not I pray you what I haue done, but what I will doe.

Tim. What will you doe?

Eufr. By Gods grace it is my full purpose, and my earnest prayer to God is, hereafter to take better heede, and to amend my former life.

Tim. Is that enough thinke you?

Eufr. What lacketh?

Tim. The fauour and mercy of God, that may cleane forsake you.

Eufr. Nay, that I will neuer grant: for I am certaine I am perswaded of the fauour of God, euen to the saluation of my soule.

Tim. O shew me that, that is the thing I earnestly desire, to be assured of Gods speciall goodnesse, euen by your experience.

Eufr. According as God hath giuen me to feeble the same, so will he shew it to you. And first of all, the dealing of God towards me is a good argument to me. In the first Commandement, God hath commanded me to take him to be my God, and in the Lords prayer, he teacheth me to call him Father: hee hath created the world generally, and euery creature particular-ly for man, and so for me, to serue for my commodity, necessitie, and admonition. Also hee hath made mee for his owne image, hauing a reasonable soule, bodie, shape, where he might haue made me a Toad, a Serpent, a Swine, deformed, frantick. Moreouer, he hath wonderfully preferred mee in my infancy, childhood, youth, middle age hitherto from manifold dangers and perils: all which doe confirme in me a perswasion of Gods fatherly loue: & that I should not doubt hereof: where I might haue beene borne of Turkes: loe it was the will of God that I should be borne of Christian parents, and be brought into Gods Church by Baptisme, which is the Sacrament of adoption, and required faith, as well of the remission of my finnes, as of sanctification, and holinesse to be wrought of God in mee by his grace and holy spirit: where I might haue beene borne in an ignorant time and religion, God would that I should be borne in these daies, and in this countrey, where is more knowledge revealed, then euer was here, or in many places else is. Where I might haue beene of a corrupt parent, and intrangled with many errors of Papistrie, and of the Familie of Loue, and of the schisme of Browne, by Gods goodnes my iudgement is reformed, and he hath lightened mine eyes to see, and my heart to embrace his sincere truth. By all which things I doe confirme my faith of this, that God alwaies hath bene, is, and will be for euer my Father, and at my departing forth of this world will giue mee the crowne of euerallasting glorie. Secondly, when as man is euermore doubting of the promises of God be they neuer so certaine, God of his infinite mercie to prevent all occasions of doubtings, promiseth to giue his owne spirit as a pledge, pawne, or earnest-pennie vnto his children of their adoption, and election to saluation. Now, since it pleased God to call mee from hypocritie to be a member of his Church, I feeble that in my selfe which I neuer felt or heard of before. In times past, I came to prayers, and to the preaching of Gods word, euen as a Beare cometh to the flake; now the word of God is meate and drinke to me, and prayer is no burthen vnto me, but my ordinarie exercise. If I rise in the morning I am not well till I haue prayed: and when I thankes God, if I do any thing, it cometh into my mind to pray. In my prayers I finde great ioy and comfort, and exceeding fauour of God, I neuer thinke I can well take my rest, or doe any thing else except first I aske it: at Gods hand in Christ. Lastly, when my minde and heart is wholly occupied in worldly matters, I am stirred vp, and as it were driue to pray vnto God for the remission of my finnes, and the assurance of my saluation, and in prayer I haue had those grones which for their greatnesse cannot be expressed. Now from whence cometh all this? From the diuell? No. In these actions I haue found him my enemy, & a continual hinderer of them. For hee by his craft when I haue bene heauie and weake, hath failed to trouble mee to some finnes whereunto my curse and nature was not giuen; and I hauing yeelded to him, haue bene so hardened and blinded by those finnes, that for a time I haue made light account of the word of God and of his promises: but then perswaded by this came from mine owne selfe: no heither: This cursed nature of mine hath bene more pleased and delighted with sinne, and with the pleasures of the world, then with such exercises from which it draweth me and presseth me downe as lead. I cannot thinke that such a poisoning Cockatrice can lay such good eggs, or that wild crab trees (such as all men are in Adam) can bring forth sweete fruites, according to the will of God, except God plucke them forth of Adam, and plant them in the garden of his mercy, and flocke them, and graffe the spirit of Christ in them. Wherefore these are the works of Gods spirit, and my conscience is thereby certified, that God hath giuen mee the spirit of adoption, and therefore that his fauour and mercie shall continue towards mee for euer. For the gifts of God are without repentance, & whom God once loveth, him hee loveth for euer.

Thirdly, there be certaine fruits of Gods children which I find in me by which I am confirmed in Gods fauour. S. Iohn in his first Epistle faith, that hereby we know that we are translated from death to life; because wee loue the brethren. Truly, I feeble in my heart a burning loue towards them which are good Christians, though I neuer knew them nor saw them, and I am very desirous to doe any good for them: and it drops of my heart blood would doe them good, they should haue them. Moreover I hate all sinne and wickednesse with a bitter hatred, and I long to see the coming of my Saviour Christ to iudgement, I am grieved and disquieted, because I cannot fulfill the law of God as I ought, all which I haue learned forth of Gods word to be tokens of Gods children. And you see what euidence I haue to shew that I am a true member of the Church militant, and in the fauour of God.

Tim. Haue you a stedfast faith in Christ, (as these arguments seeme to prooue) without all wavering, doubting, and distrusting of Gods mercy?

Eufr. No, no. This my faith which I haue in Christ is euen fought against with doubting, and euer assailed with desolation, not when I sinne onely, but also in tentations of aduersities: into which God bringeth me to nurture me and to shew me mine owne heart, the hypocritie and false thoughts that there lie hid, my almost no faith at all, and as little loue, euen then happily when I thought my selfe most perfect of all: for when temptations come I cannot stand, when I haue sinned faith is feeble; when wrong is done vnto mee I cannot forgive, in sickness, in losse of goods, in all tribulation I am vnpatient, when my neighbour needeth my helpe that I must depart with him of mine owne, then loue is cold. And thus I learne and feeble that there is no power to doe good but of God onely. And in all such temptations my faith perisheth not utterly, neither my loue and consent to the law of God: but they be weake, sicke, wounded, and not cleane dead. As I dealt with my parents being a child, so now deale I towards God my loving Father. When I was a child, my father and mother taught me nurture and wisdom, I loued my father and all his commandements, and perceined the goodnesse he shewed mee, that my father loued mee, and all his precepts are vnto my wealth and profit, and that my father commandeth nothing for any neede hee hath thereof, but seeketh my profit onely: and therefore I haue a good faith vnto all his commandements, and loue all his commandements, and doe them with a good will, and with good-will goe euery day to the schoole. And by the way happily I saw a companie play, and with the sight was taken and ranshed of my memorie, and forgot my selfe, and stood and beheld, and fell to play also, forgetting father and mother, and all their kindnesse, and their lawes, and mine owne profit also: Howbeit the knowledge of my fathers kindnesse, the faith of his promises, and the loue that I had againe vnto my father, and the obedient mind were not utterly quenched, but lay hidden as all things doe when a man sleepech or lyeth in a trance. And as soone as I had played out all my lusts, or else by some had bene warned in the meane season, I came againe to my olde profession: Notwithstanding many tentations went ouer my heart, and the law as a right hang-man tormented my conscience, and went aight to perswade mee that my father would thrust me away, and hang mee if hee caught mee, so that I was like a great while to run away rather then to returne to my father againe. Feare and dread of rebuke, and of losse of my fathers loue, and of punishment, wrestled with the trust which I had in my fathers goodnesse, and as it were gaue my faith a fall. But I rose againe as soone as the rage of mine anger was past, and I rose againe as soone as the rage

of mine anger was past, and I rose againe as soone as the rage

of mine anger was past, and I rose againe as soone as the rage

of mine anger was past, and I rose againe as soone as the rage

of mine anger was past, and I rose againe as soone as the rage

of the first tyme was past; and my minde was more quiet. And the goodnesse of my father and his old kindeesse came vnto my remembrance; either by mine owne courage, or by the comfort of another. And I beleued that my father would not put mee away, or destroy me; and hee hoped that I would doe no more so. And vpon that I gaue me home againe dismayed, but not altogether faithlesse; the old kindeesse would not let me despaire, howbeit all the world could not see mine heart at rest, vntill the paine had bene past, and vntill I had heard the voice of my father, that al his forgotten.

Timoth. Seeing that you haue thus plainly and truly shewed the weaknesse of you, and consequently of all mens faith, shew me I pray you, how by the weaknesse of faith a Christian is not rather discomforted, then comforted, and assured of his saluation.

Ensb. God doth not so much regard the quantity of his graces as the truth of them; hee approoueth a little faith if it be a true faith; yea, if faith iusts were no more but a graine of mustard-seed (which is the least of all other seeds) it should be sufficient, and God would haue respect vnto it. The poore diseased begger with a lame hand, hauing the palse also, is a able neuertheless to reach out the same and receive an almes of a king: and so in like manner a weak and languishing faith is sufficient to be able to reach out to selfe, and to apprehend the infinite mercies of our heavenly King offered vnto vs in Christ. Faith in the 3. of Iohn is compared vnto the eie of the Israelite, which although it were of dimme sight, or looked askint, yet if it could neuer so little behold the brazen serpent, it was sufficient to cure the stings of the fiery serpents, and to saue life.

Tim. Seeing that you satisfie mee in euery point so fully, shew me I pray you, whether a man may be wicked and haue faith, and whether faith entering expelleth wickednesse. For I haue heard some say, that a man might beleeue the word of God, and bee neuer the better in his life, or holier then before he was.

Ensb. Many there are, which when they heare or read of faith, at once they consent thereto, and haue a certain imagination and opinion of faith as when a man telleth a story, or a thing done in a strange land that pertaineth not to them at all: which yet they beleeue: and tell as a true thing, and this imagination or opinion they call faith. Therefore as soone as they haue this imagination or opinion in their hearts, they say verily, this doctrine seemeth true, I beleeue it is euens so: then they thinke that the right faith is there, but afterward when they seeke in themselves no manner of working of the Spirit, neither the terrible sentence of the Law, & the horrible captivity vnder Sarran, neither can perceiue any alteration in themselves, & that any good works follow, but finde they are altogether as before, & abide in their old estate, then thinke they that faith is not sufficient, but that works must be ioyned with faith to iustification: but true faith is onely the gift of God, and is mighty in operation, neuer working being full of vertue: it reneweth man, and begetteth him afresh, altereth him; changeth him, & turneth him altogether into a new creature and conseruation: so that a man shall feelee his heart cleane changed, & far otherwise disposed then before, and hath power to loue that which before he could not but hate & delighteth in that which before he abhorred, and hateth that which before hee could not but loue. And it setteth the soule at liberty, & maketh her free to follow the will of God; and is to the soule as health to the body: After that a man is pined with long sickness, the legges cannot beare him, he cannot lift vp his hands to helpe him, his talfe is corrupt, sugar is bitter in his mouth, his stomack lengtheth after flubbesauce and swabbs, which a whole stomack is ready to cast his gorge: when health cometh the changeeth and altereth him cleane, giueth him strength in all his members, lust and will to doe of his owne accord that which before he could not doe; neither could suffer that any man should exhort him to doe, and hath now lust in wholesome things, and his members are free and at liberty, and haue power to doe all things of his owne accord which belong to a sound and whole man to doe. And faith worketh in the same manner, as a tree brings forth fruit of his owne accord: and as a man neede not bid a tree bring forth fruit, so is there no law put to him that beleeueth and is iustified through faith, to force him to obedience, neither is it needful. For the law is written & grauen in the heart, his pleasure is daily therein, & as without commandment euens of his owne nature he eateth, drinketh, seeth, heareth, talketh, goeth: euens so of his owne nature without any compulsion of the law, hee bringeth forth good works: and as a whole man when hee is athirst trieth but for drinke, and when hee hungereth abideth but for meate, and then drinketh and eateth naturally: euens so is the faithful euers athirst, and an hungered after the will of God, and trieth but for an occasion; and whensoever an occasion is giuen, hee worketh naturally the will of God. For this blessing is giuen them that trust in Christs blood, that they thirst and hunger to do Gods will. He that hath not this faith, is but an vnprofitable babler of faith and works, and neither worteth what he babbleth, nor whereunto his words tend. For hee feeleth not the power of faith, nor the working of the Spirit in his heart, but interpreteth the Scriptures which speake of faith and workes after his owne blind reason, and foolish fantasies, not hauing any experience in himselfe.

Timoth. Every member of Christs congregation is a sinner, & sinneth daily, some more and some lesse: for as it is written, 1. Ioh. 1. 8. I. We say we haue no sinne, we deceiue our selues, and the truth is not in vs. And Paul, Rom. 7. 19. 20. That good which I would, that doe I not: but that euill which I would not, that doe I: So it is not I that doe it (faith he) but sinne that dwelleth in me: So the Christian man is both a sinner and no sinner: which how it can bee, shew it me by your experience.

Ensb. I beeing one man in substance am two men in quality, flesh and spirit, which in me fight perpetually the one against the other, that I must goe either backward or forward, and cannot stand long in one estate. If the spirit ouercome in tentations, then is hee stronger and the flesh weaker. But if the flesh get a custome, then is the spirit none otherwise oppressed of the flesh, then as though shee had a mountaine on her backe, and as we sometime in our dreames thinke we beare heauier then a millstone on our breasts: or when wee dreame now and then that wee would runne away for feare of something, our legs seem heauier then lead: euens so is the spirit oppressed and ouerladen of the flesh through custome, that shee strugglith and striueth to get vp, and to breake loose in vaine, vntill the God of mercy, which heareth my groanes through Iesus Christ, come and looke her with his power, and put something on the backe of the flesh to keepe her downe, to minish her strength, and to mortifie her. So then no sinner I am if you regard the Spirit, the profession of my heart toward the law of God, my repentance & sorrow that I haue, both because I haue sinned, and am yet full of sinne, and looke vnto the promises of mercy in our Sauour Christ, and vnto my faith. A sinner am I if you looke to the frailtie of my flesh which is a remnant of the old Adam, and as it were the stocke of the old oliue tree, euens and anon when occasion is giuen, shooting forth his branches, leaues, bud, blossom, and fruite also: which also is as the weaknesse of one which is newly recovered of a great disease, by the reason whereof all my deeds are imperfect, and when occasions be great I fall into horrible daedes, and the fruite of the sin which remaineth in my members breaketh out. Notwithstanding the spirit leaueth mee not, but rebuketh me, and bringeth me home againe vnto my profession, so that I neuer cast off the yoke of God from off my necke, neither yeeld vp my selfe vnto sin to serue it, but fight afresh, and begin a new battell. And I had rather you should vnderstand this forth of the Scriptures, by the example of Iohn and the Apostles. Iohn was the friend of God, and a chosen seruant of God to tell his will vnto the world. He was sent from the land of Israel, where he was a Prophet, to goe amongst an heathen people, and the greatest citie of the world, then called Ninive, to preach that which in foure daies they should bee destroyed for their sinnes: which messenger the free will of Iohn, had as much power to doe as the weakest hearted woman in the world had power, if shee were commanded to leape into a tubbe of liuing snakes and adders: as happily if God had commanded Sarah to sacrifice her sonne Isaac, as he did Abraham, shee would haue disputed with God, ere she had done it, as though shee were strong enough. Well, Iohn hardened by his owne imagination, and reasoning after this manner; I am here a Prophet vnto Gods people the Israelites: which though they haue Gods word testified vnto them daily, yet despise and worships God vnder the likenesse of calues, and after all manner of fashions saue after his owne word, and therefore are of all nations the worst and most worthy of punishment: And yet God for loue of a few that are among them, and for his names sake spareth and defendeth them: how then shall God take so cruell vengeance on so great a multitude of them to whom his name was neuer preached, and therefore are not the tenth part so euill as these: If I therefore shall goe preach, I shall lie and shame my selfe and God too, and make them the more to despise God. Vpon this imagination he fled from the presence of God, and from the countrey where God is worshipped. When Iohn entred into the shippe, hee laid him downe to sleepe, for his conscience was tossed betweene the commandment of God which sent him to Ninive, and his fleshly wisdom which dissuaded and comforted him to the contrary, and at last preuailed against the commandment, and carried him another way, as a ship caught betweene two streames (as the Poets saie the mother of Meleager to be betweene diuers affections; while to avenge her brothers death she sought to slay her owne sonne:) whereupon for very paine and tediousnesse hee lay downe to sleepe to put the commandment out of mind, which did so gnaw and fret his conscience, as also the nature of all the wicked is, when they haue sinned in earnest, to seeke all means with ryot, reuell, and pastime to driue the remembrance of sinne forth of their hearts, as Adam did to couer his wickednes with aprons of fig-leaves. But God awoke him out of his dreame, and set his sinnes before his face: for when the lot had caught Iohn, then be sure that his sinne came to remembrance againe, and thar his conscience raged no lesse then the waters of the sea. And then he thought, he onely was a sinner, and thought also that as verily as hee had fled from God, as verily God had cast him away: for the sight of the rod maketh the naturall child not onely to see and acknowledge his fault, but also to forget all his fathers old mercie and goodnesse. And then he confessed his sinne openly, and of very desperation to haue liued any longer, he bade cast himselfe into the sea betimes, except they would be lost also; for all this God provided a fish to swallow Iohn. When Iohn bade bene in the fishes belly a space, the rage of his conscience was somewhat quieted, and he came to himselfe againe, and had received a little hope, and the qualmes and pangs of desperation which went ouer his heart were halfe ouercome: then he prayed to God, and gaue thanks vnto him. When Ionas was cast vpon the land againe, then his will was free, and he had power to goe whither God sent him, & to what God commanded him, his owne imagination laid apart: for he had bin at a new schoole, and in a furnace, where he was purged of much refuse and dross of fleshly wisdom which resisted the wisdom of God. For as farre as we are blind in Adam, we cannot but feeke and will our owne profit, pleasure, and glory; and as far as we be taught in the Spirit, we cannot but feeke and will the pleasure of God onely. Then Ionas preached to Ninine, and they repented: then Ionas shewed againe his corrupt nature for all his trying in the Whalesbelly. He was so displeased because the Nininites perished not, that he was weary of his life, and wished death for very sorrow, that he had lost the glory of his prophesying, in that his prophesie came not to passe; but he was rebuked of God, as in his prophesie you may reade.

The Apostles, Christ taught them euer to be meeke and to humble themselves: yet oft they strided among themselves who should be greatest: the sonnes of Zebede would sit one on the right hand of Christ, the other on the left. They would pray that fire might descend from heauen and consume the Samaritans. When Christ asked, Math. 16. 16. Whom say men that I am? Peter answered, Thou art the Son of the living God, as though Peter had bene as perfect as an Angell. But immediately after when Christ preached vnto them of his death and passion, Peter was angry, and rebuked Christ, and thought earnestly that hee had rauced, and not wilt what he had said: as at another time in which Christ was so feruently busied in healing the people, that hee had no leasure to eate, they went out to hold him, supposing that hee had bene beside himselfe. And one that cast forth diuels in Christs name they forbad, because hee waited not on them, so glorious were they yet. And though Christ taught alway to forgive, yet Peter after long going to schoole, asked whether men should forgive seuen times, thinking that eight times had bene too much. And at the last Supper, Peter would haue died with Christ, but yet within few houres after hee denied him both cowardly and shamefully. And after the same manner, though he had so long heard that no man must auenge himselfe, but rather turne the other cheek to the smiter againe, yet when Christ was in taking, Peter asked whether it were lawfull to smite with the sword, & tarried no answer, but laid on rashly. So that although we be once reconciled to God, yet at the first we be but children and young scholars, weak and feeble, and must haue leasure to grow in the spirit, in knowledg, loue, and deedes thereof, as young children must haue time to grow in their bodies: and so in like manner the sting of the serpent is not pulled out at once, but the poyson of our nature is minished by little and little, and cannot before the houre of death be wholly taken away.

Timth. I perceiue by your godly discourse, the manifold conflicts betweene the flesh and the spirit, and that the flesh is like to a mightie gyant, such an one as was Goliath, strong, lusty, stirring, enemy to God, confederate with the diuell: and the spirit like to a little child, such an one as was little Dauid new borne, weak and feeble, not alwaies stirring: now then what meanes doe you vse to weaken the flesh, and strengthen the spirit?

Euseb. I vse to tame my flesh with prayer and fasting, watching, deedes of mercy, holy meditations, and reading the Scriptures, and in bodily labour, and in withdrawing all manner of pleasures from the flesh, and with exercises contrary to the vices which I find my body most inclined to, and with abtaining from all things that encourage the flesh against the spirit: as reading of toyes and wanton bookes, seeing of playes and enterludes, wanton communication, foolish iesting, and effeminate thoughts, and talking of couetousnesse, which Paul forbiddeth, Eph. 5. magnifying of worldly promotions. If these will not mortifie my flesh, then God sendeth me some troubles, and so maketh me to grow and waxe perfect, and fineth and tryeth me as gold in the fire of tentations and tribulations. Thus very often hee maketh me to take vp my crosse, and naileth my flesh vnto it, for the mortifying thereof. Marke this, if God send thee to the sea, and promise to goe with thee, hee will raise vp a tempest against thee, to proue whether thou wilt abide his word, and that thou maist feele thy faith and weaknesse, and perceiue his goodnesse: for if it were alwaies faire weather, and thou neuer brought into such iopardie, whence his mercy onely deliuereth thee, thy faith should be onely a presumption, and thou shouldst be euer vnthankfull to God, & mercilesse vnto thy neighbour. If God promise riches, the way therunto is pouerty: whom he louth, him he chasteneth: whom he exalteth, he casteth downe: whom he faueth, he first dameth: he bringeth no man to heauen, except he fend him to hell first: if he promise life, he layeth first: when he buildeth, hee casteth downe all first: he is no patcher: he cannot abide another mans foundation: hee will not worke till all be past remedie, and brought to such a case, that men may see how that his hand, his power, his mercy, his goodnesse, his truth hath wrought altogether: he will let no man be partaker with him of his praise & glory: his works are wonderfull and contrary to mans workes: who euer (saue hee) deliuered his owne Sonne, his onely Sonne, his deere Sonne, his darling vnto death, and for his enemies to winne his enemies, to ouercome them with loue, that they might fee loue and loue againe, and of loue likewise to doe to other men, and to ouercome them with well doing? Ioseph saw the Sunne and the Moone and eleuen starres worshipping him, neuertheless ere that came to passe God laid him where hee could see neither sunne, nor moone, neither any starre of the skie, and that many yeares, and also vnderfered, to nurture him, to make him apt and meete for the roome and honour against he came to it; that he might be strong in the spirit to minister it well. God promised the children of Israel a land with rivers of milke and honie, yet hee brought them forth the space of forty yeares into a land wherein no rivers of milke and honie were, but where so much as a droppe of water was not, to nurture and teach them as a father doth his sonne, and to doe them good at the latter end, to subdue their cankred nature, to make them strong in the spirit to vse his benefites aright. Lastly, God promised Dauid a kingdom, and immediately stirred vp Saul against him to persecute him, and to hunt him as men doe hares with grayhounds, and to ferret him out of euery hole, and that for the space of many yeares, to turne him, to make him to mortifie his lusts, to make him to feele his owne discases in fine, to make him a good man, and a good king.

Timth. But how if it come to passe that you be tempted to any great sinne, and the flesh ouercome the spirit, in what case are you then?

Euseb. There is no body here but you and I, and I take you to be a Christian and a faithful friend: therefore I will shew a little of my experience. The last yeare by reason of the dearth, I and my family were put to great pinches, and most commonly wee had nothing but Bread and Water: hereupon I be thought me how I might get somewhat to releue my family: it came into my minde that in our towne a rich man had a great flocke of sheepe, and that I might take one of them without any hurt of him. I was very loath at the first: but because there was such great stealing of sheepe, and I was in extremitie, in the night I went among his sheepe and tooke a lambe, and I told my family that it was giuen me: I presently killed it, the skinn & the entrails I buried in my backside, the flesh we dressed by quarters, and did eate it with thanksgiving (as my manner is) but sorely very coldly, and methought my prayer was abominable in Gods sight. After I had thus done, we fared well for the space of two daies, but I felt my heart hardened, and my lippes were almost locked vp, that I could not as I was wont praise the Lord. The third night after, I went with a quiet conscience (me thought) to my bed, and then I slept soundly till three of the clocke in the morning, but I dreamed that one came to carry me to prison, vpon that on a sudden I awaked, and being afraid looked about me, and felt to consider why I should be afraid, and I remembered that I had sinned against God by robbing my neighbour: O then my feare increased, and I thought that hell gaped to deuoure me, and the law looked vpon me with such a terrible countenance, and so thundered in mine eares, that I durst not abide in my bed, but vp and to goe. Then the diuell assailed mee on euery side, to perfwade me that God had cast me away: saying, they that be Gods haue power to keepe his lawes; thou hast not, but breakest them: therefore thou art a cast-away & a damned creature, and hell gapeth and setteth open his mouth to deuoure thee. And I thought with my selfe that I had bin alwaies a ranke hypocrite: for as the cloudes of the aire doe couer the sunne, so that sometimes a man cannot tell by any sense that there is any sunne, the cloudes and winds hiding it from our sight: euen so my cecitie and blindness, and corrupt affections, and the rage of my conscience did so ouerwhelme the sight of Gods seede in me, and so ouerwhelme his spirit, as though I had bin a plaine reprobate. And thus it came to passe that Dauid making his prayer to God according to his owne sense and feeling, but not according to the truth; desired of God to giue him againe his spirit, which thing God neuer doth indeede: although he made me to thinke so for a time: for alwaies he holdeth his hand vnder his children in their falls, that they lie not still as other doe which are not regenerate. I being thus tormoled and stung with the conscience of sin, & the cockatrice of my poisoned nature, hauing beheld her selfe in the glasse of the righteous law of God, there was no other saluor remedie but to runne to the brazen serpent, Christ Iesus which shed his blood, (hanging vpon the crosse, and to his euerslating testament and mercifull promise) that was shed for me for the remission of my finnes: therefore I gotte me speedily into a cloase corner in my house, and there vpon my face groning, I confessed my sinne, and praised after this manner in effect: Father, what an horrible monster am I? what traitor? what wretch and villaine? Thy mercie is wonderfull, that hell hath not deuoured mee hauing deserved a thousand damnations. I haue finned against thy godly, holy, and righteous law, and against my brother by robbing him, whom I ought to loue for thy sake as my selfe: forgive me Father for thy sonne Christ his sake, according to thy most mercifull promises and testament: forget not good Lord thy old mercies shewed vpon me, let them not at this time in me be quite remoued. On this manner praying I continued many houres, and God which is nerre to all them that call vpon him, heard me, eased my paine, and assured me of the remission of my sinne. After presently, for the more easing of my conscience, I went to my neighbour, and betwene him and me vpon my knees confessed my fault with reares, desiring him to forgive me, and I would (as Gods law requirith) restore that which I stole, fourfold: he (I thank him) was contented, and tooke pitie on me and euer since hath bene by Gods mercy my Good friend. So by little and little, God restored me to my first estate: but (me thinks) I have not that feeling which I had before, and have bene worse euer since: God of his great mercie amend me, and increase his graces in me.

Timoth. But I pray you, what thinke you, will not God condempne his owne elect children if they sinne?

Euseb. No, for the ground-work of our saluation is laid in Gods eternall election, and a thousand finnes in the world, may all the finnes in the world; nay, all the diuels in hell cannot ouerthrow Gods election. And it may be that finnes doe harden our hearts, weaken our faith, make lid the spirit of God in vs: but take away faith, or altogether quench the spirit, they cannot. God condemneth no man for his finnes, if he be adopted in Christ. For then Ioseph, Abraham, Dauid, Peter, Mary Magdalene should be condemned. God is like a father: and a father if his childe be sicke, and therefore be froward, and refuse and cast away his meate, and hauing eaten it spew it vp againe, and in his fit be impatient and raue, and speake euill of his father, yet I say the father will not cast him forth of his doores, but pitieth him, and prouideth such things as may restore him to health, and when he is whole remembreth not his disordered behauiour in his sicknesse.

Timoth. What meanes doe you finde most effectuall to strengthen your faith, to increase Gods graces in you, and to raise you vp againe when you are fallen?

Euseb. Surely I haue very great comfore by the Sacrament of the Lords Supper: for whereas I am spirittually diseased, and am prone and ready to fall, and am almost cruelly oftentimes inuaded of the fiend, the flesh, and the law, when I haue sinned, and am put to flight, and made to runne away from God my father: therefore hath God of all mercy and of his infinite piety and bottomlesse compassion set vp his Sacrament as a signe vpon an high hill, whence it may be seene on euery side farre and neere, to call againe them that be runne away. And with the Sacrament hee (as it were) clocketh to them, as a hen doth for her chickens, to gather them vnder the wings of his mercy: and hath commaunded his Sacrament to be had in continuall vse, to put vs in minde of his continuall mercy laid vp for vs in Christs blood, and to witnesse and testify it vnto them, and to be the seale thereof. For the Sacrament doth much more liuely print the faith, and make it sinke downe into the heart, then doe bare wordes onely. Now when the wordes of the Testament and promises are spoken ouer the bread (this is my body which was shedde for you) they confirme the faith; but much more when the Sacrament scene with the cies, and the bread broken, the wine powdered and looked on: & yet more when I tast and smell it: As you see when a man ma-keth a promise vnto another with light wordes betwene themselves and so they departed, he to whom the promise is made beginneth to doubt whether the other spake earnestly or mocked, and doubteth whether he will remember his promise to abide by it or no. But when any man speaketh with aduiseiment, the wordes are more credible: and if he sweare, it confirmeth the thing more, and yet the more if he strike hands, if he giue earnest, if he call record, if he giue hand writing and seale it: so is he the more & more beleued, for the heart gathereth: so, he spake with aduiseiment, deliberation and good sadnesse, he clapped hands, called record, and put to his hand and seale: the man cannot be so faint without the feare of God as to deny all this: shame shall make him abide his promise, though he were such a man as I could not compell him, if he would denie it. And thus we dispute: God sent his Sonne in our nature, and made him feele our infirmities, and named his name Iesus, that is a Saviour, because he should saue his people from their finnes, and after his death he sent his Apostles to preach these glad tidings, to thrust them in at the eares of vs, and set vp a Sacrament of them to testify them and to seale them, and to thrust them in, not at the eares onely by rehearing the promises of the Testament ouer it: neither at our eies onely in beholding it, but after his death he sent our feeling, tasting, and smelling also, and to be repeated daily and to be ministered to vs. He would not (thinke we) make halfe so much adoe, with vs if he loued vs not, and would not haue his Sacrament to be a witness and testimony betwene him and vs, to confirme the faith of his promises: that we should not doubt in them, when we looke on the seales of his obligations wherewith he hath bound himselfe: and this is to keepe the promises and couenants better in minde, and to make them the more deeply to sinke into our hearts, and be more earnestly regarded.

Timoth. Considering that this which you say is too plaine, great shame it is that there is such neglect of the Sacrament as there is, & that it is so seldom vied: but surely want of faith & the security which ouerspreadeth this our countrie is the cause of it, the Lord if it be his will remouue the same. Now let me heare a little how you lead your life: and haue your conseruation among men.

Euseb. I haue my conseruation among men as sincere as I can in righteousness and holines, which is after Gods commaundements: our Saviour faith, Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good worke, and glorify your father which is in heauen: Matthe. 5. 16.

Timoth. It is but a dimme light which wee can carrie before men, and small are our good workes, and to be esteemed of no value: if wee were preachers, or rich men, or noble men, then we might saue foules, giue councounsell, helpe many by our almes, but you & I are poore men, of base birth, and of low degree, how can we then doe any good workes?

Euseb. As touching good workes by that measure of knowledge that God hath giuen mee, I thinke that all workes are good which are done according to the obedience of Gods law in faith, and with thanksgiving to God, & with a minde desirous of his glory alone, and I thinke that I or any man else in doing them please God, whatsoever I doe within the law of God, as when I make water. And trust me, if either wine or water were stopped, I should feele what a precious thing it were to doe either of both, and what thanks ought to be giuen God therefore? Moreouer, I put no difference betwene workes, but whatsoever cometh into my hands, that doe I as time, place, and occasion giueth, and according to my degree. For as touching to please God there is no work better then other: God looketh not first on my workes as the world doth, or as though he had need of them: but God looketh first on my heart what faith I haue to his word, how I beleue him, trust him, and how I loue him, for his mercie that he hath shewed to mee, he looketh with what heart I worke, and not what I worke, how I accept the degree hee hath put mee in, not of what degree I am. Let vs take example. You are a minister and preach the word, I am a kitchen-boy, and wash my masters dishes. Of the Ministerie hearken what the Apostle saith: If I preach, I haue nought to reioyce in, for necessitie is put vpon mee: If I preach not the Gospell, as who should say, God hath made me so, woe is to me if I preach not. If I doe it willingly (saith he) then I haue my reward: that is, then I am sure that Gods spirit is in me, and that I am elect to eternall life. If I do it against my will, the office is committed to mee, that is, I doe it not of loue to God, but to get a liuing thereby, and for a worldly purpose, and had rather otherwise liue: then doe I that office which God hath put vpon mee, but doe not please God. So then if you preached not, or in preaching had not your heart right, you minister the office, and they that haue the spirit of God heare his word, yet, though it were spoken by an Aste, and the woe belongeth to you: but if you preach willingly with a true heart and conscience to God; then you shall feele the earnest of eternall life, and the working of the spirit of God in you, & your preaching is a good worke in you. Now I that minister in the kitchen, & am but a kitchen-boy, receiue all things at the hand of God, I know that God hath put mee in such an office, submit my selfe to his will, and serue my master not as a man, but as Christ himselfe, with a pure heart according as Paul teacheth mee, putting my trust in God, and of him seeke my reward. Moreouer, there is not a good deede done, but mine heart reioyceth therein, yea, when I heare that the word of God is preached by you, and see the people turning vnto God: I consent to this deed, my heart breaks out in me, yea it springeth and leapech in my breast that God is honoured, and in my heart I doe the same that you doe with the like declaration and seruencie of spirit. Now he that receiveth a Prophet, in the name of a Prophet, receiveth a Prophets reward, Mathe. 10. 41. that is, he that consenteth to the deece of a Prophet, and maintaineth it, the same hath the spirit and earnest of euertlasting life, which the Prophet hath, and is elect as the Prophet is. Now if we compare worke to worke, there is a difference betwixt washing of dishes, and preaching the word of God: but as touching to please God none at all. For neither that nor this pleaseeth God, but as farre forth as God hath chosen a man, and hath put his spirit in him, and purified his heart by faith and trust in Christ. As the scriptures call him carnall which is not renewed by the spirit and borne againe in Christs flesh, and all his workes alike, even the very motions of the heart and minde, as his learning, doctrine, and contemplation of high things, his preaching, teaching, and studie in the Scripture, building of Churches, founding of Colledges, giuing of almes, and whatsoever he doth, though they seeme spirituall and after the law of God neuer so much: So contrariwise he is spirituall which is renewed in Christ, and all his workes which spring from faith seeme they neuer so grosse, as the washing of the disciples feete done by our Saviour Christ, and Peters fishing after the resurrection, yea deedes of matrimonic are pure and spirituall if they proceed of faith, and whatsoever is done within the lawes of God though it be wrought by the body, as the wiping of shoes and such like, howeuer grosse they appeare outwardly yet are sanctified.

Tim. What be the speciall things in which you leade your conseruation?

Euseb. One thing is the reading of the Scripture.

Timoth. It is dangerous to reade the Scriptures you that haue no learning may easily fall into error, and heresies.

Euseb. As he which knoweth his letters perfectly, and can spell, cannot but reade if he be diligent: & as he which hath cleere eies without impediment or let, and walketh thereon in the light and open day, cannot but see, if he attend and take heede: euen so I hauing the professio of my baptisme onely written in my heart, and feeling it sealed vp in my conscience by the H. Ghost, cannot but vnderstand the scripture, because I exercise my selfe therein, and compare one place with another, and make the manner of speech, and aske here and there the meaning of a sentence of them that be better exercised then I: for I feele in my heart, and haue a sensible experience of that inwardly, which the spirit of God hath delineated in the Scriptures. So that I finde mine inward experience as a commentarie vnto mee.

Tim. We are all baptized, belike then wee shall all vnderstand the Scripture.

Ensb. But alas, very few there be that are taught and feele their ingrafting into Christ, their iustification, their inward dying vnto sin, and liuing vnto righteousness, which is the meaning of their baptism. And therefore we remaine all blinde generally, as well the great Rabbins which bragge of their learning, as the poore vnlearned lay-man. And the Scripture is become so darke vnto them, that they grope for the doore, & can find no way in, and it is become a maze vnto them in which they wander as in a mist, (as we say) led by Robbins Goodfellow. And their darknesse cannot comprehend the light of the Scriptures, but they reade them as men doe tales of Robbins hood, as Riddles, or as old Priests their Ladies Martins which they vnderstood not. And vntill a man be taught his Baptisme, that his heart feeles the sweetnesse of it, the Scriptures are shut vp from him, and so darke that hee could not vnderstand it, though Peter, Paul, or Christ himselfe did expound it vnto him, no more then a man sharke blinde can see, though thou set a candle before him, or shew him the Sunne, or point with thy finger vnto that thou wouldest haue him looke vpon. As for heretie there is no danger, if a man come to the Scripture with a mecke spirit, seeking there to fashion himselfe like vnto Christ, according to the profession and vow of his Baptisme: but contrariwise he shall there finde the mighty power of God to alter & change him in the inner man by little and little, till in proceesse he be full shapen after the image of our Sauioir in knowledge and loue of all truth, and power to work thereafter. Hereties spring not of Scripture, no more then darkenesse of the Sunne, but are darke cloudes which spring out of the blinde hearts of hypocrites ginen to pride and singularity, and doe couer the face of the Scripture, and blind their eyes that they cannot behold the bright beames of the Scripture.

Tim. By this I also can gather, that the Papists which cannot read the Scriptures, except they fall into errors, haue not the spirit of Christ working in them, & teaching them, but the ylying spirit of Antichrist the diuell, and that if God would giue them any true feeling, and open their eyes, they would quite change their mindes. But what other exercise haue you?

Ensb. Prayer and thanksgiving to God. For God hath promised very bountifully vnto them which pray in truth, and it is one of the greatest comforts I haue at all times. Againe, God which commanded mee not to feale, commanded me also to pray, and his will is, that one commandment should be as well kept as another: and therefore I am perswaded that condemnation wil beset a man as well for the one as for the other. And that prayer ought to be continually euen in euery busines a man doth, me thinkes it is most agreeable to Gods will. For if I should come vnto my neighbours house, and take his goods, and vse them, not borrowing them, or asking any leave, they would lay hands on me, and make mee a thiefe. The world and all the things in the world are the Lords, not mine: so then if I shall daily vse them, neuer seeking to the Lord by prayer for the vse of them, before God I am an vlturper, nay a ranke thiefe, and therefore I desire of God heartily that I may vse all his good creatures with feare and reuerence; and that I may sanctifie his name in them, which Paul shews me to be done by the word of God & prayer, the word shewing me the lawfull vse of his creatures: prayer obtaining at Gods hands, that I may vse them aright. If this practise were vsed of men in their professions & callings, I am perswaded there would be a thousand vices cut off which in men abound, and are committed without shame.

Timoth. I thinke the rest of your Christian exercises be the practising of the commandments of the law.

Ensb. Yea they are indeede.

Tim. Me thinkes it is an hard point of the law for a man to loue his enemy.

Ensb. It is indeede: yet in the faithfull it will be so: for they haue in their hearts a perswasion, that whereas they are damned in themselves, yet in Christ the mercy of God is most plentifull to their saluation, and all this God confirmeth and sealeth vnto them by his holy spirit, and therefore they cannot but loue God againe, and that with a feruent loue euen above all things in the world, and so they loue all Gods creatures, and euen their enemies, because they beare the image of God whom they loue: like as I haue a friend and loue him, I loue all of his name, all his kindred, and all that appertaine vnto him. And by the way, here is a good way to know whether we haue faith or not: though faith onely iustifie and make the marriage betweene our soule and Christ, and is properly the marriage garment, yea, and the signe Tau, that defendeth vs from the smiting and power of euil angels, and is also the rock on which Christs Church is built and standeth against all weather of wind and tempest: yet is faith neuer seuered from hope and charity. Then if a man will be sure that his faith is perfect, let him examine himselfe whether he loue the law: & in like manner if he will know whether hee loue the law, that is, loue God and his neighbour, then let him examine himselfe whether he beleue in Christ onely for the remission of his sinne, and obtaining the promises made in the Scripture. And euen so let him compare his hope of the life to come with faith, and loue, and to the hatred of sinne in this life, which hatred the loue of the law ingendreth in him. And if they accompany not one another all three together, then let him be sure all is but hypocricie.

Timoth. Yet by your leaue, faith cannot make a man iust before God without hope & charity:

charity: then they also with faith haue some stroke in iustification.

Ensb. I answer, though they be inseparable, yet I praise God I doe conceiue how these three haue three separable and sundry offices. Faith, which onely is an vndoubted and sure affiance in Christ; and in the Father through him, certifieth the conscience that the sinne is forgiven, and the damnation of the law taken away. And with such perswasions mollifieth the heart and maketh it loue God againe, and his law. And as oft as wee sinne, faith onely keepeth, that we forsake not our profession, and that loue vtrly quench not, and hope faile, and onely maketh the peace againe: for a true beleueer trusteth in Christ alone, and not in his owne workes, nor ought else for the remission of sins. The office of loue is to poure out againe the same goodnesse that it hath received of God vpon her neighbour, to be to him as it feeleth Christ to be to himselfe. The office of loue is only to haue compassion, and to beare with her neighbour the burthen of his infirmities. 1. Pet. 4. 8. Loue couereth the multitude of sinnes: that is to say, considereth the infirmities, and interpreteth al to the best, and taketh for no sin at all a thousand things, of which the least were enough (if a man loued not) to goe to law for, and to trouble and disquiet a whole towne, and sometime a whole realme too. The office of hope is to comfort in aduersitie, and to make patient that we faint not, nor fall downe vnder the Crosse, or cast it off our backs. Thus these three inseparable haue separable offices and effects, as heate, and drinesse, being inseparable in the fire, haue yet their separable operations: for drinesse onely expelleth the moistnesse of all that is consumed by the fire, and heate onely destroyeth the coldnesse. And it is not all one to say, the drinesse onely, and the drinesse that is alone, neither is it all one to say, faith onely, and faith that is alone.

Timoth. You are to bee commended, you are so perfect in these high points of religion, but I know you speake of experience, for in you faith and hope towards God, and charity towards your neighbour are inseparable.

Ensb. I require no commendations: shame and confusion befall me eternally, that al glorie may be vnto God.

Timoth. But let vs talke on further of our duties which we must performe if we will liue Christian like among men. And I pray you tell mee, what doe you meane that you giue so much vnto the poore, considering you are so poore your selfe, I speake my conscience, if you had ability, you would doe more then an hundred of those rich men doe.

Ensb. God knowes my heart, it is a hell vnto me to see my brother for whom Christ shed his blood, to want, if I haue any thing in the world to giue him. Among christian men, loue makes al things common: euery man is others

A debter, and euery man is bound to minister to his neighbour, and to supply his neighbours lacke of that wherewith God hath indued him. Christ is Lord ouer all, and euery Christian is heire annexed with Christ, and therefore Lord ouer all, and euery one is Lord of whatsoever another hath: if then my brother or neighbour neede, I haue to helpe him; and if I shew not mercy, but withdraw my hand from him, then I rob him of his owne, and am a thiefe. A Christian man hath Christs spirit: now Christ is mercifull. If I shall not be mercifull, I haue not Christs spirit: if I haue not Christs spirit, then am I none of his. And though I shew mercie vnto my brother, yet if I doe it not with such burning loue as Christ did vnto mee, I must knowlege my sin & desire mercy in Christ.

Timoth. If a man must be franke and free, then a man must giue of his owne stocke to the poore members of Christ, and diminish his owne substance.

Ensb. Yea indeede (if need so require) wee are made stewards of those goods which God hath giuen vs: shall a steward take all vnto himselfe without reproofe? I am sure that they which were conuerted at Peters first sermon after Christs ascension, diminished their substances when they sold them, and gaue them to the poore: I am sure that the Churches which were in Macedonia, which felt reliefe vnto other being in extreame pœuerty, did diminish their possessions: and God grant our conuersations may be like theirs. And that we should be like them, their examples of great compassion are recorded in the Scriptures.

Timoth. Many of vs haue our selues, wife, children, father, mother, and kinsfolke to releeue, so that it will be hard to deale after this manner.

Ensb. Had not these men for yea I warrant you had they. And the want of loue which you deeme of, the Gospell of Christ knoweth not, that a man should begin at himselfe, and then descend I wot not by what steps. Loue seeketh not her owne profit, but makes a man to forget himselfe and turne his profit to another man, as Christ sought not himselfe or his own profit, but ours. This tearme (my selfe) is not in the Gospell, neither yet father, mother, sister, brother, kinsman, that one should in loue be preferred before another. The loue that springeth out of Christ excludeth no man neither putteth difference betweene one another. In Christ we are all of one degree without respect of persons. Notwithstanding though a Christian mans heart be open to all men, and receiveth all men, yet because his abilitie of goods extendeth not so farre, this prouision is made, that euery man should care for his own household, as father, mother, thine elders that haue holpen thee, wife, children, and seruants. When a man hath done his dutie to his household, and yet hath further abundance of the blessings of God, that hee oweth to the poore that cannot labour, or cannot get worke, and yet are destitute of friends; to the poore I meane which he knoweth, and to them of his owne parilh. For that prouision ought to be had in the Church, that euery parish prouide for the poore. If his neighbours which he knoweth be serued, then is he a debter to the brethren a thousand miles off, if he heare of their necessity and haue himselfe any plenty: yea, to the very Infidels he is a debter if they neede, as far forth as he doth not maintaine them against Christ. Thus is euery man that needeth my helpe, my father, mother, sister, and brother in Christ: euen as euery man that doth the will of the Father, is father, mother, sister, and brother vnto Christ.

Timoth. Now ye somewhat perswade mee of that which me thought at the first blash was against common sence.

Euseb. By Gods grace I will perswade you more yet. How if, our Saviour Christ Iesus should now dwell vpon the earth in poeerty and want, could not you be content to bestow halfe your goods on him?

Tim. Halfe my goods? Nay, truly all: and heart-blood: for I know if I should lose my life for him, I should laughe.

Euseb. Very well. Christ is all in all. Euery Christian man to another is Christ himselfe, & whatsoever is done to the poore is done to Christ himselfe: & therefore your neighbours neede hath as good right in your owne goods as hath Christ himselfe which is heire & Lord ouer all. And looke what you owe to Christ, that you owe to your neighbors need: to your neighbour owe you your heart and life, and whatsoever you haue or can doe.

Timoth. We neede not giue our reliefe except the poore require it.

Euseb. Aske or not, if they want you are bound to releaue them; As Christ loued you, so loue them. Christ loued you being his enemy, when I am fure of it, you neuer asked remission of finnes.

Timoth. We neede not releaue them often, neede we?

Euseb. Yes, as long as you are able, and as oft as they want. If Christ should forgie vs but once, we should come short of heauen.

Tim. The world is full of naughtines, and lewd people, take pleasure in doing wrong, & in slanderung and hindering their brethren: how can you live among them in quietnesse, doe you vie to giue like for like?

Euseb. No, you must vnderstand that there bee two states, or regiments in the world: the kingdome of heauen which is the regimēt of the Gospell: and the regiment of the world, which is the temporall kingdome. In the first estate there is neither father nor mother, neither master, mistres, maid, nor seruant, nor husband, nor wife, nor Lord, nor subiect, nor inferiour, but Christ is al, & each to other is Christ himselfe, there is none better then other, but all alike good, all brethren, and Christ only is Lord ouer all, neither is there any other thing to doe, or other law, saue to loue one another as Christ loued vs: in the temporall regiment, is husband, wife, father, mother, sonne, daughter, mistres, maid, maneruant, subiect, Lord. Now euery person is a double person, and vnder two regiments: In the first regiment I am a person of mine owne selfe, vnder Christ and his doctrine, and may neither haue nor be angry, and much lesse fight or reuenge: as but must after the example of Christ, humble my selfe, forsake and deny my selfe, and hate my selfe, and cast my selfe away; and be meeke and patient; and let euery man goe ouer mee, and tread me vnder foote, and doe me wrong: and yet am I to loue them, and pray for them, as Christ did for his crucifiers: for loue is all, and whatsoever is not of loue is damnable and cast forth of that kingdome. In the temporall regiment, thou art a person in respect of another, thou art husband, father, mother, daughter, wife, Lord, subiect, & there thou must doe according to thine office. If thou be a father, thou must doe the office of a father and rule, or else thou damnest thy selfe: thou must bring al vnder obedience, whether by faire meanes or by foyle: thou must haue obedience of thy wife, of thy seruants and of thy subiects: if they will not obey in loue, thou must chide, fight, and correct, as farre as the law of God and the law of the land will suffer thee. Now to the purpose: whether a man may resist violence, and defend or reuenge himselfe. I say nay, in the first state where thou art a person for thy selfe alone; and Christs Disciple, there thou must loue, and of loue doe, studie, and enforce; yea & suffer all things (as Christ did) to make peace, that the blessing of God may come vpon thee, which faith: Blessed are the peace-makers, for they shall be the children of God. If thou suffer and keepe peace in thy selfe only, thy blessing is the possession of the world: but if thou loe the peace of thy brother, that thou leaue nothing vndone or vnfinished to further it, thou shalt possesse heauen. But in this worldly state, where thou art no priuate man, but a person in respect of other, thou must, and art bound vnder paine of damnation, to execute thine office. Of thy seruants thou must exact obedience, and must not suffer thy selfe to be despised. If thou art a ruler, thou must take, imprison, and slay too, not of malice and hate to reuenge thy selfe, but to defend thy subiects, and to maintaine thine office: the ruler must not oppress his subiects with rents, fines, and customs at all; neither pill them with taxes, and such like to maintaine his owne lulls: but be louing and kinde vnto them as Christ was to him: for they bee the price of his blood. I will shew my minde more plainly by one example. You are in your fathers house among your brethren and sisters, there if one fight with another, or if any doe you wrong, you may not reuenge or smite, for that pertaines to the father only. But if your father giue you au-

thoritie in his absence, and command you to smite, if they will not be ruled but abuse you, then you are another person. Notwithstanding yet you haue not put off the first person, but are a brother still, and must euer loue and proue all things to rule with loue: but if loue will not serue, then you must vie the office of another person, or sinne against your father. Euen so when you are a temporall person, you must euer loue, but when loue will not helpe, you must with loue execute the office of the temporall person. You must loue your neighbour in your heart, because he is your brother in the first state; yet you must obey your Ruler which hath power ouer you, and when neede requireth, at his commandement you must goe with the Constable or like officer and breake open your neighbours doore, if he will not open it in the Kings name: yea if he will not yeeld in the Kings name, you may smite him to the ground till hee bee subdued, and looke what harme he getteth, that be vpon his owne head.

Timoth. I vnderstand you well. As I am a member of the spiritual body of Christ, I must in all my conseruation follow him with patience, meekenes, and long suffering, ouercoming other mens euils, with well doing: yet if the hurt be greater then I can beare, I must take a new person on mee, and if I be a Ruler, with loue seeke amendment; if a subiect, then in the feare of God, complaine to my Ruler. But further I pray you foyle me this doubt. If I shall be taken for a souldier, me thinkes that I should then shake off all loue & meeknes, & then I could not practise this Christian rule.

Euseb. Yes, if our King (G O D sue his Grace) should lead you on war-fare into another country, you must obey at Gods commandement, and goe and auenge your Princes quarrell, which you know not but that it is right. When you come thither, remember the two states in which you are: and know, that in the first state, that is, the regiment spirituall, you must loue them with whom you fight, and that they are your brethren bought with Christs blood, as well as you, and for Christs sake hate them not: yet as you are in the second state, a souldier at your Princes commandement, you must fight against them, & maintaine your Princes quarrell, and bring them vnder his power and therewithall be content with your Princes wages, neither d'sire your aduersaries life or goods, saue to aduantage your Prince. So then a souldier, neede not cast away meekenesse, for he may fight with his enemy and slay him, and yet loue him.

Timoth. Another thing I would know of you, which now cometh to my mind, I haue a Landlord, hee seemeth to be a very good man, he countenances all the good preachers in our country, and hee rideth vially tenne milles to heare sermons: I hold of him a house and a little land, not scarce enough to finde my poore family: my lease is come out, and I haue taken a new lease, but I haue paid such a great fine, and my yeerly rents are so racked, that I feare I and my houshold are like to begge our bread: this is it disquieteth me, and almost maketh mee at my wits end. What is your counsell and aduise?

Euseb. Surely, it maketh my heart to bleed to see how many men brag of the Gospell, and yet what little fruit the Gospell hath in them, & what little loue they shew, euen they which abound in rents and lands. My poore aduise is this, that you would with patience depend vpon Gods prouidence. It is said, Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth. Then let all the world study to do you wrong, yea let them study to bring you to extreme miserie, and doe it too: yet if you be meeke, you shall haue foode and rayment enough for you and yours. And no doubt, God (who is alwaies true of his promise) shall raise vp some to help you. And my counsell is, that you giue your Landlord now & then a capon, now a pigge, now a goose, and if you be able, a lame or a calfe; and let your wife visit your Landlady now and then with spiced cakes, with apples, peares, cherries, and such like: and be you ready with your oxen, or horses, five or sixe times in the yeere, to fetch home their wood, to plow their land; then no doubt God may soften their hearts, and mooue them to haue some pitie and compassion on your poore estate.

Tim. I haue done all this. (Nay may it be spoken betwene you and mee) I am at commandement, and am as a drudge to them, to doe their businesse, and to leaue my owne vndone, and yet haue neither meate, drinke, nor money.

Euseb. More is the pittie. But remember that they which cannot come to see men deale vprightly in the world, yet doe in their hearts hunger and thirst after righteousnesse, are pronounced blessed.

Timoth. To let this passe: shew me one rule how I might generally in all matters bechaunge my selfe among men, and then for this time I will cease to trouble you.

Euseb. Aske your own conscience what you may or ought to doe: Would you men did fo with you? Then doe you it. Would you not be fo dealt with? Then do it not. You would not that men should doe you wrong and oppresse you. You would not that men should doe you shame & rebuke, lie on you, kill you, hire your house from you, or tice your seruant away, or take against your wil ought that is yours. You would not that men should sell you false ware, when you put them in trust to make it ready, or to lay it for you: and you would not that men should deceiue you with great oaths, swearing that to be good which is indeed very naught: you would not that men should sell you ware that is naught, and too deare to vndo you: doe you no such thing then vnto your neighbours, but as loath as you would be to buy false ware, & too deare, for vndoing your selfe:

strike a great feare into him: for the feare of eternall death, and the horror of Gods iudgement will come to his remembrance, the consideration of which is most terrible. Vndoubtedly this religion must needs be comfortable. Alas poore foules, wee are no better then passengers in this world, our way is in the middle of the sea, where we can haue no sure footing at all, and which way soeuer we cast our eyes, wee see nothing but water, euen opening it selfe to deuoure vs quicke: the diuell and our rebellious flesh raise vp against vs infinite thousands of tempests and stormes to ouerthrow vs: but behold, God of his great and endless mercie hath brought vs to Christ, as to a sure anchor-hold, hee biddeth vs to vndoe our gables, & fling vp our anchors within the vaile, and fasten them in Christ: we doe it as we are commanded: but a sifter of ours (I meane the Church of Rome) passing in the shippe with vs (as it seemeth) who hath long taken vpon her to rule the helme, dealeth too vnkindly with vs: the vnloofeth our anchors: and cutteth in peeces our gables, she telleth vs that we may not presume to fasten our anchor on the rocke: shee will haue vs freely to roue in the middle of the sea in the greatest fogs and the fearfulllest tempests that be: if we shall follow her aduise, wee must needs looke for a shipwracke: for the least flaw of winde shall ouerturne vs, and our poore foules shall be plunged in the gulfe of hell.

III. Lastly, iustification by workes causeth trouble & disquietnes to the conscience. No mans conscience can bee appeased, before Gods wrath be appeased, and Gods wrath cannot be appeased by any workes: for the best workes the regenerate can do, are imperfect & are stained with some blemish of corruption, as may appeare (a) both in the prophet Esey, and in Paul, both which hath a great misliking of that good which they did, because it was mingled with sinne. And againe, euery man is bound in duty to keepe the whole law, so that if a man could keepe it perfectly, hee should doe no more then he is by duty inioyned to doe: and therefore he which looketh to merit eternall life at Gods hand by keeping the law, trusteth but to a broken staffe, and is like the bankerout that will pay one debt by another: for by his sinne, euery man is indebted to the Lord, and is bound to answer to the Lord the full punishment of all his sins: this debt, the Papist faith, wee may discharge by obedience to the law, that is, by a new debt, which we are as well bound to pay to our God as the former.

To end this point, let a man looke to bee faued by workes, & therefore let a man employ himselfe to doe the best workes he can, yet he shall neuer come to know when he hath done sufficient to satisfie Gods wrath: and this vncertainty, al his life, but especially in the houre of death, must needs disquiet him. And truly, when a man shall haue done many thousand workes, yet his heart can neuer be at quiet, as it appeareth by the yong man, who thought he had laboured all his life to fulfill the law thereby to be faued, yet distrustful all his doings, he asketh further of our Saviour Christ, what hee might doe to be faued.

Furthermore, it is the doctrine of the Church of Rome, that there is nothing in the regenerate that God can hate: and that they are inwardly pure and without spot. A doctrine that will make any Christian conscience despaire. For if a man shall fall to examine himselfe, hee shall finde, (b) that he is sold vnder sinne. (c) compassed about of sinne, (d) hee shall see his particular sinnes to be as the heires of his head: at the sight and feeling of which, hee shall finde that there is much matter in him worthy of harred and damnation too. Hee being in this case, will begin to doubt whether he be the child of God or not; & persecuting in this doubting he shall be driuen to despaire of Gods loue towards him, considering that hee cannot finde any such pureness in himselfe as the doctrine of the Church of Rome requirith.

Lastly, experience it selfe teacheth that the Romish religion can bring no peace to the conscience, in that some for the maintaining of it haue despaired. As Francis Spira, who against his own conscience hauing abjured the truth, and subscribed to the doctrine of the Romish Church, most fearfully despaired of his saluation: which could not haue bin if that doctrine had beene agreeable to Gods word, which is spirit and life to the receiver. For the same cause Lasomus a doctor of Louane despaired, crying that he was damned, because he had opposed himselfe to the knowne truth. This also befell Gardner at his death, as the booke of Acts and Monuments declareth.

The third argument.

That religion which agreeth to the corruption of mans nature, a Reprobate may truly professe it: the religion of the Church of Rome agreeth to the corruption of mans nature: therefore a Reprobate may truly professe it.

The Proofs.

I neede not stand to prouoe the proposition, the assumption is rather to be confirmed: which first I will prouoe by induction of particulars. First, that a man should be iustified by workes, is an opinion fetled in nature, as may appeare in them that crucified our Saviour Christ: for when they were pricked in their hearts at Peters sermon, they said, Men and brethren, what shall we doe to be faued; and this said the yong man before named, not what should I beleue, but what should I doe to be faued. So then in them it appeareth, that it is a naturall opinion of all men to thinke that they must be faued by doing of somewhat. A Papist will say, though this bee naturall thus to thinke, yet it may be good: for there is some goodnes in nature. I answer, that the wisdom of the flesh is enmity to Gods wisdom, Rom. 8. 7. and all men by nature are nothing but flesh: for naturally they are the children of wrath.

Secondly,

Secondly, the worshipping of God in images is a great matter in the Church of Rome: but this manner of worshipping is nothing but a worke of the flesh, which thus I prouoe: (a) Idolatry is naturall, and a worke of the flesh; but to worship God in images, is idolatry. The children of Israel when they erected the golden calves; they did commit idolatry, and yet they did not worship the calfe it selfe, but God in the calfe. For when the calfe was made, they proclaimed an holy day, not to the calfe, but to the Lord. And Baal that detestable idol, was nothing but the image of God, as appeareth in Hosea the Prophet. At that day faith the Lord, (c) thou shalt call mee no more Baal. It remaineth therefore, that to serue God in an image, is a worke of the flesh, and altogether agreeth to the vile corruption of nature.

Thirdly, pride, and a desire to be advanced aboue other, is naturall corruption: to this agreeth the Popes primacy, his double sword, and triple crowne: yea the outrageous pompe of that seate is as a paire of bellows to kindle the concupiscence, and to make the hidden sparkes of pride to breake out into a great flame.

Fourthly, doubting of Gods prouidence and mercie is a naturall corruption in all men: to this agreeth, and from hence issueth that foolish and vaine opinion, concerning doubting of our saluation, and of the remission of sinnes.

Fifthly, selfe-love, and selfe-liking are naturall corruptions: and to this agreeth that doctrine of the Papists, not ouermuch to abase our selues, but to maintaine Free-will by nature, and to thinke that wee haue so much goodnesse, that wee are able to prepare our selues to receiue, and in some sort to merit grace.

Sixtly, Idleness and riotousnesse is a naturall corruption, and to it very fitly answereth the great number of feasts, of holy-daies, of halfe holy-daies, which the Church of Rome vseth.

Seuenthly, Couetousnesse is a naturall corruption, and to the feeding of this vice ferueth Purgatorie, a fire of great gaine, which in very truth, if it had not burned very hot, the fire in the Popes kitchen had burned very cold: hitherto serue Pilgrimages, saying of Masses, and selling of Pardons for money.

Eightly, to beat libertie is the desire of nature: answerable to this is that opinion, that the spiritalitie is to be exempted from subiection to Magistrates.

Ninthly, to commit adultery is naturall: to this agreeth the Stewes, and the permission of simple fornication.

Tenthly, ignorance is a filthy corruption in nature: this the Church of Rome maketh the mother of deuotion, and it is enioyned the lay-man as a meane of his saluation: for hee must beleue as the Church beleueeth, hee is not bound to know.

XI. Infidelity is naturall, and to this agreeth that they call vpon Saints and Angels, the Lord hauing commanded them to call vpon him in the name of Christ: what argueth this else, but hearts distrustful Gods goodness, and guiltie consciences?

XII. Images in the Church of Rome came from infidelitie, because men in reason could not perfwade themselfes that God was present, vnlesse that were made manifest by some signe and image. Which thing the Ifacalites declared when they said to Adon in the wildernesse in Moses absence, Make vs Gods to goe before vs.

XIII. Satisfactiones for sinne are naturall: for wicked (d) men when they haue offended God, they haue alwaies used some ceremonies to pacifie God with, which when they haue done enough.

XIV. The Church of Rome faith, that the Scriptures are darke and obscure: the blinde man findeth fault with the darkenesse of the Sunne: If the Scriptures appeare to any to be obscure, the fault is not in the Scripture, but in the blindnesse of the minde of him which readeth and heareth them.

XV. Lastly pardons open a gap to all licentiousnes: therefore they agree to mans corrupt nature: for who almost will not sinne, when he may get a pardon for his sins, for a little peece of money, as twenty shillings, or foure nobles? And what is it but cosenage to sell pardons which shall be of force many yeeres after the end of the world, as the Pope doth?

It is naturall to a man to serue God in certaine ceremonies, without the power of godlines: and this seruice is prescribed by the religion of the Church of Rome, which standeth only in outward and corporal ceremonies, as the outward succession of Bishops: garments, vestures, gossures, colours, choise of meat, difference of daies, times, & places, bearing, seeing, saying, touching, staffing, numbring of beades, guilding and worshipping of images, building Monasteries, rising at midnight silence in cloisters, abstaining from flesh and whitemeat: fasting in Lent, keeping Inber daies, bearing Masse & diuine seruice, seeing & adorning the body in forme of bread, receiving holy water, and holy bread, creeping to the Crosse, carrying Palmes, taking ashes, bearing Candles, lighting images, gongs, censuring, kneeling, knocking, altars, superaltars, candlesticks, pardons: In orders, crossing, anointing, shunning forswearing marriage, In baptisme fasting, crossing, spaling, exorcizing, waiking of hands: At Easter, confession, penance, diuine satisfactions, & in receiving with bearded new shauen, to imagine a body where they see none: and though he were there present to be seene, yet the outward seeing and touching of him, of it selfe without faith conducteth no more then it did the Lewes. At Rogation daies, to carry banners, to follow the Crosse, to walke about the fields. After Pentecost, to go about with Corpus Christi plays. At Hollowmasse, to watch in the Church

Church, so say Dirge or commendation, and to ring for all soules, to pay riches truly, to give to the hie Altar. And if a man will be a Priest, so say Masse or Mattens, to true the Saints of that day, and to lift wether the head. In sickness to be annointed, to take his rites, after his death to have funerall and obsequies said for him, and to be buried for as his Funerall, months minde, and yeare minde. This is the summe of the Catholic religion, standing in bodily actions, not in any motions or worke of the holy Ghost, working in the heart.

The morall law containing perfect righteousness, is flat opposite to mans corrupt nature: therefore whatsoever religion shall repeale & make of none effect the commandments of the morall law, the same religion must needs ioyne hands with the corruption of nature, & stand for the maintenance of it. This doth the religion of the Church of Rome: it may be it doth not plainly repeale them, yet in effect it doth: and if it shall frustrate but any one point of any one commandment, yea, the whole law thereby is made in vaine. The first commandment requirith, that we haue the true Iehouah for our only God: the Church of Rome maketh other Gods beside this true God: it maketh the body of Christ to be God, because they hold it may be in many places, in heaven, in earth at the same time, which thing is only proper to God. It maketh euery Saint departed to be God, because it holdeth the Saints doe heare vs now being vpon the earth, and that they know our thoughts when wee pray to them, which none but the true God can doe. It maketh the Pope to be God and that is plaine words. Pope Nicholas faith, Constat summum Pontificem a pio principe Constantino Deum appellari. It is well knowne that the Pope of the godly Prince Constantine was called God. Againe, in the extravagants of the same Canon law it is written, Dominus Deus noster Papa, Our Lord God the Pope. And againe, Christophorus Marcellus said to the Pope, Tues alter Deus in terra. Thou art another God vpon earth: and the Pope tooke it to himselfe. As the Pope in plaine words is made God, so the power given to him declareth the same. Hee can make holy that which is vnholie, & iustifie the wicked, & pardon sinns. Hee may dispenze contrary to the saying of an Apostle: hee can change the nature of things, and of nothing make somewhat.

What is all this, but to place the Pope in Gods roome, and to robbe the Lord of his Maiesty? Againe, the Church of Rome maketh Mary the mother of Iesus to be as God. In the Breuiary reformed and published at the commandment of Pius the first: Shee is called a God-desse, in expresse words: and she is further reuered the Queene of heauen, the Queene of the world, the gate of heauen, the mother of grace and mercy. Yea she is farr exalted above Christ: & he in regard of her is made but a poore vnderling in heauen: for Papists in their seruice vnder her pray on this manner, saying, Shew thy selfe to be a mother: and cause thy Sonne to receive our prayers: set free the captiues, and giue light to the blinde. (b) Lastly, the very crosse is made as a God. For they salute it by the name of their only hope, and pray it to increase iustice to the godly, and to giue sinners pardon. Wherefore the Church of Rome beside the one true God, distinguished into three persons, the Father, the Son, and the holy Ghost, maketh also many other, and so in truth hath repealed his first commandment.

And they haue very plainly repealed the second commandment, in that they teach it lawful to make images of the true God, & to worship him in them. For the flat contrarie is the very scope of this commandment: namely, that no image must be made of the true Iehouah: nor any worship be performed vnto him in images, which appears thus. In Deuteronomie Moses maketh a large Commentary of this commandment, and this very point he sets downe expressly, saying, Take heede to you selves: for ye saw no image in the day that the Lord spake vnto you in Horeb, out of the midst of the fire: that ye corrupt not your selves, and make you a graven image, or representation of any figure, &c.

His argument I set downe thus: As God appeared in mount Horeb, so he is to be conceived and represented: but he appeared in no image in mount Horeb, only his voice was heard: therefore he is not to be conceived or represented in any image: but men are to be content, if they may heare his voice. Againe, that sin to which the people of Israel were specially giuen, euen that doth the Lord specially forbid: but to this were the people of Israel specially giuen, not so much to make images of false gods, as to make images of the true God, & to worship him in them: which I prouue thus.

In the booke of Iudges it is said, that the children of Israel did wickedly in the sight of the Lord, and serued Baalim. Now these Baalims, what are they? Surely idols resembling the true God: as the Prophet Hosea declareth. And at this day faith the Lord, thou shalt call me Ishui, and shalt call me no more Baal. Here it appeareth, that the Israelites meaning was not to worship a false God, but the true God in Baalim. And Aaron when he made the golden calfe, proclaimed that the next day should be holie day, not of any false God, but of the Lord that brought them out of Egypt: The Prophet Esaie after that he had set forth Gods maiesty verie worthily, he comes in with this conclusion: To whom then will ye liken God? or what similitude will ye set vp of him? which declareth that the Iewes after the manner of the Gentiles ran whoring after idols, that is, images not onely of false Gods, but also of the true God. I conclude therefore as I began, that the Church of Rome, by maintaining images, hath repealed this commandment.

Neither doth it shew lesse fauour to the third commandment: which also is repealed, First, in that they teach men to giue the glory which

which is proper to God, to some thing else: it is proper to God after the day of iudgement, to be all in all: this they giue to Mary, saying that shee is all in all.

It is proper to Christ in respect of other creatures, to be a light lightening all that come into the world: yet they pray to Mary to giue light to the blind. It is proper to Christ to be the Redeemer of mankind, and this worke of redemption is ascribed to Mary, whom the Papists call their hope, their ioy, their mediatrix, a medicine for the diseased, a defence from the enemy, a friend in the house of death. Againe, they make S. Martin a Priest according to the order of Metaphysich, which is proper to Christ.

Secondly, they hold that the people is to be barred from the reading of the Scriptures, vntill it be in an vnknown tongue, and so they maintain ignorance, and the prophaning of Gods name: for the preaching of Gods word, and therefore also the hearing, learning, reading, searching of it, is the glorifying of the word, and so the glorifying of Gods name.

The fourth commandment is repealed, in that they require that their feast-daies should be kept as solemnly as the Lords Sabbath: For they must be kept in all honour and comeliness: and men must rest from their labours, from morning to evening, as on the Sabbath: whereas contrariwise the Lord hath giuen permission to his seruants to labour the sixe daies, so be it, on the seventh they will rest from the works of their callings, and doe the works of the spirit.

They repeale the fifth commandment in that they teach, that their Clergie hath an immunitie, and therefore is not bound to performe obedience to Magistrates, for so they haue decreed, that Clergie are to be iudged of Bishops: & that they are onely to rescue them from iniuries. Againe, that the Bishop must not be ludged of the secular power: and that the Pope himselfe oweth no subiection to Kings, Princes, & Emperours, but hath power to make them, & to put them downe at his pleasure. But S. Paul for the maintaining of the fifth commandment, bids euery soule be subiect to the higher powers: and therefore the Pope with his Clergie (as Chrysostome hath expounded it) must be subiect to ciuill Magistrates, vntill they will exclude themselves out of the number of men, for Paul speaks to all.

Against the sixth commandment they haue decreed asyles for murderers, plainly permitting them which teare authority, to haue safetie in the lap of their mother the Church. Thus they annihilate Gods commandment, yea and more then this, whither tends all that they teach but to the very murdering of soules? For example, saluation by workes of grace is one of their chiefe points: But that man that is perfwaded that he must be saved by his workes, must also put his trust in them, and he which trusteth in his workes is accursed before God, For cursed is that man that trusteth in man, whether it be himselfe or others.

The seventh Commandment is repealed diuers waies. First, in that they maintaine the occasions of a dultery & fornication: namely, the vow of single life both in men & women, when as they haue not receiued the gift from God to be continent: which gift when they want, & yet are bound to single life, they must needs breake out into much looseness. This sin made Monach, Plungius, and Petrarch to cry out against the Church of Rome. Againe, some Papists defend the toleration of the stewes in Rome, for the auoiding of greater evils. And in the council of Trent, chastity & Priests marriage are made opposite, so that marriage with them is a filthie thing, although God hath ordained it for the auoiding of fornication in al. Furthermore, that which is most abominable, and proues the Church of Rome to be an Antichristian Church, they maintaine marriages within the degrees forbidden both by the law of nature, and of Gods word. For in the table of consanguinity they which are placed in the transuerse vnequall line cannot marry, because they are as parents and children, yet if they be distant foure degrees on diuers sides from the commo stocke, they may marry together by the Canon law.

As for example, the grand vnicle may marrie his sisters nephewes neece, a thing very filthie in nature, considering that a man cannot marrie with any homelike his sisters child. To goe further, by Gods word they which are distant foure degrees in the transuerse equall line, are not forbidde to marry together, as cousin Germans. Thus the daughter of Zelophehad were married to their fathers brothers sons: this example (as I take it) may be a warrant of the lawfulness of this mariage: yet the canon law vtterly condemnes this mariage of cousin Germans, & the mariage of their children after the, though they be 8 degrees distant. Thus the Church of Rome doth ouerthrow the Lord: where he giues libertie, they restraints it; and when hee restraineth men, then they giue libertie.

They repeale the 8. Commandment by their spiritual merchandize, in which they sell those things which are not to be sold, as Crosse to dead men, Images, prayers, the sound of bells, remission of sinnes, and the merits by which men may come to the kingdome of heauen: their shaueling Priests will doe no dutie without they be fed with money: hence comes the proverb, No penny, no Pater noster.

They teach men to beare false witness, and so to sinne against the ninth commandment, in that they hold that Mary is the Queene of heauen: whereas indeed she is no Queene, but doth continually cast downe her crowne before Christ with the rest of the Saints. And a man may as well beare false witness in speaking too much, as in speaking too little.

In the 10. Commandment the first motions that goe before consent are forbidden: otherwise there shall be no difference between it and the rest. For they also are spiritual, and forbid inward motions; but the difference is that they forbid only the motions that goe with consent. Now the Papists say, that these motions are no sinne properly, vnlesse consent follow; and therefore they in expresse words repeale this commandment. For if consensuence and the first motions be no sins properly, then there neede no prohibition of them.

The fourth Argument.

That religion which is contrarie to it selfe, is only a mere inuention of man: the religion of the Church of Rome is quite contrary to it selfe: therefore it is only an inuention of man: which if it be true, as well a Reprobate as any other may performe the things required in it.

The proofe.

The proposition is most true, because it is a priuilege of Gods word, and so of the true religion gathered forth of it, to be consonant to it selfe in all points: which properly no doctrines nor writings beside can haue. The assumption may be made manifest by an induction of particular examples.

I. The Church of Rome faith, that men are faued by grace: & againe, it faith that men are faued by works. A flat contradiction. For Paul faith, if election be of grace, it is no more of works: or else were grace no more grace: but if it be of works, it is no more grace: or else were works no more work. Answer is made, that in this place Paul speaketh of workes of nature, which indeed are contrary to grace, but not of workes of regeneration, which are not contrary to grace. This answer is false; for Paul in a like place vnto this opposeth grace and workes of regeneration. Ye are faued by grace (saith he) through faith, and that not of your selues: for it is the gift of God, not of works, least any should boast himselfe: for we are his workmanship created in Christ Iesus vnto good workes, that we should walke in them. Now let the Church of Rome speake what are the workes of which any man may most of all boast? And what are the workes, for the doing of which we must be fashioned anew in Christ Iesus? Assuredly they must be the workes of regeneration, dipped and dyed in the blood of Christ (as they speake) wherefore it is euident, that Pauls meaning is to conclude, that if we be faued by grace, we cannot be faued by workes of regeneration.

II. The Church of Rome consisteth and condemneth in Councils, and deniceth this doctrine that we teach, that fithers are to be iustified by the imputation of the righteousness of Christ, which righteousness is not in vs but in Christ. And the Rhemists call it a fantastical iustice, a new no iustice. But herein that Church is contrary to it selfe; for it defendeth workes of supererogation, and workes of satisfaction of one man for another: and their ground is, because the faithfull are all members of one body, and haue fellowship one with another, and therefore one may satisfie for another. Hereby it is plaine, that the

A Church of Rome most of all defendeth that imputation of righteousness, which most of all it hath impugned. For when one man satisfieth for another, the worke of one man is imputed to another. But what? shall one man satisfie for another, and shall not Christ by his righteousness satisfie for vs? shall God accept the worke of one man for another, and not accept the righteousness of Christ for vs? Truly there is greater fellowship and coniunction betweene the head and the members, then of the members among themselves because they are ioyned together by meanes of the head.

III. It holdeth that the guilt and fault of sinne may be remitted by Christ; and yet the temporal punishment of sinne bee vnremitted: but these are quite contrary. Paul faith, there is now no condemnation to them that are in Christ Iesus. Yet if a man were punished for his sinne after he were in Christ, and had the fault of sinne remitted, some condemnation should now remaine in him. And David faith, Blessed is the man to whom the Lord imputeth no sinne: therefore he to whom the Lord imputeth no sinne, hath not onely the guilt of sinne, but also the punishment of his sinne remitted; otherwise he could not be blessed, but miserable. And this agreeth not with Gods iustice, when the fault is quite pardoned, and a man is guilty of no sinne, that then any punishment should be laid on. And S. Austin faith that Christ by taking vpon him the punishment of sinne, and not taking vpon him the fault, tooke away both the punishment and the fault. Wherefore this opinion that Christ hath taken away the guilt of sinne, ouerthroweth all satisfactions and Purgatorie, because the fault and guilt being taken away, all punishment for sinne is also taken away.

IV. Transubstantiation is a monster, standing on manifold contradictions. First, it maketh Christs body to be in many places: an euident contradiction. For it is of the nature & essence of a body to be in one place only: which I proue thus: A body is a magnitude, a magnitude is a continued quantitie, a continued quantitie cannot be but in one place: therefore a body cannot be but in one place. In this argument the doubt is onely of the last part: which vndoubtedly is most true: for it is called a continued quantitie because his parts are continued & knit together the one with another in a common teame or bond, as a line by a point, a plane & his parts by a line, a solid by a superficies or plane. Now these points can in no wise be continued, vnlesse every one of them keepe one onely speciall place: For examples sake:

suppose the plaine, a, b, c, d, to be deuided into three parts, i, k, l, by two lines, e, g, and f, h, which doe both deuide the three parts, and continue them the one with the other, Now I say, that every one of the parts may be continued with his next fellow, is is necessarie that every one of them should haue one speciall & distinct place: That the first place of the plane, i, may be continued with k, it must be situated onely there where it is, and no where else: for if it shall be situated elsewhere, as in the place m, the it cannot be continued with k. Now then, if the parts must of necessity haue their owne particular place onely: then the whole figure, a, b, c, d, must also be onely in one place. And this is that with the Prince of Philosophers teacheth, that every magnitude hath his parts fitted in some one place, one by another, so that a man may say of them, here it is, & there it is not. To conclude therefore, this must needs agree to a body, and to the parts of it, to be in one place alone. So that the Church of Rome, when it faith that Christs body is in many places, in effect they say, that Christs body is no body. They object, that God is omnipotent. True indeede, but there bee some things, the doing of which agreeth not with Gods power, as to make contradictoria, things contradictory to be both true: of which sort these are. For, that Christs body is a true body and that it is in many places at once, are flatte contrary: because (as hath bin shewed) it is essentiall to all magnitudes to be in one place, and therefore to a body. And God cannot take away that which is essentiall to a thing, the essence remaining whole. 2. Againe, transubstantiation maketh the accidents of bread and wine to remaine without the substance. Here also is another contradiction as impossible as the former: for it is a common saying in Schooles, Accidens est, essentia inesse. It is the essence of an accident to be in the substance. Now therefore, if the accidents be, there is also the bread & wine: and if there be no substance of bread or wine, neither can there be any accidents. 3. It holdeth that bread is turned into the body of Christs, & therefore it must needs hold, that Christs body is made of bakers bread, & yet it holdeth and teacheth, that Christs body is onely made of the feede of Marie, quite ouerthrowing the former Transubstantiation.

V. It teacheth, that a man must alwaies doubt of his saluation: & likewise it teacheth, that in praying wee are to call God Father, which are things quite contrarie. For who can truly call God Father, vnlesse he haue the spirit of adoption, & be assured that hee is Gods child? For if a man call God Father, and yet in his heart doubt whether hee be his Father or not, hee playeth the dissembling hypocrite: wherefore to doubt of saluation, and to say, Our Father, &c. in truth are contrarie.

VI. The Church of Rome maketh prayer to be one of the chiefe meanes to satisfie for sinnes. But prayer indeed is an asking of pardon for sinne. Now asking of pardon and satisfaction for sinne, are contrarie: therefore by the iudgement of the Papists, prayer which is a satisfaction is no satisfaction. And indeede let vs consider what madnesse is contained in this popish diuinity: the poore begger cometh very hungry to the rich mans doore to craue his almes; and straight way by his begging hee will merit and deserve it. The same doth the Papist, hee prayeth very poorly for the thing which hee wanteth, yet hee looketh very proudly to merit no lesse then the kingdom of heauen by it.

VII. Doubting of saluation and hope cannot agree together, for hope maketh a man not to be ashamed, that is, neuer disappointeth him of the thing which hee looketh for. And therefore it is called the anchor of the soule both sure and steadfast, which encreth into that which is within the vails. So that true hope and the certaine assurance of saluation goe together.

VIII. True prayer & iustification by works cannot stand together. For he which prayeth truly must be touched inwardly with a lively feeling of his owne miserie, and of the want of that grace wherof he stands in neede. Now this cannot bee in the heart of that man that looketh to merit the kingdom of heauen by his workes: for he that can doe this may iustly conceiue some feat of his owne excellencie.

IX. Papists teach, that it is great boldnes to come immediately vnto God, without the intercession of Saints: and therefore the vse to pray to (s) Marie, that shee would pray to Christ to helpe them: yet one the contrarie when they haue so done, they pray to God immediately, that he would receiue the intercession of Mary for them. And thus they are become intercessours betweene Mary and God. Yet when they offer vp Christ, praying God to accept their gifts and sacrifices, the humble priest that will not pray to God but by the mediation of Saints, is then a mediator betweene Christ Iesus and God the Father.

X. It holdeth, that in the Masse the Priest offereth vp Christ to his Father, an vnbloody sacrifice. This is a thing impossible: for if Christ in the Masse be sacrificed for sin, then hee must die and his blood must be shed, Heb. 9. 22. And in the Scriptures these two sayings, [Christ is dead, Christ is offered vp in sacrifice] are all one. So then, the Papist when hee suppose that there may be an vnbloody sacrifice, in effect hee faith thus much: There is a sacrifice, which is no sacrifice. And it is not possible that a bloody sacrifice should be offered in an vnbloody manner.

XI. In the Canon of the Masse, the Church of Rome prayeth on this wife. Wee humbly beseech thee most mercifull Father, by Iesus Christ thy Sonne and our Lord, that thou wouldest accept these gifts & oblations, & these holy Sacrifices, which thy Church offers to thee, &c. where first they offer vp Christ to God the Father, in the name of Christ, & to ney make Christ to be his owne Mediatour. Again, they desire God to blesse and to accept his owne Sonne: and they offer vp Christ. If they say, henedeth now the blessing of his Father, they make Christ a weak and imperfect Christ: if he needs not the blessing of his Father, their prayer is needlesse. Also they desire God to accept not one gift or one sacrifice, but in the plural number, these gifts and sacrifices: whereas they hold that Christs body is one oaly, and therefore but one sacrifice. And thus they are at variance with themselves.

X I I. Papiſts, in word they say, that they beleue and put their trust in God: yet where-as they looke to be faued by their works, they set the confidence of their hearts in truth vpon their owne doings.

X I I I. They put such holines in matrimo-nie, that they make it one of their seauen sacra-ments, which * conferre grace to the par-takers of them: yet they forbid their cleargie to marrie, b because to liue in marriage is to liue according to the flesh, and the Councell of Trent opposeth marriage and chastitie.

X I V. It teacheth that foules kept in Purgatorie, may be redeemed by Sacrifices and Suffrages. Against this, is a Canon of their law taken out of S. Hierome,^c we know that in this life we may helpe one another, either by prayer, or by good counsell: but when we shall come before the iudgement seate of Christ, neither Iob, nor Daniel, nor Noe, may intreat for any: but every man is to beare his owne burden. And according to another Canon going vnder the name of Gelasius Bishop of Rome: Either there is no Purgatorie, or the foules which goe thither shall neuer returne. X V. And to conclude, the most points of their religion are contrary to their Canons, as by searching may appeare in these examples:

1. The dead cannot heare the prayers of them which call vpon him.
2. Peter and Paul were two of the chiefe Apostles, and it is hard to say, which was a-boue the other.
3. Leu the 4. liuing in the yeere 846. ac-knowledged Labarum the Emperour for his Prince.
4. No Bishop may be called vniuersall.
5. The Church of Rome: hath no more authoritie ouer other Churches, then other Churches ouer it.
6. A Priest and a Bishop were in times past all one.
7. The Pope hath no power to giue or sell pardons.
8. There can be no merit by fasting, or ab-stinence from flesh.
9. The Masse is nothing but the forme of diuine sacrifice.

By this which hath beene said, it doth in part appeare, that the religion of the Church of Rome is repugnant to it selfe, and it could not to be, if it were from the word of God.

A Corollarie gathered out of the former Assertion.

A man being indued with no more grace then that which hee may obtaine by the religion of the Church of Rome, is still in the state of damnation.

1. Thy minde knoweth not the things that be of God.

3. In the law of God thou art starke blinde, sauing that thou halt a few principles of it to make thee inexcusable.

4. The Gospel is foolishnesse and madnesse vnto thee: thou makest no better account of it then of thine owne dreame.

5. Thy conscience is corrupt, because it flattereth thee, and excuseth thy sinne.

6. Thy memory keepeth and remembereth nothing, but that which is against Gods word: but things abominable and wicked it keepeth long.

7. Thy will hath no inclination to that which is good, but only to sinne and wickednesse.

8. Thy affections are set onely on wickednesse: they are mightie gyants and princes in thee, they haue thee at commandement. Remember that for very anger thou hast bene sicke: that the lust of the flesh hath driuen thee to madnesse: forget not thy Atheisme, thy contempt of Gods word, thy inward pride, thy enuie, hatred, malice, thy couetousnesse, and infinite other wicked desires, which haue led thee captive, and made thee outragi-ous in all kind of naughtinesse.

9. Thy actual sinnes committed partly in secret, partly in publike, are most filthy and most infinite. Remember how in such a place, at such a time, thou didst commit fornication: in another place thou didst steale, &c. God saw this I warrant thee: yea, all thy sinnes are written in his booke: wherefore thou cursed wretch, all hope of mercy is cut off from thee.

Christian. But Gods mercie farre exceedeth all these my sinnes: and I cannot be so infinite in sinning, as God is infinite in mercy, and pardoning.

Satan. Darest thou presume to thinke of Gods mercy? Why, the least of thy sinnes de-serueth damnation.

Christian. None of my sinnes can feare mee, or dismay me. Christ hath borne the full wrath and vengeance of his Father vpon the crosse, euen for mee, that I might be deliuered from condemnation, which was due vnto me.

Satan. If Gods purpose were not to con-demne thee, persuade thy selfe, he would ne-uer lay so many afflictions and crosses on thee, as he doth. What is this want of good name? this weaknesse and sicknes of thy body? these terrors of the minde? this dulnesse and fo-rwardnesse of thy heart? what are all these (I say) and many other evils, but the beginnings and certaine flashings of the fire of hell?

Christian. Nay, rather my afflictions are liuely testimonies of my saluation. For God as a louing Father, partly by them, as with scour-ges chasteneth my disobedience & brings mee into order: partly coformeth me vnto our Sau-our Christ, and so by little and little, layeth o-pent to me mine owne sins, that I may dislike my selfe and hate them: and maketh me to re-nounce the world, thy eldest sonne, & stirreth me vp to call vpon him, and to pray earnestly with groanes and sighes, which I am not able to expresse with any words as I feele them.

Satan. Thy afflictions are heauy, and comfortlesse, therefore they cannot beargu-ments of Gods fauour.

Christian. Indeede their nature is to bring griefe and heauinesse to the soule, but I haue had ioy in the midst of my afflictions, and strength sufficient to beare them, and after them haue bene many waies bettered, which befallth to none of the wicked: and for that cause, it is a great perswasion to mee that I shall not be damned with the wicked world, but in spite of all thy power, passe from death to euermlasting life.

Satan. After these thy manifold afflic-tions, thou must suffer death, which is most terrible, and a vnto entrance into hell.

Christian. Death hath lost his sting by Christs death; and vnto me it shall be nothing else but a passage vnto euermlasting life.

Satan. Admit thou shalt be deliuered from hell by Christ, what wilt this auail thee, con-sidering that thou shalt neuer come to the kingdome of heauen? for Christs death onely deliuereth thee from death eternall, it can-not advance thee to euermlasting life.

Christian. I am now at this time a mem-ber of Christs kingdome, and after this life shall reigne with him for euer in his euermlasting kingdome.

Satan. Thou neuer diddest fulfill the law, therefore thou canst not come into the king-dome of heauen.

Christian. Christ hath perfectly fulfilled eu-ery part of the law for me: and by this his o-bedience imputed vnto mee, I my selfe doe keepe the law.

Satan. Be it so, for all this, thou art farre enough from the kingdome of heauen, into which no vnclane thing shall euer enter: then, although that Christ hath suffered death, and fulfilled the law for thee; yet thou art in part vnclane: thy cursed nature and the seeds of sinne are yet remaining in thee.

Christian. Christ in the virgins wombe was perfectly sanctified by the holy Ghost: and this perfect holinesse of his humane nature is imputed to mee: euen as Isaac put on Esaus garments to get his fathers blessing; so I haue put on the righteousness of Christ, as a long white robe coting my sinnes, and making me appeare perfectly righteous, euen before Gods iudgement seate.

Satan. Indeede God hath made promise vnto mankind of all these mercies and bene-fits in Christ: but the condition of this pro-mise is faith, which thou wastest, & therefore canst not make any account, that Christs suf-ferings, Christs fulfilling the law, Christs per-fect holiness, can doe thee any good.

Christian. I haue true fauing faith.

A Dialogue containing the conflicts betweene Satan and a Christian.

Satan.

Vee hell-hound, thou art my slaue and my vassall, why then shakest thou off my yoke?

Christian. By nature I was thy vassall, but Christ hath redeemed me.

Satan. Christ redee-meth no reprobates such as thou art.

Christian. I am no reprobate.

Satan. Thou art a reprobate, for thou shalt be condemned.

Christian. Lucifer, to pronounce damnation belongs to God alone: thou art no iudge, it is sufficient for thee to be an accuser.

Satan. Though I cannot condemn thee, yet I know God will condemne thee.

Christian. Yea but God will not condemne mee.

Satan. Go too, let vs trie the matter. Is not God a Lord and a King ouer thee? and may he not therefore giue thee a law, to keepe, and p-unish thee with hell-fire, if thou breake it?

Christian. Yes.

Satan. And hast thou kept the Law of this thy Lord and King?

Christian. No.

Satan. Let vs proceede further: Is not the same Lord also a most righteous Iudge? And therefore a most sharpe reuenger of sinne?

Christian. Yes truly.

Satan. Why then wilt thou flatter thy selfe thou hypocrite? God cannot winke at thy sins, except he should be vnjust. Wherefore there is no remedie, thou art sure to be dam-ned: hell was provided for thee, and now it gapeth to deuoure thee.

Christian. There is remedie enough to deli-uer mee from condemnation. For God is not onely (as thou affirmest) a Lord and a Iudge, but also a fauing, and a most mercifull Father. Satan. But thou fire-brand of hell-fire, and child of perdition, looke for no mercie at Gods hands, because thou art a most grieuous sinner: for,

1. Original sin runneth wholly ouer thee,

The conflicts of Sathan with the strong Christian.

Sathan. Thou saidst thou hast true faith, but I shall sift thee and disprove thee.

Christian. The gates of hell shall neuer preuaile against my faith, doe what thou canst.

Sathan. Tell me then, dost thou thinke that all the world shall be faued?

Christian. No.

Sathan. What, shall some bee faued, and some condemned?

Christian. So faith the word of God.

Sathan. Thou then art perfwaded that God is true euen in his mercifull promises, and that he will faue some men, as Peter, and Paul, and David, &c. and this is the onely belief, by which thou wilt be faued.

Christian. Nay, this I beleue, and more too, that I particularly am in the number of those men which shall bee faued by the merit of Christs death and pafion: and this is the belief that faueth me.

Sathan. It may be thou art perfwaded that God is able to faue thee: but that God will faue thee, that is, that he hath determined to aduance this thy body, and this thy soule into his kingdome, and that he is most willing to performe it in his good time; herein thou wauereft and doubtst.

Christian. Nay Sathan, I in mine owne heart am fully perfwaded, that I shall be faued, and that Christ is specially my Redeemer: and (O Lord) for Christs sake, helpe thou my doubting and vnbelief.

Sathan. This thy full perfwasion is onely a phantafie, and a strong imagination of thine owne head: it goeth not with thee as thou thinkest.

Christian. It is no imagination, but truth which I speak. For methinks I am as certaine of my faluation, as though my name were registered in the Scriptures (as Dauid and Paul are) to be an elect vessel of Gods: and this is the testimony of the holy spirit of Iesus Christ, assuring mee inwardly of my adoption, and making mee with boldnesse and confidence in Christ, to pray vnto God the Father.

Sathan. Still thou dremeft and imaginest; thou louest and likest thy selfe, and therefore thou thinkest the best of thy selfe.

Christian. Yea but God of his goodnes hath brought forth such tokens of faith in mee, that I cannot be deceiued.

I. I am displeased with my selfe for my manifold finnes, in which sometime I haue delighted and bathed my selfe, Rom. 7. 15. 24.

II. I purpose neuer to commit them againe, if God giue me strength, as I trust he will.

III. I haue a very great desire to be doing those things which God commandeth.

IV. Those that bee the children of God: If I doe but heare of them, I loue them with my heart, and with vnto them as to my selfe, 1 Iohn 2. 14.

V. My heart leapeth for gladnesse, when I heare of the preaching of the word.

VI. I long to see the coming of Christ Iesus, that an end may be made of sinning and of displeasing God, Apo. 22. 20.

VII. I feele in my heart the fruits of the spirit, ioy, loue, peace, gentlenesse, meekenesse, patience, temperance: the workes of the flesh I abhorre them, fornication, adultery, vnclennesse, wantonnesse, idolatrie, strife, enuie, anger, drunkennesse, bibbing and quaffing, and all such like, Gal. 5. 19. 20. 21.

All these cannot proceede from thee, Sathan, or from my flesh, but onely from faith which is wrought in me by Gods holy spirit.

Sathan. If this were so, God would neuer suffer thee to sinne as thou dost.

Christian. I shall sin as long as I liue in this world, I am sure of it; because I am taught to aske remission of my finnes continually. But the manner of my sinning now is otherwise: then it hath bene in times past. I haue sinned heretofore with full purpose and consent of will: but now doublelesse, I doe not. Before I commit any sinne, I doe not goe to the practising of it with deliberation, as the carnall man doth, who taketh care to fulfill the lusts of the flesh: but if I doe it, it is flat beside my minde and purpose: in doing of any sinne, I would not doe it, my heart is against it, and I hate it, and yet by the tyranny of my flesh being overcome I doe it: afterward, when it is committed, I am grieved and displeased at my selfe, and doe earnestly with teares aske at Gods hand forgiveness of the same sinne.

Sathan. Indeede, this is very true in the children of God: but thou art sold vnder sin, and with great pleasure dost commit sinne, and louest it with thy whole heart: otherwise, thou wouldest not fall to sinne againe after repentance, and commit euen one and the same sinne, so often as thou dost. Thou hypocrite, this thy behaviour turneth all the fauour of God from thee.

Christian. Indeede it is dangerous to fall againe into the same sinne after repentance: yet it is the order of the Prophets to call men to repentance which haue fallen from the feare of God, and from the repentance which they protested: and God in thus calling them, putteth them in hope of obtaining mercie. And the law had sacrifices offered euery day for the sins of all the people, and for particular men, both for their ignorances and their voluntarie finnes: which signifieth, that God is ready to forgive the sins of his children, though they sinne often. Abraham wife lyed & swore that Sarah was not his wife. Ioseph swore twice by the life of Pharo. Dauid committed adultery often, because he tooke vnto him Bathsheba, Uriahs wife, and also kept fixe wiues, and ten concubines. Gods will is, that men forgieue till seauentie seuen times: and therefore hee will haue much more mercie. And for my part, so oft as I shall fall into the same sinne, so oft I shall haue Christ my aduocate and intercessour to the Father for mee, who will not damne me for the infirmities which he findeth in me. I will abstaine from externall iniquities, and I will not make my members seruants vnto sinne: and so long I tuit my imperfections shall haue no power to damne me: for Christs perfection is reputed to bee mine by faith, which I haue in his blood: God is not displeased, if my body be sicke and subiect to diseases; no more is he displeased at the disease and sicknesse of the soule. A naturall father will not flay the body of his childe, when he is sick, and abhorreth comfortable meats: and my heavenly father will not condemne my soule, although through the infirmities of faith, and the weaknesse of the spirit, I commit sinne, and often loath his heavenly word, the food of my soule. Nay, (which is a strange thing) I know it by experience, that God hath turned my filthy sinnes to my great profit, and to the amendment of my life: like as the good Physician, of ranke poyson is able to make a fourraigne medicine to preferue life.

Sathan. Well, be it so, that now thou art in the state of grace, yet thou shalt not continue so: but shalt before death depart from Christ.

Christian. I know I am a member of Christs myttall body: I feele in my selfe the heavenly power and vertue of my head Christ Iesus: and for this cause I cannot perish, but shall continue for euer, and reigne in heauen after this life with him.

The conflicts of Sathan with the weak Christian.

Sathan. Thy minde is full of ignorance and blindness, thy heart is full of obstinacie, rebellion, and frowardnesse against God: thou art wholly vnfit for any good worke; wherefore thou hast no faith, neither canst thou be iustified, and accepted before God.

Christian. If I haue but one drop of the grace of God, and if my faith be no more then a little graine of mustard-seede, it is sufficient for mee: God requireth not perfect faith, but true faith.

Sathan. Yea, but thou hast no faith at all.

Christian. I haue had faith.

Sathan. Thou neuer hadst true faith: for in time past, when according to thine opinion thou didst beleue, then thou hadst nothing but a shadow of faith and a foolish imagination, which all hypocrites haue.

Christian. I will put my trust in God for euer, and his former mercies shewed me heretofore, strengthen me now in this my weaknesse.

1. He created me when I was nothing.

2. Hee created mee a man, when he might haue made me an vgly toad.

3. He made me of comely body, & of good discretion, whereas he might haue made mee vgly, and deformed, frantick and mad.

4. I was borne in the daies of knowledge, when I might haue bene borne in the time of ignorance and superstition.

5. I was borne of Christian parents, but God might haue giuen me either Turkes or Iewes, or some other favage people for my parents.

6. I might haue perished in my mothers wombe, but he hath preferred me, and provided for mee by his prouidence euen vnto this houre.

7. Soone after my birth, God might haue cast mee into hell, but contrariwise I was baptized, and so received the seale of his blessed covenant.

8. I haue had by Gods goodnesse some sorrow for my finnes past, and haue called on him, in hope and confidence that hee would heare me.

9. God might haue concealed his word from me, but I haue heard the plentiful preaching of it: I vnderstand it, and haue received comfort by it.

10. Lastly, at this time God might poure his full wrath on mee: which he doth not, but mercifully maketh mee to feele mine owne wants, that I might be humbled, and giue all glory vnto him for his blessings. Wherefore there is no cause why I should be disquieted; but I will trust still in the Lord, and depend on him, as I haue done.

Sathan. Thou feelest no grace of the holy Ghost in thee, nor any true tokens of faith, but thou hast a lively sense of the rebellion of thy heart, and of thy lewd and wretched conversation: therefore thou canst not put any confidence in Christs death and sufferings.

Christian. Yet I will hope against all hope: and although, according to mine owne sense and feeling, I want faith, yet I will beleue in Iesus Christ, and trust to be faued by him.

Sathan. Though the children of God haue bene in many perplexities, yet neuer any of them haue bene in this case, in which thou art at this present.

Christian. Herein thou proucest thy selfe to be a lying spirit: for the Prophet Dauid faith of himselfe: that he was foolish, and as a beast before God: and yet hee euen then trusted in God. And Paul was so led captiue of sinne, that he was not able to doe the good he would, but did the euill which he hated: and so in great penitency of heart, desired to be deliuered from this world, that he might bee disburdened of his corrupt flesh.

Sathan. Thou miserable wretch, dost thou feele thy selfe gracelesse, and wilt thou beare the face of a Christian? and by thy hypocricie offend God? As thou art, so shew thy selfe to the world.

Christian. Ansoide Sathan, Christ hath vanquished, and overcome thee for my cause, that I might also triumph ouer thee. I am no hypocrite: for whereas I haue had heretofore some testimony of my faith, at this time I am lesse moued, though faith seeme to be absent, like as a man may seeme to be dead, both in his owne sense, and by the iudgement of the Physician, and yet may haue life in him: so faith may bee, though alwaies it doe not appeare.

Sathan. But thou art a man stark dead in sinne, God hath now quite forsaken thee: hee hath left thee vnto mee to be ruled: hee hath giuen mee power ouer thee, to bring thee to damnation: hee will not haue thee to trust in him any longer.

Christen. Strengthen mee, good Lord: remember thy mercifull promises, that thou wilt reuine the humble, and giue life to them that are of a contrite heart.

Sathan. These promises concerne not thee, which haue no humble and contrite, but a froward and a rebellious heart.

Christen. Good Lord, forget not thy former mercies: giue an issue to these temptations of mine enemy Sathan. And you my brethren, which know my estate, pray for me, that God would turne his fauourable countenance towards mee: for this I know, that the prayer of the righteous aualeth much, if it be fervent.

How a man should apply aright the Word of God to his owne soule.

I.

Every Christian contains in himselfe two natures, flat contrary one to the other, the flesh and the spirit: and that hee may become a perfect man in Christ Iesus, his earnest inuicour must bee, to tame and subdue the flesh, and to strengthen and confirme the spirit.

II.

Answerable to these two natures, are the two parts of Gods word. First, the Law, because it is the ministry of death, it fidly serueth for the taming and mastering of the rebellious flesh: and the Gospel containing the bountifull promises of God in Christ, is as oyle, to poure into our wounds, and as the water of life, to quench our thirstie soules: and it fidly serueth for the strengthening of the spirit.

III.

Well then, art thou secure? Art thou prone to euill? Feelest thou that thy rebellious flesh carrieth thee captive vnto sinne? Lookenow only vpon the Law of God, apply it to thy selfe, examine thy thoughts, thy words, thy deeds by it: pray vnto God, that he would giue thee the spirit of feare, that the law may in some measure humble and terrifie thee: for (as Salomon (ith) Blessed is the man that feareth alwaies, but cursed is hee that hardeneth his heart.

I V.

In the Law, these are most effectuell meditations to humble and bridle the flesh, which follow. First, meditate on the greatnesse of thy finnes, and of their infinite number: and if it may be gather them into a catalogue, let it be before thee: and looke vnto it, that thou thinke no sinneto be a small sinne, no nor the bare thoughts & motions of thy heart. Often with diligence consider the strange iudgements of God vpon men, for their finnes, which thou shalt finde, partly in Scriptures, partly by daily experience. Doubtlesse thou must thinke, that euery iudgement of God, is a sermon of repentance. Thinke oft on the fearefull curse of the law due vnto thee, if thou shouldest sin neuer but once in all thy life, and that neuer so little. Remember, that whensoever thou committest a sinne, God is present, and his holy angels, and that he is an eye-witnesse, that he taketh a note of thy sinne, and registreth it in a booke. Thinke daily of thy end: and know that God may strike thee with sodaine death euery moment: and that, if then thou haue not repented before that time, there is no hope of saluation. Thinke on the sodaine coming of our Saviour Christ to iudgement, let it moue thee continually to watch and pray. If these will not moue thee, thinke on this, that no creature in heauen or in earth, was able to pacifie the wrath of God for thy finnes: but his owne Son must come downe from heauen, out of his Fathers bosome, and must beare the curse of the law, euen the full wrath of his Father for thee.

V.

When by these meanes thou art feared, and thy minde is disquieted in respect of Gods iudgement for thy sinne: haue recourse to the promises of mercie contained in the old and new Testament. Is thy conscience stung with sinne? With all speede runne to the brazen serpent Christ Iesus, looke on him with the eye of faith, and presently thou shalt be healed of thy stingor wound.

VI.

When thou dost meditate on the promises of the Gospell, diligently consider these benefites which thou enioyest by Christ. Through Adam, thou art condemned to hell; by Christ thou art deliuered from it. Through Adam, thou hast transgressed the whole law; in Christ thou hast fulfilled it. Through Adam, thou art before God a vile, & a loathsome sinner: through Christ thou dost appeare glorious in his eyes. By Adam euery little croffe is the punishment of thy sinne, and a token of Gods wrath by Christ, the greatest croffes are easie, profitable, and tokens of Gods mercie. By Adam, thou diddest leese all things, in Christ all things are restored to thee again. By Adam, thou art dead; by Christ thou art quickened, & made aliue again. By Adam thou art a slaue of the diuell, and the child of wrath, but by Christ, thou art the child of God. In 7.

Adam, thou art worse then a toad, and more detestable before God: but by Christ, thou art about the Angels. For thou art ioyned vnto him, and made bone of his bone, mytically. Through Adam, sinne, and Sathan haue ruled in thee, and lead thee captive: by Christ, the spirit of God dwelleth in thee plenteously. By Adam came death to thee, and it is an entrance to helly by Christ, though death remaine yet it is onely a passage vnto life. Lastly, in Adam, thou art poore and blind, and miserable: in Christ thou art rich and glorious, thou art a king of heauen and earth, fellow-heire with him, and shalt as sure be partaker of it, as he is euen now. Adam, when he must needs taste of the fruite, which God hath forbidden him, he hath made vs all to rue it, euen till this day: but here thou seest the fruits that grow, not in the earthly paradise, but on the tree of life, which is within the heauenly Ierusalem. Feare no daunger, be bold in Christ to eate of the fruit, as God hath commanded thee: it will quicken thee: and reuine thee being dead, thou canst not doe Sathan a worse displeasure, then to feede on the goodly fruite of this tree, & to smell on the sweete leaues, which it beareth continually, that giue such a refreshing fauour.

VII.

Most men now a daies, are secure and cold in the profession of the Gospell, though they haue the plentifull preaching of it. And the reason is, because they feele not in themselves the vertue and mightie operation of Gods word to renew them: and they cannot feele it, because they doe not apply the word aright vnto their owne soules. Plasters, except they be applied in order and time, and be laid vpon the wound, though they be neuer so good, yet they cannot heale: and so it is with the word of God, and the parts of it, which except they be vsed in order and time conuenient, will not humble and reuine vs, as their vertue is.

VIII.

The common Christian euery where is faultrie in this thing. Whereas he loueth himselfe, he doth vially apply vnto his owne soule the Gospell alone, neuer regarding the Law, or searching out his finnes by it. Tel him w^{at} ye will, his long is this: God is mercifull, God is mercifull. By this meanes it cometh to passe, that he leadeth a secure life, and maketh no conscience of countenances, of vlturie, of deceite in his trade, of lying, of swearing, of fornication, wantonnesse, intemperance in bibbing and quaffing, &c. But he plaisth the vaskifull Chirurgeon, he vseth healing plaisters, before his poisoned & cankered nature haue felt the power and paine of a corasue. And it will neuer bee well with him, vntill hee take a new course.

IX.

On the contrarie part, many good christians leaue to apply the comfort of the Gospell to themselves, and onely haue regard to their owne finnes, and Gods infinite vengeance. And euen when Satan accuseth them, they will not stick to giue care to Sathan, and also accuse themselves: and so they are brought into fearefull terrors, and often draw neere to desperation.

There is a third sort called Sectaries, who addit themselves to the opinion of some man. These commonly neuer apply the law or the Gospell to themselves, but their whole meditation is chiefly in the opinions of him whom they follow. As they that follow Luther, few of them follow his Christian life: they regard not that: but about consubstantiation and vbiqutrie, about Images and such like trumperie, they infinitely trouble themselves and all Europe too.

And in England there is a schismaticall and vndiscrete companie, that would seeme to crie out for discipline, their whole talke is of it, and yet they neither know it, nor will be reformed by it, and yet they are enemies to it: as for the law of God, and the promises of the Gospell, they litle regard: they maintaine vile finnes in refusing to heare the reading or the preaching of the word: and this is great contempt of Gods benefites and vnthankfulness to him. They are full of pride, thinking themselves to be full whē they are empty: to haue all knowledge, when they are ignorant and haue need to be catechized: the poison of Aspes is vnder their lippes; they refuse not to speake euill of the blessed seruants of God. Well, doe they about all things seeke the kingdom of God? then let them be sincere seekers of it: which they shall doe, if in seeking Christs kingdom they seeke the righteousness thereof: vnto which they can neuer come but by the applying of the threatnings of the law, and the comforts of the Gospell to their owne consciences. But whereas they seeke the one and not the other, they giue all men to vnderstand with what spirit they speake.

Consolations for the troubled consciences of repentant sinners.

Sinner.

Good fir, I know (a) the Lord hath giuen you the tongue of the learned, so be able to minister a word in time to him that is wearie: therefore I pray you help me in my misery.

Minister.

Ah my good brother, what is the matter with you? and what aile you?

Sinner. I liued a long time, the Lord hee knoweth it, after the maner of the world, in all the lusts of my fleshy flesh, & then I was neuer troubled: but it hath pleased GOD of his mercie to touch my heart, and to send his owne Sonne that good shepheard Iesus Christ:

to fetch me home to his owne fold, euen vpon his owne necke: and since that time it is a wonder to see how my poore heart hath bin troubled: my corruption so boiles in me, and Satan will neuer let me alone.

Minister. Your case is a blessed case: for not to be troubled of Satan, is to be possessed of him: that is, held captiue vnder (a) the power of darkness, and to be a slaue and vassall of Satan: (b) for as long as the strong man keepeth his hold, all things are in peace. Contrariwise, he that hath receiued any sparkle of true faith, shall see (c) the gates of hell, that is, the diuell and his angels in their full strength to stand vp against him, and to fight with an endlesse hatred for his final confusion.

Simier. But this my trouble of minde, hath made me oftentimes feare lest God would reiect me, and vtterly depriue mee of the kingdom of heauen.

Minister. But there is no cause why it should so do. For how should heauen be your resting place, if on earth you were not troubled? how could God wipe away your teares from your eyes in heauen, if on earth you shed them not? You would bee free from miseries, you looke for heauen vpon earth: but if you will goe to heauen, the right way is to faile by hell. If you will sit at Christs table in his kingdom, you must be with him in his temptations. You are as Gods corne, you must therefore goe vnder the flail, the fanne, the millstone, and the ouen, before you can be Gods bread. You are one of Christs lambs, looke therefore to be fleeced, and to haue the bloodie knife at your throate all the day long. If you were a market sheepe brought to bee sold, you should be stalled and kept in a fat pasture: but you are for Gods owne occupying, therefore you must pasture on the bare common, abiding stormes, tempests, Satans snatches, the worlds wounds, contempt of conscience, and frets of the flesh. But in this your miserie I will be a Simon vnto you, to helpe you to carrie your crosse, so be it you will reueale your minde vnto me.

Christian. I will doe it willingly: my temptations are either against my faith in Christ, or against repentance for my finnes.

Minister. What is your temptation as to itching faith?

Christian. Ah woe is me, I am much afraid, lest I haue no faith in Christ my Saviour.

Minister. What causeth this feare?

Christian. Diuers things.

Minister. What is one?

Christian. I am troubled with many doubtings of my saluation: and so it comes into my minde to thinke, that by my incredulitie I should quit out of my selfe from the fauour of God.

Minist. But you must know this one thing, that hee which neuer doubted of his saluation, neuer beleued; and that hee which beleued in truth, feeleth many doubtings and wauerings, euen as the found man feels many grudgings of diseases, which if hee had not health, he could not feele.

Christian. But you neuer knew any that hauing true faith doubted of their saluation.

Minister. What will you then say of the man that said, (d) Lord I beleue, Lord helpe my vnbeleefe? And of Dauid, who made his moane after this manner: Is his mercie cleane gone for euer? Deth his promise false for euermore? Hath God forgotten to be mercifull? hath hee shut vp his tender mercie in displeasure? Yea, he goeth on further, as a man in despaire, (e) And I said, this is my death. Hereby it is manifest, that a man indued with true faith, may haue not onely assaults of doubting, but of desperation. This further appeareth, in that he faith in another place, (f) Why art thou cast downe my soule? Why art thou disquieted within me? Waite on God, for I will yet giue thanks, hee is present helpe and my God. And in very truth you may periuade your selfe, that they are but (g) vnreasonable men, that say they haue long beleued in Christ without any doubting of their saluation.

Christian. But Dauid had more in him then I haue, for me thinks there is nothing in this wicked heart of mine, but rebellion against God, nothing but doubting of his mercie.

Minister. Let mee know but one thing of you: the doubtings which you feele, doe you like them? or doe you take any pleasure in them? and doe you cherish them?

Christian. Nay, nay, they appeare very vile in mine eyes, and I doe abhorre them from my heart: and I would faine beleue.

Min. In man we must consider his estate by nature, & his estate by grace. In the first, he and his flesh are all one, for they are as man & wife: therefore one is necessary to the doings of the other. What the flesh sinneth the man also sinneth, that is in subiection to the flesh; yea when the flesh perisheth, the man likewise perisheth, being in this estate with the flesh, a louing couple they are, they liue and die together. But in the estate of grace, though a man haue the flesh in him, yet he and his flesh are diuorced asunder. This diuorcement is made when a man begins to dislike and to hate his flesh, and the euill fruites of it: this seperation being made, they are no more one but twaine, and the one hath nothing to do with the other. In this case though the flesh beget sin, and perish therefore, yet the christian man shall not incurre damnation for it. To come more neere the matter; you say the flesh begets in you wauerings, doubtings and distrustings: what then troubleth you, but feare not, remember your estate; you are diuorced from the flesh, and you are new married vnto Christ: if these finnes be laid at your doore, account thet not as your children, but renounce them as bastards: say with Paul, I doubt indeed, but I hate my doubtings, and I am no cause of these, but the flesh in me which shall perish, when I shall be saved by Christ.

Christian.

Christian. This which you haue said doeth in part content mee: one thing more I pray you shew mee concerning this point: namely, how I may be able to overcome these doubtings.

Minister. For the suppressing of doubtings, you are to vse three meditations.

The first, that it is Gods commandement that you should beleue in Christ: So S. Iohn faith, This is his commandement that we beleue in the name of his Sonne Iesus Christ. Thou shalt not steale, is Gods commandement, and you are loath to breake it, lest you should despise God, and pull his curse vpon your head. This also is Gods commandement, thou shalt beleeue in Christ, and therefore you must take heed of the breach of it: lest by doubting and wauering you bring the curse vpon you. Secondly, you must consider that the promises of saluation in Christ are general, or at the least indefinite, excluding no particular man: as in one for all may appeare: God so loued the world that he gaue his onely begotten Sonne, that whoso- ever beleue in him should not perish, but haue euerm-lasting life. Now then, so often as you shall doubt of Gods mercie, you exclude your own selfe from the promise of God, whereas he excludeth you not. And as when a Prince giues a pardon to all theues: euery one can apply the same vnto himselfe, though his name bee not set downe in the pardon: So the King of kings hath giuen a general pardon of free remission of finnes, to them that will receive it. Beleeue therefore that God is true in his promise, doubt not of your owne saluation, challenge the pardon to your selfe. Indeece your name is not set downe, or written in the promise of grace, yet let not any illusiō of Satan, or the consideration of your owne vnworthines exclude you from this free mercy of God: which he hath offered to you particularly, first in Baptisme, then after in the Lords supper: and therefore you are not to wauer in the applying of it to your selfe. Thirdly, you are to consider that by doubting and despairing you offend God as much almost as by any other sinne. (a) You doe not aboue hope beleue vnder hope as you should doe. Secondly, you rob God of his glorie, in that you make his infinite mercie to be lesse then your finnes. Thirdly, you make him a liar, who hath made such a promise vnto you. And to these three meditations adde this practise. When your heart is toyled with vnbeleefe and doubtings, then in all hast draw your selfe into some secret place, humble your selfe before God, poure out your heart before him: desire him of his endlesse mercie to worke faith, and to suppress your vnbeleefe, and you shall fee (b) that the Lord ouer all is rich vnto all that call vpon his name.

Christian. The Lord reward you for your kindeesse: I will hereafter doe my endeavour to practise this your counsell. Now I will make bold to heare another that makes me to feare lest I haue no faith: And it is, because I doe not feele the assurance of the forgiveness of my finnes, Minister. Faith standeth not in the feeling of Gods mercie: but in the apprehending of it; which apprehending may be when there is no feeling; for faith is of inuisible things, and wher a man once commeth to enioy the thing beleued, then he ceaseth to beleue: And this appeareth in Iobs example, when he faith, (Le, though he slay me, yet will I trust in him, and I will reprove my wises in his sight: he shall be my saluation also for the hypocrite shall not come before him) he declareth his faith: yet when he faith presently afterward, wherefore hidest thou thy face, and keepest me from thine enemy? hee declareth the want of that feeling which you speake of.

Christian. Yet euery true beleuer feels the assurance of faith: otherwise Paul would not haue said, Prooue your felices wheneuer you are in the faith: for not.

Minister. Indeece sometimes he doth, but at some other times he doth not: as namely at that same time when God first calleth him, and in the time of temptation.

Christian. What a case am I in then? I neuer felt this assurance: onely this I feele that I am a most rebellious wretch, abounding euen with a whole sea of iniquities: mee thinkes I am more vgly in the sight of God, than any toad can be in my sight. O then what shall I doe? let me heare some word of comfort from thy mouth thou man of God.

Minister. Tell me one thing plainly: you say you feele no assurance of Gods mercy.

Christian. No indeede.

Minister. But doe you desire with all your heart to feele it?

Christian. I doe indeede,

Minister. Then doubt not, you shall feele it.

Christian. O blessed be the Lord, if this bee true.

Minister. Why, it is most true. For the man that would haue any grace of God tending to saluation, if he doe truly desire it he shall haue it: for so Christ hath promised, I will giue to him that is athirst of the well of the water of life freely. Whereby I gather, that if any want the water of life, hauing an appetite after it, hee shall haue enough of it: & therefore feare you not; onely vse the means which God hath appointed to attaine faith by, as earnest prayer, reuerent hearing of Gods word, and receiving of the Sacraments: and then you shall see this thing verified in your selfe.

Christian. All this which you say I finde in my selfe by the mercie of God: my heart longeth after that grace of God which I want. I know I do hunger after the kingdom of heauen and the righteousnes thereof: and further though I want the feeling of Gods mercie, yet I can pray for it from the very roote of my heart.

Minister. Be carefull to giue honour to God for that you haue receiued already. For these things are the motions of the spirit of God

Phil. 1.6. dwelling in you. (a) And I am persuaded of this same thing, that God which hath begun this good work in you, will perfect the same unto the day of Iesus Christ.

Christian. The third thing that troubles me, is this: I have long prayed for many graces of God, and yet have not received them, whereby it comes off to my minde, that God loves me not, that I am none of his child, and therefore that I have no faith.

Minister. You are in no other case then David himselfe, who made the same complaint: I am wearie of crying; my throat is drie, mine eyes faile while I waite for my God.

Phil. 6.9. Christian. But David neuer prayed for many yeares without receiving an answer as I have done.

Minister. Good Zacharie waited longer on the Lord, before he granted his request, then ever you did: it is like he prayed for a child in his younger yeares, yet his prayer was not heard before he was old. And further, you must note that the Lord may heare the prayers of his servants, & yet they be altogether ignorant of it. For the manner that God vseth in granting their requests, is not alwaies knowne; as may appeare in the example of our Saviour Christ, Who in the daies of his flesh, did offer up prayers & supplications with strong crying & tears, unto him that was able to save him from death, and was also heard in that which he feared. And yet we know that he was not freed from that cursed death, but must needs suffer it. How then was he heard? On this manner: he was strengthened to beare the death, he had an Angel to comfort him, he was afterward freed from the sorrows of death. And so it is with the rest of Christs body, as it was with the head. Some being in want pray for temporal blessings: God keepeth them in this want, & yet he heareth their prayers, in giving them patience to abide that want. Some being in wealth and abundance pray for the continuing of it, if it be the will of God. The Lord flings them into a perpetuall misery, & yet he heareth their prayers, by giving them blessednes in the life to come. You pray for the increase of faith and repentance, and such like graces: you feele no increase after long prayer: yet the mercifull God hath no doubt heard your prayer, in that by delaying to performe your request, he hath stirred up in you the spirit of prayer, he hath humbled you, and made you feele your owne wants, the better to depend on his mercie, for the beginning and increasing of every spiritual grace.

Christian. The fourth thing that troubles mee, is that I cannot feele faith purifie my heart, and to worke by love in bringing forth lively fruites.

Minister. If this be so continually, that faith brings forth no fruit, it is very dangerous, and argueth a plaine want of faith; yet for a certaintime it may be so: faith hath not only a spring time and a summer season, but also a winter when it beareth no fruit. And there is man-ny a true Christian like the bruised reede, that is ouerturned with every blast of winde: and like the flaxe that hath fire in it, which by reason of weaknesse, gives neither heate nor light but only a smoke.

Christian. Thus much shall suffice for my first temptation, wherein I take my selfe satisfied: now if you please, I will be glad to rehearse the second.

Minister. I am content, let vs heare it.

Christian. I am afraid lest I have not truly repented, and therefore that all my profession is onely in hypocrisy.

Minister. What moueth you to thinke so?

Christian. Two causes especially, the first, is they which repent leave off to sinne: but I am a miserable sinner, I doe continually displease God by my euill thoughts, words and deedes.

Min. You neede not feare, For where sinne aboundeth (that is, the knowledge and feeling of sinne) there grace aboundeth much more.

Christian. I finde not this in my selfe.

Minister. But yet you feele thus much in your selfe: those corruptions which you feele, & these sins that you commit, you hate them, you are displeased with your selfe for them, and you endeavour your selfe to leaue them.

Christian. Yea, that I doe with all my heart.

Minister. Then how miserable fouler you feele your selfe by reason of the masse of your sinne, yet you are not subiect to condemnation, but shall most certainly escape the same. Take this for a most certaine truth, that the man that hates and dislikes his sinnes, both before and after he hath done them, shall neuer bee damned for them.

Christian. I am euen heart-sicke of my manifold finnes and infirmities, and these good words which you speake are as flagons of wine, to refresh my weary laden, and weltring soule. I have begun to flee sinne and to detest it long agoe. I have bene oft displeased with mine infirmities and corruptions: when I offend God my heart is grieved, I desire to leaue sin, I flee the occasions of sinne: I would faine fashion my life to Gods word: and I pray vnto God that he would giue me grace to doe so: yet (which is my griefe) by the strength of the flesh, by the sleights and power of Satan I am often ouertaken, and fall maruellously, both by speech and deede.

Minister. Haue courage my good brother, for whereas you haue an affection to doe the things that are acceptable vnto God, I argueth plainly that you are a member of Christ: according to that of Paul: They which are of the spirit, shew the things of the spirit. Well then, if Satan euer object any of your finnes to you, make answer thus, that you haue forsaken the first husband the flesh, and haue espoused your selfe to Christ Iesus, who as your head and husband hath taken vpon him to answer your debts, and therefore if he vrges you for them, referre him ouer vnto Christ. For there is no suit in the law against the wife, the husband liuing: yea, I adde further, if you be ouercarried with Satrans temptations, and so fall into any sinne, you shall not answer for it but Satan, it shall surely be reckoned on his score at the day of iudgement, for he was the author of it. If you fall by the frailtie of your flesh, it shall perill therefore: but you shall still haue Christ your aduocate.

Christian. Indeepe as you say, I haue in me an affection to please God, but when I come to performe my obedience, there I faile.

Minister. Therefore marke this further. As long as the children of God are in this life, (a) God regardeth more the affection to obey, then the obedience it selfe: And they shall be vnto me, saith the Lord of hostes in that day that I shall doe this for a flocke, and I will spare them, as a man spares his owne come that serues him. The father when he shall list his child to doe any busines, though he do it neuer so vntowardly yet, if he shew his good will to doe the best he can, his father will be pleased, and so it is with the Lord toward his children, you looke to haue some perfection in your selfe, but in this life you shall receive no (b) more but the first fruits of the Spirit, which are but as a handfull of come, in respect of the whole come-field: and as for the accomplishment of your redemption, you must waite for it till after this life: you would be kissed with the kisses of Christs mouth, but here in this world you must be content, if you may with Mary Magdalen kisse his feete.

For the perfection of a Christian mans life stands in the feeling and confession of his imperfections. And as Ambrose saith, obedience due to God, stands more (c) in the affection then in the worke.

Christian. But why will God haue those whom hee hath sanctified labour still vnder their infirmities?

Minister. The causes are diuers. First, hereby he teacheth his seruants to see in what great need they stand of the righteousness of Christ, that they may more carefully seeke after it. Secondly, he subdueth the pride of mens hearts, and humbleth them by counterailling the graces which they haue received, with the like measure of infirmities. Thirdly, by this meanes the godly are exercised in a continuall fight against sinne, and are daily occupied in purifying themselves.

Christian. But to go on forward in this matter, there is another cause that makes me feare, lest I haue no true repentance.

Minister. What is that?

Christian. I oftentimes find my selfe like a very timberlog, void of all grace and goodnes, forward & rebellious vnto any good worke, so that I feare lest Christ haue quite forsaken me.

Minister. As it is in the fraile fles, the water ebbs & flows, so it is in the godly: in them as long as they live in this world according to their owne feeling, there is an access and recess of the spirit. Otherwhiles they be troubled with deadnes & dulnes of heart, as David was, who prayed to the Lord, to quicken him according to his louing kindnes that he may keepe the remembrance of his mouth. And in another place hee saith, that God promises quickened him. Which could not be, vntlesse he had bin troubled with great dulnes of heart. Again, sometimes the spirit of God quite withdraweth it selfe to their feeling: as it was in David: In the day of trouble (saith he) I sought the Lord, and my soule refused comfort. I did thinke vpon God and was troubled, I prayed, and my spirit was full of anguish. Againe, Will the Lord absent himselfe for ever? and will hee shew no more fauour? hath God forgotten to be mercifull? &c. The Church in the Canticles complaineth of this: In my bed I sought him by night whom my soule loved: I sought him, but I found him not. And againe, My welbeloued put in his hand by the hole of the doore, and my heart was as affectioned towards him: I rose up to open to my welbeloued, my hands did drop down mirrhe, my fingers: pure mirrhe vpon the handles of the bar. I opened to my welbeloued, but my welbeloued was gone and past, mine heart was gone who be did speake, I sought him, but I could not find him, I called but hee answered me not. Contrariwise, God at some other time floods abroad his love most abundantly in the hearts of the faithful: and Christ lieth betweene the breasts of his Church, as a posse of mirrhe giuing a strong smell.

Christian. But how can he be a Christian that feele no grace nor goodnesse in himselfe?

Minister. The child which as yet can vse no reason is for all that a reasonable creature: & the man in a frowne feele no power of life, and yet he is not dead. The Christian man hath many quames come ouer his heart, and he falls into many a frowne that none almight would looke for any more of the life of Christ in him, yet for all that he may be a true Christian. This was the state of Peter when he denied our Saviour Christ with cursing and banning, his faith only faimed for a time, it faimed not.

Christian. I haue now opened vnto you the chiefe things that troubled me and your comfortable answers haue much refreshed my troubled minde. The God of all mercy and consolation require you accordingly.

Minister. I haue spoken that which God out of his holy word hath opened vnto me; if you finde any helpe thereby, giue God the praise therefore, and carrie this with you for euer, that by many afflictions both in the bodie and the minde, you must enter into the kingdom of heauen. Raw flesh is noysome to the stomacke, and is no good nourishment before it be foddren: and vnmortified men and women be no creatures fit for God: and therefore they are to be soaked and boyled in afflictions, that the tofsones and rankenes of their corruption may be delatied, and that they may haue in them some relish acceptable vnto God. And to conclude, for the avoiding of all temptations, vseth this sweete prayer following which that godly Saint M. Bradford made.

O Lord God and deare Father, what shall I say that feele all things to bee (in manner)

with me as in the wicked? Blind is my minde, crooked is my will, and peruerse concupiscence is in me, as a spring of a stinking puddle. Oh how faint is faith in me? how little is my loue to thee or thy people? how great is my selfe-loue? how hard is my heart? by reason whereof I am moued to doubt of thy goodness towards mee, whether thou art my mercifull father, and whether I be thy child or no: indeed worthily might I doubt, if that the hauiug of these were the cause, and not the fruit rather of thy children. The cause why thou art my father, is thy mercifull goodnes, grace, and truth in Christ Iesus, which cannot but remaine for euer. In respect whereof thou hast borne me this good will to bring me into thy Church by baptisme, and to accept mee into the number of thy children, that I might bee holy, faithfull, obedient, and innocent: and to call me diuers times by the ministry of thy word into thy kingdome: besides the innumerable other benefites alwaies hitherto powred vpon me. All which thou hast done of this thy good will, which thou of thine owne mercy bearest to me in Christ before the world was made. The which thing as thou requirest straightly that I should beleue without doubting, so wouldest thou that I in all my needs should come vnto thee as to a father: and make my mone without mistrust of being heard in thy good time, as most shall make to my comfort. Loe therefore to thee deare father I come through thy Sonne our Lord, our Mediatour, and Advocate Iesus Christ, who sitteth on thy right hand making intercession for me; I pray thee of thy great goodnesse and mercie in Christ to be mercifull to mee a sinner, that I may indeed feele thy sweet mercy as thy child: the time (oh deare Father) I appoint not, but I pray thee that I may with hope still expect and looke for thy helpe. I hope that as for a litle while thou hast left me, so thou wilt come and visite mee, and that in thy great mercie,

A whereof I haue great neede, by reason of my great misery. Thou art wont for a litle season in thine anger to hide thy face from them whom thou louest: but surely (O Redeemer) in eternall mercies thou wilt shew thy compassions. For when thou leapest vs, O Lord, thou doest not leaue vs very long, neither doest thou leaue vs to our losse, but to our increase and aduantage: euen that thy holy spirit with bigger portion of thy power and vertue may lighten and cheere vs: that the want of feeling of our sorrow may be recompensed plentifully with the lively sense of hauiug thee to our eternall ioy: and therefore thou swearest that in thine euertlasting mercy thou wilt haue compassion on vs. Of which thing to the end we might be most assured, thine oath is to be marked, for thou sayst: As I haue sworne, that I will neuer bring any more the waters to drowne the world: so haue I sworne, that I will neuer more be angry with thee, nor reprove thee. The mountaines shall remooue, and the hills shall fall downe, but thy louing kindnesse shall not mooue, and the bond of thy peace shall not faile thee: thus saiest thou the Lord our mercifull redeemer. Deare father therefore, I pray thee remember euen for thine owne truth and mercies sake the promise and euertlasting couenant, which in thy good time I pray thee to write in my heart, that I may know thee to be the onely true God, and Iesus Christ whom thou hast sent: that I may loue thee with all my heart for euer: that I may loue thy people for thy sake: that I may bee holy in thy sight through Christ: that I may alwaies not onely strue against sinne, but also overcome the same daily more and more, as thy children doe: about all things desiring the sanctification of thy name, the comming of thy kingdome, the doing of thy will on earth as it is in heauen, &c. through Iesus Christ our Redeemer, Mediatour, and Advocate, Amen.

A DECLARATION

A DECLARATION OF CERTAINE

SPIRITVALL DESERTIONS, SERVING TO TERRIFIE all drowle Protestants, and to comfort them which mourne for their sinnes.

Among all the workes of Gods eternall counsell, there is none more wonderfull then is Desertion: which is nothing else but an action of God forsaking his creature.

Furthermore, God forsakes his creature, not by withdrawing his essence or being from it: for that cannot be, considering God is infinite: and therefore must needs at all times be euery where: but by taking away the grace and operation of his Spirit from his creature.

Neither must any thinke it to be crueltie in God to forsake his creature which hee hath made: for he is soveraigne Lord ouer all his workes: and for that cause he is not bound to any; and he may doe with his owne whatfoeuer he will. And this his will is not to be blamed: for men are not to imagine, that a thing must first be iust, & then afterward that God doth will it: but contrariwise, first God wils a thing, and thereupon it becomes iust.

Againe, sinne is so wretched a thing in the eyes of God, that he vterly forsakes his creature for a punishment thereof. Now euery thing, so farre forth as it is a chastisement or punishment, is good, considering that the inflicting thereof is the execution of iustice.

And God neuer forsakes the creature against the will thereof: but in the very time of Desertion, it voluntarily forsaketh and refuseth grace, and chooseth to bee forsaken: wherefore if any hurt or misery insue thereof, let the creature blame it selfe, and praise the Lord.

Desertions thus described are of two sorts, eternall and temporarie.

Eternall desertions are chose, whereby God vpon iust causes knowne to himselfe forsakes his creature wholly and for euer. Thus the diuell with his angels, and that part of mankind which is prepared to destruction, is forsaken. For first, God before al worlds, did decree according to the purpose of his owne will, to refuse them without the grant of any mercie. Secondly, after they are created and liue in the world, he giueth them no Sauour. For Christ is onely the Redeemer of the Elect, and of no more: which may thus appeare. For whom Christ makes no intercession, for them he hath wrought no Redemption: But for them onely which are elected and shall beleue in him, he makes intercession. I pray (with he) not for the world, but for them which thou hast giuen mee.

And againe, I pray not for these alone, but for them also which shall beleue in me through their word. Wherefore Christ is a redeemer to none but to the elect. Thirdly, he referueth them to eternall damnation for their sinnes; which is a totall separation from God, and the accomplishment of all other desertions.

For the effecting of this, God exerciseth wicked men and reprobates in this life with diuers particular Desertions, and that after this manner: Hee bestoweth all sorts of benefites on them as his owne seruants: but yet so, as that hee withdraweth that part of his benefite, which hath the promise of life eternall annexed to it in the word. And in this matter hee dealeth as a man that sets many trees in his Orchard, but so as hee takes away the heart or pith thereof. And this the Lord doth either in temporal or spiritual benefites.

I. For temporall benefites, as wealth, honour, liberty, outward peace, the Lord dealeth very bountifully with them: He makes his Sonne to shine vpon the iust and vniuise: he fills their bellies with his bread and fowles: And as David saith, I frequented at the fountaine, when I saw the prosperitie of the wicked: for there is no bands in their death, but they are lustie and strong, they are not in trouble as other men, neither are they plagued as other men. But yet hee holds backe that which is the principall thing, and the very glorie of these benefites, that is, the right use of them. For that a man may purely vse Gods creatures, two things are required. First, his person must stand iust and sanctified before God by faith in Christ. For vntill a mans person please God, his worke shall neuer please him. Secondly, he must vse the same creatures purely: which is done partly by inuocation of Gods name, and partly by referring them to their set and appointed ends; which are, Gods glory, a mans owne and his neighbours good. But all this is flat contrarie in the vngodly man. For first, he is host of Christ, so that his person stands vnjust before God. And therefore all his actions (euen those which otherwise are lawfull & good) in him are mere finnes. Secondly, he vseth Gods gifts & blessings with an euil conscience. For by reason of his want of grace to beleue, he cannot resolve himselfe, that God as his father doth bestow his blessings on him as his beloved child in Christ; yet as a thiefe & an vspurer against his conscience he vseth them. Adde further, the creatures are vfed of him without inuocation: for such an one cannot pray; and therefore he doth but as the swine in the forest, which feedeth on the mast, but neuer looketh vp to the tree whence it falleth. Thirdly, he vseth Gods gifts to euill ends: because either he makes an idoll of them by setting his heart on them, or else he employeth them to riyot, pride, and the oppression of godly men. A matter of musick hath his house furnished with musickall instruments of all sorts; and he reacheth his owne schollers artificially to vse them, both in right tuning of them, as also in playing on them: there comes in strangers, who admiring the said instruments, haue leaue giuen them of the master to handle them as the schollers do: but when they come to practise, they neither tune them aright, neither are they able to strike one stroke as they ought, so as they may please the master and haue his commendation. This world is as a large and sumptuous pallace, into which are receiued, not only the sons and daughters of God, but also wicked & vngodly men: it is furnished with goodly creatures in vse more excellent then all musickall instruments: the vse of them is common to all; but the godly man taught by Gods spirit, & directed by faith, so vseth the, as that the vse thereof is acceptable to God: as for the impure and vnbefleeing indeede they enioy the creatures and gifts of God, but the pure vse is wanting: for they cannot but abuse them: and therefore the wicked and the reprobate, though they should commit no other finnes in the world, yet for the vse of their wealth and honour, for their very eating & drinking (which in themselves are most lawfull) shall be damned.

II. Concerning spirituall blessings, first, God ceaselesly grant so much as an outward calling to many men. For how many nations since the beginning of the world, much more particular men, haue there bin, are, & shall be, which neuer heard the preaching of the Gospel: nay not so much as the name of Christ? God is known in Iury (saith David) & he hath not done so to any nation. And often in Moses & the Prophets it is mentioned, that the covenant was in former times made peculiar to the Iewes. And Paul saith in Act. 14. 16. that God suffered the Gentiles in former times to walke in their own waies; and of the Ephesians, before their calling he saith, Eph. 2. 12. that they were strangers from the promises, and without God in the world.

III. He grants the outward meanes of saluation, namely, the Word, Prayer, Sacraments, Discipline abundantly: but yet he cueth withdraweth the operation of his spirit, whereby a conuersion might be wrought. For they neuer haue that piercing of the care which David mentioneth, nor the opening of the heare with Lydia, nor that teaching of God, while they are diuine of the father to Christ. And in so doing indee, onely he offereth grace, but doth not exhibite and conferre it: not that he mocketh any, but that in so doing he may eury way conuince & breake them of excuse. As the Lord speaketh to Esa. 40. 5. & say to this people, I shall heare indeed, but ye shall not understand: ye shall plainly see but not perceiue: make the heart of this people fat, make their eares heavy, & shut their eyes: lest they see with their eyes, and heare with their eares, and understand with their heares, and conuert, and bee healed them. Iffom Gospel be hid (saith Paul) it is hid in them that perishe. Men that haue long liued vnder the preaching of the Gospell, and yet still remaine ignorant and impenitent, let them beware & take heede of this desertion: and they are with trembling to lay to their hearts, that which the holy Ghost speaketh of Isa. 66. 1. & Phinehas, They obeyed not the voice of their father, because the Lord would destroy them.

IV. To goe further, he bestoweth on them many worthy properties of faith. As first, a knowledge of the diuine truth in the Law and the Gospell. Secondly, an assent to the said truth. Thirdly, a ioyful reioicing and boasting in speaking and hearing of it. Fourthly, an outward profession of it for a time. But he doth not bestow that qualitie and vertue of faith, which is as it were, the very soule of it: without which faith is dead and faueth none, namely, the inward assurance & certificate of his loue and fauour in Christ, with a sense and feeling of the same in the hart. Neither are the former duties of faith perpetual and found in them, for the reprobate is not induced to them by any assurance of Gods mercy, but by other sinister occasions, as are: First, desire of knowledge in diuine mysteries. Secondly, a delight in it. Thirdly, praise & commendation among men. Fourthly, the maintaining of wealth and honour. Fifthly, the getting of wealth or honor. Sixthly, a desire to be at vinity & concord with the nation or people where the Gospell is preached. Therefore when these ends and occasions of their beleeuing cease, then also their faith and profession cease. In this kinde of desertion, it is to be feared, that most men are. Al in our Church will profess faith in Christ: yet seeing the sound conuersion to God, and the sincerity of life & doctrin is very rare, we may presume, that that maine propertie of faith, which is the receiuing and apprehension of Christ, is wanting in most: therefore let eury man looke to himselfe, and betime labour to turne his temporarie faith (if he find it in himselfe) into a true lauing faith. Wherefore he must strue first to feele his extreme neede of Christ and his merits. Secondly, to hunger, & thirst after him, as after meate and drinke. Thirdly, to be nothing in himselfe, that he may be all in all out of himselfe in Christ. Fourthly, to be able to say that hee liueth not, but Christ liueth in him by faith. Fifthly, to loath his owne sins with a most vehement hatred, and to prize and value Christ and the least drop of his blood about a thousand worlds.

V. Again, in repentance he bestowes, first, a sight of sin: secondly, a kinde of sorrow for it: thirdly, a confession of it: fourthly, a resolution for a time to sin no more. But that part of repentance, which hath the promise of mercy annexed, that is, a conuersion of the whole man to God, he neuer giueth it.

VI. Lastly, God giueth to the reprobate his spirit, but to farre forth as it shall not any whit regenerate or renew his nature: but onely in the outward action repress the act of sin: so as thereby without any inward change he shall bee as ciuilly iust and vpriight in outward conuersion, as in the world.

Thus much of those desertions which befall the diuel and his angels and all Reprobates: now follow those wherewith God exerciseth euen his owne elect children: for the blessings that God bestoweth on them are of two sorts, either positive or priuative: positive are real graces wrought in the heart, by the spirit of God: priuative are such meanes whereby God preferres men from falling into sinne: as crosses, desertions. And these in number exceede the first, as long as men liue in this world.

Before it can be declared what these desertions are, this conclusion is to be laid downe; Hee which once in the estate of grace shall bee in the same for euer. This appeareth in Rom. 8. 30. where Paul sets down the golden chaine of the causes of saluation that can neuer be brokens: so that he which is predestinate shall bee called, iustificed, glorified. And a little after he saith, Who shall lay any thing to the charge of Gods Elect? and Who shall euer vs from the loue of Christ? and I am perswaded that no creature shall be able to snar vs from the loue of Christ: which he would not haue said, if men beeing in the estate of grace, might fall quite from grace. And how should they which are iustificed haue peace with God, if they were not sure to perseuererighteous before God to the end? And how shall it be said, that hope maketh not ashamed, because the loue of God (wherewith God loues his Elect) is shed abroad in their hearts, by the holy Ghost which is giuen them, if any man vtterly fall from that loue? How should the testimonie of the spirit, which testifieth to the Elect, that they are the children of God, be true and certaine, if it may be quite extinguished? Lastly, how shall that of Iohn be true, 1. Ioh. 2. 19. They went from vs, because they were not of vs, if they had beene of vs, they should haue remained with vs, if a man may wholly fall from Christ which hath once bin made a true member of him? Our Saviour Christ saith, Ioh. 10. 27 & 6. 37. My sheepe heare my voyce: and I know them, and they follow me: and I giue life eternal to them, and no man shall take them out of my hand, or out of my fathers hand: and whatsoever my father giueth mee shall come vnto me: & whosoever cometh to me, I will not cast out. And if any of the elect being effectually called might wholly fall from grace, then there must bee a second infusion or ingrafting into the mytticall body of Christ, and therefore a second Baptisme: may for eury fall a new infusion, & a new Baptisme; which mult in no wise be granted: wherefore: they which are predestinate to be in the state of grace, are also predestinate to perseuerer in the same to the end.

Hereupon it followeth that the desertions of Gods elect, are first of a partiall, that is, such as wherein God doth not wholly forsake them but in some part. Secondly temporary, that is, for some space of time, and neuer beyond the compasse of this present life. For a moment saith the Lord in Esa. 54. 10. in mine anger I hid my face from thee for a little season, but with everlasting mercy haue I had compassion on thee, saith the Lord thy Redeemer. And to this purpose David well acquainted with this matter, prayeth Psal. 119. 8. for sake me not ouer long.

This sort of desertions, though it be for a time, yet no part of a Christian mans life is free from them: and very often taking deepe place in the hart of man, they are of long continuance. David continued in this dangerous fall about the space of an whole yeare before hee was recovered. Luther confesseth of himselfe, that after his conuersion, he lay three daies in desperation. And common experience in such like cases can make record of long terme.

The manner God vseth in forsaking his owne seruants, is of two sorts; the first, is by taking away one grace, and putting another in the roome: the second, by hiding his grace as it were in a corner of the heart.

God takes away his grace, and puts another in the roome diuers waies.

I. First, he bereaueth his owne children of outward prosperitie, yea he will load the with crosses; and yet he will make a good supply by giuing patience. David is driuen out of his kingdome by his owne son: a heauie crosse: yet the Lord mislieth an humble and patient spirit, so as hee was content to speak, 2. Sam. 15. 26. If the Lord thus say, I haue no delight in thee, behold here I am, let him doe to me as seemeth good in his eyes. So likewise Christian Martyrs are bereaued of all outward safetie, and laid open to the violence and persecution of tyrants; yet inwardly they are stablished by the power of the might of God, when they are most weake, they are most strong & while they are most foiled, then they obtaine victory.

II. Secondly, the Lord cuts off the daies of this life, and for recompence to his owne elect giues life eternal. Eph. 5. 7. 1. The righteous is taken away from the euill to come. This is manifest in Iosias, of whom it is said, 2. Kin. 22. 20. Behold: I will gather thee to thy fathers, and thou shalt bee put in thy graue in peace, and thine eyes shall not see all the euill which I will bring upon this place.

III. Thirdly, God takes away the feeling of his loue, and the ioy of the holy Ghost for a season, & then in the roome thereof he kindles an earnest desire and thirsting with groanes and crying vnto heauen, to bee in the former fauour of God againe. This was Davids case, when he complained and said, My voice came to God when I cried, my voice came to God and hee heard me: in the day of my trouble I sought the Lord, my sore ranne and ceased not in the night: my soule refused comfort. I did thinke vpon God and was troubled: I prayed and my spirit was full of anguish. Selah. The like was the estate of the Church making her mone vnto God in Esa. 63. 17. O Lord, why hast thou made vs to erre from thy waies? and hardened our hearts from thyfear? Returne for thy seruants sake, and for the tribes of thine inheritance.

IV. Fourthly, God grants his seruants the holy means of saluation, namely preaching, prair, Sacraments, and holds backe the efficacy of his spirit for a time. In this case they are like the corne-field that is plowed & sowed with good corne: but yet for a time, it neuer giues rooting beneath, nor so much as a shew of any blade appears aboue. Thus the spouse of Christ, when she comes into his wine celler, she falls into a swoone; so she must be staied with fagions, and comforted with apples, because she is sick of loue, Cant. 2. 4. 5.

V. Fifthly, God giueth his children a strong affliction, to obey his will, but he lets them faile in the act of obedience it selfe, like as the prisoner who hath escaped the hand of his layler, hath an affection to runne a thousand miles euery houre, but hauing happily his boltes on his legges, he cannot for his life but goe very softly, gauling and chafing his flesh; and with much griefe falling againe into the hands of his keeper. This is it that Paul complaineth of when he saith, a I delight in the law of God, concerning the inner man: but I see another law in my members, rebelling against the law of my mind, and leading me captiue to the law of sinne, which is in my members. O wretched man that I am, who shall deliuer me from this body of death?

The second manner of Gods forsaking his Elect, is when he hides his graces for a time: not by taking them quite away, but by couering them, and by remouing all sense and feeling of them. And in this case they are like the trees in the winter season, they are beaten with winde and weather, bearing neither leafe nor fruit, but looke as though they were rotten and dead, because the sap doth not spread it selfe, but lies hid in the roote. Dauid often was in this case as namely when he saith, Psalm 77. 7. 8. 9. Will the Lord absent himselfe for euermore and will he shew no more fauour? Is his mercie cleane gone for euermore? dath his promise faile for euermore? Hath God forgotten to be mercifull? Hath he shut up all his tender mercies in displeasure? Selah.

This comes to passe, because the Lord very often and by one contrarie works another. Clay and spittle tempered together in reason should put out a mans eyes: but Christ vsed it as a means to giue sight to the blinde. Water in reason should put out fire: but Elia when he would shew that Iehoua was the true God, pourses water on his sacrifice, and fills a trench therewith to make the sacrifice burne. The like, appeareth in the worke of grace to saluation. A man that hath liued in security, by Gods goodnesse hath his eyes opened to see his finnes and his heart touched to feeble the huge and loathsome burthen of them, and therefore to bewaile his wretched estate, with bitternesse of heart. Hereupon hee presently thinks that God will make him a firebrand of hell: whereas indeed the Lord is now about to worke, and frame in his heart sanctification and found repentance neuer to be repented of. The man which hath had some good perfwasions of Gods fauour in Christ, comes afterward vpon many occasions to be troubled and to be ouerwhelmed with distrustfull and grievous doubtings of his saluation, so as hee iudgeth himselfe to haue bene but an hypocrite in former times, and for the time present a cast-way. But indeed hereby the Lord exerciseth, fashioneth, and increaseth his weak faith. In one word, marke this point, that the graces of God peculiar to the Elect, are begun, increased, and made manifest in or by the contraries.

A man in this defection can discern no difference betwene himselfe & a cast-away: and the rather if this with defection be ioyned a feeling of Gods anger: for then ariseth the bitterest temptation that euer befel the poore soule of a Christian man, and that is a vrasling and strugling in spirit and conscience, not with the motions of a rebelling flesh, nor the accusation of the diuel, which are oftentimes very irkefome and terrible, but against the wrath of a reuenging God. This hidden and spiritual temptation more tormenteth the spirit of man, than all the rackes and gibbers in the world can doe. And it hath his fits after the manner of an ague, in which euen Gods owne seruants ouercarried with sorrow may blasphem God, and crie out that they are damned. Iob was in this estate: as he testifieth, Iob. 6. 2, 3, 4. Oh that my griefe were waied (saith hee) and my miseries were layd together in the ballance: for it would be heavier then the sand of the sea: therefore my words are swallowed up for the arrows of the Almighty are in me: the venom thereof doth drinke up my spirit, and the terrors of God fight against me. And further he complaineth Iob. 13. 14. that the Lord is his enemy, that hee writes bitter things against him; & Iob. 16. 12. that hee sets him as a But to shoot at. This was Dauids temptation when he said, Psalm. 6. 1, 2, 3, 4. O Lord rebuke me not in thy anger, neither chastise me in thy wrath, haue mercy on me, O Lord for I am weak; O Lord heale me, for my bones are vexed, my soule is also troubled: but Lord how long wilt thou delay? Returne O Lord, deliuer my soule, saue mee for thy mercies sake.

Hence it followes, that when any that hath bene a professour of the Gospel shall despaire at this end; that men are to leaue secret iudgements to God, and charitably to iudge the best of them. For example, one Master (b) Chambers at Leicester of late in his sickness grievously despayred, & cried out that he was damned, and attended yet it is not for any to note him with the blacke marke of a reprobate. One thing which he spake in his extremitie (O that I had but one drop of faith) must moue all men to conceiue well of him. For by this it seemes that hee had an heart which desired to repent and beleue; and therefore a repentant and beleueing heart indeed. For God at all times, but especially in temptation, of his great mercie accepts the will for the deede. Neither is it to be regarded that he said he was damned; for men in such cases spake not as they are, but as they feele themselves to be.

Yea, to goe further, when a professour of the Gospel shall make a way himselfe, though it be a fearefull case, yet still the same opinion must be carried. First, Gods iudgements are very secret. Secondly, they may repene in the very agonie for any thing we know. Thirdly, none is able to comprehend the bottomlesse depth of the graces and mercies which are in Christ.

Thus much of the manner which God vseth in forsaking of his elect; Now follow the kindes of defection, which are two: defection in punishment, defection in sinne.

Defection in punishment, is when God deferreth either to mitigate, or remouee the crosse and chastiment which he hath laid vpon his childre. This befel Christ on the crosse, (a) My God, (saith hee) why hast thou forsaken me? This was the complaint of Geason, Did not the Lord bring vs out of Egypt? But now the Lord hath forsaken vs, & deliuered vs into the hands of the Midianites, Iudg. 6. 13. (b) Master Robert Glouer Martyr at Concentre, after hee was condemned by the Byshop, and was now, at the point to be deliuered out of the world, it so happened, that two or three daies before his death, his heart beinge lumpish and desolate of all spirituall consolation, felt in himselfe no apnesse nor willingnesse, but rather heauinesse and dullnesse of spirit, full of much discomfort to beare the bitter crosse of martyrdom ready now to be laid vpon him: whereupon hee fearing in himselfe, lest the Lord had withdrawn his wonted fauour from him, made his mone to one Ausfine his friend, signifying vnto him how earnestly hee had prayed day & night vnto the Lord, and yet could receiue no motion nor sense of any comfort from him, vnto whom the said Ausfine answered againe, willing him patiently to waite the Lords pleasure, & howeouer his present feeling was, yet seeing his cause was iust and true, he exhorted him constantly to stick to the same, to play the man, nothing doubting but the Lord in his good time would visite him, & satisfie his desire with plentie of consolation, &c. The next day when the time came of the martyrdom, as he was going to the place, & was now come to the sight of the stake, although at the night before praying for strength and courage, hee could feele none, suddenly hee was to be replenished with the holy Ghost, that hee cried out clapping his hands to Ausfine, and saying with these words; Ausfine, he is come, he is come, &c. and that with such ioy and alacrity, as one seeming rather to bee risen from some deadly dangert to libertie of life, then as one passing out of the world by any paines of death.

Defection in sinne, is when God withdrawing the assistance of his spirit, a man is left to fall in to some actual and grievous sinne. And for all this no man is to thinke that God is the author of sinne, but only man that faileth, and Satan. A resemblance of this truth we may see in a flaffe which, if a man shall take and let vpright vpon the ground, so long as hee holds it with his hand, it stands vpright; but so soone as he withdraws his hand, though he neuer push it down, it falls of it selfe. In this defection was the good king Hezechias, of whom the holy Ghost speaketh thus; Hezechias prospered in all his waies, therefore dealing with the Ambassadors of the Princes of Babel which sent to him to inquire of the wonder which was done in the land, God left him, (namely) to the pride of his heart to exalt himselfe in tempting him, that hee might trie out all that was in his heart. To this place appertaine, Neer drunkennes, Dauids adultery, Peters deniall of Christ. The reason of such defections may be this: If a patient shall be grievously sicke, the physician will vse all manner of means that can be deuised to recouer him, and if hee once come to a desperate case, the Physician rather then hee will not restore him, will employ all his skill he will take payson, and so temper it, and against the nature thereof hee will make a foueraigne remedie to recouer health. The elect children of God are diseased with an inward, hidden, and spiritual pride; whereby they affect themselves, and desire to be something in themselves forth of Christ; and this sinne is very dangerous; first, because when other sins die in a man, this secret pride gets strength: for Gods grace, this matter of pride, in such wise that a man will bee proud, because hee is not proud: for example; if any shall be tempted of the diuill to some proud behauiour, and by Gods grace get the victorie; then the heart thus thinketh, Oh thou hast done well, thou hast foiled the enemy, neither pride, nor any other sinne can preuaile against thee; such and such could neuer haue done so; and a very good man shall hardly be free from such kind of motions in this life. Secondly, there is no greater enemy to fayth then pride: for it poisoneth the heart & maketh it vn capable of that grace, so long as it beareth any sway: for hee that will beleue in Christ must be annihilated, that is, he must be bruised & battered to a flat nothing in regard of any liking or affection to himselfe, that hee may in spirit mount vnto heauē, where Christ sits at the right hand of the Father, & as it were with both the hands of faith graspe him with all his blessed merits, that he may be wise, meek, righteous, sanctified, redemption, life, good works, & whatsoever good thing he is, neither in, nor by, nor for himselfe; but euery way forth of himself in Christ. Now, this blessed condition of a beleueing heart, by naturall self-love & self-liking is greatly hindered. God therefore in great mercy to remedy this dangerous corruption, lets his elect seruants fall into trouble of minde and conscience, and if they haply be of greater hardnesse of heart, into some actual sinne: and so declaring his wonderfull mercie in sauing them, hee is faine against his mercy to bring them to his mercy, and by sinne to saue them from sinne. By this meanes the Lord, who can bring light out of darknesse, makes a remedie of sinne to flay pride, that insuincible monster of many heads, which would flay the soule.

Though this be so, yet none must hereupon venter to commit any sin against Gods com-mandements, lest in so doing they call away their soules. For the godly man though he fall into sin, yet it is against his purpose, & it makes his heart to bleed : and the course of his life shall be alwaies vpright & pleasing vnto God:
because he is led by the spirit of God.

The ends for which God vseth Desertions are three: the first, is the chastisement of sinnes past in the former part of mans life, that hee may search them out, consider them, and bee heartily sorrowfull for them: for this end was Iobs trial, Iob. 13. 26. thou writest (saith he) bitter things against me, and makest me to possesse the sinnes of my youth.

The second end is, that God may make trial of the present estate of his servants: not that he is ignorant what is in man, but because he would have all men know themselves. To this effect faith Moses, Deut. 8.2-8 & 13.3. And thou shalt remember all the way which the Lord thy God led thee in the wilderness: to humble thee, and to prove thee, to know what was in thine heart, whether thou wouldest keep his commandments or no. This also was the end why the Lord left Ezechias to procure & trie what was in his heart.

This triall by defection serueth for two purposes; for otherwhiles the Lord vseth it for the manifestation of some hidden sinne, that the godly may bee deeperly humbled, and craue more earnestly pardon of that and other sins. For as the begger is alwaies mending and piecing his garment where he findes a breach: so the penitent and beleeuing heart must alwaies be exercised in repairing it selfe where it findes a want.

Again, oftentimes this trial serves to quicken and reuiue the hidden graces of the heart, that men may be thankfull for them, and feele an increase of them in the heart. The good husband-man cuts the branches of the Vine, nor that he hath a purpose to destroy them, but to make them bear more fruit. In the Canticles when Christ left his spouse, then she riseth out of her bed, she opens the doore, her hands drop mirrhe on the burr of the doore: then further hee seeks and calls for him, and praifeth him more then euer before. Dauid testifieth the like of himselfe: In my prosperity I said I shall neuer be moued: &c. but thou dost hide thy face, and I was troubled. Therefore I to thee, O Lord, and prayed to my Lord. Lastly, men that liue in the Church being for a time left of God, become so impenitent as that they must be giuen vp to Satan: yet for no other cause, but that the flesh may bee killed, and the spi-

A rit made aliue in the day of the Lord.

The third end is, the preventing of sinne to come. This appeareth in Paul; Less (saith he) should be exalted out of measure through the abundance of revelations, there was giue unto me a prick in the flesh, the messenger of Satan to buffet me, &c.

In the former times when the Lord among many others had set out Cranner for the maintenance of his blessed truth against his & Gods enemies, hee left him for a while to fall from his religion, and to make a dangerous recantation: but so as thereby he prevented many sins, and prepared him to a glorious martyrdom. As some of his owne words may testify which he spake a litle before his end: And

B now (faith) he I come to the great thing that so much trusteth in his confidence more then any thing that ever I did or said in all my life, and that is the setting abroad of a writing contrary to the truth; which now here I renounce as things written with my hand contrary to the truth, which I thought in my heart, & that for fear of death, and to save my life, &c. and for as much as my hand offended, writing contrary to my heart, my hand shall be first punished therefore; for may I come to the fire, if I shall be burned. Answerably, when he was at the fire, first he burnt his right hand which subscribed; his body suffered the flame with such contumacie and steadfastnes, as his heart almost moved: his eyes lift vp to heaven often he repeated his vnworthy right hand. Thus, death which he most feared, he most desired, that he might take revenge of himselfe for his sinnes.

To the godly Reader,

IN Gods Church commonly they who are touched by the Spirit, and begin to come on in Religion, are much troubled with feare, that they are not Gods children; and none so much as they. Therefore they often thinke on this point: and are not quiet till they finde some resolution.

The Spirit of God (as best knowing the estate of Godschilren) hath penned two parcels of holy Scripture, for the full resolving of this case; namely, the 15. Psalme, and the first Epistle of S. Iohn.

And for the helping of the simple and vnlearned, who desire to bee informed concerning their estate, I haue propounded these two parts of Scripture in the forme of a Dialogue: and haue ioyned thereunto a little discourse concerning the same matter, penned in Latine by H. Zanchius, a learned Diuine, and now Englished.

Vse this labour of mine for thy benefit and comfort: and the Lord increase the number of them which may reioyce that their names are written in heauen.

CHAP. I.

CHVRCH.

Any among vs deny the God-head, and many the manhood of Christ.

Ioh. That which was from the beginning [and therefore true God] which wee haue heard [namely] speaking] which we haue seene with these our eyes, which we haue looked vpon, and these hands of ours haue handled of that word [not the sounding but the essential word of the Father], of life [living of himselfe, and giuing life vnto all other].

Ch. Before you goe any further, this word of life is inuisible, how then could it be seene?

Ioh. [For] that life was made manifest [to wit, in the flesh,] and we [with many others] haue seene it, and beare witnesse, and publish vnto you that eternall life, which was with the Father eternally before his manifestation [and was made manifest vnto vs].

Ch. Menander, Ebion, and Cerinthus, hauing bene teachers among vs, confidently deny these things which you say: and they beare vs in hand, that they seeke our good.

Ioh. That [which I will reape againe for more certainties sake] which we haue seene & heard, declare we vnto you, that ye may haue fellowship with vs, and that our fellowship also may be with the Father, and with his Sonne Iesus Christ.

And these things write wee vnto you, that your ioy might be full [i. might haue sound consolation in your consciences].

Ch. Well then, say vs downe some ground, whereby we may come to be assured that we haue fellowship one with another, and with Christ.

Ioh. This then is the message which wee haue heard of him, and declare vnto you, that God is light [i. purenesse is selfe and blindness; whereas men and Angels are neither, but by participation] and in him is no darkenesse.

Ch. Some that make profession among vs, continue still in their old course and conversation; and yet they say they haue fellowship with God.

Ioh. If we say that we haue fellowship with him, and walke [teade the course of our liues] in darknesse, [i. ignorance, error, impiety,] we lie, [dissemble,] & do not truly [deale not sincerely].

Ch. Wha is then the true marke of one which hath fellowship with God?

Ioh. If we walke in the light [teade the course of our liues in sincerity of life & doctrine] we haue fellowship one with another.

Ch. We are so diled with siane, that we often doubt, lest we haue no fellowship with God.

Ioh. The blood of Iesus Christ his Sonne cleanseth vs from all sinne.

Ch. Some among vs are come to that passe, that they say they haue no sinne: and that this estate is a signe of fellowship with God.

Ioh. If we say we haue no sinne, we deceiue our selues [imagining that to be true which is otherwise] and the truth is not in vs.

Ch. How then may we know that our sins are washed away by Christ?

Ioh. If we confesse our finnes [namely with an humbled heart desiring pardon] we are faithfull & iust [in keeping his promise,] to forgive vs our sins, and to cleanse vs from all vnrighteousnes.

If we say [as they before named doe] we haue not sinned, we make him a lyer, whose word speaks the contrary, [and his word is not in vs,] [his doctrine hath no place in our hearts].

CHAP. II.

Ch. If this bee true which hath bene said, [that the blood of Christ doth cleanse from all sinne] that if we do offend them they shall be pardoned, our corruption tells vs, that we may sin freely.

Ioh. My little children, these things I write vnto you, that ye sinne not.

Ch. Alas; wee fall off by infirmities: what shall we then doe?

Ioh. If any man sinne, we haue an aduocate [who in his owne name and by his owne merits pleads our cause] to the Father, Iesus Christ the iust [and therefore fit to make intercession].

Ch. But how may everyone of vs in particular know that Christ is his aduocate?

Ioh. He is the propitiation [i. a covering of sin or reconciliation, as the propitiatory of the Arke covered the law,] and not for our finnes onely, but also for the finnes of the whole world [not onely Jewes, but also Gentiles of all sorts].

Ch. Be it that I know how to bee my aduocate, may I not be deceiued? how may I know that this my knowledge is effectuall to saluation?

Ioh. Hereby are we sure that we know him [here that knowledge is meant, whereby a man applies Christ and all his benefites to his owne soule] if we keepe [so keepe is not to forsake, but to haue a care and desire to doe it,] for God of his mercie, in his seruants accepts the will for the deede [his commandements].

Ch. Many among vs professe that they know Christ, but their liues be not according.

Ioh. He that saith, I know him, and keepest not his commandements, is a lyer, and the truth is not in him.

Ch. How may it be proued, that the endenour to keepe Gods commandements is a marke of faith and fellowship with Christ.

Ioh.

Ioh. Hee [in whom the loue of God is perfect, may hereby know, that he is in Christ:] But hee that keepeth his word, in him the loue of God: [not that loue wherewith God loueth him; but that, whereby he loueth God] is perfect indeed [sincere and sound perfection, being opposed to imperfection, but to hypocrisy:] hereby [therefore] we know that we are in him.

He that faith he remaineth in him, ought to walke euensō, as he hath walked: [and therefore he must needs endeavour himselfe in the commandments.]

Ch. Declare vnto vs some of the principall of these commandments?

Ioh. Brethren, I write no new commandment vnto you: But an old commandment which ye haue heard from the beginning: this old commandment is the word which yee haue heard from the beginning.

Again, a new commandment I write vnto you, that which is true [to wit that the commandments is now which hee will not write] in him [who renueth the commandments of old giuen to Moses] and also in you, for the darkenes is past [i.e. the hardening of the minds of men vnder the old testament, whereby they did but in a small measure understand the word] and that true light [a greater measure of illumination, as also the writing of Gods lawes, not in tables of stone, but in the fleshe beate: so as they be transformed into the obedience thereof] now shineth.

Ch. Well, set downe this commandment which is so ancient, and is now renued.

Ioh. He that faith [as many among you do] that he is in that light [that is, that he is born plentifully enlightened and borne anew] and hates his brother, is in darknes. [vnder the estate of damnation, not yet truly regenerate,] vntill this time.

Hee that loueth his brother abideth in that light [is truly enlightened and regenerate:] and there is no offence, [i.e. hee will giue no occasion of euill] in him.

But [on the contrary] he that hateth his brother is in darknes, and walketh in darknesse, [leadeh his life in ignorance, and vngodlines] and knoweth not whither hee goeth because that darknesse hath blinded his eyes.

Ch. What moutheth you to deliuer vnto vs all these notes and signes of our new birth, and communion with Christ?

Ioh. Little children I write vnto you because your finnes are forgiven you: for his names sake [i.e. Christ and his merit: that ye may be certified to your comfort of this.]

[And that to kinde of men among you might doubt of this,] I write vnto you fathers, because ye [delighting to tell and heare of old and ancient matters] haue known him [that is, Christ] that is from the beginning. I write vnto you young men, because ye [delighting to shew your valour and strength] haue overcome the euil one [that is, Satan]. I write vnto you little children, [who delight alwayes to be vnder the fathers wing] because ye haue knowne the father.

[And againe, because we are dull to marke and remember that which is good for vs:] I haue written vnto you fathers, because ye haue knowne him that is from the beginning: I haue written vnto you young men, because ye are strong, and the word of God abideth in you: and ye haue overcome that wicked one.

Ch. If wee be in the state of grace vnder Gods fauour in Christ, how may wee abide in it?

Ioh. Loue not this world [the corrupt estate of mankind out of Christ] neither the things that are in the world [for first of all: to giue reasons,] if any man loue this world, the loue of the Father [wherewith he loueth the Father] is not in him.

(Secondly) for all that is in this world, as the lust of the flesh [the corruption of nature, which chiefly breaketh out in euil concupiscence] the lusts of the eyes [the fruit of the former, stirred up by outward provocations, especially in the eye, as it is manifest in adultery or concupiscence,] & the pride of life [i.e. Arrogancy and ambition among men in common conversation of life,] is not of the Father but of the world.

And [thirdly] this world passeth away and the lusts thereof: but he that fulfilleth the will of God, abideth for euer.

Ch. What other thing are we to doe that wee may continue?

Ioh. Little children, it is the last time: and as ye haue heard, that Antichrist shall come, [a speciall Antichrist, the chiefe of all other: who is now manifest to be the Pope of Rome] euen now there are many Antichrists [hereticks, denying either the natures of Christ, or his offices: or the union and the distinction of his natures:] (whereby we know that it is the last time.

Ch. Those whom you call Antichrists, were of your company, and professed as we doe.

Ioh. They went out from vs, but they were not of vs: for if they had bene of vs, they should haue continued with vs. But this cometh to passe, that it might appeare, that they are not all of vs.

Ch. How can we be assured of our continuance in grace: for we may fall as well as they doe?

Ioh. But ye haue an oymnt, [the grace of Gods holy spirit, resembled by the anointing in the old Testament] from that holy one [Christ, Luke, 1.15.] and know all things.

Ch. If wee know all things, then you neede not write vnto vs of these matters.

Ioh. I haue not written vnto you, because ye know not the truth: but because you know it, & that no lie is of the truth [i.e. ye can distinguish between the solid doctrine of the Gospel, & errors.]

Ch. What is this lie which you speake of?

Ioh. Who is a liewer [a deceiver, a seducer, but he that denieth that Iesus Christ, (the Messiah, or Saviour of mankind): The same is that Antichrist, that denieth the Father & the Sonne.]

Ch. These whom you meane [say they] depend on the doctrine of God as well as wee: and they este to call him Father.

Ioh. Who so denieth the Sonne, hath not the Father.

Ch.

Ch. What doe you inferre vpon this, if it be the last time as you haue said?

Ioh. Let therefore abide in you, that fame [doctrine concerning Christ] which yee haue heard from the beginning: [which the Apostles preached, and before them the Prophets since the beginning of the world] If that which yee haue heard from the beginning remaine [ye beleauing and obeying it] in you, ye shall also continue in the fame, and in the Father.

And this is the promise which he hath promised vs, euen life eternal.

Ch. We cannot perswade our selues of perseverance, seeing men so commonly fall away from Christ among vs.

Ioh. These things haue I written vnto you, concerning them that deceiue you: [not meaning them of you, as you seeme to take it.]

But that anointing [the spirit which ye haue receiued of Christ, and which hath led you into all truth] which ye haue receiued of him, dwelleth in you [abideth in you, and will so continue:] and ye neede not that any man teach you, [any other doctrine beside this which ye haue learned, already:] but as the same Anointing teacheth you all things, and is true and not lying, and as it taught you, ye shall abide in him.

And now, little children abide in him, that when he shall appeare, we [being iustificd in Christ,] may haue boldnesse and not bee ashamed, [neither Satan, nor our consciences accusing vs for sinne,] before him at his coming.

Ch. We are still in doubt to returne backe to that which you said before, how an endeuour to keep the commandments should be a signe of fellowship with Christ.

Ioh. If ye know that he [God] is righteous, know ye that he which worketh righteousses is borne of him [as a child is knowne to haue such a man for his father, because he resembleth him.]

CHAP. III.

Ch. Re not we then borne of God?

Ioh. Behold what loue the Father hath giuen to vs, that we should be called the sonnes of God.

Ch. The world doth not repute vs as the sonnes and daughters of God, but for the refuse and off-souring of the world.

Ioh. For this cause the world knoweth not you, because it knoweth not him.

Ch. Can Gods children be subiect to such infirmities and miseries as we are?

Ioh. Dearly beloved, now are we the sonnes of God, but yet it is not made manifest what we shall be: and we know that when he shall be made manifest, we shall be like him: [hauing not equallitie, but likeness of holinesse and glorie:] for wee shall see him as he is: [for now we see him as he were through spectacles in the word and Sacraments.]

Ch. Alas poore wretches, we are not like Gods children, for we are euen sold vnder sinne, and daily carrie a masse of corruptions about vs.

Ioh. Eueny one that hath this hope [to see him as he is] purifieth himselfe [i.e. though he be subiect to sin, yet he desireth, and with the meanes to cleanse himselfe from sinne:] euen as he is pure, [setting before him Christ as a pattern to follow.]

Ch. How prooue you that an endeauour to purifie our selues is a note of adoption?

Ioh. [By the contrary] who soeuer committeth sinne [passeeth sinne with full consent of will, not endeavouring himselfe in holines of life,] transgresseth all the law: [and for that cause, being vnder the curse of the law, cannot bee Gods children:] for sinne is the transgression of the law, [vnderstand by Law, not morall Law, but any commandment of God, whether it be in the law or Gospel.]

And [againe] ye know that hee was made manifest, [tooke our nature on him] that he might take away our finnes [the guilt and punishment at once, and the corruption by little and little,] and in him is no sinne.

(Thirdly) who soeuer abideth in him sinneth not: [he doth not giue himselfe to sinne, so as it should reigne in him:] Who soeuer sinneth, hath not seene him, nor knowne him: [to wit, effectually, so as he can apply Christ and all his benefites to himselfe.]

Ch. But some teach that faith is sufficient, and they embolden vs to lue as we will.

Ioh. Little children, let no man deceiue you, he that worketh righteousses, is righteous, as he is righteous.

He that committeth sinne, [though he say he doth beleue, and therefore thinks himselfe iustificd before God,] is of the Diuell, [resembleth the Diuell, as the child doth the father: and is governed by his spirit:] for the diuell sinneth from the beginning, of the world: [which appeareth that] for this purpose was made manifest the Sonne of God, that he might dissolve the workes [for the beginning and continuance of all rebellion and disobedience to God,] of the Diuell.

(And further, to display these seducers) who soeuer is borne of God sinneth not, [i.e. doth not keepe a course in sinne, how soeuer he fall by infirmities,] for his seede [i.e. Gods word cast into the heart by the operation of the spirit, making a man to spring into a new creature,] remaineth in him: neither can he sin because he is borne of God.

Ch. Briefly, so come to the point: how may it be knowne, who is Gods child, and who [is to be reputed] the child of the diuell?

Ioh. In this are the children of God known, and the children of the diuell: who soeuer worketh not righteousses, is not of God: neither [to giue you a plaine example,] he that loueth not his brother.

For, this is the message which ye haue heard from the beginning, that we should lue one another.

Not as Cain: he was of that euill one [Satan] and slue his brother: and therefore slue he him? because his owne workes were euill, and his brothers good.

Ch. Yet if we lue those which be our brethren, according to the flesh neuer so much, they cease not to hate and persecute vs?

verf. 13. Job. Mervail not my brethren, though this world hate you.

verf. 14. Ch. If not to love, bee a note of the child of the devil, what is the note of Gods child?

verf. 15. Job. We know that we are translated from death to life, because we love the brethren, (i. such as be Christians; because they are Christians,) (as is the contrary) he that loveth not his brother, abideth in death (is under the state of damnation.)

verf. 16. Whosoever hateth his brother is a man-slayer, and ye know that no man-slayer hath eternal life abiding in him.

verf. 17. Ch. You have shewed us fully; that love is a work of adoption: Now shew us how we may know whether we love our brethren or not?

verf. 18. Job. Hereby we have perceived love, that hee laid downe his life for vs: therefore we ought (carried with the like affection of love) to lay downe our lives for the brethren.

verf. 19. Ch. Many in speech doe pretend love, but we find not this willing affection and readinesse to shew love.

verf. 20. Job. Whosoever hath this worlds good, (where with this life is sustained) and seeth his brother hath neede, and shutteth vp his bowels (i. hath no compassion, because it sheweth love by the rolling of the intrail) from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?

verf. 21. Ch. What other note is there of true love?

verf. 22. Job. My little children, let vs not love in word, nor in tongue only, but in deede and truth (sincerely.)

verf. 23. 1. For thereby we know that we are of the truth. (Sound professors of the Gospel of Christ,) and shall before him appeare our hearts (in regard of any accusation that our conscience shall lay unto us before Gods judgement seat.)

verf. 24. If your heart condemne vs, (an evil conscience accuse vs) Gods is greater then our heart (namely, in judging of us) and knoweth all things.

verf. 25. Ch. How may we know that our consciences will not condemne us?

verf. 26. Job. Beloved, if our hearts condemne vs not, then have wee boldnes toward God, (i. to come unto him by prayer.)

verf. 27. Ch. What other fruit is there of true love?

verf. 28. Job. Whatsoever we aske, we receive of him because we keepe his commandements, and doe those things which are pleasant in his sight.

verf. 29. Ch. What are these commandements?

verf. 30. Job. This then is his commandment, that wee beleve in the name of his Sonne Iesus Christ, and love one another as he gave commandment.

verf. 31. Ch. Have they which keepe these commandments their prayers granted; proueth this.

verf. 32. Job. (Yes) For hee that keepeth his commandments dwelleth in him, and hee in him.

verf. 33. Ch. How may we know that God dwelleth in vs, and we in him?

verf. 34. Job. Hereby wee know that hee abideth in vs, by that spirit [of sanctification, whereby wee are renued] which hee hath giuen vs. CHAP. IV.

Ch. To returne againe to that which was before mentioned, shall wee beleue all that say they have the spirit?

verf. 1. Job. Dearly beloved, beleue not every spirit (i. doctrs, which men bragging of the spirit doe teach;) but trie the spirits whether they bee of God: for many false prophets are gone out into the world.

verf. 2. Ch. How may we discern of spirits?

verf. 3. Job. Hereby shall ye know the spirit of Gods every spirit (doctrine) which confesseth that Iesus Christ (the Messias) is come in the flesh [is made true man; this being the substance of the Gospel] is of God.

verf. 4. And every spirit that confesseth not that Iesus Christ is come in the flesh, is not of God: but this is the spirit of Antichrist, of whom ye have heard, that he shall come, and now already he is in the world.

verf. 5. Ch. We feare because these false spirits are of great power, to persuade and seduce many.

verf. 6. Job. Little children, ye are of God, and have overcome them: for greater is he that is in you (Gods spirit) then he that is in the world, the spirit of Sathan.

verf. 7. Ch. But the doctrine of these men is of great account, and hath many followers in the world, ours hath but few which imbrace it.

verf. 8. Job. They are of this world, therefore speak they of this world, and this world (i. ignorant and ungodly men) heareth them.

verf. 9. We are of God: hee which knoweth God heareth vs: he which is not of God heareth vs not. Hereby know we the spirit of truth, and the spirit of error (namely, by the liking and applause of the world.)

verf. 10. Ch. How may wee preserve our selves against those seducers?

verf. 11. Job. Beloved, let vs love one another, for love commeth of God: and every one that loveth is borne of God, and knoweth God: [by a speciall knowledge, whereby they are assured that God the Father of Christ is their father, Christ their Redeemer, the holy Ghost their Comforter.]

verf. 12. He that loveth not, knoweth not God, for God is love, [i. wholly bent to shew his love and compassion to his people.]

verf. 13. [For a proofe of this.] Herein was that love of God made manifest among vs, because God sent that his only begotten Sonne into the world, that he might live through him.

verf. 14. Herein is that love, not that we loved God; but that he loved vs: and sent his Sonne to be a reconciliation for our sinnes.

verf. 15. Ch. What of all this?

verf. 16. Job. Beloved, if God so loved vs, we ought also one to love another.

verf. 17. Ch. How can God manifest his love to vs, he being a spirit invisible?

verf. 18. Job. No man hath seene God at any time; [nevertheless] if we love one another, [that is a signe] that God dwelleth in us, and his love is perfect in vs: [that love wherewith he loveth, is

throughly made manifest towards vs by our love; as the light of the Moone shining on vs, argueth the light of the Sunne shining upon the Moone, of whom (as from the fountaine) the Moone takes her light.

verf. 1. Ch. How doe we know that God dwelleth in vs?

verf. 2. Job. Hereby doe we know, that wee dwell in him, and he in vs: because he hath giuen vs of his Spirit.

verf. 3. Ch. What other signe haue you of Gods dwelling in vs?

verf. 4. Job. We haue seene and doe testifie, that the Father sent that Sonne to bee the Saviour of the world.

verf. 5. Whosoever confesseth [in faith and love] that Iesus is the Sonne of God; in him dwelleth God, and he in God.

verf. 6. Ch. The dwell will confess Christ.

verf. 7. Job. And we [which is more] haue knowne and beleueed the love which God hath in vs.

verf. 8. Ch. Declare how our love should bee a signe of Gods dwelling in vs?

verf. 9. Job. God is love, and [therefore] he that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God, and God in him.

verf. 10. Ch. Gods love wee grant, but how may wee know that God is love to us?

verf. 11. Job. Hereby is that love perfect [i. fully made manifest in vs;] that we might haue boldnesse [to stand before him without feare,] in the day of judgement: for euen as he is, euen so are we in the world [not in equality, but in conformitie of holinesse.]

verf. 12. [As may appeare by the contrary] there is no feare in love [i. when a man is assured of Gods love to him, he doth not distrust nor feare him in respect of his finnes] but perfect love casteth out feares: for feare hath painfullnesse [chekings and torments of conscience;] and hee that feareth is not perfect in love.

verf. 13. Ch. What other signe is there that God is love to us?

verf. 14. Job. We love him because he loved vs first, [as when a man warmes him, the heat of his body is because the fire is first hot.]

verf. 15. Ch. If this be so, then they which love not their brethren, are loved of God in Christ; seeing all generally say they love God.

verf. 16. Job. If any man say, I love God, and hate his brother, he is a lyar: for how can he that loveth not his brother whom hee hath seene, love God whom he hath not seene.

verf. 17. And this commandment haue we of him, that he that loveth God, should love his brother also.

verf. 19. Whosoever beleueeth that Iesus is that Christ, [true Messias] is borne of God: and every one that loves him which did beget, [i. God the Father] loves him also which is begotten of him, [the child of God as a true Christian.]

verf. 20. Ch. This being manifest, that they are hypocrites which say they love God, yet shew no love to their brethren; teach us how we may know that we love our brethren.

verf. 21. Job. In this we know that we love the children of God, when we love God and keepe his commandments, [that is, endeavour to keepe; the beginning of the action being put for the whole.]

verf. 22. For this is the love of God [the duty of love to God] that we keepe his commandments. Ch. But no man can keepe the law.

verf. 23. Job. His commandments are not burdensome [to them that are in Christ, and are freed from the curse of the law, which makes the law grievous; and are also guided by his holy Spirit.]

verf. 24. [And this is apparent] for all that is borne of God overcommeth the world, [Sathan with all corruptions and workes of darkenesse.]

verf. 25. Ch. By what means?

verf. 26. Job. And this is the victory which hath overcome the world, euen our faith [which is the instrument and hand whereby wee lay hold on him, that he, in vs, and so we by him might overcome the world.]

verf. 27. Who is it that overcommeth this world, but he which beleueth that Iesus is that Son of God?

verf. 28. Ch. How may we be resolved that Iesus of Nazareth the sonne of Mary, was the sonne of God, and the Messias? hee came but basely into the world.

verf. 29. Job. This is that Iesus Christ which came by water, [sanctification signified by the legall washings;] and blood [imputation of Christs righteousness;] or the sprinkling of his blood: [not by water only, but by water and blood: because Christ worketh both justification and sanctification together:] and it is that spirit [a mans owne conscience inwardly purified] that beareth witness: for that spirit is truth: [that is, that the testimony of the spirit of adoption, certifying vs that we are the sonnes of God, is true.]

verf. 30. For [that I may speake yet more plainly] there are three which beare record in heauen, the Father, the Word, [the Sonne] and the holy Ghost: and these three are one [namely, in testimonie.]

verf. 31. And there are three which beare record in earth, the Spirit, and the water, and blood; and these three agree in one.

verf. 32. Ch. How shew you that these witnesses be authentical, and not beleued?

verf. 33. Job. If we receive the witness of men, that witness of God is greater: for this is the witness of God, (i. that was said to come from heaven;) which he testifieth of his Sonne.

verf. 34. [Again] hee that beleueth in that Sonne of God, hath the witness in himselfe, (the peace of conscience which hee may feele in himselfe:)

verf. 35. [And further,] he that beleueth not God, maketh him a lyar; because he beleueth not the record, that God witnesseth of his Sonne.

verf. 36. Ch. What is the effect of that which these witnesses testify?

verf. 37. Job. And this is that record, to wit, that God hath giuen unto vs eternall life, and this life is in his Sonne.

Ioh. If a man see his brother sinne a sinne that is not vnto death; [that is, which may be pardoned,] let him aske [pardon in his behalfe,] and he shall giue him life for them that sin not vnto death; there is a sinne vnto death [after which necessarily damnation followeth, as the sinne against the holy Ghost:] I say not that thou shouldest pray for it.

Ch. But is not every sinne a sinne to death?

Ch. We feare lest we haue committed this sinne which is to death.

deceive vs in revealing it: for he is the spirit of truth: which can neither deceive nor be deceived. If an Angel from heaven should be sent to thee, as he was sent to Mary, and as he spake vnto the fathers, and should tell thee in the name of God, that thou were elected to life everlasting: wouldest not thou say that thou couldest not then doubt any longer of thy election? But so much the more certaine is the testimonie of the Spirit, which beareth record to our spirit, that we are the sonnes of God; by how much the holy Ghost doth more know the things of God then any angel, and can lesse deceive then an angel. And so much the more sure is this testimonie, considering it is not kept in the bodily eares, where it might fone vanish away, but in our minde and spirit; because the spirit beareth record to our spirit. And further, that the holy Ghost neuer departeth from our spirit, but dwelleth in vs, abideth in vs, speaketh in vs, sheweth forth his power in vs, prayeth in vs. Therefore the Apostle saith, that we have received the spirit of adoption by which we cry, Abba, Father: as though he should say, this testimonie of the spirit is altogether so sure, by which he beareth vs record that we are sonnes of God; that presently without doubting we can call vpon God, and cry, Abba, Father. And all the elect have this testimonie, being made the sonnes of God by faith, and being renewed by the holy Ghost, & ingrafted into Christ. For so the Apostle speaketh, If any man haue not the spirit of Christ, he is not his; therefore, whosoever is Christs, and is ingrafted into Christ, it is necessarie he should haue the spirit of God. And whosoever haue received and doe enjoy the spirit of Christ; to their minds the same spirit beareth record, that they are the sonnes of God, and makes them to cry Abba, Father. And it is certaine, that no man is renewed by the holy Ghost, which is not perswaded that God is his most mercifull and most louing Father: and therefore can call vpon him as a Father. Therefore although all men in that they are assured by the certainty of faith, that God is their Father; and they are his sonnes, do not thereby argue and conclude that they are elected to eternall life; yet all men indeede haue thereby a sure testimonie of their election to glory: because if they be the sonnes of God, they are also heires of eternall life. This testimonie I will briefly comprize within this demonstration. Whosoever call vpon God, and in their hearts cry Abba, Father, they are the sonnes of God, and it is certaine that they thus cry by the spirit of God. And they which are the sonnes of God, are also heires of eternall life, and they haue bin predestinate to adoption: therefore it must needs be, that all they which are perswaded, that they are the sonnes of God by the holy Ghost, are predestinate to eternall life, and must be perswaded of it. This is the first testimonie & the first way, by which God reuealeth to euery elect man his pre-

stination: namely, by the holy Ghost within our hearts, bearing record vnto vs, that we are the sonnes of God in Christ, and by Christ. And let this be the first argument, also seruing to confirme our assertion.

The second way, by which God reuealeth to euery man his predestination, is by his word. I meane not any particular word, by which hee doth declare to any outwardly in priuate & speciall manner, and that in expresse words, his election: but the general word of the Gospell, by which Christ calleth all them which beleue in him, elect, both by himselfe, and by his Apostles, as in the new Testament euery where is most manifest. For although in particular propositions he say not to thee, or to him particularly, Thou art elect to eternall life: yet by meanes of general propositions, he doth as well conclude in the heart of euery one that beleueth, that he is elected, as any man shall be able to conclude vnto particular men, that euery one of them is a liuing creature indue with reason by this general proposition: Every man is a reasonable creature indue with reason: the assumption being suppressed. Therefore after this manner dealeth God; Hee hath chosen all and euery fleshly man whom he was to indue with faith, to haue the everlasting inheritance.

Furthermore, hee published it to all the Elect by the Apostles in this general proposition, that all the faithful are elect to eternall life. The assumption is concealed in the word of God. But when he giueth vs faith, he maketh euery one of vs to make an assumption by himselfe in his minde: But I am of the faithful, for I finde in my selfe that I truly beleue in Christ. Therefore who is it that maketh this conclusion for thee, that thou art predestinate to eternall life? euen God himselfe: the proposition being taken forth of the Gospel, and the assumption proceedeth of the gift of faith. But that indeede by which we properly attaine to the knowledge of the matter contained in the conclusion, is the middle term, as they call it. Wherefore it is manifest, that God by the word of his Gospel, where he saith: that all the faithful are elect; doth reueale to euery faithful man his owne predestination. Only this one thing is to be required, that the faithful man hearing the vniuersall proposition, in his minde should make an assumption. But I am faithful by the gift and grace of God. And is not God said to haue reuealed to euery man his speciall malediction in this general proposition, Deut. 27. 26. Cursed is euery one that doth not continue in all things that are written in this booke, although he say to no man specially, thou art accursed? for euery one doth make this assumption: that he is accursed, because he knoweth most certainly that hee doth not continue in all things that are written in the booke of the law. Therefore the schoole-men are deceived, when they say, it may be that euery man may be sure of his election; namely, if GOD

The elect one of the word of God, their cōscience making the assumption as length they may be certainly perswaded of their predestination.

They which do truly beleue, know that they are elect.

*That whereby a man applies the general promise to himselfe.

which is able, will reueale it to him: yet, that he doth onely reueale it to a very few, as the Apostles for God (as hath bene prouoed and declared) euen by his word, in general propositions doth reueale to euery man his predestination: for what can be more certaine then this demonstration? Whosoever doth truly beleue in Christ, they are elect to eternall life in Christ: but I truly beleue in Christ: therefore I am elected. But some make an exception and say, that this were a demonstration and that most certaine and euident, if a man might be able to know that hee were indue with true faith in Christ; but here lyeth all the difficultie. For many thinke that they truly beleue in Christ, whereas neuertheless their faith is hypocriticall and temporarie: as appeareth by the Euangelists.

Answer. Wee graunt that they which beleue by such a faith, which is in hypocrisie and onely lasteth for a time; that they are deceived whilst they thinke that they doe truly beleue, and yet doe not indeede: for they are like them which dreame that they are kings, when as they are very beggars; but we say, that they which beleue by a true faith, do know whether they truly beleue or not: and they are not deceived when they say & thinke that they truly beleue. For they are like vnto them, which handling a pretious stone, by reason that they are indue with sense, know and say, that they handle it. And if no man might certainly know whether hee beleueed truly or not, why doth the Apostle say, 2 Cor. 13. 5. Try your selues whether ye be in the Faith? And if it be so, no man can euer certainly know, whether hee be iustified: considering that they onely which truly beleue, can be iustified. And if a man giuing credit to another mans word, doth certainly know, that he beleueeth him: how much more doth hee know it, which being indue with true faith by the holy Ghost, beleueeth the Gospel? In a word, Godly writers haue prouoed against Schoolmen, that they which are indue with true faith in Christ cannot bee ignorant of it. But (say they) no man is certaine of his perseverance in faith: and therefore out of this vniuersall proposition, Hee which beleueth, namely, with a true and constant faith, is elected to life, no man can conclude that he is elected, by reason that albeit he may know, that hee is indue with true faith, yet he cannot tell whether it shall be perpetuall. This collection is absurd, and the learned haue fully prouoed, that true faith is perpetuall. And therefore they which certainly know, that they beleue in a true faith, are also certaine, that the same their true faith shall neuer perlish in this world: partly for the promise of God, 1er. 32. 40. I will put my feare into their hearts; that they may neuer depart from mee: and partly for the prayer of Christs, Luke 22. 32. I haue prayed for thee Peter, that thy faith doe not faile. Seeing it is so, it is very certaine, that God by his word, in which generally hee saith that all the faithful are elect, doth reueale to euery man his Election: considering that the proposition taken out of the Gospell is most certaine, and euery faithful man may certainly asseme to himselfe, that he is indue with true faith in Christ.

The third way by which God reuealeth to euery one of vs his predestination, is by the effects of predestination, as well inward in vs, as outward: by which, as by certaine markes imprinted in vs, he doth scale vs; that if we shal giue diligent heede, we may thereby euidently perceiue, that we are set apart from the common sort of men, which is often called by the name of the world: that we are fore-knownne for his sonnes, and loued in Christ, and predestinated to eternall life; yea, & that we appertaine no longer to the world, but to that Citty which is above, that hath his foundation, as the Apostle saith, Heb. 11. 10. And we haue a twofold reason of this argument: one, because these effects (of which we speake, and which we will afterward handle) God worketh not in any, but in his elect; as also afterward we will shew. Therefore by right a man may by a true feeling and experience of these effects in himselfe, bee assured of his particular election and predestination, to haue fellowship with Christ in all his graces. For if predestination (as Augustine witnesseth) be a preparation to the blessings of God; by which most certainly they are made free, whosoever are made free, therefore whosoever feeleth himselfe freed through these graces of God, may bee assured and certified of his predestination. The other reason is, that these effects are not onely the effects simply of predestination, but also such effects they are, that may also bee scales of it: namely, imprinting in vs a lively forme and image of GOD, fore-knowing vs, louing vs, electing vs. And therefore albeit we cannot see the purpose, the fore-knowledge, the election and predestination of God as concerning our selues, in God himselfe fore-knowing, willing, and electing vs: yet we may behold in our selues some few representations of all these imprinted, and euen stamped in vs by the word: and so by the beholding of these formes and impressions in our selues, we shal easily be brought to the knowledge of those patterns, (as it were) which are in the Lord himselfe. The matter (by reason it is very good and comfortable) may be declared by a similitude: GOD is like vnto the Sunne in regard of vs: the Sunne when it shineth vpon vs, and after a sort looketh vs in the face, it doth after such a fort imprint an image of his light in our eyes, that we also in like manner being made partakers of his light, may looke againe vpon the sunne it selfe, and vpon his light: for the light of the Sun and his beames being sent downe vpon vs, are beaten backe and reflected againe towards the Sunne. So in like manner the fore-knowledge of God, by which he hath and would acknowledge vs for his from all eternitie, it alwaies reſteth in God, and cannot of it ſelfe, be perceived vs. But yet whileſt God doth acknowledge vs for his, he doth portray in vs his elect, a certaine forme and image of his fore-knowledge: by which he maketh vs, renouncing all other gods, to acknowledge him for our only true God. Thus it cometh to paſſe, through this true knowledge of God, which he vouchſafeth vs, and by which we do acknowledge God for our God & father: we may after a ſort behold in God himſelfe his foreknowledge, by which he hath foreknown vs for his ſonnes. For firſt of all, God doth acknowledge vs for his, and then the elect being made partakers of this his light & knowledge, he cauſeth vs in like manner to acknowledge him. To this purpoſe ſerueſt, that which our Saviour Chriſt ſaith: firſt, (ſaith he, Joh. 10. 14.) I know my ſheepe, after he addeth, And againe, I am knowne of mine. As though hee ſhould ſay, whileſt I acknowledge them for my ſheepe, I make them by meanes of this my light and knowledge, that they alſo can acknowledge me for their Paſtor. So the Apoſtle ſaith to the Galatians, Gal. 4. 9. when ye ſhall know God, or rather are knowne of him: he teacheth therefore, that God knew the Galatians, becauſe hee had firſt acknowledged them for his, in his eternall predeſtination: and by giuing vnto them this his wiſedome, hee made them acknowledge the true God for their God. The ſame may be ſaid of the loue of God, by which hee loued vs in Chriſt to euerlaſting life, before the foundation of the world: God by louing vs doth print in our hearts the image of his loue, by which we may loue him againe from our hearts: and as it were by the reflection of the Sunne-beames ſent downe into our hearts, we may be prouoked to loue againe. For the loue of God to vs, being eternall, and cauſing eternal life, begetteth in the time appointed a certaine loue in vs; ſeruing for his eternal glory. And to this purpoſe is that of S. Iohn, 1 Joh. 4. 10. Not that we firſt loued God, but becauſe he firſt loued vs. As though he had ſaid, therefore we loue God; becauſe he firſt, that is, before the foundation of the world louing vs in Chriſt, by the ingrauing of his loue in our hearts, cauſeth vs to loue him againe as a Father. So loue is ſaid (to wit, that loue by which we loue God) to be of God: that is, to proceed of the loue of God towards vs. And Paul writeth, Rom. 5. 5. that the loue of God, (namely that loue by which hee loued vs) is ſhed in our hearts by the holy Ghoſt which is giuen vs: and by this ſhedding of the loue of God in our hearts, it cometh to paſſe, that loue is alſo wrought in our hart towards God. And therefore by that ſound loue by which we feele our ſelues to loue God, we are made to know how great the loue of God is, by which hee loued vs ſo ſo eternitie in Chriſt. And what is that loue ſelfe but predeſtination?

In like manner, election by which hee ſingled vs from the reſt of the world in Chriſt; that we

A might be holy before him, begets in vs a certaine image euen of God himſelfe, that is, another election, by which we renouncing all other Gods, which are worſhipped in the world make our choiſe of this our true God Iehouah, to be our God, that he may be alwaies before our eyes, he which ſanctifieth vs, & the author of our whole ſaluation. Wherefore through this conſtant election which is in vs, wee perceive, that the election which is in God, as concerning vs, is firme & ſure: not only as we gather the cauſe by the effect, but alſo as we gather the patterne by the picture: like as by the ſimilitude of the forme of a ſcale faſhioned in waxe, we do eaſily vnderſtand what is the very forme and faſhion of the ſcale. Therefore it is manifeſt, that it is the manner of God by the effects of his election and predeſtination imprinted in vs, to reueale to euery one of vs his owne election and predeſtination: And that two waies, both becauſe there are certaine effects of predeſtination, and by the effects, the cauſes are knowne: and alſo becauſe there are certaine lively types of Gods fore-knowledge & election, by which we are ſealed vnto God.

Now by the imprinting of theſe formes and types in vs, as the ſcale is in waxe, the very firſt patterns themſelues are known what they are. Furthermore, that there is no man elected to eternal life, which ſhall not be ſealed vp in the time appointed with theſe marks of Gods election: it is manifeſt out of theſe places of ſcripture, which treat of electio & predeſtination. The Apoſtle teacheth, Eph. 1. 4. that we were elected, that we might be holy and without blame. Alſo he teacheth, Rom. 8. 30. that all they whom God hath predeſtinated, are likewiſe called and iuſtified, and by conſequent indued with faith and knowledge of God, by which they take him for their Father: with loue alſo, where with they loue him as a Father: alſo with a good will and conſtant purpoſe, by which they deſire conſtantly his glorie. Againe, he ſaith in another place, 2 Tim. 2. 19. The foundation ſtandeth ſure, hauing this ſcale (in reſpect of God) the Lord knoweth who are his. Now in reſpect of vs, he putteth downe another ſcale, ſaying: let him depart from iniquitie, which calleth vpon the name of the Lord: for with this marke, all the elect are branded. They call vpon the name of the Lord, & depart from iniquitie: ſeeking after holineſſe and a good conſcience. And this is that ſealing which is ſo often mentioned in the Scriptures: As when in the Apocalypſe it is ſaid, Apoc. 7. 3. that an innumerable multitude was ſealed to the Lord. For like as the Father ſealed Ieſus Chriſt as he was man and mediator, ſo alſo the reſt of his children hee hath ſealed, & doth daily ſeale with ſure ſeales and ſeales to diſtinguiſh them from other men, and the children of this age. For God is ſaid, 2 Cor. 1. 21, 22. to haue appointed vs, and ſealed vs, and giuen vs the earneſt of his ſpirit in our hearts. And againe, to haue ſealed vs with the holy ſpirit of promiſe, and that to the day of redemption. As it is eaſie to diſcerne a right ſeale from a counterfeit, for the true ſoules of God (by the ſealing of the ſpirit) are diſtinguiſhed from hypocrites, and lawfull children from baſtards.

It remaineth, that wee ſhould declare ſome effects of predeſtination: by which, as by marks and ſeales, the Elect may be diſcerned from Reprobates. The firſt effect of Predeſtination, is Chriſt himſelfe; as hee is a Mediator and a Saviour dwelling in our hearts by his holy ſpirit. For as we are elected in him, and by him redeemed; ſo by the ſprinkling of his blood, we are clenſed & ſealed: and by his dwelling in vs quickened, (for hee is our life, and that eternal) and therefore we are ſeuered from Reprobates which alwaies remaine in death, as in the holy Scriptures we are taught. We ſay that this is the firſt effect of predeſtination, becauſe we can inioy none of the gifts of God, either of election, vocation, or iuſtification, except in Chriſt, and by Chriſt: For he hath poured out all the effects of predeſtination in vs. In that therefore euery elect faithfull man ſeeth Chriſt to dwell in him, and to quicken him; he hath a ſeale in himſelfe, by which he may know that he was elected to euerlaſting life in the ſame Chriſt: A part and beginning of which life, is this ſpiritual life, by which we now lue to God. And as euery man knoweth himſelfe to be the Son of God in Chriſt, becauſe hee calleth vpon God from his heart as a father: hee may conclude, that he is predeſtinated to be the ſonne of God for Chriſts cauſe. And that by this firſt note the faithfull may know that they are elect to eternal life: the Apoſtle ſheweth, Know ye not (ſaith he) your ſelues, that Ieſus Chriſt is in you, except ye be Reprobates? And no doubt a type of this kinde of ſealing, was that ſealing which was done in Egypt, by the blood of the Lambe: namely, when the houſes of the Iſraelites were ſprinkled with this blood, that they might be diſcerned from the houſes of the Egyptians: and ſo be paſſed ouer vntouched of the Angel. And by Chriſt, as by the chiefe effect; yea, and the cauſe too of all the effects which follow, all other effects of predeſtination are put into vs, and we are ſealed with them. The Apoſtle nameth three principles, our calling, (to wit effectually) our iuſtification, and glorification. This third effect, we ſhall obtaine in the liſe to come, the two firſt in this liſe. And to theſe two may very well be referred all other, which we receiue in this liſe by Chriſt: with the effectuall, wee ioyne a ſound hearing of the word of God, and the vnderſtanding of it, accompanied with great and conſtant delight and ioy: ſaith alſo and a true knowledge of the deitie, humanitie, and office of Chriſt. Vnto iuſtification, wee reſerre a perſuaſion of the remiſſion of our finnes by Chriſt (for by this we are iuſtified); and regeneration too, or ſanctification, and renouation of liſe, a good conſcience, loue not fained, a pure heart and

A cleane, patience in aduerſitie, and boaiſting in tribulation, all good workes and fruits of the ſpirit: adde hereto the croſſe it ſelfe, which we beare for the truth of the Goſpell: wherefore, whoſoeuer ſeeleth that he is effectually called, that he doth willingly heare the word, that he doth beleue the Goſpel, that hee is ſure of the remiſſion of his finnes, that he burneth with true loue to his neighbour, that he is bent to euery good work; hee cannot but mult needs be perſwaded of his election: for God onely doth communicate theſe vnto the elect. Therefore it is plaine, that the elect are confirmed in the aſſurance of their election, by the effects of Predeſtination, and that there is a three-fold way, by which God reucaleth to euery man his Predeſtination.

But if any ſhall take an occaſion the rather of doubting of his election, then of confirming himſelfe in it, of that which hath bene ſpoken as concerning the fruites of the ſpirit, and the effects of Predeſtination: and that peraduenture becauſe hee can feele in himſelfe few and very weak fruites of regeneration and election: yet let him not be diſcouraged, neither let him doubt of his election; but let him vnderſtand himſelfe with theſe propoſitions: Firſt of all, if euery he truly felt in himſelfe that testimony of the ſpirit (which before I mentioned) namely, that he is the Son of God: let him know vndoubtedly, that he is ſuch a one, and therefore elected to eternal life. For the holy Ghoſt neuer beareth record, or perſwades a man of that which is falſe, for he is the ſpirit of truth. And they are not the ſonnes of God, except they haue bene predeſtinate (as the Apoſtle ſaith) to adoption by Chriſt; & none that is the ſonne of God and a man elected, can be made a reprobate, and the child of the diuell. Therefore albeit hee feele in himſelfe both few and feeble effects of regeneration, yet let him not doubt of his election: otherwiſe hee ſhall diſgrace the testimony which hee hath receiued of the holy Ghoſt, yea and that too which as yet hee enioyeth although peraduenture, by reaſon that his minde is troubled by euill affections, that testimony of the holy ſpirit can ſcarce be heard in him. For the testimony of our adoption by the holy Ghoſt, being once giuen vnto our ſpirit, laſteth for euer: although is otherwiſe heard more plainly, and at other times is more ſlender and ſcarce perceived. But how (ſay you) may I know whether the testimony doth proceede from the holy Ghoſt, and therefore whether it be a true and certaine testimony? I anſwer, firſt, by the perſuaſion: ſecondly, by the manner of the perſuaſion: laſtly, by the effects of this testimony and perſuaſion. For the firſt, the holy Ghoſt doth not ſimply ſay it, but doth perſwade with vs, that wee are the ſonnes of God; and no fleſh can doe this. Againe, he perſwades vs by reaſons drawne not from our workes, or from any worthineſſe in vs; but

III. The weakness of our faith as touching our eternal election, by what fauour may hee be held vp.

from the alone goodnes of God the Father, and grace of Christ. In this manner the diuell will neuer perfwade any. Lastly, the perfwasion of the holy Ghost is full of power, for they which are perfwaded that they are the sonnes of God, cannot but needs must call him Abba, Father: and in regard of loue to him, doe hate sinne, and whatsoeuer is disagreeing to his will: and on the contrary, they haue a found and a heartie desire to his wil. If at any time thou hast felt in thy selfe any such testimony, perfwade thy selfe it was the testimony of the holy Ghost: and that very true and certaine too: and therefore that thou art the childe of God, and predestinate to eternal life. This is the prop by which wee must vnderstand that weake beleefe we haue of our certaine electio to eternal life. Again, hold this without waueing whatsoeuer thou art, that are tempted to doubt of thy election: Euen as nothing is required at our hands to work our election, (for God chose vs of his only meere goodnesse) so, that we may truly know whether we be elect or not, this one thing shall be sufficient, namely, if we shall attaine to the certain knowledge of this, that we are in Christ, and partakers of him: for, he that is now ingrafted in Christ, and is iustificed, it cannot be, but that he was elected in Christ before the foundation of the world. And that we may be in Christ, faith is both required, & is sufficient: not perfect faith, but true faith, though it be so little as a graine of mustard seede, and feeble like a young borne babe, and that sore diseased too. Now that faith, which is a lively and a true faith, lasteth alwaies, as hath bene before declared, neither can it at any time altogether faile. And so it cometh to passe, that they which once haue bene truly ingrafted into Christ, remaine alwaies and continue in him according to that saying; All that my Father giueth mee, shall come to mee; and he which cometh vnto mee I will not cast forth. That is true no doubt, that looke how much the faith is more perfect, so much the greater power it hath, to knit vs more and more to Christ: and therefore we must alwaies endeavour to increase in faith. Yet for all that, this is most certaine; one little sparke of true faith is sufficient to engraft vs into Christ. And for that cause, wee must in no wise doubt of our engrafting into Christ, and of our election too, by reason of the weaknesse of faith, and the small and slender fruits it bringeth out.

may know whether his faith be true faith or not.

But how shall I certainly know (say you) whether my faith be true and lively faith, or not? Out of the same grounds, from whence the testimonie of our adoption is perceiued. First of all, if you shall truly feele that you are perfwaded of the truth of the Gospell, yea and that all your finnes are pardoned you for Christ, and you receiued to fauour. Again, if you see that this perfwasion is grounded not vpon any merits of yours, but on the sole goodnesse of God and grace of Christ.

Lastly, if you feele such a confidence to approach vnto, and call vpon the Father, & such a loue towards him and his Son Iesus Christ; that ye doe hate and detest whatsoeuer is against his glorie (as all sin is); and on the contrary, be carried away with a desire to do those things which serue for the aduancing of his glorie: and therefore that you loue all those, which desire and seeke the same, as the brethren and friends of Christ. For these be the effects which can neuer be seuered from true faith. And this is the disposition of true faith: therefore, as long as thou feelest these effects in thy selfe albeit very slender and greatly languishing, yet assure thy selfe thou art indued with true faith, although it be weak: & therefore thou art in Christ, yea and in Christ elected too. Wherefore thou must not doubt of thy saluation & election, by reason of thy daily slips proceeding from the weaknes of faith, no not for heinous crimes: like as neither Dauid, for his adulterie and murder, nor Peter for his three-fold denial, did despaire of their electio, which appeareth, in that being plunged in the very gulfs of their temptations, they held fast their faith as an anker, and called vpon God. This is the second prop. Lastly, in no wise we must forget, namely that our election is certain & immutable: & therefore, as it is done without respect of any workes of ours, so in like sort it can neuer be changed by any of our euill desires. For as it first proceedeth from the only purpose of God; so it is grounded thereon. True liues, we prouoke Gods wrath against vs by our sins, and neither will God let them escape vnpunished, but he chastiseth vs by diuers, both inward & outward scourges as may appeare in Dauid aboue all other. Yet for all that, it is his good pleasure, that for his goodnes sake & truth, for the obedience of Christ, that his purpose should remaine sure, and our electio. So it cometh to passe, that he giueth vs repentance anew, to raise vs vp, and to receiue vs to fauour. Therefore, although for the present thou feelest thy selfe to be of weak faith, & to haue fallen to diuers sins; yet whereas heretofore thou hast had many and euident testimonies of thy election, as the testimonie of the holy Ghost, and the testimonie taken from faith, and the effects of faith: at this present assuredly thou canst not doubt of thy election, for thy sins committed, but thou shalt much derogate from this free election, & also from the testimonies of thy election heretofore enioyed, yea & those which yet thou enioyest. For if thy finnes displease thee, & thou desirest to liue without blame, onely for that thy sins displease thee, why now thou hast a new testimonie of thy election: for such repentance as this is, is onely proper vnto the elect: therefore, by these three props we must vphold our faith, as touching euery ones particular election. And thus much as concerning the certainty, with the which euery man must be perfwaded, that hee is elected in Christ to eternal life, before the foundation of the world.

Affertion. II.

Who soeuer are predestinate to the end, they are also predestinate to the meanes, without which they cannot attaine to the end. & therefore as the elect necessarily at length doe come vnto the end, by reason of the certainty of their election: so also by reason of the same certainty, it is necessary that they should be craced through those meanes which lead to the same end. We must marke the end to which we are predestinate, and to which we say that one day we shall be brought: for there is a double end of our election: the one concerneth the elect themselves, namely their glorification, or their eternal life and glory in heauen; of which is spoken, Rom. 8. The other concerneth God himselfe which chooseth, namely the glorie of God: that is, that the glory of his grace may be known, and eternally made manifest, of which is mention made, Eph. 1. Both of them are so coupled together, that whoeuer are predestinate to the first, are also predestinate to the latter, and the latter followeth of the former. For the more wee shall be made partakers of the graces of God & the heauenly glory, so much also more and more shall the glory of God be made manifest in vs. But because the end which concerneth God, is almost all one in the reprobation of the wicked, & in the predestination of the Saints: namely, that by the saluation of these which proceedeth of his meere goodnes, the glorie of his grace is made manifest: so also by the iust damnation of the other, the glorie of his diuine iustice may be made knowne too. Neuertheless, considering that the end, to which the elect shall attaine, is farre diuers from that (for it is eternal life) vnto which the reprobates are appointed (for that is eternal death): therefore the end of which we treat in this assertion, is our eternal glorification and euertlasting life in heauen.

The
meane to which we are predestinate how many they be,

Let vs now see in the second place, what are those meanes, by which the elect are brought vnto this end: and therefore to which meanes we hold, that all are predestinate whoeuer are predestinate to the end. And they are of two sorts, some of them are so necessary vnto all, that without the no man simply can attaine vnto eternal life & glory: and they are Christ, as he is Mediator and high Priest, and his obedience & iustice (for without Christ no man can bee saved): also our effectually calling to Christ by the holy Ghost: and that which followeth this, is our iustification, yea and our regeneration too. For these foure, predestination, vocation, iustification, and glorification, are so linked together, that it is not possible to seuer the one from the other. And therefore no man can be glorified, which is not iustified, & no man can be iustified, which is not effectually called, as also no man can be effectually called, which is not predestinate: therefore without these not so much as childre & infants can be brought to this end of eternal glory. And therefore euen all the elect infants are inwardly, in a certaine peculiar manner, by the holy Ghost, called, and iustified, and glorified. Now there are some certaine meanes annexed vnto these, which albeit they haue no place in infants, by reason of their age, yet they belong to all other elect, howsoeuer they are found in some more plentiful and liuely, and in other some more slender & weak. As namely, a liue ly faith, the hearing of the word, a detestation of sin, the loue of righteousnes, patience in aduersitie, a care to do good workes (& such like) all which the Apostle comprehendeth vnder the name of good workes; when he faith, that we are created, that is, borne anew in Christ, vnto good workes, which God hath prepared, that we might walke in them, that is, that we might leade our liues in them, and so walking at length might come to eternal life: for without them we cannot come to eternal glory; but by them God traileth vs thither. Therefore we say, that all which are elect to that end, are also predestinate to the same meanes. For predestination is not onely of the end, but also of the meanes which concerne the end; and as wel the end as the meanes, are the effects of predestination. And therefore it is very true, which Augustine faith, Predestination (faith he) is a preparation to the graces of God, by which they indeede are freed whoeuer are freed.

Eph. 1. 10

Therefore, the first gift of God (that we may briefly consider the effects of predestination) prepared for all the elect, without which they can in no wise come to the end, is Christ, and therefore the first effect of predestination is our Lord Iesus, with his obedience, merits, death, resurrection, & iustice, in that respect hee is made Mediator betweene God the Father and vs, & the head of all the elect. And therefore in as much as he is such a one, he is also the cause of all other graces & benefits, which come vnto vs by the free predestination of God. For the effects of predestination are so ordered among themselves, that the first, which goe before, are the causes efficient, or (if we wil so speake) the material causes of the latter, & those that follow. Therefore, seeing Christ is the first effect of predestination, he is also the cause of all other effects, by whom we are made partakers of the. The Apostle therefore faith very well to the Ephesians: In the first place (faith he) we are elected in Christ, namely, as in the head, to be his members. Secondly, he writeth that we are predestinate to adoption by Christ, namely, to obtaine it, for we are adopted into the sonnes of God in Christ, the first begotten Son of God, & by making vs partakers of his sonneship, we are really made the sonnes of God, yea, and we are also indued with his spirit too, that we might be borne anew. Thirdly (faith he) we are made acceptable & beloved vnto the Father, & his beloved sonne, namely Christ. Fourthly, that we haue our redemption in the same Christ, by his blood, and haue obtained remission of finnes, and al wisdom and vnderstanding, as wel in heauen, as in earth. In a word, the Apo-

He sheweth there (as also elsewhere) that whatsoever benefits we doe, or shall hereafter obtaine, counting from our eternall election, even vnto our glorification: all those we now doe, & shall obtaine hereafter, in Christ, and by Christ. Therefore, whofoever are elected in Christ, they are also predestinate to Christ, that is, to haue fellowship with him that they may by him enioy all other benefits.

II. The second benefit of God, and effect of our predestination, is our effectual calling to Christ, and to his Gospel, in which the elect are onely called: because it is by the purpose and grace of God, which is given vs in Christ. And an effectual calling is knowne by the effects, two of which proceede directly from it: a heartie kinde of hearing the word, and the conceiuing of it with a very great, constant, and continuall delight, and a true and sure belief of the word of the Gospel. Thence it is that Christ saith, Who is of God (saith he) namely by election and effectual calling, heareth the word of God, very willingly, and from his heart, & that continually: but ye heare not because ye are not of God. And this calling is wrought not onely of the preaching of the word (as it is in all that be of yeares) but also (and that chiefly) with the inward inspiration of the holy Ghost, whilst that the Father draweth them by his spirit whom he will haue to cometo Christ. Which also was said to be done in infants. For this calling is the beginning of saluation euen in this life: and therefore it is the Apostles manner, in the beginning of his Epistles, to make mention of this calling, naming also the faithful, The faithfull called: Therefore it must needs be, that all they which are elected in Christ, must also at length effectually be called and drawne to Christ.

III. After an effectual calling followeth Faith, the effect of predestination, which is said to be peculiar vnto the elect: And without which (as the Apostle saith) it is not possible to please God. For by it we are ingrafted into Christ, and are made the members of Christ, and without faith no man can be saved. And that this is an effect of predestination, the Apostle plainly sheweth, when he saith, that he had obtained mercie (namely, in Gods eternall predestination) that he might beleeue. Wherefore, whofoever are predestinate to obtaine eternall life in Christ and by Christ, they are also elected to haue the very gift of faith. Therefore it must needs be, that at length they shall beleeue in Christ.

IV. The fourth benefit is iustificacion, that is a free pardoning of our finnes, and the imputation of the righteousness of Christ, for it followeth Faith: because whofoever are endued with true faith in Christ, are also iustificed, the Apostle sheweth when he putteth it after calling, before which he keth predestination. And when he saith that we are elect in Christ, that we might be holy and without spot or blame in the presence of God: and that this is not done while we are in this world, but by the pardoning of all our faults, and by the imputation of his perfect obedience. Wherefore it must needs be, that all the elect shall be iustificed, and be taken for most pure and without blame in Gods presence.

With iustificacion is ioyed regeneration, & sanctification by the holy Ghost: namely, whilst we are made new creatures by him; and the sonnes of God too: not onely by adoption, but also by regeneration. For when Christ iustificeth vs, hee doth not onely forgive vs our vnrighteousnes, and impute his righteousness vnto vs, but also he taketh from vs our stony heart, and giueth vs a fleshy heart of his owne: and he strips vs of our old man, and puts on his new man. Lastly, hee taketh away the corruption of our nature: and makes vs partakers of his diuine nature: & so indeede of the sonnes of men, he makes vs the sonnes of God, and his brethren too. Therefore it is said, that we are predestinated to adoption by Iesus Christ, and elect that we may be holy without blame, and that which is borne of the spirit, is called spirit. Therefore the elected to eternall life, must needs be begotten anew to be the sons of God, and be made partakers of the diuine nature, and be new creatures in Christ.

Hence itteth the sixth effect of predestination, which is heidfully to be regarded, the loue of righteousness, and the detestation of sinne. For in regeneration, the affections are principally changed; namely, the affections of the corrupt nature and flesh, into the affections of the diuine nature and spirit. Hence it is that the Apostle saith, that they which are borne anew, doe walke according to the spirit, and not after the flesh and not to fauour the things of the flesh, but the things of the spirit. And the chiefe affections of the flesh, are the loue of sin, that is, the concupiscence of the flesh, and contrariwise the hatred of righteousness, and the law of God, which are not of the Father, but of the world. Therefore the chiefe affections of regeneration, and the spirit, are the loue of righteousness and of the law of God, and the hatred of sin. For that which is spoken chiefly of Christ, Thou hast loved righteousness and hated iniquity; is to be vnderstood of all the members of Christ, endued with his spirit, because it is truly accomplished in them. Hence it is, that David who in himselfe doth represent the disposition of all the regenerate, said of himselfe, I haue loved thy law, thy law is in the middle of my heart; I haue hated all the workers of iniquity; I wil not sit with the wicked. Also Paul, I am delighted, faith he, in the law of God, according to the inner man, that is, in as much as I am borne anew. And no man doubteth, but that both these affections are the effects of predestination, except he be ignorant that all these are the gifts of God, which as in time he bestoweth on his, so also hee hath decreed to bestow them on them before the foundation of the world.

And from these two affections, being the first fruits

of regeneration, ariseth a care and endeavour to doe good works, that is, to sit sin, & to fulfill the law of God, which is the seauenb effect of predestination. For he which hateth any thing from his heart, taketh heed of it as much as he can, and he flyeth from it, and escheweth it: and on the contrary, he which loueth any thing from his heart, that also he seeketh after, and endeavoureth himselfe to the coping of it. Therefore the Apostle John, maketh this a chiefe difference betweene the sons of God, and the children of the Diuell, that is, betweene them that are borne anew: & them that are not borne anew, that the children of God both loue and doe righteousness, and the children of the diuell loue sinne and doe it: as also the diuell sinned from the beginning: and Christ came to dissolve the workes of the diuell, namely in his elect; for in the reprobate he leaneth them vnouched, because they are not giuen him of the father to be purged, borne anew, & saved. Therefore seeing Christ was before ordained & predestinate to the doing of all these workes, & that there is no good wrought in vs, which was not provided for vs in Christ from al eternity: it is a cleare case, that the care also of doing good workes, is an effect of predestination. And the Apostle plainly teacheth it when he saith, that we are created in Christ to good workes, which God hath prepared that we might walke in them. To this purpose serueth that which the Apostle delivereth of loue vsfained, to which he sheweth that we were elect, & of a good conscience: which he makes the inseparable companion of the faith of the elect. Lastly, of a pure heart, which he ascribeth to the elect, considering the vsfaythfull haue nothing cleane in them, and that their minde and conscience is defiled. Now that this care to do good workes, is necessary in all the elect, Peter sheweth it, when he bids vs to endeavour to make our election and calling sure by good workes, as some copies haue. But to whom shall we make it sure? not vnto God (for it was sure vnto him before the foundation of the world,) but vnto our selues, and to our neighbours. And this is one of the chiefe vntes of good workes, that by them, not as by causes, but as by effects of predestination & faith, both we, & also our neighbours are certified of our election, and of our saluation too. Furthermore, considering whilst we haue a care to glorifie God, to doe good workes, and we will not be conformable to the world in the wickednesse of it, neither submit our felices to our flesh and Sathan: the flesh, the world and Sathan, do perpetually war against vs; and therewithall it cometh to passe, they being most valiant enemies, that either we are overcome, or at the least in fight are foiled.

And therefore we are constrained to flie vnto the Lord, & to craue his assistance: therefore the eighth effect of our predestination is the calling vpon God, that in this fight he would giue vs ayde against the diuell, the world, and the flesh. For this is the property of the spirit, which the elect haue, to stirre them vp to prayer: for the spirit it selfe maketh request for vs, with groanings that cannot be uttered, that is to say, it mouerh vs to make request. And because we are sons, God hath sent the Spirit of his Son into our hearts, crying Abba, Father. And God biddeth vs call vpon him in the day of tribulation, promising to heare vs. From these proceedeth the ninth effect of predestination, namely, a perpetual repentance for our daily stippes, and continuall desire to bee bettered in godlinesse. So that also for this cause chiefly, we heartily desire to be dissolved out of this world, & to be with Christ for this end, that we might sin no more. For this is a thing proper to the elect of God euen now borne anew as we may see in the Apostle, who speaketh thus in the name of all the regenerate: O miserable man that I am, who shall deliver me from the bodie of this death? And againe, I desire to be dissolved, and to be with Christ.

From this ninth effect proceedeth the tenth, namely, a desire that Christ may come, & make an end of all our miseries and finnes, and perfectly restore his owne kingdom. That this is proper to the elect, the Apostle sheweth, when he saith, that they loue the coming of the Lord: and Iohn bringeth in the spouse of CHRIST, crying, Come Lord Iesus, come quickly. Yea, and Christ himselfe hath taught vs to pray: Let thy kingdom come. And because that they which pray on this wise, are also heard according to Gods promise: In the day of tribulation call vpon me, and I will heare thee: hence appeareth the cleuenb effect of predestination, true patience, that is, not only true comfort, but also a reioicing in adversities, as the Apostle describeth it. And therefore a certaine taking vp of courage and recovery of strength against his enemies: whereby it cometh to passe, that all things turne to the saluation of the elect. For the elect, albeit they be often beaten down in fight, yet because Christ speedily fendeth aide from heauē vnto them, they rise vp courageously, & begin againe the fight against sinne and the diuell, and all other the enemies of Christ: and they fight so long, till they be made conquerours, and are assured of the victorie, and of the crowne, which assurance also is an effect of predestination giuen to all the elect. For what (saith the Apostle) shall we say to these things? If God be on our side, who can be against vs? Therefore our Lord Iesus teacheth, that the elect can not be seduced, and so perish, no nor by the cunning of Anti-christ, and his miracles. And lastly, hence appeareth that last effect of predestination, which wee can obtaine in this life, the gift of perseverance vnto the end in faith; and a true possession of Christ, ioyed with a wantonnesse to liue a godly life, and a desire to glorifie him. For this giue is bestowed vpon all the elect, as the Lord promised by Ieremie: I will put my feare into their hearts: that they may not depart from me. And when they shall come to the end of their liues, they shall be receiued into the heauenly glorie, vntill such time, as their bodies also being raised vp, they may take full possession of eternall life. Thus we see that it is very certaine, that those which are elected to eternall life, are also predestinate to vse those means, by which as by certaine steps & staires, they climb into that heavenly dwelling place. And therefore that wee were predestinate to these means, namely, faith, iustificatio & good works, because we were elected to eternall life, according to the purpose and grace of God.

Wherefore by this means the doctrine also of the Pelagians is confuted as touching predestinatio to life, by our faith & works, which God foresaw we should doe. Whereas on the contrary, there God did predestinate vs to faith & good works, because he did choose vs to eternall life. For the Apostle saith not, I obtained mercie, because I was faithfull, or because I should be faithfull, but that I might be faithfull. Neither, saith he, that we are elected in Christ, because we should be holy and without blame, but that we might be holy and without blame. Neither, doth he say that we were created in Christ, because we did or should doe good works: but we were created to good works, which God prepared that we might walke in them. Lastly, he saith not, that the grace of Christ appeared, because we were to live soberly, iustly, and godly, but that it therefore appeared, that we denying all vngodlinesse, and the lusts of this world, might live soberly, iustly, and godly in this present world. We see therefore, that by this doctrine, that wicked opinion is ouerthrowne, which teacheth that we doe prevent the grace of God by our merits which God foresaw: and on the contrary, here we see, how foolish the belly-gods of this world are deceived, which reason thus: if we be predestinate to eternall life, and our predestination be certaine and vnchangeable, what neede we endeavour our selues, beleue, or doe good works? for howsoeuer it fall out, and howsoeuer the elect do liue, vndoubtedly they cannot perish, because they are predestinate to eternall life. Alas poore wretches, they see not, that they feare those things that are to be conioyned, namely, the end and the means of the end: and that they breake the chaine, which in no wise either can or must be loosed: whilst that they feare their calling and iustificatio: yea, and faith too and good works, from predestination and glorification. As though God did glorifie them whom he did predestinate, before he called and iustificed them: yea, and before they can beleue, and shew their quick and lively faith by works. Contrariwise, let vs learne what our duty is. If any be elect to eternall life, they also are predestinate to the means by which they come vnto it. And we beleue (as we are bound to doe) that we are predestinate to eternall life: and therefore we must also beleue, that we haue beene elected to faith and good works, that by them, as by certaine steps, we might be brought to eternall life. And therefore so far must we be from neglecting faith, and the means of good works, and of a holy life; that contrariwise, it is rather our duty, to keepe faith in a good conscience, and to be conuerfant in good workes, which God hath prepared, that we might walke in them. And because we can neither attaine to the end, nor the means that bring vs therunto of our selues: therefore it is our part to craue them at Gods hands by prayer, that he would giue vs faith, and a care to doe good workes, and increase them in vs. Neither must we onely aske them, but also certainly trust that we shall obtaine them for Christ his cause. For if for all them which are predestinate to eternall life, God hath prepared faith, by which they may beleue, and good workes to walke in: therefore if we beleue (as by Gods commandement wee are bound) that wee are in Christ elected to eternall glory: we must also be perswaded, that before we depart hence, he will giue vs true repentance, increase true faith, inflame vs with loue: lastly, that he will minister vnto vs abundantly all things in Christ, to obtaine the end. Yea, this confidence also and prayer, it is one effect of predestination, by which we get the rest. Therefore this doctrine we must hold, that predestination to eternall life doth not take away the means of obtaining it, but rather establish them. And therefore both these principles are true, namely, that the elect to life cannot perish: and vnlesse a man beleue in Christ, and perseuere vnto the end in this faith working by loue, he shall perish. The reason is because in predestination, the means and the end of it are conioyned together, that the one cannot be seuered from the other. Wherefore whosoever holdeth not the means vnto the end (amongst which faith is one) it is manifest; that he was neuer predestinate, and therefore must needs perish: as on the contrary, he which holdeth faith, must needs be saued. So the truth of these propositions is euident. He which beleueth in the Sonne hath life eternall; contrariwise, he which beleueth not in the Sonne, the anger of God remaineth vpon him; because as a constant faith is a signe of election, so obstinate infidelitie is a token of reprobation.

Bradford. They are, for God hath giuen thee a penitent and beleening heart: that is, an heart, which desireth to repent and beleue. For such an one is taken of him (hee accepting the will for the deede) for a penitent and beleening heart indeede.

A DIRECTION FOR THE GOVERNE- MENT OF THE TONGVE

according to Gods word.

To the Reader.

CH R I S T I A N Reader, lamentable and fearefull is the abuse of the tongue among all sorts and degrees of men euery where. Hence daily arise manifold finnes against God, innumerable scandals and grievances to our brethren. It would make a mans heart to bleed, to heare and consider such Swearing, Blaspheming, Curst speaking, Railing, Backbiting, Slandering, Chiding, Quarrelling, Conceding, Teasing, Mocking, Flattering, Lying, Dissembling, Paine and idle talking ouerslow in all places, so as men which feare God had better be any where then in the company of most men. Well then, art thou a man which hast made little conscience of thy speech and walke? repent seriously of this sinne, and amend thy life, lest for the abusing of thy tongue thou criest with Dives in hell. Send Lazarus that he may dip the tip of his finger in water and coole my tongue. And if thou be one which hast care to order thy selfe in speech and silence according to Gods word, oh, doe it more. For what a shame is it, that men with the same tongue wherewith they confesse the faith and religion of Christ, should by vaine and vngodly speech utterly deny the power thereof? And for thy better helpe herein, I haue penned these few lines following, concerning the Government of the Tongue. Vse them for thy benefit, and finding profit thereby, giue glory to God. Clv. 13. OF THE GOVERNMENT OF THE TONGVE.

CHAP. I.

Of the generall meanes of ruling the Tongue.

He gouernement of the Tongue is a vertue pertaining to the holy vsage of the Tongue according to GODS Word.

And for the well ordering of it, two things are requisite: a pure heart, and skill in the language of Canaan.

The pure heart is most necessarie, because it is the fountaine of speech, and if the fountaine be defiled the streames that issue thence cannot be cleane.

And because the heart of man by nature is a bottomlesse gulfie of iniquitie, two things are to be knowne: first, how it must be made pure: and then how it is alwaies afterward to be kept pure.

The way to get a pure heart is this: First, thou must seriously examine thy life and thy conscience, for all thy finnes past: then with a heauy and bleeding heart confesse them to God, vterly condemning thy selfe. Thirdly, with deep sighes and groanes of spirit cry vnto heauen to God the Father, in the name of Christ for pardon, I say, for pardon of the same finnes, as it were for life and death, and that day and night, till the Lord send downe from heauen a sweet certificate into thy perplexed conscience by his holy spirit, that all thy sins are done away. Now at the same instant in which pardon shall be granted, God likewise will once againe stretch forth that mightie hand of his, whereby he made thee when thou wast not, to make thee a new creature, to create a new heart in thee, to renew a right spirit in thee, and to stablish thee by his free spirit. For whom he iustifieth, them also at the same time he sanctifieth.

The purified heart appears by these signes. I. If thou feele thy selfe to bee displeased at thine owne infirmities and corruptions, and to droope vnder them as men doe vnder bodily sickness. II. If thou begin to hate and to flie thine owne personall finnes. III. If thou feele a grieue and sorrow after thou hast offended God. IV. If thou heartily desire to abstaine from all manner of sinne. V. If thou be careful to auoide all occasions and entisements to euill. VI. If thou trauell and doe thine endeaour in euery good thing. VII. If thou desire and pray to God to wash and rince thine heart in the blood of Christ.

When the heart is pure, to keepe it so is the special worke of faith, which purifieth the heart. Faith purifieth the heart by a particular applying of Christ crucified with all his merits. Elisba when he went vp, & lay vpon the dead child, and put his mouth to his mouth, and his eyes vpon his eyes, and his hands vpon his hands, & stretched himselfe vpon him, then the flesh of the childe waxed warme: Afterward Elisba rose and spread himselfe vpon him the second time: then the childe needed seauen times and opened his eyes. So must a man by faith euen spread himselfe vpon the crosse of Christ, applying hands and feet to his pierced hands and feet, and his wretched heart to Christs bleeding heart, and then feele himselfe warmed by the heate of Gods spirit, and sinne from day to day crucified with Christ, and his dead heart quickened and renewed. And this applying which faith maketh, is done by a kind of reasoning, which faith maketh thus: Hath God of his mercie giuen his owne Sonne to be my Saviour, to shed his blood for mee? and hath he of his mercie granted vnto mee the pardon of all my finnes? I will therefore endeaour to keepe my heart and my life vblameable that I doe not offend him hereafter in word or deece, as I haue done heretofore.

The language of Canaan is, whereby a man endued with the spirit of adoption, vnfeinedly calleth vpon the name of God in Christ, and so consequently doth as it were, familiarly talke and speake with God. This language must needs be learned, that the tongue may be well grounded. For man must first be able to talke with God, before hee can feele wisely to talke with man. For this cause when men are to haue communication one with another, they are fitt of all to be careful that they often make their prayers to God that hee would guide and blese them in their speeches, as Dauid did, Psal. 141. 3. Set a watch O Lord, before my mouth, and keepe the doore of my lips. And againe, Psal. 51. 15. O Lord open thou my lips and my mouth shall shew forth thy praise. Where we may see, that the mouth is as it were locked vp from speaking any good thing, vntill the Lord open it. And Pash hauing the gift of ordering his tongue in wonderful measure, yet desired the Ephelians to pray for him, that utterance might be giuen him, and good reason, because God rules the tongue.

CHAP. II.

Of the matter of our speech.

THe gouernement of the tongue containeth two parts: holy speech, and holy silence. In holy speech must be considered the matter of our speech, and the manner.

The matter is commonly one of these three, either God, our neighbour, or our selues.

As concerning God, this caueat must be remembered; that the honorable titles of his glorious Maiesty be neuer taken into our mouths, vntilke it be vpon a weightie and iust occasion, so as we may plainly see that glory will redound to him thereby: and for this cause the third commandment was giuen, that men might not take vpon the name of God in vaine, Exod. 20. 7. that is, rashly and lightly.

And therefore lamentable and fearefull is the practise euery where. For it is a common thing with men to begin their speech, and to place titles of Gods most high maiestie in the fore-front almost of euery sentence, by saying, O Lord! O God! O good God! O mercifull God! O Iesus! O Christ! &c. If a man be to say any thing, he will not say, Tea, or Nay; but, O Lord yea: or, O Lord nay. If a man bee to reprocure his inferiour, he will presently say, O Lord haue mercie on vs, what a slow backe are thou? what a lie is this, &c. An earthly Prince, if he should haue his name so tossed in our mouthes at euery word, would neuer beare it, and how shall the euer-living God suffer it? nay how can he suffer it? I say no more, but theu with thy selfe thinke how: for in the third commandment the punishment is set downe, That he will not hold him guiltlesse that taketh his name in vaine. And the Angels in reuerence to Gods maiestie couer their faces, Isa. 6. 2.

Concerning our neighbour, we are to consider whether the thing which we are about to speake, be good or euill.

This being weighed, if it be good, and so commendable, then we are readily and cheerfully, & that vpon euery occasion to vter it, especially in his absence, whether he be friend or a foe: as S. Iohn writeth of Demetrius. Demetrius (saith he) hath good report of all men, and of the truth it selfe: yea, and wee our selues beare record, and ye know that our testimonie is true.

As for the euill which any shall know by his neighbour, he is in no wise to speake of it, whether it be an infirmite or a grosse sinne, vntilke in his conscience he shall finde himselfe called of God to speake.

A man is called to speake in three cases: First, when he is called before a Magistrate, and is lawfully required to testifie the euill which he knoweth by another. II. When any is to admonish his brother of any fault for his amendment. III. When the hurt or danger that may arise of the euill is to be prevented in others. As a man may say to one well disposed, Take heede of such a mans company: for he is giuent to such or such a vice.

To this end, they of the house of Cloe do certifye Paul of the disorders in Corinth. And Ioseph certified his father of his brethrens slaunder. In this case all treasons are to be reuealed as tending to the ruine of the whole commonwealth. Thus Elisba reuealed the secret of the king of Syria.

And if it shall bee thought conuenient to mention the euill which we know by any man, it must be done onely in generall manner: the person, and all circumstances which will defcry the person, concealed.

Concerning things which are secret in our neighbour, we are not to be suspitious, but to suspect both speech and iudgement. Lame suspecteth no euill. Iudge nothing (saith Paul) before the time, vntill the Lord come, who will lighten things that are hid in darkenesse, and make the counsels of the heart manifest. Augustine hath a good and speciall rule to this purpose, that there be three things of which we must giue no iudgement: Gods predestination, the Scriptures, and the estate of men vnalled.

As touching a mans selfe, hee is neither to praise nor dispraise himselfe. As Salomon saith, Let another praise thee, and not thine owne mouth: a stranger, and not thine owne lippes. Yet otherwhiles the times doe fall out that a man may vse an holy kinde of boasting, especially when the disgrace of the person is the disgrace also of the Gospell, and of religion, and of God himselfe: as Paul did. But wherein (saith he, 2 Cor. 11. 21.) any will vse boldnesse (I speake foolishly) I will vse boldnesse. They are Hebrewes, so am I, &c.

CHAP. III.

Of the manner of our speech, and what must be done before we speake.

THus much of the matter of our speech: Now followeth the manner. In the manner of our speaking three things are to be pondered: what must be done before we speake, what in speaking, what after we haue spoken.

Before we speake, consideration must be ended of the thing to be spoken, and of the end. James requires that men should be slow to speake, and swift to heare. Salomon saith, He that answereth a matter before he heare it, is as folly & shame to him. The minde is the guide of the tongue: therefore men must consider before they speake. The tongue is the messenger of the heart, and therefore as oft as we speake without meditation going before, so oft the messenger runs without his arrand. The tongue is placed in the middle of the mouth, and it is compassed in with lips and teeth as with a double trench, to shew vs, how to vse heed and preconsideration before we speake: and therefore it is good aduise, to keepe the key of the mouth not in the mouth, but in the cupboard of the mouth. Augustine saith well, that as in eating and drinking men make choise of meates: so in manifold speeches we should make choise of talke.

Here are condemned idle words, that is, such words as are spoken to little or no end, or purpose. And they are not to be esteemed as little finnes, when as men are to giue account of euery idle word, Matth. 12. 36.

CHAP. IV.

What is to be done in speaking; and of wisdom.

When we are in speaking, two things are to be practised: first, care must be had of the speech, that it be gracious: secondly, it is to bee vttered with conuenient bonds of truth.

The speech is gracious, when it is so vttered, that the graces of God wrought in the heart by the holy Ghost, are as it were pictured and painted forth in the same: for speech is the very image of the heart.

Contrary to this is rotten speech, that is, all such talke as is void of grace, which is the heart and pith of our speech.

And by this it appeareth, that no vice can be named but with disliking: and hereupon in Scriptures when by occasion a vice should be named, in token of a loathing thereof, the name of the vice is omitted, and the name of the contrarie vertue vsed in the roome thereof, as in these words: Iob 1. 5. for Iob thought, It may be that my finnes haue sinned and blessed, that is, blasphemed God. This being true, then by proportion the visible representation of the vices of men in the world, which is the substance and matter whereof playes and entludes are made, is much more to be auoided.

Gods graces, which wee are to shew forth in our communication are these: Wisedome, Truth, Reuerence, Modestie, Meekenesse, Sobrietie in iudgement, Vrbanitie, Fidelitie, Care of others good name: and let vs consider of them in order.

Wisedome in our speech is a goodly ornament. The Apostles when they waited for the holy Ghost in Ierusalem, it descended vpon them in the forme of fierie tongues: and then it is said, Act. 2. 4. that they spake as the holy Ghost gaue them utterance in Apophthegmes or wise sentences. And he that gouernes his tongue: wisely, addeth doctrine to his lips, that is, so speaketh, as that others be made wise thereby.

This wisdome is then shewed, when a man can in iudgement apply his talke, & as it were in good manner make it fit to all the circumstances of persons, times places, things. A soole pouerth out all his miude, but a wife man keepeth in till afterward. A word spoken in his place, is like apples of golde with pictures of silver, Pro. 25. 11.

Now he that would haue his speech to be wise, must first of all himselfe become a wise man. And the wise man of whom the holy Scripture speakes, is a godly man, and such an one as feareth God: because his feare of God is the beginning and head of wisdome: as on the contrary, the fool, whereof the Scripture often speaketh, is the vngodly person, that maketh no conscience of any sinne. And inleede such an one is the most senseless foole of all. Hee that shall euer and anon be casting himselfe into the fire and water, and run vpon dangerous places to breake his legges, armes, necke: and further shall take pleasure in doing all this, is either a foole, or a mad man. Now the vngodly man as oft as he sinneth, he endeavoureth as much as in him lyeth to pitch his soule into hell, and whereas he taketh pleasure in sinne, he sports himselfe with his owne destruction.

Furthermore the man fearing God must haue two things in his heart, a perswasion of Gods presence; and Awe.

The perswasion of Gods presence, is whereby a man is continually refolued, that wherefoeuer he is, he standeth before God, who doth fee euen into the secret of his heart. This was in Cornelius: Now therefore (saith he, Act. 10. 31.) we are in Gods presence to heare all things that are commanded thee of God.

Awe in regard of God, is that whereby a man behaueh himselfe reuerently, because he is in Gods presence.

Awe is either in regard of sinne, or of chastisements.

Awe in respect of sin, is when one is asfraid to sinne, fearing not so much the punishment, as sinne it selfe, because it is sinne. For he feareth God indeed, which is of this mind, that if there were no iudge to condemne him no hell to torment him no diuell nor conscience to accuse him; yet he would not sin because Gods blessed Maieste is by it offended and displeased: and if he had it in his choice, whether he would sinne or lose his life, he had rather die then willingly and wittingly sin against God. This awe being in Ioseph, was the cause that moued him not to commit folly with Potiphar's wife, How then (saith he, Gen. 39. 9.) can I doe this great wickednesse, and sinne against God?

Awe in chastisements, is when one humbly himselfe vnder the mighty hand of God, with all meekenesse and patience, when God layeth his hand on him more or lesse. When Shemi came forth and cursed Dauid, and flung stones at him, what did he? truly he stood in awe of God, and therefore said, 2 Sam. 16. 10. What haue I to doe with you, ye sonnes of Zeruiah? for he curseth, euen because the Lord hath bidden him curse Dauid, who dare then say, Wherefore hauest thou done so?

When a man is thus made wise, that is, righteous, and fearing God, he is so guided by the spirit of feare, that he cannot but speake wisely. Salomon saith, Pro. 10. 32. The lippest of the righteous know what is acceptable: but the mouth of the wicked speaks forward things. And againe, The heart of the wise guideth the mouth wisely.

Contrarie to this is fond and foolish talke: an example hereof we haue in Luke, where Pilate warning the feare of God, saith, Luke 23. 14. I finde no fault in Christ: let vs therefore chastise him, and send him away. Whereas he ought to haue reasoned thus: I finde no fault in him: therefore let vs send him away without chastisement.

CHAP. V.

Of Truth, and of Reuerence in speech.

TRuth of speech is a vertue whereby a man speaketh as hee thinketh: and so consequently, he speaketh as euery thing is, so farre forth as possible he can. It is made a noie of a righteous man, to speake the truth from the heart, and they that deale truly, are Gods delight.

This is alwaies required in all our doctines,

accusations, defences, testimonies, Promises, bargaines, counsels: but especially in Iudges and Magistrates, sitting on iudgement seate, because then they stand in Gods stead, who is truth it selfe.

To this place belongeth Apologie, which is, when a Christian called before a Magistrate, and faithfully examined of his religion, confesseth Christ boldly, & denieth not the truth.

Contrary to this, is lying, cogging, glossing, smoothing, dissembling: as for example, Gehazi, after hee had receiued money and garments of Naaman the Syrian against Elisus will, he went and stood before his master, who said vnto him, Whence comest thou Gehazi? who making it nothing to lie for a vantage, smoothed it ouer finely, and said, Thy servant went no whither. To the like effect and purpose report is made of a rich man that had two chests: the one whereof he called all the world, the other his friend. In the first he putteth nothing: in the second he putteth all his substance. When his neighbour came to borrow money, he vsed to answer, Truly I haue neuer a pennie in all the world, meaning his emptie chest, but I will see (saith he) what my friend can doe, looking thereby for interest by the money out of his other chest.

This vice is very common, and it is a rare thing to finde a man that maketh a conscience of a lie.

Lying is, when a man speaketh otherwife then the truth is, with a purpose to deceiue. Here note that there is great difference betweene these two speeches, It is an vntruth, and It is a lie. The first may be vsed when a man speaketh falsehoods. But in vsing the second, we must be heedie and sparing: for when a man is challenged for a lie, three things are laid to his charge. I. That he speaketh falsely. II. That he is willing to doe so. III. That he hath a desire and purpose to deceiue.

Quest. Whether may not a man lie, if it be for the procuring of some great good to our neighbour, or to the whole countrey where we are.

Ans. No. Reasons are these: I. Lying is forbidden, (a) as an abomination to the Lord. II. (b) We are not doe any euill that good may come thereof. III. He which lyeth, in so doing conformeth himselfe to the diuell, who (c) is a lyer, and the father thereof.

Obiect. I. Such lying is for our neighbours good, and not against charity.

Ans. No: for (d) charitie reioyceth in the truth. Obiect. II. The holy Scriptures haue mentioned the lies of the Patriarkes.

Ans. We must not lye by example against rules of Gods word.

Obiect. III. Rahab and the midwives of Egypt in suauing the spies, and in preseruing the Israelites infants, vsed lying, and are commended for their facts.

Ans. They are commended for their faith, not for their lying. The workes which they did, were excellent works of mercy, and therefore to be allowed: and the doers failed only in manner of performing them.

As truth is required in speech, so also reuerence to God and man.

Reuerence to God, is when we so speake of God and vse his titles, that we shew reuerence our selues, and moue reuerence in others. If thou wilt not keepe (saith the Lord, Deut. 28. 58.) and doe all the words of this law (that are written in this booke) and feare the glorious & fearefull name, THE LORD THY GOD, then the Lord will make tby plagues wonderfull.

Here take heede of all manner of blaspheming, which is, when men vse such speeches of God, as doth either detract any thing from his Maieste, or ascribe any thing to him, not becomming him: a sinne of all other to be detested. Reasons. I. A blasphemous is viler then the rest of the creatures: for they praise God in their kinde, & shew forth his power, goodness, and wisdom: but hee dishonoureth God in his wretched speech. II. Hee is as the mad dogge that flyeth in his masters face, who keepeth him, and giueth him bread. III. Custome in blasphemies sheweth a man to be the child of the diuell, and no child of God as yet. A Father lying on his death bed, called the three children to him which hee kept, and tolde them that one onely of them was his owne sonne, & that the rest were only brought vp by him: therefore vnto him hee gaue all his good: but which of these was his naturall sonne hee would not in any wise declare. When hee was dead, euery one of the three children pleaded that he was the sonne, and therefore that the goods were his. The matter being brought before a Iudge could not be ended: but the Iudge was constrained to take this course: he caused the dead corpses of the father to be set vp against a tree, and commanded the three sonnes to take bowes & arrows, and to shoote against their father, and to see who could come neerest the heart. The first and second did shoote at their father, & did hit him; the third was angry with both the other through naturall affeetio of a child to a father, and refused to shoote. This done, the Iudge gaue sentence that the two first were no sonnes, but the third onely, and that he should haue the goods. The like tryall may be vsed to know who be Gods children. Such persons with whom blaspheming is rise, are very diuels incarnate, and the children of the diuell, who rend God in peeces, & shoot him through with their darts, as it is said of the Egyptian when he blasphemed, that he smote or pierced through Gods nose. Magistrates and rulers seuerely punish such as abuse their names, and they doe it iustly: how much lesse then should blasphemers of Gods Name escape without great punishment?

Again, here we must be warned to take heed of that customeable swearing and also of perjury. It is a very strange sinne: for the perjured person doth not onely sin himselfe, but withall he endeavoureth to intangle God in the same sinne with himselfe.

Further, take heede lest thou doest either make or recite the iests which are contrived out of the phrases of Scripture: which are very many, and very viciually rehearsed in company. The oyle wherewith the tabernacle and the Arke of the Testament and the Priests were appointed, was holy: and therefore no man might put it to any other vse, as to anoint his owne flesh therewith, or to make the like vato it. (a) Pilate a poore Paynim when he heard the name of the Sonne of God, was afraid, and we much more ought to tremble at the word of God, not to make our selues merrie with it. And therefore the scoffing of Iulian the Apolasta is very fearefull, who was wont to reach Christians boxes on the eare, & withall, bid them turne the other, and obey their masters commendement, Whosoever shall smite thee on the right cheek, turne to him the other also, Matth. 5. 39. And he denied pay and like reward to his souldiers that were Christians, because he said he would make them fit for the kingdom of heaven, considering that Christ had said, Mat. 5. 8. Blessed are the poore in spirit: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.

Here also men must learne to take heede of all manner of charmes and enchantments, which commonly are nothing else but the words of Scripture or such like, vsed for the curing of paines and diseases both in men and beasts. As for example, the first wordes of Saint Johns Gospel, In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, &c. are vsed to be written in a paper, and hung about mens neckes to cure agues. But the truth is, such kinde of practises are diuellish. Patrons of charmes hold, that in such words as are either diuine or barbarous; is much efficacie. But whence is this efficacie? from God? from men? or from the diuell? If it shall be said from God, wee must know that the word vsed in holy manner, is the instrument of God to conuey vnto vs spiritall blessings, as faith, regeneration, repentance: but it doth not serue to bring vnto vs corporall health. Will then, belike words take vertue from the speaker, and are made powerful by the strength of his imagination. Indee of this opinion are some phisicians, as Aesculapius and Paracelsus, who thinke that phantasmie is like to the Sun, which worketh on all things to which his beames doe come, and the latter that by imagination miracles might be wrought. But this opinion is fond, & the reasons alleadged for it are without weight. For imaginations are nothing but shadowes of things. And as an image of a man in a glasse hath no power in it, but onely serues to relembe and represent the body of a man so it is with the phantasmie and conceit of the minde, and no otherwise.

And if imagination haue any force, it is onely within the spirits and humours of a mans owne body: but to giue force to worke in the bodies of others it cannot; no more then the shadow of one bodie can ordinarily cure the body of another on which it lieth.

Wherefore words vsed in the way of biddicure, be they in themselves neuer so good, are no better then the diuels sacraments: and when they are vsed to blinde people, hee it is, that comming vnder hand, worketh the cure, & by turning himselfe into an Angel of light, deludes them. But it were better for a man to die a thousand times the to vse such remedies, which in curing the body, destroy the soule.

Lastly, auoid all imprecations and cursings, either against men or other creatures: for God in iudgement to punish such cursed speaking, often brings to passe such imprecations: as may appeare in the Iewes, who at the arraignment of Christ, cryed, saying, Mat. 27. 25. His blood be vpon vs, and vpon our children: which imprecation is verified vpon them vnto this day. At Newburge in Germany a certaine mother cursed her sonne, saying, Get thee away, I would thou mightst neuer come againe alive: the very same day he went into the water, & was drowned. Again, a mother brought her childe to the Vniuersity of Wittenberge, by reason he was possessed with an vncleane spirit: being demanded how it came to passe, she answered in the hearing of many, that in her anger shee said, The diuell take thee, and thereupon presently the childe was possessed. And in our country, men often with the plague, the poxe, the penitence to their children, their seruants, their cattell: and often it falls out accordingly.

In the daies of King Edward, certaine English souldiers (as I am certainly informed by a wittes then present) being by a tempest cast vpon the sands on the coast of France, gaue themselves to prayer, and commended their soules to God, as in so great danger it was meet: but one among the rest, desperately minded, went apart & cryed out, saying, O gallows claimeth thy right, gallows/claimeth thy right. Now the said party among the rest (as God would haue it) escaped safe to land; and afterward liuing some space of time in France, returned againe to England, where he was hanged for stealing of hories: and thus according to his desire the gallows claimed her right.

Reuerence to man is in 2 respects, either because he is created after the image of God, or because he is about vs in age, gifts, authority.

In the first consideration, men must haue care to giue such names to children as are proper and fit, viciually, and knowne the signification whereof may admonish them of the promises of God, of godlinesse, or of some good dutie. And there be foure allowed ends of giuing names. 1. To preserve the memory of some thing by the name giuen, as Adam, Isaac, Isaac. 1. To signify some thing to come, as Enoch, Abraham, John, Peter. 1. To preserve the name and memory of parents & kindred, which was vsed in the birth of John Bapt. This culture may still be retained, if there be a good example in the ancients that the childe may follow. 1V. That the life and profession of good men may be renewed in the renewing of their names.

Here we must take heede, in no wise to giue to children, the proper names or titles of God; as Iesus, Immanuel, &c.

Neither are the professours of the Gospel to be intituled by the names of such as haue beene famous instruments in the Church, as to be called Caluinists, Lutherans, &c. Now this I say, that every one of you saith, I am Paul, and I am Apollos, I am Cephas, and I am Christs: Is Christ denied? was Paul crucified for you? either were ye baptized in the name of Paul?

And it is a bold part of the pestilent generation of Papists, who take to themselves the name of Iesuites, whereas the like name of Christian was giuen to the disciples at Antioch not by the deuile of man, but by diuine oracul.

As the changing of the name giuen in Baptisme is not to be allowed; so the varying of it according to the varietie of language, (if neither hurt nor fraud to any bee intended thereby) is not vnlawfull. Vpon this ground Saul is called Paul: and Christ calls Simon his disciple otherwhiles Cephas, otherwhiles Peter. And very worthy Diuines in this age, that their writings might be read of the aduersaries, haue in like sort without offence varied their names. Melancthon calls himselfe Didymus Eueristus, and Melangeu: Bucer intitules himselfe Aretinus Felinus: and Theodore Beza once writt himselfe Nathaniel Nezechins.

Reuerence to a man as he is superiour, is in viving titles of reuerence. Sara is commended in Scriptures for obeying her husband, and for calling him Sir. But exccesse must here be avoided, when titles of honour proper to God are giuen to men, as head of the Churchlike Church to the Pope, Lady and Queene of heauen to the mother of Christ. This fault Christ reprooueth in the young man, saying, why callest thou me good? there is none good but God.

CHAP. VI.

Of Modestie and of Meekenesse.

Modestie in speech hath diuers canes? first, if a man speake any thing of himselfe, that is, in his owne commendation, let him alter the person and speake of himselfe as of another: I know a man (saith Paul, speaking of himselfe) In Christ about fourteene yeeres agoe, &c. which was taken up into Paradise, and heard words which cannot be spoken. And John (saith of himselfe) When Iesus saw his mother, and the disciples whom he loved, standing by, &c. Here take heed of boasting, whereby men imitate the diuell who said, All this power will I giue thee, and the glory of those kingdoms: for that is deliuered vnto mee, and to whomsoever I will I giue it.

Again, when a man shall haue occasion to speake of his owne faults and corruptions, let him speake the vttermost against himselfe, as

Paul called himselfe the first of all sinners. But if he be to mention any thing of himselfe, that may minister matter of commendation, let his speech rather incline to the defect, then to the exccesse as Paul saith, I am the least of the Apostles, which am not meete to be called an Apostle, because I persecuted the Church of God.

Secondly, in mentioning of things which moue blushing, we are to vse as seemly words as may be chosen. Gen. 4. 1. Afterward Adam knew Eueah his wife, which conceived and bare Cain. 2. Sam. 24. 4. And why he came to the shepcoats by the way where there was a cane, Saul went in to couer his feet, that is, to doe his easement.

Meekenesse also is required in communication, which is, when a man vseth courteous and faire speech. Put them in remembrance, &c. that they be courteous, shewing all meekenesse to all men, for we our selues also were in times past vnwise, for obedient, &c.

Meekenesse and gentlenesse theweth itselfe in Salutations, Answers, and Reproofs.

For the first, daily experience sheweth that it maketh much for the maintaining of loue, to call men by their proper names or surnames. And this was a signe of speciall fauour that God called Moses by his proper name. Yet more conuenient it is to salute our betters by names of honour or office. Thus the disciples call our sauour Christ Rabbi: and it was the viciall manner among the Iewes, to call their betters Adon, that is Lord, or Sir.

The formes of salutations are to be after the order practised in Scripture. An angell saluted Gedeon thus; The Lord be with thee thou valiant man. And Boaz came to Bethlehem, and said to the reapers, The Lords be with you: and they answered, The Lord bless thee. And the Angel saluted Mary, Haile freely beloued, the Lord is with thee, &c. Christ comming among his disciples, said, Peace be among you: and he taught them comming to any house to say, Peace be to this house. By this it appeareth, that our common formes of salutations are commendable: which are of diuers sorts; as when one meetes another: God save you: when one goes away, God be with you: in the morning, God giue you a good morning: after noone, God giue you a good evening: when one is going on his iourney; God speede your iourney: when one is working, God speede your working: Much good doe it you: when one hath a new office, God giue you voy of your office: when one is sicke, God comfort you, &c.

And when children salute their father and mother after this manner: I pray you father blesse me: I pray you mother blesse me: it is a seemly thing. For God hath made parents to be the instruments of blessing to their children, in nurturing them & praying for them: as the fifth commandment saith, Honour thy father & thy mother that they may prolong thy daies. Now they prolong the childrens daies by praying to God for blessings on them, and by such like duties.

It is anywile in all places, wher a man needeth to salute him by saying, Christ helpe you: But there is no cause why the words should then be vied more then at another time. The reasons are. I. it is an old custome fetched from the Gentiles to be a chaff, and hath no ground at all: for they vied with the like words to with men health, because they thought needing to be a faced and holy thing: and because some take it to be a signe of vnhappie and cuill successe; which indeed is otherwise. II. If there be any danger in the brain before needing, when a man hath needd the danger is past, as learned Physicians teach: therefore there is no cause of the vifing fuch words then, more then at coughing.

Against the practise of saluting each other, some things may be objected. 1. Ioh. epist. 2. ver. 10. If there come any vnto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not to house, neither bid him, God speede. Anſ. This place doth not forbid common ciuility and courtesie of man to man: but only familiarity & acquaintance with hereticks: yea such acquaintance & familiaritie as may seeme to giue approbation & applaus to their bad proceedings. I. I. Elisha sending Gehazi his seruant to lay his staffe on the dead child of the Shunamite, bad him if he met any, not to salute them, & if they spake to him, not to answer them. 2. King. 4. 29. And when our Saviour Christ sent his Disciples to preach in Iudea, he bad them to salute no man by the way. Luke the 10. 4. Anſ. The intent of these two places is not to forbid men to salute others, but rather to enioyne Gehazi and the disciples of Christ only to omit for that time the practise of the duties of common courtesie, so farre forth as they might hinder or delay the performance of weightie affaires.

Our answers must be folt, that anger be neither kindled nor increased. A soft answer putteth away wrath, but grievous words stirre up anger. Nabal by churlish language prouoked David to wrath, but Abigail by the contrary appeased him. Godon spake gently to the men of Ephraim, when they were angry against him, and appeased them. For the text saith, when he had thus spoken, then their spirits abated towards him. Therefore Salomon saith well, A ioy cometh to a man by the answer of his mouth, but how good is a word in due season.

Now if any shall raile on vs, our dutie is not to raile again. Blesse them that persecute you, blesse I say, and curse not. Be courteous not rendering euill for euill, neither reuenge for reuenge, but conuertise blesse, knowing that ye be thereunto called, that you should be heires of blessing. This thing was notably practised by David, Psal. 109. 4. For my friendship they were my aduersaries, but I gaue my selfe to prayer. And therefore in this case, either silence is to be vied, or at the most, only a iust and manifest defence of our innocencie to be made. Ezechias commanded the people to be silent, and not to say any thing to the speech of Rabshasars, now flattering, now threatening. When Eli spake hardly of Anna, and bad her put away her drunkenness, these answered, Nay my Lord, I am a woman troubled in spirit,

I have neither drunke wine nor strong drinke, but have poured out my soule before the Lord. Thus Ioseph clears himselfe, saying, I haue done nothing wherefore they should put me in the dungeon. And Daniel to Nabucodonosor, Vnto thee, O King, haue I done no hurt. And our Saviour Christ when the Iewes said vnto him, Say we not true, that thou art a Samaritane, and bast a diuell? he answered, I haue not a diuell, but I honour my Father, and ye haue dishonoured me. And Paul being to make an Apologie for himselfe, begins thus: Men and brethren, I haue in all good conscience serued God vnto this day.

Now when a man hath thus cleared himselfe, though his owne word in his owne behalfe take no effect, yet let him patiently commit his cause to God, who in time will manifest the truth, and bring it to light: as David did, Iudge me O God, (saith he), for I haue walked in mine innocencie: and againe, The wicked watcheth the righteous, and seeketh to slay him: but the Lord will not leave him in his hand, nor condemn him when he is iudged.

Meekenesse in reproofe is: when any shall admonish his brother of any fault for his amendment, with the like moderation that Chirurgions vse, who being to set the arme or legge take no effect, yet let him patiently commit his cause to God, who in time will manifest the truth, and bring it to light: as David did, Iudge me O God, (saith he), for I haue walked in mine innocencie: and againe, The wicked watcheth the righteous, and seeketh to slay him: but the Lord will not leave him in his hand, nor condemn him when he is iudged.

And this is done four waies. First, when we reprove a man generally, as Nathan did David by a parable. Secondly, when in the roome of a reproofe, we put an exhortation: in the exhortation insinuating an oblique reproofe, as when a man shall sweare in his talke. I shall not need alwaies to say, Ye do very ill to sweare, & so to dishonour God: but I will lap it vp in the forme of an exhortation, as pills are lapt in sugar, by saying, Ye are and ney say, may shall serue among vs. Reuenge not an elder, but exhort him as a father, and young men as brethren, saith Paul to Timothy. Thirdly, when the reproofe is propounded in a mans owne person, as though he were faulty which reprooueth. Paul practised this: Now these things, brethren (saith he) I haue figuratiuely applied to mine owne selfe, and a pector for your sakes, that ye might learn by vs, that no man presume above that which is writte: fourthly, when the fault is directly reproued, but yet partly with prefaces, that we doe it of loue, that we with well to the party, that we speake as considering our felues, that we also are in danger of the same fault: & partly by framing the reproofe out of the word of God, that the party may see himselfe, rather to be reproued by God, then by vs: after this manner the inferior may admonish his superiour especially when there is no other way of redreffe, and he is to listen, yielding himselfe tractable. 2. Samuel is aduised by his seruants, who said, Father if the Prophet had commanded thee a great thing, wouldst thou not haue done it? how much rather then, when he saith to thee Wash and bacleanse? Then went he downe and washed himselfe seven times in Iordan.

When any shall in this manner be admonished of a fault; they are to yeld themselves tractable and thankful, and be heartily glad of so good a friend. Notable is the speech of the psalmist; Let the righteous smite me, it is a benefit: and let them reprove me, it is the chiefe ornament, let it not be wanting to my head. And Salomon saith, A reproofe encreth more into him that hath understanding, then an hundred stripes into a foole. And, open rebuke is better then secret lone.

CHAP. VII.

Of Sobriety, Urbanity, Fidelitie, and care of others goodname.

Sobriety in iudgement is, when a man either suspendeth his opinion of his neighbours sayings or doings, or else speaketh as charitably as he can, by saying as little as may be, as if the things be euill, or by interpreting all in better part, if the speech or action be doubtfull. Therefore doe thus: despise not thy neighbour, but thinke thy selfe as bad a sinner, and that the like defects may befall thee. If thou canst not excuse his doing, excuse his intent, which may be good: or if the deede be euill, thinke it was done of ignorance; if thou canst no way excuse him, thinke some great temptation befall him, and that thou shouldst be worse, if the like temptation befall thee: and giue God thanks that the like as yet hath not befallen thee. Despise not a man beeing a sinner, for though he be euill to day, he may turne to morrow.

Here is condemned all headie and rash iudgement, whereby men make things either worse then they are, or else they take and turne all things to the worse part. Thus the diuill dealt with Iob, saying, Doth Iob feare God for naught? &c. but breeth out thine hand now and touch all that he hath, so se if he will not blasphem thee to thy face. Such was the dealing of Daeg with David I saw the son of Isha (saith he) when he came to Abimelech the sonne of Abime, who asked counsell of the Lord for him, and gaue him vs. Thus, and he gaue him also the sword of Goliath the Philistin. Here the back-biter concealeth the necessarie circumstances, whereby Abimelech might haue beene excused, as that David asked bread being hungry, and that hee tooke not Abimelech that hee was out of Sauls fauour: but he turneth all his speech to this end, to bring the Priest into disputation with Saul.

Thus the Pharisees dealt. John came neither eating nor drinking, and they say, hee hath a diuell. The sonne of man came eating and drinking, and they say, Behold a glutton, and a drinker of wine, and a friend of Publicanes and sinners.

Contrarie to this Sobriety is Flatterie, whereby for hope either of fauour or gaine, men, and especially such as are of dignity and place, are footed vp in their sinnes, and extolled aboue measure, euen to their faces. As when Herod arraigned in royall apparell, fate on the iudgement seat, and made an oration, the people gaue a shout, saying, The voice of God, and not of man. But marke what Salomon saith, Hee that praiseth his friend with a loud voice rising early in the morning, it shall bee counted to him a curse. One beeing asked which was the worst of all beasts: answered, Of wilde beasts, the tyrant: of tame beasts, the flatterer. And another said, that flatterers were worse then crows: for they eate only dead carrion, these feede on liuing men.

And of all kindes of Flatterie, that is the worst, when a man shall speake faire to his neighbours face and praise him; but behind his backe speake his pleasure, and euen cut his throat. David complaineth of his familiar friend, that the words of his mouth were softer then butter, yet warre was in his heart: that his words were more gentle then oyle, yet they were swords. The Pharisees behind Christs backe tooke counsell how they might intangle him in talke; but before his face they say, Master, we know that thou art true, and teachest the way of God truly, neither carest thou for any man: for thou confidest not the person of men.

Urbanity, is a grace of speech, whereby men in seemely manner vse pleasantesse in talke for recreation, or for such delight as is ioyned with profit to themselves and others. The Preacher saith, There is a time to laugh, and a time to weepe. When the Lord brought againe the captivity of Sion, wee were like them that dreamt. Then was our mouth filled with laughter, and our tongue with ioy.

Now this mirth must be ioyned with the feare of God, otherwise Salomon saith well, I haue said to laughter, thou art madde: and of ioy, what is that thou doest? And Christ saith, Woe to you that now laugh, for ye shall weep. Secondly, with compassion and sorrow for Gods people in affliction and miserie. They drinke wine in bowels, and amuse themselves with chiefe ornaments, but no man is sorrie for the affliction of Ioseph. Thirdly, it must be sparing and moderate. Paul condemneth such as are lovers of pleasures, more then of G O D. Fourthly, it must be void of the practise of sinne. Moses is commended that hee refused the pleasures of sinne.

The vsuall time of mirth is at meates. And here Samsons practise may be followed, who at his marriage feast propounded a riddle or hard question to his friends. And Ambrose thinketh that he did thus to stop the mouthes of talkers, and to occupie their wits.

Withall, it must bee remembered to bee a Christian dutie, euen at the table to maintaine talke of religion, and of duties of godlinesse, after the practise of our Sauour Christ: though many vpon little ground thinke otherwise. Terrillian recordeth of the Christians of his time, that they vsed in their loue feastes to talke together, as considering with themselves that they had God himselfe as an eare witness to them. Chrysostome of this point faith well: I would to God (saith he) that in tavernes and feastes, and at baches, men would talke and dispute of hell: for the remembering of hell, would hinder a man from falling to hell. And it was the manner of the primitive Church at dinner and supper, to vse the reading of the Scriptures. When ye come to the table (saith Augustine) heare that which is read according to custome, without any strife or striving: that your mouthes may not only receive the meate, but your cares may hunger after the word of God. And this ancient custome is to this day retained in the Colledges of the Vniuersitie of Cambridge.

And this holy reioicing at meates, is specially to be vsed with such as are godly. For Salomon faith, that he which eateth at the conuious mans table, shall vomit his meate, and shall loose his sweeter words. The faithfull at Ierusalem did breake bread together, with gladnesse and singlenesse of heart.

Quest. Whether iesting be tolerable in any sort or not?

Ans. That iesting which standeth in quippes, taunts, and girds, which serueth only for the offence of some, with the delight of others, is not tolerable; because all speech must edifie, and minister grace to the hearers: neither doth it agree with Christian gravity and modestie. But two kinds of iesting are tolerable, the one moderate and sparing mirth, in the vse of things indifferent, in season convenient, without the least scandall of any man, and with profit to the hearers. The second is, that which the Prophets vsed, when they iested against wicked persons, yet so, as withall they sharply reprooued their finnes. At noone Elijah mocked them, and said, Crie aloud, for he is a God: either be talkers, or paye to his enemies, or is in his journey, or it may be he sleepech and must be awaked.

As for laughter, it may be vsed: otherwise God would neuer haue giuen that power and facultie vnto man: but the vse of it must bee both moderate and feldome, as sorrow for our finnes is to be plentifull and often. This we may learne in Christs example, of whom we reade that he wept three times, at the destruction of Ierusalem, at the raising of Lazarus, and in his agonie: but we neuer reade that he laughed. And specially remember the saying of Chrysostome: Si risus in Ecclesia, diaboli opus est; that is, To moue laughter in the Church, is the worke of the diuill.

Fidelitie is constancie in all our lawfull sayings and promises.

A promise is to be made with this condition (if God will) and then if a man be prevented by death, or by anylike meanes hee is not to be blamed: otherwise a mans lawfull word and promise bindeth him according to the will and pleasure of him to whom it is made.

Now if afterward it be hurtfull to him that made it, he may craue to be free from his promise: and libertie beeing granted, take it. But a promise bound with an oath is to be kept, though priuate hinderance follow, yet so as the Magistrate may order the matter, and proceede in equitie, that the damage may be the lesse.

The last grace which is to be vsed in speech, is care of our neighbours good name, which is farre better to him than great riches.

Here is condemned the tale-bearing, which of an euill mind telleth a thing of another, to bring him into hatred, or to reuenge himselfe, or to get something, which otherwise hee could not obtaine.

This tale-bearing is of diuers sort: One is, when men whisper abroad secretly the fault of another, whereas they should rather admonish the party, as Sam when he had scene his fathers nakednesse, ran straight and told his brethren. The second, when they adde to, or change the thing said or done, as it serueth for their purpose. Some of the witnesses which came against Christ, charged him to say, I will destroy this temple which is made with hands, and in three daies build another without hands. Where first they change his meaning: for Christ spake of the temple of his bodie. Secondly, they adde to the words: for Christ said not, I will destroy this temple; but destroye this temple. Therefore the holy Ghost noteth them with the name of false witnesses. The third, when men surmise, and tell that which was neuer done. When Jeremy was going out of Ierusalem to the land of Beniamin, and was in the gate of Beniamin, Jrriab took him and said, Thou fliest to the Chaldeans. Then said Jeremie, that is false; I flee not to the Chaldeans, but he would not heare him. The fourth, is the coloured tale-bearing, when one speakech euill of another with fine prefaces and preambles, faining that he is very sorry that his neighbor hath done such or such a thing: that he speakech not of malice, but of a good mind: that he is constrained to speake: that he speakech not all hee could speake; that the partie to whom the tale is told must keepe it secret.

Luther writeth of this fault verie well: This vice (saith he) whereby we tell abroad the things which we heare of others, and take them in worse part, is very rife, and of great force to sowe discord: it is rather, because it often shewes it selfe vnder the pretence and name of counsel and good advice. And it is a notable vice for a tale bearer to transforme himselfe into an angell of light, and under zeale for Gods glorie to back-bite and accuse his neighbour of heresie, error, and wicked life.

Therefore the Prophets meaning is, that wee should conceale the euils that bee in our neighbour, and not speake them to others, though he be an enemy, and deserue it at our hands, and onely speake of those good things in him which seeme to prevaile concord: for this we would that men should doe vnto vs. Yea, and let vs take heed that we iudge not or condemne any mans saying or doing rashly. Augustine faith, that this was the care which his mother had toward her enemies. To doe this is a notable point of iust dealing, but indeede there is no man utterly without this fault in this life: such is our wretched state in this world. For though some are of this minde that they desire not to haue other mens wrongs sold to them, and will not take all in worse part, yet if they be bold and taken in worse part of others, they can willingly heare them, neither will they checke the teller, but suffer bad surmises to take place with them. But Gedaliah the sonne of Achibam excelled in the contrary vertue, who chose rather to hazard his life, then to suspect euill by Ismael.

This tale-bearing is the common table talke in England: and it is wonderfull to see, how those who are otherwise godly are ouertaken with it: but men must learne to stand more in awe of Gods commandement, and also to consider that the same thing a man speakech of another, cometh home again by his owne doore. Such as vse tale-bearing and back-biting, are by Gods iust iudgement paid home in the same kind: and hereupon Christ faith, Iudge not that ye be not iudged; for with what iudgement ye iudge, ye shall be iudged. Wherefore when men shall enter into an euill communication of others, we are to interrupt it by other talke, as not regarding it.

Here remember that when gouernours and Magistrates shall vse hard words, not in the way of defamation, but for the reprooching of a vice, it is not to flunder: as O foolish Galathians, O generation of vipers: and Christ teareth Herod, Faxe.

CHAP. VIII.

Of the bonds of Truth.

Thus much of grace in speech. Now followeth bonds of truth, whereby the truth of our talke is testified and confirmed.

There are three: a simple assertion, an affirmation, an oath.

A simple assertion, is either a simple affirmation, as yea, yea: or a simple negation, as no, no. And they are to be vsed onely in our familiar and common talke: Let your communication be yea, yea: no, no: and what soeuer is more, cometh of euill.

If the truth which we affirme or deny bee doubtfull or contingent, then such chautes as these: [It is so, or it is not so, as I thinke, as I remem- ber, as I take it] are to be added. If one shall say, It is so, and afterwards it proue otherwise, he receiuech discredit, because he speakech an vntruth. But if he shall say, I thinke it is so, though it fall out otherwise, yet he sauech his credit, because he deccieth not, but onely is decciued.

An affirmation is a forme of speech, whereby one doth vehemently affirme or deny any thing: as when a man shall say, Verily, in truth, in very truth, without all doubt, &c. These and such like are not to be vsed at euery word; but then onely when a truth of great importance is to be confirmed. When the false Prophets among the Iewes and the Priests would not beleeue that Jeremie was sent of God: what faith he? not simply, The Lord hath sent me; but in truth the Lord hath sent mee. Our Sauour Christ, when he vsed to speake any weightie matter, vsed to say, Amen, Amen, Verily, Verily, which is a plaine affirmation: for Amen is more then a simple affirmation, and it is lesse then an oath, as the very sense of the word doth import: which is no more, but runy, certainly.

The third is an oath, which must not bee made by anything in heauen or in earth, but onely by the name of God alone.

It must be vsed as the last refuge and remedie of all. For when any truth of great importance is to be confirmed, and all signes, euidences, proofes, witnessies, faile among men on earth: then we may lawfully fetch the Lord as a witness from heauen, who is the knower of all truth.

And in this case an oath may be taken, either publickly before a Magistrate, or priuately among priuate persons: if it bee done with reuerence and consideration, as it was betwene Jacob and Laban.

CHAP. IX.

What is to be done when wee haue spoken.

After a man hath spoken his minde, very few words more are to be added: He that hath knowledge spareth his words. In many words there cannot want iniquitie: but hee that restraineth his tippes, is wise.

He that speakech many words, speakech either false things or superfluous, or both: as when a river ouerflows, the water gathereth much slime: so, many words, many faults. When a vessell beeing smitten makes a great noise, it is a token that it is empty: and to the sound of many words shewes a vaine heart. The Gentiles haue said, that God gaue a man one tongue & two cares, that he might heare more and speake lesse. Valerius Maximus reporteth of Xenocrates, that being in the company of some that vsed railing speeches, he held his tongue, and being asked why he did so, answered, That it had repented him that hee had

Pro. 10. 27.

spoken, but it never repented him that he had held his peace. And the proverbe is, Hee that will speake what he will, shall heare what he would not. To the framing of our speech, Ambrose requirereth three things: a yoke, a ballance, & a met-wand; a yoke to keepe it in stayed grauitie; a ballance to giue it weight of reason; a met-wand, to keepe it in measure and moderation.

This rule must be practised carefully, for the auoiding of chiding, brawling, and contention. Let nothing be done by contention. Phil. 2.3. Let students and schollers learne to practise this; for what shall another mans opinion hurt thee, though in reasoning he be not of thy mind in euery point?

Here take heed of the spirit of contradiction, whereby some by thwarting and contradicting euery man, at length procure either obinate hereticke, or lewd Atheists, and make no bones to contradict the holy Ghost, and to call the Scriptures in question, and dispute that there is no God.

Now if a man speake necessarie things, though he continue his speech till midnight, as Paul did, it cannot be called immoderate or superfluous talke.

CHAP. X.

Of writing.

ALL this which is set downe concerning speech must as well be practised in writing as in speaking. Whereby are condemned ballads, bookes of loue, all idle discourses and histories, being nothing else but enticements and baits vnto manifold finnes, fitter for Sodom and Gomorrah, then for Gods Church. And it must be followed as well in speaking of Latine or any good tongue, as English, which students haue not marked; for whereas they will not sweare in English, yet in Latine they make no bones of it, saying, Mehercule, medius fidius, adipol, per deos immortales. And whereas they hold but one God in iudgement, yet in their Latine exercises they speake of Impier, and of the immortal Gods, after the manner of the heathen. What a shame is this, that a Christian, and that in Christian schooles, should either be ashamed, or not vnto speake as a Christian, but as Atheists do? If thou haue many tongues, and knowest not how to vse them well, he which hath but his mother tongue, ordering it aright, is a better linguist then thou.

CHAP. XI.

Of silence.

VV life and godly silence is as excellent a vertue as holy speech: for he knoweth not how to speake which knoweth not how to hold his tongue: the rule of our silence must be the law of God. By means of which, wife consideration must be had, whether the thing which wee haue in minde bee for Gods glory, and our neighbours goods which done, wee are auersably to speake or to be silent.

Here must be considered the things of which silence may be used, and the persons before whom. The things are many. First, if any truth be to the hinderance of Gods glory, or of the good of our neighbour, it must be concealed.

The concealing of truth is either in whole, or in part. In whole, when the speaking of the least word is hurtfull. As for example, the father and the sonne are both sicke at once; the sonne dieth first, the father asketh whether his sonne bee dead or not; if it be said, no, an vn-truth is told; if yea, then the fathers griefe is increased, and his death hastened: therefore silence is the best. In the daies of persecutio holy Martyrs haue chosen rather to suffer death, then to reueale their brethren, that haue bin of their priuate assemblies with them.

The concealing of a thing in part is, when a man speaketh a litle of the truth, and concealeth the rest. Which is warranted in all good and lawfull proceedings, which manifestly tend to the glorie of God. When Sammel is sent to anoint David, he answereth the Lord and faith, How can I goe? for if Saul heare of it, he will kill me. Then the Lord answered, Take an heifer with thee and say, I am come to doe sacrifice to the Lord: and call for Ihsai to sacrifice, and I will shew thee what thou shalt doe, and thou shalt anoint vnto mee him whom I shall name vnto thee. When Ieremie had shewed him Zedechiah how hee might escape death, then the king said vnto him, Let no man know of these words, &c. but if the Lord vnderstand that I haue talke with thee, and they come vnto thee, and say vnto thee, Declare vnto vs what the king hath said vnto thee, &c. then shalt thou say vnto them, I humbly besought the king that he would not cause mee to retorne to Iehonathans house to die there. And afterward he to answered, and the matter was not perceived. The like was practised by Paul, Act. 23.6.

Secondly, thou art to conceale thine owne secrets. Samson reuealing his owne secret, Iud. 14, ouerthrow himselfe. If thou desire ease by reuealing them, tell them but to few, and to such as are faithfull.

That which thou wouldest not haue known tell no man: for how shall another keepe thy counsell, when thou canst not do it? Keepe thy friends secret likewise, if it be not hurtfull; and let Miniuters conceale the sins and wants that trouble the conscience of such as are dying. Let Magistrates conceale things done in the Senate, especially concerning warre, lest they be reuealed to the enemy.

If God bring any strange thing to passe, speak not boldly of it, but rather in silence wonder. Job at the consideration of Gods maiestie in his works, faith, Behold I am vile, what shall I answer thee? I will lay my hand vpon my mouth. Nodab and Abihai for offering incense with strange fire, before the Lord, were both destroyed with fire, which beeing done, Moses told Aaron that God would be sanctified in them that come neere him, and be glorified before all the people; and then the text faith, but Aaron held his peace, Leuit. 10.3. When Peter had taught the Gentiles, and after returned to Hierusalem, they of the circumcision contended with him: he then rendereth a reason of his fact, which being made, they were silent. For so the text is, Act. 11.18. When they heard these things, they held their peace, and glorified God. When Gods iudgements befall men among vs, if we speake any thing, we must iudge charitably. Blessed is he that iudgeth wisely of the poore, the Lord shall deliuer him in the day of trouble. Psal. 14.1.

Thirdly, the infirmities & sins of our neighbours are alwaies to be concealed, vntill it be in the case before named, that wee finde our selues called of God to speake. He that concealeth a transgression, seeketh blame. Prov. 17.9. If God in mercy couer his finnes, why shouldst thou reueale them? Salomon faith, Prov. 19.11. It is the glorie of a man to passe by an infirmity.

Fourthly all vnseemly matters, all things vnknowne, things which concerne vs not, things about our reach are in silence to be buried.

The persons before whom silence must be used, are these: I. Malitious enemies of religion: Givener that which is holy vnto dogs: neither cast your pearls before swine. This was among the rest one cause of the silence of Christ before Caiaphas and Pilate. II. Before Magistrates in their open courts: where such as come before them are not to speake till they be called. Then Paul, after that the governor had beckoned vnto him that he should speake, answered.

III. In the presence of our elders and betters, who must haue leave & liberty to speake first, and must of others be heard with silence. The practise of this was in Elihu to Eliphaz & Bildad. A company of men (as some say) is like to the Alphabet, in which are vowels, halfe vowels, and mutes; vowels are old men, learned, wife, expert: halfe vowels, are young men and women, who are the only to speake when they are asked: mutes are the same parties, who being not occasioned, are in silence to heare their betters. And here all seruants & children must remember when they are iustly reproofed to be silent, and not to answer any thing againe. IV. Fooles and praters are not to be answered, vntill it be to let them see their folly.

CHAP. XII.

An exhortation to keepe the Tongue.

THUS haue I in part set downe how the tongue is to be gouerned: & I heartily desire, that all Christians would put these rules in practise. Reasons. I. If a man seeme to be religious, and restrain not his tongue, he deceiueh himselfe, and his religion is vaine. II. The man of an euill tongue, is a beast in the forme of a man; for his tongue is the tongue of a serpent, vnder which lieth nothing but venom and poison: nay he is worse then a serpent: for it cannot hurt, vntill it be preat to see a man, or to bite him, or to strike him with his taile: but he which hath not the rule of his tongue, hurteth men as well absent as present: neither sea, nor land, nor any thing can hinder him. And againe, his throat is like a graue that hath a vent in some part, and therefore sendeth forth nothing but stinke and corruption. III. As the holy men of God, when they preached, had their tongues as it were, touched with a coale from the altar of God: and as godly men when they speake graciously, haue their tongues inflamed with the fire of Gods spirit: so contrariwise, when thou speakest euill, thy tongue is kindled by the fire of hell: & Satan comes from thence with a coale to touch thy lips, and to set them on fire to all manner of mischief.

Chrysostome faith, that when men speake good things, their tongue is the tongue of Christ: but all manner of vngodly and cursed speaking is the diuels language. IV. The moderating of the tongue is a matter of great difficulty. S. Iames faith, The whole nature of beasts and of birds, & of creeping things, &c. is tame and bath bin named of the nature of man: but the tongue can no man tame: it is an vrruly euill. Pambus, one without learning, came to a certaine man to be taught a Psalme: who when he had heard the first verse of the 39 Psalme, I said, I will keepe my waies, that I offend not in my tongue: would not suffer the next verse to bee read, saying, This verse is enough, if I could practise it. And when his teacher blamed him, because he saw him not in fixe months after: hee answered that he had not yet done the verse. And one that knew him, many yeeres after asked him whether hee had yet learned the verse. I am fortie yeeres old (saith he) and haue not yet learned to fulfill it. Now then, the harder it is to rule the tongue, the more care is to be had therein. V. The strange iudgements of God for the abuse of the tongue, especially in blasphemies and periuries, are many and fearful.

Three men conspired together against Verocrissus Bishop of Ierusalem, a man that led a godly and blamelesse life, and they charged him with a most hainous crime: all three confirm their accusation by oath. The first witheth, if it were not so, that he were burnt. The second, that he might die of the iauindie. The third, that he might lose his eyes. Afterward in processe of time, the first had his house set on fire in the night: & he with all his family were burnt. The second had the iauindie from the head to the sole of the foot, & died thereof. The third seeing what was befallen these twaine, repented and confessed the confpiracie against Narcissus, and yet for all that he lost his eyes.

Again, in the daies of Q. Mary, as Iames Abbes was led by the Sheriffe to execution, diuers poore people stood in the way, and asked their almes: he then not hauing any money to giue them, did put off all his apparell, fane his shirt, and gaue it vnto them, to some one thing, to some another: in the giuing whereof hee exhorted them to be strong in the Lord, and to stand stedfast in the truth of the Gospel, While he was thus instructing the people, a servant of the Sheriffes going by, cried out aloud, and blasphemously said: Beleene him not good people, hee is an hereticke, and a madde man out of this witt: beleene him not, for it is heresie that he faith. And as the other continued in his godly admonitions, so did this wicked wretch blow forth his blasphemous exclamations: vntill they came vnto the stake where he should suffer. But immediately after this Martyr was bound to the stake, & fire put to him, such was the fearefull stroke of Gods iustice vpon this blasphemous rayler, that hee was there presently in the sight of all the people stricken with a frenzie, wherewith he had before railing charged that good martyr of God: who in his furious rage and madnesse, casting off his shoes & the rest of his cloaths, cried out vnto the people, and said, thus did James Abbes the true servant of God, who is fained, but I am damned: and thus ranne hee about the towne of Burie, still crying, that James Abbes was a good man and fained, but I am damned.

Againe, children sitting in companie together, fell into communication of God, and to reason what God was. And some said one thing, some another: among the rest, one said, He is a good old father: to which another, named Dennis Benfield, replied with a most outrageous blasphemie: What? hee (said hee) is an old dotting foole. But shortly after this young girle was so stricken, that all the one side of her was blacke, and shee became speechlesse and died.

Againe, one Leauer a plough man, rayling, said that he saw the euill fauoured knaue Latimer when he was burned: and also in despite said, that he had teeth like an horse. At which time and houre, as neere as could bee gathered, the sonne of the said Leauer most wickedly hanged himselfe.

Againe, in the time of King Edward, a young Gentleman of Cornwall being in companie with other mee gentlemen together with their seruants, being about the number of twenty horsemen, among whom this lustie younker entered into talke, and began withall to sweare, and vse ribald speech: being gently reprooued, the young gentleman tooke sauie and said to the reproouer, Why takest thou thought for mee? take thou thought for thy winding sheete: well, quoth the other, mnd, for death giueth no warning: for as soone cometh a lambes skinn to the market as an old sheeps skinn. Gods wounds (said he) care not thou for me: raging still on this manner worke and worke in words, till at length passing on there iourney, they came riding ouer a great bridge, standing ouer a peece of an arme of the sea, vpon which bridge this gentelman-swearer spurred his horse in such sort, as hee sprang cleane ouer with the man on his backe, who as hee was going, cried, saying, Horse and man and all to the diuell.

Againe, there was a seruing man in Lincolnshire, who had still in his mouth an vse to sweare Gods precious blood, and that for very trifles: being often warned by his friends to leaue the taking the Lords blood in vaine, did notwithstanding still persist in his wickednes, vntill at the last it pleased God to cite him first with sicknes, and then with death: during which time of the Lords visitation, no perswasion could moue him to repent his foresaid blaspheming, but hearing the bell to toll, did most hardly in the very anguish of his death, start vp in his bed, and sware by Gods blood, this bell tolled for me. Whereupon immediately the blood abundantly from all the ioynts of his bodie, as it were in streames, did issue out most fearefully from mouth, nose, wrists, knees, heeles, and toes, with all other ioynts, not one left free, and so died.

These and such like iudgements must be as warnings from heauen to admonish vs, and to make vs afraid of the abuse of the tongue: especially when it tender to the dishonour of God. And wee are to imitate the example of Polycarpe the Martyr, who when he was bid-den to take his oath, and curse Christ, answered, Fourescore and sixe yeeres haue I bin his seruant, yet in all this time hath he not so much as once hurt me: how then may I speake euill of my King and soueraigne Lord, which hath thus preserved me? V I. Lastly, God hath honoured thy tongue with the gift of speech and vtterance: and the great excellency of this gift thou shouldst perceiue, if thou wert stricken dumbe for a time. Therefore let thy tongue be applyed to the honouring of God, and to the good of thy neighbour.

TWO TREATISES:

1. Of the nature and practise of Repentance.
2. Of the combate of the flesh and spirit.

A third Edition corrected.

LONDON,
Printed by JOHN LEGATT.

TO THE READER VVHOSOEVER.

GOD hath bestowed on vs great prosperitie and peace, with plentie of all temporal blessings: that heart can wish for many yeeres in this land. Prosperitie abused hath bene the occasion of many grievous sins against the first and second table: specially of Atheisme, neglect of Gods worship, contempt of the word, profanation of the Sabbath, abuse of the Sacraments, &c.

These and such like finnes have long called downe for iudgements from heauen upon vs; and he rather because the preaching of the word, hath little preuailed to bring vs to any amendment of life.

Whereupon God hath now begun to cause his iudgements to cease upon vs, specially by plague and pestilence: and that in the very principall part of this land: whereby hee himselfe deeth (as Iob saith) round vs in the care, and preach repentance to vs.

Wherefore it stands vs now in hand if euer so looke about vs: and if we haue not repented, so begin to repent: if we haue in former time repented, to doe it more earnestly.

If so be that we should harden our hearts both against his word and iudgements, and put farre from vs the euill day; undoubtedly we must needs looke for iudgements farre more terrible then euer we felt as yet: if not eternall destruction. Let vs be aduised by the old world, who made light of Noahs warning, and were drowned in the flood; by Lot sinners in law, who took their fathers counsell for mockage, and were burnt with fire and brimstone from heauen; by the foolish virgins, who were sleeping when they should haue bene furnishing their lampes, and were shut from the marriage of the Lambe.

And to direct thee somewhat in the practise of repentance, I haue penned this small Treatise; vs it for thy benefit, and see if thou be a doer of it: vntill thou wilt be a wilfull murderer, and shed the blood of thine owne soule.

And whereas there haue bene published heretofore in English two sermons of Repentance, one by M. Bradford Martyr, the other by M. Arthur Dent; Sermons indeede which haue done much good: my meaning is not to add thereto, or to teach another doctrine, but only to renew and revive the memorie of that which they haue taught.

Neither let it trouble thee that the principall Diuines of this age, whom in this Treatise I follow, may seeme to be at difference in treating of repentance. For some make it a fruit of faith, containing two parts, Mortification and Vntification: some make faith a part of it, by denuding it into contrition, faith, new obedience: some make it all one with regeneration. The difference is not in the substance of doctrine, but in the logical manner of handling it. And the difference of handling ariseth of the diuers acceptation of repentance. It is taken two waies; generally, and particularly. Generally for the whole conversion of the sinner, and so it may containe contrition, faith, new obedience vnder it, and be conformed with regeneration. It is taken particularly for the renovation of the life and behaviour: and so it is a fruit of faith. And this only sense doe I follow in this Treatise.

I haue added hereto a few lines of the combat betwene the Flesh and the Spirit; because repentance and this combat are ioyned together, and the one is not practised without the other, as appears by resolving, Psal. 51.

Spirit. Haue mercy on me, O God, according to thy louing kindestie.

Flesh. Fea, but thine adulterie comprehends infinite finnes; therefore looke for no pardon.

Spirit. According to the multitude of thy compassions put away mine iniquities.

Flesh. This sinne hath taken such deepe place in thee, that it will be hardly pardoned.

Spirit. Walk me thoroughly from mine iniquities, and cleanse me from my sinne.

Flesh. Thy speciall trespass is against man.

Spirit. Against thee, against thee only haue I sinned.

Flesh. Except this one sinne thy life is vnblessed.

Spirit. Behold I was borne in iniquitie, &c.

Yea, the best man that is, in the practise of godlinesse, often appears to bee unlike himselfe: and the cause is this spirituall combat. The flesh often whiles makes him waile and mourne and goe drooping, presently after the spirit puts into him (as we say) the heart of grasse, and makes him triumph against the flesh, the duell, the world. Moses was courageous at the red sea, but he failed at the waters of strife. Iob first praised God, and afterward blasphemeth. Dauid is oft enuincing in misery, yet by and by reuinceth. Wherefore there is good cause why the consideration of repentance and the combat should goe together: that no man after he hath begun to repent might dreame of ease to his flesh: as though we should goe to heauen in beds of downe; no rather that we might be reioiced, that when wee begin to doe any thing pleasing vnto God, thence we must looke for nothing but continuall molestation from our vile and wicked natures. CHAP. I.

What Repentance is.

Repentance is a worke of grace, arising of a godly sorrow; whereby a man turnes from all his sins vnto God, and bringeth forth fruites worthy amendment of life.

I call Repentance a worke, because it seemes not to be a qualitie or vertue, or habit, but an action of a repentant sinner. Which appears by the sermons of the Prophets and Apostles, which runne in this tenour, Repent turne to God, amend your liues, &c.

Whereby they intimate, that repentance is a worke to be done.

Againe, Repentance is not euery kinde of worke, but a worke of grace; because it cannot be practised of any, but of such as bee in the estate of grace. Reasons are these: I. No man can repent, vntill he first hate sinne, and looe righteousness; and none can hate sinne, vntill he be sanctified; and he that is sanctified is iustified: and he that is iustified, mult needs haue that faith which vnites him to Christ, and make him bone of his bone, and flesh of his flesh. Wherefore he that repents, is iustified & sanctified, and made a member of Christ by faith. II. He that turnes to God, mult first of all be turned of God, and after that we are turned, then we repent, Ier. 31. 19. Surely after I was conuered, I repented: and after that I was instructed, I smote upon my thigh: I was ashamed, yea euē confounded: because I did beare the reprob of my youth.

Some may object; that repentance goes before all grace, because it is first preached. The first sermon that euer was made, was of repentance, preached of God himselfe in paradise to our first parents. And euer since the sermons of all the Prophets and Apostles, and of all faithfull ministers haue had repentance for their beginning and scope. The answer hereto may be this: if we respect the order of nature, there be other graces of God which goe before Repentance: because a mans conscience mult in some sort be fed: touching his reconciliation with God in Christ before hee can begin to repent. Wherefore iustification and sanctification in order of nature goe before repentance. But if we respect time, grace and repentance are both together. So soone as there is fire, so soone is it hot: and so soone as a man is regenerate, so soone he repents. If we respect the outward manifestation of these twaine, repentance goes before all other graces: because it first of all appears outwardly. Regeneration is like the sappe of the tree that lies hid within the barke; repentance is like the bud that speedily shewes it selfe, before either blossome, leafe, or fruit appeare: yea all other graces of the heart, which are needfull to saluation, are made manifest by repentance. And for this cause, Repentance (as I take it) is first preached.

I adde further, that repentance riseth of a godly sorrow in the heart, as Paul teacheth, 2. Cor. 7. 10. Godly sorrow causeth repentance vnto saluation neuer to be repented of. It is called a godly sorrow, or a sorrow according to God, that it may be distinguished from worldly sorrow: which is a grieft arising of the apprehension of the wrath of God & other miseries as feare of men, losse of good name, calamities in goods and other things, which in this life follow as punishments of sin: whereas the godly sorrow causeth grieft for sin, because it is sin. And it makes any man, in whom it is, to be of this disposition & minde, that if there were no conscience to accuse, no diuell to terrifie, no iudge to arraigne and condemne, no hel to torment, yet he would be humbled and brought on his knees for his finnes, because he hath offended a louing, mercifull, and long suffering God.

Further I say, that repentance stands in turning againe to God: Man at the first was made a goodly creature in the image of God, hauing fellowship with him, whereby he dwelt in God, and God in him. By sinne there is a partition made betwene God and man: who is alienated and estranged from God, & is become the childe of wrath, a firebrand of hell, the prodigall childe going from his father into a farre cuntrye, the straying, may the lost sheepe. Now when men haue grace to repent, then they begin to renew this fellowship, and turne againe to God. And the very essence or nature of repentance consists in this turning. Which Paul doth seeme to intimate, when he saith, Act. 26. 20. That he shewed both to Jew and Gentile, that they should repent and turne to God, and doe good works worthy of amendment of life. In which words hec sets downe vnto vs a full description of repentance.

Againe I say, that repentance is a turning from sin, because it doth not abolish or change the substance of body or soule, or any of the faculties thereof either in whole or part: but only rectifie and amend them by removing the corruption. It turnes the sadness of melancholly to godly sorrow, cholle to good zeale, softnesse of nature to meeknesse, of spirit, madnesse and lightnes to Christiana mirth; it reformes euery man according to his nature.

Further I put downe, that repentance is a turning from all sinne to God, that I may exclude many false turnings. The first, when a man turnes from God to sin, as when one of a Protestant becomes a Papist, an Arrian, a Familist. The second, when a man turnes from one sin to another. As when the riotous person leaves his prodigality, and gives himselfe to the practise of courtesie: this can be no repentance: because it is a going from one extreame to another, whereas repentance is to leave the extreames and keepe the meane. The third is, not when a man turnes from sin, but sin turnes from him and leaves him. As when the drunkard leaves drunkenness, because his stomacke is decayed: the fornicator his vncleanness, because the strength of nature failes him: the quarreller his fighting, because he is maimed on legge or arme. The last is, when men turne from many sins, but will not turne from all. As Herod did many things at the advertisement of John Baptist, but could not be brought to leave incest, in hauing his brother Philips wife. This repentance is nothing. For as he which is truly regenerate, is wholly in body, soule, and spirit regenerate: so he which truly repents, turnes from all sinne, and turnes wholly to God.

Neither is this to trouble any, that they cannot know all their sins: for found repentance for one special sin, brings with it repentance of all sinne. And as God requires particular repentance for knowne sinnes, so he accepts a general repentance for such as be unknowne.

To proceede further; the conversion of a sinner in repentance, hath three parts: The first, a purpose, and resolution in the minde: the second, an inclination in the will and affection: the third, an endeavour in life and conversation, to abandon and leave all his former sinnes, and to employ himselfe in obedience to Gods commandements.

Lastly, this repentance must bring forth fruites worthy amendment of life: because it cannot be knowne to be sincere, vntill it bring forth fruit. Repentant sinners are trees of righteousness of Gods owne planting: and they grow by the waters that flow out of the Sanctuary, and therefore they must beare fruit that may serve for meat, and leafe for medicine: otherwise the axe of Gods iudgement is laid to their rootes to stocke them vp.

CHAP. II.

Of the cause of Repentance.

The principall cause of repentance, is the spirit of God, as Paul saith, 2.Tim. 2.25. Instructing them with his meeknesse that are contrarie minded, prouing if God at any time will give them repentance. And Ieremie, Jer. 31.8. Convert thou me, and I shall be converted.

The instrument of the holy Ghost in working repentance, is the ministry of the Gospel onely, and not the law. Reasons hereof are these: I. Faith is ingendred by the preaching, not of the law, but of the Gospel, as Paul saith, Rom. 1.16. The Gospel is the power of God to salvation to all that beleue, from faith to faith: therefore repentance, which follows faith as a fruit thereof, must needs come by the preaching of the Gospel onely. II. The law is the ministry of death and damnation, because it shewes a man his wretched estate, but shewes him no remedy: therefore it cannot be an instrumental cause of that repentance which is effectual to saluation. III. The doctrine of repentance is a part of the Gospel, which appears in this, that the preaching of repentance, & the preaching of the Gospel are put one for another. And our Saviour Christ deuises the Gospel into two parts: the preaching of repentance, and remission of sinnes in his name. IV. That part of the word which workes repentance, must reueale the nature of it, and set out the promise of life which belongs vnto it. But the law neither reueales faith nor repentance: this is a proper worke of the Gospel. If it be said, that the law is a schoole-master to bring vs to Christ, the answer is, to bring men to Christ not by teaching the way, or by alluring them; but by forcing and vrging them.

Neither do we abolish the law, in ascribing the worke of repentance to the Gospel onely: for though it be no cause, yet it is an occasion of true repentance. Because it represents vnto the eye of the soule our damnable estate, & smites the conscience with doubtfull terrors and feares, which though they be no tokens of grace (for they are in their owne nature the very gates and the downfall to the pit of hell) yet they are certaine occasions of recieuing grace. The Philitian is otherwhiles constrained to recover the health of his patient by casting him into some fits of an ague: so man, because he is deadly sicke of the disease of sinne, must be cast into some fits of legal terrors by the ministry of the law, that he may recover his former estate, and come to life everlasting.

Repentance also is furthered by calamities, which in this case often come in the roome and stead of the law. Iosephs brethren, when they were in distresse in Egypt, said one to another, Gen. 42.21. We haue verily sinned against our brother, in that we saw the anguish of his soule when he besought vs, and we would not heare him: therefore is this trouble come upon vs. And the Lord saith in Ose. 5.15. I will goe and returne to my place, still they acknowledge their fault & seek me in their afflictions with they seek me diligently. And the Israelites say, Lam. 3.20. My soule hath them (many afflictions) in remembrance, and is humbled in me. Example of Manasses, 2 Chron. 33.12. And when he was in tribulation, he prayed to the Lord his God, and humbled himselfe greatly. And David saith, Psal. 119.71. It is good for me, that I haue bene afflicted, that I might learne thy statutes.

CHAP. III.

How Repentance is wrought.

Repentance is wrought in the heart by certaine steps and degrees. First of all, a man must haue knowledge of foure things, namely, of the law of God, of sinne against the law, of the guilt of sinne, and of the iudgement of God against sinne, which is the eternall wrath of God.

Then in the second place must follow the Application of the former knowledge to a mans owne person, by the worke of the conscience assisted by the holy Ghost, which for that cause is called the spirit of bondage: and this application is made in a forme of reasoning, called a practical syllogisme, on this manner.

The breaker of the Law is guilty of eternall death, faith the minde.

But I am a breaker of the law of God, faith the conscience, as a witnesse and an accuser:

Therefore I am guilty of eternall death; faith the same conscience, as a iudge.

Thirdly, from this application thus made, ariseth feare and sorrow in respect of Gods iudgements against sinne, commonly called the ting of the conscience, or penitence, and the compunction of heart.

Now this compunction, vntill it be delayed by the comforts of the Gospel, brings men to desperation, and to eternall damnation. Therefore he that will repent to life everlasting must goe foure steps further: First, he must haue knowledge of the Gospel, and enter into a serious consideration of the mercy of God therein revealed. Then must follow the application of the former knowledge by the conscience, renewed and assisted by the spirit of adoption, on this manner.

He that is guilty of eternall death, if hee denie himselfe, and put his affiance in the death of Christ, shall haue right conscience and life eternall, faith the minde enlightened by the knowledge of the Gospel.

But I being guilty of eternall death, deny my selfe, & put my affiance in the death of Christ, faith the conscience renewed by the spirit of adoption: Therefore, I shall haue right conscience and life everlasting by Christ.

Thirdly, after this application there follows ioy and sorrow: ioy, because a mans sinnes are pardoned in Christ; sorrow, because a mans sinnes haue displeased him, which hath bene so louing and mercifull a God vnto him.

Lastly, after this godly sorrow follows Repentance, called a Transmutation or turning of the minde, whereby a man determines and resolues with himselfe to sinne no more as he hath done, but to liue in newnesse of life.

CHAP. IV.

Of the parts of Repentance.

Repentance hath two parts: Mortification, and Rising to newnesse of life.

Mortification is the first part of repentance, which concernes turning from sinne.

Men turne from sinne, when they doe not onely abstaine from actual sinne, but also vfe all meanes whereby they may both weaken & suppress the corruption of nature. Chirurgeries when they must cut off any part of the body, vfe to lay plaisters to it, to mortifie it; that being without sense and feeling it may be cut off with lesse paine. In the same manner, we are to vfe all helpes and remedies prescribed in the word which serue to weaken or kill sinne, that in death it may be abolished.

And it must not seeme strange, that I say, we must vfe meanes to mortifie our owne sinnes.

For howsoeuer by nature we cannot doe any thing acceptable to God, yet being quickened and moued by the holy Ghost, we stirre and moue our selues to doe that which is truly good. And therefore repentant sinners haue grace in them whereby they mortifie their owne sinnes. Paul saith, I beate downe my body, and bring it into subjection. And, They which are Christs haue crucified the flesh, with the affections and lusts thereof: and, Mortifie therefore your earthly members fornication, vncleanness, the inordinate affection, euill concupiscence, and comensness. And, if any man purge himselfe from these, he shall be a vessel vnto honour. And, Saint Iohn saith, Every one which hath this hope in him, purgeth himselfe, euen as he is pure: and he which is begotten of God prefereth himselfe, and the wicked one toucheth him not.

Mortification hath three parts, a purpose in minde, an inclination in will, and an endeavour in life and conversation to leave all sinne.

Rising to newnesse of life, is the second part of repentance concerning sincere obedience to God.

And it hath also three parts. The two first, are a resolution in the minde, and inclination or lust in the will to obey God in all things.

Barnabas exhorts them of Antiochia, that with purpose of heart they would cleane vnto the Lord. Examples of both these are many in Scriptures: Of Iosua, If ye seeme euill vnto you to serue the Lord, chosse you this day whom you will serue, whether the Gods which your Fathers serued, or the Gods of the Amorites, &c. but I and my household will serue the Lord. Of David, O Lord, thou art my portion, I haue determined to keepe thy commandements. And, I haue sworn, and will performe it, that I will keepe thy righteous iudgements. And, When thou saidst, seek my face, mine heart answered vnto thee, O Lord, I will seek thy face. And, I haue applied mine heart to fulfill thy statutes alwayes euen to the end.

The third part, is an endeavour in life and conversation to obey God. Example of Paul, And herein I take paines to haue alwayes a cleere conscience towards God & towards men: Of David, I haue a respect to all thy commandements. And, I haue chosen the way of truth, and thy iudgements haue I laid before me. And, I haue cleane to thy testimonies. And, direct mee in the path of thy thy commandments; for therein is my delight.

No man must here thinke that a repentant sinner fulfils the law in his obedience: for their best works are faultie before God: and whereas the faithfull in Scriptures are said to be perfect; we must know that there be two degrees of perfection: perfection in substance, and perfection in the highest degree. Perfection in substance, is when a man doth sincerely endeavour to performe perfect obedience to God, not in some, but in all his commandments. And this is the onely perfection that any man can haue in this life. A Christian mans perfection is to bewaile his imperfection; his obedience more consists in the good will, then in the worke, and is more to be measured by the affection, then by the effect.

CHAP. V.

Of the degrees of Repentance.

Repentance hath two degrees. It is either Ordinary, or extraordinary.

Ordinary repentance is that, which every Christian is to performe every day: For as men fall daily either more or lesse; so the graces of God are proportionally weakened day by day. Wherefore the continuall reparation thereof must be made by a daily renewing of repentance. A Christian man is the temple and house of Gods spirit; hee must therefore once a day sweep it, that it may be fit to entertaine to worthe a guest.

Extraordinary repentance is the same in nature with the former, it differs onely from it in degree and measure of grace.

And this is to be put in practise, when men fall into any enormous, capitall, or grievous offences: whereby they doe very grievously wound their owne consciences, and gine great offence to the Church: Of this sort was the repentance of Peter, when he went forth and wept bitterly: as Dauids repentance, after he had committed adulterie, and murdered Uriah.

CHAP. VI.

Of the persons which must repent.

Men be of two sorts: the naturall man, and the regenerate: Repentance is needfull for both: for the naturall man, that he may be brought from his finnes, and the image of God renewed in him. Some may say, that many naturall men liue ciuilly, abstaining from all outrageous behaviour, and therefore neede no repentance. I graunt indeede they doe so: yet repentance must goe withall. For ciuill life without grace in Christ, is nothing else in Gods sight, but a beautifull abomination. The Pharisees were ciuill, yet Christ saith of them, Except your righteousness exceede the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees, ye shall not see the kingdom of heauen. Repentance is also required in the regenerate: because they may haue vknowne and hidden corruptions in them, which must bee mortified: and otherwhyles they fall grievously: and therefore that they may rise againe, they must be daily practised in the spirituall exercises of repentance.

CHAP. VII.

Of the practise of Repentance.

IN the practise of Repentance foure speciall duties are required: The first, is a diligent and serious examination of the conscience by the lawes and commandments of God, for all manner of sins, both originall and actual. Example of the children of Israel. Wherefore is the living man sorrowfull? man suffereth for his sin: let vs search and try our waies, and turne againe to the Lord. Of Dauid, I considered my waies, and turned my feete to thy reproofes.

Touching Originall sin, this must bee well remembered, that one man hath not one part onely of originall sinne, and another man another: one man this corruption, another that: but every man, as he receiued from Adam the whole nature of man, so also he receiued originall sinne wholly. And therefore every man, (not one excepted, sauing Christ, who was extraordinarily sanctified by the holy Ghost in the wombe of the Virgin) hath in him from his parents the corruption and seede of all sin, which is a naturall disposition and pronenesse to commit any sinne whatsoever. Take a view and consider all the horrible finnes that be practised in any part of the world, either against the first or second table: whatsoever they are, the spawne and seede of them all is euen in that man that is thought to bee best disposed by nature. Some may say, that experience shewes the contrary: because among men that want all manner of religion, some are more ciuill and orderly; some againe more lewdly disposed. I answer, that this comes to passe, not because some men are by nature lesse wicked then others: but because God by his prouidence doth limit and restrain mens corruption more or lesse, which he doth for the good of mankind. For if men might be wholly left to themselves, corruption would so exceedingly breake out into all manner of finnes, that there should be no liuing in the world.

In examination of actual sins, three rules must be followed. The 1. that we must search out not onely our grosse finnes, but euen the very thoughts of our hearts: For repentance is not onely a change of the speech, apparell, and outward behaviour, but also of the inward and secret thoughts of the heart. Therefore the prophet Iosai bids the Iewes vend their hearts and not their garments: and Paul tels the Ephesians, that they must be renewed in the spirit of their minds: and Peter bids Simon

Magus to repent & pray God, that the thought of his heart may be forgiven him. The second, that the very circumstances of finnes done must bee considered, as the time when, the place where, and the manner how; as namely, whether they were done of ignorance, or knowledge, of weaknesse, or presumption, or obstinate malice. Thirdly, in examination it is very meete and conuenient, that wee passe through all the commandments of the morall law, laying them as molt absolute rules to our hearts and liues: and by this meanes wee shall be able to make large bills and Catalogues of all our finnes, euen from the very cradle to any part of our age following, as the seruants of God haue alwaies done. Thus it will come to passe, that we shall plainly see our wretched estate, and acknowledge that our finnes be in number as the haire of our head, and as the sands by the sea shore.

X. COM.

Thou shalt not lust.

He breakes this commandment,
That thinks an euill thought against his neighbour, though hee meane not to doe it.
 That conceiues some inward delight in some euill motion, though he giue not consent to practise it.

Sinnes directly against the Gospel.

He sinnes against the Gospel,

That denies either directly or by consequence that Christ is come in the flesh, 1.Ioh.4.3.8.
 That treades vnder foote the blood of Christ, Fl.4.10.29.
 That beleeueth not the remission of his owne sinnes, and acceptation to life euermlasting, 1.Iohn 3.23.

 That repents not, but hardens himselfe in all his bad waies, Rom.2.4,5. Jer.8.6.

THus much of examination: now followes the second dutie, which is confession of sinne vnto God, which is very necessarie. For the right way to haue our sinnes couered before God, is to vncouer and acknowledge them vnto him. For he will iustifie vs, if we, as being our owne enemies, accuse our selues; he forgets our sins if we remember them: when we are vile in our owne eyes, we are precious in his: and when we are lost to our selues, we are found of him.

That confession may be rightly performed, a notable dutie is to bee put in practise in it: namely, the arraignment of a repentant sinner, whereby he iudges himselfe, that he may not be iudged of the Lord.

This arraignment hath three speciall points in it. First of all, he must bring himselfe forth to the barre of Gods iudgement: which thing hee doth when hee sets himselfe in the presence of God, as though euen now the day of iudgement were. As S. Hierom did, who alwaies thought with himselfe that hee heard this voice sounding in his eares, Rise ye dead and come to iudgement.

Secondly, he must put vp an inditement against himselfe; by accusing himselfe before God, by acknowledging his knowne sinnes particularly, and his unknowne generally, without any excuse or extenuation, or defence or hiding of the least of the: Example of Daniel, I know mine iniquity, and my sinne is euer before me: against thee, against thee onely haue I sinned and done this euill in thy sight, &c. behold, I was borne in iniquity, and in sinne hath my mother conceived me. And, I haue sinned greatly, because I haue done this thing: but now I beseech thee to remooue the iniquities of thy servant: for I haue done very foolishly. Of Ezra, O my God, I am ashamed and confounded to lift up mine eyes vnto thee, my God: for our iniquities are increased vnder our heads, and our trespasses are growne up vnto heauen.

Thirdly, he must with heauinesse of heart as a iudge vpon the bench giue sentence against himselfe, acknowledging that he is worthy of euermlasting death, hell, and damnation. As the prodigall childe, Father, I haue sinned against heauen, and against thee, and am not worthe to be called thy childe. And Daniel, We haue sinned and committed iniquity, and haue done wickedly: yea, we haue rebelled, and haue departed from thy precepts, & from thy iudgements, &c. O Lord, righteousness belongeth vnto thee, and vnto vs open shame. Of Iob, Behold I am vile, what shall I answer thee? will I lay my hand vpon my mouth, And I abhorre my selfe, and repent in dust and ashes. Of the Publicane, Who standing afarre off, would not lift up so much as his eyes to heauen, but smote his breast saying, Lord be mercifull to me a sinner.

As for confession of sinne to men, it is not to be vsed but in two cases. First, when some offence is done to our neighbour: secondly, when ease and comfort is sought for in trouble of conscience.

The third dutie in the practise of repentance is Deprecation, whereby wee pray to God for the pardon of the sinnes which haue bene confessed, with contrition of heart, with earnestnes and constancie, as for the weightiest matter in the world. And here we must remember to behaue our selues to God as the poore prisoner doth at the barre, who when the iudge is about to giue sentence, cries vnto him for fauour, as for life and death. And we must doe as the cripple or lazar man in the way sit downe, vniap our legges and armes, and shew the sores of our sins; crying to God continually as they doe (Looke vnto your eye, and pittie with your heart:) that wee may finde mercie at Gods hands, as they get almes at the hands of the passengers. Thus Osiah instructed the people, Os.14.1.2. O Israel, returne vnto the Lord thy God: for thou hast fallen by thine iniquities: take vnto you words, and turne vnto the Lord, and say vnto him, Take away all iniquities, and receive vs graciously: so we will render thee the calves of our lippes. Of Daniel, Dan.9.18.19. We doe not present our supplications before thee for our owne righteousnesses, but for thy great tender mercies. O Lord heare, O Lord forgive, O Lord consider and doe it: deferre not for thine owne names sake, O my God. Of David, Psal.51.2. Haue mercie vpon me, O God, according to thy loving kindeesse: according to the multitude of thy compassions put away mine iniquities. The last dutie is, to pray to God for grace and strength, whereby we may be enabled to walke in newnesse of life: Of Daniel, Psal.119.40. Behold, I desire thy commandments, quicken mee in thy righteousnesses. And, 143.10. Teach mee to doe thy will: for thou art my God, let thy good spirit leade me into the land of righteousness.

CHAP. VIII.

Of legal motives to Repentance.

MOTIVES to Repentance are either Legall or Euangelicall. Legall, are such as are borrowed from the law: and they are three especially.

The first is, the miserie and cursed estate of euery impenitent sinner in this life by reason of his sinnes.

His miserie (that I may expresse it to the conceit of the simple) is seauen-folde.

1. within him.
2. before him.
3. behinde him.
4. on his right hand.
5. on his left hand.
6. ouer his head.
7. vnder his feete.

His miserie within is two-folde. The first is a guiltie conscience which is a very hell vnto the vngodly men. For hee like a silly prisoner, and the conscience like a taylor which followes him at the heeles, and dogges him whither hee goes, to the end he may see and obferue all his sayings and doings. It is like a register, that fits alwaies with the pen in his hand, to record and inroll all his wickednesse for euermlasting memorie. It is a little iudge, that sits in the middle of a man, euen in his very heart to arraigne him in this life for his sinnes, as he shall bee arraigned at the last iudgement. Therefore the pangs, terrors, and feares of all impenitent persons, are as it were, certaine flashings of the flames of hell fire. The guiltie conscience makes a man like him which lies on a bed that is too straight, and the covering too short; who would with all his heart sleepe, but cannot. Belshazzar when he was in the midst of his mirth, seeing the hand writing on the wall, was smitten with great feare, so as his countenance changed, and his knees smote together.

The second euill within a man, is the fearefull slauerie and bondage vnder the power of Satan the prince of darkness: in that his mind, will, and affections, are so knit and glued to the will of the diuell, that he can doe nothing but obey him, and rebell against God. And hence Satan is called the prince of this world: which keeps the hold of the heart as an armed captaine keeps a skonce or castle with watch and ward.

The miserie before man, is the dangerous snare which the diuell layes for the destruction of the soule. I say it is dangerous: because he is in setting of it twentie or fortie yeeres, before he strikes: when as (God knowes) men do little thinke of it. It is made of three cords: with the first, he brings men into his snare, and that he doth by couering the miserie and the poyson of sinne: and by painting out to the eye of the minde the deceitfull profits and pleasures thereof. With the second, he hopples and insnares them, for after that a man is drawne into this or that sinne, the diuell hath so sugered it ouer with fine delights, that he cannot but needs must liue and lie in it. By the third, he drawes his snare, and endeauours with all his might to breake the necke of the soule. For when he seeth a fit opportunitie, especially in grievous calamities, and in the houre of death, he takes away the vizard of sin, and shewes the face of it in the true forme, as ougly as himselfe: then withal he begins (as we say) to shew his hornes: then he rageth in terrifying and accusing, that the soule of man may bee swallowed vp of the gulfe of final despair.

The miserie behinde him, is the sinnes past. The Lord saith to Cain, If thou dost not well, sinne lyeth at the doore. Where sin is compared to a wild beest, which followes a man whither hee goes, and lieth lurking at his heeles: And though for a time it may seeme to bee hurtleſſe, becauſe it lies aſleepe; yet at length, vnles men repent, it will riſe vp, ſeaze on them, and rend out the very throats of their ſoules. Iob in his affliction ſaith, Iob 13.26. Thou wilt bite bitter things againſt me, and makeſt me poſſeſſe the finnes of my youth. And David prayeth, Pſal. 25.7. Forgiue mee the finnes of my youth. If the memory of finnes paſt be a trouble to the godly man, oh what a racke, what a gybbet will it be to the heart of him that wants grace?

The miſerie on the right hand is proſperitie and eaſe: which by reaſon of mans finnes is an occaſion of many iudgements. In it men praſtified the horrible fins of Sodom: it puffes vp the heart with diuellish pride, ſo as men ſhall thinke themſelues to be as God himſelfe, as Senacherib, Nebuchadnezzar, Ariachius, Alexander, Herod, Domitian did: It ſteales away mans heart from God, & quenches the ſparkes of grace. As the Lord complains of the Iſraelites, Iſr. 23.21. I ſpake vnto thee when thou waſt in proſperity; but thou ſaiſt I will not heare: this hath bin thy manner from thy youth. It is like the Iute that imbrace the tree, & windes round about it, but yet drawes out the iuyce and life of it. Hence it is, that many turne it to an occaſion of their deſtruction. Salomon ſaith, Pro. 1.32. Proſperitie of fooles deſtroyeth them. When the milſtewels, the reſt of the body pines away, & when the heart is puff with pride, the whole man is in danger of deſtruction. The ſheepe that goes in the beſt paſture, ſooner comes to the ſlaughter-houſe: & the vngodly man ſats himſelf with conſolatorie proſperity that he may the ſooner come to his owne danation.

Rom. 9.

The miſerie on the left hand is aduerſitie, which ſtands in all manner of loſſes and calamities; in goods, friends, good name, and ſuch like. Of this read at large, Deut. 28.

16.
Eze. 7.6.
45.29.

The miſerie ouer his head, is the wrath of God, which he teſtifies in all manner of iudgements from heauen, in danger of which euery impenitent ſinner is euery houre. And the danger is very great. The Scripture ſaith, Heb. 10.31. It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the liuing God. He hath ſure-bowes full of all manner of iudgements, and they watch for ſeuerall ſinners, that they cannot ſcape. Gods wrath is a fire making hauocke, and bringing to nought whatſoeuer it lights onieyca, becauſe he is ſlow to anger, therefore more terrible: as a man therefore ſtates his hand for a time, that he may liſt it higher and fetch a deeper blow. When dumbe creatures melt as waxe, and vaniſh away at his preſence when he is angry; as the huge mountaines and rockes doe: fraile man muſt neuer looke to ſtand. If the roaring of a lyon make men afraid, and the voyce of thunder be terrible; oh, how exceedingly ſhould all be aſtoniſhed at the threatnings of God?

The miſerie vnder his feete, is hell fire: for euery man till he repent, is in as great danger of damnation, as the traytor apprehended, of hanging, drawing, and quartering. A man walking in his way ſals into a deepe dungeon

A that is full of ougly ſerpents and noyſome beaſts: in his fall he catches hold of a twig of a tree that growes at the mouth of the dungeon, and hangs by it: afterward there comes a beaſt both leane and hunger-bitten; which hauing cropt the whole tree, is cuer and anon knapping at the twig on which he hangs: now what is the danger of this man? ſurely hee is like to fall into the pit, ouer which hee hangs: Well, this man is euery impenitent ſinner: the pit is hell, prepared for the diuell and his angels: the twig is the bricke and fraile life of man: the hunger-bitten beaſt death, that is ready euery houre to knap our life aſunder: the danger is fearefull: for a man hanging as it were ouer the mouth of hell, when life is ended, vnleſſe he vſe good meanes before hee die, he then ſals to the very bottome of it.

If this be the miſery where with the careleſſe man is beſieged and compaſſed about euery way, and that for his finnes, why doe men lye in the dead ſleepe of ſecuritie? Oh! it ſtands them in hand to take vp the voyce of bitter lamentation, and for their offences to howle after the manner of dragons. If men could weepe nothing but teares of blood for their finnes, if they could die a thouſand times in one day for very grieſe, they could neuer bee grieued enough for their finnes.

The ſecond motiue to draw men to repentance, is the conſideration of the wretched eſtate of an impenitent ſinner in his death, which is nothing but the ^a wages and allowance that he receiues for his finnes: and it is the very furberies or rather the gates of hell.

a Eſay.
Rom. 24.
b 1 Co.
36.

^b Paul compares death to a Scorpion, who carries a ſting in his taile, which is ſinne. Now then when impenitent and prophane perſons die, then comes this ſcorpion, and gripes them with her legges, and ſtabbes them at the heart with her ſting. Wherefore the beſt thing is before death come, to vſe meanes to pull out the ſting of death, and nothing will doe it, but the blood of Chriſt: let men therefore breake off their finnes by repentance: let them come to the throne of grace, and crie: yea let them fill heauen and earth with cries for mercie. Oh! pray, pray, pray for the pardon of thine owne perſonall and particular finnes. If thou obtaine but one drop of Gods ſpeciall mercie in Chriſt, all danger is paſt. For death hath loſt his ſting; and then a man without danger may put an ougly ſerpent in his boſome.

The third motiue is the conſideration of his eſtate after death. When the day of the laſt iudgement ſhall bee, hee muſt be brought and ſet before the triſumall ſeat of Chriſt: ſhee ſhall not be able to eſcape or hide himſelfe: then the booke ſhall bee brought out, and all his finnes ſhall bee diſcouered before Gods Saints and Angels: the diuell and his owne conſcience ſhall accuſe him: none that be aduocate to plead his cauſe, he himſelfe that be ſpeecheleſſe, he ſhall at length heare the dreadfull ſentence of damnation, Go you now into hell, hell, prepared for the diuell and his angels. This thing might moue the vileſt Atheiſt in the world to leaue his wicked waies, and come to amendment of life. We ſee the ſtrongeſt thief that is, when he is led in the way from the priſon to the barre, leaues his theeuing, and be-hanes himſelfe orderly. And indeede if hee would then cut a purſe, it were high time hee were hanged. All men by nature are traitours and malefactours againſt God: whiles we lye in this world, we are in the way going to the barre of Gods iudgement. The wheele of the heauens turnes one bout euery day, and winds vp ſomewhat of the threed of our life: whether we ſleepe or wake, we are alwaies coming neerer our end: wherefore let all men daily humble themſelves for their finnes, and pray vnto God that he would be reconciled vnto them in Chriſt: and let them endeavour themſelves in obedience to all Gods commandments, both in their liues and callings.

Againe, after the laſt iudgement there remains death eternall appointed for him: which ſtands in theſe three things: 1. A ſeparation from all ioy and comfort of the preſence of God. 2. Eternall fellowſhip with the diuell and all his angels. 3. The feeling of the horrible wrath of God, which ſhall ſeaze vpon body, ſoule, and conſcience, and ſhall feed on them as fire doth on pitch and brimſtone: and torment them as a worme crawling in the body, and gnawing on the heart: they ſhall alwaies be dying, & neuer dead, alwaies in woe, and neuer in eaſe. And this death is the more grieuous, becauſe it is eueraſting. Suppoſe the whole world to be a mountaine of ſand, and that a bird muſt carry from it but one mouthfull of ſand euery thouſand yeere: many innumerable thouſands of yeeres will be expired, before ſhee will haue carried away the whole mountaine: well, if a man ſhould ſtay in torment ſo long, and then haue an end of his woe, it were ſome comfort: but when the bird ſhall haue carried away the mountaine a thouſand times: alas, alas, a man ſhall be as farre from the end of his anguiſh and torments, as euere was: This conſideration may ſerue as an yron ſcourge to driue men from their wicked liues. Chryſoſtome would haue men in their meetings in tauernes and feaſts, to talke of hell, that by often thinking on it, they might auoide it. A graue and chaſt matrone, being moued to commit folly with a lewd ruſſian, after long diſcours, ſhee called for a panne of coales, requeſting him for her ſake to hold his finger in them but one houre: hee answered, that it was an vnkinde requeſt: to whom ſhe replied, that ſeeing he would not hold ſo much as one finger in a few coales for one ſmall houre, ſhe could not yeeld to doe the thing for which ſhee ſhould bee tormented body and ſoule in hell fire for euere. And ſo ſhould all men reaſon with themſelves, when they are about to ſinne: None will be brought to doe a thing, that may make ſo much as their finger or tooth to ake:

A If a man be to ſmoke a candle, he will firſt ſpit on his finger: becauſe hee cannot abide the heate of a ſmall and tender flame. Therefore we ought to haue great care to leaue our ſins, whereby we bring endleſſe torment to bodie and ſoule in hell fire, to which our fire is but yce in compariſon.

CHAP. IX. Of moines Evangelicall.

E Vangelicall motiues, are two eſpecially. The firſt is taken from the conſideration of mans redemption. He that redeemed mankind is God himſelfe: as Paul ſaith, 2 Cor. 5. 19. that God was in Chriſt, reconciling the world to himſelfe. Mans ſinne is ſo vile and hainous in the eyes of God: that no Angell nor creature whatſoeuer was able to appeaſe the wrath of God for the leaſt offence: But the Son of God himſelfe muſt come downe from heauen, and take mans nature on him: and not onely that, but he muſt alſo ſuffer the moſt accuſed death of the croſſe, and ſhed his moſt precious heart-blood to ſatiſſie the iuſtice of his Father in our behalfe. If a father ſhould bee ſicke of ſuch a diſeaſe, that nothing would heale him, but the heart blood of his owne child, hee would preſently iudge his owne caſe to be dangerous; and would alſo vow if euere hee recovered, to vſe all meanes whereby he might auoide that diſeaſe. So likewiſe, ſeeing nothing could cure the deadly wound of our ſinne: but a plaſter made of the heart blood of Chriſt; it muſt make vs acknowledge our pittifull caſe, and the hainouſneſſe of the leaſt of our finnes, and ſtirre vs vp to newneſſe of life.

Againe, conſidering the end of the redemption wrought by Chriſt, was to deliuer vs from our euill conuerſation in ſinne and vn-righteouſneſſe, we are not to continue, and as it were, liee bathing our ſelves in finnes for that were as if a priſoner, after hee had bin ranſomed and had his bolts taken off, and were put out of the priſon to goe whither he would; ſhould returne againe, and deſire to lye in the dungeon ſtill.

The ſecond motiue is, that God hath made a promiſe to ſuch as truly repent. 1. Of remiſſion of finnes, Iſa. 1. 16. 18. Waſh you, make you cleane, take away the euill of your workes from before mine eyes: ceaſe to doe euill, &c. Though your finnes were as crimſon, they ſhall be made as white as ſnow: though they were red like carles, they ſhall be as wool. And, Iſa. 55. 6. 7. Seeke the Lord while he may be found, call vpon him while he is neere. Let the wicked forſake his waies, & the vnnrighteous his owne imaginations, and returne vnto the Lord, and he will haue mercie on him; for hee is very plentifull in forgiuing. 11. Of life eueraſting, Eze. 18. 32. I will not the death of a ſinner, but rather that he repent & liue. And, Amos 5. 4. Thus ſaith the Lord vnto the bouſe of Iſrael, Seeke ye me, and ye ſhall liue. 11. Of imitating or remouing temporall calamities, Iſa. 26. 3. Stand in the court of the Lords house, and speake vnto all the cities of Iudah, &c. If so be they will hearken and turne every man from his euill way, that I may repent me of the plague which I haue determined to bring vpon them, because of the wickedness of their sinnes. And, 1 Cor. 11. 13. If we would iudge our felicitie, we should not be iudged, that is, afflicted with temporall punishments.

I ioyne with the remoouing of temporall calamities the mitigating of them: because they are not alwaies taken away when the party repenteth. After Dauids repentance the childe dyeth, and the sword departs not from his house: And the Prophet Micha brings in the people humbling themselves before God vnder a temporall punishment, saying, I will beare thy wrath because I haue sinned against thee.
And it is Gods pleasure that the chastement shall remaine after the partie is reconciled vnto him, that he may by that meanes be admonished of his sinne and be an example to others.

As God hath made these mercifull promises to penitent sinners, so hee hath faithfully performed them, so soone as they haue but begun to repent. Exa. 32. 1. 2. 3. Then Dauid said vnto Nathan, Thy sin is forgiuen thee. Of Manasse, 2 Chron. 33. 12. When he was in tribulation he prayed vnto the Lord his God, and humbled himselfe greatly before the Lord God of his fathers, and prayed vnto him: And God was intreated of him, and heard his prayer. Of the Publican, Luke 8. 13. The Publican, &c. I moue his breast, saying, O Lord God be mercifull to me a sinner: I tell you, this man departed iustified to his house, rather then the other. Of the thiefe, Luke 23. 42. 43. Hee said vnto Iesus, Lord, remember mee, when thou comest to thy kingdome.
Then Iesus said vnto him, Verily, I say vnto thee, to day shalt thou be with me in Paradise.

Hauiug such notable promises made to Repentance, no man is to draw backe from the practise of it, because of the multitude of his sinnes, but rather to doe it. The Pharisees said to Christis disciples, Why eates your master with Publicans and sinners? When Iesus heard it, hee said vnto them, the whole neede not the Physician, but they that are sicke: And, I came not to call the righteous: but sinners to repentance. And, Verily, I say vnto you, that Publicans and harlots shall goe before you into the kingdome of God.

CHAP. X.

Of the time of Repentance.

THE time of repentance is the time present, without any delay at all: as the holy Ghoist saith, To day if ye will heare his voice, And,
Exhort one another daily, while it is called to day:
lest any of you be hardened through the deceiuities of sinne: Reasons hereof are these: 1. Life is vncertaine: for no man knowes at what houre or moment, and after what manner hee shall goe forth of this world. Be ye also prepared therefore, for the some of man will come at an houre when ye thinke not. This one thing should make a man to hasten his repentance: and the rather, because many are dead; who purposed with themselves to repent in time to come: but were preuented by death, and shall neuer repent. 11. The longer a man liues in any sin, the greater danger: because by practise sinne gets heart and strength. Custome is of such force, that, that which men vie to doe in their life time, the same they doe and speake when they are dying. One had three pounds owing him to be paid three feuerall yeeres, when hee was dying nothing could bee got of him but three yeeres, three pounds. Again, by deferring repentance, men treasure vp wrath against the day of wrath. If a malefactor for his punishment, should bee appointed euery day to carry a tickle of wood to an heape to burne him twenty yeeres after, it must needs be an exceeding great punishment and misery:

and this is the case of euery sinner, who neglecting repentance from day to day, doth ther-by employ himselfe in heaping vp the coales of Gods wrath to burne his soule in hell, when the day of death comes. 111. The more the time is prolonged, the harder it is to repent:
the longer a man goes in sicknesse without physicke, the harder is the recovery. And where the diuell dwells long, he will hardly be remoued: The best way to kill a serpent, is to crush it in the head when it is young. I V. It is as meate and drinke to the diuell to see men in their sinnes, deferring repentance: as on the contrary, there is great ioy among the Angels of God in heauen, when a sinner doth repent. V. Late repentance is feldome or neuer true repentance. For if a man repent when he cannot sinne as in former time, as namely in death: then he leaues not sinne, but sin leaues him; wherefore the repentance which men frame to themselves when they are dying, it is to be feared lest it die with them. And it is very iust, that he should be condemned of God in his death, who contemned God in his life.
Chrysostome saith, that the wicked man hath this punishment on him, that in dying hee should forget himselfe, who when he was liuing did forget God. VI. We are with Abel to giue vnto God in sacrifice euen the fat of our flocke: now they which deferre repentance to the end doe the contrary. Late repenters offers the flowers of their youth to the diuell: and they bring the lame and broken sacrifice of their old age to God.

CHAP. XI. OF CERTAINE CASES in Repentance.

I. Case of Remitt.

Whether a man that hath professed Christ and his religion, yet afterward in perfection denies Christ, and forswears his Religion, may repent and be saved? Ans.
It is a grievous estate, yet a man may come to repent

2 Chron.
33.3.

repentance afterward. Manasse fell away to Idolatrie and witchcraft: & yet was receiued to mercie. So did Salomon: and yet no doubt recovered, & is receiued to life euerlast-ing. My reason is, because God vouchsafed him to bee a pen-man of some parts of holy Scripture, & the Scriptures were written not by such as were men of God only, but by such as were holy men of God, Peter denied Christ of knowledge against his owne conscience, and that curbing and banning: and yet came to repentance afterwards: as appears by the tes-timonic of Christ, Luk. 22. 32. I haue prayed for thee, that thy faith faile not, therefore when thou art conuered, strengthen thy brethren.

Obiect. I. Matth. 10. 33. Who soener shall denie mee before men, him will I denie before my Father which is in heauen. Answer. The place is only to be vnderstood of such a denial of Christ which is finall.

*Obiect. II. Hebr. 6. 4, 5, 6. It is impossible that they which were once enlightened, and haue tasted of the beautifull gift, &c. If they fall away should bee renued by repentance. And Hebr. 10. 26. If we sinne willingly after that we haue receiued the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no sacrifice for sinne.
Ans.* These places must be vnderstood of the fin which is to death, in which men of desperate malice against Christ vniuersally & wholly fall away from religion. For the holy Ghoist saith not, If they fall, but If they fall away. And it is added, that they crucifie the Sonne of God and make a mocke of him, that they account the blood of the new testament an unholy thing: that they despise the spirit of Gods. And the word translated willingly, imports somewhat more, namely, to sinne because a man will, that is, wilfully. The like answer is to be giuen to the question, whereby it is demanded, whether men ouer-taken with the vnnaturall sinnes mentioned, Rom. 1. 24, 25, 26. may come to repentance afterward or no: namely, that although the sins be heinous and capital, yet the grace of repentance is not denied: as appears in the example of the Corinthians, 1 Cor. 6. 9, 10, 11.

II. Case of Recidination.

Whether the childe of God after Repentance for some grievous sinne, doe fall into the same againe, and come to repentance the second time? Ans. The case is dangerous, as we may see by comparison in the body. If one fall into the relapse of an ague or any other strong disease, it may cost him his life: and the recovery will be very hard. Christ said to the mā that had bin sicke eight & thirty yeeres, after that he had healed him, Beholde, thou art made whole, sin no more lest a worse thing befall thee. And the vnclane spirit returning takes to him other fouen spirits worse then himselfe.
In deede we finde no particular example of recovery after a relapse, in the Scriptures: yet no doubt a recovery may be. Reasons are these: 1.
I. Promise is made of remission of sinnes in Christ, without any tearme of time; without any limitation to any number or kinds of sin-ne: alio the blasphemie against the H. Ghoist.

Therefore there may be a Repentance and sal-uation after a relapse: 11. Christ tells Peter that hee must forgiue, not till seauen times onely (which peraduenture hee thought to be very much) but seuen times seauen times, and that in one day, if one returne seuentie seuen times, & say; it repents me. Now if we must doe this, which haue not so much as a drop of mercie in vs in comparison of God: hee will no doubt often forgiue, euen for one sinne, if men will returne and say, it repents mee; considering that with him is plentifull redemption, and hee is much in spurring.

III. Case of Restitution.

Whether hee that repents is to make restitution if hee haue taken any thing wrongfully from his neighbour? Ans.
Yea; Zacharia, when he repented and receiued Christ, gaue halfe of his goods to the poore, and if he had taken any thing by forged candidation, hee restored it fourfold. It is but a badde practise when a man on his death-bed will verily deuoutly bequeath his soule to God, and his goods cuill gotten (as his conscience will often cry in his eare) to his childre & friends, without either restitution or amends making.
Quest. But what if a man be not able to restore?
Ans. Let him acknowledge the fault, & God will receiue the wil for the deede: As Paul said in the like case, 2 Cor. 8. 12. If there be a willing minde, it is according to what which a man hath, and not according to that which a man hath not. Quest.
When a man by restoring shall discredit himselfe: how shall he restore and keep his credit?
Ans. Let him (if the thing to be restored be of small moment) make choise of some faithfull or honest friend, who may deliuer the thing in the behalfe of the partie, concealing his name.
Quest. How if the partie be dead? Ans. Let him restore to the heires and successours; if there be none, let him restore to God, that is, the Church and the poore.

IV. Case of teares.

Whether doth repentance alwaies goe with teares or not? Ans. No: For very pride and hypocrisie will draw forth teares.
And some there are, that can weepe for their sinnes in the presence of others, whereas being alone, they neither will nor can. Some again are of that constitution of body, that they haue teares at command. And a godly man with drie cheekes may mourne to God for his sins, and intreat for pardon and receiue
it. Yet in all occasions of deeper griefe for sin, teares will follow: vnlesse men haue stony and flinty hearts. And yet againe, though the greatest cause of sorrow be offered, the softest heart that is, sheds not teares at the first, but afterwards it will. When the bodie receiues a

deepe wound, at the first ye shall see nothing but a white line or dint made in the flesh, without any blood; stay but a while, then comes blood from the wound in great abundance. So at the first the mind is astonish'd, and gives no tereass but after some respite or consideration, teares follow.

V. Case of death.

VWhether the repentant sinner can alwaies shew himselfe comfortable on his death-bed. Ans. Though the comfort of Gods spirit shall neuer bee abolished from his heart: yet he cannot alwaies testifie it. For he may die of a burning ague; and by reason of the extremity of his fits, be troubled with idleness of head, and breake out into raging speeches and blasphemies. Likewise he may die of a sickness in the braine, and be troubled with grievous convulsions, so as his mouth shall be writhen to his eares, his necke turned behind him, & the very place where he lies shall shake through his trembling, as daily experience will testifie. Neither is any to thinke this strange: for Salomon saith, Eccles. 9. 2. All things (in outward matters) come alike to all, and the same condemnation is to the just and to the wicked: to the good and to the pure, and to the polluted, and to him that sacrificeth, and to him that sacrificeth not.

CHAP. XII.

Of the contrary to Repentance.

CONTRARY to repentance is impenitencie, whereby men continue in one estate, neither forrowing for sinne, nor turning from it.

It is one of the most grievous iudgements that is, if it be finally: For as a sicke man, then is most sicke, when he feels the least sicknesse, and saith he is well: so miserable man is in most miserie when he feels no miserie, and thinkes himselfe in good estate.

This sinne befalls them that iudge themselves righteous, needing no repentance: As the Pharisees in the daies of Christ, the Catharists in our age. Adde vnto these such as haue hardened their hearts, so as they cannot discern betweene good and euill, nor tremble at Gods iudgements, but rather fret and rage against it, till God in his wrath either destroy them, or cast them to finall despair. As it befell Iudas the Apostate, who died blaspheming and cast his owne blood into the aire.

Betweene the two extreames, Repentance and Impenitencie, is placed counterfeite repentance: For the wicked nature of man can dissemble & counterfeite Gods grace, as the Lord complaines of the Iewes, Ier. 3. 10. Her rebellious sister Judah hath not returned vnto me with her whole heart, but she faignedly saith to the Lord, Counterfeite repentance, is either ceremoniall, or desperate.

Ceremoniall, when men repent in outward shew, but not in truth of heart: As Saul, 1. Sam. 15. 24. 30. Then said Saul to Samuel, I haue sin- ned, for I haue transgressed the commandement of the Lord, and obeyed their voice. Now therefore I pray thee take away my sin, and turne againe with me, that I may worship the Lord, &c. Again, I haue sinned, but honour me, I pray thee, before the elders of my people. Of Ahab, When Ahab heard these words, he rent his cloath, and put on sackcloth, & fasted, & went softly. And the word of the Lord came to Elisha, saying, Seest thou how Ahab is humbled before me?

Dissembling repentance may be discerned, because men after a time returne to their old ways againe. Pharao king of Egypt said vnto Moses and Aaron, Exod. 8. 8. Pray vnto the Lord that he may take away the frogs from me & from my people. And Exo. 9. 27. When Egypt was smitten with haile, he said, I haue now sinned, and the Lord is righteous: but I and my people are wicked: Pray ye vnto the Lord that there be no more mighty thunders and haile. Again, troubled with gadhoppers, he said Exod. 10. 16. I haue sinned against the Lord your God, and against you, & now forgive me my sinne onely this once. Now marke the issue of all: when Pharao saw that hee had sinned, he hardened his heart, and hearkned not vnto them, as the Lord had said, Exod. 8. 15. This is the ordinary and common repentance that most men practise in the world.

Desperate repentance commonly called Penitence, is when a man hauing onely Gods iudgements before his eyes, is smitten with horror of conscience: and wanting assurance of Gods mercie, despaires finally. This was Iudas repentance, Math. 27. 3. who when he had brought againe the thirtee pieces of silver, confessed his fault, and went and hanged himselfe.

CHAP. XIII.

Of corruptions in the doctrine of Repentance.

THE Church of Rome at this day hath corrupted the ancient doctrine of repentance, being one of the speciall points of religion. The corruptions are especially sixe.

The first, that they make repentance or penance to be a Sacrament, which cannot be: because it wants an outward signe. And though some say, that the words which the priest rehearse in absolution, are the signes: yet that cannot be, because the signe must be not onely audible, but also visible.

The second, that a sinner hath in him a naturall disposition, which being stirred vp by Gods preuenting grace, he may and can work together with Gods spirit in his owne repentance: But in deede all our repentance is to bee ascribed to Gods grace wholly, Eph. 2. 4. The soule of man is not weake, but starke dead in sinne, and therefore it can no more prepare it selfe to repentance, then the body being dead in the grave can dispose it selfe to the last resurrection.

The third corruption, that contrition in repentance must be sufficient. A thing impossible. For sin doth so greatly offend Gods maiestie,

1. King,
26. 27,
28. 29.

1. Job, 22.
2. Sam. 12. 14.

1. Job, 22.
2. Sam. 12. 14.

that no man can euer mourne enough for it.

The fourth, that contrition doth merit remission of sinne. An opinion that doth derogate much from the all-sufficient merit of Christ.

The fifth, that he that repents must confesse all the finnes that he can remember; with all their circumstances to his owne Priest, or one in his stead, if he will receiue pardon. This kind of confession is a meere forgery of mans braine. 1. There is neither precept nor example of it in the Scriptures. 1. Danid and others haue repented and haue receiued remission of their finnes, without confession of their finnes in particular to any man.

The last, that the sinner by his workes and sufferings must make satisfaction to God for the temporall punishment of his finnes. A flat blasphemy: The Scriptures mention no other satisfaction but Christ; and if his be sufficient, ours is needlesse: if ours needfull, his imperfect. Papists write that both may stand together. Christs satisfaction (they say) is a plaister in a boxe vnapplyed: mans satisfaction as a meane to apply it: because it prepares vs to receiue it. Ah, good diuinitie! for eu en in common sense the satisfaction of Christ must first be applied to the person of man, that it may please God, before the workes (which they tearme satisfactions) can any way bee acceptable to God.

To conclude, the Romish doctrine of repentance, is the right way to hell: For when a sinner shall be taught that hee must haue sufficient sorrow for his finnes: and withall, that hee must not beleue the remission of his owne finnes particularly: when sorrow comes vpon him, and hee wants sound comfort in Gods mercy, hee must needs fall into desperation without recovery. Therefore the Papists in the house of death, (as we haue experience) are glad to leaue the trumpet of humane satisfaction, and to rest only for their iustificati on, on the obedience of Christ.

LAYS DEO.

THE COMBATE OF THE FLESH AND SPIRIT.

GAL. 5. 17.
For the flesh lusteth against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh: and these are contrary one to another, so that ye cannot doe the things which ye would.

THE Apostle Paul from the beginning of this chapter to the 13. verse exhorts the Galatians to maintain their Christian libertie: and from thence to the end of the chapter hee perswade them to other speciall duties of godlinesse. In the 13. verse hee stirres them vp to be feruente one to another by loue: in the 15. verse hee dissuades them from contentions and doing of iniuries. In the 16. verse hee shewes the remedie of the former finnes, which is, to walke according to the spirit. In the 17. verse hee renders a reason of the remedie, the force whereof is this. The flesh & the spirit are contrary: wherefore if yee walke according to the spirit, it will hinder the flesh; that it shall not carry you forward to doe iniuries and lye in contentions, as otherwise it would.

In this verse we haue to observe five points. The first, that there is a combat betweene the flesh and the spirit, in these words. The flesh lusteth against the spirit, & the spirit against the flesh. The second, is the matter of this combat which stands in the contrarye lusting of the flesh & the spirit. The third is the cause of the combat in these words, and these are contrary. The fourth, is the subiect or person in whom this combat is, noted in these words, So that yee, the Galatians. The last is the effect of the combat, in the last words: ye cannot doe, &c.

Touching the combat it selfe, diuers points are to be considered. The first, what these two, which make combat, namely, the flesh and the spirit, are. They haue diuers significati ons: first of all, the spirit is taken for the soule, and the flesh for the body: But so they are not taken in this place. For there is no such combat betweene the body and the soule: both which agree together to make the person of one man. Secondly, the spirit signifies naturall reason, & the flesh the naturall appetite or concupiscence. But they cannot so bee vnderstood in this place. For the spirit here mentioned doth fight enen against naturall reason: which though it serue to make a man without excuse, yet it is an enemy to the spirit. Thirdly, the spirit signifies the Godhead of Christ, and the flesh the manhood: but it must not bee so taken here; For then every man regenerate should be defiled. Lastly, the spirit signifies a created quality of holinesse, which by the holy Ghost is wrought in the minde, will, and affections of man; and the flesh, the naturall corruption or inclination of the minde, will, and affections to that which is against the law: In this sense these twaine are taken in this place.

Secondly, it is to be considered how these twaine, the flesh and the spirit, can fight together, being but meere qualities. And we must know that they are not seuered asunder, as though the flesh were placed in one part of the soule, and the spirit in another; but they are

ioyned and mingled together in all the faculties of the soule: The minde or vnderstanding part, is not one part flesh, and another spirit; but the whole minde is flesh, and the whole minde is spirit, partly one, & partly the other. The whole will is partly flesh and partly spirit: the flesh and the spirit, that is, grace and corruption not feuered in place, but only in reason to bee distinguished. As the aire in the dawning of the day is not wholly light or wholly darke as at midnight & at noone day, neither is it in one part light, and another part darke: but the whole aire is partly light, and partly darke throughout. In a vessell of lukewarme water, the water it selfe is not only hot or only cold, or in one part hot and another part cold: but heate and colde are mixt together in euery part of the water: So is the flesh and the spirit mingled together in the soule of man: and this is the cause why these two contrary qualities fight together.

Thirdly, in this combat we are to consider what equalitie there is betweene these two combats, the flesh and the spirit: and we must know, that the flesh vially, is more in measure then the spirit. The flesh is like the mighty gyant Goliath, and the spirit is little & small, like young David. Hence it is, that Paul calls the Corinthians which were men iustified & sanctified carnall. I could not (saith he, 1 Cor. 3. 1.) brethren speake vnto you, as vnto spiritual men, but as vnto carnall, as vnto babes in Christ. And none can come to be tall men in Christ according to the age of the fullnesse of Christ, till after this life. And the speech which is vsed of some diuines, that the man regenerate hath but the reliques of sinne in him, must be vnderstood warily, else it may admit an vturth. As for the measure of grace it can be but small in respect, whereas we doe receiue but the first fruits of the spirit in this life, and must waite for the accomplishment of our redemption till the life to come. For all this, the power & efficacy of the spirit is such, that it is able to preuaile ordinarily against the flesh. For the flesh receiues his deadly wound at the first instant of mans conuersion, and continually dyeth after by little and little: and therefore it fights but as a maimed souldier. And the spirit is continually confirmed and increased by the holy Ghost: and it is liuely & stirring; and the vertue of it like muske: one graine whereof will giue a stronger smell, then many ounces of other perfumes. Some may say, that the godly man doth more feele the flesh then the spirit: & therefore that the flesh is euery way more then the spirit. I answer, that we must not measure our estate by feeling which may easily deceive vs. A man shall feele a paine which is but in the top of his finger more sensibly then the health of his whole body: yet the health of the body is more then the paine of a finger. Secondly, we feele corruption not by corruption, but by grace; and therefore men, the more they feele their inward corruptions, the more grace they haue.

This much of the combat it selfe I now let vs come to the manner of this fight.

It is fought by Lusting: To lust in this place, signifies to bring forth and to stirre vp motions and inclinations in the heart, either to good or euill.

Lusting is two-fold: the lusting of the flesh, and the lusting of the spirit.

The lusting of the flesh hath two actions, the first is to engender euill motions and inclinations of selfe-loue, enuy, pride, vnbeleefe, anger, &c. S. James saith, 1. 14. that men are emised and drawne away by their owne concupiscence. Now this enticing is onely by the suggestion of bad cogitations and desires. This action of the flesh made Paul say, Rom. 7. 14. that he was carnall, sold vnder sinne.

The second action of the flesh, is to hinder, and quench, and ouerwhelme all the good motions of the spirit. Paul found this in himselfe when he said, Rom. 7. 23. I see another law in my members rebelling against the law of my minde, and leading me captiue to the law of sinne. By reason of this action of the flesh, the man regenerate is like to one in a slumber troubled with the disease called Ephialtes or the mare: who thinks that he feelles something lying on his breast as haueic as a mountaine and would faine haue it away, whereupon he strides and labours by hands and voice to remooue it, but for his life cannot doe it.

On the contrary, the lusting of the spirit contains two other actions. The first is, to beget good meditations, motions, inclinations, and desires in the minde, will, and affections. Of this David speaketh: Psal. 16. 7. My reynes teach me in the night season: that is, my minde, affection and will, and my whole soule being sanctified and guided by the spirit of God, doe minister vnto mee considerations of the way in which I ought to walke. Isaies prophesying of the Church of the new Testament, saith, Isa. 30. 21. When a man goeth to the right hand or to the left, he shall heare a voice, saying: Here is the way, walke ye in it. Which voice is not only the outward preaching of the ministers; but also the inward voice of the spirit.

The second action of the spirit, is to hinder and suppress the bad motions and suggestions of the flesh. Saint Iohn saith, 1. Iohn 3. 9. he that is borne of God sinneeth not, because his seed remaineth in him; that is, grace wrought in the heart by the holy Ghost which resisteth the rebellious desires of the flesh.

That the manner of this fight may more cleerely appeare, we must examine it more particularly. In the soule of man there be two speciall parts, the minde and the will.

In the minde there is a double combat. The first is betweene knowledge of the word of God, and naturall ignorance or blindness. For seeing we do in this life know but in part therefore knowledge of the truth must needs be ioyned with ignorance in all that is enlightened; and one of these being contrary to another, they strine to ouershadow and ouercast each other.

Hence we may learne the cause why excellent diuines doe varie in diuers points of religion: and it is, because in this combat naturall blindness yet remaining, preuailes more or lesse. Men that are dim-lighted and cannot discern without spectacles, if they bee set to discri a thing afarre off, the most of them would be of diuers opinions of it. And men enlightened and regenerate in this life, do but see as in a glasse darkly. Again, this must teach all Rude:ns of diuinitie often to suspect themselves in their opinions and defences: seeing in them that are of foundest iudgement the light of their vnderstanding is mixed with darkness of ignorance. And they can in many points see but as the man in the Gospell, who when our Saviour Christ had in part opened his eyes, faw men walking not as men, but in the forme of trees: Also this must teach all that reade the scriptures to inuocate and call vpon the name of God, that he would enlighten them by his spirit, and abolish the mist of naturall blindness. The prophet David was worthily enlightened with the knowledge of Gods word, so as he excelled the ancient & his owne teachers in wisdom; yet being priue to himselfe touching his owne blindness, often prayeth in the Psalme 119. 18. Enlighten mine eyes that I may vnderstand the wonders of thy law.

By reason of this fight, when naturall blindness preuailes, the child of God truly enlightened with knowledge to life euertlasting, may erre not only in lighter points, but euén in the very foundation of religion, as the Corinthians and the Galatians did. And as one may erre, so an hundred men may also: yea a whole particular Church: and as one Church may erre, so an 100. more may. For in respect of this combat, the estate and condition of all men is alike. Whence it appeares, that the Church militant vpon earth is subiect to error. But yet as the diseases of the body be of two sorts; some curable, & some incurable which are to death: so likewise errors are. And the Church though it be subiect to sundry falls, yet it cannot erre in foundation to death: the errors of Gods children be curable. Some may here say, If all men and Churches be subiect to error, then it shal not be good to ioynewith any of them, but to separate fro them all. I answer, thought they may & do erre, yet we must not separate from the, so long as they doe not separate fro Christ.

The second combat in the minde, is betweene faith and vnbeleefe. For faith is imperfect, & mixt with the contrary, vnbeleefe, presuming, doubting, &c. As the man in the Gospell saith, Lord, I belecue, helpe mine vnbeleefe.

By reason of this fight, when vnbeleefe preuailes, the very child of God may fall into fits and pangs of despair: as Iob & David in their temptations did. For David once considering the prosperity of the wicked, brake out into this speech: Psal. 73. 13. Certainely I haue clen- mine heart in vaine, and washed mine hands in innocency. Yea, this despair may be so extreme, that it shal weaken the body, and consume it more then any sickness: No man is to thinke this strange in the child of God. For though hee despair of his election and saluation in Christ, yet his desperation is neither total nor final. It is not total, because hee doth not despair with his whole heart, faith euén at that instant lusting against despair. It is not final, because hee shall recover before the last end of his life.

To proceed, the combat in the will is this: The will partly willetth and partly nilletth that which is good at the same instant: and so likewise it willetth and nilletth that which is euill, because it is partly regenerate and partly vnregenerate. The affections likewise, which are placed in the will, partly embrace and partly eschew their objects: as lone partly loueth, and partly doth not loue God and things to be loued: feare is mixed & not pure (as schoolemen haue dreamed) but partly filiat, partly seruile, causing the child of God to stand in awe of God, not onely for his mercies, but also for his iudgements & punishments. The wil of a man regenerate is like him that hath one legge koud, the other lame: who in euery step which he makes, doth not wholly halt, or wholly goe vpright, but partly goe vpright and partly halt. Or like a man in a boat on the water: who goeth vppwards: because he is carried vppward by the vessell, and at the same time goes downward, because he walks downward in the same vessell at the same instant. If any shal say that contraries cannot be in the same subiect: the answer is, they cannot, if one of them bee in his full strength, in the highest degree; but if the force of them both bee delayed and weakened, they may be ioyned together.

By reason of this combat, when corruption preuailes against grace in the will and affections, there ariseth in the godly a certaine deadnesse or hardnesse of heart, which is nothing else but a want of sense or feeling. Some may say, that this is a fearefull iudgement: but the answer is, that there bee two kinds of hardnesse of heart; one which possideth the heart, & is neuer felt, this is in them, who haue their confidence feared with an boy yron; who by reason of custome in sinne are past all feeling, who likewise despise the meanes of softening their hearts. And indeed this is a fearefull iudgement. There is another hardnes of heart which is felt: & this is not so dangerous as the former: for as we feele our sickness by contrary life and health: so hardnes of heart when it is felt, argues quicknesse of grace, & softnes of heart. Of this David once complained in the Psalmes: of this the child of Israel speak when they say, Why hast thou hardened our hearts from thy waies?

Thus much of the manner of the combat in particular: before we proceed any further, let vs marke the issue of it, which is to preuaile against the flesh.

The spirit preuailes against the flesh at two times: in the course of a mans life, and at his end; but yet with some foiles received.

Rom. 8.1

I say the spirit preuailes, not in one instant, but in the whole course of a mans life, so Saint Iohn saith, Hee that is begotten of God sinneth not: for hee preferreth himselfe: the grace of God in his heart ordinarily preuaileth in him. And Paul makes it the propertie of the regenerate man, to walke according to the spirit, which is not now & then to make a steppe forward, but to keepe his ordinary course in the way of godlines: As in going from Barwicke to London, it may bee a man now and then will goe amiss: but he speedily returns to the way againe, and his course generally shall be right.

Againe, the spirit preuailes in the end of a mans life. For then the flesh is vterly abolished, and sanctification accomplished, because no vncleane thing can enter into the kingdome of heauen.

Rom. 7.

This further must be conceived; that when the spirit preuailes, it is not without resistance and striving: as Paul testifieth, I doe not the good which I would, but the euill which I would not, that doe I. Which place is not to be vnderstood onely of thoughts & inward motions: (as some would haue it) nor of particular offences: but of the generall praefice of his dutie or calling, through the whole course of his life. And it is like the praefice of a sick man, who hauing recovered of some grievous disease, waketh a turne or twaine about the chamber, saying, ah I would faine walke vp & down, but I cannot: meaning not that he cannot walke at all, but signifying that he cannot walke as he would, beeing soone wearied through faintnesse.

I adde further, that this preuailling is with foyles. A foyle is, when the flesh for a time vanquisheth and subdueth the spirit. In this case, the man regenerate is like a fouldier, that with a blow hath his braine-pan cracked, so as he lies groweling astonishd not able to fight: or like him that hath a fit of the falling sicknes who for a time lies like a dead man. Hence the question may be moued, whether the flesh preuailling doth not extinguish the spirit: and so cut off a man from Christ; till such time as he be ingrafted againe. The answer is this. There be two sorts of Christians: one, who are in fleshy and name professe Christ: and such an one is no otherwise a member of Christs mytticall body, then a wooden legge fet to the body is a member of the bodie. The second is hee, that in name and deede is a liuely part and member of Christ. If the first fall, he can not be cutt off, because hee was neuer ingrafted. If the second fall, he may be and is cutt off from Christ. But marke how: he is not wholly cutt off, but in some part, namely, in respect of the inward fellowship & communion with Christ, but not in respect of conjunction with him. A mans arme taken with the dead palfie, hangs by and receiues no heate, life or sense from the members, or from the head, yet for all this, it remains still vnited and coupled to the body, and may againe be recovered by plaisters and physicks: so after a grievous fall the child of God feels no inward peace & comfort, but is smitten in conscience with the trembling of a spirituall palfie for his offence: and yet indeede still remains before God a member of Christ in respect of conjunction with him, and shall be restored to his former estate after serious repentance.

And God permits these foiles for weightie causes: first, that men might bee abashed and confounded in themselves with the consideration of their vile natures, and learne not to swell with pride; because of Gods grace. Paul saith, that after he had bin rapt into the third heauen, the angel of Sathia was sent to buffet him, and (as we say) to beate him blacke and blew, that he might not be exalted out of measure.

The second, that wee may learne to denie our felues and cleaue vnto the Lord from the bottome of our hearts. Paul saith that he was sick to death, that he might not trust in himselfe, but in God who raiseth the dead.

Thus much of the manner of the combate; now follows the cause of it.

The cause is the contrarietie that is betwene the flesh and the spirit. As Paul saith, The wisdom of the flesh is enmity to God.

Hence we are taught, that since the fall, there is no free-will in man in spiritual matters, concerning either the worship of God or life eueralasting. For flesh is nothing else but our naturall disposition: and a man is nothing else but flesh by nature: for the spirit comes afterwarde by grace: and the flesh is flat contrary to the spirit, which makes vs doe that which is pleasing vnto God. Wherefore the will naturally is a flat bond slave vnto sinne.

Againe, hence we may learne, that it is not an easie matter to practise religion, which is to liue according to the spirit, to which our naturall disposition is as contrary as fire to water: wherefore if we wil obey God, we must learne to force our natures to the duties of godlines; yea, even sweate and take paines therein.

Lastly, here wee may learne the nature of sin. The spirit is not a substance but a qualitie: and therefore the flesh which is nothing else but originall sinne, and is contrary to the spirit, must also be a qualitie; for such as the nature of one contrary is, such is the other. There is in euery man, the substance of the body and soule, this cannot be sinne, for then the spirit also should be the substance of man. There is also in the substance the faculties of the bodie and soule: and they cannot be sinne, for then euery man should haue lost the faculties of his soule by Adams fall. Lastly, in the faculties there is a contagion or corruption which carrieth them against the law: and that is properly sinne and the flesh, which is contrary to the spirit.

The fourth point is, touching the persons in whom this combate is. Paul shewes who they are, when he saith, So that ye cannot, &c. where it appeares, that such as haue this combate in them, must bee as the Galatians, men iustified and sanctified: and yet not all such, but onely they that bee of yeares: for the infants of the faithfull, howsoever wee must repute them to belong to the kingdome of heauen; and therefore to be iustified and sanctified: yet because they doe not commit actual sinne, they want this combate of the flesh and spirit, which stands in action. As for those which be vnregenerate, they neuer felt this fight. If any say, that the worst man in the world, when he is about to commit any sinne, hath a strife and fight in him; it is true indeed: but that is an other kind of combate, which is betwene the conscience and the heart. The conscience on the one part terrifying the man from sin: the will and the affections haling and pulling him thereunto: the will and the affections withstanding and desiring that sinne were no sinne, and Gods commandement abolished: whereas contrariwise the conscience with a shrill voice proclaimes sinne to be sinne. This fight was in Pilate, who by the force of his conscience feared to condemne Christ; and yet was willing, and yielded to condemne him that hee might please the people.

Furthermore, this combate is in the regenerate but during the time of this life. For they which are perfectly sanctified feele no strife. If any shall say, that this combate was in Christ, when he said, Father, if it be thy will, let this cup passe from me: yet not my will, but thine be done; indeed, here is a combate, but of an other sort; namely, the fight of two diuerse desires: the one was a desire to do his Fathers will in suffering the death of the crosse, the other a naturall desire (which was no sin but a meere infirmity of humane nature) whereby hee in his manhood desires (as the manner of nature is to seeke the preservation of it selfe) to haue the cursed death of the crosse remoued from him.

The fifth point is the effect of this combate, which is to make the man regenerate, that hee cannot doe the things which he would, and this must be vnderstood in things both good and euill.

And first he cannot doe the euill which he would for two causes. First, because he cannot commit sinne at what time soeuer hee would. Saint Iohn saith, He that is borne of God sinneth not, neither can he sinne, because he is borne of God, that is, he cannot sinne at his pleasure or when he will: Ioseph when he was assaulted with Pothiphars wife to adulterie; because the grace of God abounded in him, whereby he answered her, saying, Shall I doe this, and sinne against God? he could not then sinne. For because his righteous heart was grieved in seeing and hearing the abominations of Sodome, could not then sin as they of Sodome did. Hence it appeares, that such persons as liue in the daily praefice of sin against their owne consciences, (though they bee professours of the true religion of Christ) haue no foundnesse of grace in them.

Secondly, the man regenerate cannot sinne in what manner he would, and there bee two reasons thereof. First, he cannot sinne with full consent of will, or withall his heart: because the will so farre forth as it is regenerate, resisteth & draweth backe: yea, even then when a man is carried head-long by the passion of the flesh, he feels some contrary motions of a regenerate conscience. It is a rule, that sinne doth not reigne in the regenerate. For so much grace as is wrought in the minde, will, affections: so much is abated proportionally of the strength of the flesh. Wherefore when he commits any sinne, he doth it partly willingly: and partly against his will. As the mariners in the tempest cast Jonas into the sea willingly: for otherwise they had not done it: yet against their wills too: which appeares because they prayed and cast their goods out of the ship, and laboured in the rowing against the tempest, and that very long, before they cast him out. And herein lies the difference betwene two men committing one and the same sinne, the one of them being regenerate, the other vnregenerate. For the latter sinneth with all his heart and with full consent, and so doth not the first. Secondly, though he fall into any sinne, yet he doth not lie long in it, but speedily recouers himselfe, by reason of grace in his heart.

Hence it is manifest, that sinnes of infirmity are committed onely of such as are regenerate. As for the man vnregenerate he can not sin of infirmity whatsoever fouly thinke. For he is not weak but itarke dead in sinne. And sinnes of infirmity are such only as arise of constraint, feare, haltnesse, and such like sudden passions in the regenerate. And though they sinne of weaknes often by reason of this spirituall combate, yet they doe not alwaies; for they may sinne against knowledge and conscience of presumption.

To come to the second point; the regenerate man cannot doe the good which he would, because he cannot doe it perfectly and soundly according to Gods will as he would. Paul saith, To will is present with me, but I find no means perfectly to doe that which I would. In this point the godly man is like a prisoner that is gorten forth of the layle, and that he might escape the hand of the keeper, desires & strives with all his heart to runne an hundred miles in a day; but because he hath trait and weightie bolts on his legges cannot for his life creepe past a mile or twaine, & that with chafing his flesh and tormenting himselfe: So the seruants of God doe heartily desire, and inendeavour to obey God in all his commandements: as it is said of King Iosias, That he turned to God with all his heart, with all his soule, with all his might, according to all the law of Moses, &c. yet because they are clogged with the bolts of the flesh, they performe obedience both slowly and weakely, with diuers shippes and falls.

they

Thus much of the combate: now let vs see what vsf may be made of it.

First of all, by it we learne what is the estate of a Christian man in this life. A Christian is not one that is free from all euill cogitations, from rebellious inclinations and motions of will and affections, from all manner of slips in his life and conseruation: for such an one is a meere deuile of mans braine, and not to be found vpon earth. But indeede hee is the sound Christian, that feeling himselfe laden with the corruptions of his vile and rebellious nature, bewailes them from his heart, and with might and maine fights against them by the grace of Gods spirit. Againe, here is ouerthrowne the Popish opinion of merit and iustification by workes of grace, on this manner: Such as the cause of workes is, such are workes themselves. The cause of workes in man, is the minde, will, and affections sanctified: in which the flesh and the spirit are mixt together, as hath bene shewed before. Therefore workes of grace, euen the best of them; are mixt workes, partly holy, and partly sinfull. Whereby it is euident to a man that hath but common sence, that they are not answerable to the righteousnes of the law; and that therefore they can neither merit life, or any way iustifie a man before God. If any reply, that good workes are the workes of Gods spirit, and for that cause perfectly righteous, I answer, it is true indeed, they come from the holy Ghost that cannot sinne, but not onely or immediately. For they come also from the corrupt minde and will of man, and in that respect become sinfull, as sweete water issuing out of a pure fountaine, is by a filthy channell made corrupt.

Thirdly, wee doe hence learne that concupiscence or originall sinne is properly and indeed sinne after baptisme, though it please the Councell of Trent to decree otherwise. For after baptisme it is flat contrary to the spirit, and rebels against it. Papists object, that it is taken away by baptisme. Ans. Originall sinne or the flesh is taken away in the regenerate thus: In it there be three things: the guilt, the punishment, the corruption: the first two are quite abolished by the merit of Christs death in baptisme: the third, that is, the corruption remains still: but marke in what manner: it remains weakened, it remains not imputed to the person of the beleuer.

Lastly, hereby we are taught to be watchfull in prayer. Watch and pray (saith Christ) for the spirit is ready, but the flesh is weak. Rebecca, when two twinnes stroue in her wombe was troubled & said, Why am I so? wherefore she went to aske the Lord, namely, by some Prophet. So when we feeble this inward fight, the best thing is to haue recourse to God by prayer, and to his word, that the spirit may be strengthened against the flesh. As the children of Israel by compassing the citie of Iericho seuen daies, and by sounding Rammes hornes ouerturned the wals thereof: so by serious inuocation of Gods name, the spirit is confirmed, and the turrets and towers of the rebellious flesh battered.

HOUVV TO LIVE, AND THAT VVELL: IN ALL ESTATES AND TIMES.

SPECIALLY,

VVhen helps and comforts faile.

To the Reader.

GOOD Reader, if thou wouldest bee saved by faith in Christ after death, thou must here linc by it before death: and faith for the time of this life, hath two great vses. The first is to cut off worldly sorrowes and cares. It is the common fashion of men, to multiply their cares out of measure, and thereby to make their lincs most miserable. For first of all, besides necessarie labours, they take vpon them many needlesse and superfluous busineses. Secondly, their manner is, to care not onely for the labours to be done, but also for the enen and successe of their labours, that they may alwayes prosper, and neuer be crossed: but this care belongs to God alone. Thirdly, they content not themselves with their los and condition, but seeke by all meanes to increase their estate, and to make themselves rich. Lastly, they exercise themselves not onely in disposing of things present, but they forecast many matters in their heads and plot the successe of things to come. Now faith, when we haue done the workes of our callings, according to the prescript of the word of God, faith (I say) maketh vs commend to God the blessing, successe, and enen thereof by prayer and assistance in his promises, not doubting but he will giue vs all things necessarie. And if we want the blessing and successe we looke for, yet faith makes vs to renounce our owne desires, and in silence to quiet our hearts in the good pleasure of God. And thus many worldly cares are cut off.

Secondly, when a man at his wits end, knowes not what in the world to doe, being as it were plunged into a sea of miseries, faith giues direction and staies the minde. For when all temporal things faile vs, euen to the very skynne and life, faith preferues within vs an assistance of the grace and mercie of God, and the hope of life euertlasting. Faith shewes vs hidden things not to be discerned by sense and reason. Life euertlasting is promised to vs, but we die for all that: we heare of the resurrection, but in the meane season we rot in our graues; we are pronounced blessed, but yet we are overwhelmed with infinite miseries: abundance of all things is promised, but for all this we often hunger and thirst: God promisethto beare vs, and to be present with vs, but he seemes oftentimes to be desceit (as it were) at our cries. Now then comes faith, which is the substance of things hoped for, and makes vs lift our minds aboue the whole world, to apprehend the inuisible and vnspeakable things of God which he hath reuealed and promised vnto vs. These things I shew more at large in this small Treatise following; reade it at thy leysure, use it for thy good, answere thou be a doer of them.

WILLIAM PERKINS.

Hab. 2. 4.

The iust man shall liue by his faith.

IN the former chapter the Prophet complaines and expostulates the matter with God, why the Iewes the people of God, should be oppressed by the Chaldeans, the enemies of God. In the beginning of the second chapter the Lord makes answer to the Prophet, and the effect of the answer is this: they shall certainly be deliuered in the time appointed, but they shall not yet be deliuered. Vpon this answer the Prophet might haply object on this manner: How then shall the afflicted Iewes be able to liue in the meane season? The Lord answers by a distinction thus: The vniust man puffes vp himselfe with vaine confidence, but the iust man shall liue by his faith.

For the better vnderstanding of the words, five things are in order to be explained. The first, what is meant by the iust man. Iustice mentioned in the word is two-folde: the iustice of the law, and the iustice of the Gospel. The iustice of the law, hath in it all points and parts of iustice, and all the perfection of all parts; and it was neuer found in any vpon earth, except Adam and Christ: the iustice of the Gospel hath all the parts of true iustice, but it wants the full perfection of parts: as a childe hath all the parts of a man in the infancie, though it want perfection of stature and tallnesse. And this kinde of iustice is nothing else, but the conuersion of a sinner, with a purpose, will, and indeauour to please God, according to all the commandements of the law. Thus was Noah iust, Iob, Zacharie, and Elizabet: and thus must the iust man be taken in this place for one that turnes to God, and by grace indeauours to please God, according to the whole law of God in his place and calling.

The second point to be considered, is what life is here meant? As death is here two-folde; the first and the second: so is life. The first, is the coniunction of the body and soule; the second is the coniunction of the whole man with God. The first, is called naturally, the second spiritual or eternall life: and both are meant in this place. For Paul brings this very text to prooue the iustificatiō of a sinner by faith; and iustificatiō is a part of spiritual life; because it is the acceptation of a sinner to eternall life. And for this cause the Prophet faith, the iust man shall liue, hauing relation not onely to the time of affliction then to come, but also to eternall life.

The third point to be considered, is what is the faith here meant: And that is infixing or fasting faith; because we must liue by the same faith, whereby we are faued. And faith hath his effect not onely after this life, but also in this life. Wee must liue first by it, before we can be faued by it. Paul therefore in his owne example expounding this text, faith, And in that I liue in the flesh, I liue by the faith of the Son of God, who hath loved me, and given himselfe for mee.

The fourth point is the construction of the words; and that is two waies. The first is thus, The iust by faith shall liue: the words by faith being ioyned vnto the word Iust. And then the sense is this: He that is iust by faith shall liue and haue eternall life. The second is thus, The iust shall liue by his faith: the words by faith being ioyned to the words shall liue; and then the sense is this: The iust whiles he liues in this world, hee shall liue by his faith. This latter construction and sense I rather choose and embrace, because Paul, euen in this sense brings this text, Gal. 3. 11, 12, to prooue that life eternall, and consequently iustificatiō, comes not by working according to the law, but by beleeuing, and he makes an oppositiō betweene liuing by faith, and liuing by works.

The fifth and last point to be considered, is how a man should liue by faith? because this last point is of great moment, I will spend some time in the explaining of it. That a man then may liue by his faith, two things are required: the first, that faith bee rightly conceived and grounded in the heart; the second, that after it is once conceived it Reigne and rule in the heart. That faith may rightly bee conceived, two things are required. The first is the knowledge of the word of God, for faith stands in relation to the word: & the word alone is the foundation of our faith. Hereupon the word is called the foundation of the Prophetes & Apostles, Eph. 2. 20. By light of naturall reason we vnderstand, that the world had a beginning and was made of God. Yet cannot reason breed in vs a certaine perswasion of this point, but onely the testimony of the word of God; & therefore it is said, Hebr. 11. 3, By faith we vnderstand that the world was ordained by God. And this made Dauid say, Psalm 56. 4, In God I will praise his word. Furthermore, in the Word three things are to bee knowne, Precepts or commandements, because they teach obedience: threatnings because they restraine disobedience: promises, because they serue to confirme vs in our obedience. Again, promises are either principall, or lesse principall. The maine or principall promise is that, in which God offereth and reuealeth righteousnesse and life euerslasting by Christ. Within this promise is contained the grant of remission of our sins of necessary patience, of the assistance of the spirit of God, and of all gifts that are inferably ioyned with faith. Promises lesse principall are concerning deliuerances in temptations, safetie in dangers, health, wealth, liberty, peace, &c. And these must all be vnderstood, with an exception of the crosse and correction: and they shall so farre forth be accomplished as they serue for Gods glory, and the good of all them that beleue. Now all these heads and points of the word of God must be knowne and that in some particular sort, that a man may liue by his faith.

The second thing required for the right conceiuing of faith, is after the word of God is once knowne, to trust God vpon his word: yea to depend vpon it, & to build vpon it. This is the first and principall worke of true faith: and it is called by Paul, Rom. 1. 5, the obedience of faith: and it is made the end and scope of the preaching of the Gospel: and not without cause. For this is the first and principall honour of God to beleue him vpon his bare word; and thereby to make a confession of the truth of God. This the diuell knew right well: and therefore the first thing that he sought to ouerthrow in Adam, was his faith in Gods word: and the scope of the first temptation, whereby he assaulted our Saviour Christ, was to ouerthrow that faith & confidence he had in his father: saying, If thou be the Son of God, command that these stones be made bread: but this thou canst not do: therefore thou art not the Son of God.

That this obedience, which we giue to God by trusting his very word, may bee right obedience, it must haue fixe conditions. First of all, it must be absolute: for we must (as it were) shur vp our own eyes, & simply without any more ado trust God vpon his bare and naked word, and suffer our selues to be led by it. In naturall things experience is first, & then faith comes afterward. And Thomas following nature desired first to seele, before he would beleue. But God must be trusted, though that which hee faith be against reason and experience. Thus Abraham beleued God against all humane hope, Rom. 4. 18. The second condition is, that this obedience must be sincere. For wee must trust Gods word for it selfe, because it is Gods word: all by-respects set apart. They which are as the stony ground, receiue Gods word and reioyce in it: and yet afterward in time of temptation go awry. The reason is, because they receiue the word, and reioyce in it, not properly for it selfe, but in respect of honour, profit, or pleasure, which they looke to reape thereby. Iohn the Baptist was a burning candle: and the Iewes reioyed in his light, onely in respect of the noelitie of it: and therefore the holy Ghost faith; They reioyed in it but for a season. The third condition is, that we must trust God not in part but in his whole word: and therefore many faile in their faith, that are content to trust him in his promises of mercie and saluation, but list not to beleue him in his commandements and threats. The fourth condition is, that we must trust God in his word, with all our hearts, that it may take deepe root and be an ingrafted word. It is not sufficient for vs to haue a taile of the good word of God, and to receiue it with ioy, valseife we thoroughly & soundly build and relye our selues vpon it. The fifth condition is, that this trusting of God must bee with an honest heart, that is, with an heart in which there is a distinct purpose not to sin, but in all things to doe the will of God. The good hearers are they which receiue the word with an honest and good heart, Luk. 8. 15. Without this can no man possibly liue by faith. He that puts away his good confidence, makes ship-wrecke of his faith, 1 Tim. 1. 19. It is godlines alone that hath the promises of this life, and the life to come. And none can liue the life of faith, but hee that is a iust man. After that men haue made some good proceedings, & do know the word, receiue it, reioyce in it, and bring forth some fruit: if the heart for all this be enill; it will canse them at length to depart from God, by disstrusting or by denying credence to the word. The sixth condition is, that the obedience of faith must be stable and constant. The Lord faith, Heb. 10. 38, My soule hath no pleasure in them that wish away themselves, that is, which for a time beleue in God, and afterward pull backe their feete and goe backe from their faith.

Seeing this is the right way to cōceiue faith, to know the word of God, and to trust him vpon the same word, all such as would liue by faith, must haue their hearts kindled with a desire to doe the things before named, specially to giue credence to every word of God. Wee may not forsake God for any creature: now we forsake him, whē we distrust him in his word. Again, not to beleue God, is very Atheisme. For by this meanes God is made a liar, and his glory and maiestie is abolished. It is the greatest part of our glory to beleue God: as Christ faith, Ioh. 3. 33, He that receiues his testimony, puts to his seale, that Gods testimony is true; that is, giues vnto God, as it were, a testimonial of his truth, and thereto puts his hand and seale. And what greater honor can there be then this, that the creature should giue testimony to the Creator?

Thus much of the conceiuing of faith: now follows the Raigne of faith. The raigne of faith is, when it beares rule & sway in the hart & life. For where faith is, there neither thought, will, affection, nor lust raignes, but faith alone. It raignes by two actions. First of all, it moues and makes vs to attend on the calling of God, & yield subiection to him in his commandements. Paul faith, Rom. 3. 31, that faith establisheth the law: & one reason is because it makes vs doe that which the law prescribes. Again, Paul faith, that his weapons are spiritual and mighy, bringing every thought in subjection to God. Now these mighy weapons are the word of God preached and beleueed. He that is borne of God cannot sin, because the seed of God remains in him; that is, the word mingled with faith. Noah his faith made him build an Arke at Gods commandment; after it was made, to enter into it, and not to dare to come out of it, till he had warrant from God. Abrahams faith made him forsake his country and kindred at Gods commandment, & go he knew not whither. And that good obedience may bee performed to every commandment of God, faith works two things in vs, memory and attention. Memorie, whereby Gods word is laid vpon in the heart, that it may be drawne out to vse, when occasion shall be offered. Attention is, when faith makes vs seriously to consider and to beleuee that the commandment of God is a commandment not for forme, but in truth, and that it doth indeede pertaine to vs. An example of both these actions of faith we haue in Ioseph, who when he was tempted to folly of Putiphars wife, answered, Gen. 39. 9. Shall I doe this wickednesse, AND SINNE AGAINST GOD? Marke here how his minde was filled and possessed with a thought and consideration of Gods commandment.

The second action of faith, whereby it raigens in the heart, is to establish & confirme them that beleue in their obedience, and subjection to God. And this it doth, by presenting Gods promises to the mind. For by means of them it worketh foure actions in the heart. First of all, it makes vs lie vnto the true God alone, whose the promises are. Secondly, it makes vs to beleue that God both can & will helpe vs according to our neede. Thirdly, it makes vs to hope for his help, that is, for good successe in prosperitie, & deliuerance, or some mitigation of our euils in aduersitie, according to the tenour of his promises. Lastly, though temporall blessings faile, it makes vs still to rest on God for mercie & for life everlasting. And thus at all times it makes God to be our refuge, our castle, our rocke, and tower of defence. Thus we see generally how faith raigens.

To proceede further, the first man liues a double life, namely, a spirituall life, and a temporall, and both of them are led by faith; as I will plainly manifest; Spirituall life, which is the beginning of eternall life, stands specially in four things. Reconciliation with God, peace of conscience, ioy of the holy Ghost, and newnesse of life. Touching reconciliation with God in Christ, it is renewed, offered, and giuen vnto vs in the maine promises of the Gospel and in the Sacraments; and it is no way in this world made ours and holden of vs, but by our faith. And in the case of our reconciliation with God, faith hath two actions, one to receive it, the other to assure vs of it.

Touching the first, faith apprehends and receiues reconciliation on this manner; First of all the spirit of God workes in a man a generall faith of the law, & the threatnings thereof, and it is called Rom 8. 15. the spirit of bondage to feare; because it causeth in vs a sight of our finnes, an apprehension of Gods anger, feare of due and deserved condemnation, despaire of our selues in respect of our selues. This being done, the same spirit worketh in vs another faith, called sauing or iustificating faith; and it apprehendeth or receiueh Christ with his benefits, by certaine steppes and degrees, and they are specially three. For first of all vpon a thorough touch and liuely sense of our miserie, there ariseth in the minde an earnest and serious meditation of the promise of mercie, and the benefits therein offered: and it is called the opening or piercing of the eare. Psal. 40. 6. Then in the second place there followes a purpose, will, desire and endeavour to beleuee, vpon consideration of the commandment of God that bids vs to beleuee and apply the promise to our selues. And further this will and desire shewes it selfe by instant and serious inuocation, which is nothing else but a flying from the condemning sentence of the law, to the throne of grace for mercie. Thirdly, after this, there follows in proceesse of time, a feeling and quieting of the minde touching Christ and his benefits, vpon some assurance thereof, wrought and conceived in the minde by the spirit of God. And this third degree is called a stablished thought. Isa. 26. 3. On this manner come we by degrees to receiue Christ for our full reconciliation with God.

For when vpon the commandment to beleuee, we doe in any measure beleuee Christ to be our Christ, he is our Christ indeede according to the tenour of the Euangelicall covenant. Thus faith apprehending Christ for our reconciliation with God, becomes a uictorious conqueror and preuailes against the Law, Satan, hell, death, condemnation, and all our spirituall enemies: and thus euery beleuer is aboue the Law, sinne, hell, death, euen in this life.

The second action of faith in the case of our reconciliation with God, is to certifie and assure vs in conscience thereby; and that is done by a practicall syllogisme, which faith frames in the minde on this manner:

Hee that beleuees the Gospell, shall haue all the benefits and blessings of God promised therein. But I beleuee the Gospell, and I beleuee in Christ;

Therefore the benefits promised therein are mine. The maior or first part of this reason, is the voice of the Gospel: the minor or the second part is the voice of the beleueing heart, which subiecteth it selfe in will and affection to the commandment which bids vs beleuee in Christ: & this is the act of speciall faith. And we may not thinke that this voice of the beleueing hart is a false alarm. For he that truly beleuees hath his minde and conscience supernaturally enlightened to discern that hee beleuees. The third part or the conclusion, is the foundation of all our ioy and spirituall comfort. For it contains in it the chiefe certentie of our adoption and saluation that can be had in this life, namely, the certentie of faith, whence follows in a lower degree in the second place, the certentie that is by works: And thus doth faith certifie all such as truly beleuee, that they are the children of God.

Out of the former conclusion, or out of the certainty which is by faith, follows a full and liuely certentie of the doctrine of the Gospel, worthy consideration; on this manner. There is a three-fold certenty: the first is certenty of reason, or of generall faith, when a man by force of argument is conuicted of the certenty of the doctrine of the Bible. This may bee in the wicked and vngodly without faith in Christ. After this in the elect by a more speciall worke of Gods spirit, follows a faith in Christ, and the certentie of iustificating or speciall faith expressed in the conclusion of the former syllogisme. Thirdly, after this certenty of speciall faith follows another experimental certentie of the truth of the Bible, which also faith concludes on this manner:

The doctrine which assures vs to bee Gods children, is certainly of God. But the doctrine of the Gospel, beleueed or mingled with our faith, assures vs to bee Gods children:

Therefore it is of God.

The maior is granted of althe minor is in effect the conclusion of the former syllogisme, & it is knowne by an experience of that spirituall comfort which the godly feele in their hearts. The conclusion sets downe the certenty of the Bible vpon a further ground, than any wit or learning of man can attaine vnto without the spirit of grace, namely, vpon an inward assurance of our reconciliation with God. Of this certenty our Sauour Christ speaks notably, Ioh. 7. 17. If any man will do my Fathers will, that is, beleuee it, and subiect himselfe to it, he shall know [namely, by that comfort which he shall feele vpon his subiection] of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speake of my selfe. And Paul faith, 1 Cor. 2. 15. that the spirituall man, that is, one regenerate by the spirit of God, iudgeth all things. Hence it follows, that such as desire to be settled for their religion, & such as desire to be good and profitable students in Diuinitie, must first of all humble themselves, and endeavour in their hearts truly to beleuee in Christ. Because hence follows the best experience of the certentie, and consequently of the vnspokeable excellencie of the Bible.

Thus then we see, how wee are to receiue, hold, & ioy our reconciliation with God in Christ, by no other thing within vs, but by the meanes of our faith alone. And therefore we must haue speciall care, that we may by the vse of good meanes attaine to a liuely faith. And for this cause we must do two things: first we are to labour to be conuicted in conscience of the certenty of the word. This done, we must then subiect our wils to the commandment of God that bids vs beleuee in Christ: we must bewaile our vnbeliefe: we must strive against the same, and pray vnto God to confirme and increase our faith, by establishing our hearts in his loue.

The second part of spirituall life, is Peace of conscience; which is nothing else but a constant and stable tranquility of minde, when the conscience doth not accuse, but excuse: and when neither hell, death, condemnation, nor any danger is feared ouermuch. This peace was in Dauid, when he said, Psal. 3. 5. I laid me downe and slept and rose againe, in the midst of manifold dangers. This peace is of great excellencie, for it is the peace of God: it is one part of the kingdom of God: it passeth all vnderstanding: it is in stead of a guard to keepe our hearts and minds in Christ. Now this excellent peace springs out of faith, whereby we beleuee our reconciliation with God. Rom. 5. 1. Being iustificied by faith, we haue peace with God. 2 Chron. 20. 20. Trust in the Lord, and ye shall be secure. Yea as our faith is, so is our peace: liuely faith, liuely peace; constant faith, constant peace; faith in life, peace in life; faith in death, peace in death: so as we may say with Simon, Luk. 2. 29. Lord, now lettest thou thy seruant depart in peace.

The third part of spirituall life, is the ioy of the holy Ghost: & that is, to reioyce in God, because he is our God, and in Christ because he is our Christ. And this kind of ioy is not taken from vs, or abated in afflictions, but rather increased. Rom. 5. 3. We reioyce in tribulations. And, Atth. 10. 24. I see endured the spoyling of your goods with ioy. Now, our faith in the promise of life is the mother & breeder of this ioy, which ariseth of that happie and blessed conclusion that faith frames in the mind; I beleuee: therefore the blessings of God promised in the gospel, are mine. Thus faith S. Peters, Beleueing ye reioyce with ioy vnspokeable & glorious. Again, the continuance & increase of our faith, is the increase of this ioy.

The last part of spirituall life, is newnesse of life and conseruation, whereby we are borne anew, and made new creatures; not because the substance of body and soule is changed, but because the image of God is restored. Now this change both for the whole and for the parts thereof, is by faith. Touching the whole: Men as they are new creatures haue their beginning from the word of promise, or from Christ crucified, who is propounded in the promise, and that as the said word, for Christ is apprehended by faith. Atth. 15. 9. Your hearts being purified by faith. 1 Iohn 3. 3. Hee which hath this hope purifieth himselfe. 1 Pet. 1. 22. Your soules are purified in obeying the truth. And againe, Being borne anew of the immortall seede of the word. The parts of newnesse of life are specially three. True wisdom, good affections, good workes. True wisdom is to aduise of good things, and to vse good meanes for the execution thereof. This wisdom ariseth of our faith in the word of God, Dauid faith, Ps. 119. 98. 99. He was wise when his teachers, and in when the ancient: and he renders the cause thereof from the worke of his faith; For thy testimonies are ever with me, & they are my meditations. Out of the same fountaine spring all good affections. The loue whereby we loue God, comes of our faith, beleuening the loue wherewith God loueth vs. The perfwasion of the forgiveness of many sins in the woman that washed Christ his feete with her teares, caused her to shew much loue to Christ. Godly sorrow, when the heart is grieved properly for the offence of God, ariseth of faith apprehending and beleuening the mercy of God in Christ. And in euery good worke, there is a three-fold action required. First, there is required an act of general faith, which is to beleuee, that the worke to be done in his kinde pleaseth God. Whatsoever is not of faith is sinne. The second is an act of iustifying faith, which is to purge the heart, and to cause it to bring forth the good worke to be done. Pf. 116. 10. I beleueed, therefore I spake. The third is also an act of iustifying faith, that is, when the worke is done, to apprehend Christ, whereby his merit is to couer the defect of the workes: because no worke of ours can please God without remission of sinne.

Thus newnesse of life with all parts thereof, hath his off spring of our faith. Yea after that a man is once made a new creature, faith giues him his life and sense: faith is the eye of the minde, whereby we behold Christ in the word and Sacraments. By this faith Abraham saw the day of Christ and reioyced. With this eye we may sufficiently behold Christ: and bodily sight in this case is not necessary for the time of this life: therefore Christ faith, Ioh. 20. 29. Blessed are they which haue not seene, and haue beleueed. Again, faith is the hand of the soule, whereby we may hold on Christ, and receiue him with all his benefits. It is the mouth of the heart, whereby we feed on Christ, eating his body & drinking his blood to eternall life. It is the feet of the soule, that makes vs walke with God. Lastly, it is a meanes to bring vs into familiaritie with God. For it is an care whereby we heare God speake to vs in his word; and it is as it were the tongue of the soule, whereby we speake to God by inuocation of his holy name.

To go yet further, spiritual life is most of all manifest in afflictions and temptations, in the bearing whereof faith reignes: and that by a three-fold action. First of all, it makes vs to depend on Gods promises, and to trust God without limitation. For it doth not limit God to any set time of deliuerance; but leaues all to God. Isa. 28. 16. He that beleuees, shall not make haste. Daniel, Dan. 9. 10. waited 70. yeeres for deliuerance out of captiuitie in Babylon, and then finding the time of deliuerance to be at hand, he prayed to God for the same. Again, faith doth not limit God to any meanes of deliuerance. God made promise to Abraham of a blessed seed. For the verifying of this promise hee gaue him Ishac in his old age. This done, he commands him to offer his only Son in sacrifice. A grieuous crosse: for by this meanes all hope is cut off, touching the promised seed. Yet by faith Abraham still beleuees the promise, and that in the very offering of his sonne. Lastly, faith doth not limit God for the measure of affliction. Iob faith, Iob 13. 15. Hee will trust in God, though he kill him. It was a grieuous affliction for Dauid to be driven out of his kingdome by his owne son, yet mark what he faith in the flight, 2 Sam. 15. 26. if hee say, I haue no delight in thee, behold, here I am, let him do vnto me as shall seeme good in his eyes. The second action of faith, is to make vs beleuee the promises of God, when we feele the contrary, & in one contrary to beleuee another. When we feele our own sins; it makes vs beleuee our iustification: when we feele our wretchednes, & misery, it makes vs beleuee our happinesse: when we feele nothing but death, it makes vs beleuee our eternal saluation: when we apprehend Gods anger, and feele him to be our enemy, it makes vs to apprehend his mercy, and to beleuee his fatherly kindnes. When Christ was forsaken of God, hee then by his faith beleuees God to be his God. The third action of faith in afflictions, is to assure vs of Gods presence, and to behold him with the eyes of faith. Thus Dauid faith, Psal. 16. 8. I haue set the Lord alwayes before me: for he is at my right hand. Moses left Egypt, and feared not the wrath of the king; because he saw him that was invisible. When the seruant of Elisba feared ouermuch the hoast of the king of Syria that compassed the towne of Dothan, the Prophet prayes to God for him, that his eyes might be opened, to see the fiery charretts of the Angels of God protecting him: and we likewise are to pray to God, that the eyes of our minds may be opened, to beleuee and to acknowledge the same or the like protection. And thus are men to lue by faith in the midst of their afflictions.

By this which hath bene said, wee are admonished first of all to acquaint our selues with the promises of God, as they are recorded in the booke of the Prophets & Apostles: secondly, at all times to build vpon them by our faith, and not to suffer our selues to be drawne from them, though all temporal blessings of God faile vs, yet health & life is selfe. This is to arme our selues with a shield against all the fierie darts of the diuell, and to put on a breast-plate, that will face the heart and life, though otherwise in temptations we be grievously maintained and foyle.

Thus much of spiritual life. That our temporal life is lead by faith, I make it thus manifest: Temporal life is preferred and maintained by an honest calling: euery calling hath his labour and work: and the labour of all callings hath miserie and trouble for his companion and fellow; and in all these faith raigens and beares the sway in them that beleuee.

For the first, that is, for the choosing and holding of our callings with good conscience, there is required a double life of faith: For we must haue a faith, whereby we must be assured that our callings are good, & lawfull in themselves: as Paul faith, Whatsoever is not of faith is sinne. For the feeling of this faith, this rule must be remembered, that offices & callings which serue to preserve the good estate of any family, Church, or common wealth, are lawfull & of God: because these are estates ordained of God, and established in the commandments of the morall law, specially in the first, fifth, & sixth commandments. Again, faith is required, whereby euery man must beleuee, that the calling in which he is; is the particular calling in which God will be serued of him. For without the conscience be settled in this, no good worke can be done in any calling. And for the better establishing of the conscience, another rule must be remembered, That they which are furnished with gifts for their callings, namely, aptnesse and willingnesse, and are thereunto called or set apart by men, whom it concerns to call, are indeed called of God. Thus the Elders of Ephesus hauing gifts to feede, and being not called of God immediately, but by men, are said to be made overscers by the holy Ghost. And Paul faith, that God committed not only to himselfe, but also to Timothy the ministration of reconciliation: and yet was Timothy not called immediately of God, but by men. And thus, in all other offices and conditions of life, he that hath gifts fit for his place, and is in good manner called thereto, by them whose duty it is to call, may assure himselfe, that he is called of God, and from this double faith and perfwasion; that our calling is lawfull in it selfe, & lawfull or pleasing God in respect of vs, ariseth an assurance of the presence of God, and of his protection, when we walke in the duties of our callings.

In the labour and work of our calling, there is required a double action of faith. The first is, to order our labours, that they be done in good manner, that is, in obedience and to good ends; that is, to Gods glorie, and to the good of men, with whom we lue. In this respect is Noah said to build an Ark by faith, and good Princes to order their common wealths, and in way of protection to make warre with their enemies: and thus must euery man of euery office, calling, trade, occupation, doe his duty by faith. The second action of faith is in our daily labours to retrain and moderate our care. Men commonly take vpon them a double care: one is to do the workes and labours of their callings; the other is to procure a blessing & good successe to their foresaid labours. But faith in Gods word where it raigens, it stirs vp the hearts of men onely to the first care, which is in the performance of their painefull labours & duties; and it restraines them from the second; causing them to leaue it to God. For when men haue done the dutie that appertaines vnto them, then faith makes them without any more a doe, to waite for a blessing on God. To this purpose the holy Ghost faith, Psal. 55. 22. Cast thy burden on the Lord, and he shall nourish thee. Again, Be not ingratefull, but in all things let your request be shewed vnto God, in prayer & supplication with thanksgiving; & Cast your care on God. Now this faith, whereby we depend on God for the successe of our labours; hath an infallible ground, namely, that God best knowes our wants, and he will giue vnto vs all things which hee in his wisdom knowes to be necessary. Christ faith, Mat. 6. 31. Your heavenly Father knoweth that you haue need of these things, that is, food & raiment. Again, He careth for you: and, Nothing shall be wanting vnto them that feare God. If men would by faith build on these promises, they should not need like dreges of the world to soyle and spend themselves, and the best part of their dayes in worldly cares, as they do for they should haue a greater blessing of God with lesse care, if they would trust him: & they should haue farre more time then they haue, to care for heauen and heauenly.

Thirdly and lastly, euery calling since the fall of Adams hath misery and affliction to bee his companion. And for the quiet bearing of the miserie of euery calling, faith is of great moment. For it workes patience by perswading and setting our minds in two things: the first, that God is well pleased with vs, and that we are reconciled to God in Christ: the second, that all our miseries shal in the end turne to our good and everlasting saluation: and where these two perfwasions take place, there is contentation in any estate.

Thus much for the meaning of the text, now follows the vie. The first and principall vie concerns the information of our iudgement, in the maine point of our saluation. For hence Paul hath taught vs to gather, that a sinner is iustified before God by his faith without the workes of the law. And he disputes on this manner: If a sinner be iustified by faith, hee is not iustified by the law: but a sinner is iustified by faith, therefore hee is not iustified by the law. The conclusion is propounded in the 11. verse of the 3. chapter to the Galatians. The maior is confirmed in the 12. verse by the diuers manner of iustifying: The law (saith Paul) iustificeth by doing, not by beleueing: and faith iustificeth not by doing, but by beleueing. The minor is confirmed in the 11. verse, by the testimony of the Prophet Habakkuk: The iust shall live by his faith. And wheteas the Papists of our time say, that Paul in this argument disputes onely against such workes of the law as are done by nature, but not by grace: they erre and are deceived. For hee opposeth not workes of nature and workes of grace, but workes and faith, doing and beleueing: and the Prophet faith very plainly; and make it: that the iust man, who is a doer of the workes of grace, is iustified and liues not by his workes, but by his faith. Again, where they make a double iustification; one whereby a sinner is made a iust man, the other whereby a iust man is made more iust: and teach that the first is by faith without works, and the second by faith and works, they erre likewise. For not only a sinner vnconverted, but the iust man stands iust, & is fill iustified by his faith without his works. Paul when he alleadged this text knew but of one iustification, whether we respect the beginning, or the continuance and the accomplishment thereof.

Secondly, hence may be learned the right way of reformation of our liues. In this reformation two things are required: an Examination and a change. If we examine our liues by this text, we shall find two maine faults and aberrations in the liues of men. The first is, that they reiect and put away the rule of direction that serues for the ordering of their liues. And this they doe, when they doe not beleue and trust God in his word. And we may not think, that this our vnbeleefe is a small matter: because it is a mother sinne of all other sinnes: and it is the principall law of the kingdom of darkness, not to beleue God. Hereupon our enemy Satan endeauoured by all meanes to imprint this lesson of vnbeleefe in the mindes of our first parents: and hauing effected his purpose, hee euer since endeauoured to make this sinne to raigne in the liues of men. It raignes commonly by seuen speciall fruits or sinnes. The first is Atheisme, when men deny God and his word. Atheisme hath two parts: Epicurisme and Temporizing. Epicurisme is, when men contemning Gods commandements, threatnings, promises, care for nothing but meate, drinke, and pleasures. Temporizing is, when men embrace religion so farre forth as they are forced by lawes & times, & no otherwise. These are the common sinnes of our dayes. The second fruit is Heresie, and that is, when men distrust God in some article of faith. This fruit abounds in the last age of the world: because in these times the diuell hath receiued the heresies of the former ages. The third fruit is, Apostasie, and that is when men change their faith and religion. And this change is made, when the euil heart of vnbeleefe catcheth them to depart from the liuing God. This hath bin the fault of the people of this land in the daies of persecution. The fourth fruit is Hypocrisie, which is to make a shew and pretence of faith, and to want the power of it in honest & godly conuersation: or againe, hypocrisie is nothing else, but the vnbeleefe of the heart, couered ouer with the false appearance of faith. And it is the common sin of these times, in which a formall or ceremoniall faith, and ceremoniall repentance beare a great sway. For men make the highest degree of profession that can bee, when they come to the Lords table; and yet afterward take to themselves libertie to liue and doe as they list. The fifth fruit is, car-nall securitie, when men vpon contempt of the iudgements of God, and threatnings of his word, goe one still in their sinnes, flattering and soothing themselves. Thus the sinnes in law of Lot, when they heard of the destruction of Sodom, esteemed it but as a mockerie. Thus did the Iewes make a league with hell and death, and said with themselves that the scourges of God should not come at them. And in this last age of the world, men shall additt themselves to pleasures and profits, thinking nothing of any iudgement of God, till vengeance befall them. The sixth is, willfull ignorance of the will and word of God. For the diuell blinds the minds of the vnbeleeuers, that the light of the Gospel shine not vnto them. This is the fault of our common people: who commonly hold an opinion, that it belongs not to them to know the word of God: because they are not learned (as they say:) or because they haue other businesse to thinke on. The last fruit is worldlines, and that is, when men mind nothing but worldly matters. And this comes of the want of faith in the prouidence of God. These are the principall fruites of vnbeleefe, whereby it may easily be discerned and descried where it is. And if any man thinke himselfe to haue a fulnesse & perfection of faith, as many doe: euen this one thing is a sufficient argument of his vnbeleefe. For it is the first steppe to faith to see in our selues the want of faith.

The second maine aberration in the liues of men is, that they set vp false rules to order their liues by: and they are foure. The first is the light of naturall reason. For many are of opinion, that it is sufficient to the pleasing of God, if they liue ciuilly, that is, do iustice to euery man, and liue peaceably, hurting none. This is the blind Diuinitie of the world, that if they carry themselves thus and thus, whatsoever their sinnes be, God will hold them excused. But they are farre wider from a life acceptable to God, faith is required, the light of reason will not serue the turne. Paul saith, Rom. 8. 7. 1. Cor. 2. 14. The wisdom of the naturall man is enemie to God, and he cannot discern the things of God. The Pharisees had ciuill iustice & goodness: yet faith Christ, except your iustice exceed theirs, ye cannot enter into the kingdom of heauen.

The second false Rule is sense: that is, feeling and feeling by this men commonly liue. If we enioy the good blessings of God: health, wealth, libertie, peace, honour, good report, then we can trust God; but if he withdraw his blessings, and present himselfe to vs with an empty hand, we trust him no longer, nay we murmur and despaire, and without feare of God, vse any vnlawfull meanes to releue our selues. Where we haue his precious word, yet doe we not trust him vpon his bare and naked word, vnlesse we shall he lay down vnto vs some good pawning, and makes vs to feele and enioy his good blessings. Again, if any man, that is our friend, make promise of help or deliuerance in any danger, we rest content and finde our selues much calfed thereby: and yet the promises made by God in his word of helpe and deliuerance, though they be often read vnto vs, and often vrged, breed not the like contentation. Herthat on his death bed hath commended his children to some trustie friend, departs more quieted in minde, then if he had commended the without helpe of friend to God their best father. A man vpon good security lends to another an 100. pounds, hoping for the principall with the increase at the yeares end: yet dare not he skarle deliuer an 100. pence to the poore members of Christ, vpon the promise & bond of God himselfe, who saith, Pro. 19. 17. He that giues to the poore, lends to the Lord; & he will returne the said gifts with a blessing. Now all this comes to passe, because men rather trust them whom they see, then God whom they neuer saw. Moreover, it is a property of them that doe indeede beleene, to iudge their estate by feeling: but herein they deceiue themselves: For we must liue by faith and not by feeling: and feeling is often deceitfull. Because such as finally fall away from God may haue a feeling, or taste of the good word of God, and of the powers of the life to come.

The third false Rule, is false faith, which is without or against the word. Thus the Turke liues by his false faith: the Iew by his, the Papist by his; for he beleenes as wel the Traditions of men, as the word of God, & he puts his trust not onely in God, but also in the Creatures, namely, Saints and Angels. Thus also do Magicians, forcerers, witches, enchanters, whatsoever they doe, by a Satanicall faith in that couenent which they haue made with the deuill. And such persons as aske counsell of witches and wizzards: called cunning men & women: helpe themselves onely by their false faith. For when they vse charms or spels, or like Satanicall ceremonies, they commonly find successe, & are helped of the euils that be-tide them. And that comes to passe on this manner. In the vse of the foresaid ceremonies prescribed & deliuered by witches, they haue a blind and erroneous faith: vpon their faith followes a Satanicall operation in effecting of the cure desired. For charms and spels being but words, haue no vertue in them to ease or helpe man or beast, either by creation or by any ordinance of God in his word: and therefore the effect they haue, is by the power of the diuell vpon mans faith. Let our common people think on this, who though they much boast of their faith in Christ, yet when they are in any extremity, or danger, very commonly practise this Satanicall faith.

The last false rule, is the lust of the heart: and by this rule doe most men square their liues. The lust that commonly rules is threefold: lust concerning bodily pleasure, lust of worldly wealth, lust of honour, as S. Iohn saith, 1. Ioh. 2. 16. Whatsoever is in the world, is the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life.

Thus much of the examination; now follo-wes the change. That wee may change our liues in respect of vnbeleefe, foure things are required. The first, is that wee must acknowledge and bewaile our vnbeleefe, with the manifold fruits thereof. And we haue good cause to do so. For by vnbeleefe the diuell creates his kingdom in mens hearts, and works his pleasure in vs and vpon vs. Secondly, vnbeleefe corrupts, & defiles all our actions whatsoever, though otherwise they be good and lawfull in themselves. Paul saith, Tie. 1. 15. that to vnbeleue, is to be defiled. Thirdly, vnbeleefe deprives vs of the good blessings of God which otherwise we might enioy. If ye beleene not, ye shall not be established, saith the Prophet. In Capernaum Christ could not doe great wonders, by reason of their vnbeleefe. Lastly, vnbeleefe plucks downe vpon men the plagues & iudgements of God. Moses and Aaron were barred the land of Canaan for their vnbeleefe. A certaine Prince was troden to death in the gates of Samaria: because he would not beleene the word of the Lord by the mouth of Elisba. Na-chabie was dumb for a time; because he would not beleene the message of the Angel. Many at this day, when the iudgements of God lye heauy on them, lay presently they are foretold, and they cry out on this or that suspected witch. But such persons are often deceiued. For the great witch that doth them all the hurt, is the vnbeleefe of their hearts whereby they distrust God in his Word and this sinne alone, if there were no witches in the world, is sufficient: alone to prouoke God to plague and punish vs sundry waies, and that grievously. Therefore let vs with bitterness of heart bewaile our vnbeleefe: and the rather, because it is a step to faith to acknowledge the want of faith.

The second thing to be done, is to make examination whether we be in conscience conuicted of the certaintie of the word or no. If we be not, we must labour to be conuicted. Because that naturall atheisme, whereby we doubt whether the books of the Prophets and Apostles bee the word of God or no, hinders the certaintie of faith. For the feeling of the conscience in this point, therfore arguments may be vfed. The first; it is a principle in nature that there is a God: if there be a God, nature can say he is to be worshipped: if he be to be worshipped, he hath reuealed himselfe and his will to man, for otherwise he cannot be worshipped. And this reuelation is to be found in the writings of the Prophets and Apostles and in no other writings of men: because we find the doctrine of Scriptures to be agreeable to the very nature and maiestie of God, and so is no other doctrine or learning whatsoever. For it is the most ancient, & all other religions come farre short of it. It is one and the same, euermore consenting with it selfe, without change or alteration. The Apostles agree with the Prophets: the Prophets with Moses: and all with the first reuelation made at the creation. Again, it discouers and reueales the secret thoughts of men, that no arte or learning can discouer: and this argues that it was penned by him who is the searcher of all hearts. The second argument is a wonderfull Evidence of A the truth, not to be found in any other writings in the world. This evidence stands specially in eight things. The first is, that the writers of Scriptures fully & plainly set down their own faults, yea their chiefest faults, not sparing to shame themselves in mans reason: and this argues; that in writing they were guided by the spirit of truth. The second is, that the books of Scripture contain many misteries about the reach of mans reason, yet not against reason: because we may discern a truth in them, and that by grounds and principles of reason. The third, that the speeches of Scripture aime not at by-respects, but simply & absolutely give & ascribe all glory to God alone. The fourth is, that the Scriptures containe full and perfect doctrine for the pacifying, setting, & directing of the conscience in all things. The fifth, is the holiness and purity of the law of Moses, in that it accuseth and condemneth all men of sinne, and prescribeth perfect righteousness. Herein it surpasseth the lawes of all countries, common wealths, kingdoms whatsoeuer. The sixth, is the wisdom that appears in the policy or government of the Common wealth of the Iewes set downe by Moses. The seventh, is a reconciliation of iustice and mercy propounded in the Gospel. For in Christ iustice and mercy meet, & iustice after a sort giues place to mercy. The eight thing, wherein the evidence of truth appears, is the consent of Scriptures with it selfe: for doctrine agrees with historie, and every part with every part. This manifold evidence of truth, sheweth that Scripture is from the God of truth. If any say, that they find no such evidence in Scripture, I answer, it is their own fault: for if they would seriously read the Scriptures with prayer to God, it would appeare. The third argument, is the efficacy of the word: which appears on this manner. Gods word is flat contrary to the nature and disposition of man: and yet for all this, when being preached, it convinceth and condemneth men of sinne, it turneth and converteth them to it selfe, and causeth them to live and dye in the love and obedience thereof. This could it neuer do, unless it were of diuine operation. The fourth argument is, that the prophets and Apostles wrought miracles for the ratifying and confirming of their doctrine. Now these miracles surpass the strength of nature, & were immediately from God: and therefore the doctrine thereby confirmed was also of God. The fifth & last is, that the writings of the prophets & Apostles contain many prophecies or predictions of things to come, that none could foresee or foretell, but God. The name of Iesus and his doings are foretold 330. yeares before his birth. Cyrus and his doing are mentioned more than an 100. yeares before he was borne: now these and the like prophecies argue that the whole doctrine is of God. By these & like arguments are all that inwardly doubt of Gods word, to settle and establish their consciences.

This done, then followes the third point and that is, that wee must search and inquire what is the substance and scope of the word of God. The scope of the whole Bible is Christ with his benefits, and he is revealed, propounded, and offered vnto vs in the maine promise of the word: the tenour whereof is, that God will giue remission of finnes and life everlasting to such as will beleue in Christ. To this maine promise, God hath added a maine commandement, which bids vs to beleue the said promise, or to apply Christ with his benefits vnto our selues. Now then our third dutie is, to subiect our hearts and willes to this commandement that bids vs to beleue in Christ. This is the subiection of faith, of which two things must be observed. One is that this is the first subiection that we can giue to God, to trust him vpon his promise for the pardon of our finnes, and for eternal life. And from this subiection of faith, ariseth our subiection to the whole word. In Christ are all the promises of God, yea, and Amen: the lawe and the obedience of all the commandements thereof is established by faith; without Christ no good things can bee done. The second point is, that this subiection is easie in respect of that subiection which the law requires. The perfect obedience of the law is impossible to all men except Christ, yea to such as are borne anew of the holy Ghost, though for the time of this life, they desire it neuer so earnestly. Yet faith in Christ and repentance is so farre forth possible to all that will and desire it, that whoeuer doth seriously but will to beleue and to be converted, doth indeed beleue and is converted, and doth please God, and shall not perish eternally; although the beginning of this faith and conversion be weak, so it be in truth and not counterfeit. Isa. 1. 19. If ye will and obey, ye shall eat the good things of the land. Luk. 11. 13. Your heavenly Father giveth the holy Ghost to them that desire him. Mat. 11. 30. My yoke is easie and my burden light. Therefore let vs trie our selues whether we have wil to subiect our selues to the word of God, that bids vs beleue in Christ, neuertheless we may not thinke that this will to beleue is in our power. For it is by the speciall mercy of God stirred vp in the hearts of the elect, by the operation of the holy Ghost.

The fourth and last thing in this change is, that faith in Christ or in the word beleued, must raigne and rule in the heart bringing the whole man in subiection to the whole word of God. And this faith in Christ doth: because when it is once settled in the heart, it works in vs a fall and settled faith of every part of the word of God; namely, of his precepts and of his threats: Here then our dutie is to subiect our selues by meanes of our faith to the whole word: and to suffer nothing within vs but it alone to beare sway. This is the will of God: Let the word of God dwell in you plentifully. The good ground yeelds it selfe and giues place, that the feed may take deepe root. It is a blessed thing to haue the kingdom of God erected in our hearts: now this kingdom is erected, when the word of God keeps all the power of body and soule in subiection. And when our faith in Christ brings our thoughts, affections, words, deeds, sufferings, in subiection to the word of God, then we live by faith.

The third vfe followeth: in that we are to live by our faith, wee are taught to seeke for knowledge of the will and word of God, and daily to increase in the same knowledge; specially to acquaint our selues with the commandments of God that concerne vs, with his promises, and threatnings. For faith is the life of our soules, & the word is the life of faith; because it is first kindled and afterward confirmed by the hearing of Gods word. Again, the word moderates our faith, that we beleue not more then we should, or come short in beleaving. The word therefore that serues thus to limit our faith, must be knowne in his severall heads and points.

Fourthly, hence we learne how wee are to carry our selues in greatest dangers, as in the time of plague and pestilence, in the time of famine, in the time of warre and bloodshed, in the time of our last and deadly sickness. We haue then need of great helpe: and the onely way is then to stay our selues and establish our hearts by our faith on Gods promises. It is the very scope of this text to teach this one point of doctrine to the Iews, being now oppressed by the Chaldaeans. David in danger and Christ in the time of his passion, by their faith commended their spirits into the hands of God. Of the Martyrs & Saints of God, some were by their faith imprisoned, some racked, some stoned. Faith in perilous times is of great vfe. First when a man is halfe dead, it quickens and puts life in him; as David saith, Psal. 119. 49. 51. Remember the promise made to thy seruants, wherein thou hast caused me to trust: it is my comfort in my trouble: for thy promise hath quickened mee. Understand here the promise as it was tempered and mingled with his faith. Again, faith in the times of danger doth as it were sense and copasse vs with the promises of God. This may be gathered by the opposition that is between these words and the former. The uniuersall man puffes up himselfe, saith the Prophet, or builds towers of defence vnto himselfe: but the iust man only beleues; & that shall be to him in stead of all the towers in the world. For it brings vs vnder the presence, wing, & protection of God, it makes him to be our safeguard, and tower of defence: This doctrine is to be thought on the rather, because, though we now inioy peace & other blessings of God, yet our common sins and especially our vnbeleefe, calls downe for the great and grievous iudgements of God.

Moreover, hence we are taught that every man must haue a faith of his owne, The iust man must live by his OWN E faith, saith that Prophet. And good reason, for every man is a creature of God, and must doe his homage to God by beleuing in him: and because every man hath need of Christ for himselfe: therefore must every one haue a faith of his owne to lay hold on Christ. It may be objected, that sometime the faith of others hath saved men, Mark. 2. 5. When Christ saw their faith, he said to the sick of the palsy, thy finnes are forgiven thee. And, Iam. 5. 16. The prayer of faith shall save the sick. I answer, that the faith of one man may be a meane to procure health of body and other temporall blessings, yea faith vnto others; yet cannot any man receive pardon of finnes, and eternall life but for himselfe. Therefore when it is said in the first place, When hee saw their faith, the faith of the palse man must not be excluded but included; and the place of Iames speaks only of the bodily health.

Again, it may be alledged, that seeing we are iustified by the iustice of another, namely, of Christ: we may also be iustified and saved by the faith of another. I answer, that the reason is not alike, because the obedience of Christ is both his and ours; because it is in him; ours, because it is applied vnto vs by God, and received by our faith: and the like cannot be said of the faith of any other man.

Thirdly, it may be alledged, that Infants haue no faith of their owne. I answer, there be 3. opinions touching infants faith. The 1. that infants haue actual faith wrought in them by the holy Ghost, because it is said, Matth. 18. 6. Who soeuer offendeth one of these little ones that beleues in me. But this opinion seemes to be a vntruth: because faith presupposeth understanding and knowledge, which infants want. Against infants received to beleue what they are young, they would no doubt shew it when they come to be of yeeres, but faith they shew none, vnlesse they attaine vnto it afterward by diligent teaching and instruction. And the place in Matthew may be vnderstood of men of yeeres, who if they haue corrupte & humbled hearts, are little ones beleuing in Christ. Again, children after some yeeres by good education and instruction, may attaine to some knowledge, and consequently to faith. Thus Timothy was brought vp in the Scriptures of a childe. The second opinion is, that all places of Scriptures intreating of faith are to be vnderstood of men of yeeres, & that children are saved by some other vnknowne and vnspokeable way without faith. I somewhat doubt of this, because it is said, Who soeuer beleueeth not, is already condemned. Again, Without faith it is impossible to please God. The third opinion is, that children haue faith after a sort: because the parents according to the tenour of the covenant, I will be thy God, and the God of thy seede, beleue for themselves and their children; and therefore their faith is not onely theirs, but also the faith of their children. Hence it is that the Scripture saith, If the root be holy, the branches are holy: and, If ye beleue, your children are holy. According to humane law,

the father and his heires are but one person, the father covenanting for himselfe & his children: what then should hinder, that the father might not beleue for his child, and the child by the parents faith haue title to the covenant & the benefits thereof? It is alleadged, (4) that by this meanes children shall be borne beleeuers, and so be conceived and borne without originall sinne. I answer: Beleueing parents sustaine two persons: one, whereby they are men; and thus they bring forth children hauing mans nature with all the corruptions of nature. The other, as they are holy men and beleuers; and thus they bring forth infants that are not so much their children as the children of God. And Infants are Gods children not by vertue of their birth, but by meanes of parents faith, which intitles them to all the blessings of the covenant. Children proportionally sustaine a double person: If they be considered in and by themselves, they are conceived & borne in Originall sinne. If they be considered as they are holy, & beleue by the faith which is both theirs & their parents faith, and consequently haue by this meane title to Christ and his benefits; originall sinne is couered and remitted. If it be said, that by this meane all children of beleueing parents are the children of God; I answer, that we must presume that they are all so; leauing secret iudgements to God. To this third opinion I most encline: because we are to iudge that infants of beleueing parents in their infancie dying, are iustified, & I find no iustificatio in scripture without faith. And this hath bin the iudgement of the ancient Fathers. August. serm. 14. of the words of the Apostle, How (saith he) doe infants beleue? by the faith of the parents. If by the faith of parents they be purged, by parents sinnes they are polluted. The body of sinne in the first parents begot them sinners: and the spirit of life in the latter parents did regenerate them to be beleuers. Bernard. epist. 77. faith, Among the nations as many as were faithful, if they were of yeres, we beleue that they were cleansed by faith and the sacrifices, and that the parents faith alone auaileth for children, yea that it is sufficient for them. Again, It is meete and for the honor of God, that to whom age denies their own faith, grace should grante to them a benefit by the faith of another.

Thus then it is manifest, that euery person must haue a faith of his owne. Hence we learne, that the doctours of the Romish Church erre and are deceived, (4) when they teach, that a man may rest himselfe in the faith of his teachers, beleueing in sundry things onely as the Church beleuees; though hee know not distinctly what is the faith of the Church. Again, here the Popes pardons fall to ground. For in vaine doth the Pope by the power of the keyes, apply the meritorious workes and the satisfactory sufferings of one man to another, considering euery man is saved onely by his owne faith. The wife virgins professed that they had oyle no more then serued their owne turnes. They knew not the popish doctrine, that men might haue good workes enough for themselves, and an overplus for others. Hilarie gathereth hence, that one mans good workes cannot be applyed to another. Hierome saith, Every man shall receive a reward for his owne workes: and that one mans workes cannot couer another mans faults in the day of iudgement. The speech of Leo may stop the mouthes of the Papists. Though (saith he) the death of the Saints be pretium in the sight of God, yet the killing of no innocent is the reconciliation of the world. The righteous haue received crowns, but they haue not giuen crownes. And the fortune of beleuers ministers examples of patience, but not gifts of iustice. For the deaths of them all were private or particular: neither did any of them by his funerall discharge another mans debt: considering among the sonnes of men, Christ our Lord is onely found in whom all are crucified, dead, and buried, and risen againe. Paul indeede faith to the Corinthians, that he desired to be bestowed for their soules: and, that hee suffers all things for the elect: but this he speaks in respect of his Apostolical ministry, & not in respect of any workes of satisfaction, performed by him in the behalfe of others. Again, he saith, I beare in mine owne body the remainders of the sufferings of Christ: but these remainders are the sufferings which euery man must beare for himselfe. For euery disciple of Christ, must take vp his owne crosse, and so accomplish the sufferings of the whole mystical body.

Thirdly, by this wee learne, not to relie on the gifts, suffrages, and prayers of others: but to seeke for a sufficient and liuely faith of our owne. The foolish virgins, that supposed they might haue furnished themselves with sufficient oyle of the wise Virgins, were vterly disappointed. Therefore the speech of the Papists is to bee detested: namely, that the suffrages of the liuing, that is, their fastings, prayers, almes, masses, &c. doe three waies helpe the dead, by way of merite and congruities, by way of entreatie, and by way of satisfaction.

Lastly, here we learne, that faith and the iustice of a good conscience must alwaies goe together. And for this cause it is not said, that man liues by faith, but the iust man. Let all Protestants learne and remember this. For it is Gods commandement that wee should ioyntly keepe faith and good conscience. And it is a common offence to Atheists, Papists, worldlings, that such as pretend faith, faile in the righteousness of a good conscience. Some it may be, will say, that it shall suffice for them to call vpon God when they are dying, and to die by faith: I answer, that we must not onely die and be saved, but also liue in this world by our faith.

TO THE RIGHT HONOURABLE
AND VERTVOVS LADIE, THE LADIE LVCEIE
COUNTESS OF BEDFORD.

THe death of the righteous, that is, of every beleeuing and repentant sinner, is a most excellent blessing of God, and brings with it many worthy benefits: which thing I prooue on this manner. I. God both in the beginning, and in the continuance of his grace, doth greater things vnto his seruants: then they doe commonly ake or thinke, and because he hath promised aide and strength vnto them, therefore in wonderfull wisdom he casteth vpon them this heauy burthen of death, that they might make experience what is the exceeding might and power of his grace in their weaknesse. II. Indgement begins at Gods house: and the righteous are laden with afflictions and temptations in this life, and therefore in this world they haue their deaths and helts: that in death they might not feele the torment of hell and death. III. When Lazarus was dead, Christ said, He is not dead but sleepeth: hence it followeth, that the Christian man can say, My graue is my bed, my death is my sleepe: in death I dye not, but onely sleepe. It is thought, that of all terrible things, death is most terrible: but it is false to them that be in Christ, to whom many things happen farre more heauy and bitter then death. IV. Death at the first brought forth sin, but death in the righteous by meanes of Christs death, abolisheth sinne because it is the accomplishment of mortification. And death is so farre from destroying such as are in Christ, that there can be no better refuge for them against death: for presently after the death of the body, follows the perfect freedome of the spirit: and the resurrection of the body. V. Lastly, death is a meanes of a Christians mans perfection, as Christ in his owne example sheweth, saying, Luk. 12. 32. Behold I will cast out diuels, and will heale still to day and to morrow, and the third I will be perfected. Now this perfection in the members of Christ, is nothing else but the blessing of God the author of peace, sanctifying them through his spirit, and soules, and bodies, may be preferred without blame to the comming of our Lord Iesue Christ.

Now hauing often thus considered with my selfe of the excellency of death, I thought good to draw the summe and chiefe heads thereof into this small Treatise: the protection and consideration whereof I commend to your Ladyship, desiring you to accept of it, and reade it at your leysure. If I be blamed for writing vnto you of death, where as by the course of nature you are not yet nere death, Salomon will excuse me, who saith that we must remember our Creator in the daies of our youth. Thus hoping of your Honours good acceptance, I pray God to blesse this my little labour to your comfort and saluation. Septemb. 7. 1595.

Your Honours in the Lord,

Eccle-

Ecclesiastes 7. 3.

The day of death is better then the day that one is borne.

THese words are a rule or precept laid down by Salomon for weighty causes. For in the Chapters going before hee sets forth the vanity of all creatures vnder heauen: and that at large in the very particulars. Now men hereupon might take occasion of discontentment in respect of their estate in this life: therefore Salomon in great wisdom here takes a new course, and in this chapter begins to lay downe certaine rules of direction and comfort, that men might haue somewhat wherewith to arme themselves against the troubles and miseries of this life. The first rule is in this third verse, that a good name is better then a precious oymment: that is, a name gotten and maintained by godly conuersation, is a speciall blessing of God, which in the midst of the vanities of this life, mislieth greater matter of reioycing and comfort to the heart of man, then the most precious oymment can doe to the outward senses. Now some men hauing heard this first rule concerning a good name, might obiekt and say, that renowne and good report in this life affords slender comfort: considering that after it follows death, which is the miserable end of all men. But this obiection the wife man remoueth by a second rule in the words which I haue in hand, saying, that the day of death is better then the day that one is borne.

That wee may come to the true and proper sence of this precept or rule, three points are to be considered. First, what is death here mentioned. Secondly, how it can be truly said, that the day of death is better then the day of birth. Thirdly, in what respect it is better.

For the first, death is a deprivation of life as a punishment ordained of God and imposed on man for his sinne. First, I say, it is a deprivation of life, because the very nature of death is the absence or defect of that life which God vouchsafed man by his creation. I adde further, that death is a punishment, more especially to intimate the nature and qualitie of death: and to shew, that it was ordained as a meanes of execution of Gods iustice and iudgement. And that death is a punishment; Paul plainly auoucheth when he saith, that by one man sinne entered into the world, and death by sinne. And againe, that death is the stipend, wages or allowance of sinne. Furthermore, in euery punishment there be three workers: the ordainer of it, the

A procurer, and the executioner. The ordainer of this punishment is God in the estate of mans innocencie; by a solemne law then made in these very words, In the day thou eatest thereof, thou shalt die the death, Gen. 2. 17. But it may be alleadged to the contrary; that the Lord saith by the Prophet Ezechiel, Ezech. 33. 11. that he will not the death of a sinner; and therefore that he is no ordainer of death. The answer may easily be made, and that sundry waies. First, the Lord speaks not this to all men, or of all men, but to his own people the Church of the Iewes, as appears by this clause prefixed, verse 10. Sonne of man say vnto the house of Israel, &c. Again, the words are not spoken absolutely, but only in way of comparison, in that of the twaine hee rather wills the conuersion and repentance of a sinner, then his death and destruction. Thirdly, the very meaning of the words import thus much, that God doth take no delight or pleasure in the death of a sinner, as it is the ruine and destruction of the creature. And yet all this hinders not but that God in a new regard and consideration may both will and ordaine death, namely, as it is a due and deferred punishment, tending to the execution of iustice: in which iustice God is as good as in his mercy. Again, it may be obiekted, that if death indeede had bene ordained of God, then Adam should haue bene destroyed, and that presently vpon his fall. For the very words are thus, Gen. 2. 17. Whensoever thou shalt eate of the forbidden fruit, thou shalt certainly die. Answer. Sentences of Scripture are either Legall or Euangelicall, the Law and the Gospel being two severall and distinct parts of Gods word. Now this former sentence is Legall, and must bee vnderstood with an exception borrowed from the Gospell or the couenant of grace made with Adam, and revealed to him after his fall. The exception is this: Thou shalt certainly dye whensoever thou eatest the forbidden fruit, except I doe further giue thee a meanes of deliuerance from death, namely, the feede of the woman to bruiſe the serpens head. Secondly, it may be answered, that Adam and all his posteritie died, and that presently after his fall, in that his bodie was made mortall, and his soule became subiect to the curse of the Law. And whereas God would not utterly destroy Adam at the very first, but only impose on him the beginnings of the first and the second death: hee did the same in great wisdom, that in the midst of his iustice he might make a way to mercie: which thing

Rom. 5. 12.

It 2 could could not have beene, if Adam had perished. A

The executioner of this punishment is hee that doth impose and inflict the same on man, and that also is God himselfe, as hee testifieth of himselfe in the Prophet Esay, Iſa. 45. 7. I make peace, and create euill. Now euill is of three sorts: naturall, morall, materiall: Naturall euill, is the destruction of that order which God set in euery creature by the creation. Morall euill, is the want of that righteoufnesse and vertue which the law requires at mans hand: and that is called sinne. Materiall euill is any matter or thing which in it selfe is a good creature of God, yet so, as by reason of mans fall it is hurtfull to the health and life of man, as Henbane, Wolfbane, Hemlocke, and all other paysons are. Now this saying of Esay must not be vnderstood of morall euills, but of such as are either materiall or naturall: to the latter of which, death is to be referred, which is the destruction or abolishment of mans nature created.

The procurer of death is man, not God; in that man by his finnes and disobedience did pull vpon himselfe this punishment. Therefore the Lord saith in Oſeah, Oſe. 13. 6. O Israel, one hath destroyed thee, but in mee is thine helpe. Against this it may be objected, that man was mortall in the estate of innocencie before the fall. Answer. The frame and composition of mans bodie considered in it selfe was mortall, because it was made of water & earth, and other elements, which are of themselves alterable and changeable: yet if we respect the grace and blessing which God did vouchsafe mans bodie in his creation, it was vouchsafe mans bodie in his creation, it was vouchsafe and immortal, and so by the same blessing should haue continued, if man had not fallen: and man by his fall depriving himselfe of this gift and blessing, became euery way mortall.

Thus it appears in part what death is: yet for the better clearing of this point, we are to consider the difference of the death of a man and of a beast. The death of a beast is the totall and finall abolishment of the whole creature: for the body is resolved to his first matter, and the soule arising of the temperature of the bodie, vanisheth to nothing. But in the death of man it is otherwise. For though the bodie for a time be resolved to dust, yet must it rise againe in the last iudgement, and become immortal: and as for the soule it subsisteth by it selfe out of the bodie, and is immortal. And this being so, it may be demanded, how the soule can die the second death. Answer. The soule dies, not because it is vterly abolished: but because it is as though it were not, and it ceaseth to bee in respect of righteoufnesse and fellowship with God. And indeed this is the death of all deaths, when the creature hath subsisteth and being, and yet for all this is deprived of all comfortable fellowship with God.

The reason of this difference is, because the soule of man is a spirit or spirituall substance, whereas the soule of a beast is no substance, but a naturall vigour or qualitie, and hath no being in it selfe without the bodie, on which it wholly dependeth. The soule of man contrariwise being created of nothing, and breathed into the bodie, and as well subsisting forth of it as in it.

The kinds of death are two, as the kinds of life are, bodily and spirituall. Bodily death is nothing else but the separation of the soule from the bodie, as bodily life is the coniunction of body and soule: and this death is called the first, because in respect of time it goes before the second. Spirituall death is the separation of the whole man both in body and soule, from the gracious fellowship of God. Of these twaine, the first is but an entrance to death, and the second is the accomplishment of it. For as the soule is the life of the bodie, so God is the life of the soule, and his spirit is the soule of our soules, and the want of fellowship with him brings nothing but the endless and vnspokeable horrors and pangs of death.

Again, spirituall death hath three distinct and seuerall degrees. The first is, when a man that is aliue in respect of temporall life, lies dead in sinne. Of this degree Paul speaketh, when he saith, 1 Tim. 5. 6. But shee that liues in pleasure, is dead while she liues. And this is the case of all men by nature, who are the children of wrath, and dead in finnes and trespasses, Eph. 2. 1. The second degree is the very end of this life, when the body is laid in the earth, and the soule descends to the place of torment. The third degree is in the day of iudgement, when the body and soule meet againe, and goe both to the place of the damned, there to bee tormented for euer and euer.

Having thus found the nature and differences, and kinds of death, it is more then manifest, that the text in hand is to be vnderstood, not of the spirituall, but of the bodily death: because it is opposed to the birth or nativitie of man. The words then must carry this sense: The time of bodily death in which the bodie and soule of man are seuered asunder, it is better then the time in which one is brought into the world.

Thus much of the first point: now followeth the second, and that is, how this can bee true which Salomon saith, that the day of death is better then the day of birth. I make not this question to call the Scriptures into controuersie, which are the truth it selfe, but I doe it for this end, that wee might without waivering be resolved of this which Salomon avoucheth. For there may be sundry reasons brought to the contrary. Therefore let vs handle the question: the reasons or objections which may be alledged to the contrary, may all be reduced to fixe heads. The first is taken from the opinion of wise men, who thinke it the best thing of all neuer to bee borne, and the next best to die quickly. Now if it bee the best thing in the world not to bee borne at all, then it is the worst thing that can be to dye after a man is borne. Answer. There be two sorts of men: one, that liue and die in their finnes without repentance: the other, which vnfeignedly repent and beleue in Christ. Now this sentence may bee truly auouched of the first: of whom wee may say as Christ said of Judas, Mat. 26. 24. It had bene good for him that he had neuer bene borne. But the saying applied to the second sort of men is false. For to them that in this life turne to God by repentance, the best thing of all is to bee borne; because their birth is a degree of preparation to happinesse: and the next best is to die quickly: because by death they enter into possession of the same their happinesse. For this cause Balaam desired the death of the righteous; and Salomon in this place preferres the day of death before the day of birth, vnderstanding that death which is ioyned with godly life, or the death of the righteous.

The second objection is taken from the testimonies of Scripture. Death is the wages of sinne, Rom. 6. 23. it is an enemy of Christ, 1. Cor. 15. and the curse of the law. Hence it seemes to follow, that in and by death, men receiue their wages and paiment for their finnes: that the day of death is the dolefull day in which the enemy preuailes against vs: that hee which dyeth is cursed. Answer. Wee must distinguish of death: it must be considered two wayes: first, as it is by it selfe in his owne nature: secondly, as it is altered and changed by Christ. Now death by it selfe considered, is indeed the wages of sinne, and enemy of Christ and of all his members, and the curse of the law, yea the very suburbs and gates of hellyet in the second respect, it is not so: for by the vertue of the death of Christ, it ceaseth to bee a plague or punishment, and of a curse it is made a blessing, and is become vnto vs a passage or mid-way betweene this life and eternall life, and as it were a new wicket or doore whereby we passe out of this world, and enter into heauen. And in this respect the saying of Salomon is most true: for in the day of birth, men are borne and brought forth into the vale of misery, but afterward when they goe hence, hauing death altered vnto them by the death of Christ, they enter into eternall ioy and happinesse with all the Saints of God for euer.

The third objection is taken from the examples of most worthy men, who haue made their prayers against death: As our Saviour Christ who prayed on this manner, Luke. 22. 42. Father if it be thy will, let this cuppe passe from me, yet not my will, but thy will be done. And David prayed, Pſal. 6. 4. 5. Returne, O Lord, deliver my soule, for mee for thy mercies sake: for in death there is no remembrance of thee, in the grave who shall praise thee? And Ezechiah, when the Prophet Esay, Eſa. 38. 3. bad him fet his house in order, and tolde him that hee must die, wept sore, and that in respect of death: now by the examples of these most worthy men: yea by the example of the Sonne of God himselfe, it may seeme that the day of death is the most terrible and dolefull day of all. Answer. When our Saviour Christ prayed thus to his Father, hee was in his agony, and hee then as our Redeemer stood in our roome and stead, to suffer all things that we should haue suffered in our owne persons for our finnes: and therefore hee prayed not simply against death, but against the cursed death of the crosse: and hee feared not death it selfe, which is the separation of body and soule, but the curse of the law which went with death, namely, the vnspokeable wrath and indignation of God. The first death troubled him not, but the first and second ioyned together. Touching David, when hee made the first Psalm, hee was not only sicke in body, but also perplexed with the greatest temptation of all, in that hee wrestled in conscience with the wrath of God, as appears by the words of the text, where hee saith, Lord rebuke me not in thy wrath. And by this wee see that hee prayed not simply against death, but against death at that instant when hee was in that grievous temptation. For at other times hee had no such feare of death, as hee himselfe testifieth, saying, Pſalme. 23. 4. Though I should walke through the valley of the shadow of death, I will feare no euill. Therefore hee prayed against death onely as it was ioyned with the apprehension of Gods wrath. Lastly, Ezechiah prayed against death, not onely because hee desired to liue and doe seruice to God in his kingdom, but vpon a further and more speciall regard; because when the Prophet brought the message of death, hee was without issue, and had none of his owne body to succede him in his kingdom. It will bee said, what warrant had Ezechiah to pray against death for this cause? Answer. His warrant was good: for God had made a particular promise to David and his posteritie after him, that so long as they feared God and walked in his commandements, they should not want issue to sit vpon the throne of the kingdom after them, 1 King. 8. 25. Now Ezechiah at the time of the Prophets message remembering what promise God had made, and how he for his part had kept the condition thereof, in that he had walked before God with an vp-right heart, and had done that which was acceptable in his sight; he prayed against death, not so much because hee feared the danger of it, but because he wanted issue. This prayer God accepted and heard, and hee added fiftene yeeres vnto his dayes, and two yeeres after gaue him Manasses.

The fourth objection is this, that those which haue bene reputed to be of the better sort of men, oftentimes haue miserable ends: for some end their daies despairing, some railing and blaspheming, some strangely tormented: it may seeme therefore that the day of death is the day of greatest woe and misery.

Eccl. 9.2.

To this I answer first of all generally, that we must not iudge of the estate of any man before God by outward things, whether they be blessings or iudgements; whether they fall in life or death: For (as Salomon saith) All things come alike to all: and the same condition is to the just and wicked, to the good and to the pure, and to the polluted, and to him that sacrificeth, and to him that sacrificeth not: as is the good, so is the sinner; bee that sweareth, as bee that feareth an oath. Secondly, I answer the particulars which be al-

leadged, on this manner; And first of all touching despaire, it is true that not onely wicked and loose persons despaire in death, but also repentant sinners, who oftentimes in their sickness, testifie of themselves, that being alive, and lying in their beds, they feeke themselves as it were to be in hell, and to apprehend the very pang and torments thereof. And I doubt not for all this, but that the childe of God most deare unto him, may through the gulfe of despaire attain to everlasting happines. This appeares by the manner of Gods dealing in the matter of our saluation. All the workes of God are done in and by their contraries. In the creation, all things were made, not of some thing, but of nothing, cleane contrary to the course of nature. In the worke of redemption, God giues life, not by life, but by death: and if we consider aright of Christ vpon the crosse, we shall see our paradise out of paradise in the middle of hell. For out of his owne cursed death doth hee bring vs life and eternall happines. Likewise in effectually vocation, when it pleaseth God to conuert and turne men vnto him, hee doth it by the meanes of the Gospell preached, which in reason should driue all men from God. For it is as contrary to the nature of man as fire to water, and light to darkenesse: and yet for all this, though it bee thus against the disposition and heart of man, it preuaileth with him and turnes him to God. Furthermore, when God will fend his owne seruants to heauen, he fendeth them a contrary way, even by the gates of hell: and when it is his pleasure to make men depend on his fauour and prouidence, hee makes them feeble his anger, and to be nothing in themselves, that they may wholly depend vpon him, and bee whatsoever they are in him. This point being well considered, it is manifest that the childe of God may passe to heauen by the very gulfe of hell. The loue of God is like a sea, into which when a man is cast, hee neither feels bottom nor fees banke. I conclude therefore, that despaire, whether it arise of weaknesse of nature, or of conscience of sin, though it fall out about the time of death, cannot preiudice the saluation of them that are effectually called. As for other strange elements which fall out in death, they are the effects of diseases: Rauings and blasphemings arise of the disease of melancholie, and fren-sies, which often happen at the end of burning feauers, the choler shooting vp to the braine: The writhing of the lippes, the turning of the neck, the buckling of the ioynts and the whole body, proceedes of crampes and conuulsions, which followes after much euacuation. And whereas some in sickness are of that strength that three or foure men cannot hold them downe without bonds; it comes not of witchcrafts and possessions, as people commonly thinke, but of choler in the veines. And whereas some when they are dead, become as black as pitch (as Bonner was) it may arise by a bruise, or an impostume, or by the black jaundise, or by the putrification of the liuer: and it doth not alwaies argue some extraordinarie iudgement of God. Now these and the like diseases with their Symptomes and strange effects, though they shall deprive a man of his health, and of the right vse of the parts of his body, & of the vse of reason too; yet they cannot deprive his soule of eternall life. And all sinnes procured of violent diseases, and proceeding from repentant sinners, are sinnes of infirmity: for which, if they know them, and come again to the vse of reason, they will further repent: if not, they are pardoned and buried in the death of Christ: And we ought not so much to stand vpon the strangenesse of any mans end, when we know the goodness of his life: for we must iudge a man not by his death, but by his life. And if this be true, that strange diseases, and thereupon strange behaviours in death, may befall the best man that is; wee must learne to reforme our iudgements of such as lye at the point of death. The common opinion is, that if a man die quietly and goe away like a lambe (which in some diseases, as consumptions, and such like, any man may do) that he goes straight to heauen: but if the violence of the disease stirre vp impaience, and cause frantick behaviours, then men vse to say, there is a iudgement of God seruing either to discouer an hypocrite, or to plague a wicked man. But the truth is otherwise. For indeede a man may die like a lambe; and yet goe to hell: and one dying in exceeding torments and strange behaviours of the body, may goe to heauen. And by the outward condition of any man, either in life or death, wee are not to iudge of his estate before God.

The fifth obiection is this: When a man is most neere death, then the diuell is most busie in temptation, & the more men are assaulted by Satan, the more dangerous and trouble some is their case. And therefore it may seeme that the day of death is the worst day of all. Ans. The condition of Gods children in death is twofold. Some are not tempted, as Simen, who when he had seene Christ, brake forth & said, Lord, now leauest thou thy seruants depart in peace, &c. fore-signifying no doubt, that hee should end his dayes in all manner of peace. As for them which are tempted, though their case be very trouble some and perplexed, yet their sal-

nation is not further off, by reason of the violence and extremitie of temptation. For God is then present by the vnspokeable comfort of his spirit, and when we are most weak, he is most strong in vs: because his manner is to shew his power in weaknesse. And for this cause, euen in the time of death the diuell receiues the greatest foile, when hee looks for the greatest victorie.

The sixth obiection is this. Violent and sudden death is a grieuous curse, and of all euils which befall man in this life, none is so terrible; therefore it may seeme, that the day of suddend death is most miserable. Ans. It is true indeede, that suddaine death is a curse and a grieuous iudgement of God, and therefore not without cause feared of men in the world: yet all things considered, wee ought more to be afraid of an impatient and euill life, then of suddaine death. For though it bee euill, as death it selfe in his owne nature is, yet we must not thinke it to bee simply euill: because it is not euill to all men, nor in all respects euill. I say it is not euill to all men, considering that no kinde of death is euill, or a curse vnto them that are in Christ, who are freed from the whole curse of the Law. And therefore the holy Ghost saith, Apoc. 14. 13. Blessed are they that die in the Lords, for they rest fro their labours: whereby is signified, that they which depart this life, being members of Christ enter into euertlasting happines: of what death soeuer they die, yea though it be suddaine death. Again, I say that suddaine death is not euill in all respects. For it is not euill, because it is suddaine, but because it commonly takes men vnprepared, and by that meanes makes the day of death a blacke day, and as it were a very speedy downe-fall to the gulfe of hell. Otherwise if a man be readie and prepared to die, suddaine death is in effect no death, but a quicke and speedie entrance to eternall life.

These obiections being thus answered, it appeares to bee a manifest truth which Salomon saith, that the day of death is better indeede then the day of birth. Now I come to the third point, in which the reasons and respects are to be considered, that make the day of death to surpass the day of a mans birth: and they may all be reduced to this one, namely, that the birth day is an entrance into all woe and misery: whereas the day of death ioynd with godly and reformed life, is an entrance or degree to eternall life. Which I make manifest thus. Eternall life hath three degrees, one in this life, when a man can truly say, that hee liues not, but that Christ liues in him: and this all men can say that repent and beleene, and are iustified and sanctified, and haue peace of conscience, with other gifts of Gods spirit, which are the earnest of their saluation. The second degree is in the end of this life, when the body goes to the earth, and the soule is carried by the Angels into heauen. The third is in the end of the world at the last iudgement, when body & soule reunited, doe ioyntly enter into eternall happines in heauen. Now of these three degrees, death it selfe being ioynd with the feare of God, is the second: which also containeth in it two worthy steps to life.

The first, is a freedome from all miseries which haue their end in death. For though men in this life are subiect to manifold dangers by sea and land, as also to sundry aches, paines, and diseases, as feauers, & consumptions, &c. yet when death comes there is an end of all. Again, so long as men liue in this world whatsoever they bee, they doe in some part lye in bondage vnder originall corruption and the remnants thereof, which are doubtings of Gods prouidence, vnbeleefe, feare of heart, ignorance, couetousnesse, ambition, enuy, hatred, lust, and such like sins, which bring forth fruits vnto death. And to bee in subiection to sinne on this manner, is a misery of all miseries. Therefore Paul when he was tempted vnto fin by his corruption, calles the very temptation the buffers of Satan, & as it were a pricke or thorne wounding his flesh, and paining him at the very heart. Again, in another place wearied with his owne corruptions, he complains that he is sold vnder sinne, and he cries out, Rom. 7. 24. O miserable man that I am, who shall deliuer mee from this bodie of Death! Dauid saith, Psal. 119. 136. that his eyes gushed out with rivers of teares when other men sinned against God.

How much more then was hee grieved for the sinnes wherewith hee himselfe was ouertaken in this life? And indeede it is a very hell for a man that hath but a sparke of grace to be exercised, tormoyled, and tempted with the inborne corruptions and rebellions of his owne heart: and if a man would deuise a torment for such as feare God, and desire to walk in newnesse of life, he cannot deuise a greater then this. For this cause blessed is the day of death which brings with it a freedome from all sin whatsoever. For when we die, the corruption of nature is quite abolished, and sanctification is accomplished. Lastly, it is a great misery that the people of God are constrained in this world to liue and conuerser in the companie of the wicked; as sheepe are mingled with goats which strike them, annoy their pasture, and muddy their water. Hereupon Dauid cries out, Psal. 120. 5. Woe is me that I remaine in Mesopotamia, and dwell in the tents of Kedar, 1 King. 19. 4. When Elias saw that Ahab and Isebel had planted Idolatry in Israel, and that they sought his life also, he went apart into the wilderness and desired to die. But this misery also is ended in the day of death, in as much as death is as it were the hand of God to sort and single out those that bee the seruants of God from all vngodly men in this most wretched world.

Furthermore, this exceeding benefit comes by death, that it doth not onely abolish the miseries, which presently are vpon vs, but also preuent those which are to come. The rich eous (saith the Prophet, Esa. 51. 7.) perisheth and no man considereth in his heart: and mercifull men are taken away, and no man understandeth that the righteous is taken away from the euill to come. Examples of this wee haue in Iofias. Because (saith the Lord, 2 King. 22. 20.) Y thine heart did melt: and thou hast humbled thy selfe before the Lord, when thou heardest what I spake against this place, & behold therefore I will gather thee to thy fathers, and thou shalt be put in thy graue in peace, and thine eyes shall not see all the euill which I will bring vpon this place. And Paul saith, 1 Cor. 11. 32. that among the Corinthians some were asleepe, that is, dead, that they might not be condemned with the world.

Thus much of freedome from miserie, which is the first benefit that comes by death; and the first step to life: now followes the second, which is, that death giues an entrance to the soule, that it may come into the presence of the cuerlasting God, of Christ, and of all the Angels and Saints in heauen. The worthinesse of this benefit makes the death of the righteous to be no death: but rather a blessing to be wished of all men. The consideration of this made Paul to say, Phil. 1. 23. I desire to be dissolved: but what is the cause of this desire? that followes in the next words, namely, that by this dissolution hee might come to see with Christ. When the Queene of Sheba saw all Salomons wisdome, and the house that he had built, and the meat of his table, and the fitting of his seruants, and the order of his ministers, and their apparel, &c. he said, 1 King. 10. Happy are thy men, happy are these thy seruants which stand euer before thee and heare thy wisdome: much more then may we say, that they are ten thousand-fold happy which stand not in the presence of an earthly king; but before the king of kings, the Lord of heauen & earth: and at his right hand enioy pleasures for euermore. Moses hath bene renowned in all ages for this, that God vouchsafed him but so much fauour as to see his hinder parts at his request: O then, what happinesse is this, to see the glory and Maiestie of God face to face, and to haue eternall fellowship with God our Father, Christ our Redeemer, and the holy Ghost our Comforter, and to liue with the blessed Saints and Angels in heauen for euer?

Thus now the third point is manifest, namely, in what respect death is more excellent the life. It may be here the mind of man vnstified, will yet further reply & say, that howsoeuer in death the soules of men enter into heauen, yet their bodies though they haue bene tenderly kept for meate, drinke and apparel, and haue slept many a night in beds of downe, must liue in darke & loathsome graues, & there be waited & consumed by worms. Ans. Al this is true indeede, but all is nothing, if so be that we wil but consider aright of our graues as we ought. We must not iudge of our graues, as they appeare to the bodily eye, but wee must looke vpon them by the eye of faith, and consider them as they are altered and changed by the death and buriall of Christ, who hauing vanquished death vpon the croffe, purified him afterward to his owne den, and soyled him there, and deprived him of his power. And by this meanes Christ in his owne death hath buried our death, and by the vertue of his buriall, as sweet incense hath sweetened and perfumed our graues, and made them of stinking and loathsome cabins, to become princely palleces, and beds of most sweet and happie rest, farre more excellent then beds of downe.

And though the body rot in the graue, and be eaten of wormes, or of fishes in the sea, or burnt to ashes, yet that will not be vnto vs a matter of discomfort, if we doe well consider the ground of all graces, namely, our coniunction with Christ. It is indeede a spirituall, and yet a most real coniunction. And we must not imagine that our soules alone are ioyned to the body or soule of Christ, but the whole person of man both in body & soule is ioyned and vnitd to whole Christ. And when we are once ioyned to Christ in this mortall life by the bond of the spirit, we shall remaine & continue eternally ioyned with him: & this vnion once truly made, shall neuer be dissolved. Hence it followes, that although the body be seuered from the soule in death, yet neither body nor soule are seuered from Christ, but the very bodie rotting in the graue, drowned in the sea, burned to ashes, abides still vnitd to him, and is as truly a member of Christ then as before. This point we must remember as the foundation of all our comfort, and hold it for euer as a truth. For looke what was the condition of Christ in death, the same or the like is the condition of all his members. Now the condition of Christ was this, though his body and soule were seuered each from other as farre as heauen and the graue, yet neither of them were seuered from the Godhead of the Sonne, but both did in death subsist in his person. And therefore though our bodies and soules be pulled asunder by naturall or violent death, yet neither of them, no not the bodie it selfe, shall bee seuered and disioyned from Christ. It will be alleaged, that if the bodie were then vnitd to Christ, it should liue and bee quickened in the graue. Ans. Not so: when a mans arme or leg is taken with the dead palse, it receiues little or no heat, life, sense, or motion from the body; and yet notwithstanding it remanes still a member of the body, because the flesh and the bone of it remaine ioyned to the flesh and the bone of the body: euen so may the body remaine a member of Christ, though for some space of time it receiue neither sense, nor motion, nor life from the soule, or from the spirit of God.

Furthermore, wee must remember that by the vertue of this coniunction, shall the dead body, be it rotten, burned, deuoured, or howsoeuer consumed, at the day of iudgement rise to eternall glory. In the winter season trees

remaine without fruite or leaues, and being beaten with wind and weather appeare to the eyes as if they were rotten trees: yet when the spring time comes againe, they bring forth, as before, buds and blossomes, leaues and fruite: the reason is, because the bodie, graines, and armes of trees, are all ioyned to the roote, wherelies the sappe in the winter season, and whence by meanes of this coniunction it is deuied to all parts of the tree in the spring time: Euen so the bodies of men haue their winter also, in which they are turned to dust, and so remaine for the space of many thousand yeares: yet in the day of iudgement by meanes of that mytticall coniunction with Christ, shall diuine and quickening vertue streame thence to all the bodies of the elect to cause them to liue againe, and that to life eternall. But some will say, that the wicked also rise againe. Ans. They doe so indeede, but not by the same cause; for they rise by the power of Christ as hee is a iudge to condemn them: whereas the godly rise againe by the vertue of Christs resurrection, wherof they are partakers by meanes of that blessed and indissoluble coniunction which they haue with Christ. And the bodies of the elect though they putrifie and consume neuer so much in the graue, yet are they still in the fauour of God, and in the counten of graces to which, because they haue right and title being dead, they shall not remaine so for euer, but shall rise to glory at the last iudgement. Therefore the rotting of the body is nothing in respect, and the death of the body is no death. And therefore also death in the old and new Testament is made but a sleepe, and the graue a bed, wherof the like was neuer scene: wherein a man may rest, nothing at all troubled with dreames or fantasies, and whence he shall rise no more subiect to weaknes or sickness, but presently be translated to eternall glory. By this then which hath bin said, it appeares that the death of the righteous, is a second degree to cuerlasting happinesse.

Now then considering our coniunction with Christ is the foundation of all our ioy and comfort in life and death: wee are in the feare of God to learne this owne lesson, namely, that while we haue time in this world, we must labour to be vnitd to Christ, that wee may be bone of his bone, & flesh of his flesh. This very point is as it were a flaggo of viue to reuine our soules when they be in a swoone at any instant. And that we may be assured that we are certainly ioyned to Christ, we must shew our selues to be members of his mytticall body by the daily fruits of righteousness and true repentance. And being once certainly assured in confidence of our being in Christ, let death come when it will, and let it cruelly part asunder both body and soule, yet shall they both remaine in the counten, and by meanes thereof be re-vnitd and taken vp to life eternall. Whereas on the contrary, if men bee out of the counten, and die out of Christ; their soules go to hell, and their bodies rot for a time in the graue; but afterwards they rise to endless perdition. Wherefore I say againe and againe: labour that your consciences by the holy Ghost may testifie, that yee are liuing stones in the temple of God, and branches bearing fruit in the true vine: and then yee shall feele by experience that the pangs of death shall bee a further degree of happinesse then euery ye found in your liues, euen then when ye are gasping and panting for breath.

Thus much of the meaning of the text, now follow the verses, and they are manifold. The first and principall is this. In that Salomon preferres the day of death before the day of birth, he doth therein giue vs to vnderstand, that there is a direct and certaine way wherby a man may die well, if it had bene otherwise, he could not haue said that the day of death is better. And whereas hee aunoucheth this, hee shewes withall that there is an infallible way wherby a man may make a blessed end. Therefore now let vs come to search out this way: the knowledge and true vnderstanding wherof must not bee fetched from the writings of men, but from the word of God; who hath the power of life and death in his owne hand.

Now that a man may die well, Gods word requires two things: a preparation before death, and a right behaviour and disposition of death.

The preparation vnto death, is an action of a repentant sinner, wherby he makes himselfe fit and ready to die, and it is a duty very necessary, to which wee are bound by Gods commandment. For there bee sundry places of Scripture which doe streightly enioyne vs to watch and pray, and to make our selues readie euery day against the second coming of Christ to iudgement. Now the same places do withall bind vs to make a preparation against death, at which time God comes to iudgement vnto vs particularly. Againe, looke as death leaueh a man, so shall the last iudgement finde him, & so shall he abide eternally: there may bee changes and conuersions from euill to good in this life, but after death there is no change at all. Therefore a preparation to death can in no wise bee omitted of him that desires to make an happy and blessed end.

This preparation is two-fold, generall and particular. Generall preparation is that, wherby a man prepares himselfe to die through the whole course of his life. A duty most needfull which must in no wise bee omitted. The reasons are these: first of all death which is certaine, is most of all vncertain, I say it is certain, because no man can eschew death. And it is vncertaine three waies: first in regard of time: for no man knoweth when hee shall die: secondly in regard of place: for no man knoweth where hee shall die, whether in his bed, or in the field, whether by sea, or by land: thirdly in respect of the kind of death: for no man knoweth whether he shall die of a lingering or sudden, of a violent or naturall death. Hence it followes that men should every day prepare themselves to death. Indeede if we could know when, where, & how we should die, the case were otherwise, but seeing we know none of these, it stands vs in hand to looke about vs. A second reason feruing further to perswade vs, is this. The most dangerous thing of al in this world, is to neglect all preparation. To make this point more manifest, I will vse this coparison. A certaine man pursued by an Vnicorne, in his flight falls into a dungeon, & in his fall takes hold and hangs by the arme of a tree: now as he thus hangs looking downward, he sees two wormes gnawing at the roote of the tree, and as hee lookes vpward he sees an hie of most sweetehonie, whercupon he climes vp vnto it, and sitting by it feedes thereon. In the meane season while he is thus sitting, the two wormes gnaw in pcesse the roote of the tree: which done, tree and man and all falls into the bottom of the dungeon. Now this Vnicorne is death; the man that flies is every one of vs, and every liuing man: the pit ouer which hee hangeth, is hell; the arme of the tree is life it selfe, the two wormes are day and night, the continuance whereof is the whole life of man: the hie of honie is the pleasures and profits and honors of this world, to which when men wholly giue themselves, not considering their ends, till the tree roote, that is, this temporall life bee cut off: which being once done, they plunge themselves quite into the gulfe of hell. By this wee see, that there is good cause that men should not deferre their preparation till the time of sicknesse, but rather every day make themselves readie against the day of death. But some will say, it shall suffice if I prepare my selfe to pray when I beginne to bee sicke. Ans. These men greatly deceiue themselves, for the time then is most vnfit to begin a preparation, because all the senses and powers of the body are occupied about the paines and troubles of the disease: and the sicke partie is exercised partly in conference with the Physitian, partly with the Minister about his soules health and matters of conscience, and partly with friends that come to visite. Therefore there must some preparation goe before in the time of health, when the whole man with all the powers of body and soule are at libertie. Again there be some others which imagine and say, that a man may repent when he will, even in the time of death: and that such repentance is sufficient. Ans. It is false which they say: For it is not in the power of man to repent when he himselfe will; when God will he may. It is not in him that willett or runneth, but in God that hath mercie. And Christ saith, that many shall seeke to enter into heauen, and shall not be able. But why so? because they sicke when it is too late; namely, when the time of grace is past. Therefore it is exceeding folly for men so much as once to dreame that they may haue repentance at command; nay it is a iust iudgement that they should be contemned of God in death, that did contemne God in their life: & that they should quite be forgotten of God in sicknesse, that did forget God in their health. Again I answer, that this late repentance is seldom or neuer true repentance. It is sicke like the partie himselfe, commonly languishing and dying together with him. Repentance should be voluntary (as all obedience to God ought,) but repentance taken vp in sicknesse, is usually constrained and extorted by the feare of hell, and other iudgements of God: for crosses, afflictions, and sicknesse wil cause the grossest hypocrite that euer was to stoope and buckle vnder the hand of God, and dissemble faith and repentance and every grace of God, as though he had them as fully as any of the true seruants of God; whereas indeed he wants them altogether. Wherefore such repentance commonly is but counterfeit. For in true and sound repentance men must forsake their sinnes; but in this, the sinne forsakes the man: who leaves all his euil waies only vpon this, that he is constrained to leaue the world. Wherefore it is a thing greatly to be wished, that men would repent and prepare themselves to die in the time of health before the day of death or sicknesse come. Lastly, it is alledged that one of the theues repented vpon the crosse. Ans. The theife was called after the eleuenth houre at the point of the twelfth, when he was now dying and drawing on: Therefore his conuerſion was altogether miraculous and extraordinary: and there was a speciall reason why Christ would haue him to be called to it, that while he was in suffering he might shew forth the vertue of his passion: that al which saw the one, might also acknowledge the other. Now it is not good for men to make an ordinary rule of an extraordinary example.

Thus then this point being manifest, that a generall preparation must be made, let vs now see in what manner it must be done. And for the right doing of it, due duties must be practised in the course of our liues. The first is, the meditation of death in the life. For the life of a Christian is nothing else but a meditation of death. A notable practise herof wee haue in the example of Ioseph of Arimathea, who made his tombe in his life time in the midst of his garden: no doubt for this end, to put himselfe in minde of death, and that in the midst of his delights and pleasures. Hea then Philosophers, that neuer knew Christ, had many excellent meditations of death, though not comfortable in regard of life euerlasting. Now we, that haue knowne and beleued in Christ, must goe beyond them in this point, considering with our selues such things as they neuer thought of, namely, the cause of death, our sinne: the remedy thereof, the cursed death of Christ: cursed I say, in regard of the kinde of death and punishment laid vpon him, but blessed in regard of vs. Thirdly, we must often meditate on the presence of death, which we doe when by Gods grace wee make an account of every present day, as if it were the present day of our death, & reckon with our selues when we goe to bed as though we should neuer rise againe; and when wee rise, as though we should neuer lie downe againe.

This meditation of death is of speciall vse, & brings forth many fruits in the life of man. And first of all it serues to humble vs vnder the hand of God. Example we haue of Abraham, who said, Gen. 18. 27. Behold I haue begun to speake to my Lord; and I am but dust and ashes. Marke here, how the consideration of his mortality made him to abase and cast downe himselfe in the sight of God: and thus if wee could reckon of every day as of the last day, it would straight way pull downe our peacocks feathers, and make vs with Iob to abhorre our selues in dust and ashes.

Secondly this meditation is a meanes to further repentance. When Jonas came to Nineue and cried, Jon. 3. 4. 5. Yet forty dayes, & Nineue shall be destroyed., the whole city repented in sackcloth and ashes. When Elias came to Abab and told him that the dogs should eate Isabel by the wall of Iezreel, and him also of Ababs flocke that died in the city, &c. it made him to humble himselfe so, as the Lord saith to Elias, 1. Kin. 21. 29. Seest thou how Abab is humbled before me? Now if the remembrance of death was of such force in him that was but an hypocrite; how excellent a meanes of grace will it be in them that repent?

Thirdly, this meditation serues to stirre vp contentation in enery estate and condition of life that shall befall vs. Righteous Iob in the very midst of his afflictions, comforts himselfe with this consideration: Naked (saith hee, Iob. 1. 21.) came I forth of my mothers wombe, and naked shall I returne againe, &c. blessed be the name of the Lord And surely the often meditation of this, that a man of al his abundance can carry nothing with him but either a coffin or a winding sheete, or both, should bee a forcible meanes to repress the vnstatable desire of riches and the loue of this world.

Thus wee see what an effectuall meanes this meditation is to encrease & further the grace of God in the hearts of men. Now I commend this first dutie to your Christian consideration, desiring the practise of it, in your liues: which practise that it may take place, two things must be performed. First, labour to plucke out of your hearts a wicked and erroneous imagination, whereby every man naturally blesteth himselfe and thinkes highly of himselfe: and though he hath one foot in the graue, yet he perswades himselfe that he shall not die yet. There is no man almost so old but by the corruption of his heart he thinks that he shall liue one yeare longer. Cruell and vnmercifull death makes league with no man: & yet the Prophet saith, Esa. 38. 15. that the wicked man makes a league with death. How can this be? there is no league made indeed, but only in the wicked imagination of man; who fallily thinks that death will not come neere him, though all the world should be destroyed. See an example in the parable of the rich man, that hauing stored vp abundance of wealth for many yeares, said to his own soule, Luke. 12. 19. Soule, thou hast much goods laid vp for many yeares, lue at ease, eat, drink, and take thy pastime, whereas his soule was fetched away presently. And seeing this naturall corruptio is in every mans heart, we must daily fight against it, & labour by all might and maine that it take no place in vs: for so long as it shall preuaile, we shall be vterly vnfit to make any preparatio to death. Wee ought rather to endeavour to attaine to the minde and meditation of S. Hierome, who testifieth of himselfe on this manner, Whether I wake or sleepe, or whateuer I doe, me thinks I heare the sound of the trumpet, Rise ye dead, and come to iudgement.

The second thing which we are to practise: that we may come to a serious meditation of our owne ends, is, to make prayer vnto God that we might be enabled to resolute our selues of death continually. Thus Dauid prayed Psal. 39. 4. Lord make me to know mine end, and the measure of my dayes, let mee know how long I haue to liue. And Moses, Psal. 90. 12. Lord teach me to number my dayes, that I may apply mine heart vnto wisdom. It may be said. What neede men pray to God that they might be able to number their dayes? cannot they of themselves reckon a few yeeres and dayes, that are able by art to measure the globe of the earth, and the spheres of heauen, and the quantities of the stars, with their longitudes, latitudes, altitudes, motions, & distances from the earth? No verily. For how soeuer by a general speculation we thinke something of our ends, yet vnlesse the spirit of God bee our schoole-master to teach vs our dutie, we shall neuer be able soundly to resolute our selues of the presence and speedines of death. And therefore let vs pray with Dauid and Moses, that God would enlighten our minds with knowledge; and fill our hearts with his grace, that we might rightly consider of death, and esteeme of every day and houre as if it were the day and houre of death.

The second duty in this generall preparation is, that every man must daily endeavour to take away from his owne death the power and strength thereof. And I pray you marke this point: The Philistines saw by experience that Samson was of great strength, and therefore they vsed meanes to know in what part of the body it lay: and when they found it to bee in the haire of his head, they ceased not vntill it was cut off. In like manner the time will come when we must encounter hand to hand with tyrannous and cruell death: the

best therefore is, before hand now while we haue time, to search where the strength of death lies, which being once knowne, we must with speed cut off his Sampsons locks, and beare him of his power, disarme him, & make him altogether vnable to preuaile against vs. Now to find out this matter, we neede not to vie the counsel of any Dalilah, for wee haue the word of God which teacheth vs plainly where the strength of death consists, namely, in our finnes, as Paul saith, 1. Cor. 15. 56. The sting of death is sin. Well then, we knowing certainly that the power and force of euery mans particular death lies in his owne finnes, must spend our time and study in vying good meanes that our finnes may bee remooued and pardoned. And therefore wee must daily inure our selues in the practise of two duties. One, is to humble our selues for all our finnes past, partly confessing them against our selues, partly in prayer crying to heauen for the pardon of them. The other, is for time to come to turne vnto God, and to carry a purpose, resolution, and indeavour in all things to reforme both heart and life according to Gods word. These are the very principall & proper duties, whereby the strength of death is much rebated, and he is made of a mighty and bloodie enemy so farre forth friendly & tractable, that we may with comfort encounter with him & preuaile too. Therefore I commend these duties to your Christian considerations, & careful practise, desiring that yee would spend your daies euer hereafter in doing of them. If a man were to deale with a mighty dragon or serpent hand to hand, in such wise as hee must either kill or be killed, the best thing were to beare him of his sting, or of that part of his body where his poyson lies: now death it selfe is a serpent, dragon, or scorpion, and sinne is the sting or poyson whereby he wounds and kills vs. Wherefore without any more delay, see that yee pull out his sting: the practise of the forefaidd duties is as it were a fit and worthy instrument to do the deed. Hast thou bin a person ignorant of Gods will, a contemner of his word and worship, a blasphemer of his names a breaker of his sabbath, disobedient to parents and Magistrates, a murderer, a fornicator, a railer, a slanderer, a couetous person? &c. Reforme these thy finnes and all other like vnto them, pull them out by the rootes from thy heart, and cast them off. So many finnes as be in thee, so many things of death be also in thee to wound thy soule to eternall death. Therefore let no one sinne remaine, for which thou halt not humbled thy selfe and repented feriously. When death hurts any man, it takes the weapons whereby he is hurt, from his owne hand. It cannot do vs the least hurt but by the force of our owne finnes. Wherefore I say again and again, lay this point to your hearts, and spend your strength, life, and health, that yee may before yee die, abolish the strength of death. A man may put a serpent in his bo-

some, when the sting is out, and we may let death creep into our bosome, & gripe vs with his legs, and stab vs at the heart, so long as he brings not his venime and poyson with him. And because the former duties are so necessary, as none can be more, I will vie some reasons yet further to enforce them, Whatsoeuer a man would doe when he is dying, the same he ought to doe euery day while he is liuing: now the most notorious and wicked person that euer was, when he is dying will pray and desire others to pray for him, and promise amendment of life, protesting that if he might liue, he would become a practitioner in all the good duties of faith, repentance, and reformation of life. Oh therefore bee careful to doe this euery day: Again, the saying is true, he that would liue while he is dead, must die while he is aliege; namely, to his sinne. Wouldst thou then liue eternally? sue to heauen for thy pardon, and see that now in thy life time thou die to thine owne finnes. Lastly, wicked Balaam would faine die the death of the righteous: but alas, it was to small purpose: for he would by no means liue the life of the righteous: For his continuall purpose and meaning was to follow his old waies in forceries and conuoulesse. Now the life of a righteous man stands in the humbling of himselfe for his sins past, and in a careful reformation of life to come. Wouldst thou then die the death of the righteous? then looke vnto it, that thy life be the life of the righteous; if yee will neede liue the life of the vnrighious, yee must looke to die the death of the vnrighious. Remember this, and content not your selues to heare the word, but be doers of it: for yee learne no more indeed, what measure of knowledge so euer yee haue, then yee practise.

The third duty in our generall preparation, is in this life to enter into the first degree of life eternall. For as I haue said, there be three degrees of life euerslasting, and the first of them is in this present life. For hee that would liue in eternal happinesse for euer, must begin in this world to rise out of the graue of his owne finnes, in which by nature he lies buried, and liue in newnesse of life, as it is said in the reuelation, Reuel. 20. 6. Hee that will escape the second death, must bee made partaker of the first resurrection. And Paul saith to the Colossians, that they were in this life deliuered from the power of darkenesse, and translated into the kingdome of Christ, Col. 1. 13. And Christ saith to the Church of the Lewes, the kingdome of heauen is amongst you. Now this first degree of life is, when a man can say with Paul, Galat. 2. 20. I line not, but Christ liues in mee: that is, I finde partly by the testimonie of my sanctified conscience, and partly by experience, that Christ my redeemer by his spirit guideth and governeth my thoughts, will, affections, and all the powers of body and soule according to the blessed direction of his holy will. Now that wee might bee able to

by this, we must haue three gifts and graces of God, wherein especially this first degree of life consists. The first is, sauiing knowledge, whereby we doe truly resolve our selues that God the Father of Christ is our Father, Christ his Sonne our redeemer, and the holy Ghost our comforter. That this knowledge is one part of eternall life, it appeares by the saying of Christ in John 17. 3. This is life eternall, that is, the beginning and entrance into life eternall, to know thee the only God, and whom thou hast sent Iesus Christ. The second grace, is peace of conscience which passeth all vnderstanding, Phil. 4. 7. and therefore Paul saith, Rom. 14. 17. that the kingdome of heauen is righteousnesse, peace of conscience, and ioy in the holy Ghost. The horror of a guilty conscience is the beginning of death and destruction: therefore peace of conscience deriued from the death of Christ, is life and happinesse. The third is the regiment of the spirit, whereby the heart and life of man is ordered according to the word of God. For Paul saith, Rom. 8. 14. that they that are the children of God, are led by the spirit of Christ. Now seeing this is so, that if we would liue eternally wee must begin to liue that blessed and eternall life before we die, here we must be careful to reforme two common errors. The first is, that a man enters into eternall life when he dies, and not before: which is a flat vntruth. Our Saviour Christ said to Zacharias, Luke 19. 9. This day is saluation come to thy house, giuing vs to vnderstand, that a man then begins to be saued, when God doth effectually call him by the ministry of his Gospel. Who-soeuer then will bee saued when he is dying and dead, must begin to be saued while he is now liuing. His saluation must begin in this life: that would come to saluation after this life. Verily, verily, saith Christ, he that heareth my word, and beleueth him that sent me, hath eternall life, namely, in this present life. The second error is, that howsoeuer a man liue, if when he is dying, he can liue vp his eyes, & say, Lord haue mercie vpon me, he is certainly saued. Behold a very dangerous and foolish conceit, that deceiues many a man. It is all one as if an arrant theife should thus reason with himself, and say: I will spend my daies in robbing and stealing, I feare neither arraignment, nor execution. For at the very time when I am to be turned off the ladder, if I doe but call vpon the iudge I know I shall haue my pardon. Behold a most dangerous and desperate course: and the very same is the practise of careless men in the matter of their saluation. For a man may die with Lord haue mercie in his mouth, and perish eternally: except in this world hee enter into the first degree of eternall life; For us euerly one that saith, Lord, Lord, shall enter into heauen: but he that doth the will of the father which is in heauen, Matth 7. 21.

The fourth duty is, to exercise and inure our selues in dying by little and little so long as we liue here vpon earth, before we come to die indeed. And as men that are appointed to runne a race, exercise themselues to running that they may get the victorie; so should wee begin to die now while we are liuing, that we might die well in the end. But some may say, how should this be done? Paul giues vs direction in his owne example, when he saith, The reioicing which I haue in Christ, I doe daily, 1. Cor. 15. 31. And he died daily, not only because he was often in danger of death by reason of his calling; but also because in all his dangers and troubles, he inured himselfe to die. For when men doe make the right vie of their afflictions, whether they be in tadic or minde, or both, and doe with all their might endeavour to beare them patiently, humbling themselves as vnder the correction of God, then they begin to die well. And to do this indeede is to take an excellent course. Hee that would mortifie his greatest sinne, must begin to doe it with small finnes; which, when they are once reformed, a man shall be able more easily to overcome his master finnes: So likewise he that would be able to beare the crosse of all crosses, namely, death it selfe, must first of all learne to beare small crosses, as sicknesses in bodie, and troubles in minde, with losse of goods & friends, and of good name: which I may fitly tearme little deaths, and the beginning of death it selfe: and we must first of all acquaint our selues with these little deaths, before we can bee well able to beare the great death of all. Again, the afflictions and calamities of this life are as it were the harbingers and pumers of death: and we are first to learne how to entertaine these messengers, that when death the Lord himselfe shall come, we may in better manner entertaine him. This point Bilney the martyr wel considered, who oftentimes before he was burned, put his finger into the flame of the candle, not onely to make triall of his ability in suffering, but also to arme and strengthen himselfe against greater torments in death. Thus yee see the fourth duty, which yee must in any wise learne and remember, because we cannot be able to beare the pangs of death well, vntill we be first well schooled and nurtured by sundry trials in this life.

The fifth and last duty is set downe by Salomon, Eccles. 9. 10. All that shine hand shall finde to doe, doe it with all thy power. And make the reason: For there is neither worke, nor inuention, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the graue whither thou goest. To the same purpose Paul saith, Gal. 6. 10. Doe good to all men while yee haue time. Therefore if a man be able to doe any good seruice either to Gods Church, or to the common-wealth, or to any private man, let him do it with all speede and with all might, lest death it selfe preuent him. He that hath care thus to spend his daies, shall with much comfort and peace of conscience end his life.

Thus much of generall preparation. Now followeth the particular, which is in the time of sickness. And here first of all I will shew

what is the doctrine of the Papists, and then afterward the truth. By the Popish order and practise, when a man is about to die, he is injoyed three things. First to make sacramental confession, specially if it be in any mortall sin; secondly, to receive the Eucharist; thirdly, to require his annoyling; that is, the sacrament; (as they call it) of extreme unction.

Sacramental confession, they tearme a rehearfall or numeration of all a mans finnes to a priest, that he may receive absolution. But against this kind of confession, sundry reasons may be alleadged. First of all, it hath no warrant either by commandement or example in the whole word of God. They say yes; and they endeavour to prove it thus: He which lies in any mortall sinne, is by Gods law bound to doe penance and to seeke reconciliation with God: now the necessarie meanes after baptism to obtaine reconciliation, is the confession of all our finnes to a priest: because Christ hath appointed priests to be iudges vpon earth, with such measure of authoritie, that no man falling after baptism, can without their sentence and determination be reconciled; and they can not rightly iudge, vnlesse they know all a mans finnes: therefore all that fall after baptism are bound by Gods word to open all their finnes to a priest. Ans. It is false which they say, that priests are iudges, hauing power to examine and take knowledge of mens finnes, and iurisdiction whereby they can properly absolve and pardon or retaine them. For Gods word hath giuen no more to man, but a ministry of reconciliation. 2. Corin. 5. 18. whereby in the name of God, and according to his word, he doth preach, declare, and pronounce, that God doth pardon or not pardon his finnes. Again, pardon may truly be pronounced, and right iudgement of the estate of any man, without a particular rehearfall of his finnes, for hee which soundly and truly repents of one or some few finnes, repents of all. Secondly, this confession is ouerturned by the practise of the Prophets and Apostles, who not only absolved particular persons, but also whole Churches without exaction of auricular confession. When Nathan the Prophet had rebuked Dauid for his two great and horrible crimes, Dauid touched with remorse said, 2. Sam. 1. 2. 12. I haue sinned, and Nathan pretently without further examination declared vnto him in the name of God, that his finnes were forgiven him. Thirdly, it cannot be proved by any good and sufficient proofes, that this confession was vsed in the Church of God till after 5. or 6. hundred yeares were expired. For the confession which was then in vse, was either publike before the Church, or the opening of a publike fault to some priuate person in secret. Therefore to vrge sicke men vnto it lying at the point of death, is to lay more burdens on them, then euer God appointed.

thing to receive the Eucharist in the time of sicknesse toward death, and that priuately of the sicke partie alone, they haue no warrant for their practise and opinion. For in the want of the sacrament there is no danger, but in the contempt: and the very contempt it selfe is a sinne which may be pardoned, if we repent. And there is no reason why we should thinke that sicke men should be deprived of the comfort of the Lords supper, if they receive it not indeath; because the fruit and efficacy of the Sacrament once received, is not to be restrained to the time of receiving; but it extends it selfe to the whole time of mans life afterward. Again, the supper of the Lord is no priuate actio, but merely Ecclesiastical: and therefore to be celebrated in the meeting and assemblies of Gods people; as our Saviour Christ prescribeth, when he saith, Do ye this; and Paul in saying, When ye come together. But it is alleadged, that the Israelites did eate the Paschal Lamb in their houses when they were in Egypt. Ans. The Israelites had then no liberty to make any publike meeting for that end; and God commanded that the Paschal Lamb should be eaten in all the houses of the Israelites at one and the same instant; and that in effect was as much as if it had beene publike. Again, they alleadged a Canon of the Councill of Nice; which decreeth that men being about to die, must receive the Eucharist and not be deprived of the pouison of food necessary for their iourney. Ans. The Councill made no degree touching the administration of the Sacrament to all them that die, but to such onely as fell away from the faith in persecution, or fell into any other notorious crime, and were thereupon excommunicate, and so remained till death: and either then or somewhat before testified their repentance for their offences. And the Canon was made for this end, that such persons might be assured that they were againe received into the Church; and by this meanes depart with more comfort. Thirdly, it is objected, that in the primitive Church, part of the Eucharist was carried by a ladde to Serapion an aged man, lying sicke in his bed. Ans. It was indeede the custome of the ancient Church from the very beginning, that the elements of bread & wine should be sent by some of the Deacons to the sick, which were absent from the assembly. And yet neuertheless here is no footing for priuate communions. For the Eucharist was only then sent wth the rest of the Church did openly communicate; and such as were then absent onely by reason of sicknesse, and desired to be partakers of that blessed communion, were to be reputed as present. Lastly it is objected, that it was the manner of men and women in former times to carry part of the Sacrament home to their houses, & to referre it till the time of necessity, as the time of sickness and such like. Ans. The referuatio of the Sacrament was but a superstitious practise, though it be auncient. For out of the administration, that is, before it beginne, and after it is ended, the Sacrament cealeth to be a Sacrament, and the elements to bee elements. As for the practise of them that vsed to cram the Eucharist into the mouth of them that were deceased; it is not only superstitious, but also very absurd.

As for the Annoying of the sicke, that is: the annoying of the body, specially the organs or instruments of the senses, that the party may obtaine the remission of his finnes, and comfort against all temptations of the diuell in the houre of death, and strength more easily to beare the pangs of sicknesse and the pangs of death, and he restored to his corporall health, if it be expedient for the saluation of his soule; is but a dotage of mans braine, and hath not so much as a shew of reason to iustifie it. The fifth of Iames is commonly alleadged to this purpose, but the annoying there mentioned is not of the same kind with this greasie sacrament of the Papists. For that annoying of the body was a ceremony vsed by the Apostles and others, when they put in practise this miraculous gift of healing, which gift is now ceased. Secondly, that annoying had a promise that the party should recouer his health, but this popish annoying hath no such promise, because for the most part the persons thus annoying dy afterward without recovery; whereas those which were annoying in the primitive Church alwaies recouered. Thirdly, the auncient annoying serued onely for the procuring of health, but this tends further to the procuring of remission of finnes, and strength in temptation.

Thus hauing scene the doctrine of the Papists, I come now to speake of the true and right manner of the making particular preparation before death, which contains three sorts of duties: one concerning God, the other concerning mans owne selfe, the third concerning our neighbour. The first concerning God, is to seeke to be reconciled vnto him in Christ, though we haue beene long assured of his fauour. All other duties must come after in the second place, and they are of little or no effect without this. Now this reconciliation must be fought for; & is obtained by a renewing of our former faith and repentance; and they must be renewed on this manner: So soone as a man shall feele any manner of sicknesse to seaze vpon his body, he must consider with himselfe whence it ariseth: and after serious consideration, he shall find that it comes not by chance or fortune, but by the speciall providence of God. This done, he must goe yet further, and consider for what cause the Lord should afflict his body with any sickness or discaie. And hee shall finde by Gods word, that sickness comes ordinarily and vniuallly of sin. Wherefore is the living man sorrowfull? man suffereth for his finnes, Iam. 3. 39. It is true indeede, there be other causes of the wants of the bodie, and of sicknesse, beside sinne; and though they be not knowne to vs, yet they are knowne to the Lord. Hereupon Christ when he saw a certaine blinde man, and was demanded what was the cause of the blindness, answered. Ioh. 9. 2. Neither hath this man sinned, nor his parents; but that the worke of God should be shewed on him. Yet we for our parts, who are to goe not by the secret, but by the revealed will of God, must take this vse of our sickness, that is sent vnto vs for our finnes. When Christ healed the man sicke of the palsey, he saith, Mat. 9. 2. *Be of good comfort, thy finnes are forgiven thee; & when he had healed the man by the pool of Bethesda, that had bin sicke thirty eights yeeres, he bids him; sinne no more, lest a worse thing should happen vnto him: giuing them both to vnderstand, that their sicknesse came by reason of their finnes. And thus should euerie sicke man resolute himselfe. Now when we haue proceeded thus farre, and haue as it were laid our finger vpon the right and proper cause of our sicknesse, three things concerning our finnes must be performed of vs in sicknesse. First, we must make a new examination of our hearts and liues, and say as the Israelites said in affliction: Let vs search and trie our waies, and turne againe vnto the Lord, Iam. 3. 40. Secondly, we must make a new confession to God of our new and particular finnes, as God sends new corrections and chastisements. When Dauid had the hand of God verie heauie vpon him for his finnes, so as his very bones and measure confirmed winneth him, Psal. 3. 14. hee made confession of them vnto God, and thereupon obtained his pardon, and was healed. The third thing is to make new prayer and more earnest then euer before, with sighes and groanes of the spirit, and that for pardon of the same sins, and for reconciliation with God in Christ. In the exercise of these three duties standes the renouation of our faith and repentance, whereby they are increased, quickened, and renewed. And the more sicknesse preuailes and takes place in the body, the more should we be careful to put them in vnto that spiritual life, might increase as temporal life is decayed. When king Ezechias lay sicke, as hee thought vpon his death-bed, he wept as for some other cause, so as hee for his sins, and withall he prayed God to caste them behinde his backe. Dauid made certaine Psalmes when hee was sicke, or at the least vpon the occasion of his sicknesse, as namely, the 6. the 32. 38. 39. &c. and they all are Psalmes of repentance: in which wee may see how in distresse of body and minde hee renewed his faith and repentance, heartily bewailing his finnes, and intreating the Lord for the pardon of them. Manasses, one that fell from God, and gaue himselfe to many horrible finnes, when he was taken captiue and imprisoned in Babylon, *He prayed to the Lord his God and humbled himselfe greatly before the God of his fathers, and prayed vnto him: and God was merciefull vnto him, and heard his prayer, and brought him againe into Ierusalem into his kingdom, and then Manasse knew that the Lord was God, 2. Chron. 33. 12, 13. Now looke what Manasse did in his tribulation, the same thing must we doe in the time of our bodily sicknesse.

Here I haue occasion to mention a notorious fault, that is very common in this age, euen among such as haue long lined in the bosome of the Church: and that is this: Men now adayes are so farre from renuing their faith and repentance, that when they lye sick and are drawing toward death, they must be catechized in the doctrine of faith and repentance, as if they had bene but of late receiued into the Church. Whosoever will, but as occasion is offered, visit the sicke, shall finde this to be true which I say. What a shame is this, that when a man hath spent his life and dayes in the Church for the space of twentie, or thirti, or fourtie yeares, hee should at the very end of all & not before, begin to inquire what faith, and what repentance is, and how his soule might be saved. This one sin argues the great security of this age, & the great contempt of God and his word. Well, let all men hereafter in time to come, be warned to take heed of this exceeding negligence in matters of saluation, and to vse all good meanes before hand, that they may bee able in sicknesse and in the time of death to put in practise the spiritual exercises of inuocation and repentance.

Now if so be it fall out that the sicke partie cannot of himselfe renew his owne faith and repentance, he must seeke the helpe of others. When the man that was sicke of the dead palse could not goe to Christ himselfe, Mar. 2. 4. hee got others to beare him in his bedde: and when they could not come neere for the multitude they vncovered the rooffe of the house, and let the bed downe before Christ: euen so when sicke men cannot alone by themselves doe the good duties to which they are bound, they must borrow helpe from their fellow-members; who are partly by their counsell to put to their helping hand, and partly by their prayers to present them vnto God, and to bring them into the presence of God.

And touching helpe in this case, sundry duties are to be performed. Saint James sets down foure; two whereof concerne the sicke patient, and other two such as be helpers. The first duty of the sick man is to fend for help: where two circumstances must be considered: who must be sent for, and when. For the first, Saint James saith, Iam. 5. 14. Is any sicke among you? let him call for the Elders of the Church. Whereby are meant not only Apostles and all ministers of the Gospell, but others also (as I take it) which were men auuncient for yeares, indued with the spirit of vnderstanding and prayer, and had withall the gift of working miracles and of healing the sicke. For in the primitive Church this gift was for a time so plentifully bestowed on the that belieued in Christ, that souldiers cast out diuels, and parents wrought miracles on their children. Hence wee may learne that howsoeuer it bee the dutie of the ministers of the word principally to visit and comfort the sicke, yet it is not their dutie alone, for it belongs to them also which haue knowledge of Gods word, and the gift of prayer. Exhort one another (saith the H. Ghost, Heb. 3. 13. while it is called to day. And again, 1. Thes. 4. 11. 14. Admonish them that are disorderd, and comfort them that are weak. And indeede in equitie it should be the dutie of euery Christian mā to comfort his brother in sicknes. Here wee must needes take knowledge of the common fault of men & women when they come to visit their neighbours and friends: they cannot speake a word of instruction and comfort, but spend the time in silence, gazing, and looking on: or in vttering words to litle or no purpose, saying to the sick party, that they are very sorry to see him in that case, that they would haue him to be of good comfort, but wherein and by what meanes they cannot tell; that they doubt not but that hee shall recouer his health and liue with them still, and be merry as in former time; that they will pray for him; whereas all their prayers are nothing els but the Apostles Creede, or the ten commandments, and the Lords prayer vttered without vnderstanding. And this is the common comfort that sicke men get at the hands of their neighbours when they come vnto them; and all this comes either because they liue in ignorance of Gods word, or because they falsely thinke that the whole burthen of this dutie lies vpon the shoulders of the minister.

The second circumstance is, when the sicke party must fend for the elders to instruct him and pray for him. And that is in the very first place of all before any other helpe bee sought for. Where the Diuine endes, there the Physitian must begin: and it is a very preposterous course that the Diuine should there beginne where the Physitian makes an end. For till helpe be had for the soule, and sinne which is the roote of sicknes be cured, physicke for the body is nothing. Therefore it is a thing much to be disliked, that in all places almost the physitian is first sent for, and comes in the beginning of the sicknes, and the Minister comes when a man is halfe dead, and is then sent for oftentimes when the sicke parties liues drawing on and gasping for breath, as though Ministers of the Gospell in these daies were able to worke miracles.

The second dutie of the sicke partie, is to confesse his finnes, as S. James saith, Confesse your finnes one to another, and pray one for another. It will be said, that this is to bring in againe Popish shrift. Answ. Confession of our finnes, and that vnto men, was neuer denied of any: the question is onely of the manner and order of making confession. And for this cause wee must put a great difference betwene Popish shrift, & the cofession, of which S. James speaketh. For he requires only a confession of that or those finnes which lie vpon a mans conscience when he is sicke: but the popish doctrine requireth a particular enumeration of all a mans finnes. Againe, S. James enioynes confession onely as a thing meete, and conuenient: but the Popist as a thing necessarie to the remission of finnes. Thirdly, S. James permits that confession bee made to any man, and by one man to another mutually: whereas Popish shrift is made onely to the Priest. The second duty then is, that the sicke partie troubled in minde with the memorie and consideration of any of his finnes past, or any manner of way tempted by the diuell, shall freely of his owne accord open his case to such as are both able and willing to helpe him, that he may receiue comfort and die in peace of conscience.

Thus much of the sicke mans duty; now follow the duties of helpers. The first is to pray for him, that is, in his presence to pray with him, and for him, and by prayer to present his very person and his whole estate vnto God. The Prophet Elizeus, the Apostle Paul and our Saviour Christ vsed this manner of praying; when they would miraculously restore temporal life: & therefore it is very meete that the same should be vsed also of vs. that we might the better stirre vp our affections in praier, and our compassion to the sick when we are about to intreat the Lord for the remission of their finnes, and for the saluation of their soules.

The second dutie of him that comes as an helper, is to annoint the sick party with oyle. Now this annointing was an outward ceremony which was vsed with the gift of healing, which is now ceased, and therefore I omit to speake further of it.

Thus much of the duty which the sick man owes to God: now follow the duties which he is to performe vnto himselfe, and they are twofold: one concernes his soule, the other his body. The dutie concerning his soule, is that he must arme & furnish himselfe against the immoderate feare of present death. And the reason hereof is plaine: because howsoeuer naturally men feare through the course of their liues more or lesse; yet in time of sicknesse when death approacheth, this naturall feare bred in the bone will mooue of itselfe it selfe: men in such sort, as it will astonish the senses of the sicke party, and sometime cause desperation. Therefore it is necessary that we vse meanes to strengthen our selues against the feare of death. The meanes are of two sorts: praier, and meditation. Praier is two especially. The first is, that the sicke man must not so much regard death it selfe as the benefites of God which are obtained after death. He must not fixe his minde vpon the considerations of the pangs and torments of death: but all his thoughts and affections must be set vpon that blessed estate that is enioyed after death. Hee that is to passe ouer some great and deepe river, must not looke downward to the streame of the water; but if he would prevent feare, he must fet his foote sure, and cast his eye to the banke on the further side: and so must he that drawes neere death, as it were looke ouer the waues of death and directly fixe the eye of his faith vpon eternall life. The second practise is to looke vpon death in the glasse of the Gospell, and not in the glasse of the law; that is, we must consider death not as it is propounded in the law, & looke vpon that terrible face which the law giueth vnto it; but as it is set forth in the Gospell. Death in the law is a curse and the downefall to the pit of destruction; in the Gospell it is the entrance to heauen: the law sets forth death as death; the Gospell sets forth death as no death, but a sleepe onely; because it speaketh of death as it is altered and changed by the death of Christ; by the vertue whereof death is properly no death to the seruants of God. When men shall haue care on this manner to consider of death, it will bee a notable meanes to strengthen and stablish them against all immoderate feares and terrors that vially rise in sicknesse.

The meditations which serue for this purpose are innumerable, but I will touch onely those which are the most principall and the grounds of the rest: and they are foure in number. The first is borrowed from the speciall prouidence of God: namely, that the death of euery man, much more euery childe of God, is not onely fore-seene, but also fore-appointed of God: yea the death of euery man deferred and procured by his sins, is laid vpon him by God, who in that respect may be said to bee the cause of euery mans death. So saith Amos, 1 Sam. 1. 6. The Lord killeth and maketh aliu. The Church of Ierusalem confessed that nothing came to passe in the death of Christ, but that which the fore-knowledge and eternall counsell of God had appointed, Act. 4. 28. And therefore the death also of euery member of Christ is fore-seene and ordained by the speciall decree and prouidence of God. I add further, that the very circumstances of death, as the time when, the place where, the manner how, the beginnings of sicknes, the continuance, and the end, every sate in the sicknesse, and the pangs of death, are particularly set downe in the counsell of God. The very haire of our heads are numbered (as our Saviour Christ saith, Mat. 10. 29. 30.) and a sparrows lights not on the ground without the will of our heavenly Father. David saith excellently, Psa. 139. 15, 16. My bones are not hid from thee, though I was made in a secret place, & fashioned beneath in the earth: thine eyes did see me when I was without forme: for in thy booke were all things written, which in continuance were fashioned, when there was none of them before. And he praies to God; to put his reares into his bottle, Psa. 56. 8. Now if this be true, that God hath bottles for the very reares of his seruants, much more hath hee bottles for their blood, and much more doth hee respect and regard their paines and miseries with all the circumstances of sicknesse and death: The carefull meditation of this one point is a notable meane to arme vs against feare and distrust, and impatience in the time of death; as some examples in this case wil easily manifest, I held my tongue and said nothing, saith David, Psalm. 39. 9. but what was it that caused this patience in him? the cause followes in the next words; because thou Lord diddest it. And Ioseph saith to his brethren, Gen. 45. 5. Fear not, for it was the Lord that sent me before you. Marke here how Ioseph is armed against impatience and gricfe and discontentment by the very consideration of Gods providence: and so in the same manner shall we be confirmed against all feares and forrowes, and say with David, Psalm. 116. 15. Prations in the sight of the Lord is the death of his Saints; if this perswasion bee once setled in our hearts, that all things in sickness and death come to passe vnto vs by the providence of God, who turnes all things to the good of them that loue him.

The second meditation is to be borrowed from the excellent promise that God hath made to the death of the righteous: which is, Blessed are they that die in the Lord: for they rest from their labours, and their workes follow them.

The author of truth that cannot lie hath spoken it. Now then let a man but thoroughly consider this, that death ioyned with a reformed life hath a promise of blessednes adioyned vnto it, and it alone will be a sufficient meane to stay the rage of our affections, & all inordinate feare of death; & the rather, if we marke wherein in this blessednesse consists. In death we are indee thrust out of our old dwelling places, namely, these houses of clay and earthly tabernacles of our bodies, wherein we have made long abode: but what is the end? surely that liuing and dying in Christ we might haue a building giuen of God, that is, an house not made with hands, but eternal in the heauens, which is vnspcakable and immortall glory. If a poore man should be commanded by a prince to put off his torne and beggerly garments, & in stead thereof to put on royall & costly robes, it would be a great reioycing to his heart: oh then what ioyfull newes must this be vnto all repentant and sorrowfull sinners, when the King of heauen and earth comes vnto them by death, and bids them lay down their bodies as ragged and patched garments, and prepare themselves to put on the princely robe of immortallitie? No tongue can be able to expresse the excellencie of this most blessed and happie estate.

The third meditation is borrowed from the estate of all them that are in Christ, whether liuing or dying. Hee that dieth beleuing in Christ, dieth not forth of Christ, but in him, hauing both his body and soule really coupled to Christ according to the tenor of the covenant of grace: and though after death body and soule be seuered one from another, yet neither of them are seuered or disioyned from Christ. The coniunction which is once begun in this life remains eternally. And therefore

A though the soule goe from the bodie, and the bodie it selfe rot in the graue, yet both are still in Christ, both in the covenant, both in the fauour of God as before death, and both shall againe be ioyned together, the body by the vertue of the former coniunction being raised to eternal life. Indee in this vnion with Christ were dissolved as the coniunction of body and soule is, it might be some matter of discomfort and feare, but the foundation and substance of our mysticall coniunction with Christ both in respect of our bodies and soules enduring for euer, must needs be a matter of exceeding ioy and comfort.

B The fourth meditation, is that God hath promised his speciall, blessed, and comfortable presence vnto his seruants when they are sick or dying, or any way distressed. When thou passest through the water, I will bee with thee (saith the Lord, Isa. 43. 2.) and through the floods that they do not overflow thee: when thou walkest through the very fire thou shalt not be burnt, neither shalt the flame kindle vpon thee. Now the Lord doth manifest his presence three waies: the first is, by moderating and lessening the paines and torments of sickness and death, as the very words of the former promise doe plainly import. Hence it comes to passe, that to many men the ferocious and pangs of death, are nothing so grievous and troublesome, as the afflictions & crosses which are laid on them in the course of their liues.

C The second way of Gods presence is by an inward and vnspcakable comfort of the spirit, as Paul saith, Rom. 5. 5. 5. We reioyce in tribulation, knowing that tribulation bringeth forth patience, &c. but why is this reioycing? because (saith he in the next words) the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the holy Ghost. Again, Paul hauing in some grievous sickness received the sentence of death, saith of himselfe, 2. Cor. 1. 5. that, as the suffering of Christ did abound in him, so his consolation did abound through Christ. Here then wee see, that when earthly comforts faile, the Lord himselfe draws neere the bed of the sicke, as it were visiting them in his owne person, and ministering vnto them refreshing for their soules: With his left hand he holds vp their heads, and with his right hand he embraceth them, Cant. 2. 6. The third meane of Gods presence, is the ministerie of good Angels, whom the Lord hath appointed as keepers and nourses vnto his seruants to hold them vp and to beare them in their armes as nourses do young children, & to be as a guard vnto them against the diuell and his angels. And all this is verified specially in sickness, at which time the holy Angels are not only present with such as feare God, but ready also to receive and to carry their soules into heauen, as appears by the example of Lazarus.

D And thus much of the first drie which a sick man is to performe vnto himselfe, namely, that he must by all meanes possible arme and strengthen himselfe against the feare of death: now followeth the second drie which is concerning the body; and that is, that all sicke persons must bee careful to preferue health and life till God doe wholly take it away. For Paul saith, Rom. 14. 7. 8. None of us liueth to himselfe: neither doth any die to himselfe: for whether we liue, we liue vnto the Lord, or whether we die, wee die vnto the Lord, whether wee liue therefore or die, we are the Lords. For this cause we may not doe with our liues as we will, but we must referre the whole disposition thereof vnto God, for whose glory we are to liue and die. And this temporall life is a most precious iewell, & as the common saying is, life is very sweet; because it is giuen to man for this end, that he might haue some space of time wherein hee might vse all good meanes to attaine to life euertlasting. Life is not bestowed on vs, that wee should spend our dayes in our lulls and vaine pleasures, but that we might haue libertie to come out of the kingdome of darkenesse into the kingdome of grace, and from the bondage of sinne into the glorious libertie of the sonnes of God: and in this respect speciall care must be had of preseruatiō of life, till God doe call vs hence.

In the preseruing of life, two things must be considered: the meanes, and the right vse of the meanes. The meanes is good and wholesome physicke, which though it be despised of many as a thing vnprofitable and needles, yet must it be esteemed as an ordinance & blessing of God. This appears, because the spirit of God hath giuen approbation vnto it in the Scriptures. When it was the good pleasure of God to restore life vnto King Ezekias, a lump of dry figs by the Prophets appointment was laid to his boyle and he was healed. Indee this cure was in some sort miraculous, because hee was made whole in the space of two or three dayes, and the third day he went up to the temple: yet the bunch of figges was a naturall and ordinarie medicine or plaister seruing to soften and ripen tumours or swellings in the flesh. And the Samaritane is commended for the binding vp and for the powring of wine and oyle into the wounds of the man that lay wounded betwene Ierusalem & Jerico. Now this dealing of his was a right practise of physicker for the wine serued to cleanse the wound and to ease the paine within: and the oyle serued to supple the flesh & to asswage the paine without. And the Prophet Esaie, seemes to commend this physicke, when he saith Esaie 1. 6. From the sole of the foot vnto the head, there is nothing whole therein, but wounds and swellings, and sores full of corruption: they haue not bin wrapped nor bound vp, nor mollified with oyle. And whereas God did not command circumcision of children before the eight day, he followed a rule of physicke obserued in all ages, that the life of the child is very vncertaine till the first seuen dayes be expired, as we may see by the example of the child which David had by Bathsheba which died the seuenth day. And vpon the very same ground heathen men vsed not to

A name their children before the eight day. Thus then it is manifest that the vse of physicke is lawfull and commendable.

B Furthermore, that physicke may bee well applied to the maintenance of health, speciall care must be had to make choise of such Physicians as are knowne to be well learned, and men of experience, as also of good conscience and good religion. For as in other callings, so in this also, there be sundry abuses which may indanger the liues & the health of men. Some venter vpon the bare inspection of the vrine, without further direction or knowledge of the estate of the sicke, to prescribe and minister as shal seeme best vnto them. But the learned in this facultie doe plainly auouch, that this kinde of dealing tends rather to kill then to cure, and that sundry men are indeede killed thereby: For iudgement by the vrine is most deceitfull: the water of him that is sicke of a pefilent feauer euen vnto death, looks for substance and colour as the water of a whole man: and so doth the water of them that are sicke of a quartane or of any other intermitting feauer: specially if they haue vsed good diet from the beginning, as also of them that haue the pleurisie, or the inflammation of the lungs, or the Squinancie, oftentimes when they are neere death. Now then considering the waters of such as are at the point of death, appear as the vrines of whole and sound men, one and the same vrine may foregiue both life and death, and be a signe of diuers, nay of contrary diseases: A thinne, crude, and pale vrine in them that be in health is a token of want of digestion; but in them that are sicke of a sharpe or burning ague, it betokens the frensie, and is a certaine signe of death. Again, others there be that thinke it a small matter to make experiments of their deuised medicines vpon the bodies of their patients, whereby the health, which they hoped for, is either much hindered or much decayed. Thirdly, there be others which minister no physicke at any time, or vse phlebotomie without the direction of iudiciall Aitrologie: but if they shal follow this course alwaies, they must needs kill many a man: Put the case that a man full bodied is taken with a pleurisie, the moone being in Leone, what must bee done? The learned in this art say, he must presently be let blood: but by Aitrologie a stay must be made, till the moone be remoued from Leo the house of the sunne: but by that time the impotense will be so much increased by the gathering together of the humours, that it can neither be dissolved nor ripened: and by this meanes the sicke partie wanting helpe in time, shall die either by inflammation or by the consumption of the lungs. Again, when a man is sicke of the Squinancie, or of the feauer called Synochus, the moone then being in the malignant aspects with any of the infortunate planets (as Aitrologers vse to speake) if letting of blood be deferred till the moone bee freed from the foresaid affeets, the partie dies in the meane season. Therefore they are farre wide that minister purgations and let blood no otherwise, then they are counsell'd by the continuation of the starres, whereas it is a farre better course to consider the matter of the discafe, with the disposition and ripening of it: as also the courses and symptoms, and criss thereof. This being so, there is good cause that sicke men should as well be careful to make choise of meete Physicians to whom they might commend the care of their health, as they are careful to make choise of Lawyers for their worldly suites, and Divines for cases of conscience.

Furthermore, all men must bee here warned to take heede, that they vse not such means as haue no warrant. Of this kinde are all charmes or spels, of what words soeuer they consist: characters and figures either in paper, wood, or waxe: all amulets, and ligatures, which serue to hang about the necke or other parts of the bodie, except they be grounded vpon some good naturall reason; as white peonie hung about the necke, is good against the falling sicknesse: and wolfe-dung tyed to the bodie is good against the chollicke, not by any enchantment, but by inward vertue. Otherwise they are all vaine and superstitious: because neither by creation, nor by any ordinance in Gods word, haue they any power to cure a bodily discafe. For words can doe no more but represent. And yet neuertheless, these vnlawfull and absurd means are more vied and sought for of common people, then good physicke. But it stands all men greatly in hand in no wise to seeke forth to enchanters, and forcerers, which indeede are but witches and wizzards, though they are commonly called cunning men and women. It were better for a man to die of his sicknesse, then to seeke recovery by such wicked persons. For if any man turne after such as worke with spirites, and after Sportlayers, to goe an whoring after them; the Lord will set his face against them; and cut them off from among his people. Leuiticus 20. 6. When Achazia was sicke, hee sent to Baalzebub the God of Eckron to know whether hee should recover or no: as the messengers were going, the Prophet Elias met them, and said, 2 King. 1. 6. Goe and returne to the king which sent you, and say vnto him, Thus saith the Lord, Is it not because there is no God in Israel, that thou sendest to inquire of Baalzebub the god of Ekron? therefore thou shalt not come downe from thy bed on which thou art gone up, but shalt die the death. Therefore such kinde of helpe is so farre from curing any paine or sicknesse, that it rather doubleth them, and fasteneth them vpon vs.

Thus much of the means of health: now followeth the manner of vsing the means; concerning which, three rules must bee followed. First of all, he that is to take physicke, must not only prepare his bodie, as Physicians doe prescribe: but he must also prepare his soule by humbling himselfe vnder the hand of God in his sicknesse for his finnes, and make earnest prayer to God for the pardon of them before any medicine come in his bodie. Now that this order ought to bee vsed, appears plainly in this, that sicknesse springs from our finnes as from a roote; which should first of all be stockt vp, that the branches might more easily die. And therefore Asa commended for many other things, is blamed for this by the holy Ghost, 2 Chron. 16. 12. that he sought not the Lord, but to the Physicians; and put his trust in them. Oftentimes it comes to passe, that diseases curable in themselves, are made incurable by the finnes and the impenitence of the partie; and therefore the best way is, for them that would haue ease, when God begins to correct them by sicknesse; then also to begin to humble themselves for all their finnes, and turne vnto God.

The second rule is, that when wee haue prepared our selues, and are about to vse physicke, wee must sanctifie it by the word of God and prayer, as we doe our meate or drinke. For by the word wee must haue our warrant, that the medicines prescribed are lawfull and good: and by prayer wee must intreat the Lord for a blessing vpon them, in restoring of health, if it bee the good will of God, 1 Tim. 4. 3.

The third rule is, that wee must carry in minde the right and proper end of physicke, lest wee deuiue our selues. Wee must not therefore thinke that physicke serues to preuent old age or death it selfe. For that is not possible, because God hath set downe that all men shall die and be changed. And life consists in a temperature and proportion of naturall heate and radicall moisture; which moisture being once consumed by the former heate, is by art vnrepairable; and therefore death must needs follow. But the true end of physicke is to continue and lengthen the life of man to his naturall period; which is when nature that hath bene long preferred by all possible means, is now wholly spent. Now this period, though it cannot bee lengthened by any skill of man, yee may it easily bee shortened, by intemperance in diet, by drunkenness, and by violent diseases. But care must be had to auoide all such euils; that the little lampe of corporal life may burne till it goe out of it selfe. For this very space of time is the very day of grace and saluation: and whereas God in iustice might haue cut vs off and haue vtterly destroyed vs, yet in great mercie he giues vs thus much time, that wee might prepare our selues to his kingdome; which time when it is once spent, if a man would redeeme it with the price of ten thousand worlds, he can not haue it.

And so conclude this point touching phy-

course

sicke, I will here set downe two speciall duties of the Physician himselfe. The first is, that in the want and defect of such as are to put sicke men in minde of their finnes, it is a duty specially concerning him, hee being a member of Christ, to aduertise his patients that they must truly humble themselves, and pray feruently to God for the pardon of all their finnes: and surely this duty would bee more commonly practised then it is, if al physicians did consider that oftentimes they want good successe in their dealings, not because there is any want in Art or good will, but because the partie with whom they deale is impenitent. The second duty is, when he sees manifest signes of death in his patient, not to depart concealing them, but first of all to certifie the patient thereof. There may be and is too much nicenes in such concealments, & the plaine truth in this case knowne, is very profitable. For when the party is certaine of his end, it becomes him of all confidence in earthly things, & makes him put all his assistance in the meere mercy of God. Whē Ezechias was sicke, the Prophet speaks plainly vnto him, and saith: Isa. 38. 1. Set thine house in order, for thou must die. And what good wee may reap by knowing certainly that we haue receiued the sentence of death, Paul sheweth when he saith, 2 Cor. 1. 9. We haue receiued the sentence of death in our selues, because we should not trust in our selues, but in God which raiseth the dead.

Hauiug thus seene what be the duties of the sicke man to himselfe, let vs now see what be the duties which he oweth to his neighbour; and they are two. The first is the dutie of reconciliation, whereby he is freely to forgive all men: and to desire to be forgiven of all. In the old testament, when a man wasto offer a bullocke or lambe in sacrifice to God, he must leaue his offering at the altar, and first goe and bee reconciled to his brethren, if they had ought against him: much more then must this be done, when we are in death to offer vp our selues, our bodies, and soules, as an acceptable sacrifice vnto God. Quest. What if a man cannot come to the speech of them with whom he would be reconciled; or if he doe, what if they will not be reconciled? Answer. When they shall in their sicknesse seeke and desire reconciliation, and cannot obtaine it, either because the parties are absent, or because they will not relent, they haue discharged their conscience, and God will accept their wil for the deed. As put case, a man lying sicke on his deathbed, is in enmitie with one that is then beyond the sea; so as he cannot possibly haue any speech with him, if he would neuer so faine, how shall he stay his mind? why, he must remember that in this case, a will and desire to be reconciled is reconciliation it selfe.

The second dutie is, that those which are rulers and governors of others, must haue care and take order that their charges committed to them by God, be left in good estate after their death: and here come three duties to be handled; the first of the Magistrate, the second of the Minister, the third of the master of the family. The Magistrates dutie is, before he die, to provide, as much as he can, for the godly and peaceable estate of the towne, citie, or common-wealth: and that is done partly by procuring the maintenance of sound religion and vertue, and partly by establishing the execution of ciuill iustice and outward peace. Examples of this practise in Gods word are these. When Moses was an hundred and twentie yeere old, and was no more able to goe in and out before the people of Israel, hee called them before him, and signified that the time of his departure was at hand, and thereupon tooke order for their well-fare after his death. And first of all he places Iosuah ouer them in his stead, to bee their guide to the promised land: secondly, he giues speciall charge to all the people, to be valiant and courageous against their enemies, and to obey the commandments of God. And Iosuah follows the same cause course, Iosua. 23. For he calls the people together, and shewes them that the time of his death is at hand, and giues them a charge to be courageous, and to worship the true God: which done, he ends his daies as a worthy Captaine. When king Dauid (1 King. 2. 1, 2, 3. &c.) was to goe the way of all flesh, and lay sicke on his death-bed; he placed his owne foye Salomon vpon his throne, and gaue him charge, both for maintenance of religion, and execution of iustice.

The dutie of Ministers when they are dying, is, as much as they can, to cast and provide for the continuance of the good estate of the Church ouer which they are placed. Consider the example of Peter, 2 Pet. 1. 15. I will (saith he) endeavour alwaies, that ye also may be able to haue remembrance of these things after my departure. If this had bin well obserued, there could not haue bin such abundance of schismes, errors, & heresies as hath bin, and the Church of God could not haue suffered so great hauckee. But because men haue had more care to maintaine personall succession, then the right succession, which stands in the doctrine of the Prophets and Apostles; therefore wolues haue come into the roomes of faithfull teachers, and the Apostacie of which Paul speaks, hath ouerthrewed the face of the Church.

Thirdly, householders must fet their families in order before they die, as the Prophet Esaia saith to Ezechias: Set thine house in order, for thou must die. For the procuring of good order in the family after death, 2. things are to be done: The first concerns this life, & that is to dispose of lands and goods. And that this may be well & wisely done; if the Will be vnmade, it is with godly aduice & counsel to be made in the time of sickness according to the practise of ancient and worthy men. Abraham before his death makes his Will, & giues legacies; so did Isaac, and Jacob, in whose last Will and testament are contained many worthy blessings and pro-

phacies of the estate of his children. And our Saviour Christ, Ioh. 19. 27. when he was vpon the crosse provided for his mother, specially commending her to his Disciple Iohn whom he loued. And indeede this dutie of making a Will, is a matter of great weight and importance; for it cuts off much hatred and contention in families, and staies many suits in law. It is not therefore alwaies a matter of indifferencie, which may be done or not done, as many falsely thinke, who vpon blind and finisier respects abstaine from making Wills, either because their wealth should not be knowne, or because they would haue their decaied estate to be concealed, or because they feare they shall die the sooner if the Will be once made.

Now though the making of Wills belongs to another place & profession, yet so much may be spoken here as the holy Ghost hath vttered in the word; and that I will reduce to certaine rules. The first is, that the Will must be made according to the law of nature, and the written word of God, and the good and wholesome positive lawes of that kingdom or countie whereof a man is a member. The will of God must be the rule of mans will. And therefore the will that is made against any of these, is faultie. The second is, that if goods euil gotten be not restored before, they must euen then be restored by Will, or by some other way. It is the practise of courteous men to bequeath their soules when they die to God, and their goods euil gotten to their children and friends; which in all equitie should be restored to them to whom they belong. Quest.

How if a mans conscience tell him that his goods be euil gotten, & he knows not where, or to whom to make restitution? Ans. The case is common, and the answer is this. When the partie is knowne whom thou hast wronged, restore to him particularly; if the partie be unknown or dead; restore to his executors or assignes, or to his next kinne; if there be none; yet keepe not goods euil gotten to thy selfe, but restore to God, that is, in way of recompence and ciuill satisfaction, bestow them on the Church or common-wealth. The third rule is, that heads of families must principally bestow their goods vpon their own children, and then that be of their owne kindred. This man (saith God to Abraham of Eleazar a stranger, Gen. 25. 4.) shall not be thine heir, but the sonne which shall come of thy loynes. And this was Gods commandment to the Israelites, that when any man dies, his sonne should bee his heir; & if he haue no son, then his daughter; & if he haue no daughter, then his brethren; and if he haue no brethren, then, his fathers brethren; and if there be none, then the next of his kinne whosoever. And Paul saith, Rom. 8. 17. If ye be sonnes, then also heires; and againe, 1 Tim. 5. 8. He that prouideth not for his owne, and specially for them of his household, is worse then an infidel. Therefore it is a fault for any man to alienate his goods or lands, wholly and finally from his blood and posteritie. It is a thing which the very law of nature it selfe hath condemned. Again, it is a fault to giue all to the eldest, and nothing in respect to the rest; as though the eldest were borne to bee gentlemen, and younger brethren borne to beare the wallet. Yet in equitie the eldest must haue more then any, euen because he is the eldest, and because stockes and families in their persons are to be maintained; and because there must alwaies be some that must be fit to doe speciall seruice in the peace of the common-wealth, or in the time of warre; which could not be, if goods should be equally parted to all. The fourth and last rule is, that no will is of force till the testator be dead, for so long as he is aliue hee may altare and change it. These rules must be remembered, because they are recorded in Scripture; the opening of other points and circumstances belongeth to the profession of the law.

The second dutie of the master of the family concerneth the soules of such as bee vnder his government: and that is to giue charge to them that they learne, beleue and obey the true religion, that is, the doctrine of saluation set down in the writings of the Prophets and Apostles. The Lord himselfe commendeth Abraham for this: I know Abraham, saith hee, that he will command his sonnes, and his household after him, that they keepe the way of the Lord, do righteousnesse and iudgement. And Dauid giues Salomon on his death-bed almost noble and solemne charge, the summe and substance whereof is, to know the God of his fathers, and to serue him: which being done, hee further commendeth him to God by prayer, for which purpose the 72. Psalm was made. This practise of his is to be followed of all. Thus gouernours, when they shall carefully dispose of their goods, and giue charge to their posterity touching the worship of God, shall greatly honour God, dying, as well as liuing.

Hitherto I haue treated of the two-fold preparation which is to goe before death; now follows the second part of dying well, namely, the disposition in death. The disposition is nothing else but a religious and holy behaviour, specially towards God, when we are in or nere the agonie or pang of death. This behaviour contains three speciall duties. The first is, to die in or by faith. To die by faith is, when a man in the time of death, doth with all his heart relieue himselfe wholly on Gods speciall loue and fauour and mercie in Christ, as it is reuealed in the word. And though there be no part of mans life void of iust occasions whereby we may put faith in practise, yet the speciall time of all is the pang of death, when friends, and riches, and pleasures, and the outward senses, and temporal life, and all earthly helpes forsake vs. For then true faith maketh vs to goe wholly out of our selues, and to despair of comfort and saluation in respect of any earthly thing; and with all the power and strength of the heart to rest on the pure mercie of God. This made Luther both thinke and say, that men were best Christians in death. An example of this faith wee haue in Dauid, who when he saw nothing before his eyes but present death, the people intending to stone him, comforted himselfe at that very instant (as the very text saith) in the Lord his God. And this comfort he reaped, in that by faith he applied vnto his owne soule the mercifull promises of God: as he testifieth of himselfe: Remember (saith he) the promise made to thy seruants, wherein thou hast caused mee to trust. It is my comfort in trouble: for thy promise hath quickened me. Again, My selfe failed and my heart also, but God is the strength of my heart; and my portion for euer. Now looke what Dauid here did, the same must every one of vs doe in the like case. When the Israelites in the wilderness were stung with fierie serpents, and lay at the point of death, they looked vp to the brazen serpent which was erected by the appointment of God, and were presently healed: euen so when any man fees death to draw nere, and his fierie sting to pierce the heart, hee must fixe the eye of a true and liuely faith vpon Christ, exalted and crucified on the crosse, which being done, hee shall by death enter into eternall life.

Now because true faith is no dead thing, it must be expressed by speciall actions; the principall whereof is Inuocation, whereby either prayer or thanksgiving is directed vnto God. When death had seized vpon the body of Isaac, he raised vp himselfe, and turning his face towards the beds head, leaned on the top of his staffe by reason of his feeblenesse, and prayed vnto God: which prayer of his was an excellent fruit of his faith. Iobs wife in the midst of his affliction said vnto him to very good purpose, Blesse God and die. I know and grant that the words are commonly translated otherwise, Curse God and die: but (as I take it) the former is the best. For it is not like that in so excellent a family, any one person, much lesse a matron and principall gouernour thereof, would giue such lewd and wretched counsell, which the most wicked man vpon earth hauing no more but the light of nature would not once giue, but rather much abhorre and condemne. And though Iob call her a foolish woman, yet he doth it not, because she went about to periuade him to blaspheme God; but because shee was of the minde of Iobs friends and thought that he stood too much in a conceit of his owne righteousness. Now the very meaning of her counsell is this: Blesse God, that is, husband, no doubt thou art by the extremity of thine affliction at deaths doore: therefore begin now at length to lay aside the great overweening which thou hast of thine owne righteousness, acknowledging the hand of God vpon thee for thy sinnes, confesse them vnto him, giue him the glory, pray for the pardon of them, and end thy daies. This counsell is very good and to bee followed of all: though it may bee the applying of it (as Iob well perceived) is mixed with folly.

Here it may be alledged, that in the pangs of death men want their senses and convenient vtterance, and that therefore they are vnable to pray. Ans. The very sighes, sobbes, and groanes of a repentant and beleeuing heart are prayers before God, euen as effectual as if they were vttered by the best voice in the world. Prayer stands in the affection of the heart, the voice is but an outward messenger thereof. God looks not vpon the speech, but vpon the heart. Dauid saith, God beares the desires of the poore. Again, that hee will fulfill the desires of them that feare him; yea their very teares are lowd and founding prayers in his eares.

Again, faith may otherwise be expressed by the Last words, which for the most part in them that haue truly serued God, are very excellent, and comfortable; and full of grace: some choice examples whereof I will rehearse for instructions sake, & for imitation. The last words of Iacob were these; whereby as a Prophet he foretold blessings & cursings vpon his children: and the principall among the rest were these: The sepper shall not depart from Iudas, and the law-giuer from betweene his feet, till Shilo come; and O Lord I haue waited for thy saluation. The last words of Moses are in his most excellent song let down. Deut. 32. And the last words of Dauid were these, The Spirit of the Lord spake by me, and his word was in my tongue: the God of Israel spake to me, the strength of Israel said, Beare rule ouer men, &c. The words of Zacharias the son of Iehoidas, when he was fainted, were, The Lord looke vpon it, and require it. The last words of our Saviour Christ when he was dying on the crosse, were most admirable, and stored with abundance of spiritual grace.

1. To his Father he said, Father forgive them, they know not what they doe. 2. To the thiefe, Verily, I say vnto thee, this day shalt thou bee with mee in Paradise. 3. To his mother, Mother behold thy sonne; and to Iohn, Behold thy mother. 4. And in his agonie, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? 5. And earnestly desiring our saluation, Thyrie. 6. And when he had made perfect satisfaction, It is finished. 7. And when body and soule were parting, Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit. The last words of Steuens were, 1. Behold, I see the heauen open, and the Sonne of man standing at the right hand of God. 2. Lord Iesus receive my spirit. 3. Lord, lay not this sinne to their charge. Of Polycarpe, Thou art a true God without lying, therefore in all things I praise thee and blesse thee, and glorifie thee by the eternal God, and high Priest Iesus Christ thine only beloved Sonne, by whom, and with whom, to thee and the holy Spirit, bee all glory now and for euer. Of Ignatius, I care not what kinde of death I die: I am the bread of the Lord, and must be ground with the teeth of Lyons; that I may be cleane bread for Christ who is the bread of life for me. Of Ambrose, I have not led my life among you, as if I were ashamed to live: neither do I fear death, because we have a good Lord. Of Augustine, 1. He is a great man that thinks it is a great matter, that trees and stones fall, and mortall men die. 2. Just art thou O Lord, and right become in thy iudgement. Of Bernard, 1. An admonition to his brethren that they would ground the anchor of their faith and hope in the safe and sure port of Gods mercie. 2. Because (saith he) as I suppose I cannot leave unto you any choise example of religion, I commend three things to be imitated of you, which I remember that I have observed in the race which I have runne as much as possibly I could. 1. I gave lesse heed to mine owne sense and reason, then to the sense and reason of other men. 2. When I was hurt, I sought no revenge on him that did the hurt. 3. I had care to give offence to no man, as if it fell out otherwise, I took it away as I could. Of Zwinglius, when in the field he was wounded under the chime with a spear: O what a happe is this? goe to, they may kill my bodie, but my soule they cannot. Of Oecolampadius, 1. An exhortation to the Ministers of the Church to maintaine the puritie of doctrine, to show forth an example of honest and godly conversation, to be constant and patient under the crosse. 2. Of himselfe. Where as I am charged to be a corrupter of the truth, I weigh it not, now I am going to the tribunal of Christ, and that with good conscience by the grace of God, and there it shall be manifest that I have not seduced the Church. Of this my saying and contestation, I leave you as witnesses, and I confirme it with this my last breath. 3. To his children, Love Gods Father: and turning himselfe to his kinsfolkes: I have bound you (saith he) with this contestation: you (which they here and I have desired) shall doe your endeavour, that these my children may be ready, and peaceable, and true. 4. To his friends: comming unto him, What shall I say unto you? Newes, I shall be shortly with Christ my Lord. 5. Being asked whether the light did not trouble him, touching his brest, there is light enough, saith he. 6. He rehearsed the whole 51. Psalm with deepe sighes from the bottome of his brest. 7. A little after: Save me Lord Jesus. Of Luther, My heavenly Father, God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, and God of all comfort, I give thee thanks that thou hast revealed unto me thy Sonne Jesus Christ, whom I have beleevd, whom I have professed, whom the Bishop of Rome, and the whole companie of the wicked persecutors and renegats: I pray thee my Lord Jesus Christ receive my poore soule: my heavenly Father, though I be taken from this life, and this body of mine is to be laid downe, yet I know certainly that I shall remaine with thee for ever, neither shall any be able to pull me out of thy hand. Of Hooper, O Lord Jesus, some of David have mercie on mee, and receive my soule. Of Annas Burgina, Forgive me not O Lord, lest I forsake thee. Of Melancthon, If it bee the will of God, I am willing to die, and I beseech him that he will graunt mee a joyfull departure. Of Caluin, 1. I held my tongue, because thou Lord hast done it. 2. I mourned as a dove, 3. Lord thou grindest mee to powder, but is sufficient mee because it is thine hand. Of Peter Martyr, That his body was weak, but his minde was well: that hee acknowledged no life or salvation, but only in Christ who was given of the Father to be a Redeemer of mankind: and when hee had confirmed this by testimonie of Scripture, hee added: This is my faith in which I will die: and God will destroy them that teach otherwise. This done, hee shooke hands with all and said, Farewell my brethren, & deare friends. It were easie to quote more examples, but these few may bee in stead of many, and the summe of all that godly men speake, is this: Some enlightened with a propheticall spirit foretell things to come, as the Patriarkes, Jacob and Joseph did: and there have bin some which by name have testified who should very shortly come after them; and who should remaine alive, and what should be their condition: some have shewed a wonderful memory of things past, as of their former life, and of the benefits of God; and no doubt it was given them to stirre up holy affections and thanksgiving to God: some againe rightly iudging of the change of their present estate for a better, doe reioyce exceedingly that they must be translated from earth to paradise: as Babylas Martyr of Antioch when his head was to be chopped off, Returne (saith he) O my soule unto thy rest, because the Lord hath blessed thee: because thou hast delivered my soule from death, mine eyes from teares, and my feete from falling, I shall walke before thee Je-hoahab in the land of the living. And some others speake of the vanitie of this life, of the imagination of the sorrowes of death, of the beginning of eternal life, of the comfort of the holy Ghost which they feele, of their departure unto Christ.

Quest. What must we thinke if in the time of death such speeches be wanting: and in the stead thereof idle talke be used. Ans. We must consider the kind of sickness wherof men die, whether it be more easie or violent: for violent sickness is usually accompanied with frenzies, and with vnseemely motions and gestures, which we are to take in good part even in this regard, because we our selues may bee in the like case.

Thus much of the first dutie, which is to die in faith: the second is to die in obedience: otherwise our death cannot be acceptable to God, because we seeme to come unto God of feare and constraint as slaves to a master, and not of lone as children to a father. Now to die in obedience is, when a man is willing and readie, and desirous to goe out of this world, whensoever God shall call him, and that without murmuring or repining, at what time, where, and when it shall please God. Whether we live or die, saith Paul, we doe it not to our selues but unto God: and therefore mans dutie is to be obedient to God in death as in life. Christ is our examples in this case, who in his agonie prayed, Father let this cup passe from me, yet with a submission, not my will, but thy will be done: teaching vs in the very pangs of death to resigne our selues to the good pleasure of God. When the Prophet tolde king Ezechiah of death, presently without all manner of grudging hee addressed himselfe to prayer. We are commaunded to present our selues unto God as free-will offerings, without any limitation of time, and therefore as well in death as in life. I conclude then, that we are to make as much conscience in performing obedience to God in suffering death, as we do of any thing in the course of our lives.

The third duty is to render vp our selues in to the hands of God, as the most faithfull keeper of all. This is the last dutie of a Christian, and it is prescribed vnto vs in the example of Christ vpon the crosse, who in the very pangs of death when the dissolution of body and soule drew on, said, Luke 23. 46. Father into thy hands I commend my spirit, & so gaue vp the ghost. The like was done by Stephen, who when hee was stoned to death, said, Act. 7. 59. Lord Jesus receive my spirit. And David in the very time being in danger of death, vsed the very same words that Christ vttered, Psal. 31. 5.

Thus wee see what be the duties which we are to performe in the very pangs of death that we may come to eternal life. Some men will haply say, if this be all to die in faith and obedience, and to surrender our selues into Gods hands, we will not greatly care for any preparation before-hand, nor trouble our selues much about the right manner of dying well: for we doubt not, but that when death shall come, wee shall be able to performe all the former duties with ease. Ans. Let no man deceive himselfe by any false persuasion, thinking with himself that the practise of the foresaid duties is a matter of ease; for ordinarily they are not, neither can they be performed in death, vnlesse there be much preparation in the life before. Hee that will die in faith, must first of all live by faith: and there is but one example in all the Bible of a man dying in faith, that lived without faith; namely, the theife vpon the crosse. The seruants of God that are endued with great measure of grace doe very hardly beleue in the time of affliction. Indeed when Job was afflicted hee said, though the Lord kill me, yet will I trust in him: yet afterward, his faith being ouercast with a cloud, hee saith, that God was become his enemy, and that hee had set him as a mark to be shot at, and sundrie times his faith was oppressed with doubting and distrust. How then that they that neuer lived by faith, nor inured themselves to beleue, be able in the pang of death to rest from the mercy of God? Again, he that would die in obedience, must first of all lead his life in obedience: he that hath lived in disobedience cannot willingly and in obedience appeare before the iudge when he is called by death the fergeant of the Lord; he dies indeede, but this is vpon necessity, because hee must yield to the order and course of nature, as other creatures doe. Thirdly, hee that would surrender his soule into the hands of God, must be resolved of two things: the one is, that God can the other is, that God will receive his soule into heauen, and there preferre it till the last iudgement. And none can be resolved of this, except hee haue the spirit of God to certifie his conscience that he is redeemed, iustificd, sanctified by Christ, and shall be glorified. He that is not thus persuaded, dare not render vp and present his soule unto God. When David said, Psal. 31. 5. Lord into thy hands I commend my spirit, what was the reason of this boldnes in him? surely nothing else but the perswasion of faith, as the next words import: for thou hast redeemed me, O Lord God of truth. And thus it is manifest that no man ordinarily can performe these duties dying, that hath not performed them liuing.

This being so, I do againe renew my former exhortation, beseeching you that yee would practise the duties of preparation in the course of your liues, leading them daily in faith and obedience, and from time to time commending your selues into the hand of God, and casting all your works vpon his prouidence. They which haue done this, haue made most happy and blessed endes. Enoch by faith walked with God, as one that was alwaies in his presence leading an vpright & godly life, and the Lord took him away that he should not see death. And this which befall Enoch, shall after a sort befall them also that live in faith and obedience: because death shall be no death, but a sleep vnto them, and no enemy, but a friend to bodie & soule. On the contrary, let vs consider the wretched and miserable endes of them that hath spent their daies in their sinnes without keeping faith and good conscience. The people of the old world were drowned in the flood: the filthie Sodomites and Gomorrians were destroyed with fire from heauen: Dathan and Abiram with the companie of Core were swallowed vp of the earth: Core himselfe (as it seemes by the text) being burnt with fire: wicked Saul, and Achishophel, and Iudas destroyed themselves: Herod is eaten vp of wormes, & gaue vp the ghost: Iudas the Apostata smitten with a dart in the field, dyed casting vp his blood into the aire, and blaspheming the name of Christ. Arius the hereticke dyed vpon the steele, scouring forth his very entralles. And this very affords store of like examples. Hoffmeister a great Papist, as he was going to the Council of Ratisbone to dispute against the defenders of the Gospel, was suddenly in his journey preuented by the hand of God, and miserably died with horrible roaring, and crying out. In the Vniuersitie of Louane, Guar-lanus a learned Papist falling sicke, when hee perceived no way with him but death, hee fell into a miserable agonie and perturbation of spirit, crying out of his sinnes, how miserably hee had liued; and that he was not able to abide the iudgement of God; and so casting out words of miserable desperation said, his sins were greater then they could be pardoned, & in that desperation ended his dayes. Iacobus Latomus of the same Vniuersitie of Louaine; after hee had bene at Brussels, and there thinking to doe a great act against Luther and his fellows, made an oration before the Emperour so foolishly and ridiculously that hee was laughed to scorne almost of the whole court: then returning from thence to Louaine againe, in his publike lecture hee fell into open madness, uttering such words of desperation and blasphemous impietie, that other Diuines which were present, were faine to carrie him away as hee was raving, and to shut him into a close chamber. From that time to his very last breath, hee had neuer any thing else in his mouth; but that hee was damned and reiect of God, and that there was no hope of saluation for him, because that wittingly and against his knowledge hee withstood the manifest truth of Gods word. Crescentius the Popes Legate & vicegerent in the Council of Trent, was sitting all the day long vntill darke night in writing of letters to the Pope: after his labour when night was come, thinking to refresh himselfe, hee began to rise, and at his rising, beholde there appeared to him a mighty black dog of an huge bignes; his eyes flaming with fire, and his eares hanging downe well neere to the ground, which began to enter in and stright to come towards him, and so to couch vnder the board. The Cardinall not a little amazed at the sight thereof, somewhat recovering himselfe called to his seruants which were in the outward chamber next by, to bring a candle and to seeke for the dog. But when the dogge could not be found there, nor in any other chamber about, the Cardinall thereupon stricken with a suddaine conceit of minde, immediately fell into such a sicknesse whereof his Physicians which hee had about him could not with all their industrie and cunning cure him; and thereupon hee died. Stenen Gardiner, when a certaine Bishop came vnto him, and put him in minde of Peter denying his master, answered again, that hee had denied with Peter, but neuer repented with Peter, and so (to vse Mt. Foxes words) tinklingly and vnrepentantly died. More examples might be added, but these shall suffice.

Againe, that we may be further inducd to the practise of these duties, let vs call to minde the vncertainty of our daies; though we now liue, yet who can say that hee shall be aliu the next day, or the next houre? No man hath a lease of his life. Now marke, as death leaues a man, so shall the last iudgement finde him: and therefore if death take him away vnprepared, eternall damnation followes without recourse. If a theife bee brought from prison either to the barre to be arraigned before the iudge, or to the place of execution, hee will bewaile his misdeemeanour past, and promise all reformation of life; so hee it, hee might bee deliuered, though hee bee the most arrant theife that euer was. In this case we are as fellons or theues: for we are every day going to the barre of Gods iudgement, there is no stayor standing in the way, euen as the shippe in the sea continues on his course day and night whether the mariners be sleeping or waking; therefore let vs all prepare our selues, and amend our liues betime, that in death we may make a blessed ende. Ministers of the Gospel doe daily call for the performance of this dutie: but where almost shall wee finde the practise and obedience of it in mens liues and conseruation? Alas, alas, to lend our eares for the space of an houre to heare the will of God is common: but to giue heart and hand to doe the same, is rare. And the reason hereof is at hand: wee are all most grieuous sinners, and every sinner in the tearmes of Scripture is a foole, and a principall part of this folly is to care for the things of this world, and to neglect the kingdom of heauen, to provide for the body, and not for the soule, to cast and fore-cast how we may liue in wealth and honour and ease, and not to vse the least fore-cast to die well. This folly our Saviour Christ noted in the rich man that was careful to enlarge his barnes, but had no care at all for his ende, or for the saluation of his soule. Such an one was Achitophel wth c (as the Scripture tearmes him, 2. Sam. 17. 23.) was as the very oracle of God for counsell, being a man of great wisdom and forecatt in the matters of the common wealth, and in his owne private worldly affaires: and yet for all this hee had not so much as common sense and reason to consider how hee might die the death of the righteous, & come to life euerlasting. And this folly the holy Ghost hath noted in him. For the text saith, 2. Sam. 17. 23. when hee saw that his counsell was despised, hee sadled his asse, and rose and went home into his citie, and put his household in order, and went and hanged himselfe. And the fiue foolish virgins contented themselves with the blasing lampes of bare profession, neuer seeking for the horne of lasting oyle of true and liuely faith, that it might furnish and trim the lampe both in life and death. But let vs in the feare of God, cast off this damnable folle, first of all seeking the kingdom of God and his righteousnesse, and leading our liues in faith and obedience, that we may die accordingly.

And thus much of the first point of doctrine, namely that there is a certaine way whereby a man may die well: now I come to the second. Whereas therefore Salomon saith, Ecclesiast. 7. 3. that the day of death is better then the day of birth, wee are further taught, that such as truly beleue themselves to bee the children of God, are not to feare death ouer-much. I say ouer-much; because they must partly feare it, and partly not. Feare

it they must for two causes: the first, because death is the destruction of humane nature in a mans owne selfe and others: and in this respect Christ feared it without sinne: and wee must not feare it otherwise then we feare sickness, and poeury, and famine with other sorrows of body and mind, which God will not haue vs to despise or lightly regard, but to feele with some paine, because they are corrections and punishments for sinne. And hee doth therefore lay vpon vs paines and torments, that they may be feared and eschewed: and that by eschewing them we might further learne to eschew the cause of them, which is sinne: and by experience in feeling of paine, acknowledge that God is a iudge and enemy of sinne, and is exceeding angry with it. The second cause of the feare of death, is the losse of the Church or Common-wealth, when we or others are deprived of them which were indeede or might haue bin an helpe, stay, and comfort to either of them, and whose death hath procured some publike or private losse.

Againe, we are not to feare death, but to be glad of it, and that for many causes. First of all, in it we haue occasion to shew our subiection & obedience which we owe vnto God, when hee calls vs out of this world, as Christ said, Father, not my will but thy will be done. Secondly, all sinne is abolished by death, and we then cease to offend God any more as wee haue done. Thirdly, the dead bodie is brought into a better condition then euer it was in this life, for by death it is made insensible, and by that means it is freed from all the miseries and calamities of this life; and it ceaseth to be either an active or passive instrument of sinne, whereas in the life time it is both. Fourthly, it giues the soule passage to rest, life, & celestiall glorie in which we shall see God as he is, perfectly know him, and praise his name for euer, keeping without intermission an eternall habitation: therefore Paul saith, I desire to be dissolved and to with Christ, for that is best of all. Fifthly, God executes his iudgements vpon the wicked, & purgeth his Church by death. Now in all these respects godly men haue cause not to feare and sorrow, but to reioyce in their owne death, and the death of others.

Thirdly, if the day of death be so excellent, yea a day of happines, then it is lawful to desire death, and men doe not alwaies sinne in wishing for death. Paul saith, Phi 1. 23. I desire to be dissolved: and againe, Rom. 7. 24. O miserable man that I am, who shall deliuer me from this body of death? Yet this desire must not be simple, but restrained with certaine respects: which are these: First, death must be desired so farre forth as it is a meane to free vs from the corruption of our nature. Secondly, as it is a meane to bring vs to the immediate fellowship of Christ and God himselfe in heauen. Thirdly, death may be lawfully desired in respect of the troubles and miseries of this life, two causes being obscured; the first, that this desire must not be immoderate: the second, it must be ioyned with submission and subiection to the good pleasure of God. If either of these be wanting, the desire is faulty, and therefore Iob, and Jeremie, and Iohna failed herein because they desired death being carried away with impatience.

On the contrary also a man may desire a continuance of life. Ezechias prayed and desired to liue; when he heard the message of present death, that he might doe seruice to God. And Paul desired to liue in regard of the Philippians, that hee might further their faith, though in regard of himselfe to die was advantage to him.

Lastly, if death ioyned with reformation of life be so blessed, then the death of the vnbeleeuing and vnrepentant sinner is euerie way cursed and most horrible. Reasons are these: First, it is the destruction of nature, and the wages of sin. Secondly, in it there is no comfort of the spirit to be found, no mitigation of paine, and no good thing that may counteruaile the miseries thereof. Thirdly, that which is the most fearefull thing of all, bodily death is the beginning of eternall death, desperation, and infernall torment; without hope of deliuerance. Therefore as I began to I end, haue care to liue well, and die well.

An addition of things that came to my minde afterward.

THe last combat with the diuell in the pang of death, is oftentimes most dangerous of al. For then he will not vrge men to desperatio, knowing that by this meanes hee shall stirre them vp to resist; but hee labours with them that they would not resist him when he assaults them, and by this meanes hee indeauours to extinguish hope. And this is not done in any other temptation in which faith or hope alone are impugned, whereas in this they are both impugned together. This must be thought vpon, for when the diuels temptations is, not to resist his temptation; it is most deceitfull of all: and it is more easie to overcome the enimie that compels vs to fight, then him that dissuades vs from it.

The temptation of M. Iohn Kneze, in the time of his death is worth the marking. He lay on his death-bed silent for the space of foure houres, very often giuing great sighes, sobbes, and groances, so as the standers by well perceived that he was troubled with some grievous temptation, and when at length he was raised in his bed, they asked him how hee did, to whom he answered thus; that in his life time he had indured many combates and conflicts with Satan, but that now most mightily the

A roaring lyon had assaulted him: often (saide he) before he set my sinnes before mine eyes; often he vrge me to desperation, often he laboured to intangle me with the delights of the world; but being vanquished by the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God, hee could not preuaile. But now hee assaults me another way: for the wily serpent would persuade mee that I shall merit eternall life for my fidelity in my ministerie. But blessed bee God which brought to my minde such Scriptures whereby I might quench the fierie darts of the diuell, which were, What hast thou that thou hast not receiued? and, By the grace of God, I am that I am: and, Not I but the grace of God in me: and thus being vanquished he departed.

B When thou art tempted of Satan and feest no way to escape, euen plainly close vp thine eyes: and answer nothing; but commend thy cause to God. This is a principall point of Christian wisdom which we must follow in the houre of death.

If thy flesh tremble and feare to enter into another life, and doubt of saluation: if thou yeeld to these things, thou hurteest thy selfe: therefore close thine eyes as before, and say with S. Stephen, Lord Iesus into thy hands I commend my spirit; and then certainly Christ will come vnto thee with all his angels, and be the guider of thy way. Luther.

CHAP. I.

What Conscience is.

Conscience is a part of the vnderstanding in all reasonable creatures, determining of their particular actions either with them or against them.

I say Conscience is a part of the vnderstanding, and I shew it thus: God in framing of the soule, placed in it two principal faculties, Vnderstanding and Will. Vnderstanding is that facultie in the soule, whereby we see reason: and it is the more principall part serving to rule and order the whole man; and therefore it is placed in the soule to be as the waggoner in the waggon. The will is another facultie whereby we doe will or nill any thing, that is, choose or refuse it. With the will is ioynd sundry affections, as ioy, sorrow, loue, hatred, &c. whereby wee embrace or eschew that which is good or euill. Now, conscience is not placed in the affections nor will, but in the vnderstanding: because the actions thereof stand in the use of reason. Vnderstanding againe hath two parts. The first is that which stands in the view and contemplation of truth and fallhood: and goes no further. The second is that which stands in the view and consideration of euery particular action, to search whether it be good or badde. The first is called the Theorickall, the second the practicall vnderstanding. And vnder the latter is conscience to bee comprehended: because his propriety is to iudge of the goodnesse or badnesse of things or actions done.

Again, I say that Conscience is a part of the minde or vnderstanding, to shew that conscience is not a bare knowledge or iudgement of the vnderstanding (as b) men commonly write; but a naturall power, faculty, or created qualitie, from whence knowledge and iudgement proceede as effects. This the Scriptures confirme, in that they ascribe sundrie workes & actions to conscience, as accusing, excusing, comforting, terrifying: which actions could not thence proceede, if conscience were no more but an action or acte of the minde. Indeede I grant, it may be taken for a kinde of actuall knowledge in the minde of man: but to speake properly, this knowledge must proceede of a power in the soule, the propriety whereof is to take the principles and conclusions of the minde and apply them, and by applying either to accuse or excuse. This is the ground of all, and this I take to be conscience. If it be objected that conscience cannot be a naturall power, because it may be lost: I answer, if conscience be lost, it is only in respect of the use thereof, as reason is lost in the drunken ken man, and not otherwise.

I adde, that the proper subjects of conscience are reasonable creatures, that is, men and Angels. Hereby conscience is excluded, first of all from brut beasts: for though they haue life & sense, and in many things some shadowes of reason, yet because they want true reason, they want conscience also. Secondly, from God the creator, who being righteous in himselfe, needeth not conscience, to order and gouerne his actions. And whereas Peter saith, 1. Pet. 2. 19. that men must endure grieue wrongfully for conscience of God; his meaning is not to shew that God hath conscience, but that men are to suffer many wrongs, because their conscience bindeth them, in so doing to obey Gods will, which conscience directly respecteth.

And I say that conscience is in all reasonable creatures, that none might imagine that some men by nature haue conscience in them, some none at all. For as many men as there are, so many consciences there be: and euery particular man hath his owne particular conscience.

The proper end of conscience is, to determine of things done. And by this conscience is distinguished from all other gifts of the minde, as intelligence, opinion, science, faith, prudence. Intelligence, simply conceives a thing to be or not to be; opinion, iudgeth a thing to be probable or contingent: science, iudgeth to be certain and sure; faith, is a perswasion, whereby we beleue things that are not: prudence, discerneth what is meete to be done, what to be left vndone, but conscience goes further yet then all these: for it determines or giues sentence of things done, by saying vnto vs, This was done, this was not done, this may be done, this may not be done; this was well done, this was ill done.

The things that conscience determines of, are a mans owne actions: his owne actions, I say. To be certain what another man hath said or done, it is commonly called knowledge: but for a man to be certain what he himselfe hath done or said, that is conscience. Again, conscience meddles not with generals, only it deales in particular actions, and that not in some few, but in all.

The manner of consciences determination, is to set downe his iudgement either with the creature, or against it: I adde this clause, because conscience is of a diuine nature, and is a thing placed of God in the midst betwene him and man, as an arbitrator to giue sentence, and to pronounce either with man or against man vnto God. For otherwhiles, it consents and speaks with God against the man in whom it is placed: otherwhiles againe it consents with him, and speaks for him be-

SIR WILLIAM PIRTAM KNIGHT, LORD

CHIEFFE BARON OF HER MAIESTIES

Exchequer, Grace and Peace.

Right Honourable, it cannot be unknowne to your selfe, or to any man of a daies experience, that it is thought a small matter to commit a sinne, or, lie in sins against a mans owne conscience. For many when they are tolde of their dutie in this point, reply and say, What, tell you me of Conscience? Conscience was hangd long agoe. But vntill they take better heede, and prevent the danger by repentance, hangd conscience will renew and become both gibbet and hangman to them, either in this life, or the life to come. For Conscience is appointed of God to declare and put in execution his iust iudgement against sinners: and as God cannot possibly be overcome of man, so neither can the iudgement of Conscience being the iudgement of God, be wholly extinguished. Indeepe Satan for his part goes about by all meanes he can, to benumme the conscience: but all is nothing. For as the sicke man, when hee seemes to sleepe and take his rest, is inwardly full of troubles: so the benummed and drouse conscience wants not his secret pangs and terrours, and when it shall be roused by the iudgement of God, it waxeth cruell and fierce like a wilde beast. Again, when a man sines against his conscience, as much as in him lieth, he plungeth himselfe into the gulf of desperation: for euery wound of the conscience, though the smart of it be little felt, is a deadly wound: and he that goes on to sinne against his conscience, stabbes and wounds it often in the same place: and all renewed wounds (as we know) are hardly or neuer cured. Thirdly, he that lieth in sines against his conscience, cannot call vpon the name of God: for a guiltie conscience makes a man flee from God. And Christ saith, God heareth not sinners, vnderstanding by sinners, such as goe on in their owne waies against conscience: and what can be more dolefull then to be barred of the imocation of Gods name? Lastly, such persons after the last iudgement, shall haue not onely their bodies in torment, but the wormes in their soule and conscience shall neuer die: and what will it profit a man to gaine the whole world by doing things against his owne conscience, and lose his owne soule?

Now, that men on this manner carelesse touching conscience, may see their folly and the great danger thereof, and come to amendment, I haue penned this small Treatise: and according to the ancient and laudable custome, as also according to my long intended purpose, I now dedicate and present the same to your Lordship. The reasons which haue emboldened me to this enterpryse (all by-respects excluded) are these: Generall doctrine in point of religion is darke and obscure, and very hardly practised without the light of particular examples: and therefore the doctrine of conscience, by due right pertaines to a man of conscience; such an one as your Lordship is, who (others of like place not excepted) haue obtained this mercie as Gods hande keepe faith and good conscience. Again, considering that iustice and conscience haue alwaies been friends: I am inducd to thinke that your Lordship being publickly set apart for the execution and maintenance of ciuill iustice, will approoue and accept a Treatise propounding rules and precepts of conscience. Thus therefore craving pardon for my boldnesse, and hoping of your Lordships good acceptance, I commend you to God, and to the word of his grace. 1596. Iune 14.

Your Lordships to command,

fore the Lord. And hence comes one reason of the name of conscience. Scire, to know, is of one man alone by himselfe: and conscire is, when two at the least know some one secret thing either of them knowing it together with the other. Therefore the name conscientia, or Conscientia, Conscience, is that thing that combines two together, and makes them partners in the knowledge of one and the same secret. Now man and man, or man and Angel cannot be combined; because they cannot know the secret of any man unless it be revealed to them: it remains therefore that this combination is only betwixt man and God. God knows perfectly all the doings of man, though they be never to hid and concealed: and man by a gift given him of God, knows together with God, the same things of himselfe: and this gift is named Conscience.

CHAP. II.

Of the duties of Conscience.

The proper actions or duties of conscience are two-fold: to give testimony, or to give judgement. Rem. 1. 15.

Conscience gives testimony by determining that a thing was done, or it was not done. Rem. 2. 15. Their conscience also bearing witness. 2 Cor. 1. 12. Our rejoycing is the testimony of our conscience, that in, &c.

Here we must consider three things: I. of what things conscience beares witness. II. in what manner. III. how long.

For the first, conscience beares witness of our thoughts, of our affections, of our outward actions.

That it beares witness of our secret thoughts, it appears by the solemn protestation which at sometime men vs; In my conscience I neuer thought it: whereby they signifie that they thinke some thing or they think it not, and that their consciences can tell what they thinke. Neither must this seeme strange. For there be two actions of the vnderstanding, the one is simply, which barely conceiveth or thinketh this or that: the other is reflecting or doubting of the former, whereby a man conceives or thinks with himselfe what he thinks. And this action properly pertains to the conscience.

The mind thinks a thought, now conscience goes beyond the mind, and knowes what the mind thinks, so as if a man would goe about to hide his fuilt thoughts from God, his conscience as it were another person within him, shall discover all. By means of this second action, conscience may beare witness euen of thoughts, & from hence also it seemes to borrow his name, because conscience is a science or knowledge ioyned with another knowledge: for by it I conceiue and know what I know.

Again, conscience beares witness what the wils, and affections of men be in every matter. Rem. 9. 1. I say the truth in Christ, I lie not, my Conscience beares me witness by the holy Ghost, that I have great heaviness and continuall sorrow in my heart: for I could wish myselfe to be separated from Christ for my brethren.

Lastly, it witnesseth what be mens actions, Eccles. 7. 24. Oftentimes also thine heart knoweth, (that is, conscience witnesseth) that thou like-wise hast cursed others.

The manner that conscience vseth in giving testimony stands in 2. things. First it obiects & takes notice of all things that we do: secondly, it doth inwardly and secretly with the heart, tell vs of them all. In this respect it may fitly be compared to a Notarie, or a Register that hath alwaies the peme in his hand, to note and record whatsoever is said or done: who also because he keeps the rolles and records of the court, can tell what hath bin said or done many hundred yeares past.

Touching the third point, How long conscience beares witness: it doth continually; not for a minute, or a day, or a moneth, or yeare, but for euer; when a man dies, conscience dieth not: when the body is rotten in the graue, conscience liueth & is safe and sound: & when we shall rise againe, conscience shall come with vs to the barre of Gods judgement, either to accuse or excuse vs before God. Rem. 2. 15, 16. Their conscience beares witness at the day when God shall iudge the secrets of men by Iesus Christ.

By this first dutie of conscience, we are to learne three things. The first, that there is a God: and we may be led to the sight of this euen by comon reason. For conscience beares witness of what? Of thy particular doings. But against whom or with whom doth it give testimony? thou maiest feeles in thy heart that it doth it either with thee or against thee. And to whom is it a witness? to men or Angels? that cannot be, for they cannot heare the voice of conscience they cannot receiue consciences testimony, may they cannot see what is in the heart of man. It remains therefore that there is a spirituall substance, most wise, most holy, most mighty, that sees all things, to whom conscience beares record, & that is God himselfe. Let Atheists barke against this as long as they will: they haue that in them that will conuince them of the truth of the Godhead, will they nill they, either in life or death.

Secondly we learne that God doth watch ouer all men by a speciall providence. The master of a prison is knowne by this to haue care ouer his prisoners, if hee fend keepers with them to watch them and to bring them home againe in time conuenient: and so Gods care to man is manifest in this, that when he created man and placed him in the world, he gaue him conscience to bee his keeper, to follow him alwaies at his heeles, and to dogge him (as we say) and to prie into his actions, and to beare witness of them all.

Thirdly, hence we may obserue Gods goodness & loue to man. If he do any thing amisse, he sets his conscience first of all to tell him of it secretly if th he amend, God forgives it: it not, then afterward conscience must openly accuse him for it at the barre of Gods judgement before all the Saints & Angels in heauen.

The second worke of conscience is to give judgement of thing done.

To give judgement is to determine, that a thing is wel done or ill done. Herein conscience is like to a iudge that holdeth an assise, & takes notice of inditments, and causeth the most notorious malefactor that is, to hold vp his hand at the barre of his judgement. Nay it is (as it were) a litle God setting in the middle of mens hearts, arrainging them in this life as they shal be arrainged for their offences at the Tribunal feare of the enerliuing God in the day of judgement. Wherefore the temporarie judgement that is giuen by the conscience is nothing els but a beginning, or a fore-runner of the last judgement.

Hence we are admonished to take speciall heed that nothing past lie heauie vpon vs, and that we charge not our conscience in the time to come with any matter. For if our conscience accuse vs, God will much more condemne vs, faith S. Iohn. 1. Joh. 3. 20. because hee seeth all our actions most clearly, and iudgeth them more severely then conscience can. It shall bee good therefore for all men to labour that they may pay with Paul. 1. Cor. 4. 4. I know nothing by myselfe, that they may stand before God without blame for euer.

Here we must consider two things: first, the cause that makes conscience giue judgement: secondly, the manner how.

The cause is that binder of the conscience. The binder is that thing whatsoever, which hath power & authority ouer conscience to order it.

To bind, is to vrge, cause, and constraine it in euery action either to accuse for sinne, or to excuse for well doing: or to say, this may be done, or it may not be done.

That we may know what this phrase meaneth (to be bound in conscience) we must in mind consider conscience apart by it selfe from the binding power of Gods commandment. For then it hath liberty and is not bound either to accuse nor excuse, but is apt to doe either of them indifferently: but when the binding power is set once ouer the conscience, then in euery action it must needs either accuse or excuse: euen as a man in a city or towne hauing his libertie, may goe vp and downe or not goe, where and when hee will; but if his body be attached by the magistrate and imprisoned, then his former libertie is restrained, hee is bound and can goe vp and downe but within the prison, or some other allowed place.

The binder of conscience, is either proper or improper. Proper is that thing, which hath absolute and soueraine power in it selfe to binde the conscience. And that is the word of God, written in the booke of the old and new Testament. Reason. I. He which is the Lord of conscience, by his word and lawes binds conscience: but God is the only Lord of confi-

ence: because he once created it, and he alone gouernes it and none but he knowes it: therefore his word & lawes only binde conscience properly. II. He which hath power to sinne or destroy the soule for the keeping and breaking of his lawes, hath absolute power to bind the soule and conscience by the same lawes: but the first is true of God alone, Iames 4. 12. There is one Law-giuer which is able to sinne & destroy. Esa. 32. 22. The Lord is our iudge, the Lord is our lawgiuer, the Lord is our king, and he will save vs. Therefore the word of God alone by an absolute and soueraine power binds conscience. Because this point is cleare of it selfe, further prooffe is needlesse.

Hence we are taught fundrie points of instruction. I. Such as are ignorant among vs must labour to get knowledge of Gods word, because it binds conscience. Neither will the plea of ignorance serue for excuse: because, whether we know Gods lawes or know them not, they still binde vs. And we are bound not only to do them, but whē we know them not, we are further bound not to be ignorant of them, but to seeke to know them. If we had no more finnes, our ignorance were sufficient to condemne vs. II. Gods word is to be obeyed, though wee should offend all men, yea lose all mens fauour, and suffer the greatest damage that may be, euen the losse of our liues. And the reason is at hand: because Gods word hath this prerogative to bridle, binde, and restrain the conscience. III. Whatsoeuer we enterprife or take in hand, we must first search whether God giue vs libertie in conscience, and warrant to doe it. For if we do otherwise, conscience is bound presently to charge vs of sinne before God. Lastly, we doe here see how dangerous the case is of all Time-fervers that will liue as they list, and be of no certen religion till differences and dissensions therein be ended, and they haue the determination of a generall Councell: for whether these things come to passe or no, certen it is that they are bound in conscience to receiue and beleue the ancient, Prophetical, and Apostolicall doctrine touching the true worship of God, and the way to life euertlasting, which is the true religion. The same is to be said of al drowlie Protestants and luke-warme gospellers, that vs religion not with that care and conscience they ought, but onely then and so farre forth as it serues for their turnes, commonly neglecting or despising the assemblies where the word is preached: & seldome frequenting the Lords table vnles it be at Easter. Like filly wretches they neither see nor feeles the constraining power, that Gods word hath in their consciences.

Gods word is either Law, or Gospel. The Law is a part of Gods word of things to bee done, or to be left vndone. And it is three-fold; Morall, Iudiciall, Ceremoniall. Morall law concerns duties of loue, partly to God and partly towards our neighbour: it is contained in the Decalogue or ten commandments, dements; and it is the very law of nature written in all mens hearts (for substance, though not for the manner of propounding) in the creation of man: and therefore it bindes the consciences of all men at all times, even of blind and ignorant persons that neither know the most of it, nor care to know it. Yet here must be remembered three exceptions or cautions. I. When two commandments of the morall law are opposite in respect of vs; so as we cannot do them both at the same time; & the lesser commandment gives place to the greater, and doth not binde or constrain for that instant. Example. I. God commands one thing, and the magistrate commands the flat contrary; in this case which of these two commandments is to be obeyed, (b) Honor God, or, Honor the Magistrate? the answer is, that the latter must give place to the former, and the former alone in this case must be obeyed: Mat. 23. 1. Whether it is right in the sight of God to obey you rather than God, judge ye. II. The fourth commandment prescribes rest on the Sabbath day: now it falls out that at the same time a whole towne is set on fire, and the sixth commandment requires our helpe in saving our neighbours life and goods. Now of these two commandments which must be obeyed? for both cannot. The answer is, that the fourth commandment at this time is to give place, & the sixth commandment alone bindes the consciences so as then (if need should require) a man might labour all the day without offence to God. Mat. 9. 13. I will have mercy and not sacrifice. And the rule must not be omitted, That charitie towards our neighbour is subordinate to the love of God, and therefore must give place to it. For this cause the commandment concerning charitie must give place to the commandment concerning love to God: and when the case so falls out, we must either offend our neighbour or God, we must rather offend our neighbour than God.

§. 2. 1. Of the morall binding.

§. 1. Of the testimony of conscience.

II. Caution. When God gives some particular commandment to his people, therein dispensing with some other commandment of the morall law, for that time it bindes not. For even the morall commandment, must be conceived with this condition, Except God command otherwise. Example. I. The sixth commandment is, Thou shalt not kill: but God gives a particular commandment to Abraham; Abraham offer thy Son Isaac in sacrifice to me. And this latter commandment at that instant did bind Abraham; and he is therefore commended for his obedience to it. II. And when God commanded the children of Israel to compass Jerico seven daies, and therefore on the Sabbath: the fourth commandment prescribing the sanctifying of rest on the Sabbath, for that instant and in that action did not bind conscience.

III. Caution. One and the same commandment in some things binds the conscience more straightly, & in doing some other things less, Gal. 6. 10. Doe good to all men, but especially to them which are of the household of faith. Hence it ariseth, that though all finnes be mortal and deserve eternall death, yet all are not equal, but some more grievous than others.

Judiciall lawes of Moses are all such as prescribe order for the execution of iustice and iudgement in the common wealth. They were specially given by God, and directed to the Iewes; who for this very cause were bound in conscience to keepe them all; and if the common wealth of the Iewes were now standing in the old estate, no doubt they should continue still to bind as before.

But touching other nations and specially Christian Common wealths in these daies, the case is otherwise. Some are of opinion, that the whole iudiciall law is wholly abolished, and some againe run to the other extreme, holding that iudiciall lawes bind Christians as straightly as Iewes: but no doubt they are both wide; and the safest course is to keepe the meane betweene both. Therefore the iudiciall lawes of Moses according to the substance and scope thereof must be distinguished in which respect they are of two sorts. Some of them are lawes of (c) particular equitie, some of (d) common equitie. Lawes of particular equitie, are such as prescribe iustice according to the particular estate and condition of the Iewes Common-wealth and to the circumstances thereof; time, place, persons, things, actions. Of this kind was the law, that the brother should raise up seede to his brother, and many such like: and none of them bind vs, because they were framed and tempered to a particular people.

Judiciall lawes of common equitie, are such as are made according to the lawe or infinit of nature common to all men: & these in respect of their substance, binde the consciences not only of the Iewes, but also of the Gentiles: for they were not given to the Iewes, as they were Iewes, that is, a people received into the covenant about all other nations, brought from Egypt to the land of Canaan, of whom the Messias according to the flesh wasto come; but they were given to them as they were mortal men, subject to the order and lawes of nature as all other nations are. Again, iudiciall lawes, so farre forth as they have in them the generall or common equitie of the law of nature are morall; and therefore binding in conscience, as the morall law.

A iudiciall law may be knowne to be a law of common equitie, if either of these two things be found in it. First, if wise men not only among the Iewes, but also in other nations, have by naturall reason and conscience iudged the same to be equal, iust, and necessary, and without have iustified their iudgement by enacting lawes for the common wealths, the same in substance with sundry of the iudiciall lawes given to the Iewes: And the Roman Emperors among the rest, have done this most excellently, as will appeare by conferring their laws with the lawes of God. Secondly, a iudiciall hath common equity, if it serve directly to expaine and confirme any of the ten precepts of the Decalogue; or, if it serve directly to maintaine and vphold any of the three estates, of the family, the Common-wealth, the Church. And whether this be or not it will appeare, if we do but consider the matter of the law, & the reasons or considerations vpon which the Lord was mooved to give the same unto the Iewes. Now to make the point in hand more plaine, take an example or two. It is a iudiciall law of God that murderers should be put to death: now the question is, whether this law for substance bee the common equitie of nature binding the conscience of Christians or no? and the answer is, that without further doubting it is so. For first of all, this law hath bin by common consent of wise law-givers, enacted in many countries and kingdomes besides the Iewes. It was the law of the Egyptians, and of old Grecians, of Draco, of Numa, and of many of the Romane Emperours. Secondly, this law serves directly to maintaine obedience to the sixth commandment: and the consideration vpon which the law was made is so weightie, that without it a common-wealth cannot stand. The murderers blood must be shed (saith the Lord, Num. 35. 33, 34.) because the whole land is defiled with blood, and remaineth uncleansed till his blood be shed. Again, it was a iudiciall law among the Iewes, that the adulterer and adulteresse should die the death: now let the question be whether this law concerne other nations, as being derived from the common law of nature: and it seems to be so. For first, wise men by the light of reason and naturall conscience have iudged this punishment equall and iust. Isaiah before this iudiciall law was given by Moses, appointed Tamar his daughter in law to be burnt to death for playing the whoore. 2. Kings 24. 22. Echad and Zedechias because they committed adulterie with their neighbours wives. By Dracens law among the Grecians this sinne was death, and also by the law of the Romanes. Again, this law serves directly to maintaine necessary obedience to the seventh commandment: and the considerations vpon which the law was given are perpetual, and serve to vphold the common wealth, Leuit. 20. 22. Ye (saith the Lord) shall keepe all my ordinances and my iudgements (the law of adulterie being one of them.) Now marke the reasons, 1. Left the land pure you out. 2. For the same finnes I have abhorred the nations.

The Ceremoniall law is that which prescribes rites and orders in the outward worship of God.

It must be considered in three times. The first is the time before the coming and death of Christ: the second, the time of publishing the Gospel by the Apostles: the third, the time after the publishing of the Gospel.

In the first, it did binde the consciences of the Iewes, and the obedience of it was the true worship of God: But it did not then binde the conscience of the Gentiles: for it was the partition wall betweene them and the Iewes. And it did continue to binde the Iewes till the very death and ascension of Christ. For then the hand-writing of ordinances which was against vs, was nailed on the crosse and cancelled. And when Christ saith, that the Law and the Prophets endured till Iohn, Luk. 16. 16. his meaning is not, the ceremoniall law ended then: but that things foretold by the Prophets, and obscurely prefigured by the ceremoniall law, began then more plainly to be preached and made manifest.

The second time was from the ascension of Christ, till about the time of the destruction of the Temple and the Cite: in which, ceremonies ceased to bind conscience, and remained indifferent. Hereupon Paul circumcised Timothee: the Apostles after Christs ascension, as occasion was offered were present in the Temple, Act. 3. 1. And the Council of Ierusalem tendering the weakness of some beleevors, decreed that the Church for a time should abstaine from things strangled, and blood. And there was good reason of this, because the Church of the Iewes was not yet sufficiently conuicted, that an end was put to the ceremoniall law by the death of Christ.

In the third time, which was after the publishing of the Gospel, ceremonies of the Iewes Church became vnlawfull, and so shall continue to the worlds end.

By this it appeares, what a monstrous & miserable Religion the Church of Rome teacheth and maintaineth, which stands in ceremonies, partly heathenish, and partly Iewish.

As for the Gospel, I take it for that part of the word of God which promisseth righteousness and life everlasting to all that beleue in Christ and withall commandeth this faith.

That we may the better know how the Gospel binds conscience, two points must be considered: one touching the persons bound, the other touching the manner of binding.

Persons are of two sorts: some be called, some be vnalled. Persons called are all such to whom God in his mercie hath offered the meanes of saluation & hath revealed the Gospel in some measure more or lesse, by meanes either ordinary or extraordinary. All such I thinke are straightly bound in conscience to beleue and obey the Gospel. For that word of God whereby men shall be iudged in the day of iudgement, must first of all binde their consciences in this life, considering abolution and condemnation is according to that which is done in this life: but by the Gospel, all men that have beene called, shall be iudged as Paul saith, Rom. 2. 13. God shall iudge the secrets of men by Iesus Christ, according to my Gospel. And our Saviour Christ saith, Ioh. 3. 18. He that beleueth not is already condemned. It remains therefore that the Gospel binds the consciences of such men in this life. By this very point we are all put in mind not to cōtent our selves with this, that we haue a liking to the Gospell, and to beleue it to be true (though many Protestants in these our daies thinke it sufficient both in life and death, if they hold that they are to be saved by faith alone in Christ without the merit of mans workes) but we must goe yet further, and enter into a practise of the doctrine of the Gospell as well as of the precepts of the morall law; knowing that the Gospell doth as well binde conscience as the law; and if it be not obeyed, will as well condemne.

Men vnalled, are such as neuer heard of Christ, by reason the Gospell was neuer reuealed vnto them, nor meanes of reuelation offered. That there haue bin such in former ages, I make manifest thus. The world since the creation may be distinguished into foure ages. The first, from the creation to the flood; the second, from the flood to the giuing of the Law; the third, from the giuing of the Law to the death of Christ; the fourth, from the death of Christ to the last iudgement. Now in the three former ages there was a distinction of the world into two sorts of men, whereof one was a people of God; the other no people. In the first age, in the families of Seth, Noe, &c. were the sonnes of God, in all other families the sonnes of men, Gen. 6. 2. In the second age were the sonnes of the flesh and the sonnes of the promise, Rom. 9. 7. In the third, Iewes and Gentiles: the Iewes being the Church of God, all nations beside no Church. But in the last age this distinction was taken away, when the Apostles had a commission giuen them that was neuer giuen before to any, namely, to goe teach not only the Iewes, but all nations. Now this distinction arose of this, that the Gospell was not reuealed to the world before the coming of Christ, as the Scriptures witnesse. The Prophet saith, Esa. 52. 14. that kings shall shut their mouthes at Christ, because that which had not bin told them they shall see, & that which they had not heard shall they vnderstand: And 55. 5. that a nation that know him not shall run vnto him. Paul saith to the Ephesians that in the former times they were without God, and without Christ, strangers from the covenant, Eph. 2. 12. And to the Athenians he saith, that the times before the coming of Christ, were times of ignorance, Act. 17. 30. And that it may not be thought that this ignorance was affected, Paul saith further, that God in times past suffered the Gentiles to walke in their owne waies, Act. 14. 16. and that the mysterie of the Gospell was kept secret from the beginning of the world, and is now in the last age reuealed to the whole world, Rom. 16. 25. Some alledge that the Iewes being the Church of God, had traffique with all nations; and by this meane spread some little knowledge of the Mesias through the whole world. I answer againe, that the conference & speech of Iewish merchants with forreiners was no sufficient meane to publish the promises of saluation by Christ to the whole world: first, because the Iewes for the most part haue alwaies bin more ready to receiue any new and false religion then to teach their own: secondly, because the very Iewes themselves, though they were well acquainted with the ceremonies of their religion, yet the substance thereof, which was Christ figured by externall ceremonies, they knew not; and hereupon the Pharisees when they made a Proselyte, they made him tenne times more the child of the diuell then themselves: Thirdly, because men are feldome or neuer suffered to professe or make any speech of their religion in forraigne countries. Again, if it be alledged that the doctrine is set downe in the bookes of the old Testament, which men through the whole world might haue read, searched, and knowne if they would: I answer, that the keeping of the bookes of the old Testament, was committed to the Iewes alone. Rom. 3. 2. and therefore they were not giuen to the whole world, as also the Psalmist testifieth, Psal. 147. 19. 20. He hath his word vnto Iacob, his statutes and his iudgements vnto Israel: he hath not dealt so with every nation: neither haue they knowne his iudgements.

Now touching such persons as haue not so much as heard of Christ, though they are apt and fit to be bound in conscience by the Gospell, in as much as they are the creatures of God; yet are they not indeed actually bound till such time as the Gospell be reuealed, or at the least, meanes of reuelation offered. Reasons hereof may be these. I. Whatsoeuer doctrine or law doth binde conscience, must in some part be knowne by nature, or by grace, or by both; the vnderstanding must first of all conceiue, or at the least haue meanes of conceiuing, before conscience can constrain; because it bindeth by vertue of knowne conclusions in the minde. Therefore things that are altogether vnknowne and vnconceiued of the vnderstanding, doe not binde in conscience; now, the Gospell is altogether vnknowne and vnconceiued of many, as I haue already proued; and therefore it binds not them in conscience. II. Paul saith, Rom. 2. 12. They which sinned without the law [written] shall be condemned without the law; therefore they which sinned without the Gospell, shall be condemned without the Gospell: and such as shall be condemned without the Gospell after this life, were not bound by it in this life. Augustine the most iudiciall Diuine of all the ancient Fathers, upon these words of Christ: But now they haue no excuse for their sinne, saith on this manner. A doubt may be moued, whether they to whom Christ hath not come, neither hath spoken vnto them, haue an excuse for their sinnes. For if they haue it not, why is it said that these (namely the Iewes) haue no excuse because he came and spake to them? and if they haue it, whether it be that their punishment may be taken away quite, or in part lessened. To these demands, to my capacite as the Lord shall enable mee, I answer, That they to whom Christ came not, neither hath spoken vnto them, haue an excuse, not of every sin, but of this sin, that they haue not beleued in Christ. Again, it remains to inquire whether these, who before Christ came in his Church to the Gentiles, and before they heard his Gospell, haue bin or are prevented by death, may use this excuse. Doubtlesse they may, but they shall not therefore escape damnation. For whoeuer haue sinned without the law, shall perish without the law.

As for the reasons which some of the Schoole-men haue alledged to the contrarie, they are answered by all (a) men of the same order, & I will briefly touch the principal. First it is objected, that the holy Ghost shall iudge the world of sin, because they haue not beleued in Christ, *Iob. 16. 9. I answer, that by the world we must not vnderstand all and every man since the creation, but all nations and kingdomes in the last age of the world to whom the Gospell was reuealed. Thus hath Paul expounded this word, Rom. 11. 12. The fall of them is the riches of the world, & the diminishing of this is the riches of the Gentiles. v. 15. The casting of them away is the reconciliation of the world. Secondly, it is objected, that the law binds all men in conscience, though the greatest part of it be vnknown to them. Ans. The law was once giuen to Adam and imprinted in his heart in his first creation, and in him, as being the roote of all mankind, it was giuen to all men: and as when he sinned, all men sinned in him, so when he was enlightened all were enlightened in him, and consequently when his conscience was bound by the law, all were bound in him. And though this knowledge be lost by mans default, yet the bond remains still on Gods part. Now the case is other wise with the Gospell, which was neuer written in mans nature, but was giuen after the fall and is aboue nature. Here a further reply is made, that the covenant made with Adam, The seede of the woman shall brise the serpents head, was also made with his seede which is all mankind, and was afterward continued with Abraham to all nations. I answer, againe, that Adam was a roote of mankind onely in respect of mans nature with the gifts and sin thereof: he was no roote in respect of grace which is aboue nature, but Christ the second Adam. And therefore when God gaue the promise vnto him, and faith to beleue the promise, he did not in him giue them both to all mankind; neither, if Adam had afterward fallen from faith in the Mesias, should all mankind again haue fallen in him. Moreouer, that the promise of grace was not made to Adams seede vniuersally but indefinitely, it appeares; because when God did afterward renew the covenant, he restrained it to the family of Noe and Abraham, and in Abrahams family it was restrained to Isaac. In Isaac (saith the Lord) shall thy seed be called: yea in the tenour of the covenant there is a distinction made of the seede of the woman and the seede of the serpent, which seed of the serpent is a part of mankind, and it is excluded from* the covenant. And whereas the Lord promised to Abraham that in his seede all the nations of the earth should be blessed, the promise must not be vnderstood of all men in every age, but of all nations in the last age of the world. And thus Paul hath cleared the text, Gal. 3. 8. The Scripture saith, seeing that God would iustifie the Gentiles through faith (which was done after Christs ascension) preached before the Gospell to Abraham, In thee shall all nations be blessed. Lastly, it may be objected, that if any man be ignorant of the doctrine of saluation by Christ, it is through his owne fault; it is true indeede that all ignorance of the doctrine of saluation comes through mans fault and sinne; but sin must be distinguished; it is either personal, or the sinne of mans nature. Now in them that neuer heard of Christ, their ignorance in this point proceeds not of any personal sinne in them, but onely from the sinne of mans nature, that is, the first sinne of Adam common to all mankind, which sin is punished when God leaues men wholly to themselves. Now many things there be in men proceeding from this sinne, which neuertheless are no sinnes, as the manifold miseries of this life: and so I take the ignorance of things aboue mans nature altogether vnreuealed, to be no sin, but a punishment of original sinne.

Thus much of the persons which are bound by the Gospell: now let vs see how farre forth they are bound by it.

God in the Gospell generally reueales two points vnto vs: the first, that there is perfect righteousness and life euermlasting to be obtained by Christ: the second, that the instrument to obtaine righteousness and life euermlasting is faith in Christ. Moreouer when this Gospell is dispensed and preached vnto vs: God reueales vnto vs two points more: the first, that he will make vs particularly to be partakers of true righteousness and life euermlasting by Christs second, that he will haue vs without doubting to beleuee thus much of our selves. And for this cause every man to whom the Gospell is reuealed, is bound to beleue his owne election, iustification, sanctification, and glorification in, and by Christ. The reasons and grounds of this point out of the word of God are these: 1. 1. Iob. 3. 23. This is his commandment that we beleue in the name of his Son Iesus Christ, and loue one another as he gaue vs commandment. Now to beleue in Christ, is not confidently to beleue, that he is a Redeemer of mankind, but withall to beleue that he is my Saviour, and that I am elected, iustified, sanctified, & shall be glorified by him. This is granted of all men, yea of the Papists themselves, which otherwise are enemies of this doctrine. For Lumbard saith, To beleue in God, is by beleueing to loue, and as it were to goe to God: by beleueing to cleaue vnto him and as it were to be incorporate into his members. 11. Paul, Gal. 2. 16. first of all propounds a general sentence, That a man is not iustified by the workes of the Law, but by the faith of Christ.

Lumb. 1, 3 dist. 23.

After

Afterward he addes a speciall application, Enen ye (namely Jewes) have beleened in Iesus Christ; that we might be iustificd by the faith of Iesus Christ: and in v. 20. he defendes more specially to apply the Gospel to himselfe, I thinke (saith he) by the faith of the Son of God, who hath loved me, and given himselfe for me. And in this kinde of application there is nothing peculiar to Paul, for in this very action of his he avoucheth himselfe to bee an example vnto vs, 1. Tim. 1. 16. For this cause (saith he) was I receiued to mercie, that Iesus Christ should shew first on me all long suffering, vnto the ensample of them which shall in time to come beleene in him to eternall life. Again, Phil. 3. 8. he saith, I thinke all things but losse, that I might win Christ, and might be found in him not having mine own right conscience, but that which is through the faith of Christ, that I may know him and the vertue of his resurrection: and afterward he addeth, v. 15. Let vs, as many as be perfect, be thus minded. III. Whatsoever we pray for according to Gods wil, we are bound to beleene that it shal be giuen vnto vs, Mark. 11. 24. Whatsoever ye desire when ye pray, beleene that ye shall haue it, and it shall be done vnto you. But we pray for the pardon of our finnes, and for life euerslasting by Christ; and that according to the will of God: Therefore we are bound in conscience to beleene the pardon of our finnes, and life euerslasting. I V. If God should speake particularly to any man, and say vnto him, Cornelius, or Peter, beleene thou in Christ, and thou shalt be saued; this commandement should binde him particularly. Now when the Minister lawfully called, in the name and stead of God publisheth the Gospell to the congreg. tion, that is as much as if God himselfe had spoken to them particularly, calling each of them by their names, and promising vnto them life euerslasting in Christ. 2. Cor. 5. 20. We as ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you through vs, pray you in Christs stead, that ye be reconciled to God.

It may be, and is objected, that if every man be bound in conscience to beleene his owne election & saluation by Christ, then some men are bound to beleene that which is false, because some there be euens in the midst of the Church, which in the counsell of God were neuer chosen for saluation. I answer, that this reason were good; if men were bound absolutely to beleene their saluation without further respect or condition: but the bond is conditional, according to the tenour of the covenant of grace: for we are bound to beleene in Christ, if we would come to life euerslasting, or if we would be in the fauour of God, or if we would be good disciples & members of Christ. I answer againe, that whatsoever a man is bound to beleene, is true: yet not alwaies in the euent, but true in the intention of God that bindeth. Now the commandement of beleeneing and applying the Gospell, is by God giuen to all within the Church; but not in the same maner to all. It is giuen to the Elect, that by beleueing they might indeed be saued; God enabling them to do that which he commands. To the rest, whom God in iustice wil refuse, the same commandement is giuen not for the same cause, but to another end, that they might see how they could not beleene, and by this meanes be bereft of all excuse in the day of iudgement. God doth not alwaies giue commandments simply that they might be done, but sometimes for other respects, that they might be meanes of triall, as the commandement giuen to Abraham of killing Isaac: againe, that they might serue to keepe men at the least in outward obedience in this life, & stop their mouths before the tribunall fear of God.

In that we are bound in conscience on this maner to beleene the promises of the Gospell, with an application of the benefits thereof to our selves, findry necessary & profitable poims of instruction may be learned. The first, that the Popish Doctors abolish a great part of the Gospell, when they teach that men are bound to beleene the Gospell onely by a Catholike faith, which they make to be nothing else but a gift of God, or illumination of the minde, whereby assent is giuen to the word of God that it is true; and more specially that Iesus is Christ, that is, an al-fufficient Saviour of mankinde. All which the damned spirits beleene: whereas the Gospell for the comfort and saluation of mens soules, hath a further reach, namely, to enioyne men to beleene that the promise of saluation is not only true in it selfe, but also in the very person of the beleuer, as appeares evidently by the Sacraments, which are as it were a visible Gospell, in which Christ with all his benefits is offered and applied to the particular persons of men: to the end, no doubt, that they might beleene the accomplishment of the promise in themselves.

Secondly, we learne that it is not presumption for any man to beleene the remission of his owne finnes: for to doe the will of God to which we are bound, is not to presume: now it is the will of God to which he hath bound vs in conscience, to beleene the remission of our owne finnes: and therefore rather not to doe it, is presumptuous disobedience.

Thirdly, wee are here to marke and to remember with care, the foundation of the vnfallible certainty of mans saluation. For if man be bound in conscience first to giue assent to the Gospell, and secondly to apply it to himselfe by true faith; then without doubt a man by faith may be certainly perswaded of his owne election & saluation in this life, without any extraordinary reuelation: Gods commandments being in this and the like cases possible. For commandments are either Legall, or Euangelicall: Legall, thew vs our default, but giue vs no remedie: and the perfect doing of them according to the intent of the Law-giner, by reason of mans weakness and through mans default, is impossible in this world. As for Euangelicall commandments,

they haue this priuiledge, that they may and can be performed according to the intent of the Law-giner in this life: because with the commandement is ioyned the inward operation of the spirit in the elect, to enable them to effect the dutie commanded: and the will of God is not to require absolute perfection at our hands in the Gospell as in the Law, but rather to qualifie the rigour of the law by the satisfaction of a Mediatour in our stead; and of vs (we being in Christ) to accept the vpriight wil and indeavour for the deed; as the will to repent, & the will to beleene, for repentance and true faith indeed. Now then, if things required in the Gospell, be both ordinare and possible; then for a man to haue an infallible certainty of his owne saluation, is both ordinare and possible. But more of this point afterward.

Lastly, all such persons as are troubled with doubtings, distrustings, vnbeleefe, despair of Gods mercy, are to learn & consider that God by his word bindes them in conscience to beleene the pardon of their owne finnes be they neuer so grievous or many, & to beleene their owne election or saluation wherof they doubt. Men that are but ciuill hauecare to auoid robbing and killing, because God giues commandments against stealing and killing: why then should not we much more strue against our manifold doubtings and distrustings of Gods loue in Christ, hauing a commandement of God that calls vpon vs & binds vs to do so.

Thus we see how Gods word bindes conscience: now conscience being thus bound, againe binde the man in whom it is.

The bond of conscience is called guiltinesse. Guiltinesse is nothing else but a worke of the conscience, binding euery sinner to the punishment of euerslasting death, before God for this or that sinne.

Thus much of the proper binder of the conscience: now follows the improper.

The improper binder is that, which hath no power at all or vertue in it selfe to binde conscience: but doth it onely by the authority and vertue of Gods word, or some part thereof. It is threefold, Humane laws, an Oath, a Promise.

Touching humane laws, the speciall point to be considered is, In what maner they binde. That this may in part be cleared, I will stand a while to examine & confute the opinion, that the very pillars of the popish Church at this day maintaine; namely, that Ciwill and Ecclesiasticall iurisdiction haue a coactiue power in the conscience, & that the lawes made thereby doe as truly & properly binde (as they speake) to mortall and euerrall sinne, as Gods law is selfe. The arguments which commonly they vse are these:

Argum. 1. Deut. 17. 12. That man that will do presumptuously, and not obey the (a) authority of the Priest or Iudge, shall die: and thou shalt take away euill from Israel. Here (say they) the precepts of the high Priest are (b) imperia, not admonitions or exhortations, & they binde in conscience; otherwise the transgressors thereof should not haue bin punished so severely. Ans. The intent of this law (as a very childe may perceiue) is to establish the authority & right of the highest appelles for all matters of controuersie in the Synedrion or great Court at Ierusalem. Therefore the words alledged do giue vnto the priest a foueraigne power of making lawes, but a power of giuing iudgement of controuersies, and that according to laws already made by God himselfe: from which iudgement there might be no appeal. Now this power of determining doth not constraîne conscience, but the outward man to maintaine order and peace. For what reason is there, that that sentence, which might be either a gain-saying of Gods law, or a mistaking of it, should binde the conscience to a sinne? Again, not euery one that refused to subiect themselves to the sentence of this court, were straight way guilty of sinne, (for this did Jeremy the Prophet, and Christ our Saviour, when the Jewes condemned them for wicked persons) but he that presumptuously despised the sentence, & by consequent the authority it selfe, which was the ordinance of God, was guilty. Lastly, the feueritie of the punishment, which is temporal death, doth not argue any power in the Iudge of binding conscience: this they might haue learned of their owne Dottor Gerson, who holdeth, that they that binde any man to mortall sin, must bee able to punish him with answerable punishment, which is eternal death.

Argu. 2. Mat. 16. 19. Whosoever ye shall binde in earth, shall be bound in heauen. Here (say they) to binde, is to make lawes constraining conscience, according to Mat. 23. 4. They bind heauie burdens, and lay them on mens shoulders. Ans. The foueraigne power of binding, & loosing is not belonging to any creature, but is proper to Christ, who had the keyes of heauen and hell: he openeth & no man shutteth, he shutteth and no man openeth, Reu. 3. 5. As for the power of the Church, it is nothing but a minitery of seruice wherby men publish and pronounce that Christ bindeeth or looseth. Again, this binding standes not in the power of making lawes, but in remitting and retaining of mens finnes, as the words going before declare. v. 18. ff thy brother sin against thee, &c. and Christ shew his own meaning while he saith, Whose sins ye remit they are remitted, and whose sins ye retain they are retained. Ioh. 20. 23. Having before in the person of Peter promised them his honour, in this forme of words, Mat. 16. 19. I will giue vnto thee the keyes of the king dom of heauen, whatsoever thou shalt binde vpon earth, shall be bound in heauen. This which I say is approved by consent of auncient Diuines. Aug. P. sal. 10. 1. Remission of sin (saith he) is loosing thereof by the law of contraries, binding is to holde sinne vnpardoned. Philas. vpon Mat. c. 18. Whom they binde on earth, that is (saith he) leave vnto of the keyes of their finnes. Lumbar the Popish matter of sentences, The Lord (saith he) hath giuen to Priests power of binding and loosing, that is, of making manifest that men are bound or loosed. Again, both Origen, (a) Augustine & (b) Theophylact attribute the power of binding to all Christians, and therefore they for their parts, neuer dreamed that the power of binding should be an authority to make laws. Lastly, the place Mat. 23. 4. overturns the argument, for there the Scribes and Pharisees are condemned, because they laid vpon mens shoulders the burthens of their traditions, as means of Gods worship & things binding conscience.

Argu. 3. Act. 15. 28. 29. It seems good vnto vs & the holy Ghost, to lay no more burden on you then these necessary things, that ye abstaine from things offered to idols, and blood, and that which is strangled, and fornication. Here (say they) the Apostles by the infuſion of the holy Ghost make a new law not for this or that respect, but simply to binde the consciences of the Gentiles, that they might bee exercised in obedience. And this is proued, because the Apostles call this law a burden, and call the things prescribed, necessary: and S. Luke reames them, the Commandments of the Apostles: and Chrysostome calls the Epistle sent to the Church, Imperium, that is, a lordly charge. To this they adde the testimony of Tertullian, Origen, Augustine. Ans. Though all be granted, that the law is a burden imposed, a precept of the Apostles, a charge: againe, that things required therein are necessary: yet will it not follow by good consequent, that this law simply binde conscience, because it was given with a reservation of Christian libertie, so as out of the case of scandal, that is, if no offence were giuen to the weak Jewes, it might freely be omitted. And that will appeare by these reasons: First of all Peter saith, that it is a tempting of God to impose vpon the Gentiles the yoke of Jewish ceremonies: he therefore must needs be contrary to himselfe, if he intend to binde mens consciences to abstinence from that which is strangled, blood, and things offered to Idols. A reply is made, that this abstinence is prescribed, not by the ancient law of Moses, but by a new Ecclesiasticall or Apostolicall authority. I answer againe, that a Mosaiicall cerimonie is still the same thing, though it be established by a new authoritie. And whereas Christ by his death put an end to the ceremonial law, it is absurd to thinke that the Apostles by their authority resumed some part of it againe, & bound mens consciences thereto. Secondly, the Church of God in all places suffered this commandment to cease, which the faithful seruants of God would neuer haue done, if they had bene perswaded that this law had bound conscience simply. It is answered, that this law ceased not because the giuing of offence vnto the Jewes ceased, but because it ceased vniuersally: yet, but it could not haue ceased vniuersally, if it had bound conscience, specially considering it was propounded to the Church without any mention or limitation of time. Thirdly, Paul was present in this Council: and knew the intent of the law very well, & therefore no doubt he did not in any of: is Epistles gaine-say the same. This being granted, it cannot bee, that this should binde conscience out of the case of offence, for he teacheth the Corinthians that things offered to Idols may be eaten, so be it the weak brother be not offended. Here it is answered, that when Paul writ this 1. Epistle to the Corinthians, this commandment of the Apostles touching things strangled and blood was not come vnto them. Well, to grant all this, which cannot be proued, let it be answered, why Paul did not now deliuer it, & why he deliuered a doctrine contrary to that which he had decreed at Jerusalem, which was that the Gentiles should absolutely abstaine from things offered to Idols. As for the testimonies of the fathers they are abused. Indeepe Tertullian saith plainly, that Christians in his daies abstained from eating of blood, and he perswades men to continue in so doing, because he is of opinion (being indeepe farre deuced) that this very law of the Apostles must last to the end of the world: which conceit if the Papist hold not, what meane they to build vpon him? Origen saith, that this law was very necessary in his daies: and no marvell. For by Idolitryes he vnderstands not things that haue bin offered to Idols, & are afterward brought to priuate houses, or to the market, as other common meats: but he vnderstands things that remaine consecrated to idol: & are no where else vsed but in their temples; which we grant with him must for euer be avoided as meanes & instruments of idolatry. Whereas the law of the Apostles speaks onely of the first kinde. As for things strangled and blood, he takes them to be the diuels food: and for this cause he approves abstinence from them. And whereas Augustine saith, that it is a good thing to abstaine from things offered to idols, though it be in necessity, he must be vnderstood of the first kinde of Idolitryes which are yet remaining in the Idol-temple still consecrated vnto them, and not of the second, of which the Apostles law (as I haue said) must be vnderstood.

Argu. 4. Iob. 21. 16. Christ saith to Peter, Feed my sheepe: that is, as the word importeth feede and rule my sheepe. Ans. This feeding and ruling stands not in the making new lawes, but in teaching and governing the Church of God according to the doctrine which they had receiued fro Christ. And this action of feeding is ascribed to all Christians, Reuel. 2. 27. who cannot thereupon challenge a power of making lawes to the conscience.

Argu. 5. Iob. 20. 21. As my father sent me, so I send you: But Christ was sent of his father not onely with power of preaching and ministering the Sacraments, but also with authority of commanding and giuing iudgement. Ans. If this kinde of reasoning may stand, all the Apostles shall be made redeemers: for they were all sent as Christ was, and he was sent not only to preach the redemption of mankind, but also to effect and worke the same. If this be absurd, then it is a flat abusing of Scripture to gather from this saying of Christ, that the Apostles had power of binding conscience because he had so. It is true indeed that there is a similitude or analogie between the calling of Christ and his Apostles, but it wholly stands in these points: Christ was ordained to his office before all worlds, and so were the Apostles: Christ was called of his Father immediately, & so were they of Christ: Christ was sent to the whole world, and so were they: Christ received all power in heauen and earth as being necessary for a mediator; and they received an extraordinarie authoritie from him with such a plentifull measure of the Spirit as was necessary for the Apostolical function. Lastly, Christ was sent euen as hee was man to bee a teacher of the Jewes: and therefore hee called the minister of circumcision, Rom. 15. 8. and so the Apostles are sent by him to teach the Gentiles. Thus farre is the comparision to be enlarged, and no further. And that no man might imagine that some part of this resemblance standes in a power of binding conscience, Christ hath put a speciall exception, when he saith; Goe teach all nations, teaching them to obseue all things that I haue commanded you, and not commandments of your owne.

Argu. 6. Rom. 3. 2. Whosoever resisteth the power, resisteth the ordinance of God and they that resist shall receive to themselves iudgement: and, 5. ye must bee subiect not onely for wrath, but also for conscience sake. Ans. Magistracie indeepe is an ordinance of God to which we owe subiectiō, but how far subiectiō is due, there is the question. For body and goods and outward conuersation, I grant all: but a subiectiō of conscience to mens lawes, I deny. And betweene the two there is a great difference: to be subiect to authority in conscience; and to be subiect to it for conscience, as will be manifest if we doo but consider the phrase of the Apostle, the meaning whereof is, that we must performe obedience not only for anger, that is, for the avoiding of punishment, but also for the avoiding of sinne, and so by consequent for avoiding a breach in conscience. Now this breach is not properly made because mans law is neglected, but because Gods law is broken which ordaineth magistracie, & with all binde mens consciences to obey their lawfull commandments. And the damnation that is due vnto men for resisting the ordinance of God comes not by the single breach of magistrats commandment, but by a transgression of Gods law which appointeth magistrats and their authority. To this answer Papists reply nothing that is of moment. Therefore I proceed.

Argu. 7. 1 Cor. 4. 21. What will you? that I come vnto with a rodde, or in the spirit of meeknes? Now this rodde is a iudiciall power of punishing of sinnes. Ans. For the regement and protection of Gods Church, there bee two rods mentioned in Scripture: the rod of Christ, and the Apostollicall rod. The rod of Christ is reame d a rod of iron, or the rod of his mouth, & it signifies that absolute and soueraigne power which Christ hath ouer his creatures, whereby he is able to conuert and saue them, or to forsake and destroy them. And it is a peculiar privilege of this rodde to smite and wound the conscience. The Apostollicall rod was a certaine extraordinarie power, whereby God enabled them to plague and punish rebellious offenders with grievous iudgements, not in their soules but in their bodies alone. With this rod Paul smote Elumas blind, and Peter smote Ananias and Saphira with bodily death. And it may be that Paul by his power did giue vp the incestuous man, when he was excommunicate, to be vexed in his body and tormented by the diabol: but that by this rod the Apostles could smite conscience, it cannot be proued.

Argu. 8. 1 Tim. 3. 2. Paul made a law that none haue two wives should be ordained a Bishop: Now this law is positiue & Ecclesiasticall, and binde conscience. Ans. Paul is not the maker of this law, but God himselfe, who ordained that in marriage not three but two alone should be one flesh: and that they which sene at the alter of the Lord, should be holy. And to grant that this law were a new law beside the written word of God, yet doth it not follow that Paul was the maker of it; because he vsed not to deliuer any doctrine to the Churches but which he receiued of the Lord.

Argu. 9. Luk. 10. 16. He which heareth you, heareth me. Ans. These words properly concerne the Apostles, and doe not in like manner belong to the Pastors and teachers of the Church. And the end of these words is not to confirme any Apostollicall authority in making lawes to the conscience; but to signifie the priuiledge which he had vouchsafed them about all others, that he would so farre forth assest them with his spirit, that they should not erre or be decieued in teaching and publishing the doctrine of saluation, though otherwise they were sinfull men: according to Mat. 10. 20. It is not you that speak, but the spirit of your father which speaks in you. And the promise to be led into all truth, was directed vnto them.

Argu. 10. 1 Cor. 11. 2. I praise you that you keepe my commandments. Ans. Paul deliuered nothing of his owne concerning the substance of the doctrine of saluation and the worship of God, but that which hee receiued from Christ. The precepts here meant are nothing else but rules of decency and comely order in the congregation: and though they were to be obeyed, yet Pauls meaning was not to bind any mans conscience therewith. For of greater matters he saith, This I speak for your commo-ditie, and not to intangle you in a snare. 1 Cor. 7. 35.

Argu. 11. Commandes of ancient Fathers when they command or forbid any thing, doe it with threatening of a curse to the offenders. Ans. The Church in former time vsed to annex to her Canons the curse Anathema, because things decreed by them were indeed, or at the least thought to be the will and word of God: and they had respect to the saying of Paul. If any teach otherwise, though he be an Angell from heaven, let him be accursed. Therefore Councils in this action were no more but instruments of God to accurse those whom he first had accursed.

Argum. 12. An act indifferent if it be commanded, is made necessarie: and the keeping of it is the practise of vertue, therefore every law bindes conscience to a sinne. Ans. An act if it be indifferent, being commanded by mans law, it is not made simply necessary, for that is as much as Gods law doth or can doe, but only in some part, that is, so farre forth as the said act or action tends to maintain and preserve the good end for which the law is made. And though the action be in this regard necessary: yet doth it still remaine indifferent, as it is considered in it selfe out of the end of the law: so as if peace, the common good, and comely order may be maintained, and all offence avoided by any other means, the acte may be done or not done without incurr sinne. For whereas God himselfe hath given liberty and freedom in the use of things indifferent, the Law of man doth not take away the same, but onely moderate and order the our common use of it for the common good.

Argum. 13. The fast of Lent stands by a law & commandment of men: and this law binds conscience simply: for the ancient fathers have called it a Tradition Apostolical, and make the keeping of it to be necessary, and the not keeping of it a sinne, and punish the offenders with excommunication. Ans. It is plaine to him that will not be oblitate, that Lent fast was not commanded in the primitive Church, but was freely at mens pleasures, and in severall Churches diversly both in regard of place or time, as also in respect of diversitie of meats. Jerome in his Epistle to Victor cited by Eusebius faith, Some have thought that they must fast one day some two dayes, some more some 40 houres day and night, which diversitie of fasting commendeth the unity of faith. Spiridon a good man did catechise in Lent, & caught his guests to do the same, & this he did upon judgement: because he was perswaded out of Gods word, that to the clean all things were cleane. And Eusebius records, that Montanus the heretick was the first that prescribed solemnity and set lawes for fasting. And whereas this fast is called an Apostolical tradition, it is no great matter, for it was the manner of the ancient Church in former times to teach rites and orders Ecclesiastical not set down in the scriptures, Apostolical orders, that by this means they might commend them to the peoples Jerome testifieth, Every province (saith he) may think the constitutions of their Ancestors to be Apostolical laws. And whereas it is said to be a sinne not to fast in Lent (as Augustine speaketh) it is not by reason of any commandment binding conscience, for Augustine faith plainly, that neither Christ nor his Apostles appointed any set time of fasting: and Chrysostome; that Christ never commanded vs to follow his fast; but the true reason hereof is borrowed from the end. For the primitive Church used not the popish fast, which is to eat white-meat alone, but an abstinence from all meats, yfed specially to mortifie the flesh, & to prepare men before hand to a worthy receiving of the Eucharist. And in regard of this good end was the offence. And whereas it is said, that ancient fathers taught a necessity of keeping this fast, even Hierome whom they alleadged to this purpose, faith the contrary. For confuting the error of Montanus who had his set time of fast to be kept of necessity, he faith, We fast in Lent according to the Apostles tradition as in a time meet for vs: & we do it not, as though it were not lawfull for us to fast in the rest of the year except Pentecost: but it is one thing to do as thing of necessity, and another to offer a gift of free will. Lastly, excommunication was for open contempt of this order taken up in the Church, which was, that men should fast before Easter for their further humiliation & preparation to the Sacrament. So the 29. Canon of the Council of Gangres must be understood. As for the Canons of the Apostles (so falsely called) and the 8. Council of Toledo, I much respect not what they say in this case.

Argum. 14. Gods authority binds conscience: Magistrates authority is Gods authority: therefore Magistrates authority binds conscience properly. Ans. Gods authority may be taken two waies: first, for that soveraigne and absolute power which hee vseth over all his creatures: Secondly, for that finite and limited power which hee hath ordained that men should exercise over men. If the minor, namely, the Magistrates authority is Gods authority, be taken in the first sense, it is false for the soveraigne power of God is incommunicable. If it be taken in the second sense, the proposition is false. For there be sundry authorities ordained of God, as the authority of the father over a child, of the master over the servant, the authority of the master over his scholler, which doe bind in conscience as the authority of Gods lawes doth.

By these arguments which I have now answered, and by many other being but lightly scanned, it will appeare that necessary obedience is to be performed both to civill and Ecclesiastical jurisdiction; but that they have a constraining power to binde conscience, and that properly as Gods lawes doe, it is not yet proved, neither can be as I will make manifest by other arguments.

Argum. 1. Hee that makes a law binding conscience to mortall sin, hath power, if not to save, yet to destroy: because by sinne, which follows vpon the transgression of his law, comes death & damnation. But God is the only law-giver that hath this priviledge: which is, after he hath given his law, vpon the breaking or keeping thereof, to save or destroy, Law 4. 12. There is one Law-giver that can save or destroy. Therefore God alone makes lawes binding conscience properly, and no creature can doe the like. Answer is made that S. James speaks of the principall Law-giver, that by his owne proper authority makes lawes, and doth in such manner save and destroy, that hee neede not feare to be destroyed of any: and that hee speaks not of secondary law-givers that are deputies of God, and make lawes in his name. I say againe, that this answer stands not with the text. For S. James speaks simply without distinction, limitation, or exception: and the effect of his reason is this. No man at all must slander his brother, because no man must be iudge of the law: and no man can be iudge of the law, because no man can be a law-giver to save or destroy. Now then who be those persons that shall make lawes to the soveraigne men, and binde them vnto punishment of mortall sinne; considering that God alone is the saving and destroying Law-giver?

Argum. 2. Hee that can make lawes as truly binding conscience as Gods lawes, can also prescribe rules of Gods worship: because to binde the conscience, is nothing else but to cause it to excuse for things that are wel done, and therefore truly please God; and to accuse for sin, whereby God is dishonoured: but no man can prescribe rules of Gods worship; and humane lawes, as they are humane lawes, appoint not the service of God. Esa. 29. 13. Their feare towards mee was taught by the precept of men. Matth. 15. 9. They worship mee in vaine, teaching doctrine which are the commandments of men. Papists here make answer, that by lawes of men we must understand such lawes as be unlawfull or vnserviceable, being made without the authority of God, or insinck of his spirit. It is true indeede, that these commandments of men were unlawfull: but the cause must be considered; they were unlawfull not because they commanded that which was unlawfull & against the will of God, but because things in themselves lawfull were commanded as parts of Gods worship. To wash the outward part of the cup or platter, & to wash hands before meat, are things in respect of civill use very lawfull, and yet are these blamed by Christ, and no other reason can be rendered but this; that they were prescribed not as things indifferent or civill, but as matters pertaining to Gods worship. It is not against Gods word in some polittick regards to make distinctions of meats, and drinks, and times: yet Paul calles these things, doctrines of devils, because they were commanded as things wherein God should be worshipped.

Argum. 3. God hath now in the new Testament given a libertie to the conscience, whereby it is freed from all lawes of his owne whatsoever, excepting such lawes and doctrines as are necessary to salvation, Col. 2. 20. If ye be dead with Christ, ye are free from the elements of the world, Gal. 5. 1. Stand ye in the libertie wherein Christ hath freed you, and be not againe entangled with the yoke of bondage. Now, if humane lawes made after the grant of this libertie, binde conscience of themselves, then must they either take away the foresaid liberty, or diminish the same; but that they cannot doe: for that which is granted by an higher authority, namely, God himselfe, cannot be revoked or repealed by the inferior authority of any man. It is answered, that this freedom is onely from the bondage of sinne, from the curse of the morall law, from the ceremoniall and iudiciall law of Moses, and not from the lawes of our superiours. And I answer againe, that it is absurd to thinke that God gives vs libertie in conscience from any of his owne lawes, and yet will have our consciences still to remaine in subjection to the lawes of sinfull men.

Argum. 4. Whosoever binds conscience, commands conscience. For the bond is made by a commandment vrging conscience to doe his dutie, which is to accuse or excuse for euill or well doing. Now Gods lawes command conscience in as much as they are spiritual, commanding body and spirit, with all the thoughts, wil, affections, desires, and faculties, & requiring obedience of them all, according to their kinde. As for the lawes of men, they want power to command conscience. Indeede if it were possible for our gouernours by law to command mens thoughts and affections, then also might they command conscience: but the first is not possible, for their lawes can reach no further then to the outward man, that is, to body and goods, with the speeches and deeds thereof: and the end of them all, is not to maintain spiritual peace of conscience, which is betwene man and God, but only that external and civill peace which is betwene man and man. And it were not meet that men should command conscience, which cannot see conscience, and iudge of all her actions, which appeare not outwardly, and whereof there be no witnesses, but God and the conscience of the doer. Lastly, men are not fit commanders of conscience, because they are no Lords of it, but God himselfe alone.

Argum. 5. Men in making lawes are subiect to ignorance and error: and therefore when they have made a law (as neere as possibly they can) agreeable to the equitie of Gods law, yet can they not assure themselves and others, that they have failed in no point or circumstance. Therefore it is against reason, that humane lawes being subiect to defects, faults, errors, and manifold imperfections, should truly bind conscience, as Gods lawes doe, which are the rule of righteousness. All gouernours in the world (by reason that to their old lawes, they are constrained to put restrictions, amplifications, and modifications of all kinds, with new readings and interpretations) vpon their daily experience fee & acknowledge this to be true which I say, saying the Bishop of Rome (so falsely reamed) which perswades himselfe to haue when he is in his Consistory, such an infallible assistance of the spirit, that he cannot possibly erre in judgement.

Argum. 6. If mens lawes by inward vertue bind conscience properly as Gods lawes, then our duty is to learne, study, & remember them as well as Gods lawes: yea Ministers must bee diligent to preach them, as they are diligent in preaching the doctrine of the Gospel: because euery one of them bindes to mortall sinne, as the Papists teach. But that they should be taught and learned as Gods lawes, it is most absurd in the judgement of all men, Papists themselves not excepted.

Argum. 7. Inferiour authoritie cannot bind the superior: now the courts of men and their authoritie are vnder conscience. For God in the heart of euery man hath erected a tribunal seat, and in his head he hath placed neither Saint nor Angel, nor any other creature whatsoeuer, but conscience it selfe, who therefore is the highest Iudge that is or can be vnder God; by whose direction also courts are kept, and lawes are made.

Thus much of the Popish opinion: by which it appeares that one of the principall notes of Antichrist agrees fully to the Pope of Rome. Paul 2 Thess. 2.4. makes it a speciall propertie of Antichrist to exalt himselfe against or aboue all that is called God, or worshipped. Now what doth the Pope else, when he takes vpon him authoritie to make such laws as shal bind the conscience, as properly and truly as Gods lawes? and what doth he else when hee ascribes to himselfe power to free mens consciences from the bond of such lawes of God, as are vnchangeable? as may appeare in a Canon of the Council of Trent: the words are these. If any shall say, that those degrees of consanguinitie that be expressed in Leuiticus, do only bind matrimony to be made, & break it being made, and that the Church cannot dispense with some of them, or approue that more degrees may hinder or break marriage: let him be accursed. O sacrilegious impiety! considering the lawes of affinity & consanguinity, Leu. 18. are not ceremoniall, or iudicial lawes peculiar to the Iewes, but the very lawes of nature, what is that Canon esse, but a publike Proclamation to the world, that the Pope & Church of Rome do sit as Lords, or rather idols in the hearts and consciences of men? This will yet more fully appeare to any man, if we reade popish booke of practicall or Case Diuinitie, in which the common manner is, to binde conscience where God looseth it, and to loose where he binds: but a declaration of this requires long time.

Now I come (as neere as possibly I can) to set downe the true manner, how mens lawes by the common judgement of Diuines, may be said to binde conscience. That this point may be cleared, two things must be handled. By what means they bind, and how farre forth.

A Touching the means, I set downe this rule. Whole some laws of men, made of things indifferent, so far forth bind conscience by vertue of the generall commandement of God, which ordaineth the Magistrates authoritie: that whosoever shall willingly and willingly, with a disloyall minde, either break or omit such lawes, is guilty of sin before God.

By whole some lawes, I vnderstand such positive constitutions, as are not against the law of God, and whichall tend to maintaine the peaceable estate and common good of men.

Furthermore, I adde this clause, made of things indifferent, to note the peculiar matter whereof humane lawes properly intreate: namely, such things as are neither expressely commanded or forbidden by God.

Now such kinde of lawes haue no vertue or power in themselves to constrain conscience, but they binde only by vertue of an higher commandement, Let euery soule be subiect to the higher powers, Rom. 13.1. or, Honour father and mother, Exod. 20.12. which commandements binde vs in conscience to performe obedience to the good lawes of men. As Peter saith, Submit your selves to euery humane ordinance for the Lords sake, 1 Pet. 2.13. that is, for conscience of God, as he saith afterward, v. 19. whereby he signifieth two things: first, that God hath ordained the authoritie of gouernours; secondly, that hee hath appointed in his word, and thereby bound men in conscience to obey their gouernours lawfull commandements.

If the case fall out otherwise, as commonly it doth, that humane lawes be not enacted of things indifferent, but of things that be good in themselves, that is, commanded by God; then are they not humane properly, but diuine lawes. Mens laws intreating of things that are morally good, & the parts of Gods worship, are the same with Gods lawes: & therefore binde conscience, not because they were enacted by men, but because they were first made by God: men being no more but instruments and ministers in his name to reuiue, renew, and to put in execution such precepts and lawes as prescribe the worship of God, standing in the practise of true religion and vertue. Of this kinde are all positive lawes touching articles of faith, & the duties of the moral law. And the man that breaks such lawes sinnes two waies: first, because hee breakes that which is in conscience a law of God: secondly, because in disobeying his lawfull Magistrate, hee disobeyes the generall commandement of God, touching Magistracie.

But if it shall fall out that mens lawes be made of things that are euill, and forbidden by God, then is there no bond of conscience at all: but contrariwise men are bound in conscience not to obey, Alti. 4.19. And hereupon the three children are commended for not obeying Nabuchadnezzar, when he gaue a particular commandement vnto them to fall downe and worship the golden image, Dan. 3.28.

Moreover, in that mans law binds not, but by authoritie of Gods law, hence it follows, that Gods law alone hath this priuledge, that the breach of it should be a sinne. S. Iohn saith 1. capit. 3.4. Sinne is the anomic or transgression of the law, vnderstanding Gods law. When Dauid by adulterie and murder had offended many men, and that many waies, he saith, Psal. 51.4. Against thee, against thee I haue sinned. And Augustine defined sin to be something said, done, or desired against the law of God. Some man may say, if this be so, belike the we may breake mens lawes without sin. I answer, that men in breaking humane lawes, both may & doe sin; but yet not simply, because they breake them, but because in breaking them, they doe also breake the law of God. The breach of a law must be considered two waies. First as it is a trespass, hindrance, iniurie, damage; & in this respect it is committed against mens lawes: secondly, the breach of a law must be considered as it is a sin, and so it is only against Gods law, which appoints obedience to the Magistrate.

that

The second point, namely, How farre forth mens lawes binde conscience, I expaine on this manner. It is all that the lawes of God doe or can do, to binde conscience simply & absolutely. Therefore humane lawes binde not simply of themselves, but so far forth as they are agreeable to Gods word, seruice for the common good, stand with good orders, and hinder not the libertie of conscience. The necessitie of the law ariseth of the necessitie of the good end thereof. And as the end is good & profitable more or lesse, so is the law it selfe necessarie more or lesse. Mens lawes are like their testimonies, which neither proue nor disproue of themselves, but borrow all the strength which they haue to constrain, from the truth, wisdom, and fidelitie of them that beare witness.

Hence it followeth that a man may do any thing beside humane lawes & constitutions without breach of conscience. For it we shall omit the doing of any law, I. without hindrance of the end & particular considerations, for which the law was made: II. without offence giuing, as much as in vs lyeth: III. without contempt of him that made the law, we are not to be accused of sinne. Example. In time of warre, the Magistrate of the citie commands that no man shal open the gates: the end is, that the citie & euery member thereof may be in safetie. Now it failes out that certaine citizens, being vpon occasion without the citie, are pursued by the enemy, and in danger of their liues. Hereupon some man without any more ado openeth the gate to rescue them. The question is, whether he hath sinned, or no. And the truth is, he hath not: because he did not hinder the end of the law, but rather further it, & that without scandal to men, or contempt to the Magistrate.

And this stands euen by the equitie of Gods word. God made a law, that the Priests only should eate of the Shew-bread: now Dauid being no priest, did vpon vrgent occasion eate of it without sin. If this be true in Gods law, then it may also be true in the lawes of men,

A that they may in some cases be omitted without inieue against God.

Neither must this seeme strange. For as there is a keeping of a law, and a breaking of the same; so there is a middle or meane action between them both, which is to doe a thing (a) beside the law, and that without sinne.

To proceede further, mens lawes be either Ciuill or Ecclesiastical. Ciuil lawes are for their substance determinations of necessary & profitable circumstances, tending to vphold and maintaine the commandements of the second table. More specially, they prescribe what is to be done, and what is to be left vndone, touching actions both ciuill and criminall, touching offices & bargaines of all sorts, &c. yea they conclude, inioyne, and command not only such affaires as be of small importance, but also things & actions of great weight, tending to maintaine common peace, ciuill society, and the very state of the common wealth. Now such lawes binde so farre forth, that albeit they be omitted without any apparent scandall or contempt, yet the breach of them is a sinne before God. Take this example. A subiect in this land, vpon poeerty, or vpon a couetous mind, against the good law of the land, coyne money, which afterward by a sleight of his wit, is cunningly conueyed abroad into the hands of men, and is not espied. Here is no euident offence giuen to any man, nor open contempt shewed to the law-giuer: and yet in this action he hath sinned, in that closely, otherwise then he ought to haue done, he hath hindered the good of the common wealth: and robbed the soveraigne Prince of his right.

Ecclesiastical lawes, are certaine necessarie and profitable determinations of circumstances of the commandements of the first Table. I say here circumstances, because all doctrines pertaining to the foundation and good estate of the Church, as also the whole worship of God, are set downe and commanded: in the written word of God, & cannot be preferred and concluded otherwise by all the Churches in the world. As for the Creeds and Confessions of particular Churches, they are in substance Gods Word, and they binde not in conscience by any power the Church hath, but because they are the Word of God.

The lawes then which the Church in proper speech is said to make, are decrees concerning outward order and comelinesse in the administration of the word and Sacraments, in the meetings of the Congregation, &c. And such lawes made according to the generall rule of Gods word, (which requires that all things be done to edification, in comelinesse, for the auoyding of offence) are necessarie to be observed, and the word of God binds all men to them, so farre forth as the keeping of them maintaines decent order, and preuent open offence. Yet if a law concerning some external rite or thing indifferent, be at sometime, or vpon some occasion omitted; no offence giuen, Facere aliquid praeter legem, non contra legem.

not contempt shewed to Ecclesiastical authority, there is no breach made in the conscience, & that appears by the example before handled. The Apostles guided by the holy Ghost, made a decree for the avoiding of offence, necessary to be observed, namely, that the Gentiles should abstaine from things strangled & blood, & Idolihytes; and yet Paul out of the case of scandal & contempt, permits the Corinthians to do otherwise, 1 Cor. 8. & 9. which he wold not haue done, if to do otherwise out of the case of scandal & contempt, had bin sin.

Againe, lawes are either mixt or meere penalty. Mixt, are such lawes as are of waightie matters, and are propounded in commanding or forbidding termes: and they according to the good intention of the Law-giuer, bind men first of all to obedience, for the necessary good of humane societies: and secondly, to a punishment, if they obey not; that a supply may be made of the hindrance of the common good. In the breach of this kinde of lawes, though a man bee neuer so willing to suffer the punishment, yet that will not discharge his conscience before God, when he offends. If a man coyne money with this minde, to be willing to die when he is conuicted, yet that will not free him from a sin in the action, because Gods law bindes vs not only to subiection in bearing of punishment, but also to obedience of his bare commandement, it being lawfull, though he should set downe no punishment.

A law meere penalty is that, which being made of matters of lesse importance, and not vttered precisely in commanding termes, doth only declare and shew what is to be done, or conditionally require this or that with respect to the punishment, on this manner. If any person doe this or that, then he shall forseit thus or thus. This kinde of law binds especially to the punishment, and that is the very intent of the Law-giuer, & he that is ready in omitting the law to pay the fine or punishment, is not to be charged with sinne before God: the penalty being answerable to the losse that comes by the neglect of the law. Here a question may be demanded: whether a man that hath taken his oath to keepe all the lawes or orders of any towne or corporation, & yet after wards omits the doing of some of them; bee periured or no? The answer may be thus, that the lawes of euery societie and corporation must be distinguished. Some are very weightie (as I haue said) being of the very foundation and state of the body; so as it cannot well stand without them: and whosoever wittingly and willingly breaks any of these (they being good and lawfull) cannot be freed from periurie. Againe, there be lawes of lesse importance, that tend only to maintaine decent order and comeliness in the societies of men; and they are of that nature, that the estate of the corporation or towne may stand without them; and whosoever vpon occasion omits the doing of any of these, is not therefore periured, so be it hee carry a loyall minde, and be content to pay the fine or penalty. For such kinde of order and constitution require first of all obedience, and if that be omitted, they require a mulct or fine: which, if it be willingly payed, the law is satisfied.

Thus wee see how farre forth mens lawes bind conscience. The vse of this point is this: first, hence we learne that the immunitie of the Popish clergie, whereby they take themselves exempted from ciuill courts, and from ciuill authoritie in criminall causes, hath no warrant: because Gods commandements bind euery man whatsoeuer, to bee subiect to the Magistrate, Rom. 13. 1. Let euery soule be subiect to the higher powers. I. I. Hence wee see also what notorious rebels those are, that bee borne subiects of this land, yet choose rather to die then to acknowledge (as they are bound in conscience) the Kings Maiestie to bee supreme gouernour vnder God in all causes and ouer all persons. I. I. Lastly, we are taught hereby to be willing to giue subiection, obedience, reuerence, and all other duties to Magistrates, whether they bee superiour or inferior: yea with cheerefulness to pay taxes and subsidies, and all such lawfull charges as are appointed by them. Giue to Cesar that which is Cesar, and to God that which is Gods. Giue to all men their duties: tribute to whom tribute: custome to whom custome Rom. 13. 7.

Now followeth the Oath, which is either assertory, or promissorie. Assertory, by which a man aoucheth that a thing was done or not done. Promissory, by which a man promitteth to doe a thing or not to doe it. Of both these I meane to speake; but specially of the second. And here two points must be considered, the first, of what meane an oath bindeth; the second, when it bindeth.

An oath bindeth by vertue of such particular commandements, as require keeping of oathes lawfully taken. Numb. 30. 3. Whosoever sweareth an oath to bind his soule by a word, he shall not breake his word, but shall doe according to all that proceeds out of his mouth.

This being so, a question may be made whether the oath of Infidels bind conscience, and by what vertue, considering they neither know the Scriptures, nor the true God? Ans. They doe bind in conscience. For example: Jacob and Laban make a couenant confirmed by oath. Jacob sweares by the true God, Laban by the gods of Nachor, that is, by his idols: Now Jacob, though he approoue not the forme of this oath, yet he accepts it for a ciuill bond of the couenants: and no doubt, though Laban beleueed not Gods word reuealed to the Patriarkes, yet he was bound in conscience to keepe his oath, even by the law of nature: and though he knew not the true God, yet he reputed the false God of Nachor to be the true God, Gen. 31. 53.

Againe, if a lawfull oath by vertue of Gods commandements binde conscience, then it must needs be that the Romane Church hath

longerred, in that she teacheth and maintaineth that gouernours, as namely, the Pope and other inferior bishops, haue power to giue relaxations & dispensations, not only for oathes lawfull (from which the word of God doth sufficiently free vs, though they should neuer giue abolition) but from a true & lawfull oath made wittingly & willingly without error or deceit, of a thing honest and possible; as when the Pope frees the subiects of this land, as occasion is offered, from their sworne allegiance and loyalty to which they are bound, not only by the law of nature, but also by a solemne and particular oath to the Supremacie, which none euer deemed lawfull, but such as carry traitorous hearts. Now this cronnous diuinitie would easily bee renoked, if men did but consider the nature of an oath, one part whereof is inuocation, in which we pray vnto God, first, that he would become a witnes vnto vs that we speake the truth, and purpose not to deceiue; secondly, if wee faile and breake our promise, that he would take reuenge vpon vs: & in both these petitions we finde our felices immediately to God himselfe: and God againe, who is the ordainer of the oath, accepts this bond and knites it by this commandement, till it be accomplished. Hence it follows, that no creature can haue power to vntie the bond of an oath, that is truly and lawfully an oath, vntill we will exalt the creatures aboue God himselfe. And the Jewish teachers gaue better counsell, when they commanded the people to performe their oathes to the Lord, for the preuenting of periurie, and our Saviour Christ in that gaine-saies them not.

Next let vs consider the time when an oath bindeth or bindeth not.

An oath bindeth then, when it is made of things certaine and possible, in truth, iustice, iudgement, for the glory of God, and the good of our neighbour.

Quest. I. Whether doth an oath bind conscience, if by keeping of it there follow losse and hinderances? Ans. If it be of a thing that is lawfull, and the damages be priuate to him that sweareth, then doeth it binde conscience. For example: A man makes a purchase of land at the sea side: his bargain is confirmed onely by oath: and it falls out, that before he do enter possession, the sea breaks in and drownes a part of that purchase. Now hee is in conscience to stand to his bargain, because the thing is lawfull, and the damage is priuate, & great reuerence must bee had of the name of God which hath bin vsed in the bargain making. Dauid makes it the propertie of a good man, to sweare to his owne hinderance, and not to change, Psal. 15. 4.

Quest. II. Whether the oath which a man hath taken, being induced thereto by fraude and guile, doth binde conscience? Ans. If it bee still a thing lawfull, and bring nothing but priuate losse, it is to be kept. When the Gibeonites had by a fraud brought Iosue to make a league with them, & to binde it with an oath he and the Princes of the people answer them thus: We haue sworne vnto him by the Lord God of Israel now therefore we may not touch them, Ios. 9. 19. And 300. years after, when Saul slew certaine of the Gibeonites against this oath, the plague was vpon the people of Israel 3. years, and was not till certain persons of Sauls family for a recompence were put to death, 2. Sam. 21. 6. 9.

Quest. III. Whether an oath made by feare or compulsion bind in conscience? For Example: a theife disappointed of the bootie which he looked for, binds the true man by a solemne oath, vpon paine of present death, to fetch and deliuer vnto him some portion of money, as 100. or 200. crownes for the redeeming of his life. Well, the oath is taken, and the question is, whether it bind him or not to performe his promise? An answer may be this: some a Protestant diuines think it doth bind: some againe thinke no; but I take it the safest course to hold the meane betweene bothon this manner. The oath seems to bind, and is so be performed: neither is it against the good of the common-wealth (for then it were lawfull) but it is rather a furtherance, in that a member thereof is preserved: and the losses which follow are only priuate to the man, rather to be endured then losse of life. Yet that a remedy may be had of this priuate iniurie, and that a publicke mischief may be prevented, the partie is to reueale the matter to the Magistrate, whose office it is to punish robbers, and to order all things according to equity, for the common good. But if the case fall out, that the man thorough exceeding feare, doe further sweare to keepe silence, I see not how his oath may bee kept, except he be sure that nothing will ensue thereof, but a priuate damage to himselfe. For otherwise, perpetuall silence seems to be a secret consenting to the robber, and an occasion that others fall into the like danger and hazard of their liues.

Againe, in fixe cases an oath binds nothing at all. I. If it be made of a thing that is flat against the word of God. For all the power of binding which it hath, is by the word of God: & therefore when it is against Gods will, it hath no power to constrain. And it is an old received rule, that an oath must not bee a bond of iniquitie. Hereupon Dauid when hee made a rash oath to kill Nabal and all his household, reioyced when he had occasion offered by Achish to breake the same, 1. Sam. 25. 32. And though he sware to Shemi, that he would saue his life, 2. Sam. 19. 23. yet afterward vpon better consideration (as it may seeme) hee commanded his sonne Salomon to put him to death, as one that had long agoe defuered the same, 1. King. 2. 9. And Herod was farre deceiued, that thought hee was bound by his oath to giue to the damnell Iohn Baptists head in a platter, Math. 14. 7. I. If it be against the good and wholesome lawes of any kingdom or coun.

tre, wherof a man is a member, it bindes not at all: because on the contrary, Gods commandment bindes vs to keep the good laws of me. III. If it be made by such persons as want sufficient reason & discretio, as yong childre, fools, mad men. For the conscience cannot indeede be bound, where the vnderstanding cannot discern what is done. IV. If it be made of such as haue no power to bind themselves, it bindes not: because it is made against the law of nature, which is, that he which is not in his owne power cannot bind himselfe. Hence it follows, that Papists erre grossly when they teach, that a child may enter into any rule or order of religion, yea bind himselfe thereto by oath, & the oath to bee good, flat against his parents consent. Num. 30. 4. If a woman vow vnto the Lord, bind her selfe by a bond, being in her fathers house in time of her youth, &c. v. 6. If her father disallow her the same day that he heareth all her vows & bonds, they shall not be of value. And an ancient Council decreed, that al children that vpon pretence of Gods worship should depart from their parents, and not doe them due reuerence, should be accursed. Secondly, they erre, in that they teach that the promise made priuately by a child in way of marriage, without and against consent of wife and careful parents, binds them: whereas indeed, if this promise were further bound by an oath, it could not stand: because children vnder government & tuition of parents, cannot giue themselves. V. It bindes not if it be made of a thing that is out of a mans power, as if a man sweare to his friend to giue him another mans goods. VI. If at the first it were lawfull and afterward by some means become either impossible or vnlawfull, it binds not conscience. For whe it becomes impossible, then we must falsely thinke, that God from heauen frees a man from his oath. And when it begins to be vnlawfull, then it ceaseth to bind, because the binding vertue is onely in and from the word of God. For example: A king bindes himselfe by oath to a forraigne Christian Prince to find him men and money to defend his people against all enemies. This oath is lawfull. Well, afterward the Prince becomes a professed enemy to him, his religion, and people: and then the kings oath becomes vnlawfull & binds him not: because the word forbids there should be any league of amitie with Gods enemies: though there may be leagues of concord with them. Seeing a lawfull oath must bind conscience, though a man be deceived, & great losses follow, it shews in how great reuerence we should haue Gods name, and with what care and consideration take an oath. And by this wee must be aduertised to take heed of customeable swearing in our common talke, whether our oaths be great or small. We must thinke of an oath as a part of Gods worship: nay, the H. Ghost often puts it for the whole worship of God: Ex. 19. 18. In that day shall five cities in the land of Egypt speake the language of Canaan, and shall sweare by the Lord of hosts, that is, acknowledge and worship him. Jer. 12. 16. If they will learne the waies of my people, to sweare by my name, The Lord lieth, then shall they be built in the midst of my people. This serueth to shew vnto vs, that such as giue themselves to swearing, want religion & conscience: and that those families in which there is rife of oathes, abandon care of religion, and banish God out of their houses. And indeed it is a very hard thing for the common sweare to auoyd common periuice. If we see a man hold vp his hand at the barre of an earthly iudge, we pittie him, and are forrie for him: Oh then, why doe we not pittie blasphemers and common swearers? For with God they are no better then rebels, that hold vp their hands at the barre of his iudgement seat, as guiltie malefactours. Exod. 20. 7. Augustine saith well, They that worship stocks & stones feare to sweare falsely by stones, and doest thou not feare God that is present, God that lieth, God that knoweth, God that taketh reuenge of offenders? but of bad custome, when thou art beleued, thou swearest when none requires it: thou swearest: and when men cannot abide it thou swearest.

Thus much of an oath: now follows a promise, which is either to God, or man: the first is called a vow, the second a single promise.

A vow is taken three waies. First, generally for a promise of morall obedience: and this vow is first made in Baptisme, and continued in the Lords Supper, as in the spiritual exercises of imocation and repentance. It is called of Per. 1. Epist. 3. 21. the stipulation which a good conscience makes to God.

This kind of vow binds all and every member of the Church of God. And the not keeping of it is the common sin of the world: for most men make not conscience to perform that which they haue promised to God in Baptisme: and therefore their Baptisme becomes vnto them the sacrifice of fooles, Eccles. 4. 17. But considering we are bound in conscience by this vow, let vs hereafter indeauour to be as good as our word: and that shall be, when we begin to die to our sins, and rise to newnesse of life. There is no man almost but wil seeme to haue care to keep touch with men: what a shame is it then for vs not to keep couenant with God?

Again, a vow is taken for a promise of ceremoniall obedience, whereof read Num. 6. & 30. Levit. 27. This vow is peculiar to the old testament, and did not bind all men, but only such as had peculiar occasion to vow: & therupō bound themselves as the Nazarites & others.

Thirdly, a vow is taken for the performance of some outward and bodily exercises, taken vp of a mans own accord, as being things in a mans owne libertie, without any commandment of God: as the keeping of set times of fast, of praying or reading, the performance of set tasks, almes-giuing, abstinence from certain meats and drincks, in the vse whereof, through our owne weaknesse, we feare any occasion of sinne. And this kinde of vow is more peculiar to the new Testament.

Serm. 3. de vitiis Apol.

Self. 1. Of a vow binding.

Self. 11. Of a single promise binding.

Self. 12. How many promises bind conscience.

In the making of it, that it may be warranted, foure things must be obserued: I. It must be agreeable to the word of God: I. I. It must not be against a mans generall or particular calling. III. It must be in a mans power, and not against Christian libertie. I V. It must be so made and be so obserued without any opinion of merit or worship of God, to this end alone, that it may be a meanes to exercise and cherish repentance and inuocation, temperance, patience, and to shew forth thankfulness to God.

A vow thus made binds conscience by vertue of Gods commandment. Eccles. 5. 3. When thou hast vowed a vow to God, deferre not to pay it.

And the vowe once made continues to bind so long as the thing is in force which was the occasion of the vow. For example: A man desirous to practise sobriety and temperance, finds that drinking of wine is hurtfull vnto him: thereupon he vowes to God to drinke no wine: now this vow once made, binds him till the state of his body alter, and hee feels no inconuenience in wine: but then it ceaseth to binde any longer.

Quest. Whether Papists are bound in conscience to keepe the vowes of single life, and voluntarie povertie which they make, or no?

Ans. No. The reasons hereof are these: I. Such vowes are flat against Gods commandment: But if they cannot abstaine, let them marry: for it is better to marry then to burne, 1 Cor. 7. 9. This we aduert you of, that if there were any that would not worke, they should not eate, 2 The. 3. 10.

II. They are not in the power of him that voweth: as for example, to promise perpetuall chastitie in single life. III. They abolish Christian libertie in the vie of the creatures and ordinances of God, as riches, and marriage, meate, drinke, apparell; making that necessarie which God left to our libertie. I V. They are made to this end that men may thereby merit life eternal, and worship God: whereas Paul saith, 1 Tim. 4. 8. Bodily exercise profiteth little: but godlinesse is profitable for all things. Therefore they are better broken then kept.

As for a single promise, it also binds a man according as he will to whom the promise is made; though he be an (a) hereticke or an infidel. As for the purpose of the minde, it binds not, but may vpon conuenient cause, be altered.

Yet we must remember that there are some cases, in which a promise made binds not. I. If it be against Gods word. One saith well, In euill promisesse off thy faith. It is a wicked promise that cannot be performed without an offence. II. If he which makes it want reason or sufficient discretion. III. If he make the promise who cannot binde himselfe: as a child vnder the government of his parents. I V. If a man be induced to make his promise by fraud and guile. V. If the promise being at the first lawfull, become afterward either impossible or vnlawfull.

And though men bee bound in conscience to keepe their promises: yet this hinders not but that there is and may be a good and lawfull vse of Indentures and obligations. For the bond of conscience is between man and God: but the bond of an obligation passeth onely between man and man. When Abraham bought a purchase of Ephron the Hittite, hee payed his money, and made it sure before witness. Gen. 23. 17.

Here wee must consider the general sinne of this age, which is, to speake deceitfully euery one to his neighbour. It is a hard thing to finde a man that will stand to his word, and lawfull promise. It is a rule of Machiavel, that a man may practise many things against his faith, against charitie, and humane, and religion: and that it is not necessary to name these vertues, but to counterfeit and dissemble them. But let all such as feare God make conscience of their word, because they are bound so to doe: and hereby they shall resemble their heavenly Father who is true in all his promises; and they shall also bring forth a notable fruit of the spirit, Gal. 5. 22.

Hitherto I haue spoken of the cause that maketh conscience to giue iudgement. Now followeth the manner of iudgement.

Conscience giues iudgement in or by a kinde of reasoning or disputing, called a practi call syllogisme. Romans 2. 15. Their reasoning, (sui rationis), &c. accusing or excusing each other.

In the making of this reason conscience hath two assistants: minde, and memorie.

The minde is the store-house and keeper of all manner of rules and principles. It may be compared to a booke of law, in which are set downe the penall statutes of the land. The dutie of it is to preferre and present to the conscience rules of diuine law, whereby it is to giue iudgement.

Memorie serues to bring to minde the particular actions which a man hath done or not done, that conscience may determine of them. Now conscience assisted by these twaine, proceeds in iudgement by a kinde of argumentation: an example whereof we may take from the conscience of a murderer, thus:

Every murderer is cursed, faith the minde: Thou art a murderer, faith conscience assisted by memorie:

Ergo, Thou art cursed, faith conscience, and so giueth her sentence.

To proceede: Conscience giues iudgement either of things past or things to come.

Of things past two waies, either by accusing and condemning, or by excusing and absolving. Rom. 2. 15.

To accuse is an action of conscience, giuing iudgement that this or that thing was euill done: & that still by reasoning on this manner: Every murderer is a sinner:

This thy action is murder: Ergo, This thy action is a sinne.

To condemne is another action of the conscience.

Self. 12. How conscience giues iudgement.

Minde tells what is law.

Memory giues euidence.

Self. 13. How many waies conscience giues iudgement.

ence joyned with the former, whereby it giueth iudgement that a man by this or that sinne hath deferred death on this manner.

Every murderer deserueth a double death. Thou art a murderer:

Ergo, Thou hast deferred a double death.

These two actions are very forcible and terrible: for they are the compunctions and prickings that bee in the heart. Act. 2. 37. they are the stripes, as it were, of any iron rod, whereby the heart of a man smiteth it selfe, 2 Sam. 24. 10. And by reason of them, conscience is compared to a worme that neuer dieth, but alwaies lies gnawing and grabbing, and pulling at the heart of man, Mark. 9. 44. and causeth more paine and anguish, than any disease in the world can doe.

The time when conscience performs these actions, is not before the sinne, or in the act of sinning, but especially after the sinne is done and past. Reason, 1. Before a man sinneth, the diuill doth exhortate the fault and make sinne to be no sinne. 11. Corrupt affections doe for a time so blinde and ouercast iudgement, that it doth not see or at the least consider what is good or bad, till afterward.

Neither doth conscience accuse and condemn only for the time present, but also long after a thing is done. The consciences of Ioseph brethren accused them 22. yeeres after they had sold him into Egypt, Gen. 42. 21.

The effect of the accusing and condemning conscience, is to stirre vp sundry passions and motions in the heart, but specially these three.

The first is shame, which is an affliction of the heart, whereby a man is grieved and displeased with himselfe, that he hath done any euill, and this shame sheweth it selfe by the rising of the blood from the heart to the face.

Yet we must here remember that euill such as haue the pardon of their finnes, and are not guiltie, may be ashamed and blush, Rom. 6. 21. What fruit had yee in those things, whereof now yee blush, or be ashamed? Yet for all this, euill those which are most guiltie, may be without all shame, Ier. 6. 15. Were they ashamed when they had committed abomination? nay, they were not ashamed, neither could they haue any shame, because they are growne to some great height in sinne. Eph. 4. 18.

The second passion is sadnesse and sorrow: commonly thought to be no being else but melancholy: but betweene them twaine, there is great difference. Sorrow, that comes by melancholy ariseth only of that humour annoying the body: but this other sorrow ariseth of a mans finnes, for which his conscience accuseth him. Melancholy may be cured by physicke: this sorrow cannot be cured by any thing, but by the blood of Christ.

The third is fearre, in causing whereof, conscience is very forcible. If a man had all the delights & pleasures that heart can with, they cannot doe him any good if conscience bee guiltie. Belshazzar when he was in the middelt

A of all his delights, and saw the hand writing vpon the wall; his countenance changed, his thoughts troubled him, his joynts loosed, and his knees smote together, Dan. 5. 6. Yet the guiltie conscience will make a man afraid, if hee fee but a worne peepe out of the ground: or a silly creature goe crosse his way; or if hee fee but his owne shadow on a fuddaine, or if hee doe but forecalt an euill with himselfe, Pro. 28. 1. The wicked flyeth when no man pursueth him.

Terrours of conscience, which are more vehement, cause other passions in the body, as exceeding heate, like that which is in the fit of an ague, the rising of the entrails towards the mouth, and swooning as experience hath often shewed. And the writer of the booke of Wisdom saith truly, cap. 17. 10. It is a fearful thing when malice is condemned by her owne testimony, and a conscience that is touched, doth ever forecast cruell things. For feare is nothing else, but the betraying of the succours, that reason offereth, &c. They that did induce the (a) night that was intolerable, &c. sometimes are troubled with monstrous visions, and sometimes they swooned, as though their owne saules should betray them: for a sudden feare not looked for, came vpon them.

The fourth is desperation, whereby a man through the vehement and constant accusation of his conscience comes to bee out of all hope of the pardon of his finnes. This made Saul, Achitophel, and Iudas to hang themselves; this makes many in these daies to doe the like; as appeareth by the declarations of such as haue bin preuented, when they were about to hang or drowne themselves, or to cut their owne throats.

The last is a perturbation or disquietnesse of the whole man: whereby all the powers and faculties of the whole man are forth of order. Esa. 57. 20. The wicked is like the raging of the sea that cannot rest, whose waters cast vp mire & dirt.

Thus much of the two first actions of conscience, which are to accuse and condemn: the second followeth to accuse and absolve.

The excuse, is an action of the conscience giuing iudgement that the thing is well done.

To absolve, is an action of the conscience giuing iudgement that a man is free and cleare from fault, and so from punishment.

From these two actions arise some speciall affections: 1. boldnesse and confidence, Pro. 28. 1. The righteous are bold as a lion. 11. Joy and reioycing, 2 Cor. 1. 12. Our reioycing is the testimony of my conscience, that in all simplicity and godly purpasse I haue had my conuersation in the world. Hence it is said, that a good conscience is a continual feast, Pro. 15. 15.

Hitherto I haue spoken how conscience giues iudgement of things done and past; now followeth her iudgement of things to be done.

Conscience giues iudgement of things to come, by foretelling, & (as it were) saying inwardly in the heart, that the thing may bee well done. Of this kinde of iudgement every man may haue experience in himselfe, when hee is about to enterprise any businesse either good or bad.

By this we may see the goodness of God to all men. If a man being to make an vknowne journey, should finde one that would goe with him and shew him the way, and all the turnings thereof, hee could not but take it for a point of comferte. Well, we are pilgrims in this world, our life is our journey: God also hath appointed our conscience to be our companion and guide, to shew vs what course we may take, and what we may not.

And here it may be noted, that in all things to be done, conscience is of great force and beares a great stroke. For this is the beginning of a good worke, that the conscience first of all giues her iudgement truly, that the thing may be done, & is acceptable to God, Rom. 14. 23. Whatsoever is not of faith, (that is, whatsoever is not doct of asted perswasion in iudgement and conscience out of Gods word, howsoever men iudge of it) is sinne. Again, God regards not the outward pompe of the action, or the doer, but obedience, and especially the obedience of the heart: therefore vnlesse the conscience well informed first of all approve the thing to bee good and agreeable to Gods will, it can be nothing else but a sinne. And he that shall doe a thing, because it is good in his owne eyes, not knowing that God doth allow of it, preferres himselfe before God, and disobeyes, as the servant that in his masters house will not doe his masters will but his owne will.

From this former rule arise three other: the first, Whatsoever is done with a doubting conscience is a sinne. For example: some beleeuers in the Primitive Church held, that still after the ascension of Christ there remained a difference betwene meate and meate, and therefore it was a scruple to them to eate of sundry kinds of meates: now put the case, that by example they are drawne on to eate swines flesh; or some other thing which they thinke is forbidden; this done, there is no question but they haue sinned, as Paul proueth, Rom. 14. 14. I know and am perswaded through the Lords Iesus, that there is nothing vnclane of it selfe: but vnto him that iudgeth any thing vnclane, it is vnclane: and v. 23. He that doubteth is condemned, if hee eate, because hee eateth not of faith.

The second, Whatsoever thing is done in or with an erroneous conscience, it is a sinne. For example: in the primitive Church diuers of the Gentiles held this error, that fornicatio was a thing indifferent, & therefore conscience told the that they might do it: and yet neuertheless fornicatio in it was a sin, because conscience erred in her iudgement, and euill remains euill, though conscience say the contrary a thousand times.

The third, What is done (a) against conscience though it erre, and be deceived, it is sin in the doer. Example. An Anabaptist holding it vtterly vnlawfull to sweare, is brought before a magistrate; and vrged either through feare or some like cause, takes an oath, and that against his own conscience: now the question is, whether he hath sinned or no? Ans. He hath indeede sinned, not so much because he hath taken an oath, for that is the ordinance of God: but because he hath takn an oath in a bad manner, that is against his conscience, & therefore not in faith.

Thus it is manifest that conscience beares a great stroke in all things that are to be said or done. And hereby we are aduertised of many things. First, if a thing done without good direction of conscience, be a sinne, then much more that which is done without good direction of Gods word, is a flat sin: for without direction of Gods word, conscience can giue no good direction. And if God will hold that for a sinne which is done without direction of his word; then no doubt Gods word ministers sufficient direction for all actions whatsoever: so as if a man bee but to receive a morrell of bread into his mouth, it can so farre forth direct him that in doing of it, he shall be able to please God. If this were not true, mancase were most miserable. For then we should sin in manifold actions, & that without remedie. And here by the Word, I mean nothing but the Scriptures of the old and new Testament, which containe in themselves sufficient direction for all actions. As for the law of nature though it afford indeede some direction; yet it is corrupt, imperfect, vncertaine: & whatsoever is right and good therein, is contained in the written word of God. And as for the best vnwritten traditions, let all the Papists in the world answer if they can, how I may in conscience be perfwaded that they are the word of God. If they say that the ancient Fathers of the Primitive Church auouch in their writings that they are Apostolical traditions; I answer againe, how shall I know and be certaine in conscience that the Fathers subiect to error, in saying so, haue not erred?

Again, we learne hence, that a good intention is not sufficient to make a good worke, vnlesse withall conscience giue iudgement that God doth approve the action. This shewes the ignorance of our people that when as in their dealings they runne vpon a good meaning, then alwaies they thinke they doe well and please God.

Thirdly, hence it appeares that all things deuised by man for the worship of God, are flat finnes; because conscience cannot say of them that they please God. Esa. 29. 13. Mark. 7. 7.

Lastly, wee learne here that ignorance of Gods will and word, is a dangerous thing, and makes the life of man to abound, yea to flow with a sea of offences against God. Men commonly thinke that if they keepe themselves from periuire, blasphemie, murder, theft, whoredome, al is wel with them: but the truth is, that so long as they lue in ignorance, they want right & true direction of conscience out of Gods word, and therefore their best actions are sins, even their eating and drinking, their sleeping and waking, their buying and selling, their speech and silence, yea their praying and serving of God. For they doe these actions either of custome, or example, or necessity, as beasts do, and not of faith, because they know not Gods will touching things to be done or left undone. The consideration of this point should make every man most careful to seeke for knowledge of Gods word, and daily to increase in it, that he may in all his affaires have Gods lawes to be the men of his counsell, Psa. 119. 14. that he may give heed to them as to the light shining in a darke place, 2 Pet. 1. 19. that he may say with Peter, when Christ commanded him to Luch forth into the deepe, and to cast forth his net, Lord, we have bene all night, and have caught nothing: yet in thy word will I let downe my net. Luk. 5. 5.

CHAP. III.

Of the kinds of conscience: and of conscience regenerate.

Conscience is either good or bad. Good conscience is that which rightly according to Gods word, excuseth & comforteth. For the excellencie, goodnes, and dignity of conscience, stands not in accusing, but in excusing. And by doing any sinne whatsoeuer to give any occasion to the conscience to accuse and condemne, is to wound it and to offend it. Thus Paul saith, that the Corinthians wounded the consciences of their weak brethren, when they vsed their libertie as an occasion of offence to them, 1 Cor. 8. 9. 12. Again, he calleth a good conscience, a conscience without offence, that is, which hath no stop or impediment to hinder it from excusing, Tit. 2. 19.

Good conscience, is either good by creation or regeneration.

Good by creation was the conscience of Adam, which in the estate of innocency did only excuse & could not accuse him for any thing: though it may be, an aptnes to accuse was not wanting, if afterward an occasiō should be offered. And hence we haue further direction to consider what a good conscience is, namely, such an one as by the order set downe in the Creation, excuseth only without accusing. Yea to excuse is a defect in true conscience, following after the first creation. For naturally there is an agreement & harmony between the parts and the whole; but if the conscience should naturally accuse, there should be a dissent and disagreement and diuision between the conscience and the man himselfe.

Regenerate conscience is that which being corrupt by nature, is renewed and purged by faith in the blood of Christ. For to the regenerating of the conscience, there is required a conuersion or change; because by nature all mens consciences since the fall are euill, and none are good but by grace. The instrument serving to make this change is faith: Tit. 2. 11. 12. Faith purifieth the heart. The meritorious cause is the blood of Christ. Heb. 9. 14. How much more shall the blood of Christ, &c. purge our conscience from dead works to serue the living God.

The propertie of regenerate conscience is two-fold: Christian libertie, and certaintie of saluation. Because both these haue their place, not in the outward man, but in the spirit and conscience.

Christian libertie, is a spiritall and holy freedom purchased by Christ.

I say, it is spiritall, first, to put a difference betweene it and ciuill libertie, which stands in outward & bodily freedom and priuiledges: secondly, to confute the Iewes, that looke for earthly libertie by Christ; & the Anabaptists, who imagine a freedom from all authoritie of Magistrates in the kingdome of Christ.

Again, I say it is an holy freedom, to confute the Libertines, who thinke that by the death of Christ they haue libertie to liue as they list.

Lastly, I say it is purchased by Christ, to shew the authoritie thereof. Gal. 5. 1. Stand fast in the libertie wherewith Christ hath made you free. And to confute the Papists, whose doctrine in effect is thus much, that this libertie is procured indeed by Christ, and is continued partly by Christ, and partly by the man himselfe.

Christian libertie hath three parts.

The first is freedom from the iustification by the morall law. For he that is a member of Christ, is not bound in conscience to bring the perfect righteousness of the law in his owne person for his iustification before God. Gal. 5. 1. with vers. 3.

Hence it followeth, that he that is a Christian, is likewise freed from the curse and condemnation of the law. Rom. 8. 1. There is no condemnation to them that are in Christ. Gal. 3. 13. Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, when he was made a curse for vs.

By this first part of Christian libertie, it appeares that there cannot bee any iustification of a sinner by workes of grace before God. For he that will be iustified but by one worke, is debter to the whole law, Gal. 3. 3. but no man that is a member of Christ, is debter to the whole law; for his libertie is to be free in that point: therefore no man is iustified so much as by one worke of his owne.

The second part, is freedom from the rigor of the law, which exacteth perfect obedience, & condemneth all imperfection. Rom. 6. 14. Sin hath no more dominion ouer you: for ye are not vnder the law, but vnder grace. 1 Ioh. 5. 3. This is the loue of God, that wee keepe his commandments: and his commandments are not grievous.

Hence it followeth, that God will accept of our imperfect obedience, if it be sincere: yea he accepteth the will, desire, and endeavour to obey for obedience it selfe. Malac. 3. 17. And I will spare them as a man spareth his owne sonne that serneth him.

The third part, is that the conscience is freed from the bond of the ceremoniall law. Gal. 3. 25. But after that faith is come, we are no more vnder a scholemaster. Eph. 2. 14. 15. Christ hath broken the stop of the partition wall, in abrogating through his flesh, the law of commandments which standeth in ordinances, Col. 2. 14. And hath put out the band-writing of ordinances, which was against vs. ver. 16. Let no man therefore condemne you in meat and drinke, or in respect of an holy day, or of the new Moone, &c.

Hence it followeth, that all Christians may freely without scruple of conscience, vse all things indifferent, so it be, the manner of vsing them be good.

And first, when I say that all may vse them, I vnderstand a two-fold vse; naturall and spiritual.

The naturall vse, is either to releue our necessities, or for honest delight. Thus the Psalmist saith, that God giues not onely bread to strengthen the heart of man, but also wine to make glad the heart, & oyle to make the face to shine, Psal. 104. 15. and God hath put into his creatures infinite varieties of colours, flavours, tastes, and formes, to this end that men might take delight in them. Hence it follows, that Recreation is lawfull, and a part of Christian libertie, if it be well vsed. By Recreation, I vnderstand exercises and sports seruing to refresh either the body or the mind: & that they may be well vsed, two rules especially must be remembered. The first, that lawfull recreation stands onely in the vse of things indifferent. For if the things bee commanded by God, there is no sporting in them; or if they be forbidden, there is no vsing of them at all. Vpon this ground, sundry kinds of recreation are to be neglected. As 1. the dauncing commonly vsed in these daies, in which men and women, young men and maidens, all mixed together, dance to the sound of the instrument or voice in time & measure, with many wanton gestures, and that in solemne meetings after great feasts. This exercise cannot be numbered among things indifferent: for experience shewes, that it hath bene vially either a fruit or a follower of great wickednes, as idolatry, fornication, drunkennes: hereupon, one well compared it to a circle, whose center was the diuell.

Again, if we must giue an account of every idle word, then also of every idle gesture and pace: and what account can be giuen of these paces back-ward and forward, of caprings, lumps, gambolds, turnings, with many other friskes of lightnes & vanitie, more becoming goats and apes, of whom they are commonly vsed, then men? Whereas Solomon esteemed laughter as madnes, he would (no doubt) haue condemned our common lasciuious dauncing much more for madnesse, laughter being but the least part of it. II. Dicing: which is precisely the casting of a lot, not to be vsed at our pleasures, but in matters of weight and importance. And of this kinde are all games, the ground wherof are not the sleight of mans wit, but lot alone. III. Playes and Enterludes, that stand in the representation of the vices and misdemeanour of the world. For if it be not lawfull to name vices, vnlawful it be in the way of dislike, Eph. 5. 3. much lesse is it warrantable to gesture and represent vice in the way of recreation and delight. The second rule is, that recreation must be sparing, moderate and lawfull vse of things indifferent, according to the rules following.

The spiritall vse is when we take occasion by the creatures to meditate & speake of heavenly things: as, vpon the sight of the vine & the branches thereof, to consider the mystical coniunction between Christ & his Church: by the sight of the rain-bow, to thinke of the promise of God of not drowning the world by waters: and by any thing that befalls, to take occasion to consider in it the wisdom, goodness, justice, mercy, prouidence of God, &c.

I add further, that things indifferent, as bondage, outward liberty, riches, poverty, single estate, marriage, meat, drinke, apparel, buildings, may be vsed freely, because they are neither commanded by God nor forbidden: and in themselves considered, they may be vsed or not vsed without breach of conscience.

The right manner of vsing them, is to sanctifie them by the word and prayer, 1 Tim. 4. 3, 4. and not onely some of them, but the vse of them all. Meate, drinke, and marriage are thus to be sanctified, as the place before noted declareth. Paul sanctified his journey on this manner, Act. 21. 5. And the Iewes were commanded to dedicate their houses at the first entrance, Deut. 20. 5. By this dedication we may well vnderstand not onely the letting of the house, or the prouiding of a tenant, but also the sanctifying of it by invocation of Gods name, that by his blessing, the place with the roomes thereof might serue for their benefit & comfort. And on this manner to bless our dwelling places when we first enter into the, is the best way that can be to preferue them from the casualties of fire within, & lightening from heauen, and from the annoyance and molestation of euill spirits, and other iudgements of God.

Things indifferent are sanctified by Gods word, because it shewes what things we may vse, and what things we may not: and if wee may vse them, in what manner it is to be done. And to this purpose the Scripture affords foure rules.

The first, that all things must bee done to Gods glory, 1 Cor. 10. 31. Whether ye eate or drinke, or whatsoeuer ye do, do all to the glory of God. And that this may be performed, things indifferent must be vsed as signes and tables, in which we may shew forth the graces and vertues that God hath wrought in the heart. For example: we must looke make our apparel both for matter and fashion, and so weare it, that it may in some sort set forth to the beholder our modestie, sobrietie, frugalitie, humilitie, &c. that hereby he may be occasioned to say, behold a graue, sober, modest person: and so of the rest. And the common Sinne of this time is, that meate, drinke, apparel, buildings are vsed as banners displayed to set forth to the world, mans ryot, excesse, and pride of heart.

The second. Wee must suffer our selues lawfully to be limited and restrained in the ouer-much or ouer-common vse of things indifferent. I say the common vse, because it is not Gods will vtterly and absolutely to barre vs of the vse of such things. Now the restrainers of our vse, are two; the first is the law of charitie. For as charitie giues place to pietie, so charitie giues place to the vse of outward things, giues place to charitie. And the law of charitie is, that we should not vse things indifferent to the hurt or offence of our brother, 1 Cor. 8. 13.

Quest. Whether may a man vse his libertie before such as are weak: and yet not perfwade of their libertie. Ans. Some are weak of simple ignorance, or because they haue bene decaued by the abuse of long custome: & yet are willing to be reformed. And before such we must abstaine; left by example wee draw them to sinne, by giuing occasion to them of doing that whereof they doubt. Again, some are weak vpon affected ignorance or of malice, and in the presence of such we neede not abstaine. Vpon this ground Paul who circumcised Timothee would not circumcise Titus.

The second restrainer, is the wholsome lawes of men, whether Ciuill or Ecclesiasticall. For howsoeuer things indifferent, after the law is once made of them, remaine still indifferent in themselves: yet obedience to the law is necessary, and that for conscience sake. Act. 15. 28.

The third. We must vse things indifferent so far forth as they shall further vs in godliness. For we ought to doe all things not only to the edification of others, but also of our owne selues. And therefore it is a flat abuse of Christian libertie, for men to topamper their bodies with meate and drinke, that thereby they disfigure themselves to heare Gods word, to pray, to giue counsell, to doe the ordinary workes of their callings.

The fourth. Things indifferent must bee vsed within compasse of our callings, that is, according to our ability, degree, state, and condition of life. And it is a common abuse of this libertie in our daies, that the meane man will be in meate, drinke, apparel, building, as the Gentleman; the Gentleman as the Knight; the Knight as the Lord or Earle.

Now when things indifferent are sanctified to vs by the word, when our consciences are refolued out of the word that wee may vse them, so it bee in the manner before named, and according to the rules here set downe.

They are sanctified by prayer, when wee craue at Gods hands the right vse of them, and hauing obtained the same, giue him thanks therefore. Coloss. 3. 17. What soeuer ye doe in word or dede, doe all in the name of the Lord Iesus, giuing thanks to God the Father by him.

Thus much of Christian libertie, by which we are admonished of sundry duties: 1. To labour to become good members of Christ, of what estate or condition soeuer we be. The libertie of the city of Rome made not only the Romanes borne, but euen the men of other countries seek to be citizens thereof. Act. 22. 28. The Priuiledges of the Iewes in Persia made many become Iewes. Heb. 8. 17. Other much more should the spiritual libertie of conscience purchased by the blood of Christ, moue vs to seeke for the kingdome of heauen, & that we might become good members thereof. II. Again, by this we are taught to studie, learne, & loue the Scriptures, in which our liberties are recorded. We make account of our charters whereby wee hold our earthly liberties, yea we gladly read them & acquaint our selues with them; what a shame then will it be for vs, to make no more account of the word of God, that is the law of spiritual libertie? 1 Iam. 2. 12. III. Lastly, we are aduertised most heartily to obey & serue God according to his word, for that is the end of our libertie: the seruant doth all his businesse more cherefully, in the hope and expectation he hath of libertie. Again, our libertie most of all appears in our seruite and obedience; because the seruite of God is perfect freedome: as on the contrary in the disobedience of Gods commandments, stands our spiritual bondage.

The second propertie of conscience is an infallible certaintie of the pardon of sin and life euertlasting. That this point may be cleared, I will handle the question betwene vs and the Papists touching the certenty of saluation. And that I may proceede in order, we must distinguish the kinds of certenty. First of all certenty is either Vnfallible or Coniectural: Vnfallible, wherein a man is neuer disappointed: Coniectural, which is not so euident, because it is grounded onely vpon likelihoods. The second all Papists grant, but the first they deny in the matter of saluation. Again, certenty is either of faith, or experimental, which Papists call moral. Certenty of faith, is whereby any thing is certainly beleueed: and it is either generall or speciall. Generall certenty, isto beleue assuredly that the word of God is truth it selfe, and this both wee and Papists allow. Speciall certenty, is by faith to apply the promise of saluation to our selues, and to beleue without doubt, that remission of sinnes by Christ & life euertlasting belong vnto vs. This kind of certenty we hold and maintaine, and Papists with one consent deny it: acknowledging no assurance but by hope. Moral certenty, is that which proceeds from sanctification and good workes, as signes and tokens of true faith. This we both allow, yet with some difference. For they esteeme all certenty that comes by workes to be vnertaine and often to deceiue: but we doe otherwise, if the workes be done in vprightnesse of heart.

The question then is, whether a man in this life may ordinarily without reuelation, be vnfallibly certaine of his owne saluation, first of all & principally by faith, & then secondly, by such workes as are vnseparable companions of faith. We hold this for a cleare and euident principle of the word of God, and contrariwise the Papists denie it wholly. I will therefore proue the truth by some few arguments, and then answer the common obiections.

Arg. 1. That which the Spirit of God doth first of all testifie in the heart and conscience of any man, & then afterward fully confirm, is to be beleueed of the same mar, as vnfallibly certaine: but the Spirit of God first of all doth testifie to some men, namely true beleueers, that they are the sons of God: and afterward confirms the same vnto them. Therefore men are vnfallibly to beleue their owne adoption. Now that the Spirit of God doth giue this testimonie to the conscience of man, the Scripture is more then plaine, Rom. 8. 15. Ye haue receiued the spirit of adoption whereby ye cry, Abba, Father. The same spirit beareth witness with our spirit that we are the sonnes of God. Answer is made, that this testimonie of the Spirit is giuen onely by an experiment or feeling of an inward delight or peace, which breeds in vs not an infallible but a coniectural certenty. And I answer againe, that this exposition is flat against the text: For the Spirit of adoption is said here not to make vs to thinke or speake, but to cry Abba, Father: and crying to God as to a father argues courage, confidence, and boldnes. Again the same Spirit of adoption is opposed to the spirit of bondage causing feare: and therefore it must needs be a Spirit giuing assurance or liberty, & by that means driving away distrustful feares. And the end, no doubt, why the holy Ghost comes into the heart as a witness of adoption is, that the truth in this case hidden and therefore doubtful, might be cleared and made manifest. If God himselfe haue appointed that a doubtful truth among men, shall be confirmed and put out of doubt by the mouth of two or three witnesses, it is absurd to thinke that the testimonie of God himselfe knowing all things, & taking vpon him to be a witness, should be coniectural. Saint Bernard hath learned better diuinity, whē he said, Who is iust, but he that being loved of God, returns loue to him againe? which is not done but by the Spirit of God (a reueling by faith vnto man the eternal purpose of God concerning his saluation in time to come: which reuelation undoubtedly is nothing else but an infusion of spiritual grace: by which, whilest the deeds of the flesh are mortified, he man is prepared to the kingdome of God, receiving withall, that whereby he may presume that he is loved, and lone again.

Furthermore, that the spirit of God doth not only perswade men of their adoption, but also confirme the same vnto the, it is most manifest. Grieve not the Spirit whereby ye are sealed vnto the day of redemption. And 1. v. 13. After ye beleueed, ye were sealed with the Spirit of promise, which is the earnest of our inheritance. 2. Cor. 1. 22. It is God that hath sealed vs, and giuen vs the earnest of his Spirit in our hearts. Here the wordes of sealing & earnest, are to be considered. For things that passe to and fro among men though they bee in question, yet when the scale is put to, they are made out of doubt: & therefore when God by his spirit is said to scale the promise in the heart of euery particular beleueer, it signifieth that he giues vnto them euident assurance that the promise of life belongs vnto them. And the giuing of earnest is an vnfallible token vnto him that receiue it, that the bargain is ratified, and that he shall receive the things agreed vpon. And it were a great dishonour vnto God, to thinke that the earnest of his own spirit giuen vnto vs, should be an euidence of eternall life, not vnfallible, but coniectural.

Arg. 2. The faith of the elect, or sauing faith, is a certain perswasion, & a particular perswasion of remission of sin and life euertlasting. Touching the first of these twaine, namely, that faith is a certain perswasion, yea that certaintie is of the nature of faith, it appears by expresse testimonie of Scripture, Mat. 14. 31. O thou of little faith, why hast thou doubted? and 21. v. 21. If ye haue faith, and doubt not, I am, I. 6. Let him aske in faith, and neuer doubt: for he that wavereth is like a waue of the sea, soft of the wind, & carried away. Rom. 4. 20. Neither did he doubt of the promise of God through unbeliefe, but was strengthened in faith. I will not stand longer on this point which is not denied of any.

Touching the second part of my reason, that faith is a particular perswasion applying things beleueed: I proue it thus. The propertie of faith is to receive the promise, Gal. 3. 14. and the thing promised, which is Christ with his spirit, Ioh. 1. 12. Now Christ is received by a particular application, as will appear, if we do but marke the end and vse of the ministry of the word, and of the Sacraments. For when God giues any blessing to man, it is to be received by man, as God giueth it. Now God giues Christ, or at the least offereth him, not generally to mankind, but to the severall and particular members of the Church. In the Lords Supper, as in euery Sacrament, there is a relation or analogie between the outward signes, and the things signified. The action of the minister giuing the bread and wine to the hands of particular communicants, representeth Gods action in giuing Christ with his benefits to the same particular communicants. Again, the action of receiuing the bread and wine particularly, representeth another spiritual action of the beleueing heart, which applieth Christ vnto it selfe, for the pardon of sin and life euertlasting. Papists yeild not this: yet if they refuse to maintaine this analogy, they ouerturne the Sacrament, and dissent from Antiquitie.

Augustine faith, The body of Christ is ascended into heauen: some may answer, and say, How shall I hold him being absent? how shall I reach up mine hands to heauen, that I may lay hold of him sitting there? Send up thy faith, and thou hast laid hold of him. And what is more common then another saying of his? What meanest thou to prepare thy belly and teeb? Beleue and thou hast eaten. Again, Eph. 3. 12. Paul faith, By Christ wee haue boldesse and entrance with confidence by faith in him. In which words are set downe two notable effects and fruits of faith: boldnesse, and confidence. Boldnesse is, when a poore sinner dare come into the pfect of God, not being terrified with the threatnings of the law, nor with the consideration of his owne vaworthinesse, nor with the manifold assaults of the diuell: and it is more then certaintie of Gods fauour. Now whereas Papists answer, that this liberty of boldnes in coming vnto God, proceeds of a generall faith, they are farre wide. It is not possible that a general perfwasion of the goodnes and truth of God, and of his mercie in Christ, should breed confidence and boldnesse in the heart of a guiltie sinner, and no example can be brought thereof. This generall faith concerning the articles of our beleefe, was no doubt in Cain, Saul, Achitophel, Indes, yea in the diuell himselfe: and yet they despaired, and some of them made away themselves: and the diuell for all his faith trembleth before God. Wherefore that faith which is the root of these excellent vertues, of boldnes and confidence, must needs be a speciall faith, that is, a large and plentifull perfwasion of the pardon of a mans owne finnes, and of life eueralasting. Againe, Heb. 11. 1. faith is called hypofis, that is, a fultance or subfistence of things hoped for: where faith in the matter of our saluation, and other like things, is made to go beyond hope: for hope waits for things to come, till they haue a being in the person hoping; but faith in present giues a subfisting or being vnto them. This can not be that generall faith (of Papists termed Catholike) for it comes short of hope, but it must needs be a speciall faith that makes vs vndoubtedly beleue our owne election, adoption, iustificacion, and saluation by Christ. And to this purpose haue some of the fathers said excellent well. Augustine faith, I demand of thee, O sinner, dost thou beleue Christ or not? thou saiest, I beleue. What beleuest thou? that he can freely forgive thee all thy finnes? Thou hast that which thou hast beleued. Anbrose faith, This is a thing or damned of God, that he which beleueth in Christ, should be saved without any works, by faith alone freely receiving remission of finnes. And with Anbrose I ioyne the testimonie of Hicobius vpon Leuiticus, who faith, God pitying mankind, who be saw it disabled for the fulfilling of the workes of the law, willed that man should be saved by grace, without the workes of the law. And grace proceeding of mercie is apprehended by faith alone without workes. Whereas in the two last testimonies, faith is opposed generally to all workes, and is wical said to apprehend grace and remission of finnes, they can not be vnderstood of a generall, but of a speciall applying faith. Bernard hath these wordes, If thou beleuest that thy finnes cannot be blotted out but by him against whom thou hast sinned, thou dost well, but got yet further, and beleue that he pardoneth thy finnes. This is the testimonie which the holy Ghost giueth in our hearts, saying, Thy finnes are forgiven thee. For so the Aposle thinketh that a man is iustificed freely by faith. Papists being much chokd with this place, make answer, that S. Bern. doth not say, that we must beleue the pardon of our sins absolutely without respect of workes, but that he requires the condition of our conseruation and repentance, as signes whereby this perfwasion is wrought. I answer againe, that he auoucheth plainly the generall faith, whereby the points of religion are beleued, to be but a beginning or rudimet of faith, and therefore not sufficient, vntill we go further, and apply the grace of God to our selues by faith, simply, without respect of any condition performed on mans part. Indeed I grant, that the truth of conseruation, & other workes, are by him mentioned afterward, but that was for this end, to shew how any man may haue a sensible and euident experience by workes, as fruits of the pardon of his owne finnes, & life euerallasting, which he beleueeth.

Arg. 3. S. Iohn penned his first epistle that he might shew vnto the Church of God a way how they might ordinarily and fully be assured of the loue of God, and of eternall life: and therefore he affordeth vs many pregnant testimonies for this purpose. 1. Iob. 2. 3. And by this we know that we haue knowne him, if we keep his commandmentes: and v. 5. Hee which keepeth his word, in him is the loue of God truly accomplished. By this we know that we are in him. chap. 3. 10. By this are manifest the children of God, and the children of the diuel & v. 19. By this we know that we are of the truth, & before him we shall make our hearts confident. cha. 4. 13. By this we know that we dwell in him, and he in vs, because hee hath giuen vs of his spirit. chap. 5. 2. By this we know that we loue the sonnes of God, when we loue God, and keepe his commandmentes. v. 13. I haue writte these things vnto you which beleue in the name of the sonne of God, that ye may know that you haue life eternall. To these testimonies, first of all answer is made, that none of them doe necessarily imply a certaintie of diuine faith; because we are said to know the things which we learn by coniectures. Behold a silly and poore shift. S. Iohn faith, chap. 1. 4. These things we write vnto you that your ioy may be full. Now it is but an vncertain ioy that riseth by coniectural knowledge. Again, this knowledge brings forth confidence and boldnes euen before God. c. 3. v. 19. 21. and therefore it cannot but include an infallible certaintie. And to put it out of question that the knowledge here mentioned is the knowledge of diuine faith, or as infallible as it is or can be, it is added, cha. 4. 16. And we haue knowne and beleued the loue which God hath toward vs. Secondly, it is answered, that all these speeches are generall, and not concerning particular men: but it is false: for when S. Iohn faith (we know) he speaks of himselfe, and includes the rest of the Church in the same condition with himselfe. Now he himselfe was fully assured of his owne saluation. For Christ a little before his departure out of the world, did comfort all his disciples, partly by renewing the promise of life eueralasting, and of the presence of his spirit vnto them; and partly by praying vnto the Father for their final perfwasion: so as they could not but be fully resolved of their happie estate, both in this life, and in the life to come.

*Arg. 4. Abraham*s faith was a full perfwasion whereby he applied the promise vnto himselfe. Rom. 4. 21. And this faith of his is an example propounded vnto vs, according to which we are to beleue: & therefore he is called the father of the faithful. v. 16. and Paul hauing set downe the nature & effects of this faith, faith, It was written not only for him, but also for vs which beleue. v. 23. It is objected, that *Abraham*s faith was not of saluation, but it concerned his issue in his old age, as Paul faith, Rom. 4. 18. Abraham about hope beleued that he should be the father of many nations: according to that which was spoken, So shall thy seed be. Ans. We must distinguish the object of faith, which is either principal or lesse principal. Principal, is alwaies Christ with his benefits: lesse principal are other lesse & particular benefits obtained by Christ. As of *Abraham*s faith, the object lesse principal was a carnall seed or issue: and the principall object most of all respected, as the foundation of all other blessings, was the blessed feed Christ Iesus, Gal. 3. 16. To Abraham and his feed were the promises made. He faith not, And to the seeds, as of many: but, and to thy seed, as of one, which is Christ, and v. 29. If ye be Christs, then *Abraham*s feed. Thus it is plaine, that issue was neither promised nor desired, but with respect to Christ, who could not haue descended of Abraham, if he had bin wholly without feed.

Hauiing thus alleaded some arguments for the truth, I come now to consider the objections of the Papists. Obiect. 1. Iob being a righteous man wanted certaintie of grace in himself, Iob. 9. 20. If I would iustifie my selfe, mine owne mouth shall condemne me: if I would be perfect, hee shall iudge me wicked: though I were perfect, yet my soule shall not know it. Again, v. 28. I am afraid of all my wayes, knowing that thou wilt not iudge me innocent. Ans. Isidore in the former chapter extolled the iustice of God: & Iob in this charges all on thereto, saying, v. 2. I know verily it is so: and he likewise spends the whole chapter in magnifying the iustice of God: and hauiing propounded this end of his speech, hee doth not speak of himselfe, & of his owne estate simply, as it is considered in it selfe: but as hee esteemed himselfe, being compared with God, especially then when hee entred into a strait examination of his creature. And so must the speech be vnderstood, If I were perfect, my soule should not know it, that is, I will not acknowledge or it vpon any righteousnes of mine owne, when God shall enter into iudgement with me. And thus much the very elect Angels, being in possession of heauen, and therefore hauiing more then assurance thereof, cannot but say, when they are compared with God. Againe, the words according to the original, are commonly of all, and so may well be translated thus: Am I perfect? I know not my selfe, I abhorre my life: that is, if I thinke my selfe perfect, I haue no respect to mine owne soules or thus, I am perfect in respect of you, and I know not my soule, and I abhorre my life, namely, in respect of mine owne vprightnesse. And the other place is thus to be translated, I feare all my sorrowes, and not all my workes: for this is flat against the Hebrew text, and Popish translators themselves follow it not.

Obiect. 2. Eccles. 9. 1, 2. Man knowes not whether hee be worthy of loue or hatred. For all things are kept vncertaine till the time to come. Ans. First I say, the translatio is not right: the words are thus in the Hebrew and the Sentic: No man knoweth loue or hatred, all things are before them. As for these words (all things are kept vncertain till the time to come) are thrust into the text by head and shoulers: and Hierome hath them not. Secondly, I answer, that the holy Ghost doth not deny simply the knowledge of Gods loue or hatred, as though there could be no certaine assurance of it in this life. If we vnderstand the words thus, then the argument of the holy Ghost must be framed on this manner. If loue or hatred were to be knowne, then it must be knowne by the outward blessings of God: but it cannot be knowne by the outward blessings of God, for all things come alike to all: theretore loue and hatred cannot be knowne. The proposition is false. For loue may be knowne otherwaies then by outward benefits: and therefore the reason is not meet to be ascribed to the spirit of truth. Wherefore the true and proper sense of the words, is, that loue or hatred cannot be iudged or discerned by outward blessings of God. S. Bernard speaks of this text on this manner, that no man knowes loue or hatred, namely, by himselfe; yet that God giues mozt certaine testimonies thereof to men vpon earth. And serm. 5. de Dedie, his words are these: Who knowes if he be worthy of loue or hatred: who knowes the mind of the Lord? Here both faith and truth must needs helpe vs, that, which is hid in the heart of the Father, may be reuealed vnto vs by the spirit: and his spirit giuing testimony perfwades our spirit, that we are the sonnes of God: and this perfwasion is caused by his calling and iustifying vs freely by faith. And S. Hierome (though commonly abused to the contrary) faith no more, but that men cannot know loue or hatred by the present afflictions which they suffer, because they know not whether they suffer them for triall or punishment.

Obi. 3. 1. Cor. 4. 3. I iudge not my selfe, I know nothing by my selfe. Here Paul as not being priuie to his owne estate, refuseth to giue any iudgement of his righteousnes. Ans. It is manifest by the words of this epistle, that certain in Corinth, boldly more then wisely, censured the Apostles ministrie, and with all disgraced it in respect of the ministry of other teachers. Therefore Paul in this chapter goes about to make an Apologie for it, speaking nothing of his owne person and the estate thereof before God, but onely of his ministerie and the excellencie thereof. And this is the iudgement of Theodore, Aquinas, and Lira vpon this text. And when he saith, I iudge not my self, his meaning is, I take not vpon me to iudge of what valne and price my ministerie is before God, in respect of the ministry of this or that man; but I leaue all to God. Here then Paul refuseth not to giue iudgement of the excellencie of his owne ministerie, and in other causes he refuseth not to iudge himselfe; as when he said, I haue fought a good fight, I haue kept the faith, henceforth is laid out for me the crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous iudge shall giue me, 2 Tim. 4. 8. And Chrysostome on this place faith, that Paul refused to iudge himselfe not simply, but onely for this end, that hee might restraîne others, and teach them: modestie. And where Paul saith, I know nothing by my selfe, the speech is not general, but must be vnderstood of negligences and offences in the compasse of his ministerie. For he was priuie to himselfe, that in simplicity and godly purenesse, he had his conuersation in the world, 2 Cor. 1. 12 & he knew this by himselfe, that nothing should fauour him from the loue of God in Christ, Rom. 8. 38.

Obiect. 4. That we may be iustificd there is some what required in vs, namely, faith; & repentance; and where these are wanting, a man cannot be iustificd. Now no man can be certaine by the certainty of faith, that he reports of his sins with all his heart, and that he hath such a faith, as God requires at our hands, considering there is no testimony in the word, of our faith and repentance in particular. Therefore no man can be certaine by certainty of faith, that his finnes are pardoned. Ans. It is not necessary that any man should be certaine by faith of his faith and repentance; because faith is onely of such things as are not present, whereas faith and repentance are truly present in all that truly beleue and repent, it shall be sufficient if a man may any way be vnfallibly certaine that he hath them. And though some men fallily perswade themselves that they beleue, yet he that hath true faith indeede, knows that he hath true faith; euen as certainly, as he that vnderstands, knows that he vnderstands. Paul faith to the Corinthians, Proue your felues whether ye be in the faith or no, 2 Cor. 13. 5. hereby giuing them to vnderstand, that al which beleue, haue the spirit of discerning, to know certainly that they doe beleue. Againe, he faith of himselfe, 2 Tim. 1. 12. I know whom I haue beleued. And S. Iohn faith, epist. 3. 24. By this we know that hee dwells in vs, by the spirit which he hath giuen vs; making no question of it, but that hee which hath the spirit, knows that he hath the same. And testimonies of men are not wanting in this case. Aug. (a) Every one seeth faith to be in his owne heart, if he beleue: if not, he seeth it to be wanting. Againe (b) A beleuer seeth his owne faith, by which he answereth, that he beleueth without doubt, and (c) he which leaueh his brother, more knoweth the loue whereby hee leaueh, then his brother whom hee leaueh. Againe, whereas it is said, that hauing faith; yet we know not whether it be sufficient or no: I answer that faith being without hypocrisie, is sufficient to saluation, though it be vnperfected. God more respecteth the truth of our faith, then the perfection thereof. And as the hand of the childe, or of the palse man, though it be feeble, is able to reach out to itseife, and receive an almes of a Prince; so the faith that is but weak, is able to apprehend and receive Christ with all his benefites.

Obiect. 5. Prou. 28. 14. Blessed is the man that feareth alwayes, Psalm. 2. 12. Work your saluation with feare and trembling. Ans. There is a threefold feare, one of nature, the second of grace, the third of distrust. Feare of nature is that, whereby the nature of man is troubled with any thing that is hurtfull vnto it, and therefore auoideth it. Feare of grace, is that excellent gift which is called the beginning of wisdom, and it is a certain awe or reuerence vnto God, in whose presence we doe whatsoever we doe. Feare of distrust is, when men tremble at the iudgements of God for their finnes, because they haue no hope of mercy. Of these three, the first was good by creation, and therefore it was in our Sauour Christ; but since the fall it is defective. The third is a vice, called slauish feare. And the second is that which is commended in these, and the like places of Scripture: the intent whereof, is to make vs circumspect and fearefull lest we should offend God by any sin, our owne weakenesse considered, and the imminent iudgements of God. And this kinde of feare, as also the first, may stand with certainty of faith, Rom. 11. 20. Thou standest by faith, be not high minded but feare, Psalm. 2. 11. Serue the Lord in feare, and reioyce in trembling.

Ob. 6. Where there is no word, there is no faith. For faith and the word of God be relatives. But there is no word of God that faith to particular men, Cornelius, or Peter, or Iohn, thy finnes are pardoned, excepting a few persons; as Mary Magdalen, and the palse man, &c. Therefore there is no particular faith. Ans. Though there be no word set downe in Scripture, touching the saluation of this or that particular man, yet there is set downe that which is equiualent to a particular word, & as much in effect. For the promise of remission of sins and life euertlasting, is giuen with a commandement, that euery man^a apply the promise to himselfe, as I haue before prouoed; and this is altogether as much, as if euery mans particular name had bin put in the promise. I adde further, that the promises of the Gospel must be considered two waies, first, as they are generally set downe in Scripture, without application to any person; secondly, as they are taught and published in the ministry of the word; & the

and whereof is to apply them to the persons of men, partly by preaching, and partly by administering the Sacraments of Baptisme, and the Lords supper, which are scales of righteousness of faith. Now the promise applied, (and as I may say) particularized to the members of the Church, is by the vertue of Gods ordinance as much, as if God himselfe had giuen the promise particularly, and annexed mens names vnto it. It is further replied, that the promise of remission of sin is preached not simply, but vpon condition of mens faith and repentance, which indeede cannot be certainly knowne. I answer againe (as I haue already proued) that he which truly beleueth & repenteth, knoweth that he doth certainly beleue & repent.

Obiect. 7. To beleue the pardon of a mans owne sins, is none of the articles of faith, propounded in any Creed, either of the Apostles, or the Nicene fathers, or Athanasius, or any other Creed. Ans. This faith is contained vnder these words: I beleue remission of sins; & I proue it thus. These words are an article of Christian faith, & therefore they must in sense containe more then the diuel doth or can beleue; now the diuel beleueth thus much, that God giues remission of finnes to his Church. Christian men therefore must goe one step further, and beleue particularly the remission of their owne sins. Otherwise, if the Papists will haue the Catholike faith to beleue no more in this point, then the damned spirits beleue, let the take it to themselves. But they reply further, that if there were any such article of faith, then some persons must beleue, that they are iust, though they willingly commit mortall sinne, which is an euident falsehood. Ans. He that beleues the pardon of his owne finnes by true faith, hath the spirit of God in him, and a constant purpose not to sin against God, & therefore if he sin, it is against his purpose, and without any full consent of will: & it is not he that doth it, but the sin that dwelleth in him. But if it so fall out, that the childe of God be overtaken with any actall sin, then his case standeth thus: he hath by his fall wounded his conscience, weakened his faith, bereaued himselfe of Gods fauour, as much as in him lieth; made himselfe guilty of a sinne, and worthy of damnation; & God for his part accordingly turnes the wonted signes of his fauour, into signes of anger and displeasure: and though it be pardoned in the purpose of God, yet it is not actually pardoned, till the partie repent. Things standing thus, we teach not that men must beleue the pardon of their finnes, while they liue and lie in them; for that were flatly to teach falsehood for truth: but our doctrine is, that such persons must first of all humble themselves, and say with the prodigall childe, that they haue sinned against God, and are not worthy to be called his children any more: and againe renew their decayed faith and repentance, that they may beleue (as before) their perfect reconciliation with God.

Obiect. 8. In respect of God, who is truth it selfe, we are to beleue the promise in particular; yet if we respect our owne vnworthines and indisposition, we are to feare and in some part to doubt. For the promise of remission of finnes, is not absolute, but depends vpon the condition of our works. Therefore our certainty is only coniectural. Ans. I answer, first that in respect of our owne vnworthinesse, we are not to doubt of our saluation, but to be out of all doubt, yea do despair before the iudgement seat of God. For they which are of the workes of the law, are vnder the curse, Gal. 3. 10. and Paul faith of his owne workes of grace. In this I am not iustificd, 1 Cor. 4. 4. And David being out of all doubt of his owne defunct damnation, in regard of his owne vnworthinesse, faith freely, Enter not into iudgement with thy servant, O Lord, for no flesh shall be iustificd in thy sight. Againe, the consideration of an unworthinesse in our felues, doth not hinder a resolution concerning Gods mercie in Christ. For true faith makes an entrance vnto God with boldnesse, (1 lay with boldnesse:) euen for those persons that are unworthy in themselves, Eph. 4. 12. And Abraham (whose faith is to be followed of vs) did not vpon the consideration of his old decayed body, reit himselfe with bare hope, vpon a likelihood of the accomplishment of Gods promise, but he beleued vnder hope, euen against hope, Rom. 4. 18. Lastly, I answer, that the ground of the former obiection is erroneous; namely, that the promise of saluation depends vpon the condition of our works: because the Scripture faith, It is made & accomplished on mans part freely. I grant indeede, that to the promise there is annexed a condition of faith; yet faith must not here be considered as a worke, but as an instrument apprehending Christ with his benefites: and withall, repentance with the fruits thereof, are on our part required; yet no otherwise, but as they are necessary conseqens of faith, & the signes and documents thereof.

Obiect. 9. No man knowes all his sins: no man therefore can certainly know that all his sins are pardoned, and that he is accepted of God. Ans. The ground of this argument is false: namely, that a man cannot be assured of the pardon of his sins, if some of the be vnknown. And to make this manifest, I will lay down a more certaine ground, which shall be this. As the case is in Repentance, so is it also in faith: but there may be true & sufficient repentance of vnknown finnes. God indeede requires a particular repentance for particular knowne finnes: but if they be hidden and vnknowne, he accepts a general repentance. An example whereof we haue in David, Psalm. 19. 12. Who knowes, faith he, the errors of this life: then purge me from my secret finnes. If it were not as I haue said, neither David, nor any man else could be saved. For when David repented greatly of his murder and adultery, yet we find not that hee repented particularly of his polygamie: which in all likelihood, through the twinge and custome of those times, was not then repaired to be any sin; specially in the person of a king; and yet because (as we know) he is certainly faulced, this very sin is pardoned. Therefore when God pardons the known finnes of men, whereof they doe in particular repent, he doth withall pardon the rest that are unknowne. And by this it appears, that the ignorance of some hidden finnes, after a man with diligence hath searched himselfe, cannot preiudice an vnfallible assurance of the pardon of them all, and of his owne saluation.

Obiect. 10. We pray for the pardon of our owne finnes, and therefore we are vncertain of pardon: the man which knows that he hath pardon, neede not pray for it: I answer first, when we are taught by Christ to pray for the forgiveness of our debts, we are put in minde not to seeke the pardon of all our sins, whether past or present; but specially of our present and daily offences, whereby we make our felices day by day, guiltie, till such time as wee humble our felices, and repent of them. Secondly, by this petition we are taught, to aske the increase of our assurance; because, though God bestow endlesse mercie on vs, yet we are skant in receiving of it: our hearts being like a narrow needled vessell, which being cast euen into the Ocean sea, receiue in water onely drop by drop.

Obiect. 11. No man can beleue his owne saluation, as he beleuees the articles of faith; therefore no man can beleue the pardon of his sins, and his saluation, by an infallible certainty. I answer, first, that euery one that lookes for saluation by Christ, is bound in conscience as certainly to beleue his owne saluation, & adoption by Christ, as he beleuees the articles of faith. Because to the promise of life there is annexed a commandement to beleue & apply it. Secondly, this faith whereby we are to beleue our owne saluation, if we respect the true & proper nature thereof, is as certaine as that faith whereby we beleuee the articles of faith. Thirdly, as there be diuers ages in the life of man, so there be diuers degrees and measures of true faith. There is first of all a beginning or rudiment of faith, like the smoking flaxe and braised reed, which Christ will neuer quench nor bruse. Again, there is weake faith, which beleueeth the promise truly, but yet it is perplexed with many doubtings. Lastly, there is strong faith, which hath overcome all doubtings, and is not only for nature certain (as the former is) but also a large and plentiful perswasion of Gods mercie in Christ. Examples of this we haue in Abraham, David, the Martyrs, & such like worthy men. Now by the second faith, men do as certainly beleue their adoption as the articles, but not so firmly and fully. But by the last, admission of finnes is not onely as certainly, but also as fully beleued, as an article of faith.

Obiect. 12. Ancient fathers, the lights of Gods Church, haue alwaies condemned this vnfallible & speciall certainty of faith, which the Protestants hold & maintain. Ans. Though we build not the doctrine of our religion vpon the iudgements of men, yet we refuse not in this and other points, to be tried by the Fathers, whose writings well vnderstood, make more for vs then for the Popish religion. And their testimonies commonly alleaged to confute the certainty of speciall faith, are much abused. I. Many of them serue to proue that a man cannot iudge and discern of euery particular motion and grace of his heart, of the increase of these graces: & the contrary disease, of speciall vices and wants: many whereof are hidden from the vnderstanding. Theodore in his comment, 1. Cor. 4. I will not, faith he, see my selfe from some, but wait the sentence of God: for it often falls out, that men Sinne of ignorance, & thinke that to be equall and iust, which the God of almes to be otherwise. Augustine de verbis Dei, ferm. 23. Per aduentum thou findest nothing in thy conscience: but he finds something that seeth better. And vpon Psal. 41. I know that the iustice of my God shall abide but whether mine shall or no, I know not: for the saying of the Apostle terrifies me, He which thinks he stands, let him take heede lest he fall. Here hee speakes of his inward righteousness, and that, as it is considered in it selfe, without the assistance of God. For he addes afterward, Therefore because there is no stability in me for my selfe, hereupon my soule is troubled for my selfe. Chrysostome, homil. 87. on Iohn. I am grieved, lest peraduenture supposing my selfe to loue, I doe not loue as before: when I seemed constant & conuincious vnto my selfe, I was found but a dafard. These and a thousand like testimonies prouoe nothing. For though a man cannot fully discern his heart, either in respect of euery one of his own sins, or in respect of euery grace; yet this hindres not, but that he may haue an vnfallible certainty of his saluation, and also a sufficient gift to discern his owne faith and repentance. II. Other places must be vnderstood of proud presumption, & of a kind of securitie, in which men dreame of ease and libertie, without trouble or temptation. August. de correct. & grat. cap. 13. Who of all the company of the faithfull, as long as he liues in this mortall condition, can presurie, that he is of the number of the predestinate? And, de bona perseuer. cap. 22. No man can be secure touching eternall life, till this life be ended. Bernard epist. 107. Having now receiued the knowledge of himselfe in part, he may reioyce in hope: but not in securitie as yet. Hieron. Dau. 4. Let no man boldly promise to another the pardon of finnes. III. Some places auouch, that a man cannot be sure of perseverance to the end, without falles and decays in grace: all which we graunt. August. de ciuit. Dei. lib. 11. cap. 12. Although the Saints (1.) certaine of the reward of their perseverance, yet they are bound to be vncertain of their perseverance in selfe: for what man can know that he shall perseuere in the practise and increase of righteousness vnto the end, except he be assured of it by some reuelation? IV. Some places must be vnderstood of experimentall certainty, when the curent is accomplished. Hieron. booke 2. against Pelagians: Call no man blessed before his end, for as long as we liue here we are in the fight, and as long as we are in the fight, we haue no certain victory. V. Some places speake of the vncertainty of other mens saluation, which we graunt. The author of the booke de vocat. Genr. 1. class. faith, We can pronounce of no man before his end, that hee shall be in the glory of be elect. August. lib. de perseuer. cap. 13. Men are not with any certain assurance to auouch that others belong to this calling. VI. Some speake of that certainty which comes by reuelation without the word. Greg. lib. 6. epist. 22. to Gregoria. Whereas you adde in your epistles that you will be earnest with me till I write, that it hath become made knowne vnto me that your finnes are forgiven: you haue required a hard and vnsupportable thing. Hard, because I am vnworthy to whom a reuelation should be made: Vnsupportable, because you must not be made sure touching your finnes unless it bee in the last day of your life, for then you should not be able to bewaile the same sins.

VII. Some places denie vnto man that certentie which is proper to God, which is, to discern in himselfe all things to come plainly, as they shall come to passe, without helpe of testimony and outward signes. Bernard. ser. 1. de Septuage. Whocan say, I am of the elect? I am of the predestinate to life: certainly we haue none as yet, but the assurance of our hope comforteth vs. Confesse these words with those that follow. For this cause certaine signes and manifest tokens of saluation were giuen, that it may be a thing out of doubt, that bee is in the number of the elect in whom these signes are.

Thus I haue in some part made manifest that an vnfallible certainty of pardon of sin, and life euertlasting is the propertie of euery renewed conscience. Now therefore I will proceede further to consider how this certentie is caused and imprinted in the conscience. The principall agent and beginner thereof, is the holy Ghost, enlightning the mind and conscience with spirituall and diuine light: and the instrument in this action, is the ministerie of the Gospell, whereby the word of life is applied in the name of God to the person of euery hearer. And this certentie is by little and little conceived in a forme of reasoning or practical syllogisme framed in the minde by the holy Ghost, on this manner:

Euery one that beleuenes is the childe of God:

But I doe beleue:

Therefore I am the childe of God.

The proposition is made by the minister of the word in the publicke congregation: and is nothing else but the promise of eternall life applied to the particular hearers. The second part or the assumption is the voice of conscience regenerate, or the voice of Gods spirit in the same. Now papists write & auouch that the assumption is false: but the reasons which they giue to proue the same, are of small moment. First they alledge, that many are deceived in their perswasions, thinking they haue that which they haue not: I answer againe, that many doe falsely presume of Gods mercie, and imagine they haue that faith which they haue not: and in all such the assumption is false: yet in all them that are chosen to saluation & truly called, it is infallibly true. For such as haue receiued the gift of true faith, haue also another gift of discerning whereby they see and know their owne faith. It is further objected, that Ieremy faith, 17.9. The heart is deceitfull and wicked above all things, who can know it? But the intent of this place is onely to shew, that no man can search his heart to the very bottome, to see all and euery want, infirmity, and wicked inclination that is therein. For original sinne wherewith the heart of man is tainted, is a pronensse or disposition to the finnes that are or may be. And though men cannot discern all their finnes, yet many of them are certainly knowne: why may not then many of the graces of God be certainly knowne, especially those which bee of the principall, as faith, sanctification, repentance. Again it is alledged, that Peter beleued that he was able to lay downe his life for Christs sake, and yet in deed was not, as the euent declared, for when the time came, he denied Christ. Ans. Peter at that time was but weake in faith, and he was much carried away with a confidence of his owne strength, which made him speake those words of presumption, and though hee failed in this one particular action, yet failed not in the principall, that is, in the perswasion of the pardon of his owne finnes and of life euertlasting. In a word, it is certaine that many perswade themselves of Gods mercie, and yet are deceived; neuertheless all such as doe truly beleuee are not deceived. The holy Ghost maketh them to see that in themselves which by nature they cannot discern, as Paul signified, when he said, I speake the truth I lie not, my conscience bearing me witnesse by the holy Ghost, Rom. 9. 1.

Again, the same testimony is giuen otherwise thus.

Euery child of God hath the pardon of his finnes, faith Gods word.

But I am Gods child: and therefore haue the pardon of my finnes, faith the renewed conscience, by the direction of Gods spirit, Rom. 8. 16.

After that this testimonie is once begun it is confirmed by the same meanes, as also by prayer and the Sacraments. But it may be demanded, how a bodily element, as bread, wine, water, should be able to confirme a perswasion of our adoption that is in the conscience? Ans. The element in the Sacrament is an outward seale or instrument to confirme faith, not as a medicine restores and confirms health, whether we thinke on it or not, whether we sleepe or wake, and that by his owne inherent vertue: but by reasoning in a syllogisme made by the good conscience: the medium thereof being the outward signe in the

chiefly without any controulment of conscience; but when choleric is down, he begins to be ashamed and troubled in himself, not always by grace, but even by the force of his natural conscience, which when affection is calmed begins to stirre, as appeareth in the example of Cain. III. Ignorance of Gods will and errors in judgement, cause the conscience to be quiet, when it ought to accuse. This we finde by experience in the death of obdurate hereticks, which suffer for their damnable opinions without checke of conscience.

Dead conscience hath two degrees. The first is the slumbering or the benumbed conscience; the second is the feared conscience.

Conscience benumbed.

The benumbed conscience is that, which doth not accuse a man for any sinne, vntlesse it be grievous or capital; and not alwaies for that but only in the time of some grievous sickness or calamitie. Iosephs brethren were not much troubled in conscience for their villanie in selling their brother, till afterward when they were afflicted with famine and distressed in Egypt, Gen. 42. 21. This is the conscience that commonly reignes in the hearts of drouishe Protestants, of all carnall and lake-warme gospellers, and of such as are commonly termed civil honest men, whose apparant integrity will not free them from guiltie consciences.

Such a conscience is to be taken heede of, as being most dangerous. It is like a wilde beast, which so long as he lies a sleepe seemes very tame and gentle, and hurts no man; but when he is roused, he then awakes and flies into a mans face, & offers to pul out his throat. And so it is the manner of a dead conscience, to lie still and quiet even through the course of a mans life; and heretupon a man would thinke (as most doe) that it were a good conscience indeede: but when sickness or death approacheth, it being awaked by the hand of God, begins to stand vpon his legges, and shewes his fierce eyes, & offers to rend out even the very throat of the soule. And heathen Poets knowing this right wel, haue compared euil conscience to Furies pursuing men with fire-brands.

The seared conscience is that, which doth not accuse for any sinne; no not for great sinnes. It is compared by Paul. 1. Tim. 4. 2 to the part of a mans body which is not onely bereft of sense, life, & motion by the gangrene, but also is burnt with a searing yron: & therefore must needs be vtterly past all feeling.

This kind of conscience is not in all men, but in such persons as are become obdurate hereticks and notorious malefactors. And it is not in the by nature, but by an increase of the corruption of nature; & that by certaine steps and degrees. For naturally euery man hath in him blindness of minde, and obdinate or frowardnes of heart, yet so, as with the blindness and ignorance of minde, are ioyned some remnantes of the light of nature, shewing vs what is good and euill. Now the heart of man being exceedingly obdinate & peruerse, carrieth him to comit sins even against the light of nature & common sense; by practise of such sins the light of nature is extinguished: & then commeth the reprobate minde, which iudgeth euill good, & good euill: after this follows the seared conscience, in which there is no feeling or remorse: & after this comes an exceeding greedines to all manner of sin, Eph. 4. 19. Rom. 1. 28.

Here it may be demanded, how mens consciences shall accuse them in the day of iudgement, if they be thus benumbed and seared in this life. Ans. It is said. Rev. 20. 12 that at the last iudgement all shall bee brought before Christ, & that the books then shall be opened: among these bookes no doubt conscience is one. Wherefore though a dead conscience (because it doth either litle or nothing accuse,) yet after this life, it shall be as a booke laid open because God shall enlighten it, and so stirre it vp by his mighty power, that it shall be able to reueale & discover all the sins that a man euer committed.

Stirring conscience, is that which doth sensibly either accuse or excuse. And it hath foure differences.

The first, which accuseth a man for doing euill. This must needs be an euil conscience. Because to accuse is not a propertie that belongs to it by creation, but a defect that followeth after the fall. And if the conscience which truly accuseth a man for his sins, were a good conscience, then the worst man that is, might haue a good conscience; which cannot be.

When the accusation of the conscience is more forcible and violent, it is called a wounded or troubled conscience: which though of it selfe it be not good nor any grace of God; yet by the goodness of God it serueth often to be an occasion or preparatiō to graces as a needle, that drawes the thread into the cloath, is some meane whereby the cloath is sewed together.

The second, is that which accuseth for doing well. And it is to be found in them that are giuen to idolatry and superstition. As in the Church of Rome: in which, because mens consciences are insinared & intangled with humane traditions, many are troubled for doing that which is good in it selfe, or at the least a thing indifferent. As for example: let a priest omit to say masse & to say his canonical houres, his conscience will accuse him therefore: though the committing of the canonical houres & of the idolatours masse, be indeed by Gods word no sin.

The third, is the conscience which excuseth for doing that which is euill. This also is to be found in them that are giuen to Idolatry and superstition. And there is a particular example hereof, Iob. 16. 2. Tease the time that come, that who sooner killesh you, will thinke that he doth God good seruice. Such is the conscience of Popish traitours in these daies, that are neuer touched at all, though they intend and enterprise horrible villanies, and be put to death therefore.

The fourth, is that which excuseth for well doing some times, and in some particular

actions of carnall men. When Abimelech had taken Sarah from Abraham, God said vnto him in a dreame, I know that thou diddest this with an upright minde, Gen. 20. 6. This may be termed a good conscience, but is indeede otherwise. For though it doe truly excuse in one particular action, yet because the man in whom it is, may be vnregenerate and as yet out of Christ, and because it doth accuse in many other matters; therefore it is no good conscience. If all the vertues of naturall men are indeed but certaine beautiful sins, and their righteoufnesse but a carnall righteoufnesse; then the conscience also of a carnall man, though it excuse him for well doing, is but a carnall conscience.

Worthier than, but in some respects.

CHAP. IIII.

Mans dutie touching conscience.

Mans dutie concerning conscience is two-fold. The first is, if we want good conscience about all things to labour to obtaine it: for it is not giuen by nature to any man, but comes by grace.

For the obtaining of good conscience, three things must be procured; a preparation to good conscience; the applying of the remedie; the reformation of conscience.

In the preparatiō, foure things are required. The first, is the knowledge of the law, and the particular commandments thereof, whereby we are taught what is good, what is bad; what may be done, and what may not be done.

The men of our daies, that they may haue the right knowledge of the law, must lay aside many erroneous and foolish opinions, which they hold fast against the true meaning of the law of God: otherwise they can neuer be able to discern betweene sin and no sinne. Their speciall & common opinions are these: I. That they can loue God with all their hearts, & their neighbors as themselves; that they feare God aboue all, and trust in him alone; & that they euer did so. II. That to rehearse the Lords prayer, the beleefe, and ten commandments, (without vnderstanding of the words, and without affectiō) is the true & whole worship of God. III. That a man may seeke to wizarde & sooth-sayers without offence, because God hath provided a faue for euery fore. IV. That to sweare by good things and in the way of truth, is not a sin. V. That a man going about his ordinary affaires at home or abroad on the Sabbath day, may as well serue God as they which heare all the sermons in the world. VI. That religion & the practise thereof is nothing but an affected precisenesse: that countenances the roote of euill, is nothing but worldlinesse; that pride is nothing but a care of honesty and cleaneelinesse: that single fornication is nothing but the trick of youth: that wearing and blaspheming argue the courageous minde of a braue gentleman. VII. That a man may doe with his own what he wil, & make as much of it as he can: Hence arise all the frauds and bad practises in trafficke betweene man and man.

The second thing required, is the knowledge of the iudiciall sentence of the law, which resolutely pronounceth that a curie is due to man for euery sin, Gal. 3. 10. Very few are refolued of the truth of this point, and very few doe vnfaidly beleue it, because mens minds are possessed with a contrarie opinion, that though they sinne against God, yet they shall escape death and damnation. Dauid saith, The wicked man (that is, euery man naturally) blisseth himselfe, Ps. 10. 3. & he maketh a league with hell and death, Esay 28. 15. This appeareth also by experience. Let the ministers of the Gospell reprocue sin, and denounce Gods iudgements against it according to the rule of Gods word, yet men will not feare: stones will almoit as soone moue in the wals, and the pillars of our Churches, as the flintie hearts of men. And the reason hereof is, because their minds are foreballed with this absurd conceit, that they are not in danger of the wrath of God, though they offend. And the opinion of our common people is hereunto answerable, who thinke that if they haue a good meaning, and doe no man any hurt, God will haue them excused both in this life and in the day of iudgement.

The third, is a iust and serious examination of the conscience by the law, that wee may see what is our estate before God. And this is a dutie vpon which the Prophets stand very much. Lk. 3. 40. Man suffereth for his sin: let vs search and trie our hearts, and turne againe to the Lord, Zeph 2. 1. Examine your selues, say you, O nation, not worthy to be beloved. In making examination wee must specially take notice of that which doth now lie or may hereafter lie vpon the conscience. And after due examination hath bin made, a man comes to a knowledge of his sin in particular, and of his wretched and miserable estate: who enters into his house at midnight, he finds or sees nothing out of order: but let him come in the day time when the Sun shineth, and then he shall espie many faults in the house, and the very mores that lie vp and downe: so let a man search his heart in the ignorance and blindness of his minde, hee will straightway thinke all is well; but let him once begin to search himselfe with the light & lanterne of the law, & he shall find many foule corners in his heart, & heaps of sins in his life.

The fourth, is a serious in respect of the punishment of sinne: arising of the three former actions. And though this sorrow be no grace, for it befalls as well the wicked as the godly; yet may it be an occasion of grace, because by the apprehension of Gods anger, we come to the apprehension of his mercy. And it is better that conscience should grieve and wound vs and doe his worst against vs in this life, while remedie may be had, then after this life, when remedie is past.

Thus much of preparation: now follows the remedy, & the applicatiō of it. The remedy is nothing else but the blood or merits of Christ who specially in conscience felt the wrath of God, as when he said, My soule is heavy vnto death; and his agony was not so much paine & torment in bodie, as the apprehension of the feare and anger of God in conscience: and when the holy Ghost saith, That he offered vnto God prayers with strong cries, & was heard from heauen, he directly notes the distresse & anguish of his most holy conscience for our sins. And as the blood of Christ is an all-sufficient remedie, so is it also the alone remedie of all sores and wounds of conscience. For nothing can stanch or stay the terrors of conscience, but the blood of the immaculate Lambe of God: nothing can satisfie the iudgement of the conscience, much lesse the most seuerie iudgement of God, but the only satisfaction of Christ. In the application of the remedie, two things are required: the Gospel preached, and faith: the Gospel is the hand of God, that offereth grace to vs; & faith is our hand whereby we receive it.

That weindeed by faith may receive Christ with all his benefites, we must put in practise 2. things. The first is, vnfeignedly to humble our selues before God for all our wants, breaches, and wounds in conscience: which, being vnto vs a Paradise of God, by our default wee haue made as it were a little hell within vs. This humiliation is the beginning of all grace & religion: pride and good conscience can neuer goe together. And such as haue knowledge in religion and many other good gifts without humiliation, are but vnbridled, vnmortified, and vnreformed persons. This humiliation containeth in it two duties, the first is confession of our finnes, especially of those that lie vpon our consciences: wherewith must be ioyned the accusing and condemning of our selues: for then we put conscience out of office, and dispatch that labour before our God in this life, which conscience would performe to our eternall damnation after this life. The second dutie is Deprecation, which is a kind of prayer made with groanes and desires of heart, in which we intreat for nothing but for the pardon of our finnes, and that for Christs sake, till such time as the conscience be pacified.

To this humiliation standing on these two parts, excellent promises of grace and life certifying are made. Prou. 28. 13. He that hideth his finnes, shall not prosper: but he that confesseth and forsaketh them shall find mercy. 1. Iob 1. 9. If we acknowledge our finnes, he is faithful and iust to forgive vs our finnes: and to cleanse vs from all vnrightheousnes. Luk. 1. 53. He hath filled the hungry with good things, and sent the rich empty away. Which are also verified by experience in sundry examples. 2. Sam. 12. 13. David said to Nathan, I haue sinned against the Lord. And Nathan said to David, The Lord also hath put away thy sin. 2. Chro. 33. 13. When Manasse was in tribulation he prayed to the Lord his God, and humbled himselfe greatly before the God of his fathers, & prayed vnto him: and God heard his prayer. Luk. 23. 42. And the thiefe said to Iesus, Lord remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom. Then Iesus said

vnto him. Verily I say vnto thee, to day shalt thou be with me in Paradise. By these and many other places it appeares, that when a man doth truly humble himselfe before God, he is at that instant reconciled to God, and hath the pardon of his sins in heauen: and shall afterward haue the assurance thereof in his owne conscience.

The second lesson is, when we are touched in conscience for our sins, not to yield to naturall doubtings and distrust: but to resist the same, & to indeavour by Gods grace to resolute our selues that the promises of saluatiō by Christ, belong to vs particularly: because to doe thus much, is the very commandment of God.

The third thing is, the reformation of conscience, which is, when it doth cease to accuse and terrifie, and begins to excuse & testifie vnto vs by the holy Ghost, that we are the children of God, and haue the pardon of our finnes. And this it will doe after that men haue seriously humbled themselves, and prayed earnestly and constantly with sighes and groanes of spirit for reconciliation with God in Christ. For then the Lord will send downe his spirit into the conscience by a sweete and heavenly testimony, to assure vs that we are at peace with God.

Thus wee see how good conscience is gotten: & because it is so precious a iewel, I wish all persons, that as yet neuer laboured to get good conscience, now to begin. Reasons to induce men there may be these: I. You seeke day & night from yeare to yeare for honours, riches, and pleasures, which ye must leaue behinde you: much more therefore ought you to seeke for renewed & reformed consciences, considering that conscience will be with you in this life, in death, at the last iudgement, and for euer. II. He that wants a conscience purged in the blood of Christ, can neuer haue any true and lasting comfort in this life. Suppose a man arrayed in cloath of tishue, set in a chaire of estate, before him a table furnished with all dainty prouision: his seruants, Monarches and Princes; his riches, the chiefest treasures and kingdoms in the world: but withall suppose one standing by, with a naked sword to cut his throat, or a wild beast ready cuer and anon to pull him in peeces: now, what can we say of this mans estate, but that all his happinesse is nothing but woe and misery? And such is the estate of all men that abounding with riches, honours, and pleasures, carry about them an euil conscience, which is as a sword to slay the soule, or as a rauenous beast ready to sucke the blood of the soule, & to rend it in peeces. III. He which wants good conscience can do nothing but sinne: his very eating and drinking, his sleeping & waking, and all he doth, turnes to sinne: the conscience must first be good, before the action can be good; if the roote be corrupt, the fruits are answerable. I V. An euil conscience is the greatest enemy a man can haue, because it doth execute all the parts of iudgement against him. It is the Lords sergant: God neede not send out proceff

by any of his creatures for man: the conscience within man will arrest him, and bring him before God. It is the Tylor to keepe man in prison in bolts and yrons, that he may bee forth coming at the day of Iudgement. It is the witness to accuse him, the Iudge to condemne him, the hang-man to execute him, & the flashings of the fire of hell to torment him. Again, it makes a man to be an enemy to God: because it accuseth him to God, & makes him fly from God, as Adam did when he had sinned. Also it makes a man to be his owne enemy, in that it doth cause him to lay violent hands vpon himselfe, & become his owne hangman, or his own cut throat. And on the contrary, a good conscience is a mans best friend: when all men intreat him hardly, it will speake him faire and comfort him: it is a continuall feast, and a paradise vpon earth. V. The Scripture sheweth, that they which neuer seeke good conscience, haue terrible ends. For either they die blocks, as Nabal did; or they die desperate, as Cain, Saul, Achitophel, Iudas. VI. We must consider often the terrible day of iudgement, in which euery man must recieue according to his doings. And that we may then be absolved, the best way is to seeke for a good conscience; for if our conscience be euill, and condemne vs in this life, God will much more condemne vs. And whereas we must passe through three iudgements; the iudgement of men, the iudgement of our conscience, and the last iudgement of God: we shall neuer be strengthened against them, and cleared in them all, but by the seeking of a good conscience.

After that a man hath got good conscience, his second duty is to keepe it. And as in the gouerning the ship on the sea, the Pilot holding the helme in his hand, hath alwaies an eye to the compass; so we likewise, in the ordering of our liues and conuersations, must alwaies haue a speciall regard to conscience.

That we may keepe good conscience, wee must doe two things; auoid the impediments thereof, and vse conuenient preferuations.

Impediments of good conscience, are either in vs, or forth of vs. In vs, our owne finnes and corruptions. When mens bodies lie dead in the earth, there breed certaine wormes in them, whereby they are consumed. For of the flesh come the wormes that consume the flesh: but vlesse we take great heed, out of the sins and corruptions of our hearts, there will breed a worne a thousand fold more terrible, when the worne of conscience that neuer dieth; which will in a lingring manner wast the conscience, the soule, and the whole man; because he shall be alwaies dying, and neuer dead. These finnes are specially three; ignorance, vnmortified affections, worldly lusts.

Touching the first, namely ignorance, it is a great and vsuall impediment of good conscience. For when the mind erreth or misconceiuech, it doth misleade the conscience, & deceiue the whole man. The way to auoyd this impe-dimēt is, to do our indeauour that we may daily increase in the knowledge of the word of God, that it may dwell in vs plentifully: to this end we must pray with David, that he would open our eyes, that we might vnderstand the wonders of his law: and withall, we must daily search the Scriptures for vnderstanding, as men vse to search the mines of the earth for gold ore, Prou. 2. 4. Lastly, we must labour for spiritual wifedom, that we might haue the right vse of Gods word in euery particular action: that being by it directed, we may discern what we may with good conscience do or leaue vndon.

The second impediment, is vntaied and vnmortified affections: which, if they haue their swing, as wild horses ouerturne the chariot with men and all, so they ouerturne and ouercarry the iudgement and conscience of man: and therefore when they beare rule, good conscience takes no place. Now to prevent the danger that comes hereby, this course must be followed. When we would haue a sword or a knife not to hurt our selues, or others, we turne the edge of it. And so, that we may prevent our affections from hurting & annoying the conscience, we must turne the course of them, by directing them from our neighbours to our selues and our owne sins, or by inclining them to God and Christ. For example: choller and anger directs it selfe vpon euery occasion against our neighbour, and thereby greatly indammageth the conscience. Now, the course of it is turned when we begin to be displeased, and to be angry with our selues for our owne finnes. Our loue set vpon the world is hurtfull to the conscience, but when we once begin to set our loue on God in Christ, and to loue the blood of Christ about all the world, then contrariwise it is a furtheraunce of good conscience.

The third impediment, is worldly lusts, that is, the loue and exceeding desire of riches, honours, pleasure. Euery man is as Adam, his good conscience is his paradise; the forbidden fruit, is the strong desire of these earthly things; the serpent is the old enemy the diuell: who if he may be suffered to intangle vs with the loue of the world, will straitway put vs out of our paradise, and barre vs from all good conscience. The remedie is to learne the lesson of Paul, Phil. 4. 12. which is, in euery estate in which God shall place vs, to be content, esteeming euermore the present condition the best for vs all. Now that this lesson may be learned, we must further labour to be resolute of Gods speciall prouidence toward vs, in euery case and condition of life; & when we haue so well profited in the schoole of Christ, that wee can see and acknowledge Gods prouidence and goodnesse, as well in sicknesse as in health, in poertie as in wealth, in hunger as in fullnesse, in life as in death, we shall be very well content, whatsoever any way befalls vnto vs.

The preferuations of good conscience are two, the first, is to preserve and cherish that sauing faith whereby we are perswaded of our

reconciliation with God in Christ, for this is the root of good conscience, as hath bin shewed. Now this faith is cherished and confirmed by the daily exercise of invocation and repentance: which be to humble our selves, to bewaile and confesse our finnes to God, to condemn our selves for them, to pray for pardon and strength against sinne, to praise God, and give him thanks for his daily benefits. And by the vnaired and serious practise of these duties, repentance and faith are daily renewed and confirmed. The second preservative, is the maintaining of the righteousnesse of a good conscience: which righteousnesse (as I have said) is nothing else but a constant endeavour and desire to obey the will of God in all things. That this righteousnesse may be kept to the end, we must practise three rules. The first is, that we are to carrie in our hearts a purpose neuer to sinne against God in any thing: for where a purpose is of committing any sinne wittingly and willingly, there is neither good faith nor good conscience. The second is, to walke with God as Enoch did, Gen. 5. 24. which is, to order the whole course of our liues, as in the presence of God, desiring to approve all our doings cuer vnto him. Now this perswasion, that whereforever we are, we doe stand in the presence of God, is a notable means to maintaine sincerity. Gen. 1. 7. 1. I am God all sufficient, walke before me & be perfect. And the want of this, is the occasion of many offences: as Abraham said: because I thought surely the feare of God is not in this place, they will slay me for my wifes sake. Gen. 20. 11. The third rule is, carefully to walke in our particular callings, doing the duties thereof to the glory of God, to the good of the common wealth, and the edification of the Church: auoyding therein fraud, couetousnesse, and ambition, which cause men oftentimes to set their consciences on the tenter, and make them stretch like cheuerill.

Thus we see how good conscience may be preferred. Reasons to induce hereunto are many. I. Gods strait commandement. 1. Tim. 1. 19. Keepe faith and good conscience. And Prou. 4. 23. Keepe thine heart with all diligence. II. The good conscience is the most tender part of the soule: like to the apple of the eye, which being pierced by the least pin that may be, is not only blemished, but also loseth his sight. Therefore, as God doth to the eye, so must we deale with the conscience. God giues to the eye certaine lids of flesh, to defend and couer it from outward injuries: and so must we vse means to auoyd whatsoever may offend or annoy conscience. III. Manifest benefits redound vnto vs in keeping good conscience. First, so long as we haue care to keep it, we keep and enjoy all other gifts of Gods spirit. Good conscience and the rest of Gods graces, are as a paire of turtle doves, when the one feedes, the other feedeth, whē the one likes not, the other likes not, whē the one dies, the other dies: so where good conscience is maintained, there are many other excellent gifts of God flourishing: & where conscience decays, they also decay. Again, good conscience giues alacrity vnto vs, & boldnesse in calling on Gods name. 1. Ioh. 3. 21. If our hearts condemne vs not, we haue boldnesse towards God. Thirdly, it makes vs patient in afflictions, and comforts vs greatly: and when by reason of the grieuousnesse of our affliction, we are constrained to kneele on both knees and take vp our crosse, regenerate conscience as a sweet companion, or like a good Simon, laies to his shoulder, & helpe to beare one end of it. Lastly, when none can comfort vs, it will be an amiable comforter, and a friend speaking sweetly vnto vs, in the very agony and pang of death.

IV. Not to persue the conscience without spot, is the way to desperation. It is the policie of the diuell, to vse means to cast the conscience into the sleepe of security, that hee may the more easily bring man to his owne destruction. For as diseases, if they be long neglected become incurable, so the conscience much and often wounded, admits little or no comfort. Neither will it alwaies boot a man, after many yeares, to say at the last cast, Lord be mercifull to me, I haue sinned. Though some be received to mercy in the time of death, yet farre more perish in desperation, that liue in their sins wittingly & willingly, against their owne conscience. Pharaoh, Saul, and Iudas cryed all peccatus, I haue sinned against God: yet Pharaoh is hardened more and more, and despaireth: Saul goeth on in his sinne and despaireth: Iudas made away himselfe. And no maruell, for the multitude of sins oppresse the conscience, and make the heart to overflow with such a measure of grieft, that it can fasten no affiance in the mercy of God. Lastly, they that shall neglect to keep good conscience, procure many lutts, and dangers, & iudgements of God to themselves. When a ship is on the sea, if it be not wel gouerned, or if there be a breach made into it: it drawes water, and sinkes: and so both men, and wares, and all in likelihood are cast away. Now we are all passengers; the world is an huge sea, through which we must passe: our ship is the conscience of euery man. 1. Tim. 1. 19. and 3. 12. the wares are our religion and saluation, and al other gifts of God. Therefore it stands vs in hand to be alwaies at the helme, and to carry our ship with as euen a course as possibly we can, to the intended port of happiness, which is the saluation of our soules. But if so be it we grow careless & make breaches in the ship of conscience, suffering it to dash vpon the rocks of sin, it is a thousand to one, that we in the end shall cast away our selues and all we haue. And in the meane season as conscience decays, so proportionally all graces and goodnesse goe from vs: Gods commandements begin to be vile vnto vs; the knowledge thereof, as also faith, hope, and the inuocation of Gods name, decay. Experience sheweth that men of excellent gifts by vsing bad conscience, lose them all.

TO THE RIGHT WORSHIPFULL,
SIR WILLIAM BOWES KNIGHT, &c.
GRACE AND PEACE.

RIGHT Worshipfull, it is a notable policie of the diuell, which he hath put into the hands of sundry men in this age, to thinke that our Religion, and the Religion of the present Church of Rome are all one for substance: and that they may be reuited as (in their opinion) they were before. Writings to this effect are spread abroad in the French tongue, and respected of English Protestants more then is meete, or ought to be. For, let men in shew of moderation, pretend the peace and good estate of the Catholike Church as long as they will; this vnion of the two Religions can neuer be made, more then the vnion of light and darkenesse. And this shall appeare, if wee doe but a little consider, how they of the Romane Church haue razed the foundation. For though in words they honour Christ, yet indeed they turne him to a Pseudo-Christ, and an idoll of their owne braine. They call him our Lord, but with this condition, that the Seruant of Seruants of this Lord, may change and addeto his commandments: hauing so great power, that he may open and shut heauen to whom he will; and bind the very conscience with his owne lawes, and consequently be partaker of the spirituall kingdome of Christ. Againe, they call him a Sauour, but yet in Vs: in that he giues this grace vnto vs, that by our merits, we may partake in the merits of the Saints. And they acknowledge, that hee died and suffered for vs, but with this caveat, that the Fault being pardoned, we must satisfie for the temporall punishment, either in this world, or in Purgatorie. In a word, they make him our Mediatour of Intercession vnto God: but withall, his Mother must be the Queene of Heauen, and by the right of a Mother command him there. Thus in word they crie O Anna, but indeede they crucifie Christ. Therefore we haue good cause to blesse the name of God, that hath freed vs from the yoke of this Romane bondage, and hath brought vs to the true light and libertie of the Gospell. And it should be a great height of vnthankfulness in vs, not to stand out against the present Church of Rome, but to yeeld our selues to plottes of reconciliation. To this effect and purpose I haue penned this little Treatise, which I present to your Worship, desiring it might be some token of a thankfull minde, for vnderferued loue. And I craue withall, not onely your Worshipfull (which is more common) but also your learned protection, being well assured, that by skill and art you are able to iustifie whatsoeuer I haue truly taught. Thus wishing to you and yours the continuance and the increase of faith and good conscience, I take my leaue.

CHRISTIAN READER.

IF A Reformed Catholike, I vnderstand any one that holds the same necessarie heads of Religion with the Romane Church: yet so, as he pares off and reiects all errors in doctrine, whereby the said Religion is corrupted. How this may be done, I haue begun to make some little declaration in this small Treatise: the intent whereof, is to shew how neere we may come to the present Church of Rome in sundry points of Religion: and wherein we must euer dissent.

My purpose in penning this small discourse is three-fold. The first is, to confute all such Politiques as hold and maintaine, that our Religion, and that of the Romane Church differ not in substance, and consequently that they may be reconciled: yet my meaning is not here to condemne any Pacification that tends to perswade the Romane Church to our Religion. The second is, that the Papists which thinke so basely of our Religion may be wonne to a better liking of it: when they shall see how neere we come vnto them in sundry points. The third, that the common Protestants might in some part see and conceiue the points of difference betwene vs and the Church of Rome: and know in what manner and how farre forth we condemne the opinions of the said Church.

I craue pardon for the order which I vse, in handling the severall points: for I haue set them downe one by one, as they came to minde, not respecting the lawes of method. If any Papist shall say that I haue not alleadged their opinions aright, I answer that their books be at hand, and I can iustifie what I haue said.

Thus craving shine acceptation for this my paines, and wishing vnto thee the increase of knowledge, and loue of pure and sound Religion, I take my leaue, and make an end.

REVEL.

REVEL. 18. vers. 4.

And I heard another voice from beauen, saying, Goe out of her my people, that ye be not partakers of her sinnes, and receiue not of her plagues.

IN the former Chapter Saint Iohn sets downe a description of the whoore of Babylon: and that at large as he saw her in a vision described vnto him. In the 16. vers. of the same Chapter hee foretells her destruction: and in the three first verses of this 18. chapter, he goeth on to propound the said destruction, yet more directly and plainly: withall alledging arguments to proue the same, in all the verses following. Now in this fourth verse is set downe a caueat seruing to forewarne all the people of God, that they may escape the iudgement which shall befall the whore: and the words containe two parts: a commandement and a reason. The commandement, Come out of her my people, that is, from Babylon. The reason, taken from the cunct, lest ye be partakers, &c. Touching the commandement, first, I will search the right meaning of it, and then set downe the vse thereof, and doctrine flowing thence. In historie there are three Babylons mentioned: one is Babylon of Assyria, standing on the river Euphrates, where was the confusion of languages, and where the Iewes were in captiuitie: which Babylon is in Scripture reproched for Idolatry and other iniquities. The second Babylon is in Egypt standing on the river Nilus: and it is now called Cayr: of that mention is made, 1 Peter 5. 13. (as some thinke) though indeede it is as likely and more commonly thought, that there is meant Babylon of Assyria. The third Babylon is myssicall, whereof Babylon of Assyria was a type and figure; and that is Rome, which is without question here to be understood. And the whore of Babylon, as by all circumstances may be gathered, is the state or regiment of a people that are the inhabitants of Rome and appertaine thereto. This may be proued by the interpretation of the holy Ghost: for in the last verse of the seventeenth Chapter, the woman, that is, the whore of Babylon, is said to be a cite which reigneth ouer the kings of the earth: now in the daies when Saint Iohn penned this booke of Reuelation, there was no cite in the world that ruled ouer the kings of the earth but Rome; it then being the seat where the Emperour put in execution his imperiall authority. Again, in the seventh verse there is said to sit on a beast having seven heads, and ten hornes: which seven heads be seven hills, verse 9. whereon the woman sitteth, and also they be seven kings. Therefore by the whore of Babylon is meant a cite standing on seven hills. Now it is well knowne, not onely to learned men in the Church of God, but euen to the heathen themselves, that Rome alone is the cite built on seven distinct hills, called Celium, Auentinus, Esquilinus, Tarpeius, or Capitulinus, Viminalis, Palatinus, Quirinalis. Papists to helpe themselves, doe alleadge, that old Rome stood on seven hills, but now it is remoued further to Campus Martius. I answer, that howsoeuer the greatest part of the cite in regard of habitation be not now on seven hills, yet in regard of regiment and practise of religion it is: for euen to this day, vpon these hills are seated certaine Churches and Monasteries, and other like places where the Papall authoritie is put in execution: and thus Rome being put for a state and regiment, euen at this day it stands vpon seven hills. And though it be come to passe, that the harlot in regard of her latter daies cunct changed her seat, yet in respect of her younger times in which she was bred and borne, shee sate vpon the seven hills. Others, because they feare the wounding of their owne heads, labour to frame these words to another meaning, and say, that by the whore is meant the companie of all wicked men in the world whatsoever, the diuell being the head thereof. But this exposition is flat against the text: for in the second verse of the seventeenth chapter, shee is opposed to the kings of the earth, with whom shee is said to commit fornication: and in the last verse shee is called a cite standing on seven hills, and reigning ouer the kings of the earth (as I haue said,) and therefore must needs be a state of men in some particular place. And the Papists themselves perceiving that this shift will not serue their turne, make two Romes, heathenish Rome, and that whereof the Pope is head: now (say they) the whore spoken of is heathenish Rome, which

which was ruled by cruell tyrants, as Nero, Domitian, and the rest; and that Rome whereof now the Pope is head, is not here meant. Behold a vaine and foolish distinction: For Ecclesiastical Rome in respect of state, princely dominion, and crueltie in persecuting the Saints of God, is all one with the heathenish Empire: the See of the Bishop being turned into the Emperours court, as all histories doe manifest. But let the distinction bee as they suppose, yet by their leaue, here by the whore must be understood, not onely heathenish Rome, but euen the Papall or Ecclesiastical Rome: for, verse 3. of this chapter, the holy Ghost saith plainly, that shee hath made all nations drunke with the wine of the wrath of her fornication: yea it is added, that shee hath committed fornication with the kings of the earth, whereby is signified, that shee hath indeauoured to intangle all the nations of the earth in her spiritual idolatry, and to bring the kings of the earth to her religion. Which thing cannot be understood of the heathenish Rome, for that left all the kings of the earth to their own religion and idolatry: neither did they labour to bring forraigne kings to worship their gods. Again, chap. 17. vers. 16. it is said, that the ten hornes which be ten kings, shall hate the whore, and make her desolate and naked; which must not be understood of heathenish Rome, but of Popish Rome: for whereas in former times all the kings of the earth did submit themselves to the whore, now they haue begun to withdraw themselves, and make her desolate: as the kings of Bohemia, Denmarke, Germany, England, Scotland, and other parts: therefore this distinction is also frivolous. They further alleadge, that the whore of Babylon is drunke with the blood of the Saints and Martyrs, chap. 17. 6. shed not in Rome, but in Ierusalem, where the Lord was crucified: & the two Prophets being blaine, lie there in the streets, Rev. 11. 8. But this place is not meant of Ierusalem, as Hierome hath fully taught, but it may well be understood of Rome: Christ was crucified there, either because the authoritie whereby hee was crucified, was from the Roman Empire: or else because Christ in his members was and is there daily crucified, though locally in his owne person he was crucified at Ierusalem. And thus, notwithstanding all which hath bene said, we must here by the whore vnderstand the state and Empire of Rome, not so much vnder the Heathen Emperours, as vnder the head thereof, the Pope: which exposition, besides the authoritie of the Text, hath the fauour and defence of ancient and learned men. Bernard saith, They are the ministers of Christ, but they serue Antichrist. Again, The beast spoken of in the Apocalyp, to which a mouth is given to speake blasphemies, and to make warre with the Saints of God, is now gotten into Peters chaire, as a Lyon prepared to his prey. It will be said, that Bernard speaks these latter words of one that came to the Popedom by intrusion or vsurpation. It is true indeede: but wherefore was hee an vsurper? Hee rendreth a reason thereof, in the same place: because the Antipope called Innocentius, was chosen by the kings of Almaigne, France, England, Scotland, Spaine, Hierusalem; with consent of the whole Cleargie and people in these nations, and the other was not. And thus Bernard hath giuen his verdict, that not onely this vsurper, but all the Popes for these many yeeres, are the beasts in the Apocalyps, because now they are onely chosen by the Colledge of Cardinals. To this agreeth the decree of Pope Nicholas the second, ann. 1059. that the Pope shall afterward be created by the suffrages of the Cardinall Bishops of Rome, with the consent of the rest of the cleargie and people, and the Emperour himselfe: and all Popes are excommunicate and accused as Antichrists, that enter otherwises all now doe. Ioachim Abbas saith, Antichrist was long since borne in Rome, and shall yet be advanced higher in the Apostolike See. Petrarch saith, Once Rome, now Babylon. And Irenaeus lib. 5. cap. last, said before all these, that Antichrist should bee Latinius, a Roman.

Again, this commandement must not so much be understood of a bodily departure in respect of cohabitation and presence, as of a spiritual separation in respect of faith and religion. And the meaning of the holy Ghost is, that men must depart from the Romish Church, in regard of iudgement and doctrine, in regard of their faith and the worship of God.

Thus then we see that the words containe a commandement from God, inioyning his Church and people to make a separation from Babylon: Whence I obserue, That all those who will be saved, must depart and separate themselves from the faith and religion of this present Church of Rome. And whereas they are charged with schisme that separate on this manner; the truth is, they are not schismatikes that doe so, because they haue the commandement of God for their warrant: and the parties the schismatike in whom the cause of this separation lieth: and that is the Church of Rome, namely, the cup of abomination in the whores hand, which is their hereticall and schismaticall religion.

Now touching the dutie of separation, I meane to speak at large, not standing so much to proue the same, because it is euident by the text, as to shew the manner and measure of making this separation: and therein I will handle two things. First, how farre forth we may ioyne with them in the matter of religion: secondly, how farre forth and wherein we must dissent and depart from them. And for this cause I meane to make choice of certain points of religion, and to speake of them in as good order as I can, shewing in each of them our consent & difference: and the rather, because some harpe much vpon this string, that a Vnion may be made of our two religions, and that we differ not in substance, but in points of circumstance.

The first point wherewith I meane to begin, shall be the point of Free will; though it be not the principal.

I. Our consens.

Free-will both by them and vs, is taken for a mixt power in the mind & wil of man; whereby discerning what is good & what is euill, he doth accordingly choose or refuse the same.

I. Conclus. Man must bee considered in a foure-fold estate, as he was created, as he was corrupted, as he is renewed, as he shall bee glorified. In the first estate, we ascribe to mans will libertie of nature; in which he could will or nill either good or euill: in the third, libertie of grace: in the last, libertie of glorie. All the doubt is of the second estate: and yet therein also we agree, as the conclusions following will declare.

II. Conclus. The matters whereabout Free-will is occupied are principally the actions of men, which be of three sorts; naturall, humane, spirituall. Naturall actions are such as are common to men with beasts; as to eat, drink, sleepe, heare, see, smell, tast in all which, we ioyne with the Papists, and hold that man hath free-will, and ever since the fall of Adam by naturall power of the minde doth freely performe any of these actions, or the like.

III. Conclus. Humane actions are such as are common to all men good and bad, as to speake, and vse reason, the practise of all mechanical and liberrall Arts, and the outward performance of Ciuill and Ecclesiastical duties; as to come to the Church, to speake and preach the word, to reach out the hand to receiue the Sacramēt, & to lend the eare to listen outwardly to that which is taught. And hither wee may referre the outward actions of ciuill vertues as namely, iustice, temperance, gentlenes, and liberallitie. And in these also we ioyne with the Church of Rome, and say (as experience teacheth) that men haue a naturall freedom of will, to put them, or not to put them in executio. Paul saith, Rom. 2. 14. The Gentiles that haue not the law, doe the things of the law by nature; that is, by naturall inclination: and he saith of himselfe, that before his conuersion, touching the right conscience of the law, he was vnblameable. Phil. 3. 6. And for this externall obedience, naturall men receive reward in temporal things, Mat. 6. 5. Ezech. 29. 19. And yet here some caueats must be remembred: 1. That in humane actions mans will is weak and feeble, and his vnderstanding dimme and darke; and thereupon hee often failes in them. And in all such actions, with Augustine I vnderstand the will of man to bee onely wounded or halfe dead. 2. That the will of man is vnder the will of God, and therefore to be ordered by it; as Ier. saith, chap. 10. 23. O Lord I know that the way of man is not in himselfe, nei- there is it in man to walke or direct his steppes.

I V. Conclus. The third kinde of actions are spirituall, more neerly concerning the heart or conscience, and these be two-fold: they either concerne the kingdom of darkenesse, or else the kingdom of God. Those that concerne the kingdom of darkenesse, are fins properly; and in these we likewise ioyne with the Papists, and teach, that in finnes or euill actions man hath freedome of will. Some peradianture will say, that we finne necessarily, because he that sinneth cannot but sin: and that free-will and necessitie cannot stand together. Indeed the necessity of compulsion or coercion, and free-will cannot agree: but there is another kinde of necessitie, which may stand with freedome of will: for some things may bee done necessarily and also freely. A man that is in close prison, must needs there abide, and cannot possibly get forth and walke where he will; yet can he moue himselfe freely and walke within the prison: so likewise though mans will bee chained naturally by the bond of sinne, and therefore cannot but sinne, and thereupon sinneth necessarily, yet doth it also sinne freely.

V. Conclus. The second kinde of spirituall actions or things, concerne the kingdom of God: as repentance, faith, the conuersion of a sinner, new obedience, and such like; in which, we likewise in part ioyne with the Church of Rome, and say, that in the first conuersion of a sinner, mans free-will concurs with Gods grace, as a fellow or co-worker in some sort. For in the conuersion of a sinner three things are required: the word, Gods spirit, and mans will: for mans will is not passie in al and euery respect, but hath an action in the best conuersion and change of the soule. When any man is conuerted, this worke of God is not done by compulsion, but he is conuerted willingly: and at the very time when he is conuerted, by Gods grace he wils his conuersion. To this end saith Augustine, Serm. 15. de verb. Apostoli. He which made thee without thee wil not save thee without thee. Again, That is certain, that our will is required in this, that we may doe any good thing well: but we haue it not from our owne power, but God workes to will in vs. For looke at what time God giues grace, at the same time he giueth a will to desire and will the same grace: as for example, when GOD workes faith, at the same time he workes also vpon the will, causing it to desire faith, and willingly to receiue the gift of beleeuing. God makes of the vnwilling will a willing will: because no man can receiue grace vtterly against his wil, considering will constrained is no will. But here we must remember, that howsoeuer in respect of time the working of grace by Gods spirit, and the willing of it in man goe together: yet in regard of order, grace is first wrought, and mans will must first of all bee acted and moued by grace, and then it also acteth, willeth, and moueth it selfe. And this is the last point of consent betweene vs and the Romane Church touching Free-will: neither may wee proceede further with them.

II. The difference or difference.

The point of difference standeth in the cause of the freedome of mans will in spirituall matters, which concerne the kingdom of God. The Papists say, mans will concurrereth and worketh with Gods graces in the first conuersion of a sinner, by it selfe, and by it owne naturall power: and is only helped by the holy Ghost. We say, that mans will worketh with grace in the first conuersion: yet not of it selfe, but by grace. Or thus: They say, will hath a naturall co-operation: we deny it, and say it hath co-operation only by grace, being in it selfe not actiue but passiue, willing wel only as it is moued by grace, whereby it must first be acted and moued, before it can act or wil. And that we may the better conceiue the difference, I will vse this comparison: The Church of Rome sets forth the estate of a sinner by the condition of a prisoner, and so doe we: marke then the difference: It suppoſeth the said prisoner to lie bound hand and foot with chaines and fetters, and withal to be sicke and weak, yet not wholly dead, but liuing in part: it suppoſeth also, that being in this case, he stirreth not himselfe for any helpe, and yet hath ability and power to stirre. Hereupon, if the keeper come and take away his bolts and fetters, and hold him by the hand, and helpe him vp, he can and will of himselfe stand and walke, and goe out of prison: euen so (say they) is a sinner bound hand and foote with the chaines of his finnes; and yet he is not dead but sicke, like to the wounded man in the way betweene Iericho and Ierusalem. And therefore doth he not will and affect that which is good: but if the holy Ghost come and doe but vntie his bands, and reach him his hand of grace, then can he stand of himselfe, and will his owne saluation, or any thing else that is good. Wee in like manner grant, that a prisoner slyly resembleth a naturall man, but yet such a prisoner must he be, as is not onely sicke & weak, but euen stark dead: which cannot stirre though the keeper vntie his bolts and chaines, nor heare though hee found a trumpet in his care; and if the said keeper would haue him to moue and stirre, hee must giue him not onely his hand to helpe him, but euen soule and life also: and such a one is euery man by nature: not onely chained and fettered in his finnes, but stark dead therein: as one that lyeth rotten in the graue, not hauing any ability or power to moue or stirre: and therefore he cannot so much as desire to doe any thing that is truly good of himselfe. But God must first come and put a new soule into him, euen the spirit of grace to quicken and reueile him; and then being thus reuiued, the will beginneth to wil good things at the very same time, when God by his spirit first infuseth grace. And this is the true difference betweene vs and the Church of Rome in this point of Free-will.

III. Our reasons.

Now for the confirmation of the doctrine we hold, namely, that a man willeth not his owne conuersion of himselfe by nature, either in whole or in part, but by grace wholly and alone: these reasons may be vſed. The first is taken from the nature and measure of mans corruption, which may be distinguished into two parts. The first, is the want of that originall righteouſnesse, which was in man by creation: the second, is a pronenesse and inclination to that which is euill, and to nothing that is truly good. This appeareth, Gen. 8. 21. The frame of mans heart (saith the Lord) is euill from his childhood: that is, the disposition of the vnderstanding, will, affections, with all that the heart of man deuſeth, frameth, or imagineth, is wholly euill. And Paul saith, Rom. 8. 7. The wisdom of the flesh is enmity against God: which words are very significant for the word enmity translated wisdom, signifieth that the best thoughts, the best desires, affections, & intentions that be in any naturall man, euen those that come most neere to true holinesse, are not onely contrary to God, but euen enmities to it selfe. And hence I gather, that the very heart it selfe, that is, the will, and minde from whence these desires and thoughts doe come, are also enmities vnto God. For such as the action is, such is the facultie whence it proceedeth: such as the fruite is, such is the tree; such as the branches are, such are the roots. By both these places it is euident, that in man there is not onely a want, absence, or deprivation of originall righteouſnesse, but a pronenesse also by nature vnto that which is euill: which pronenesse includes in it an inclination not to some few, but to all and euery sinne, the very sinne against the holy Ghost not excepted. Hence therefore, I reason thus:

If euery man by nature doth both want originall iustice, and also prone vnto all euill, then willeth he naturall free-will to wil that which is truly good.

But euery man by nature want originall iustice and is also prone vnto all euill.

Ergo, Euery man naturally want free-will, to wil that which is good.

Reason. II. 1. Cor. 2. 14. The naturall man perceiueth not the things of the spirit of God; for they are foolishnesse vnto him, neither can he know the, because they are spiritually discerned. In these words Saint Paul sets downe these points. 1. that a naturall man doth not so much as thinke of the things reuealed in the Gospell. 2. that a man hearing, and in mind conceiuing them; cannot giue consent vnto them, and by naturall iudgement approve of them; but contrariwise thinkeeth them to bee foolishnesse,

III. that no man can giue assent to the things of God, vntlesse he be enlightened by the spirit of God. And hence I reason thus:

If a man by nature doth not know and perceiue the things of God, and when he shall know them, cannot by nature giue assent vnto them, then hath he no power to will them:

But the first is evidently true. Ergo.

For first, the minde must approue and giue assent, before the will can choise or will: and when the mind hath no power to conceiue or giue assent, there the will hath no power to will.

Reason III. Thirdly, the holy Ghost auoucheth, Eph. 2.1. Coloss. 2.13. that all men by nature are dead in sins & trespasses: not as the Papists say, weak, sicke, or halfe dead. Hence I gather, that man wanteth naturall power not to will simply, but freely and frankly to will that which is truly good. A dead man in his graue cannot stirre the least finger, because he wants the very power of life, sense, & motion: no more can he that is dead in sinne, will the least good: nay, if he could either will or doe any good, he could not be dead in sinne. And as a dead man in the graue, cannot rise but by the power of God; no more can hee that is dead in sinne rise, but by the power of Gods grace alone, without any power of his owne.

Reason IV. Fourthly, in the conuersion and saluation of a sinner, the Scripture ascribeth all to God, and nothing to mans free-will. *Ioh. 2.3. Except a man be borne againe, he cannot see the kingdom of God. 2.10. We are his workmanship created in Christ Iesus to good works. And c.4. v.24. the new man is created to the image of God. Now to be borne againe, is a worke of no lesse importance than our first creation: and therefore wholly to be ascribed to God as our creation is. Indeed Paul Phil. 2.12, 13. biddeth the Philippians worke out their saluation with feare and trembling: not meaning to ascribe vnto them a power of doing good by themselves: And therefore in the next ver. he addeth, It is God that worketh both the will & the deed directly excluding all naturall free-will in things spiritual and yet withall he acknowledgeth that mans will hath a worke in doing that which is good, not by nature, but by grace: Because with God giues man power to will good things, then he can will them; and when he giueth him a power to doe good, then he can doe good, and he doeth it. For though there bee not in mans conuersion a naturall co-operation of his will with Gods spirit, yet is there a supernaturall co-operation by grace, inabling man when he is to be conuerted, to will his conuersion: according to which Saint Paul faith, 1. Cor. 15.10. I haue laboured in the faith. But lest any man should imagine, that this was done by any naturall power, therefore he addeth, *yet not I, that is, not by any thing in me, but Gods grace in me, inabling my will to doe the good I doe.

Reason V. The iudgement of the ancient Church. (a) August. The will of the regenerate is kindled onely by the holy Ghost: that they may therefore be able because they will thus: and they will thus, because G O D workes in them to will.

b And, We haue lost our free will to lose God by the greatness of our sinne. Ser. 2. on the words of the Apollite: Man when he was created, received great strength in his free-will: but by sinning he lost it. c Fulgentius, God giueth grace freely to the unworthy, whereby the wicked man being instructed, is enlightened with the gift of good will, and with a faculty of doing good: that by mercie preventing him, he may begin to will well, and by mercy comming after, he may doe the good he will.

Bernard faith, d It is wholly the grace of God that we are created, healed, saved. Concil. Arauc. 2. cap. 6. To beleene and to will is giuen from above by infusion, and inspiration of the holy Ghost. More testimonies and reasons might bee alleadged to proue this conclusion, but these shall suffice: now let vs see what reasons are alleadged to the contrary.

III. Objections of the Papists.

Obiect. 1. First they alleadge that man by nature may doe that which is good, and therefore will that which is good: for none can doe that which hee neither willet nor thinketh to doe, but first we must will and then doe. Now (say they) men doe good by nature, as giue almes, speake the truth, doe iustice, and practise other duties of ciuill vertue: and therefore will that which is good. I answer, that a naturall man may doe good workes for the substance of the outward worke: but not in regard of the goodnes of the manner: these are two diuers things. A man without supernaturall grace may giue almes, doe iustice, speake the truth, &c. which be good things considered in themselves, as God hath commanded them; but he cannot doe them well. To thinke good things, and to doe good things are naturall workes: but to thinke good things in a good manner, and to doe them well, so as God may accept the action done, are workes of grace. And therefore the good thing done by a naturall man, is sinne in respect of the doer, because it failes both for his right beginning, which is a pure heart, good conscience, and faith vnfaigned; as also for his end, which is the glory of God.

Ob. II. God hath commanded all men to beleue & repent, therefore they haue naturall free-will, by vertue whereof, (being helped by the spirit of God) they can beleue and repent. Ans. The reason is not good, for by such commandments God sheweth not what men are able to do, but what they should do, and what they cannot do. Again, the reason is not well framed, it ought rather to be thus; because God giues men commandment to repent & beleue, therefore they haue power to repent and beleue, either by nature, or by grace, & then we hold with them. For when God in the Gospel commandeth men to repent and to beleue

at the same time by his grace he enableth them both to will or desire to beleue and repent: as also actually to repent and beleue.

Obiect. II. If man haue no free-will to sinne or not to sinne, then no man is to be punished for his sinnes: because he sinneth by a necessitie not to be avoided. Ans. The reason is not good: for though man cannot but sinne, yet is the fault in himselfe, and therefore hee is to be punished, as a bankrupt is not therefore freed from his debts, because he is notable to pay them: but the billes against him stand in force, because the debt comes through his owne default.

The second point: Of Originall sin.

The next point to be handled, is concerning Originall sinne after baptism, that is, how farre forth it remaineth after baptism: a point to bee well considered, because hereupon depend many points of Poperie.

1. Our consent.

I. Conclus. They say, naturall corruption after baptism is abolished, and so say we: but let vs see how farre it is abolished. In originall sinne are three things; I. the punishment, which is the first and second death. II. Guiltinesse, which is the binding vp of the creature vnto punishment. III. the fault, or the offending of God, vnder which I comprehend our guiltinesse in Adams first offence: as also the corruption of the heart, which is a naturall inclination and pronenesse to any thing that is euill or against the law of God. For the first, we say, that after baptism in the regenerate, the punishment of originall sinne is taken away: There is no condemnation (saith the Apollite) to them that be in Iesus Christ, Rom. 8.1. For the second, that is, guiltinesse, we further condescend and say, that is also taken away in them that are borne anew: for considering there is no condemnation to them, there is no thing to bind them to punishment. Yet this cannot be remembered, namely, that the guiltinesse is removed from the person regenerate, not from the sinne in the person: but of this more afterward. Thirdly, the guilt in Adams first offence is pardoned. And touching the corruption of the heart, I auouch two things: I. That the very power or strength whereby it reigneth in man, is taken away in the regenerate. II. That this corruption is abolished (as also the fault of euery actual sin past) so farre forth as it is the fault and sinne of the man in whom it is. Indeed it remains till death, and it is sinne considered in it selfe, so long as it remains, but it is not imputed vnto the person: and in that respect is as though it were not: it being pardoned.

II. The dissent or difference.

Thus farre we consent with the Church of Rome: now the difference between vs stands not in the abolishment, but in the manner, and the measure of the abolishment of this sinne.

Papists teach, that Originall sinne is so far forth taken away after baptism, that it ceaseth to be a sinne properly: and is nothing else but a want, defect, and weakenesse, making the heart fit and readie to conceiue sinne: much like tinder, which though it be not fire of it selfe, yet is it very apt and fit to conceiue fire. And they of the Church of Rome denie it to be sinne properly, that they might vphold some grosse opinion of theirs, namely, that a man in this life may fulfill the law of God, and doe good workes void of sinne: that hee may stand righteous at the barre of Gods iudgement by them.

But we teach otherwise, that though originall sinne be taken away in the regenerate, and that in sundry respects: yet doth it remaine in them after baptism, not onely as a want and weakenesse, but as a sinne, and that properly: as may by these reasons be proued.

Reason. I. Rom. 7.17. Paul faith directly: It is no more I that doe it, but sinne that dwelleth in me: that is, originall sinne. The Papists answer againe, that it is so called improperly: because it commeth of sinne, and also is an occasion of sinne to be done. But by the circumstances of the Text, it is sinne properly: for in the words following, Saint Paul faith, that this sin dwelleth in him, made him to doe the euill which he hated. And v. 24. he crieth out, O wretched man that I am, who shall deliuer me from this body of death! whence I reason thus:

That which once was sinne properly, and still remaining in man maketh him to sinne, and intangleth him in the punishment of sinne, and makes him miserable, that is sinne properly. But originall sinne doth all these. Ergo.

Reason. II. Infants baptized and regenerate, die the bodily death before they come to the yeeres of discretion: therefore originall sinne in them is sinne properly: or else they should not die, having no cause of death in them: for death is the wages of sinne, as the Apollite faith, Rom. 6.23. and Rom. 5.12. Death entered into the world by sinne. As for actual sinne they haue none, if they die presently after they are borne before they come to any vse either of reason or affection.

Reason. III. That which lusteth against the spirit, and by lusting tempteth, and in tempting intireth and draweth the heart to sinne, is for nature sinne it selfe: but concupiscence in the regenerate lusteth against the spirit, Gal. 5.17. and tempteth as I haue said, Iam. 1.14. God tempteth no man, but euery man is tempted when he is drawne away by his owne concupiscence, and is intised: then when lust conceiueth, it bringeth forth sinne. And therefore it is sinne properly: such as the fruit is, such is the tree.

August. Concupiscence against which the spirit lusteth, is sinne, because in it there is disobedience against the rule of the mind: & it is the punishment of sinne, because it befalls man for the merits of his disobedience, and it is the cause of sinne.

Reason. IV. The iudgement of the auncient Church. August. Epist. 29. Charitie in sinne is more, in some lesse, in some none: the highest degree of all which cannot be increased, is in none, as long as man liues vpon earth. And as long as it may be increased, that which is lesse then it should be, is in fault: by which fault it is, that there is no iust man vpon earth that doth good and sinne not: by which fault, none liuing shall be iustified in the sight of God. For which fault, if we say we haue no sinne, there is no truth in vs: for which aske, though we profit neuer so much, it is necessarie for vs to say, forgiue vs our debts, though all our words, deeds, and thoughts be already forgiven in baptisms. Indeece August. in sundry places seemes to denie concupiscence to be sinne after baptism: but his meaning is, that concupiscence in the regenerate is not the sinne of the person in whom it is, or thus he expounds himselfe. (a) This is not to haue sinne, nor to bee guilty of sinne. And (b) The law of sinne in baptisme is remitted and not ended. And (c) Let not sinne raigne: he saith not, let not sinne be, but let it not raigne. For as long as thou liuest, of necessity sinne will be in thy members: at the least, looke it raigne not in thee, &c.

Objections of Papists.

The arguments which the Church of Rome alleadgeth to the contrary are these. Obiect. 1. In baptisme men receiue perfect and absolute pardon of sinne: and sinne being pardoned is taken quite away: and therefore originall sinne after baptism ceaseth to be sinne. Answe. Sinne is abolished two waies: first, in regard (d) of imputation to the person: secondly, in regard (e) of existing and being. For this cause, God vouchsafeth to man two blessings in baptism, Remission of sinne, and Mortification of the same. Remission or pardon abolisheth sinne wholly in respect of any imputation thereof vnto man, but not simply in regard of the being thereof. Mortification therefore goeth further, and abolisheth in all the powers of bodie and soule, the very concupiscence or corruption it selfe, in respect of the being thereof. And because Mortification is not accomplished till death, therefore originall corruption remaineth till death, though not imputed.

Obiect. II. Every sinne is voluntary: but originall sinne in no man after baptism is voluntary: and therefore no sin. Answe. The proposition is a politicke rule pertaining to the courts of men, and must be vnderstood of such actions as are done of one man to another: and it doth not belong to the Court of conscience, which God holdeth and keepeth in mens hearts, in which euery want of conformitie to the law is made in. Secondly, I answer, that originall sinne was voluntarie in our first parent Adam: for hee sinned, and brought this misery vpon vs willingly: though in vs it bee otherwise vpon iust cause. Actual sinne was first in him, and then originall corruption: but in vs originall corruption is first, and then actual sinne.

Obiect. III. Where the forme of any thing is taken away, there the thing it selfe ceaseth also: but after baptism in the regenerate, the forme of originall sin, that is, the guilt is quite remoued: and therefore sinne ceaseth to be sinne. Answe. The guilt or obligation to punishment is not the forme of originall corruption, but (as we say in schooles) an accident or necessary companion thereof. The true forme of originall sinne, is a defect and deprivation of that which the law requireth at our hands in our minde, will, affections, and in all the powers both of soule and body. But they vrge this reason further, saying, Where the guilt and punishment is taken away, there is no fault remaining, but after baptism the guilt and punishment is remoued, and therefore though originall corruption remaine, it is not as a fault to make vs guiltie before God, but only as a weakness. Answe. Guilt is remoued, and not remoued. It is remoued from the person regenerate, which stands not guilty for any sinne, original or actual; but Guilt is not remoued from the sinne it selfe: for as some answer, there be two kinds of guilt, actual, and potentiall. The actual guilt is, whereby sin maketh man stand guilty before God; and that is remoued in the regenerate. But the potentiall guilt, which is an aptnesse in sinne, to make a man stand guilty if he sinne, that is not remoued; and therefore still sinne remaineth sinne. To this or like effect saith Augustine, We say that the guilt of concupiscence, not whereby it is guilty (for that is not a person) but that whereby it made man guilty from the beginning, is pardoned, and that the thing it selfe is euill, so as the regenerate desire to be healed of this plague.

Obiect. IV. Lastly, for our disgrace they alleadgeth that we in our doctrine teach that originall sinne after baptism is onely clipped or pared, like the haire of a mans head, whose roots still remaine in the flesh, growing and increasing after they are cut, as before. Answe. Our doctrine is abused; for in the paring of any thing; as in cutting of the haire, or in lopping a tree, the root remains vntouched, and thereupon multiplieth as before. But in the Mortification of originall sin after baptism, we hold no such paring; but teach, that in the very first instant of the conuersion of a sinner, sinne receiueh his deadly wound in the root, neuer afterward to be recovered.

The third point: Certaintie of saluation.

I. Our confesse.

I. Concl. We hold and beleue that a man in this life, may be certaine of saluation; and the same thing doth the Church of Rome teach and hold.

II. Concluf.

II. Concluf. Wee hold and beleue that a man is to put a certain affiance in Gods mercie in Christ for the saluation of his soule; and the same thing by common consent holdeth the foresaid Church: this point maketh not the difference betweene vs.

III. Concl. We hold that with assurance of saluation in our hearts is ioyned doubting; and there is no man so assured of his saluation, but he at sometime doubteth thereof, especially in the time of temptation; and in this the Papists agree with vs, and we with them.

IV. Concluf. They goe further and say, that a man may bee certaine of the saluation of menior of the Church by Catholike faith: and so say we.

V. Concl. Ye say they hold that a man by faith may be assured of his owne saluation through extraordinary reuelation, as Abraham and others were; and so doe we.

VI. Concl. They teach that we are to be certaine of our saluation by speciall faith in regard of God that promitteth: though in regard of our felues and our indisposition we cannot; and in the former point they consent with vs.

II. The dissent or difference.

The very maine point of difference lies in the manner of assurance.

I. Concl. We hold that a man may be certain of his saluation in his owne conscience euen in this life, and that by ordinary and speciall faith. They hold that a man is certaine of his saluation onely by hope: both of vs hold a certainty, we by faith, they by hope.

II. Concl. Further, we hold and auaunt that our certainty by true faith is vnfallible: they say their certainty is onely probable.

III. Concluf. And further though both of vs say, that we haue confidence in Gods mercie in Christ for our saluation: yet wee doe it with some difference. For our confidence cometh from certaine and ordinarie faith: theirs from hope, ministring (as they say) but a coniectural certainty.

Thus much of the difference: now let vs see the reason to and fro.

III. Objections of Papists.

Obiect. I. Where there is no word, there is no faith, for these two are relatives: but there is no word of God, saying, Cornelius beleue thou, Peter beleue thou, and thou shalt bee saved. And therefore there is no such ordinary faith to beleue a mans owne particular saluation. Answe. The proposition is false, vnlesse it be supplied with a clause on this manner. Where there is no word of promise, nor any thing that doth conueruaile a particular promise, there is no faith. But (say they) there is no such particular word. It is true, God doth not speake to men particularly, Beleue thou, and thou shalt be saved. But yet doth he that which is answerable herunto, in that he giueth a generall promise, with a commandement to apply the same: and hath ordained the holy ministration of the word to apply the same to the persons of the hearers in his owne name: and that it is as much as if the Lord himselfe should speake to men particularly. To speake more plainly: in the Scripture the promises of saluation bee indefinitely propounded: it faith not any where, If Iohn will beleue, hee shall be saved; or if Peter will beleue, hee shall be saved; but who soeuer beleueh shall be saved. Now then comes the minister of the word, who standing in the roome of God, and in the stead of Christ himselfe, takes the indefinite promises of the Gospell, and laies them to the hearts of euery particular man: and this in effect is as much as if Christ himselfe should say, Cornelius beleue thou, and thou shalt be saved: Peter beleue thou, and thou shalt be saved. It is answered, that this applying of the Gospell is vpon condition of mens faith and repentance, and that men are deceived touching their owne faith and repentance: and therefore faile in applying the word vnto themselves. Answe. Indeece this manner of applying is false in all hypocrites, hereticks, and vnrepentant persons, for they apply vpon carnall presumption, and not by faith. Neuertheless it is true in all the elect hauing the spirit of grace, and praier for when God in the ministration of the word being his owne ordinance, faith, Seeke ye my face: the heart of Gods children truly answereth, O Lord, I will seek thy face, Psal. 27. 8. And when God shall say, Thou art my people, they shall say againe. The Lord is my God, Zach. 13. 9. And it is a truth of God, that he which beleueh, knoweth that he beleueh: and he that truly repenteth, knoweth that he repenteth: vnlesse it be in the beginning of our conuersion, and in the time of distrust and temptation. Otherwise what thankfulness can there be for grace receiued?

Obiect. II. It is no article of the Creed, that a man must beleue his owne saluation: and therefore no man is bound thereto. Answe. By this argument it appeares plainly, that the very pillars of the Church of Rome doe not vnderstand the Creed: for in that which is commonly called the Apostles Creede, euery article implieth in it this particular faith. And in the first article, I beleue in God, are three things contained: the first, to beleue that there is a God, the second, to beleue the same God to be my God, the third, to put my confidence in him for my saluation: and so much containe the other articles, which are concerning God. When Thomas said, Ioh. 20. 28. My God, Christ answered, Thou hast beleued Thomas. Where we see that to beleue in God, is to beleue God to be our God. And Psal. 78. 22 to beleue in God, and to put trust in him are all one, They beleued not in God, and trusted not in his helpe. And the articles concerning Remission of sinnes, and Lifs everlasting, doe include, and we in them acknowledge our speciall faith concerning our own saluation. For to beleue this or that, is to beleue there is such a thing, & that the same thing belongs to me: as when David said, I should have fainted except I had beleueed in the goodness of the Lord in the land of the living. Psal. 27. 1. 3. It is answered, that in those articles wee ouerly profite our selues to beleuee remission of finnes, and life euerallasting to be vouchsafed to the people and Church of God. Ans. This indeede is the exposition of many, but it stands not with common reason. For if that, bee all the faith that is there confessed, the diuell hath as good a faith as we. He knoweth and beleueth that there is a God: and that this God in parteth remission of finnes and life euerallasting to his Church. And to the end that we being Gods children, may in faith go beyond all the diuels in hell, we must further beleuee, that remission of finnes and life euerallasting belong vnto vs: and vnto vs we doe particularly apply the said articles vnto our selues, we shall little or nothing differ from the diuell, in making confession of faith.

Obiect. III. We are taught to pray for the pardon of our sins day by day, Mat. 6. 12. and all this were needlesse, if we could be assured of pardon in this life. Ans. The fourth petition must be vnderstood not so much of our old debts or sins, as of our present and new sins: for as we goe on from day to day, so we adde sin to sinne: and for the pardon of them must we humble our selues & pray. I answer again, that we pray for the pardon of our finnes; not because we haue no assurance thereof, but because assurance is weak and small: we grow on from grace to grace in Christ, as children do to mans estate by little and little. The heart of euery beleuer is like a vessel with a narrow necke, which being cast into the sea is not filled at the first: but by reason of the straite passage, receiuech water drop by drop. God giuech vnto vs in Christ, euen a sea of mercie, but the same on our parts is apprehended and receiued onely by little and little, as faith groweth from age to age: and this is the cause why men hauing assurance pray for more.

Reason I. The first reason may be taken from the nature of faith, on this manner. True faith is both an vnfallible assurance, and a particular assurance of the remission of sins, and of life euerallasting. And therefore by this faith, a man may be certainly & particularly assured of the remission of finnes, and life euerallasting. That this reason may be of force, two things must be prouced: first, that true faith is a certaine assurance of Gods mercie to that partie in whom it is. Secondly, that faith is a particular assurance thereof. For the first, that faith is a certaine assurance, Christ faith to Peter, Mat. 16. 17. 19. O thou of little faith, wherefore doubtst thou? Where he maketh an opposition betweene faith and doubting: thereby giuing vs directly to vnderstand, that to be cer- tain, and to giue assurance, is of the nature of faith. Rom. 4. 20. 22. Paul faith of Abraham, that he did not doubt of the promise of God: though vnbeleefe: but was strengthened in faith; and gave glory to God, being fully assured, that he which had promised was able to doe it: where I obserue first, that doubting is made a fruit of vnbeleefe: and therefore vnfallible certainty and assurance, being contrary to doubting, must needs proceed from true faith: considering that contrary effects come of contrary causes: and contrary causes produce contrary effects. Secondly, I note, that the strength of Abrahams faith, did stand in substance of assurance: for the text faith, he was strengthened in the faith, being fully assured: and againe, Heb. 11. 1. true fauing faith is said to be the ground and substance of things hoped for: and the euidence or demonstration of things that are not seene: but faith can be no ground or euidence of things, vnlesse it bee for nature certainty in selfe; and thus the first point is manifest. The second, that fauing faith is a particular assurance is proued by this, that the property of faith is to apprehend and apply the promise: and the thing promised, Christ with his benefits, Iob. 1 12. As many, faith S. Iohn, as receiued him, so them he gave power to be the sons of God, namely, to them that beleue in his name. In these words, to beleue in Christ, and to receiue Christ, are put for one and the same thing. Now to receiue Christ, is to apprehend and apply him with all his benefits vnto our selues, as he is offered in the promises of the Gospell. For in the first chapter following, first of all he sets forth himselfe not onely as a Redemer generally, but also as the bread of life, and the water of life: secondly, he sets forth his best hearers, as eaters of his body and drinkers of his blood; and thirdly he intends to prouue this conclusion; that to eate his body and to drinke his blood, and to beleue in him, are all one. Now then, if Christ be as food, and if to eate and drinke the body and blood of Christ, bee to beleue in him, then must there be a proportion betweene eating and beleueing. Look then as there can be no eating without taking or receiuing of meat, so no beluing in Christ without a spirituall receiuing & apprehending of him.

And as the body hath his hand, mouth, and stomacke whereby it taketh, receiuech, and digesteth meate for the nourishment of euery part: so likewise, in the soule there is a faith, which is both hand, mouth, and stomacke to apprehend, receiue, and apply Christ and all his merits, for the nourishment of the soule. And Paul faith yet more plainly, Gal. 3. 14. that through faith we receive the promise of the spirit.

Now as the property of apprehending and applying of Christ belongeth to faith, so it agreeth not to hope, loue, confidence, or any other gift or grace of God. But first by faith we must apprehend Christ, and apply him to our selues, before we can haue any hope or confidence in him. And this applying seemes not to be done by any affection of the will, but by a supernaturall act of the minde, which is to acknowledge, set downe, & beleue that remission of finnes, and life euerallasting by the merit of Christ, belong to vs particularly. To this which I haue said agreeth August. Tract. 15. on Iohn. Why preparest thou teeth and belly? beleue & thou hast eaten: & Tract. 50. How shall I reach my hand into heauen, that I may hold him sitting there? Send up thy faith, and thou shalt hold on him. And Bernard faith, homil. in Cant. 16. Where hee is thou canst not come now: yet goe to, follow him, and seeke him: beleue and thou hast found him: for to beleue is to find. Chrysost. on Mark. homil. 10. Let vs beleue and we see Iesus present before vs. Ambros. on Luk. 16. 6. c. By faith Christ is touched, by faith Christ is seene. Tertull. de resur. car. He must be chewed by vnderstanding, and be digested by faith.

Reason II. Whatsoeuer the holy Ghost testifieth vnto vs, that wee may, yea that we must certainly by faith beleue: but the holy Ghost doth particularly testifie vnto vs our adoption, the remission of our sins, and the saluation of our soules: and therefore we may & must particularly and certainly by faith beleue the same. The first part of the reason is true, & cannot be denied of any. The second part is proued thus: S. Paul faith Rom. 8. 15. Wee haue not receiued the spirit of bondage to feare: but the spirit of adoption, whereby we crye Abba, father: adding further, tha: the same spirit beareth witness with our spirits, that we are the children of God. Where the Apostle maketh two witnesses of our adoption: the spirit of God, and our spirits, that is, the conscience sanctified by the holy Ghost. The Papists to elude this reason, alleadge that the spirit of God doth indeed witness of our adoption, by some comfortable feeling of Gods loue and fauour, being such as is weak and oftentimes deceitfull. But by their leaues, the testimonie of the spirit is more then a bare sense or feeling of Gods grace: for it is called the pledge and earnest of Gods spirit in our hearts, 2 Cor. 1. 22. and therefore it is fit to take away all occasion of doubting of our saluation: as in a bargain the earnest is giuen betweene the parties to put all out of question. Bernard faith, that the testimonie of the spirit is a most sure testimonie, Epist. 107.

Reason III. That which we must pray for by Gods commandment, that we must beleue: but euery man is to pray for the pardon of his owne finnes, and for life euerallasting: of this there is no question: therefore he is bound to beleue the same. The proposition is most of all doubtfull: but it is proued thus. In euery petition there must bee two things: a desire of the thing we aske, and a particular faith whereby we beleue, that the thing we aske shall be giuen vnto vs. So Christ faith, Whatsoeuer ye desire when ye pray, beleue that ye shall haue it, and it shall be giuen vnto you. And S. Iohn further noteth out this particular faith, calling it our assurance, that God will giue vnto vs what- soever we aske according to his will. And hence it is, that in euery petition there must bee two grounds: a commandment to warrant vs in making a petition, and a promise to assure vs of the accomplishment thereof. And vpon both these followes necessarily an application of the things which we aske to our selues.

Reason IV. Whatsoeuer God commandeth in the Gospell, that a man must and can performe; but God in the Gospell commandeth vs to beleuee the pardon of our own finnes, and life euerallasting, and therefore we must beleuee thus much, and may be assured thereof. This proposition is plaine by the distinction of the commandments of the law, and of the Gospell. The commandments of the law shew vs what we must do, but minister no power to performe the thing to be done; but the doctrine and commandments of the Gospell doe otherwise, and therefore they are called spirit and life: God with the commandment giuing grace that the thing prescribed may bee done. Now this is a commandment of the Gospell, to beleuee remission of finnes, for it was the substance of Christs ministry, repent & beleuee the Gospell. And that is not generally to beleuee that Christ is a Saviour, & that the promises made in him are true (for so the diuels beleuee with trembling) but it is particularly to beleuee that Christ is my Saviour, and that the promises of saluation in Christ belong in speciall to me, as S. Iohn faith. This is his commandment, that wee beleuee in the names of Iesus Christ; now to beleuee in Christ is to put confidence in him; which none can doe, vnlesse he bee first assured of his loue and fauour. And therefore in as much, as we are ioyned to put our confidence in Christ, we are also ioyned to beleuee our reconciliation with him, which standeth in the remission of our finnes, and our acceptance to life euerallasting.

Reason V. Whereas the Papists teach, that a man may be assured of his saluation by hope; euen hence it followes, that he may be vnfallibly assured thereof. For the property of true and liuely hope is never to make a man ashamed, Rom. 5. 5. And the true hope followeth faith, and presupposeth certaintie of faith: neither can any man truly hope for his saluation, vnlesse by faith he be certainly assured thereof in some measure.

The Popish Doctors make exception to these reasons on this manner. First they say, it cannot be proued that a man is as certaine of his saluation by faith, as he is of the articles of the Creede. I answer. First, they prouee thus much, that we ought to bee as certaine of the one as of the other. For looke, what commandment we haue to beleuee the articles of our faith, the like we haue inioyning vs to beleuee the pardon of our finnes, as I haue proued. Secondly, these arguments prouoe it to bee the nature or essentiall property of faith, as certainly to assure man of his saluation, as it doth assure him of the articles which he beleueeth. And howsoeuer commonly men doe not beleue their saluation as vnfallible, as they doe their articles of faith: yet some speciall men doe, hauing Gods word applied by the spirit as a sure ground of their faith, whereby they beleue their own saluation, as they haue it for a ground of the articles of their faith. Thus certainly was Abraham assured of his own saluation: as also the Prophets & Apostles, & the martyrs of God in all ages: whereupon without doubting they haue bene content to lay downe their liues for the name of Christ: in whom they are assured to receive eternal happinesse. And there is no question, but there be many now, that by long and often experience of Gods mercy, and by the inward certificate of the holy Ghost, haue attained to full assurance of their saluation.

II. Exception. Howsoeuer a man may be assured of his present estate, yet no man is certain of his perseverance vnto the end. Ans. It is otherwise: for in the first petition, Lead vs not into temptation, we pray that God would not suffer vs to be wholly overcome of the diuell in any temptation: & to this petition we haue a promise answerable. 1. Cor. 10. 13. That God with temptation will give an issue: and therefore howsoeuer the diuell may buffet, molest, and wound the seruants of God, yet shall he neuer be able to overcome them. Again, he that is once a member of Christ, can neuer be wholly cut off. And if any by sin were wholly severed from Christ for a time, in his recovery he is to be baptized the second time: for baptism is the Sacrament of initiation or ingrafting into Christ. By this reason we should as often be baptized as we fall into any sinne, which is absurd. Again, S. Iohn saith, 1. Ioh. 1. 12. They were out from vs, but they were not of vs: for if they had bin of vs, they would haue continued with vs. Where he taketh it for granted, that such as be once in Christ shall neuer wholly be severed or fall from him. Though our communion with Christ may be lessened, yet the union and the bond of communion is neuer dissolved.

III. Exception. They say, we are indeed to beleue our saluation on Gods part: but we must needs doubt in regard of ourselves: because the promises of remission of sinnes are giuen vpon condition of mans faith and repentance. Now we cannot say they be assured that we haue true faith & repentance, because we may lie in secret sinnes: and so want that indeede, which we suppose our selues to haue. Ans. If I say againe, he that doth truly repent and beleue, doth by Gods grace know that hee doth so: repent and beleue: for else Paul would not haue said, Prooue your felues whether you be in the faith or not: and the same Apostle saith, 1. Cor. 2. 12. We haue not received the spirit of the world: but the spirit which is of God, that we might knowe the things which are giuen vs of God. which things are not onely life euertlasting, but iustification, sanctification, and such like. And as for secret sinnes, they cannot make our repentance void: for he that truly repenteth of his knowne sinnes, repenteth also of such as be vknowne, and receiveth the pardon of them all. God requireth not an expresse or speciall repentance of vknowne sinnes: but accepts it as sufficient, if we repent of them generally: as Dauid saith, Psal. 19. 12. Who knowes the errors of this life? forgive me my secret sinnes. And whereas they adde, that faith and repentance must be sufficient: I answer, that the sufficiency of our faith and repentance, stands in the truth, and not in the measure or perfection thereof: and the truth of both, where they are, is certainly discerned.

Reason. VI. The iudgement of the ancient (4) Church. August Of an euill fornam thou art made a good: therefore presume not of thine owne doing, but of the grace of Christ: it is not arrogancie but faith: to acknowledge what thou hast receiued, it is not pride but deuotion. And (b) Let no man aske another man, but returne to his owne heart: if he find charitie there, he hath securitie for his passage from life to death. Hilarion on Mat. 5. The kingdome of heauen which our Lord proffessed to be in himselfe, his will is that it must be hoped for, without any doubtfullnesse of vncertaine will. Otherwise there is no iustification by faith, if faith is selfe made doubtfull. Bernard in his epist. 107. Who is the iust man but he that being touched of God, loues him againe: which comes not to passe but by the spirit revealing by faith the eternall purpose of God, of his saluation to come. Which reuelation is nothing else but infusion of spiritual grace: by which, when the deede of the flesh are mortified, the man is prepared to the kingdome of heauen. Together receiuing in one spirit that whereby hee may presume that he is loued and also loue againe.

To conclude, the Papists haue no great cause to dissent from vs in this point. For they teach and professe, that they doe by a speciall faith beleue their own saluation certainly and vnfallibly in respect of God, that promisseth. Now the thing which hindreth them is their own indisposition and vnworthinesse (as they say) which keeps them from being certaine otherwise then in a likely hope. But this hinderance is easily remooued, if men will iudge indifferently. For first of all in regard of our selues & our disposition we cannot be certaine at all, but must despaire of saluation euen to the very death. We cannot be sufficiently disposed to long as we liue in this world, but must alwaies say with Jacob, I am lesse then all thy mercies, Gen. 32. 10. and with Dauid, Enter not into iudgement with thy seruant, O Lord, for none living shall be iustificed in thy sight: and with the Centurion, Lord, I am not worthy that thou shouldst come vnder my rooffe, Matth. 8. 8. Secondly, God in making promise of saluation respects not mens worthinesse. For he chose vs to life euertlasting when we were not he redeemed vs from death being enemies: and intitles vs to the promise of saluation, if we acknowledge our felues to be sinners, Matth. 9. 13. if we labour and travell under the burden of them. Matth. 11. 28. If we longer and thirst after grace. Ioh. 7. 37. And these things wee may certainly and sensibly perceive in our selues, and when we find them in vs, though our vnworthinesse be exceeding great, it should not hinder our assurance. For God makes manifest his power in our weakness, 2. Cor. 12. 9. and he will not breake the bruised reede, nor quench the smoking flaxe, Isa. 42. 3. Thirdly if a man loue God for his mercies sake, and haue a true hope of saluation by Christ, he is in Christ and hath fellowship with him: and he that is in Christ hath all his vnworthinesse and wants laid on Christ, and they are covered and pardoned in his death; and in respect of our selues thus considered as we are in Christ, wee haue no cause to wauer, but to be certaine of our saluation, and that in regard of our selues.

The fourth point: touching the iustification of a sinner.

That we may see how farre we are to agree with them and where to differ, first I will set downe the doctrine on both parts, and secondly the maine differences wherein we are to stand against them, euen to death.

Our doctrine touching the iustification of a sinner, I propound in foure rules.

Rule. I. That iustification is an action of God, whereby he absolveth a sinner, and accepteth him to life euertlasting for the righteousness and merit of Christ.

Rule. II. That iustification stands in two things: first, in the remission of sinnes by the merit of Christ his death: secondly, is the imputation of Christ his righteousness: which is another action of God whereby he accounteth and esteemeth that righteousness which is in Christ, as the righteousnesses of that sinner which beleueeth in him. By Christ his righteousness we are to vnderstand two things, first, his sufferings specially in his death & passion, secondly, his obedience in fulfilling the law: both which go together: for Christ in suffering obeyed, & obeying suffered. And the very shedding of his blood to which our saluation is ascribed, must not onely be considered as it is passive, that is, a suffering: but also as it is active, that is, an obedience, in which he shewed his exceeding loue both to his Father & vs, & thus fulfilled the law for vs. This point if some had well thought on, they would not haue placed all iustification in remission of sinnes as they do.

Rule. III. That iustification is from Gods meere mercie and grace, procured onely by the merit of Christ.

Rule. IV. That a man is iustified by faith alone, because faith is that alone instrument created in the heart by the holy Ghost, whereby a sinner layeth hold of Christ his righteousness, and applyeth the same vnto himselfe. There is neither hope, nor loue, nor any other grace of God within man, that can doe this but faith alone.

The doctrine of the Romane Church touching the iustification of a sinner is on this manner.

I. They hold that before iustification there goes a preparation thereunto: which is an action wrought partly by the holy Ghost, and partly by the power of natural freewill, whereby a man disposeth himselfe to his owne future iustification.

In the preparation they consider of the ground of iustification, and things proceeding from it. The ground is faith, which they define to be a generall knowledge, whereby wee vnderstand and beleue that the doctrine of the word of God is true. Things proceeding from this faith, are these, a sight of our sinnes, a feare of hell, hope of saluation, loue of God, repentance, and such like: all which, when men haue attained, they are then fully disposed, (as they say) to their iustification.

This preparation being made, then comes iustification it self: which is an action of God, whereby he maketh a man righteous. It hath two parts: the first, and the second. The first is when a sinner of an euill man is made a good man. And to effect this, two things are required: first, the pardon of sinne, which is one part of the first iustification: secondly, the infusion of inward righteousness, whereby the heart is purged and sanctified, and this habite of righteousness stands specially in hope and charity.

After the first iustification, followeth the second: which is, when a man of a good or iust man is made better and more iust: and this, say they, may proceed from works of grace: because he which is righteous by the first iustification, can bring forth good workes: by the merit whereof hee is able to make himselfe more iust and righteous: and yet they grant that the first iustification cometh onely of Gods mercy by the merit of Christ.

I. Our dissent and difference.

Now let vs come to the points of difference between vs and them touching iustification.

The first maine difference is in the matter thereof, which shall be sene by the answer both of Protestant and Papist to this one question, What is the very thing, that causeth a man to stand righteous before God, and to be accepted to life euertlasting? we answer: Nothing but the righteousness of Christ, which consisteth partly in his sufferings, and partly in his active obedience in fulfilling the rigour of the law. And here let vs consider how neere the Papists come to this answer, and wherein they dissent.

Consent. I. They grant that in iustification sinne is pardoned by the merits of Christ, and that none can be iustified without remission of sinnes, and that is well.

II. They grant, that the righteousness whereby a man is made righteous before God, cometh from Christ, and from Christ alone.

III. The most learned among them say, that Christ his satisfaction, and the merit of his death is imputed to every sinner that doth beleene, for (A) his satisfaction before God: and hitherto we agree.

that

The very point of difference is this: We hold that the satisfaction made by Christ in his death and obedience to the law is imputed to vs and becomes our righteousness. They say, it is our satisfaction, and not our righteousness, whereby we stand righteous before God: because it is inherent in the person of Christ as a subject. Now the answer of the Papist to the former question is on this manner: The thing (saith he) that maketh vs righteous before God, and causeth vs to be accepted to life everlasting, is remission of sinnes, and the habite of inward righteousness; or charity with the fruits thereof. We confesse and grant that the habite of righteousness, which we call sanctification, is an excellent gift of God, and hath his reward of God; and is the matter of our iustification before man; because it serueth to declare vs to be reconciled to God, and to be iustified; yet wee deny it to be the thing, which maketh vs of sinners to become righteous or iust before God.

And this is the first point of our disagreement in the matter of iustification: which must be marked: because if there were no more points of difference between vs, this one alone were sufficient to keepe vs from writing of our religions: for hereby the Church of Rome doth raise the very foundation.

Now let vs see by what reasons we iustifie our doctrine and secondly, answer the contrary obiections.

Our reasons.

Reason. 1. That very thing which must be our righteousness before God, must satisfie the iustice of the law, which saith, doe these things and thou shalt live. Now there is nothing to satisfie the iustice of the law but the righteousness or obedience of Christ for vs. If any alledge ciuill iustice, it is nothing: for Christ saith, Except your righteousness exceede the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees, ye cannot enter into the kingdom of heauen. What? shall we say that workes doe make vs iust that cannot be for all mens workes are defective in respect of the iustice of the law. Shall we say our sanctification, whereby we are renewed to the image of God in righteousness and true holines? that also is imperfect and cannot satisfie Gods iustice required in the law: as Isa hath said of himselfe and the people, All our righteousnesses are as filthy rags. To haue a cleare conscience before God is a principall part of inward righteousness: and of it Paul in his owne person saith thus, I am prickt with conscience, yet am I not iustified thereby. 1. Cor. 4. 4. Therefore nothing can procure vnto vs an absolution and repentance to liue euertlasting, but Christs imputed righteousness. And this will appeare, if we doe consider, how we must come one day before Gods iudgement seat, there to be iudged in the rigour of iustice: for then we must bring some thing that may counteruaile the iustice of Gods; not hauing onely acceptation in mercy, but also approbation in iustice: God being not onely merciful, but also a iust iudge.

II. Reason. 2. Cor. 5. 21. He which knew no sinne, was made sinne for vs, that wee might bee made the righteousness of God which is in him. Whence I reason thus. As Christ was made sin for vs, so are we made the righteousness of God in him: but Christ was made sinne, or a sinner by imputation of our sinnes, he being in himselfe most holy: therefore a sinner is made righteous before God, in that Christs righteousness is imputed and applied vnto him. Now if any shall say, that man is iustified by righteousness infused: then by like reason, I say Christ was made sin for vs by infusion of sin, which to say is blasphemy. And the exposition of this place by Saine Hierome is not to be despised. Christ (saith he) being offered for our sinnes, tooke the name of sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him. Not ours nor in vs. If this righteousness of God be neither ours nor in vs, then it can be no inherent righteousness, but must needs be righteousness imputed. And Chrysostome on this place saith, It is called Gods righteousness, because it is not of workes, and because it must be without vll stain or want; and this cannot be inherent righteousness. Anselme saith, He is made sinne as we are made iustice: not ours but Gods: not in vs but in him: as he is made sinne not his owne but ours: not in himselfe, but in vs.

Reason. III. Rom. 5. 19. As by one mans disobedience many were made sinners: so by the obedience of one shall many be made righteous: marke, here is a comparison betweene the first & the second Adam. And hence I reason thus. As by the disobedience of the first Adam men were made sinners: so by the obedience of the second Adam, are we made righteous. Now we are not onely made sinners by propagation of naturall corruption, but by imputation. For Adams first sinne was the eating of the forbidden fruit: which very act is no personall offence, but is imputed to all his posterity, in whom we haue all sinned. The (b) Fathers call this very sinne Adams hand-writing, making vs debtors vnto God. And therefore in like manner the obedience of Christ is made the righteousness of every beleuer, not by infusion but by imputation.

Reason. IV. A satisfaction made for the want of that iustice or obedience which the law requires at our hands, is accepted of God as the iustice it selfe. But Christs obedience is a satisfaction made for the want of that iustice or obedience which the law requires, as the Papists themselves auouch. Therefore this satisfaction is our iustice. And me thinks, the Papists vpon this consideration haue little cause to differ from vs. For if they make Christs obedience their saluation, (why should they

they not fully clofe hands with vs, and make it their iustice also?

V. Reason. The consent of the auncient Church. Bernard saith, epist. 190. The iustice of another is assigned vnto man, who wanted his owne: man was in debt, and man made payment. The satisfaction of one is imputed to all. And why may not iustice be from another, as well as guiltinesse is from another? And in Cant. ferm. 25. It sufficeth mee for all righteousness, to haue him alone mercifull to mee, against whom I haue sinned. And, Not to sinne is Gods iustice, mans iustice is the mercifullnesse of God. And ferm. 61. Shall I sing mine owne righteousness? Lord, I will remember thy righteousness alone: for it is mine alone: in that thou art made vnto me righteousness of God. What, should I feare lest that one be not sufficient for vs both? it is not a short cloke that cannot cover two: it will cover both thee and mee largely, being both a large and eternal iustice. August. on Psal. 22. Free prayeth for our faults, & hath made our faults his faults, that he might make his iustice our iustice.

Obiections of Papists.

Obiections of the Papists proving inherent righteousness to be in the matter of our righteousness before God, are these: 1. Obiect. It is absurd, that one man should be made righteous by the righteousness of another: for it is as much as if one man were made wife by the wisdom of another. Answer. It is true, that no man can be made righteous by the personall righteousness of another, because it pertaines onely to one man. And because the wisdom that is in one man, is his altogether wholly, it cannot be the wisdom of another: no more then the health and life of one body, can be the health of another. But it is otherwise with the righteousness of Christ: it is his indeede, because it is inherent in him as a subject: it is not his alone, but his and ours together by the tenour of the Covenant of grace. Christ as hee is a Mediatour is giuen to every beleuer as really and truly, as land is giuen from man to man: and with him are giuen all things that concerne saluation: they being made ours by Gods free gift; among which, is Christs righteousness. By it therefore, as being a thing of our owne, we may be iustified before God, and accepted to life euertlasting.

II. Obiect. If a sinner be iustified by Christ his righteousness, then every beleuer shall be as righteous as Christ: but that cannot be. Answer. The proposition is false; for Christs righteousness is not applied to vs according as it is in Christ: neither according to the same measure, nor the same manner. For his obedience in fulfilling the law, is about Adams righteousness, yea about the righteousness of all Angels. For they were all but creatures, and their obedience the obedience of creatures: But Christs obedience is the obedience or righteousness of God: so tearmed, Rom. 1. 17. 18. 2. Cor. 5. 21. not onely because God accepted of it, but because it was in that person, which is very God. When Christ obeyed, God obeyed: and when hee suffered, not because the Godhead suffered or performed any obedience, but because the person which according to one nature in God, performed obedience and suffered. And by this means his righteousness is of infinite value, price, merit, and efficacy. Hence also it cometh to passe, that this obedience of Christ serueth not onely for the iustifying of some one person (as (A) Adams did,) but of all and every one of the Elect: yea it is sufficient to iustifie many thousand worlds. Now to come to the point, this righteousness that is in Christ, in this largenesse and measure; is pertaining to vs in a more narrow skantling: because it is onely received by faith, (b) so far forth, as it serueth to iustifie any particular beleuer. But they rege the reason further, saying: If Christs righteousness be the righteousness of every beleuer, then every man should bee a Sauour: which is absurd. Answer. I answer as before, and yet more plainly thus: Christs righteousness is imputed to the person of this or that man, not as it is the price of redemption for all mankind, but as it is the price of redemption for one particular man: as for example, Christs righteousness is imputed to Peter, not as it is the price of redemption for all, but as it is the price of redemption for Peter. And therefore Christs righteousness is not applied to any one sinner in that largenesse and measure, in which it is in the person of Christ: but onely so farre forth as it serueth to satisfie the law for the said sinner, and to make his person accepted of God as righteous, and no further.

III. Obiect. If we be made righteous by Christ his righteousness truly, then Christ is a sinner truly by our sinnes; but Christ is not indeed a sinner by our sinnes. Answer. We may with reuerence to his Maiestie in good manner say, that Christ was a sinner and that truly: not by any infusion of sinne into his most holy person, but because our sinnes were laid on him: thus saith the holy Ghost: hee which knew no sinne was made sinne for vs: and, hee was accounted with sinners. Isa 53. 12. yet so, as euenthen in himselfe he was without blot, yea more holy then all men and Angels. On this manner said Chrysostome. 2. Cor. 5. God permitted Christ to be condemned as a sinner. A gaine, He made the iust one to be a sinner, that he might make sinners iust.

IV. Obiect. If a man be made righteous by imputation, then God iudgeth sinners to be righteous, but God iudgeth no sinner to be righteous, for it is abomination to the Lord. Answer. When God iustifieth a sinner by Christs righteousness, at the same time, he ceaseth in regard of guiltinesse to be a sinner; and to whom God imputeth righteousness, them he sanctifieth at the very same instant by his holy Spirit; giuing also vnto originall corruption his deadly wound.

was neuer giuen by Christ; but he neuer lost imputed righteousness: therefore it was neuer giuen vnto him. Ans. The proposition is not true: for fauing faith, that was neuer lost by Adam, is giuen to vs in Christ: and Adam neuer had this priuiledge; that after the first grace should follow the (a) second, and therefore being left to himselfe, he fell from God: and yet this mercie is vouchsafed to all beleeuers: that after the first conuersion God will still confirme them with new grace: and by this meanes, they perseuere vnto the end. And whereas they say that Adam had not imputed righteousness: I answer, that hee had the same for substance, though not for the manner of applying by imputation.

VI. Obiect. Iustification is eternall: but the imputation of Christ his righteousness is not eternall, for it ceaseth in the end of this life: therefore it is not that which iustificeth a sinner. Ans. The imputation of Christ's righteousness is euerslasting: for hee that is esteemed righteous in this life by Christ his righteousness, is accepted as righteous for euer: and the remission of finnes graunted in this life, is for euer continued. And though sanctification be perfect in the world to come, yet shall it not iustifie: for we must conceiue it no otherwise after this life, but as a fruit springing from the imputed righteousness of Christ, without which it could not be. And a good childe will not cut away the first garment, because his father giues him a second. And what if an inward righteousness be perfect in the end of this life, shall we therefore make it the matter of our iustification? God forbid: For the righteousness whereby sinners are iustified, must be had in the time of this life, before the pangs of death.

I. Difference about the manner of iustification.

All both Papists and Protestants agree, that a sinner is iustified by faith. This agreement is onely in word, and the difference betwene vs is great indeede. And it may be reduced to these three heads. First, the Papist saying that a man is iustified by faith, vnderstandeth a generall or a Catholike faith, whereby a man beleueeth the articles of religion to be true. But we hold that the faith which iustificeth, is a particular faith, whereby we apply to our selues the promises of righteousness and life euerslasting by Christ. And that our opinion is the truth, I haue pronounced before: but will adde a reason or twaine.

I. Reason. The faith whereby we liue, is that faith whereby we are iustified: but the faith whereby we liue spiritually is a particular faith whereby we apply Christ vnto our selues, as Paul faith, Gal. 2. 20. I liue, that is, spiritually, by the faith of the Sonne of God; which faith hee theweth to be a particular faith in Christ, in the very words following, who hath loued me, and giuen himselfe for me particularly: and in this manner of beleeuing Paul was, and is an example to all that are to be faued. 1. Tim. 1. 16. and Phil. 3. 15. 17.

II. Reason. That which we are to aske of God in prayer, we must beleue it shall be giuen to vs as we aske it; but in prayer we are to aske the pardon of our owne finnes, and the merit of Christ's righteousness for our selues: therefore we must beleue the same particularly. The proposition is a rule of Gods word, requiring that in euery petition we bring a particular faith, whereby we beleue, that the thing lawfully asked, shall be giuen accordingly. Marke 11. 24. The minor is also euident, neither can it be denied: for wee are taught by Christ himselfe to pray on this manner, Forgiue vs our debts: and to it we say, Amen, that is, that our petitions shall without doubt be graunted vnto vs. Aug. serm. de Temp. 182.

And here note, that the Church of Rome in the doctrine of iustification by faith, cuts off the principall part and proprietie thereof. For in iustifying faith, two things are required; first, knowledge reuealed in the word touching the meanes of saluation: secondly, an applying of things knowne vnto our selues, which some call affiance. Now the first they acknowledge, but the second which is the very substance and part thereof, they deny.

III. Reason. The iudgement of the auncient Church. (b) Augst. I demand now, dost thou beleue in Christ, O sinner? Thou sayest, I beleue. What beleuest thou? that all thy finnes may freely be pardoned in him. Thou hast that which thou beleuest. (c) Bernard. The Apostle thinketh that a man is iustified freely by faith. If thou beleuest that thy finnes cannot be remitted, but by him alone against whom they were committed: but goe further, and beleue this too, that by him thy finnes are forgiven thee. This is the testimony which the holy Ghost giueth in the heart: saying, Thy finnes are forgiven thee. (d) Cyprian. God promisseth thee immortallitie, when thou goest out of this world, and dost thou doubt? This is indeede not to know God, and this is for a member of the Church in the house of faith not to haue faith. If we beleue in Christ, let vs beleue his words and promises, and we shall neuer dye, and shall come to Christ with ioyfull securitie with him to reigne for euer.

The second difference touching faith in the act of iustification, is this. The papist faith, we are iustified by faith, because it disposeth a sinner to his iustification after this manner: By faith (saith he) the minde of a man is enlightened in the knowledge of the law and the Gospell: knowledge stirres vp a feare of hel with a consideration of the promise of happinesse, as also the loue and feare of God, and hope of life eternall. Now when the heart is thus prepared, God insueth the habite of charity and other vertues, whereby a sinner is iustified before God. We say otherwise, that faith iustificeth, because it is a supernaturall instrument created by God in the heart of man at his conuersion, whereby he apprehendeth and receiveth Christ's righteousness for his iustification.

c Sem. de An. mun.

d Sem. de Nat.

In this their doctrine is a twofold error: first, that they make faith which iustificeth, to goe before iustification: it selfe, both for order of nature, as also for time, whereas by the word of God at the very instant, when any man beleueth, first, he is then iustified & sanctified: For he that beleueth, eateth and drinketh the bodie and blood of Christ, and is already passed from death to life. Ioh. 6. 54. The second is, that faith being nothing else with them but an illumination of the mind, stirreth vp the will which being moued and helped, causeth in the heart many spirituall motions: and thereby disposeth man to his finitie iustification: But this indeed is as much as if he should say, that dead men onely helped, can prepare themselves to their future resurrection. For we are all by nature dead in sin, and therefore must not onely be enlightened in mind, but also renewed in will, before wee can so much as will and desire that which is good. Now we (as I haue said) teach otherwise: that faith iustificeth as it is an instrument to apprehend and apply Christ with his obedience; which is the matter of our iustification. This is the truth, I proue it thus.

In the covenant of grace two things must be considered: the substance thereof, and the condition. The substance of the covenant is, that righteousness and life euerslasting is giuen to Gods Church and people by Christ. The condition is, that we for our parts, are by faith to receive the foresaid benefits: and this condition is by grace as well as the substance. Now then, that we may attaine to saluation by Christ, he must be giuen vnto vs really, as hee is propounded in the tenour of the foresaid covenant. And for the giuing of Christ, God hath appointed speciall ordinances, as the preaching of the word, and the administration of the Sacraments. The word preached is the power of God to saluation to euery one that beleues: and the end of the sacrament is to communicate Christ with all his benefits to them that come to be partakers therof: as is most plainly to be seene in the Supper of the Lord, in which the giuing of bread and wine to the feuerall communicants, is a pledge and signe of Gods particular giuing of Christ's bodie and blood with all his merits, vnto them. And this giuing on Gods part cannot be effectuall without receiuing on our parts: and therefore faith must needs be an instrument or hand to receive that which God giueth, that we may finde comfort by his giuing.

The III. Difference concerning faith is this: The papist faith, that a man is iustified by faith: yet not by faith alone, but also by other vertues, as hope, loue, the feare of God, &c. The reasons which are brought to maintaine their opinion are of no moment.

I. Reason. Link. 7. 47. Many finnes are forgiven her, because shee loued much. Whence they gather that the woman here spoken of, was iustified & had the pardon of her sins by loue. Ans. In this text, loue is not made an impulsive cause to moue God to pardon her finnes, but onely a signe to shew and manifest that God had already pardoned them. Like to this is the place of Iohn, who faith, 1. Iohn. 14. Wee are iustified from death to life, because wee loue the brethren: where loue is no cause of the change: but a signe and consequent thereof.

II. Reason. Gal. 5. 6. Faith without loue, nor vnconuincion auaileth any thing, but faith that worketh by loue. Hence they gather that faith doth iustifie together with loue. Ans. The property of true faith is, to apprehend and receive something vnto it selfe: & loue, that goes alwaies with faith, as a fruite and vnseparable companion thereof, is of another nature: For it doth not receive in, but as it were giue out it selfe in all the duties of the first and second table towards God and man: and this thing faith by it selfe cannot doe: and therefore Paul faith; that faith worketh by loue. The hand hath a property to reach out it selfe, to lay hold of any thing, & to receive a gift: but the hand hath no property to cut a peece of wood of it selfe, without saw or knife, or some like instrument: and yet by helpe of them it can either deuide or cut. Euen so it is the nature of faith, to goe out of it selfe and to receive Christ into the heart: as for the duties of the first and second table, faith cannot of it selfe bring them forth: no more then the hand can deuide or cut: yet ioyned loue to faith, and then can it practise duties commanded concerning God and man. And this I take to be the meaning of this text which speaketh not of iustification by faith, but onely of the practise of common duties, which faith putteth in execution by the helpe of loue.

III. Reason. Faith is neuer alone, therefore it doth not iustifie alone. Ans. The reason is naught, & they might as well dispute thus. The eye is neuer alone from the head, and therefore it seeth not alone: which is absurd. And though in regard of substance the eye is neuer alone, yet in regard of seeing it is alone: and so though faith subsist not without loue, and hope, and other graces of God, yet in regard of the act of iustification it is alone without them all.

IV. Reason. If faith alone doth iustifie, then we are faued by faith alone, but wee are not faued by faith alone, and therefore not iustified by faith alone. Ans. The proposition is false: but more things are requisite to the maine end, then to the subordinate meanes. And the assumption is false: for we are faued by faith alone, if wee speake of faith as it is an instrument apprehending Christ for our saluation.

V. Reason. Rom. 8. 24. We are faued by hope: therefore not by faith alone. Ans. We are faued by hope, not because it is any cause of saluation. Pauls meaning is only this: that we haue not saluation as yet in possession, but waite patiently for it, in time to come to be possessed of vs, expecting the time of our full deliuerance: that is all, that can iustly be gathered hence.

Now the doctrine which wee teach on the a Wee haue et possit si velle, hee had no more but possit velle quod possit. Aug. de cor. rept. c. grat. cap. 11.

Particula non cau. glis, sed illa qua vel ratio, aia.

contrary is, That a sinner is iustificed before God by faith: yea, by faith alone. The meaning is, that nothing within man, & nothing that man can doe, either by nature, or by grace, concurreth to the act of iustificacion before God, as any cause therof, either efficient, material, formal, or finall, but faith alone: all other gifts and graces, as hope, love, the feare of God, are necessarilie to saluation, as signes thereof, and consequents of faith. Nothing in any man concurres as any cause to this worke but faith alone. And faith it selfe is no principall but onely an instrumentall cause whereby we receiue, apprehend, and apply Christ and his righteousness for our iustificacion.

Reason. I. Ioh. 3. 14, 15. As Moses lift up the serpent in the wilderness, so must the sonne of man be lift up: that whosoever beleueth in him shall not perish but haue euertlasting life. In these words Christ makes a comparison on this manner: When any one of the Israelites were flung to death by fiery serpents, his cure was not by any physike or surgerie, but onely by the casting of his eyes vnto the brazen serpent, which Moses had erected by Gods commandement: euen so in the cure of our soules, when we are flung to death by sinne, there is nothing required within vs for our recovery, but onely that we cast vp and fixe the eye of our faith on Christ and his righteousness.

Reason. II. The exclusive formes of speech vied in scripture prouoe thus much: We are iustificed freely, not of the law, not by the law, without the law, without works, not of works, not according to works, not of vs, not by the works of the law, but by faith. Gal. 2. 16. All boasting excluded, onely beleue. Luk. 8. 50. These distinctions, whereby works and the law are excluded in the worke of iustificacion, doe include thus much, that faith alone doth iustifie.

Reason. III. Very reason may teach thus much: for no gift in man is apt and fit as a spirituall haire to receiue and apply Christ and his righteousness vnto a sinner, but faith. In deede loue, hope, the feare of God, and repentance, haue their severall vses in men, but none serue for this end to apprehend Christ and his merits, none of them all haue this receiuing propertie: and therefore there is nothing in man, that iustificeth as a cause but faith alone.

Reason. IV. The iudgement of the ancient Church. Ambrose on Rom. 4. They are blessed to whom without any labour or work done, sinnes are remitted and sinne covered: no works or repentance required of them, but onely that they beleue. And c. 3. Neither working any thing, nor requiring the like, are they iustificed by faith alone through the gift of God. And 1. Cor. 1. This is appointed of God, that whosoever beleueth in Christ, shall be saved without any worke by faith alone, freely receiuing remission of sinnes. A Justine, There is one propitiation for all sins, to beleue in Christ. Hefye, on Leuit. lib. 4. c. 2. Grace which is of mercie is apprehended by faith alone, and not of works. Bernard, Whofo- uer, is sprinkled for his sins, and clothed with righteousness, let him beleue in thee, who iustificst the sinner, and being iustificed by faith alone, he shall haue peace with God. Chrysostomus 3. They said, he which resteth on faith alone, is accounted, but Paul sheweth, that hee is blessed which resteth on faith alone. Basil, de Humil. Let man acknowledge himselfe to want true iustice, and that he is iustificed onely by faith in Christ. Origene 3. Rom. We thinke that a man is iustificed by faith without the works of the law: and he saith, iustificacion by faith alone sufficeth, so as a man onely beleuing may be iustificed. And, therefore it is writt upon vs — to search, who we are iustificed by faith without works. And for an example, I thinke upon the thief, who being crucified with Christ cried vnto him, Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom: & there is no other good worke of his mentioned in the Gospell but for this alone faith, Iesus saith vnto him, I will thou shalt be with me in paradys.

III. Difference. The third difference about iustificacion is concerning this point, namely, how far forth good works are required.

The doctrine of the Church of Rome, is that there be two kinds of iustificacion: the first & the second, as I haue said. The first, is when one of an euill man is made a good man & in this, works are wholly excluded: it being wholly of grace. The second, is when a man of a iust man is made more iust. And this they will haue to proceed from works of grace (say they) as a man when he is once borne, can by eating and drinking make himselfe a bigger man, though he could not at the first make himselfe manneue for a sinner hauing his iustificacion, may afterward by grace make himselfe more iust. Therefore they hold these two things: I. that good works are meritorious causes of the second iustificacion, which they terme Aduall. II. that good works are means to increase the first iustificacion, which they call Habituall.

Now let vs see how far forth we must ioyne with them in this point. Our consent therefore stands in three conclusions.

I. That good works done by them that are iustificed doe please God, and are approved of him, and therefore haue a reward.

II. Good works are necessary to saluation two waies: first, not as causes therof, either concurrent, adiuuant, or precurrent; but onely as consequents of faith; in that they are inseparable companions and fruits of that faith, which is indeed necessary to saluation. Secondly, they are as necessary as markes in a way, and as the way it selfe directing vs vnto eternall life.

III. We hold & beleue, that the righteous man, is in some sort iustificed by works: for so the holy Ghost speaketh plainly and truly, Iam. 2. 21. That Abraham was iustificed by works.

Thus far we ioyne with them: and the very difference is this. They say, we are iustificed by works, as by causes therof: we say that we are iustificed by works, as by signes & fruits of our iustificacion before God, and no otherwise:

and

and in this sense must the place of Saint James be understood, that Abraham was iustificed, that is, declared and made manifest to bee iust by his obedience, and that euen before God. Now that our doctrine is the truth, it will appeare by reasons on both parts.

Our Reasons.

I. Rom. 3. 28. We conclude that a man is iustificed by faith without the works of the law. Some answer, that ceremoniall works be excluded here; some, that morall works; some, works going before faith. But let them deaife what they can for themselves, the truth is, that Paul excludeth all works whatsoever, as by the very text will appeare. For v. 24. he saith, we are iustificed freely by his grace: that is, by the mere gift of God: giuing vs to vnderstand, that a sinner in his iustificacion is meereely passive, that is, doing nothing on his part, whereby God should accept him to life euertlasting. And v. 27. he saith, iustificacion by faith excludeth all boasting: and therefore all kind of works are thereby excluded; and specially such as are most of all the matter of boasting, that is, good works. For if a sinner, after that he is iustificed by the merit of Christ, were iustified more by his owne works, then might he haue some matter of boasting in himselfe. And that wee may not doubt of Pauls meaning, consider and reade, Eph. 2. 8, 9. By grace (saith he) you are saved through faith: and that not of your selues, it is the gift of God: not of works, lest any man should boast himselfe. Here Paul excludes all and euery worke, & directly works of grace themselves, as appeares by the reason following: For we are his workmanship created in Christ Iesus vnto good works: which God hath ordained that we should walke in them. Now let the Papists tell mee, what be the works which God hath prepared for men to walke in, and to which they are regenerate; vnlesse they be the most excellent works of grace? and let them marke how Paul excludes them wholly from the worke of iustificacion and saluation.

II. Gal. 5. 3. If ye be circumcised, ye are bound to the whole law, and ye are abolished from Christ. Here Paul disputeth against such men as would be saved partly by Christ, and partly by the works of the law: hence I reason thus. If any man will be iustificed by works, hee is bound to fulfill the whole law, according to the rigour thereof: that is Pauls ground. I now assume: no man can fulfill the Law according to the rigour thereof: for the lines and workes of most righteous men are imperfect, and stained with sinne: and therefore they are taught euery day to say on this manner: forgiue vs our debts. Againe, our knowledge is imperfect, and therefore our faith, repentance, and sanctification is answerable. And lastly, the regenerate man is partly flesh and partly spirit: and therefore his best workes are partly from the flesh and in part onely spirituall. Thus then for any man to be bound to the rigour of the whole law, is as much as if he were bound to his owne damnation.

III. Election to saluation is of grace without workes; therefore the iustificacion of a sinner is of grace alone without workes. For it is a certaine rule, that the cause of a cause is the cause of a thing caused. Now grace without workes is the cause of election, which election is the cause of our iustificacion: and therefore grace without workes is the cause of iustificacion.

IV. A man must first be fully iustified before he can doe a good worke: for the person must first please God before his workes can please him. But the person of a sinner cannot please God till hee bee perfectly iustificed: and therefore till he be iustified, hee cannot doe so much as one good worke. And thus good workes cannot be any meritorious cause of iustificacion, after which they are, both for time, and order of nature. In a word, whereas they make two distinct iustificacions, wee acknowledge that there be degrees of sanctification, yet so as iustificacion is only one, standing in remission of sins, & Gods acceptance of vs to life euertlasting by Christ: & thus iustificacio hath no degrees but is perfect at the very first.

Objections of Papists.

Psal. 7. 8. Iudge me according to my righteousness. Hence they reason thus. If Dauid be iudged according to his righteousness, then may he be iustified thereby: but Dauid desires to bee iudged according to his righteousness: & therefore he was iustified thereby. Ans. There be two kinds of righteousness, one of the person, the other of the cause or action: The righteousness of a mans person, is whereby it is accepted into the fauour of God vnto life eternall. The righteousness of the action or cause is, when the action or cause is iudged of God to be good and iust. Now Dauid in this Psalm, speaketh onely of the righteousness of the action, or innocencie of his cause, in that hee was falsely charged to haue sought the kingdom. In like manner it is said of Phineas, Psal. 106. 31. that his fact in killing Zimri and Corbie, was imputed to him for righteousness: not because it was a satisfaction to the law, the rigour whereof could not be fulfilled in that one worke: but because God accepted of it as a iust worke, and as a token of his righteousness and zeale for Gods glory.

II. Obiect. The Scripture saith in sundry places, that men are blessed which doe good workes. Psal. 119. 1. Blessed is the man that is upright in heart, and walketh in the law of the Lord. Ans. The man is blessed that indeuoureth to keepe Gods commandements. Yet is he not blessed simply, because he doth so; but because he is in Christ, by whom he doth so, and his obedience to the law of God is a signe thereof.

Obiect. III. When man confesseth his sins and humbleth himselfe by prayer and fasting, Gods wrath is pacified and staid; therefore prayer and fasting are causes of iustification before God. Ans. Indeed, men that truly humble themselves by prayer and fasting, doe appease the wrath of God: yet not properly by these actions, but by their faith exprest and testified in them, whereby they apprehend that which appeaseth Gods wrath, even the merit of Christ in whom the Father is well pleased: and for whose sake alone he is well pleased with vs.

Obiect. IV. Sundry persons in Scripture are commended for perfection: as Noe, and Abraham, Zacharie and Elizabeth: and Christ biddeth vs all to be perfect, and where there is any perfection of workes, there also workes may iustifie. Ans. There be two kinds of perfection: perfection in parts, and perfection in degrees. Perfection in parts is, when being regenerate, and having the seedes of all necessarie vertues, we endeavour accordingly to obey God, not in some few, but in all and every part of the law: as Iosias turned vnto God according to all the law of Moses. Perfection in degrees is, when a man keepeth euery commandement of God, and that according to the rigour thereof, in the very highest degree. Now then whereas we are commanded to be perfected, and haue examples of the same perfection in Scripture: both commandements and examples must be vnderstood of perfection in parts, and not of perfection in degrees, which cannot bee attained vnto in this life: though we for our parts must daily strueto come as neere it as possibly we can.

Ob. V. 2. Cor. 4. 17. Our momentary afflictions worke in vs a greater measure of glorie: now if afflictions worke our saluation, then workes also doe the same. Ans. Afflictions worke saluation not as causes procuring it, but as means directing vs thereto. And thus also must we esteeme of workes in the matter of our saluation, as of a certaine way or a marke therein, directing vs to glory, not causing and procuring it: as Bernard saith, that are via Regni, non causa regnandi. The way to the kingdome, not the cause of reigning there.

Obiect. VI. Wee are iustified by the same thing whereby wee are iudged: but wee are iudged by our good workes: therefore iustified also. Ans. The proposition is false: for iudgement is an act of God, declaring a man to bee iust that is already iust: and iustification is another distinct act of God, whereby he maketh him to be iust, that is by nature vniust. And therefore in equitie the last iudgement is to proceede by workes: because they are the fittest meanes to make trial of euery mans cause, and sence fitly to declare whom God hath iustified in this life.

Obiect. VII. Wicked men are condemned for euill workes: and therefore righteous men are iustified by good workes. Ans. The reason holdeth not: for there is great difference betweene euill and good workes. An euill worke is perfectly euill, and so deserueth damnation:

but there is no good worke of any man that is perfectly good: and therefore cannot iustifie.

Obiect. VIII. To beleeue in Christ is a worke, and by it we are iustified: and if one worke doe iustifie, why may wee not bee iustified by all the workes of the law? Ans. Faith must be considered two waies: first, as a worke, quality, or vertue; secondly, as an instrument, or hand reaching out it selfe to receiue Christs merit. And we are iustified by faith, not as it is a worke, vertue, or quality: but as it is an instrument to receive and apply that thing whereby we are iustified. And therefore it is a figurative speech to say, We are iustified by faith. Faith considered by it selfe maketh no man righteous; neither doth the action of faith which is to apprehend, iustifie; but the object of faith, which is Christs obedience apprehended.

These are the principall reasons commonly vsed; which as we see are of no moment. To conclude therefore, we hold that workes concur to iustification, and that we are iustified thereby as by signes and effects, not as causes: for both the beginning, middle, and accomplishment of our iustification is only in Christ; and hereupon Iohn saith, If any man (being already iustified) sinne, we haue an Advocate with the Father, Iesus Christ, and he is the propitiation for our sins. And to make our good workes meanes; or causes of our iustification, is to make euery man a Saviour to himselfe.

The fifth point: Of Merits.

By Merit, we vnderstand any thing or any worke, whereby Gods fauour and life euerallasting is procured; and that for the dignity and excellencie of the worke or thing done; or, a good worke done, binding him that receiueth it to repay the like.

Our consent.

Touching Merits wee consent in two conclusions with them. The first conclusion, that merits are so farre forth necessary, that without them there can be no saluation.

The second, that Christ our Mediatour and Redemer, is the root & fountaine of all merit.

The dissent or difference.

The Popish Church placeth merits within man, making two sorts thereof: the merit of the person, and the merit of the worke. The merit of the person, is a dignity in the person, whereby it is worthy of life euerallasting. And this (as they say) is to be found in Infants dying after baptism, who though they want good workes, yet are they not void of this kind of merit, for which they receive the kingdome of heauen. The merit of the worke, is a dignity or excellencie in the worke, whereby it is made fit and enabled to deserue life euerallasting for the doer. And workes (as they teach) are meritorious two waies: first, by couenant, because God hath made a promise of reward

vnto them; secondly, by their owne dignitie: for Christ hath merited that our workes might merit. And this is the substance of their doctrine. From it we dissent in these points.

I. We renounce all personall merits, that is, all merits within the person of any meere man. II. And wee renounce all merit of workes, that is, all merit of any worke done by any meere man whatsoever. And the true merit whereby we looke to attaine the fauour of God, and life euerallasting, is to be found in the person of Christ alone: who is the storehouse of all our merits: whose prerogative it is, to be the person alone in whom God is well pleased. Gods fauour is of infinite dignitie, and no creature is able to doe a worke that may countervail the fauour of God, save Christ alone; who, by reason of the dignity of his person, being not a meere man: but God-man, or Man-god, can doe such workes as are of endless dignitie, euery way answerable to the fauour of God: and therefore sufficient to merit the same for vs. And though a merit or meritorious worke agree onely to the person of Christ, yet is it made ours, by imputation. For as his righteousness is made ours, so are his merits depending thereon: but his righteousness is made ours by imputation, as I haue shewed. Hence ariseth another point, namely, that as Christs righteousness is made ours really by imputation to make vs righteous: so wee by the merit of his righteousness imputed to vs, doe merit and deserue life euerallasting. And this is our doctrine. In a word; the Papist maintaineth the merit of his owne workes: but we renounce them all, and rest only on the merit of Christ. And that our doctrine is trath, and theirs fallhood, I will make manifest by sundry reasons; and then answer their arguments to the contrary.

Our Reasons.

The first shall be taken from the properties and conditions that must bee in a worke meritorious, and they are foure. I. A man must doe it of himselfe, and by himselfe: for if it be done by another, the merit doth not properly belong to the doer. II. A man must doe it of his own free-will & pleasure, not of due debt: for when we doe that which we are bound to doe, we doe no more but our dutie. III. The worke must be done to the profit of another, who thereupon must bee bound to repay the like. IV. The reward and the worke must be in proportion equal: for if the reward be more the the worke, it is not a reward of desert but a gift of good will. Hence followes a notable conclusion: That Christs Manhood considered apart from his Godhead, cannot merit at Gods hand: though it be more excellent euery way, then all both men and Angels. For being thus considered, it doth nothing of it selfe, but by grace receiued from the Godhead: though it bee also without measure. Secondly, Christs manhood is a creature, and in that regard bound to doe whatsoever it doth. Thirdly, Christ as man cannot giue any thing to God, but that which he receiued from God; therefore cannot the manhood properly by it selfe merit, but only as it is personally vnited to the Godhead of the Son. And if this be so, then much lesse can any meere man, or any Angel merit: yea it is a madnes to thinke, that either our actions or persons should be capable of any merit whereby we might attaine to life eternall.

Reason. I. I. Exod. 20. 6. And thou mercie vpon thousands in them that loue mee, and keepe my commandments. Hence I reason thus: Where reward is giuen vpon mercy, there is no merit: but reward is giuen of mercy to them that fulfill the law: therefore no merit. What can we any way deserue, when our full recompence must be of mercie? And this appeares further by Adam: if he had stood to this day, hee could not by his continuall and perfect obedience haue procured a further increase of fauour at Gods hand, but should onely haue continued that happy estate in which he was first created.

Reason. III. Scripture directly condemneth merit of workes. Rom. 6. 23. The wages of sinne is death: but the gift of God is eternal life through Iesus Christ our Lord. The proposition of the argument required, that S. Paul should haue said: the reward of good workes is eternal life, if life euerallasting could be deserued, which cannot: because it is a free gift. Again, Tit. 2. 5. We are saved, not by workes of righteousness which we haue done, but according to his mercy he saved vs. And Eph. 2. 8. 10. By grace you are saved through faith, and that not of your selues, it is the gift of God: not of workes, which God hath prepared that we should walke in them. If any workes be crowned, it is certain that the sufferings of Martyrs shall be rewarded: now of them Paul saith, Rom. 8. 18. The sufferings of this life are not worthy of the glory to come. Where then is the value and dignitie of others workes? To this purpose Ambrose saith, The infant man though hee be corrupted in the brasen Bull, is still iust, because he iustifieth God, and saith, he suffereth lesse then his sinnes deserue.

Reason. IV. Whosoever will merit, must fulfill the whole law: but none can keepe the whole law: for if we say, we haue no sinne, we deceiue our selues, 1. Ioh. 1. 8. And he that sinnes against one commandment, is guilty of the whole law: and what can he merit that is guilty of the breach of the whole law?

Reason. V. We are taught to pray on this manner, Giue vs this day our daily bread: wherein we acknowledge euery morrell of bread to be the meere gift of God without desert; & therefore must we much more acknowledge life eternal to be euery way the gift of God. It must needs therefore be a Saranickall insolencie for any man to imagine, that he can by his workes merit eternal life, who cannot merit bread.

Reason. VI. Consent of the ancient Church. (c) Bernard. Those which we call our merits, are the way to the kingdome, and not the cause of reigning. Augst. Mannel, chap. 22. All my hope is in the death of my Lord. His death was my merit: my merit is the passion of the Lord. I shall not be void of merits so long as Gods mercies are not wanting. Basil on Psal. 114. Eternal rest is reserved for them which have striven lawfully in this life: not for the merits of their doings, but upon the grace of the most bountifull God, in which they trusted. Augst. on Psal. 120. He crowneeth thee, because hee crowneeth his owne gifts: not thy merits. And Psal. 142. Lord, thou wilt quicken mee in thy iustice, not in mine: not because I deserved it, but because thou hast compassion.

Objections of Papists.

Obiect. I. In sundry places of Scripture, promise of reward is made to them that beleeue and do good works: therefore our works do merit: for a reward and merit be relatives. Ans. Reward is two-fold: of debt, and of mercie. Life euertlasting is not a reward of debt, but of mercie, giuen of the good will of God, without any thing done of man. Secondly, the kingdom of heauen is properly an inheritance giuen of a father to a childe, and therefore it is called a reward not properly, but by a figure or by resemblance. For as a workman having ended his labour, receiveth his wages; so after men have led their liues and finished their course in keeping faith and good conscience, as dutifull children, God giuing them eternall life. And hereupon it is termed a reward. Thirdly, if I should grant that life euertlasting is a deserved reward, it is not for our works, but for Christs merit imputed to vs, causing vs thereby to merit: and thus the relation stands directly between the Reward and Christs Merit applied vnto vs.

Obiect. II. Christ by his death merited that our works should merit life euertlasting. Ans. That is false: all we finde in Scripture is, that Christ by his merit procured pardon of sinne, imputation of righteousness, and life euertlasting: and it is no where said in the word of God, that Christ did merit that our works should merit: it is a dotage of their owne deuiling. Hee died not for our good works to make them able to satisfie Gods anger; but for our finnes that they might bee pardoned. Thus much saith the Scripture, and no more. And in that Christ did sufficiently merit life eternall for vs, by his owne death; it is a sufficient prooffe, that he neuer intended to giue vs power of meriting the same: vnles we suppose that at sometime he giues more then is needfull. Again, Christ in the office of mediation as he is a King, Priest, and Prophet, admitteeth no deputy or fellow. For he is a most perfect Mediatour, doing all things by himselfe, without the helpe of any. And the ministers that dispence the word, are not his deputies, but reasonable and voluntarie instruments, which be vessels. But if men by works can merit increase of grace and happinesse for themselves, then hath Christ partners in the worke of redemption: men doing that by him, which hee doth of himselfe, in procuring their saluation. Nay, if this might stand, that Christ did merit that our works should merit, then Christ should merit that our stained righteousness beeing for this cause not capable of merit, should neuertheless merit. I call it stained, because we are partly flesh, and partly spirit; and therefore in our selues deseruing the curse of the law, though we be regenerate. Again, for one good worke we doe, we haue many a uill, the offence whereof defaceeth the merit of our best deeds, and makes them too light in the ballance of the law.

Obiect. III. Our works merit by bargain or covenant, because God hath promised to reward them. Ans. The word of God sets downe two covenants: one legal, the other euangelicall. In the legal covenant life euertlasting is promised to workes, for that is the condition of the law: Doe these things and thou shalt liue. But on this manner can no man merit life euertlasting, because none is able to do all that the law requires; whether we respect the manner, or the measure of obedience. In the Euangelicall covenant, the promises that are made, are not made to any worke or vertue in man, but to the worker: not for any merit of his owne person or worke, but for the person and merit of Christ. For example, it is a promise of the Gospel, See faithfull vnto death, and I will giue thee the crowne of life. Reuelat. 2. 10. Here the promise is not made to the vertue of fidelity, but to the faithfull person; whose fidelitie is but a token that he is in Christ: for the merit of whose obedience GOD promiseth the crowne of life: and therefore Christ saith further, I come quickly, & will giue to every man according to his worke: marke, hee saith not to the worke, or for the worke; but to the worker according to his works. And thus the bond of all other promises of the Gospel, in which God willingly binds himselfe to reward our works, doth not directly concerne vs, but hath respect to the person and obedience of Christ, for whose sake alone God binds himselfe as debtor vnto vs, and giues the recompence or reward, according to the measure of our faith testified by our works. And therefore it cannot be truly gathered, that workes doe merit by any promise or covenant, passed on Gods part to man. Some may say, if workes merit not; why are they mentioned in the promise? I answer, not because they merit, but because they are tokens, that the doer of the workes, is in Christ, for whose merit the promise shall be accomplished.

Obiect. IV. Good workes are perfect and without fault, for they are the workes of the holy Ghost, who cannot sinne: therefore they merit. Ans. If workes did proceed only and immediately from the holy Ghost; there could not be any fault in them: but our workes come from the holy Ghost, in and by the will and vnderstanding of man: and by this meane they are tainted with sin; as water in the fountain is both cleare and sweet, yet the streames thereof passing through the filthy channel are defiled thereby. Again, they reason thus: That which we are bound to doe hath so fault in it, but we are bound to doe good workes: therefore they are perfect. Ans. The proposition must be expounded: that which we are bound to doe, in it selfe according to the intention of the commander, hath no fault: or, that which we are bound to doe, according as wee are bound to doe it, hath no fault: yet in regard of the intention of the doer, or in regard of our manner of doing, it may be faulty.

Obiect. V. Christ saith, Reuelat. 3. 4. that the faithfull in the Church of Sardis shall walke with him in white, for they are worthy: therefore beleeuers merit. Ans. Every beleeuer is worthy to walke with Christ; yet not worthy in himselfe, but in Christ, to whom he is vnited, and made bone of his bone, and flesh of his flesh. And by reason of this coniunction it is, that men are said to be worthy, because they are enriched with Christs merits and righteousness.

Obiect. VI. 2 Tim. 4. 8. Euertlasting life is termed a crowne, and a crowne of righteousness to be giuen of a iust iudge: therefore man for his part by his workes deserues the same. Ans. Euertlasting life is called a crowne only in resemblance: for as hee which runneth a race, must continue and run to the end, and then bee crowned; euen so must we continue and walke in good workes vnto the end, and then receiue eternall life. And it is called a crowne of righteousness, not because it belongs to any man by due and desert; but because God hath bound himselfe by a promise to giue it, in performing whereof, he is termed iust and by vertue of this promise it is obtained, and no otherwise. These are the principall objections, by which wee may iudge what the rest are. And thus wee see what is the truth, namely, that merit is necessarie to saluation: yet neither merit of any mans worke, or person, but the merit of Christ imputed to vs, whereby we being in him, doe procure and deserue the fauour of God and life eternall.

The first point: Of Satisfaction.

Our consens.

Conclus. I. First, wee acknowledge and hold Ciuill or Politicall satisfaction: that is, a recompence for injuries and damages offered any way to our neighbours. This Zacharias practised, when at his conuersion he restored foure-fold, things gotten by forged coination. Again, by ciuill satisfaction I vnderstand, the impositions of fines, mulcts, and penalties vpon offenders, and the inflicting of death vpon malefactors. For all these are satisfactions to the law, & societies of men when they are wronged. All these we maintaine as necessary, for neither Church nor commonwealth can be without them: considering they are notable meanes to vphold ciuill peace and order, whiles they are fruits of true faith, as the satisfaction of Zacharias was.

Conclus. II. We acknowledge canonically or Ecclesiasticall satisfaction: and that is, when any hauing giuen offence to the Church of God, or any part thereof, doe make an open and publicke testimonie of their repentance. Miriam for murmuring against Moses, Numb. 12. was stricken with leprosie, and afterward by his praye she was cleansed; and yet for all that, shee must goe seuen daies out of the tents and congregation, that she might make a kind of satisfaction to the people for her trespass. And in the old testament, sackcloth and ashes were signes of their satisfaction.

Conclus. III. We hold that no man can be saved, vnlesse he make a perfect satisfaction to the iustice of God for all his finnes; because God is infinite in iustice, and therefore will euer exact an euertlasting punishment, or satisfaction for the same.

The dissent or difference.

The points of our difference and dissent are these. The Church of Rome teacheth and beleeueth, that Christ by his death hath made a satisfaction for all the finnes of men, and for the eternall punishment of them all: yet so, as they themselves must satisfie the iustice of God for the temporall punishment of their offences, either on earth, or in Purgatory. We teach and beleeue, that Christ by his death and passion hath made a perfect and all-sufficient satisfaction to the iustice of God for all the finnes of men, and for the whole punishment thereof of both eternall and temporall. Thus we differ, and here in we for our parts must for euer stand at difference with them: so as if there were no more points of variance but this one, it should be sufficient to keepe vs alwaies from vnitng our religions, and cause vs to obey the voyce of Christ, Come out of her my people. For as in the former points, so in this also, the Papists erre, not in circumstance, but in the very foundation and life of religion.

Our Reasons.

I. A satisfaction that is made imperfect either directly or by consequent, is indeede no satisfaction at all. But the Papists make Christs satisfaction imperfect, in that they doe adde a supply by humane satisfactions; and thus much a learned Schooleman, Biel in plaine words confessed; Although (saith he) the passion of Christ be the principall merit, for which grace is conferred, the opening of the kingdom and glory, yet is it neuer the alone total and meritorious cause: it is manifest, because alwaies with the merit of Christ, there concurres some worke, as, the merit of congruie or condignitie of him that receiueth grace or glory, if he be of yeeres, and have the use of reason: or of some other for him if he want reason. For that which admits a supply by another, is imperfect in itself. Therefore humane satisfactions cannot stand. Learned Papists make answer, that Christs satisfaction and mans may stand well together. For (say they) Christs satisfaction is sufficient in it self to answer the iustice of God for all finnes and punishment: but it is not sufficient to this or that man, till it be applied: and it must be applied by our satisfaction made to God for the temporall punishment of our finnes. But I say again, that mans satisfaction can be no means to apply the satisfaction of Christ, and I prouoe it thus. The means of applying Gods blessings and graces vnto man, are two-fold: some respect God himselfe, and some respect man. Those which respect God, are such whereby God on his part doth offer and conuay his mercies, in Christ vnto man: of this sort are the preaching of the word, Baptisme, and the Lords supper: and these are as it were the hand of God, whereby he reacheth downe, and giueth vnto vs Christ with all his benefits. The other means of applying on mans part, are those whereby the said benefits are receiued. Of this sort there is onely one, namely faith, whereby we beleue that Christ will all his benefits belongs vnto vs; and that is the hand of man whereby he receiueith Christ as he is offered, or exhibited by God in the word & Sacraments. As for other means besides these, in Scripture we finde none. Foolish therefore is the answer of the Papists, that make mens satisfactions means to apply the satisfaction of Christ vnto vs: for by humane satisfactions, Christ is neither offered on Gods part, nor yet receiued on mans part: let them prouoe it if they can. Other, not contented with this their former answer, say, that our satisfactions doe nothing derogate from the satisfaction of Christ: because our workes haue their dignity and merit from Christs satisfaction: hee meriting that our workes should satisfie Gods iustice for temporall punishment. But this is also absurd and false, as the former was. For if Christ did satisfie that man might satisfie, then Christ doth make euery beleuer to be a Christ, a Iesus, a Redeemer, and a Priest in the same order with his owne selfe. But to make himselfe man his owne Redeemer, though it be but from temporall punishments, is a doctrine of diuels. For the holy Ghost teacheth, Hebr. 7. 24. That the Priesthood of Christ is incommunicable, and cannot passe from him to any other. Now to make satisfaction for sinne, or any part of the punishment thereof, is a duty, or a part of Christ his Priesthood: and therefore to make a satisfaction, is a worke that cannot passe from his person to the person of any man. Againe, if Christ by his satisfaction giue power to man to satisfie, then man doth satisfie by Christ, and Christ besides his owne satisfaction vpon the crosse, must daily satisfie in man to the end of the world: but this cannot bee: for Christ vpon the crosse, when death was vpon him, said, It is finished, that is, I haue fully satisfied for all the finnes of mankind: both in respect of the fault and punishment. As for Christs buriall and redemption, which followed his death, they serued not to satisfie, but to confirme the same. Againe, Paul saith, 2 Cor. 5. 21. He that knew no sinne, was made sinne for vs; that is, the punishment of sinne for vs: but if the Church of Rome saye, that Christ doth daily satisfie; then Paul spake too short, 21 Cor. 5. 19. and would haue said further, That Christ was made sinne for vs, and in vs too: and that God was not onely in Christ, but also in vs, reconciling the world to himselfe. But Paul knew this learning, and therefore let them turne themselves which way they will, by putting a supplement to Christs satisfaction, they doe indeede annihilate the same.

Reason. I. In sundry places of Scripture especially in the Epistles of Paul, we are said to be redeemed, iustified, and saved freely: which word freely, doth import that we are iustified & saved without any thing done on our part, or by our felicitie, in the matter of our saluation: and if this be so, then can we do nothing at all that may satisfie the iustice of God, for the least punishment of our finnes. If we satisfie in our owne persons, we are not saved freely: and if we be saved freely, we make no satisfaction at all.

Reason III. We pray daily, forgiue vs our finnes: now to plead pardon, and to satisfie for our finnes, be contrary: and for all things, for which we can make satisfaction, wee neede not craue pardon: but we are taught in the foresaid petition, wholly and onely to vse the plea of pardon for our finnes, and therefore we acknowledge, that we cannot make any satisfaction at all.

Reason. LV. The iudgement of the auncient Church. Tertul. de Baptism. Guiliness being taken away, the punishment is also taken away. (a) Augustine, Christ by taking vpon him the punishment, and not the fault, hath done away both faults and the punishment. 1 Tim. 10. Rom. 5. he faith, When we are gone out of this world, there will remaine no compunction or satisfaction. Some new Editions haue foisted in the word (aliqua) and so haue turned the sense on this manner: There will remaine no compunction or some satisfaction. But that is flat against Augustines meaning, who faith a little before, that when the way is ended, there is no compounding of our cause with any. Christ pro. c. in Esa. Say not to me, I haue sinned: how shall I be freed from so many finnes? Thou canst not; but thy God can. Yea, and he will blot out thy finnes, that there shall remaine no print of them: which thing befalls not to the body, for when it is healed there remains a scarre: but God as soone as hee exempts thee from punishment, hee giueth the iustice. Ambrrose saith, I reade of Peters scars, but I reade not of his satisfaction. Againe, Let vs adore

Christ

Christ, that he may say vnto vs, Feare not the finnes of this world, nor the waues of bodily sufferings: I haue remission of finnes. Hierome 12th in Typhane 31. The sinne that is couered is not seene, the sinne that is not seene is not imputed, that which is not imputed, is not punished. Chrysostome in Matth. homil. 44. Among all men, Ioue vnder punishment in this life, and the life to come: others in this life alone: others alone in the life to come: others, neither in this life, nor in the life to come. There alone, as Dines, who was not Lord so much as of one drop of water. Here alone, the incestuous man among the Corinthians. Neither here nor there, as the Apostles and Prophets, as also Iob and the rest of this kinde: for they endured no sufferings for punishment, but that they might be knowne to bee conquerors in this fight.

Objections of Papists.

Obiect. I. Leuit. 4. Moses according to Gods commandement prescribed severall sacrifices for severall persons; and they were means of satisfaction for the temporall punishments of their daily finnes. Ans. Those sacrifices were offered to his father in his alone sacrifice vpon the crosse: and whose offer offered any sacrifice in the old Testament, did thus and no otherwise elceme of it, but as atype and figure of better things. Secondly, the said sacrifices were satisfactions to the Church, whereby men did testifie their repentance for their offences, and likewise their desire to be reconciled to God and men. And such kinde of satisfactions, wee acknowledge.

Obiect. II. Men, whose finnes are all pardoned, haue afterward sundry crosses and afflictions laid vpon them, vnto the end of their daies: therefore in all likelihood they make satisfaction to God for temporall punishments. As for example, The Israelites for murmuring against the Lord in the wilderness, were barred all from the land of promise: and the like befell Moses and Aaron for not glorifying God as they should haue done at the waters of strife. Ans. Man must be considered in a two-fold estate, as he is vnder the law, and as he is vnder grace. In the first estate, all afflictions are curses or legal punishments, be they little or great: but to them that are in the second estate and beleue in Christ, though the same afflictions remaine, yet doe they change their habite or condition, and are the actions of a Father sending to bee triall, corrections, preuentings, admonitions, 1 Cor. 11. 32. When we are iudged, we are mured of the Lord, and Heb. 12. 7. If ye endure chastisements, God offereth himselfe vnto you as children. And Chrysostome saith, 1 Cor. hom. 28. When we are corrected of the Lord, it is more for our admonition then damnation: more for a medicine then for a punishment: more for a correction, then for a penaltie. And whereas God denied the beleueing Israc- lites, with Moses and Aaron to enter into the land of Canaan, it cannot be proued that it was a punishment or penalty of the law vpon them. The Scripture saith no more, but that it was an admonition to all men in all ages following, to take heed of like offences, as Paul writeth, All these things came vnto them for examples, and were written for our admonition. 1 Cor. 10. 11.

Obiect. III. David was punished after his repentance for his adulterie, for the child died and he was plagued in his owne kind, in the incest of Abialon: and when he had numbred the people, hee was yet punished in the death of his people after his owne repentance. Ans. I answer as before, that the hand of God was vpon David after his repentance; but yet the iudgements which befell him, were not curses vnto him properly, but corrections for his sins and triall of his faith, and means to prevent further sinne, and to renew both his faith and repentance: as also they serued to admonish others in like case: for David was a publike person, and his finnes were effusie, both within the Church of God, and without.

Obiect. IV. The Prophets of God, when the people were threatened with the plague, famine, sword, captiuitie, &c. exhorted them to repent, & to humble themselves in sackcloth and ashes: and thereby they turned away the wrath of God that was then coming forth against them. Therefore by temporall humiliation, men may escape the temporall punishments of the Lord. Ans. Famine, sword, banishment, the plague, and other iudgements sent on Gods people, were not properly punishments of sinne, but onely the corrections of a father, whereby hee humbleth them, that they might repent: or thus, they were punishments tending to correction, not seruing for satisfaction. And the punishments of God are turned from them, not because they satisfie the iustice of God in their owne sufferings, but because by faith they laie hold on the satisfaction of the Messias, and testifie the same by their humiliation and repentance.

Obiect. V. Dan. 4. 24. Daniel giueth this counsell to Nebuchadnezzar, Redeem thy sins by iustice, and thine iniquities by almes-deeds. Behold (say they) almes-deeds are made a means to satisfie for mans iniquities. Ans. The word which they translate to redeem (as the most learned in the Chaldie tongue with one cōsent auouch) doth properly signifie to break off: as if the Prophet should say: O King, thou art a mightie Monarke, and to enlarge thy kingdom thou hast vsed much iniustice and cruelty, therefore now repent of thine iniquitie, and break off these thy finnes, testifie thy repentance by doing iustice, and giue almes to the poore whom thou hast oppressed. Therefore heere is nothing spoken of satisfaction for sin, but onely of testification of repentance by the fruits thereof.

Obiect. VI. Matth. 3. 2. Doe penance, and bring bring forth fruits worthy of penance, which (say they) are workes of satisfaction injoyed by the Priests. Ans. This text is abused: for the word in significeth thus much, change your mindes from sinne to God, and testifie it by good workes, that is, by doing the duties of the morall law: which must be done, not because they are meanes to satisfie Gods iustice for mans sinne, but because they are fruits of that faith and repentance which lies in the heart.

Obiect. VII. 2. Cor. 7. 11. Paul setteth downe sundry fruits of repentance: whereof the last is renewe, whereby repentant persons punish themselves, thereby to satisfie Gods iustice for the temporall punishment of their finnes. Ans. A repentant sinner must take reuenge on himselfe, and that is only to vse all meanes which serue to subdue the corruption of nature, to bridle carnall affections, and to mortifie sinne: and these kindes of actions are restrainments properly, and not punishments: and are directed against the sinne, and not against the person.

Lastly, they make three workes of satisfaction, prayer, fasting, and almes-deeds. For the first, it is meer foolishnes to thinke, that man by prayer can satisfie for his finnes. It is all one, as if they had said, that a beggar by asking of almes, should deserue his almes: or, that a debtor by requesting his creditor to pardon his debt, should thereby pay his debt. Secondly, a fasting is a thing indifferent, of the same nature with eating and drinking, and of it selfe conferreth nothing to the obtainment of the kingdom of heaven, no more then eating and drinking doth. Thirdly and lastly, almes-deeds cannot be workes of satisfaction for finnes. For when we giue them as we ought, we doe but our duty, whereunto we are bound. And wee may as well say, that a man by paying one debt may discharge another, as to say that by doing his duty hee may satisfie Gods iustice for the punishment of his finnes. These we confesse be fruits of faith, but yet are they no workes of satisfaction: but the only and al-sufficient satisfaction made to Gods iustice for our finnes, is to be found in the person of Christ, being procured by the merit of his death, and his obedience. And thus our doctrine touching satisfaction is cleared: and it is to be learned carefully of our common people, because the opinion of humane satisfaction is naturall, and thickes fast in the hearts of naturall men. Hereupon when any haue sinned, and feeble touch of conscience any way, their manner is, then to performe some outward humiliation and repentance, thinking thereby to stoppe the mouth of conscience, and by doing some ceremoniall duties to appease the wrath of God for their finnes. Ye may thinke to satisfie Gods iustice by repeating the Creed, the Lords prayer, and the ten Commandements, so foolish are they in this kinde.

The seauenth point: Of Traditions.

Traditions, are doctrines deliuered from hand to hand, either by word of mouth, or by writing, beside the written word of God.

Our consent.

Conclus. I. We hold that the very word of God hath bene deliuered by tradition. For first, God reuealed his will to Adam by word of mouth: and renewed the same vnto the Patriarkes, not by writing, but by speech, by dreames, and other inspirations: and thus the Word of God went from man to man, for the space of two thousand and foure hundred yeares, vnto the time of Moses, who was the pen-man of holy Scripture. For as touching the Prophecie of Enoch, we commonly hold it was not penned by Enoch, but by some Iew vnder his name. And for the space of this time, men worshipped God, and held the articles of their faith by tradition, not from men, but immediately from God himselfe. And the historie of the new Testament (as some say) for eightie yeares, as some others thinke, for the space of twentie yeares and more, went from hand to hand by tradition, till penned by the Apostles, or being penned by others it was approved by them.

Conclus. II. We hold that the Prophets, our Sauour Christ, and his Apostles, spake and did many things good and true, which were not writt in the Scripture; but came either vs, or to our Ancestours only by tradition. As 2. Tim. 3. 8. it is said, Iannes and Iambres were the Magicians that withstood Moses: now in the Bookes of the old Testament we shall not find them once named, and therefore it is like that the Apostles had their names by Tradition, or by some writings the extant among the Iewes. So Heb. 12. 21. The author of the Epistle recordeth of Moses, that when hee saw a terrible light in Mount Sinai, he said, I tremble, and am afraid: which words are not to be found in all the bookes of the old Testament. In the Epistle of Iude mention is made, that the diuell strone with Michael the Archangel about the body of Moses: which point (as also the former) considering it is not to be found in holy Writ, it seemes the Apostle had it by Tradition from the Iewes. That the Prophet Ezra was killed with a Fullers club is receiued for truth but yet not recorded in Scripture: and so likewise that the Virgin Mary liued and died a virgin. And in Ecclesiasticall writers many worthy sayings of the Apostles and other holy men are recorded and receiued of vs for truth, which neuertheless are not set downe in the bookes of the old or new Testament. And many things we hold for truth, not written in the word, if they be not against the word.

III. Conclus.

Conclus. III. We hold that the Church of God hath power to prescribe ordinances, rules, or traditions, touching time and place of Gods worship, and touching order and comeliness to be vsed in the same: and in this regard Paul, 1. Cor. 11. 2. commendeth the Church of Corinth for keeping his traditions, and Mat. 15. 29. the Councell at Ierusalem decreed, That the Churches of the Gentiles should abstaine from blood, and from things strangled. This decree is tearmed a tradition, and it was in force among them so long as the offence of the Iewes remained. And this kind of traditions, whether made by general Councels or particular Synods, we haue care to maintaine and obserue: these caneaets being remembered: first, that they prescribe nothing childish or absurd to be done: secondly, that they be not imposed as any part of Gods worship: thirdly, that they be seuered from superstition or opinion of merit: lastly, that the Church of God be not burdened with the multitude of them. And thus much touching Traditions.

The difference.

Papists teach, that beside the written word, there be certaine vnwritten traditions, which must be beleene as profitable and necessarie to saluation. And these they say are two-fold: Apostolically, namely, such as were deliuered by the Apostles, and not written: and Ecclesiasticall, which the Church decreeth as occasion is offered. We hold that the Scriptures are most perfect, containing in them all doctrines needfull to saluation, whether they concerne faith and manners: and therefore we acknowledge no such traditions beside the written word, which shall be necessary to saluation: so as he which beleueth them not cannot be faued.

Our Reasons.

Testimonie I. Deut. 4. 2. Thou shalt not add to the words that I command thee, nor take any thing there from: therefore the written word is sufficient for all doctrines pertaining to saluation. If it be said, that this commandement is spoken as well of the vnwritten, as of the written word, I answer, that Moses speaketh of the written word only: for these few words are a certaine preface which hee set before a long Commentarie made of the written law, for this end, to make the people more attentive and obedient.

Testimonie II. Isa. 8. 20. To the law and to the testimony: If they speake not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them. Here the Prophet teacheth what must be done in cases of difficultie. Men must not runne to the Wizard or Sooth-sayer, but to the law and testimony, and here he commendeth the written word, as sufficient to resolve all doubts and scruples in conscience whatsoever.

Testimonie III. Iohn. 20. 31. Those things were written that yee might beleene that Iesus is the Christ, and in beleeing might haue euerslasting life. Here is set downe the full end of the Gospel, and the whole written word, which is to bring men to faith, and consequently to saluation: and therefore the whole Scripture alone is sufficient to this end without traditions. If it be said, that this place must be vnderstood of Christs miracles only: I answer, that miracles without the doctrine of Christ, & knowledge of his sufferings, can bring no man to life euerslasting: and therefore the place must be vnderstood of the doctrine of Christ, and not of his miracles alone, as Paul teacheth Gal. 1. 8. If we, or an Angell from heauen preach vnto you any thing, beside that which we haue preached, let him be accursed. And to this effect he blames them that taught but a diuers doctrine to that which he had taught, 1. Tim. 1. 3.

Testimonie IV. 2. Tim. 3. 16, 17. The whole Scripture is giuen by inspiration of God, and is profitable to teach, to reprove, to correct, and to instruct in righteousness, that is, to informe all men in all good duties, that is sufficient to saluation. But Scripture ferneth for all these vices, and therefore it is sufficient; and vnwritten traditions are superfluous. The second, that which can make the man of God, that is Prophets, and Apostles, and the Ministers of the word, perfect in all the duties of their callings, that same word is sufficient to make all other men perfect in all good workes. But Gods word is able to make the man of God perfect. Therefore it is sufficient to prescribe the true and perfect way to eternall life, without the helpe of vnwritten traditions.

V. The iudgement of the Church. Terrill faith, (a) Take from hereticks the opinions which they maintaine with the heathen, that they may defend their questions by Scripture alone, & they cannot stand. Again, We neede no curiosity after Christ Iesus, nor inquisition after the Gospel. When we beleene is, we desire to beleene nothing beside: for this we first beleene, that there is nothing more which wee may beleene. Hieron. on Matth. 23. writing of an opinion that Iohn Baptist was killed, because hee foretold the coming of Christ, faith thus; This because he hath not authority from Scriptures, may as easily be condemned as approved. In which words there is a conclusion with a minor, and the maior is to be supplied by the rules of Logicke thus: that which hath not authority from Scriptures, may as easily be condemned as approved: but this opinion is so; therefore. Behold a notable argument against all vnwritten traditions. Aug. booke 2. cap. 9. de doct. Christian. In sho things which are plainly set downe in Scripture, are found at those points which containe faith and manners of living well. Vincenſius Linen ſaith, the Canon of the Scripture is perfect, and fully ſufficient in it ſelfe for all things.

Beside theſe testimonies, other reasons there be that ſerue to proue this point. 1. The practise of Chriſt and his Apoſtles, who for the confirmation of the doctrine which they taught, vsed alwaies the testimony of Scripture; neither can it be proued, that they euer confirmed any doctrine by tradition. Act. 26. 22. I continue vnto this day witnessing both to ſmall and great, ſaying none other things then thoſe which the Prophets and Moſes did ſay ſhould come. And by this we are giuen to vnderſtand, that we muſt alwaies haue recourſe to the written word, as being ſufficient to inſtruct vs in matters of ſaluation. II. If the beleeuing of vwritten traditions were neceſſary to ſaluation, then we muſt as well beleue the writings of the ancient Fathers, as the writings of the Apoſtles, becauſe Apoſtolicall traditions are not eſſewhere to be found but in their bookes. And we may not beleue their ſayings as the word of God, becauſe they often erre, being ſubiect to error: and for this cauſe their authority when they ſpeake of traditions, may be ſuſpected; and we may not alwaies beleue them vpon their word.

Obiections for Traditions.

First they alleadge, 2. Theſſal. 2. 15. where the Apoſtle bids that Church keepe the ordinances which he taught them either by word or letter. Hence they gather, that beſides the written word, there be vwritten traditions, that are indeed neceſſary to be kept and obeyed. Anſw. It is very likely that this Epistle to the Theſſalonians was the firſt that euer Paul writ to any Church, though in order it haue not the firſt place; and therefore at that time when this Epistle was penning, it might well ſal out that ſome things needfull to ſaluation were deliuered by word of mouth, not being as yet written by any Apoſtle. Yet the ſame things were afterward ſet downe in writing, either in the ſecond Epistle, or in the Epistles of Paul.

Obiect. II. That Scripture is Scripture, is a point to be beleued: but that is a tradition vwritten: and therefore one tradition there is not written, that we are to beleue. Anſw. That the Bookes of the old and new Teſtament are Scripture, it is to be gathered and beleued, not vpon bare tradition; but from the very bookes themſelves, on this manner: Let a man that is endued with the ſpirit of diſcerning, reade the ſeuerall bookes, withall let him conſider the profeſſed Author thereof, which is G O D himſelfe, & the matter therein contained, which is moſt diuine and abſolute truth full of piety; the manner and forme of ſpeech, which is full of maiestie in the ſimplicity of words; the end whereat they wholly aime, which is the honour and glory of God alone, &c. and he ſhall bee reſcolled that Scripture is Scripture, euen by the Scripture it ſelfe. Yea, and by this means he may diſcerne any part of Scripture, from the writings of men whatſoeuer. Thus then Scripture proues it ſelfe to be Scripture: and yet wee deſpiſe not the vniuerſall conſent or tradition of the Church in this caſe; which though it doe not perſwade the conſcience, yet it is notable inducement to moue vs to reuerence and regard the writings of the Prophets and Apoſtles. It will be ſaid, where it is written that Scripture is Scripture? I anſwer, not in any one particular place or booke of Scripture, but in every line and page of the whole Bible, to him that can reade with the ſpirit of diſcerning, and can diſcerne the voice of the true paſſour, as the ſheepe of Chriſt can doe.

Obiect. III. Some bookes of the Canon of the Scripture are loſt, as the booke of the warres of God, Numb. 21. 14. the booke of the iuſt Joſhua. 10. 13. the booke of the Chronicles of the Kings of Iſrael and Iuda, 1. King. 14. 19. the bookes of certaine Prophets, Nathan, Gad, Iddo, Abiah, and Semiah: and therefore the matter of theſe bookes muſt come to vs by tradition. Anſw. Though it bee granted that ſome bookes of Canonical Scripture be loſt: yet the Scripture ſtill remains ſufficient: becauſe the matter of thoſe bookes (ſo far forth as it was neceſſary to ſaluation) is contained in theſe bookes of Scripture that are now extant. Again, I take it to be a truth (though ſome think otherwiſe) that no part of the Canon is loſt: for Paul ſaith, Whatſoeuer things were written afore time, were written for our learning that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures, &c. Rom. 15. 4. Where he takes it for granted, that the whole Canon of holy Scripture was then extant. For if hee had thought, that ſome bookes of Scripture had beene loſt, he would haue ſaid: whatſoeuer was written & is now extant, was written for our learning and comfort. For bookes that are loſt ſerue neither for learning nor comfort. Again, to hold that any Bookes of Scripture ſhould be loſt, calls into queſtion Gods prouidence: and the fidelity of the Church, who hath the bookes of God in keeping, and is therefore called, the pillar and ground of truth. And touching the bookes before mentioned, I anſwer thus: The booke of the warres of God, Numb. 21. 14. might be ſome ſhort bill or narration of things done among the Iſraelites, which in the daies of Moſes went from hand to hand. For ſometimes a booke in Scripture ſignifieth a roule or catalogue, as the firſt chapt. of Matthew, which containeth the genealogie of our Sauour Chriſt, is called the booke of the generation of Ieſus Chriſt. Again, the booke of the iuſt, and the bookes of the Chronicles, which are ſaid to be loſt, were but as the Chronicles of England are with vs; euen poliſhke records of the acts and euents of things, in the kingdome of Iuda and Iſrael: out of which the Prophets gathered things neceſſary to bee knowne, and placed them in holy Scripture. As for the bookes of Iddo, Abiah, Semiah, Gad, and Nathan, they were contained in the bookes of the Kings and Chronicles, and in the bookes of Samuel, which were not written by him alone, but by ſundry Prophets, 1. Chr. 29. 29. as alſo was the booke of Iudges. As for the bookes of Salomon which are loſt, they did not concerne religion and matters of ſaluation, but were concerning matters of Philoſophy and ſuch like things.

Obiect. IV. Moſes in Mount Sina, beſide the written law, required from God a more ſecret doctrine, which he neuer writ, but deliuered by tradition or word of mouth to the Prophets after him: and this the Iewes haue now ſet downe in their Cabala. Anſw. This indeed is the opinion of ſome of the Iewes, whom in effect and ſubſtance ſundry Papiſts follow: but we take it for no better then a Jewiſh dogmatage. For if Moſes had knowne any ſecret doctrine beſide the written law, hee would neuer haue giuen this commendement of the ſaid law, Thou ſhalt not addre any thing thereto.

Obiect. V. Heb. 5. 12. Gods word is of two forts, milke, and ſtrong meate. By milke we muſt vnderſtand the word of God written, wherein God ſpeakes plainly to the capacite of the rudeſt, but ſtrong meate is vwritten traditions, a doctrine not to be deliuered vnto all, but to thoſe that grow to perfection. Anſw. We muſt know, that one and the ſame word of God, is milke and ſtrong meate, in regard of the manner of handling and propounding of it. For being deliuered generally and plainly to the capacite of the ſimpleſt, it is milke; but being handled particularly and largely, and ſo fitted for men of more vnderſtanding, it is ſtrong meate. As for example, the doctrine of the creation, of mans fall, and redemption by Chriſt, when it is taught ouerly and plainly, it is milke: but when the depth of the ſame is thoroughly opened, it is ſtrong meate. And therefore it is a conceite of mans braine, to imagine that ſome vwritten word is meant by ſtrong meate.

Obiect. VI. Sundry places of Scripture bee doubtfull, and euery religion hath his ſeueral expoſition of them, as the Papiſts haue theirs, and the Proteſtants theirs. Now then ſeeing there can be but one truth, when queſtion is of the interpretation of Scripture, recourſe muſt bee had to the tradition of the Church, that the true ſenſe may be determined, and the queſtion ended. Anſw. It is not ſo: but in doubtfull places Scripture it ſelfe is ſufficient to declare his owne meaning: firſt, by the analogie of faith, which is the ſumme of religion gathered out of the cleareſt places of Scripture; ſecondly, by the circumſtances of the place; and the nature and ſignification of the words; thirdly, by conference of place with place. By theſe and like helps contained in A Scripture, we may iudge which is the trueſt meaning of any place. Scripture it ſelfe is the text and the beſt gloſſe. And the Scripture is ſufficiently rearm'd the matter of liſe, it being not ſo of it ſelfe, but by the abuſe of man.

And thus much of our diſſent concerning traditions, wherein we muſt not beſeuering but ſtedfaſt: becauſe not withſtanding our renouncing of Poperie, yet Popiſh inclinations and diſpoſitions be riſe among vs. Our common people maruſouſly affect humane traditions: yea mans nature is inclined more to be pleaſed with them, then with the word of God. The feaſt of the natiuitie of our Sauour Chriſt, is onely a cuſtome and tradition of the Church, & yet men are commonly more careful to keepe it, then the Lords day, the keeping whereof ſtands by the morall law. Poſitiue lawes are not ſufficient to reſtrain vs from buying and ſelling on the Sabbath: yet within the twelve daies no man keeps market. Again, ſee the truth of this in our affection to the miniſterie of the word: let the Preacher alleadge Peter and Paul, the people count it but common ſtuffe, ſuch as any man can bring; but let men come and alleadge Ambroſe, Auſtine, and the reſt of the fathers: oh, he is the man, he is alone for them. Again, let any man be in danger any way, and it ſtraight he ſendeth to the wife man or wizard: Gods word is not ſufficient to comfort and direct him. All this argues, that popery denied with the mouth, abides ſtill in the hearts: and therefore we muſt learne to reuerence the written word, by aſcribing vnto it all manner of perfection.

The eight point: of Vowes.

Our Conſent.

Touching Vowes this muſt be knowne, that we doe not condemne them altogether, but onely labour to reſtore the puritie of doctrine touching this point, which by the Church of Rome from time to time hath bene corrupted and defaced. We hold therefore that a vow is a promiſe made to God touching ſome duties to be performed vnto him: and it is twofold, general, or ſpeciall. The general vow is that which concerne all beleueers: and it is made in the covenant both of the law, and of the Goſpel. I will here onely ſpeake of the vow which is made in the covenant of the Goſpel, in which there be two actions of God, the other of man. God in mercie on his part promiſeth to men the remiſſion of finnes and liſe euerlaſting: and man againe for his part promiſeth to beleue in Chriſt, and to obey God in all his commendements. All men euer made this vow vnto God, as the Iewes in circumciſion: which alſo they renewed ſo often as they receiued the paſſeouer: and in the new teſtament all that are baptized doe the like. And in Baptiſme this vow is called the ſtipulation of a good conſcience, whereby wee purpoſe to renounce our selues, to beleue in Christ, and to bring forth the fruits of true repentance: and it ought to be renewed so oft as we are partakers of the Supper of the Lord. This vow is necessarie, and must be kept as a part of the true worship of God; because it is a promise wherein we vow to performe all duties commanded of God, either in the law, or in the Gospell. It may be demanded, considering we are bound to obedience, how wee binde our selues in Baptisme thereto. Ans. Though wee be already bound, partly by nature, and partly by the written word, yet may we renew the same bond in a vow; and he that is bound may further binde himselfe, so it bee for this end, to helpe his dulcenesse, for want of zeale, and to make him more forward in duties of loue to men, and the worship of God: to this end David swore to keepe the law of God. Psal. 119. 106. Though hee were bound vnto it by nature, and by the written law it selfe.

The speciall vow is that, which doth not reach to the person of all beleueers, but onely concerne some speciall men vpon some speciall occasions. And this kinde of vow is twofold: The first is the vow of ceremoniall duty, in the way of seruice to God: and it was practised in the Church of the Iewes vnder the old Testament: examples hereof, are two especially: the first, was the vow of the Nazarites, whereto no kind of men were bound by Gods commandement, but they bound themselves: God onely prescribing the manner and order of keeping the same, with rites pertaining thereto; as astinence from wine, the not cutting of the haire, and such like. The second example is of the Iewes, when of their owne accords, they vowed to giue God house or land, sheepe or oxen, or any like things for the maintenance of the legall worship: and of this also God prescribed certaine rules, Leu. 27. Now these vowes were part of the Iewish pedagogie or ceremoniall law, wherein God trained vp the Iewes in the old Testament: and beeing obserued of them, they were parts of Gods worship: but now vnder the Gospell they were not: beeing all abolished with the ceremoniall law, to which Christ put an end at his death vpon the crosse. It is true, Paul made a vow, and since kept the same, in the time of the new Testament, Act. 18. 18. yet not as a part of Gods worship: but as a thing indifferent for the time, wherein hee onely condescended to the weakenesse of the Iewes, that by this meanes hee might bring them the better vnto Christ. And whereas Christ is called a Nazarite, Matth. 2. 23. we may not thinke hee was of that very order, because he did not abstaine from wine: but he was so tearmed, because he was the verity and accomplishment of this order: For by it was signified that GODS Church was a peculiar people, fenced or chosen out of the world, and that Christ in respect of holinesse was also separated from all sinners. And the wordes in Saint

Matthew, He shall be called a Nazarite, are borrowed from the booke of the Iudges, cap. 13: where they are properly spoken of Sampson, and in type or figure of Christ. For as Sampson faued Israel by his death, so did Christ saue his Church. And as Sampson killed his enemies more by death then by life, so did Christ. It is plaine therefore, that this kind of vow bindeth not vs: for there are no more ceremonies to be kept vnder the Gospell for parts of Gods worship, but the outward rites of Baptisme and the Lords supper. Vowes concerning meates, drinkes, attire, touching, tasting, times, daies, were proper to the Iewes.

The second kinde of speciall vow is that whereby a man promisseth freely to performe some outward and bodily exercise, for some good end: and this vow also (if it bee made accordingly) is lawfull, and belongs both to the Church of the old and new Testament. In the old wee haue the example of the Rekabites, Ierem. 35. 6. who by the appointment of Ienadab their father, abstained from strong drinke, and wine, from planting vineyards and orchards: whereby Ienadab intended onely to breake them before hand, and to acquaint them with their future condition and state, that they should bee strangers in a forraigne land: that so they might prepare themselves to endure hardnesse in the time to come. And now in the new Testament we haue warrant in like manner to vow: as if a man by drinking of wine or strong drinke, finde himselfe prone to drunkennesse, he may vow with himselfe to drinke no more wine nor strong drinke, for so long time, as hee feels the drinking thereof will stirre vp his infirmity, and minister occasion of sinning. Of this kinde also are the vowes in which we purpose and promise to God, to keepe set times of fasting, to taske our selues in prayer, and reading of holy Scriptures, and to giue set almes for speciall causes knowne to our selues, and to doe sundry like duties: and that we be not deceived in making such vowes, certaine rules must bee remembered. 1. That the vow be agreeable to Gods will and word; for if it be otherwise, the making, as also the keeping thereof is sinne. Vowes must not bee the bonds of iniquity. 1. I. It must bee so made, that it may stand with Christian liberty. For we may not make such things necessary in conscience, which God hath made free. Now Christian libertie allows vnto vs the free vse of all things indifferent, so it be out of the case of offence. Hence it followes, that vowes must be made and kept, or not kept, so farre forth as in conscience they may stand or not stand with our libertie purchased by Christ, III. The vow must be made with content of superiours, if we be vnder gouernment. Thus among the Iewes the vow of a daughter might not stand, vnlesse the consent of parents came thereunto. 1. V. It must bee in the power and abilitie of the marker thereof, to doe or not to doe. A vow made of a thing

impossible, is no vow. V. It must be agreeable to the calling of him that maketh it: that is, both to his generall calling, as he is a Christian, and to that particular calling wherein he liueth. If it be either against one or both, it is vnlawfull. VI. It must be made with deliberation. Rash vowes be not lawfull, though the things vowed may be done lawfully. VII. The end must bee good, which is, to preferre and exercise the gifts of faith, prayer, repentance, obedience, and other vertues of the mind; also to testifie our thankfulness vnto God for blessings received. These are the principall rules that must bee obserued in making of vowes: and herewithall must be remembered, that vowes made on this manner, are by themselves no part of Gods worship, but only helpe and furtherances thereunto: and thus we are to esteeme of all the vowes of the new Testament. And thus much of speciall vowes, and of our consent herein.

The dissent or difference.

The points of difference betwene vs touching vowes are especially three. 1. The Church of Rome teacheth, that in the new Testament we are as much bound to make vowes, as was the Church of the Iewes, and that euen in externall exercises. Wee say no: considering the ceremoniall law is now abolished: and wee haue onely two ceremonies by commandement to be obserued; Baptisme, & the Supper of the Lord. Again, we are not so much bound to make or keepe vowes, as the Iewes were; because they had a commandement so to doe, and we haue none at all. But they alleadged to the contrary, the Prophet Esa. 19. 21. who speaking of the time of the Gospell, saith, The Egyptians shall know the Lord, and shall vow vnto him, and keepe it. I answer two waies: first, that the Prophet in this place expresseth and signifieth the spirituall worship of the new Testament, by ceremoniall worship then vsed: as he doth also in the last chapter, where hee calleth the Ministers of the new Testament, Priests and Leuites. Secondly, we grant, the Church of the new Testament makes vows vnto GOD, but they are of morall and Euangelicall duties; which must not be left vndone: and if vowing will indeed further them, it is not to be neglected. And therefore so oft as we come to the Lords table, wee in heart renew the vow and promise of obedience. And though vowes be made of things and actions indifferent, yet are they not any parts of Gods worship, which is the point to be proued.

Again, they alleadged, Psal. 76. 11. Vow vnto God, and performe it. And they say, that this commandement binds all men. Ans. That commandement first bindes the Iewes to the making of ceremoniall vowes. Again, David here speaks of the vowing of praise and thanksgiving vnto God: and so he expounds himselfe, Psal. 56. 12. My vowes are vpon me, I will offer praises vnto God: and this vow indeed concerneth all men, because it respects a morall duty, which is, to set forth the praise of God.

II. Point of difference. They also hold, that vowes made euen of things not commanded; as meates, drinkes, attire, &c. are parts of Gods worship, yea, that they tend to a state of perfection, in that the keeping of them brings man to an higher estate, then the keeping of the law can doe. We flatly say no, holding that lawfull vowes be certaine (a) staies and proppes of Gods worship, and not the worship it selfe. For Paul saith plainly, 1. Tim. 4. 8. Bodily exercise profiteth little, but godlinesse is profitable for much. Again, as Gods kingdom is, so must his worship be: and Gods kingdom standeth not in outward things, as in eating, drinking, and such like actions: and therefore his worship standeth not in outward things.

III. Point of difference. They maintaine such vowes to be made, as are not agreeable to the rules before named: and herein also we are to dissent from them. The first and principall is, the vow of continency, whereby a man promisseth to God to keepe chastitie alwaies in single life, that is, out of the estate of wedlocke. This kinde of vow is flat against the word of God: and therefore vnlawfull. For Paul saith, 1. Cor. 7. 9. If they cannot containe, let them marry. 1. Tim. 4. 1. It is a doctrine of diuels to forbid to marry. Hebr. 13. 4. Marriage is honourable among all, and the bedde undefiled. Again, this vow is not in the power of himselfe that voweth: for continencie is the gift of God, who giueth not it vnto all, but to whom hee will, and when hee will, and as long as hee will. They alleadged, that in the want of continency, fasting and prayer obtaine it. Ans. It is not so: Gods gifts be of two sorts: some are common to all beleueers, as the gift of faith, repentance, and the feare of God, &c. others are peculiar to some onely, as the gift of continency, 1. Corinth. 7. 7. I would that all men were as I my selfe am, but every man hath his proper gift of God, one this way, another that way. Now if we fast & pray for the increafe of the common gifts of God, as faith, repentance, and all such as are needfull to saluation, we may obtaine them in some measure, but the like cannot bee said of particular gifts. The childe of GOD may pray for health or wealth, & not obtaine neither of them in this world: because it is not the will of God to vouchsafe these blessings to all men: and Paul prayed three times to bee deliuered from a temptation, and yet obtained not his desire. And so may wee likewise pray for chastitie in single estate, and yet neuer obtaine it: because, it may be, it is the will of God to saue vs without it. This vow therefore we abhorre, as a thing that hath heretofore, and doth still, bring forth innumerable abominations in the world. Yet here make in what manner wee doe it. First of all though wee mislike the vow: yet we like and commend single life. Marriage indeede is better in two respects: first, because God hath ordained it to be a remedy of inconueniencie to all such persons as cannot containe: secondly, because it is the fennery both of Church and common wealth; and it brings forth a seed of God for the enlarging of his kingdom. Yet single life in them that haue that gift of continencie, is in some respects to be preferred. First, because it brings liberty in perfection. Thus Paul saith, 1. Cor. 7. 26. I suppose it is to be good for the present necessity for a man to be single. Secondly, because it frees men from the common cares, molestations, and distractions that be in the family, v. 28. Such shall have trouble in the flesh, but I spare you. Thirdly, because single parties doe commonly with more bodily ease and liberty worship God; it being still presupposed, that they haue the gift of continencie, v. 34. The unmarried woman careth for the things of the Lord, that she may be holy both in body and spirit.

Againe, though wee mislike the vow, yet we hold and teach, that men or women being assured that they haue the gift of continencie, may constantly resolute and purpose with themselves to liue & leade a single life, 1. Cor. 7. 37. He that handleth firme in his own heart, that hath no need, but hath power of his owne will, and hath so decreed in his heart that he will keepe his virgin, hee doth well. And wee embrace the saying of Theodoret on 1. Tim. 4. For he doth not (saith he) blame single life or continencie, but he accuseth them that by law enacted compell men to follow therof. And men made themselves chaste for the kingdom of heauen, Matth. 19. 12. not by vow, but by purpose of heart, which is farre lesse then a vow, and may be changed vpon occasion, whereas a vow cannot, vlesse it doe evidently appeare to be vnlawfull.

Thirdly, for such persons as are able to containe to liue single for the ends before named, indeede we hold it to be no counsell of perfection, yet do we not deny it to be a counsell of expedience, or outward ease, according to that which Paul saith, v. 25. I give mine aduise —, and 35. I speake this for your commodity, not to intangle you in a snare.

Lastly, we thinke, that if any hauing the gift of continencie, doe make a vow to liue single, and yet afterward marrie (the said gift remaining) they haue sinned. Yet not because they are married, but because their vow is broken. And thus said Augustine of Widdowes that married after their vow, lib. de bono viduit. cap. 9.

The second is the vow of poverty and monastical life, in which men bestow all that they haue on the poore; and giue themselves wholly and onely to prayer and fasting. This vow is against the will of God, Act. 20. 35. It is a more blessed thing to giue then to receive. Pro. 30. 8. Giue me neither riches nor poverty. Dom. 28. 48 poverty is numbred among the curses of the law:

none whereof are to be vowed. And it is the rule of the holy Ghost, 2. Thess. 3. 10. Hee that will not labour, namely in some special and warrantable calling, must not eate. And v. 12. I exhort that they worke with quietnesse, and eate their owne bread. Now when as men liue apart from others, giuing themselves onely to prayer and fasting, they liue in no calling. And it is against the generall vow made in Baptisme, because it freeth men from sundry duties of the morall law, and changeth the proper end of mans life. For euery man must haue two callings. The first is a generall calling of a Christian, by vertue of which he performeth worship vnto God, and duties of loue to men. The second is a particular calling, wherein according to his gift, he must doe seruice to men in some function, pertaining either to the Church or common wealth whereof hee is a member. And the first of these twaine must bee performed in the second; and the second in and with the first. The end of mans life is, not onely to serue God by the duties of the first table, but by seruing of man in the duties of the second table, to serue GOD. And therefore the loue of our neighbour is called the fulfilling of the whole law, Rom. 13. 10. because the law of God is practised not apart, but in and with the law of our neighbour. This being so, it is manifest, that vowed poverty in monkish life makes many vnprofitable members both of Church and common-wealth.

C And though we mislike this vow also, yet we doe it holding these conclusions. I. That a man may forsake all his goods vpon special calling, as the Apostles did, when they were sent to preach the Gospell through the whole world. Secondly, goods may be forsaken, yea wife, children, parents, brethren, and all, in the case of confession, that is, when a man for the religion of Christ is persecuted and constrained to forsake all he hath. For then the second table giues place to the duties of the first. Matth. 10. 29. 11. That, for the time of persecution men may withdraw themselves (in such occasion offered) and goe apart to wildernesses or like places, Heb. 11. 38. yet for the time

D of peace, I see no cause of solitary life. If it bee alledged, that men goe apart for contemplation and spirituall exercises. I say againe, that Gods graces may as well bee exercised in the family, as in the Cloyster. The family is indeede as it were a Schoole of GOD, in which they that haue but a sparke of Grace, may learne and exercise many vertues; the acknowledgement of GOD; imprecation the feare of God, loue, bountifullnesse, patience, meeknesse, faithfullnesse, &c. Nay here be more occasions of doing or taking good, then bee or can bee in a Cloyster. 111. That wee condemne not the old and ancient monkes, though we like not euery thing in them. For they liued not like idle bellies, but in the sweat of their owne browes, as they ought to doe; and many of them were married: and in their meate, drinke, apparell, rule, vowe, and whole course of life, differed from the Monks of this time; euen as far as heauen from earth.

The third vowe is a regular obedience, whereby men giue themselves to keepe some deuided rule or order, standing most commonly in the obseruation of exercises in outward things, as meates, & drinke, and apparell, &c. This vow is against Christian libertie, whereby is granted a free vse of all things indifferently, so it be without the case of offence, Gal. 5. 1. Stand fast in the liberty wherein Christ hath made you free. Col. 2. 16. Let no man iudge you in meate and drinke. To conclude, whereas the Papists magnifie these their vowes, and yet make no such account of the vow in Baptisme: we for our parts must bee contrary to them, not onely in iudgement, but also in practise: and we ought to haue a special care to make good the vowes we haue plight to God according to his commandement. In our creation we made a vow of obedience: and being receiued into the covenant of grace, we vowed to beleene in Christ, and to bring forth fruits of new obedience, and this vow is renewed as oft as we come to the Lords table: our duty therefore is, to performe them also to God, as Danid saith, Vow vnto God and keepe it: and if wee keepe them not, all turnes to our shame and confusion. Men stand much on the keeping of that word which they haue passed to men, and it is taken for a point of much honestie, as it is indeede. Now then, if there be such care to keepe couenant with men, much more should we haue care to keepe couenant with God.

The ninth point. Of Images.

Our consent.

Conclus. I. We acknowledge the ciuill vse of Images as freely and truly as the Church of Rome doth. By ciuill vse I vnderstand that vse which is made of them in the common societies of men, out of the appointed places of the solemne worship of God. And this to be lawful, it appeareth; because the arts of printing & graving are the ordinance of God; and to be skilfull in them is the gift of God, as the example of Bezaleel, and Aboliah declare, Exod. 35. 30. This vse of Images may be in sundry things. I. In the adorning and setting forth of buildings: Thus Salomon beautified his throne with the images of Lyons. And the Lord commanded his temple to be adorned with images of palm trees, of pomegranats, bulles, cherubes, and such like. 11. It serueth for the distinction of coines; according to the practise of Emperours and Princes in all nations. When Christ was asked, Matth. 22. 20. whether it was lawful to giue tribute to Caesar or no? hee called for a pennie, and said, Whose image and superscription is this? they said, Caesars: he then said, Giue to Ca-

A far the things that are Caesars: not condemning but approving the stampe or image vpon his coyne. And though the Iewes were forbidden to make images in way of representation, or worship of the true God; yet the Syble of the sanctuary, which they vied, specially after the time of Moses, was stamped with the image of the Almond tree, and the pot of Manna. 111. Images serue to keepe in memory friends deceased, whom wee reuerence. And it is like that hence came one occasion of the images that are now in vse in the Romane Church. For in the daies of the Apostles men vied privately to keepe the pictures of their friends departed; and this practise after crept into the open congregation; and at the last superstition getting head, images began to be worshipped.

B Conclus. II. We hold the historical vse of images to be good and lawful: and that is, to represent to the eye the acts of histories whether they be humane, or diuine: and thus we thinke the histories of the Bible may be painted in private places.

C Conclus. III. In one case it is lawful to make an image to testifie the presence or the effects of the maiestie of God, namely, when God himselfe giues any speciall commandement so to do. In this case Moses was made and erected a brazen serpent, to be a type, signe, or image to represent Christ crucified. Iohn. 3. 14. And the Cherubes ouer the Meric-seat serued to represent the maiestie of God, to whom the Angels are subiect. And in the second commandement it is not simply said, Thou shalt not make a graven image; but with limitation, thou shalt not make to thy selfe, that is, on thine owne head, vpon thine owne will and pleasure.

D Conclus. IV. The right images of the new Testament which we hold and acknowledge, are the doctrine and preaching of the Gospell, & all things that by the word of God pertaine thereto. Gal. 3. 1. Who hath bewitched you that ye should not obey the truth, so whom Iesus Christ was before described in your sight, and among you crucified? Hence it follows, that the preaching of the word is as a most excellent picture in which Christ with his benefits are liuely represented vnto vs. And wee dissent not from Origen, contra Self. lib. 8. who saith, We haue no images framed by any base worke-man, but such as are brought forth and framed by the word of God, namely, patternes of vertues, and frames resembling Christians. Hee meanes that Christians themselves are the images of Christians.

The difference.

Our dissent from them touching images stands in three points. I. The Church of Rome holds it lawful for them to make images to resemble God, though not in respect of his diuine nature; yet in respect of some properties and actions. We on the contrary hold it vnlawfull for vs to make any image, any way to represent the true God; or, to make any image of any thing in way of religion, to worship God; much lesse the creature thereby. For the second commandment faith plainly, Exod. 20. 4. Thou shalt not make to thy selfe any graven image, or the likeness of any thing in heauen, &c. The Papists say, the commandment is meant of the images of false G O D S. But, will they, will they, it must be vnderstood of the images of the true Iehouah; and it forbids vs * to resemble God either in his nature, properties, or workes, or to vfe any resemblance of him for any sacred vfe: as to helpe the memorie, when we are about to worship God. Thus much the holy Ghost, who is the best expounder of himselfe, teacheth most plainly, Deut. 4. 15, 16. Thou shalt not make an image at all (either of false or true God,) and therefore thou shalt not make any likenes of any thing. And againe the prophet Esa. 40. 18. reproouing idolaters, asketh to whom they will liken God: or, what similitude will they set up vnto him? & v. 21. Know ye nothing? haue you not heard? hath it not bene told you from the beginning? As if hee should say: haue ye forgotten the second commandment, that God gaue vnto your fathers? And thus he flatly reprooues all them that resemble the true God in images. But they say further, that by Images in the second commandment are meant idols, that is (say they) such things as men worship for Gods.

Ans. w. If it were so, we should confound the first and second commandments. For the first, Thou shalt haue no other Gods before me, forbids all false Gods, which man wickedly frames vnto himselfe by giuing his heart and principall affections thereof, to them; and therefore idols also are here forbidden, when they are esteemed as Gods. And the distinction they make, that an Image is the representation of true things, and Idol of things supposed, is false: (a) Tertullian saith, that euery forme, or representation is to be tearmed an Idol. And, (b) Isidore saith that the heathen vfed the names of image and idol indifferently in one and the same signification. And Saint Stenen in his apologic, Act. 7. 41. calls the golden calfe an idol. Hierome saith, (c) that Idols are images of dead men. And our Diuines accord with all this which I haue said, Laſtanius saith, Inſt. lib. 2. cap. 19. Where images are for religious sake, there is no religion. The Council of Elibera, can. 36. decreed, that nothing should be painted on the walls of Churches, which is adored of the people. (d) Origen. We suffer not any to worship Iesus at altars, images, and temples: because it is written, Thou shalt haue none other Gods. And (e) Epiphanius saith, It is against the authoritie of the Scriptures to see the images of Christ or of any Saints hanging in the Church. In the tenth Council of Constantinople, these words of Epiphanius are cited against the En cratic; See mindfull beloued children not to bring images into the Church, nor set them in the places where the Saints are buried, but alwaies carry God in your hearts: neither let them be suffered in any common house: for it is not meete that a Christian should be occupied by the eyes, but by the meditation of the minde.

Arguments of the Papists.

The reasons which they vfe to defend their opinions are these: 1. In Salomons temple were erected Cherubins, which were images of Angels, on the Mercy-seat where God was worshipped: and thereby was resembled the Maiestie of God: therefore it is lawfull to make images to resemble God. Ans. w. They were erected by special commandment from God, who prescribed the very forme of them and the place where they must bee set: and thereby Moses had a warrant to make them; otherwise hee had sinned: let them shew the like warrant for their images if they can. Secondly, the Cherubins were placed in the holy of holies in the most inward place of the Temple, and consequently were removed from the sight of the people, who onely heard of them: and none but the high Priest saw them, and that but once a yeere. And the Cherubins without the veile, though they were to be seene, yet were they not to be worshipped, Exod. 20. 4. Therefore they serue nothing at all to iustifie the images of the Church of Rome.

Obiect. II. God appeared in the forme of a man to Abraham, Gen. 18. 1. 13. and to Daniel, who saw the Auncient of daies sitting on a throne, Dan. 7. 9. Now as God appeared, so may he be resembled: therefore (say they) it is lawfull to resemble God in the forme of a man or any like image, in which hee shewed himselfe to men. Ans. w. In this reason the proposition is false: For God may appeare in whatsoever forme it pleaseth his Maiestie; yet doth it not follow, that men should therefore resemble God in those formes: man haueing no libertie to resemble him in any forme at all: vnlesse hee bee commanded so to doe. Againe, when God appeared in the forme of a man, that forme was a signe of Gods presence onely for the time where God appeared, and no longer; as the bread and wine in the Sacrament are signes of Christs body and blood, not for euer, but for the time of administration: but afterward they become againe as common bread and wine. And when the holy Ghost appeared in the likeness of a dove, that likeness was a signe of his presence no longer then the holy Ghost appeared. And therefore hee that would in these formes represent the Trinitie, doth greatly dishonour God, and doeth that, for which hee hath no warrant.

Obiect. III. Man is the image of God, but it is lawfull to paint a man, and therefore to make the image of God. Ans. w. A very cauilt for first, a man cannot be painted, as he is the image of God, which stands in the spiritual gifts of righteousness and true holinesse. Againe, the image of a man may be painted for ciuill or historical vfe, but to paint any man for this end to represent God, or in the way of religion, that we may the better remember & worship God, it is vnlawfull. Other reasons which they vfe are of small moment, and therefore I omit them.

I. I. Differ. They teach and maintaine, that images of God & of Saints may be worshipped with religious worship, specially the crucified. For (a) Thomas of Watering saith, Seeing the croffe doth represent Christ who died vpon a croffe, and is to be worshipped with diuine honour: it followeth that the croffe is to be worshipped so too.

We on the contrary, hold they may not. Our principall ground is the second commandment, which containeth two parts: the first forbiddeth the making of images to resemble the true God: the second forbiddeth the worshipping of them, or God in them: in these words, Thou shalt not bow downe to them. Now there can bee no worship done to any thing lesse then the bending of the knee. Againe, the brazen serpent was a type or image of Christ crucified, Ioh. 3. 14. appointed by God himselfe: yet when the people burned incense to it, 2. King. 18. 4. Herzibias brake it in peeces, and is therefore commended. And when the diuell bad our Sauour Christ, but to bowe downe the knee vnto him, and he would giue him the whole world: Christ reiects his offer, saying, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him onely shalt thou serue. Matthew 4. 10. Againe, it is lawfull for one man to worship another with ciuill worship, but to worship man with religious honour is vnlawfull. For all religious worship is prescribed in the first table: and the honour due to man is only prescribed in the second table, and the first commandment thereof, Honour thy father, which honour is therefore ciuill and not religious. Now the meanest man that can bee, is a more excellent image of God, then all the images of God or of Saints that are deuised by men. Augustine, and long after him Gregorius, in plaine termes denieth images to be adored.

The Papists defend their opinions by these reasons: 1. Plal. 99. 5. Cast downe your sinnes before his footstool. Ans. w. The words are thus to be read: Bow at his footstool: that is, at the Arke and Mercy-seat, for there he hath made a promise of his presence: the words therefore say not: bowe to the Arke, but to God at the Arke. II. Obiect. Exo. 3. 5. God said to Moses, Stand a farre off & put off thy shoes for the place is holy. Now if holy places must be reuerenced, then much more holy images as the croffe of Christ, and such like. Ans. w. God commanded the ceremony of the putting off the shoes, that he might thereby strike Moses with a religious reuerence, not of the place, but of his own Maiestie, whose presence made the place holy. Let them shew the like warrant for images.

V. Obiect. It is lawfull to kneele downe to a chaire of estate in the absence of the King or Queene: therefore much more to the images of God & of Saints in heauen glorified, being absent from vs. Ans. w. To kneele to the chaire of estate, is no more but a ciuill testimonie, or signe of ciuill reuerence, by which all good subjects when occasion is offered, shew their loyaltye and subiection to their lawfull princes. And this kneeling being on this manner, & to no other end, hath sufficient warrant in the word of God: but kneeling to the image of any Saint departed, is religious, and consequently more then ciuill worship, as the Papists themselves confesse. The argument then prouoos nothing, vnlesse they will keep themselves to one and the same kinde of worship.

I. I. Differ. The Papists also teach, that God may bee lawfully worshipped in images, in which he hath appeared vnto men: as the Father in the image of an old man: the Sonne in the image of a man crucified: and the holy Ghost in the likeness of a dove, &c. But were hold it vnlawfull to worshippinge God, in, by, or at any image: for this is the thing which (as I haue prouoed before) the second commandment forbiddeth. And the fact of the Israelites, Exod. 32. in worshipping the golden calfe is condemned as flat idolatry: albeit they worshipped not the calfe, but God in the calfe: for v. 5. Aaron saith, To morrow shall be the solemnitie of Iehouah: whereby he doth giue vs to vnderstand, that the calfe was but a signe of Iehouah whom they worshipped. Obiect. It seemes the Israelites worshipped the calfe. For Aaron saith, v. 4. These be thy Gods (O Israel) that brought thee out of Egypt. Ans. w. Aarons meaning is nothing else, but that the golden calfe was a signe of the presence of the true God. And the name of the thing signified is giuen to the signe, as vpon a stage he is called a king that represents the king. And Augustine saith, that images are wont to be called by the names of things wherof they are images, as the counterfeite of Samuel is called Samuel. And we must not esteeme them all as mad men, to thinke that a calfe made of their earings, being but one or two daies old, should bee the God that brought them out of Egypt with a mightie hand many daies before.

And these are the points of difference touching Images; wherein we must stand at variance for euer with the Church of Rome. For they erre in the foundation of religion, making indeed an idol of the true God, and worshipping another Christ then we doe; vnder new termes maintaing the idolatry of the heathen. And therefore haue we departed from them: and so must wee still doe because they are idolaters; as I haue prouoed.

The tenth point: Of reall presence.

supper: and that no fained, but a true and reall presence which must be considered two waies, first, in respect of the signes, secondly, in respect of the communicants. For the first, we hold and teach that Christs body and blood, are truly present with the bread and wine, being signes in the sacrament: but how? not in respect of place or coexistence: but by Sacramental relation on this manner. When a word is uttered, the sound comes to the care; and at the same instant, the thing signified comes to the minde; and thus by relation the word and the thing spoken of, are both present together. Even so at the Lords table bread and wine must not be considered barely as substances and creatures, but as outward signes in relation to the body and blood of Christ. And this relation, arising from the very institution of the Sacrament, stands in this, that when the elements of bread and wine are present to the hand and to the mouth of the receiver; at the very same time the body and blood of Christ are presented to the minde: thus and no otherwise is Christ truly present with the signes. The second presence, is in respect of the communicants, to whose believing hearts he is also really present. It will be said, what kinde of presence is this? Ans. Such as the communion in the sacrament is, such is the presence, and by the communion must we judge of the presence. Now the communion is on this manner: God the father according to the tenour of the Evangelicall covenant, gives Christ in his sacrament as really and truly, as any thing can be given unto man, not by part and peece-meale (as we say) but whole Christ God and man, on this fort. In Christ there be two natures, the Godhead, & manhood. The Godhead is not given in regard of substance, or essence: but only in regard of efficacie, merits, and operation conueied thence to the manhood. And further in this Sacrament Christs whole manhood is given both bodie and soule, in this order. First of all, is given the very manhood in respect of substance, & that really: secondly, the merits and benefits thereof, as namely, the satisfaction performed by and in the manhood to the iustice of God. And thus the intire manhood with the benefits thereof, are given wholly and ioynly together. For the two distinct signes of bread and wine signifie not two distinct giuinges of the body apart and the blood apart; but the full and perfect nourishment of our soules. Again, the benefits of Christs manhood are diuersly giuen, some by imputation, which is an action of God accepting that which is done by Christ as done by vs; and thus it hath pleased God to giue the passion of Christ & his obedience. Some againe are giuen by a kinde of propagation, which I cannot fitly expresse in termes, but I resemble it thus. As one candle is lighted by another, & one torch or candle-light is conueied to twentie candles: even so the inherent righteousness of euery beleuer is derived from the store-house of righteousness, which is in the manhood of Christ; for the righteousness of all the members, is but the fruit thereof, euen as the naturall corruption in all mankind, is but a fruit of that original sinne which was in Adam. Thus we see how God for his part giues Christ: and that really. To proceede, when God giues Christ, he giues withall at the same time the spirit of Christ, which spirit creates in the heart of the receiver the instrument of true faith, by which the heart doth really receive Christ giuen of God, by resting vpon the promise which God hath made that he will giue Christ & his righteousness to euery true beleuer. Now then, when God giues Christ with his benefits, and man for his part by faith receives the same as they are giuen, there riseth that vnion which is betweene euery good receiver and Christ himselfe. Which vnion is not forged, but a real, true, and neere coniunction: neerer then which none is or can be: because it is made by a solemne giuing and receiving that passeth betweene God and man: as also by the bond of one and the same spirit. To come then to the point, considering there is a reall vnion, & consequently a reall communion betweene vs and Christ, (as I haue proued) there must needs be such a kinde of presence, wherein Christ is truly and really present to the heart of him that receiues the Sacrament in faith. And thus farre doe we consent with the Romish Church touching reall presence.

We differ not touching the presence it selfe, but only in the manner of presence. For though we hold a reall presence of Christs body and blood in the Sacrament, yet doe we not take it to be locall, bodily, or substantiall, but spirittuall and mysticall, to the signes by sacramental relation, and to the communicants by faith alone. On the contrary the Church of Rome maintaines transubstantiation, that is, a locall, bodily, & substantiall presence of Christs body and blood, by a change and conuersion of the bread and wine into the said body and blood.

Our reasons.

I. This corporall presence ouerturnes sundry articles of faith. For we beleue that the body of Christ was made of the pure substance of the Virgin Mary, & that but once, namely, when hee was conceived by the holy Ghost, and borne. But this cannot stand, if the body of Christ be made of bread and his blood of wine, as they must needs be, if there be no succession or annihilation, but a reall conuersion of substances in the sacrament: vntill we must beleue contraries, that his body was made of the substance of the Virgin, and not of the Virgin; made once, and not once but often. Again, if his body and blood be vnder the

formes of bread and wine, then is hee not as yet ascended into heauen, but remains still among vs. Neither can he be said to come from heauen at the day of iudgment: for hee that must come thence to iudge the quicke & dead, must be absent from the earth. And this was the ancient faith. Augustine saith, that Christ according to his maiestie and providence and grace, is present with vs to the end of the world: but according to his assumed flesh hee is not alwayes with vs. Cyril saith, Hee is absent in body, and present in vertue, whereby all things are gouerned. Figilius saith, That he is gone from vs according to his humanitie: he hath left vs in his humanitie: in the forme of a seruant absent from vs: when his flesh was on earth, it was not in heauen: being on earth, he was not in heauen: and being now in heauen, he is not on earth. Fulgentius saith, One & the same Christ according to his humane substance, was absent from heauen when he was on earth: and left the earth when he ascended into heauen.

Reason. II. This bodily presence ouerturnes the nature of a true body, whose common nature or essentiall property it is, to haue length, breadth, and thicknes; which being taken away, a body is no more a body. And by reason of these three dimensions, a body can occupie but one place at once, as Aristotle said, the property of a body is to be seated in some place, so as a man may say where it is. They therefore that hold the body of Christ to be in many places at once, doe make it no body at all; but rather a spirit, and that infinite. They alledge that God is almighty: that is true indeed, but in this and like matters we must not dispute what God can doe, but what he will doe. And I say further, because God is omnipotent, therefore there be some things which he cannot doe, as for him to deny himselfe, to lie, and to make the parts of a contradiction to be both true at the same time. To come to the point, if God should make the very bodie of Christ to be in many places at once, he should make it to be no body while it remains a body: and to be circumscribed in some one place and not circumscribed, because it is in many places at the same time: to be visible in heauen and invisible in the sacrament; and thus should he make contradictions to be true; which to doe, is against his nature, and argues rather impotencie then power. Augustine saith to this purpose, If he could lie, deceive, be deceived, steal, vniuulity, he should not be omnipotent. And, There fore he is omnipotent, because he cannot doe these things. Again, He is called omnipotent by doing that which he will, and not by doing that which hee will not: which if it should befall him, he should not be omnipotent.

Reason. III. Transubstantiation ouerturnes the very Supper of the Lord. For in euery Sacrament there must be a signe, a thing signified, and a proportion or relation betweene them both: but Popish reall presence takes all away for when the bread is really turned into Christs body, & the wine into his blood, then the signe is abolished, and there remains nothing but the outward formes or appearance of bread and wine. Again, it abolisheth the ends of the Sacrament, whereof one is to remember Christ till his coming againe, who being present in the sacrament bodily, needs not to be remembered, because helpes of remembrance are of things absent. Another end is to nourish the soule vnto eternall life: but by transubstantiation the principall feeding is of the body and not of the soule, which is only fed with spirittuall foode: for though the body may bee bettered by the foode of the soule, yet cannot the soule be fed with bodily foode.

Reason. IV. In the Sacrament the bodie of Christ is received as it was crucified, and his blood as it was shedde vpon the crosse: but now at this time Christs body crucified remains still as a body, but not as a body crucified; because the act of crucifying is ceased. Therefore it is faith alone, that makes Christ crucified to bee present vnto vs in the Sacrament. Again, that blood which ran out of the feet, and hands, and side of Christ vpon the crosse, was not gathered vp againe and put into veines: nay, the collection was needlesse, because after the resurrection, he liued no more a naturall but a spirittuall life: and none knows what is become of this blood. The Papists therefore cannot say it is present vnder the forme of wine locally: and we may better say it is received spirittually by faith whose properties to giue a being to things which are not.

Reason. V. 1. Cor. 10. 3. The Fathers of the old Testament did eate the same spirittuall meat, and drinke the same spirittuall drinke: for they dranke of the rocke, which was Christ. Now they could not eate his body which was crucified, or drinke his blood shedde bodily, but by faith: because then his bodie and blood were not in nature. The Papists make answer, that the Fathers did eate the same meate, and drinke the same spirittuall drinke with themselves, not with vs. But their answer is against the text. For the Apostles intent is to proue, that the Iewes were euery way equal to the Corinthians, because they did eate the same spirittuall meate, and drinke the same spirittuall drinke with the Corinthians: yetherwise his reason proues not the poi t which hee hath in hand, namely, that the Israelites were nothing inferior to the Corinthians.

Reason. VI. As it is said, the Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath: so it may be said, that the Sacrament of the Lords Supper was made for man; and not man for it: and therefore man is more excellent then the Sacrament. But if the signes of bread and wine be really turned into the body and blood of Christ, then is the Sacrament infinitely better then man, who in his best estate is only ioyned to Christ, and made a member of his mysticall body: whereas the bread and wine are made very Christ. But the Sacrament or outward elements indeed are not better than man: the end being alwaies better then the thing ordained to the end. It remains therefore that Christs presence is not corporall but spiritual. Again, in the supper of the Lord, every beleever receiveth whole Christ, God and man, though not the Godhead: now by this carnall eating, wee receive not whole Christ, but only a part of his manhood: and therefore in the Sacrament there is no carnall eating, and consequently no bodily presence.

Reason. VII. The iudgement of the auncient Church. *Theodore faith, The same Christ who called his naturall body food and bread, who also called himselfe a Vine, he vouchsafed the visible signes the name of his owne body, not changing nature, but putting grace to nature, whereby he means consecration. And, The mysticall signes after sanctification lose not their proper nature. For they remaine in their first nature, and keep their first figure and forme: and as before, may be touched and seeme: and which they are made, is understood, beleueed, and adored. Gelasius faith, Bread and wine passe into the substance of the body and blood of Christ, yet so as the substance or nature of bread and wine ceaseth not. And they are turned into the diuine substance, yet the bread and wine remaine still in the proprietie of their nature. Lombard faith, If it be asked what conversion this is whether formall or substantiall, or of another kinde, I am not able to define. And that the fathers held not transubstantiation, I prove it by sundry reasons. First, they vsed in former times * to burne with fire that which remained after the administration of the Lords Supper. Secondly, by the sacramentall vnion of the bread and wine with the bodie and blood of Christ, they vsed to confirme the personall vnion of the manhood of Christ with the Godhead against heretikes: which argument they would not haue vsed, if they had beleueed a popish real presence. Thirdly, it was a custome in Constantinople, that if any parts of the Sacrament remained after the administration thereof was ended, that young children should be sent for from the schoole to eate them; who neuertheless were barred the Lords table. And this argues plainly that the Church in those daies, took the bread after the administration was ended, for common bread. Again, it was once an order in the Romane Church, that the wine should be consecrated by dipping into it bread, which had bin consecrated. But this order cannot stand with the real presence, in which the bread is turned both into the body and blood.*

Nicholaus Cabasilus faith, After hee hath vsed some speech to the people he erects their minds, and lifts their thoughts from earth, and faile, Sicut corda, Let vs lift up our hearts, let vs thinke on things aboue, and not on things that are upon the earth. They confesse and say, that they lift up their hearts thither, where there is treasure, and where Christ sitts at the right hand of his father.

Objections of Papists.

I. The first reason is, Ioh. 6. 55. My flesh is meate indeede, and my blood is drinke indeede: therefore (say they) Christs body must be eaten with the mouth, and his blood drunke accordingly. Answe. The chapter must be understood of a spirituall eating of Christs bodie is meate indeede, but spirituall meate, and his blood spirituall drinke, to be received not by the mouth, but by faith. This is the very point that Christ here intends to proue, namely, that to beleue in him, to eate his flesh, and to drinke his blood, are all one. Again, this chapter must not be understood of that speciall eating of Christ in the sacrament: for it is said generally, v. 53. Except ye eate the flesh of Christ, and drinke his blood, ye haue no life in you: and if these very words (which are the substance of the chapter) must be understood of a sacramentall eating, no man before the coming of Christ was saved: for none did bodily eate or drinke his body or blood, considering it was not then existing in nature, but only was present to the beleueing heart by faith.

II. Obiect. Another argument is taken from the words of the institution, This is my body. Answe. These words must not be understood properly, but by a figure: his bodie being put for the signe & seale of his bodie. It is objected, that when any make their last wills and testaments, they speake as plainly as they can; now in this supper Christ ratifies his last will & testament: and therefore he spake plainly, without any figure. Ans. Christ here speaketh plainly, & by a figure also; for it hath bene alwaies the vltimall manner of the Lord in speaking of the sacraments, to giue the name of the thing signified to the signifier. Gen. 17. 10. circumcision is called the covenant of God; & in the next verse in the way of expolition, the signe of the covenant. And Exod. 12. 11. the paschall lamb is called the angels passing by or ouer the houses of the Israelites; whereas indeede it was but a signe thereof; and 1. Cor. 10. 4. The rocke was Christ. 1. Cor. 5. 7. The Passouer was Christ. And the like phrase is to be found in the institution of this sacrament concerning the cup, which the Papists themselves confesse to be figurative; when it is said, Luk. 22. 20. This cup is the new testament in my blood, that is, a signe, seale, and pledge thereof. Again, the time when these words were spoken must be considered, and it was before the passion of Christ, whereas yet his body was not crucified nor his blood shed; and consequently neither of them could be received in bodily manner, but by faith alone. Again, Christ was not onely the author, but the minister of this Sacrament at the time of the institution thereof: and if the bread had bin truly turned into his body, and the wine into his blood, Christ with his owne hand should haue taken his owne body & blood, and haue giuen it to his Disciples, nay, which is more, he should with his owne hands, haue taken his owne flesh, and drunken his owne blood, and haue eaten himselfe. For Christ himselfe did eate the bread and drinke the wine, that he might with his own person consecrate his last supper, as he had consecrated baptism before. And if these words should bee properly vnderstood, euery man should be a manlaier in his eating of Christ. Lastly, by means of popish real presence, it comes to passe, that our bodies should be nourished by naked qualities without any substance, which in all Philosophy is false and erroneous. To helpe this & the like absurdities, some Papists make nine wonders in the sacrament. The first, that Christs body is in the Eucharist in as large a quantity as he was upon the crosse, and is now in heauen, and yet excludes not the quantity of the bread. The second, that there be accidents without a subiect. The third, that bread is turned into the body of Christ, and yet it is not the matter of the body, nor refused to nothing. The fourth, that the body increaseth not by consecration of many hosts, and is not diminished by often receiving. The fifth, that the body of Christ is vnder many consecrated hosts. The sixth, that when the host is deuicid, the body of Christ is not diuicid, but vnder euery part thereof is whole Christ. The seventh, that when the Priest holds the host in his hand, the body of Christ is not felt by his selfe nor sense, but the formes of bread and wine. The eight, that when the formes of bread and wine cease, the bodie and blood of Christ ceaseth also to bee there. The ninth, that the accidents of bread and wine haue the same effects with the bread and wine it selfe, which are to nourish and fill. On this manner it shal be eatie for any man to defend the most absurd opinion that is or can be, if hee may haue liberty to answer the arguments alleadged to the contrary by wonders.

To conclude, seeing there is a real communion in the Sacrament betwene Christ and euery beleueing heart, our duty therefore is, to bestow our hearts on Christ, endeavouring to loue him, and to reioyce in him, and to long after him aboue all things: al our affiance must be in him, and with him; wee beeing now on earth must haue our conseruation in heauen. And this is the true real presence, which the ancient Church of God hath commended vnto vs: for in all these liturgies these words are vsed, & yet are extant in the Popish masse. Lift up your hearts: we lift them up vnto the Lord. By which words the communicants were admonished to direct their minds and their faith to Christ sitting at the right hand of God. Thus faith Augustine, If we celebrate the ascension of the Lord with deuotion let vs ascend with him, and lift up our hearts. Again, They which are already risen with Christ in faith and hope, are invited to the great table of heauen, to the table of angels, where is the bread.

The eleuenth point: Of the sacrifice in the Lords Supper, which the Papists call the sacrifice of the Masse.

Touching this point, first I will set downe what must bee vnderstood by the name Sacrifice. A sacrifice is taken properly, or improperly. Properly, it is a sacred or solemne action, in which man offereth and consecrath some outward bodily thing vnto God for this end, to please and honour him thereby. Thus all the sacrifices of the old Testament, and the oblation of Christ vpon the crosse in the new Testament, are sacrifices. Improperly, that is, onely by way of resemblance, the duties of the morall law are called sacrifices. And in handling this question, I vnderstand a sacrifice both properly and improperly by way of resemblance.

Our consent.

Our consent I propound in two conclusions.

Conclus. I. That the supper of the Lord is a sacrifice, & may truly be so called as it hath bene in former ages; & that in three respects. I. Because it is a memoriall of the reall sacrifice of Christ vpon the crosse, and contains within it a thanksgiving to God for the same, which thanksgiving is the sacrifice and calues of our lips, Hebr. 13. 15. II. Because euery communicant doth there present himselfe body and soule a liuing, holy, & acceptable sacrifice vnto God. For as in this sacrament God giues vnto vs Christ, with his benefits: so we answerably giue our selues vnto God as seruants to walke in the practise of all dutifull obedience. III. It is called a sacrifice in respect of that which was ioyned with the sacrament, namely, the almes giuen to the poore as a testimonie of our thankfulness vnto God. And in this regard also, the ancient Fathers haue called the sacrament, an vnbloodie sacrifice; and the table, an altar; and the ministers, priests; and the whole action an oblation, not to God but to the congregation, and not by the priest alone, but by the people. A canon of a certaine Council faith, We decree that euery Lords day the oblation of the altar be offered of euery man and woman both for bread and wine. And Augustine faith, that women offer a sacrifice at the altar of the Lord, that it might be offered by the priest to God. And vually in ancient writers the communion of the whole body of the congregation is called the sacrifice or oblation.

Conclus. II. That the very body of Christ is offered in the Lords supper. For as wee take the bread, to be the body of Christ sacramentally by resemblance and no otherwise: so the breaking of bread is sacramentally the sacrificing or offering of Christ vpon the crosse. And thus the Fathers haue termed the Eucharist an immolation of Christ, because it is a commemoration of his sacrifice vpon the crosse. Aug. Epist. 23. Neither darst hee lie which faith Christ was offered: For if the sacrament had not the resemblance of things; whereof they are sacraments, they should in no wise be sacraments: but from a resemblance, they often take their names. Again, Christ is sacrificed in the last supper, in regard of the faith of the communicants, which makes a thing past & done, as present. Augustine saith, When we beleue in Christ, he is offered for us daily. And, Christ is then slain for every one, when he beleueus that he is slain for him. Ambrose saith, Christ is sacrificed daily in the mindes of beleueus, as upon an altar. Hierome saith, Hee is alwayes offered to the beleueus.

II. The difference.

They make the Eucharist to be a reall, external, or bodily sacrifice offered vnto God: holding and teaching, that the minister is a priest properly: and that in this sacrament hee offers Christs bodie and blood to God the Father really and properly vnder the formes of bread and wine. We acknowledge no reall, outward, or bodily sacrifice for the remission of finnes, but only Christs oblation on the crosse once offered. Here is the maine difference betweene vs, touching this point: and it is of that weight & moment, that they stiffe-ly maintaining their opinion (as they doe) can be no Church of God. For this point razeth the foundation to the very bottome. And that it may the better appeare that we souch the truth, first, I will confirme our doctrine by Scripture, and secondly, confute the reasons which they bring for themselves.

III. Our Reasons.

Reason I. Heb. 9.15. and 26. and c. 10. 10. the holy Ghost saith, Christ offered himselfe but once. Therefore not often: and thus there can be no reall or bodily offering of his bodie and blood in the sacrament of his supper: the text is plaine. The Papists answer thus: The sacrifice of Christ (say they) is one for substance, yet in regard of the manner of offering, it is either bloody or vnbloody, & the holy Ghost speaks onely of the bloody sacrifice of Christ, which was indeede offered but once. Ans. But the author of the epistle takes it for granted, that the sacrifice of Christ is onely one, & that a bloodie sacrifice. For hee saith, Heb. 9.25. Christ did not offer himselfe often, as the high priests did: and verse 26. For then he must haue often suffered since the foundation of the world: but now in the end he hath appeared once to put away sinne by the sacrifice of himselfe: and verse 22. Without shedding of blood is no remission of finnes. By these words it is plaine, that the Scripture neuer knew the two-fold manner of sacrificing of Christ. And every distinction in diuinitie not founded in the written word, is but a forgerie of mans braine. And if this distinction be good, how shall the reason of the Apostle stand. He did not offer himselfe but once, because hee suffered but once?

Reas. II. The Romish Church holds that the sacrifice in the Lords supper is all one for substance, which the sacrifice which he offered on the crosse: if that be so, then the sacrifice in the Eucharist, must either be a continuance of the sacrifice which was begun on the crosse, or els an alteration or repetition of it. Now let them chooe of these twaine which they will: if they say it is a continuance of the sacrifice on the crosse, Christ being but the beginner, and the priest the finisher thereof, they make it imperfect: for to continue a thing till it be accomplished, is to bring perfection vnto it: but Christs sacrifice on the crosse was then fully perfected, as by his owne testimony it appears, when he said Consummatum est, it is finished. Again, if they say, it is a repetition of Christs sacrifice, thus also they make it imperfect: for that is the reason which the holy Ghost vseth to proue that the sacrifices of the old Testament were imperfect, because they were repeated.

Reason III. A reall and outward sacrifice in a sacrament, is against the nature of a sacrament and especially the supper of the Lords: for one end thereof is to keepe in memorie the sacrifice of Christ. Now euery remembrance must be of a thing absent, past, and done: and if Christ be daily and really sacrificed, the sacrament is no fit memorial of his sacrifice. Again, the principall end for which the Sacrament was ordained, is that God might giue & receiue Christ with his benefits: and therefore to giue and take, to eat and drinke, are here the principall actions. Now in a reall sacrifice God doth not giue Christ and the Priest receiue him of God; but contrariwise he giues and offers Christ vnto God, & God receiues something of vs. To helpe the matter, they say, that this sacrifice serues not properly to make any satisfaction to God, but rather to apply vnto vs the satisfaction of God, being already made. But this answer still maketh against the nature of a sacrament, in which God giues Christ vnto vs: whereas in a sacrifice God receiues from man, and man giues something to God: a sacrifice therefore is no fit means to apply any thing vnto vs, that is giuen of God.

Reason IV. Heb. 7.24, 25. The holy Ghost makes a difference betweene Christ the high Priest of the new Testament, and all Leuiticall priests, in this, that they were many, one succeeding another: but he is onely one, hauing an eternal priesthood, which cannot passe from him to any other. Now if this difference be good, then Christ alone in his owne very person must be the Priest of the new Testament, and no other with, or vnder him: otherwise in the new Testament there should be more priests in number then in the old. If they say, that the whole action remains in the person of Christ, and that the Priest is but an instrument vnder him (as they say), I say againe it is false; because the whole oblation is acted or done by the priest himselfe: and hee which doth all, is more then a bare instrument.

Reason V. If the Priest doe offer to God Christs reall body and blood for the pardon of our sins, then man is become a mediator betweene God & Christ. Now the Church of Rome saith, that the Priest in his masse is a priest properly, & his sacrifice a reall sacrifice, differing onely in the manner of offering from the Sacrifice of Christ vpon the crosse: and in the very canon of the Masse they insinuate thus much, when they request God to accept their gifts and offerings, namely, Christ himselfe offered, as he did the sacrifices of Abel and Noe. Now it is absurd, to thinke that any creature should be a mediator betweene Christ and God. Therefore Christ cannot possibly be offered by any creature vnto God.

Reason VI. The iudgement of the ancient Church. A certaine Councell held at Toledo in Spaine, reprooueth the Ministers that they offered sacrifice often the same day without the holy communion. The words of the Canon are these: Relation is made vnto vs that certaine priests doe not so many times receive the grace of the holy communion, as they offer sacrifices in one day: but in one day if they offer many sacrifices to God in all the oblations they insinuate themselves from the communion—Here make, that the sacrifices in ancient Masses were nothing else but formes of diuine seruice; because none did communicate, no not the priest himselfe. And in another Councell the name of the Masse is but only for a forme of prayer. It hath pleased vs, that prayers, applications, Masses, which shall be allowed in the Councell—, be vsed. And in this sense it is taken when speech is vsed of the making or compounding of Masses: for the sacrifice propriatorie of the body and blood of Christ admits no composition. Abbot Paschasius saith, Because we sume daily, Christ is sacrificed for vs mystically, and his passion is giuen in mysterie. These his words are against the reall sacrifice: but yet he expounds himselfe more plainly, cap. 10. The blood is drunk in mystery spiritually: and it is all spiritual which we eat, and, cap. 12.

The priest— attributes to every one not as much as the outward sight giueth, but as much as faith inwardly, cap. 13. The full similitude is outwardly, and the immaculate flesh of the lambe is faith inwardly— that the truth be not wanting to the sacrament, & it be not ridiculous to Pagans, that we drinke the blood of a killed man, cap. 6. One eates the flesh of Christ spiritually and drinks his blood, another seems to receiue not so much as a morsell of bread from the hand of the priest: his reason is, because they come vnprepared. Now then considering all these places, he makes no receiving but spiritual, neither doth he make any sacrifice but spiritual.

V. Obiect. Of Papists.

I. Gen. 14. v. 18. When Abraham was coming from the slaughter of the kings, Melchizedech met him, and brought forth bread and wine: and he was a priest of the most high God. Now this bread and wine (say they) hee brought forth to offer for a sacrifice: because it is said, he was a priest of the most high God: and they reason thus, Christ was a Priest after the order of Melchizedech:

Therefore as Melchizedech offered bread and wine so Christ vnder the formes of bread and wine offers himselfe in sacrifice vnto God. Ans. Melchizedech was no type of Christ in regard of the act of sacrificing, but in regard of his person, and things pertaining thereto, which are fully expounded, Heb. 7. the summe whereof is this: I. Melchizedech was both King and Priest: so was Christ. II. Hee was a Prince of peace and righteousness so was Christ. III. He had neither father nor mother: because the Scripture in setting down his history makes no mentio of either beginning or ending of his daies: and so Christ had neither father nor mother: no father, as hee was manno mother, as hee was God. IV. Melchizedech being greater then Abraham blessed him, and Christ by vertue of his priesthood blesteth, that is, iustifieth & sanctifieth all those that bee of the faith of Abraham. In these things onely stands the resemblance, and not in the offering of bread and wine. Again, the end of bringing forth the bread and wine, was not to make a sacrifice, but to refresh Abraham & his seruants that came from the slaughter of the Kings. And he is called there a priest of the most high God, not in regard of any sacrifice; but in consideration of his blessing of Abraham, as the order of the words teacheth, And he was the priest of the most high God: therefore bee blessed him. Thirdly, though it were granted, that he brought forth bread and wine to offer in sacrifice, yet will it not follow, that in the Sacrament Christ himselfe is to be offered vnto God vnder the naked formes of bread and wine. Melchizedech bread and wine were absurd types of no bread and no wines, or of formes of bread and wine in the Sacrament.

II. Obiect. The paschall lambe was both a sacrifice and a sacrament: now the Eucharist comes in roome thereof. Ans. The paschall lambe was a sacrament, but no sacrifice. Indeed Christ faith to his disciples, Go and prepare a place to sacrifice the Passouer in, Mark. 14. 12. but the words, to offer, or to sacrifice, doe often signifie no more but to kill. As when Isaac and Laban made a covenant, it is said, Isaac sacrificed beasts, and called his brethren to eate bread, Gen. 31. 54. Which words must not be understood of killing for sacrifice, but of killing for a feast: because hee could not in good conscience inuite them to his sacrifice, that were out of the covenant, being (as they were) of another religion: secondly, it may be called a sacrifice, because it was killed after the manner of a sacrifice. Thirdly, when Saul sought his fathers asses, and asked for the Seer, a maide bids him goe vp in halt, for (saith hee) there is an offering of the people this day in the high place, 1 Sam. 9. 12. where the feast that was kept in Rama, is called a sacrifice: in all likelihood because at the beginning thereof, the priest offered a sacrifice to God: and so the passouer may be called a sacrifice, because sacrifices were offered within the compasse

of the appointed featt or solemnity of the paffcower: & yet the thing it felfe was no more a facifice then the featt in Rama was. Again, if it were granted that the paffcower was both, it will not much againft vs. for the fupper of the Lord fucceeds the Paffcower only in regard of the maine end thereof, which is the increafe of our communion with Chrift.

III. Obiect. Malac. 1. 11. The prophet foretelleth of a cleane facifice that fhall be in the new testament: & that (fay they) is the facifice of the Maff. Ans. This place muft be vnderftood of a fpiritual facifice, as we fhall plainly perceiue if we compare it with 1. Tim. 2. 8. where the meaning of the Prophet is fitly expounded, I will (faith Paul) that men pray in all places, lifting vp pure hands, without wrath or doubting. And this is the cleane facifice of the Gentiles. Thus Iulius Marry faith, That fupplications & thanksgiuings are the onely perfect facifice praifing God, and that Chriftians haue learned to fit them alone. And Terrull. faith, We facifice for the health of the Emperour—as God hath commanded with pure prayer. And Irenus faith, that this cleane offering to be offered in every place is the prayer of the Saints.

IV. Obiect. Heb. 13. 10. We haue an altar, whereof they may not eate, which ferue in the tabernacle. Now (fay they) if we haue an altar, then we muft needs haue a prieft; and alfo a real facifice. Ans. Here is meant not a bodily, but fpiritual altar, becaufe the altar is oppofed to the material Tabernacle; and what is meant thereby is expreffed in the next verfe, in which he proues that we haue an altar. The bodies of the beafts, whose blood was brought into the holy place by the high prieft for fin, were burnt without the campe: fo Chrift Iefus, that he might fanctifie the people with his owne blood, fuffered without the gate. Now lay the reafon or prooffe to the thing that is proued, and we muft needs vnderftand Chrift himfelfe, who was both the altar, the prieft, and the facifice.

V. Obiect. Laftly, they fay, where alteration is both of law and covenant, there muft needs be a new prieft and a new facifice. But in the new Teftament there is alteration both of law and covenant: and therefore there is both new prieft and new facifice. Ans. All may be granted: in the new Teftament there is both new prieft, & facifice: yet not any popifh prieft but onely Chrift himfelfe both God & man. The facifice alfo is Chrift as he is man: & the altar, Chrift as hee is God, who in the new Teftament offered himfelfe a facifice to his Father for the fins of the world. For though he were the Lambe of God flaine from the beginning of the world, in regard of the purpofe of God, in regard of the value of his merit, and in regard of faith which maketh things to come, as prefent: yet was he not actually offered till the fulnes of time came; & once offering of himfelfe, he remaineth a prieft for euer, and all other priefts beide him are fuperfluous: his one offering once offered, being al-fufficient.

The twelfth point: Of fafting.

Our confent.

Our confent may be fet downe in three conclufions. I. We doe not condemne fafting, but maintaine three fortstherof, to wit, a morall, ciuill, & a religious faft. The firft being morall, is a praftife of fobriety or temperance, when as in the vfe of meates and drinckes, the appetite is reftained, that it doth not exceede moderation. And this muft be vfed of all Chriftians in the whole courfe of their liues. The fecond being ciuill, is when vpon fome particular & politicke confiderations men abftaine from certaine meates: as in this our commonwealth the law inioynes vs to abftaine from flefh-meate at certaine feafons of the yeare, for thefe fpecial endsto preferue the breed of cattell, and to maintaine the calling of the fifhermen. The third, namely a religious faft, is when the duties of religion, as the exercife of praier and humiliation are praftifed in fafting. And I doe now fpecially intreat of this kinde.

Concluf. II. We ioyne with them in the allowance of the principall and right ends of a religious faft, and they are three. The firft is, that thereby the minde may become attentive in meditation of the duties of Godlines to be performed. The fecond is, that the rebellion of the flefh may be fubdued: for the flefh pampered becomes an instrument of licentiousnes. The third, and (as I take it) the chiefe end of a religious faft is, to proteft our guiltineffe, and to reftifie our humiliation before God for our finnes: and for this end in the faft of Ninus, the very beaft was made to abftaine.

Concluf. III. We yeeld vnto them, that fafting is an helpe and furtherance to the worfhip of God: yea, and a good worke alfo if it be vfed in a good maner. For though fafting in it felfe being a thing indifferent, as eating and drinking are, is not to be tearmed a good worke; yet being applied, and confidered in relation to the right ends before fpoken of, and praftifed accordingly, it is a worke allowed of God, and highly to be efteemed of all the feruants and people of God.

The diffens or difference.

Our diffent from the Church of Rome in the doctrine of fafting ftands in three things. They appoint and prefcribe fet times of fafting, as neceffary to be kept; but we hold and teach that to prefcribe the time of a religious faft, is in the libertie of the Church and the gouernours thereof, as fpeciall occafion fhall be offered. When the difciples of Iohn asked Chrift, why they & the Pharifes fafted often, but his difciples fafted not, he answered, Can the children of the marriage chamber worke as long as the bridegroome is with them? but the daies will come when the bridegroome fhall bee taken away from them, and then fhall they faft, Matth. 9. 15. where he giues them to vnderftand, that they muft faft, as occafions of mourning are offered. Where alfo I gather, that a fet time of fafting is no more to be ioynded thē a fet time of mourning. It was the opinion of Auguftine, that neither Chrift nor his Apoftles appointed any times of fafting. And Terrullian faith, that they of his time fafted of their owne accords freely, without law or commandment, as occafion and time ferued. And Eusebius faith, that Montanus was the firft that made laws of fafting. It is objected, that there is a fet time of fafting prefcribed. Leuit. 16. 29. Ans. This fet and prefcribed faft was commanded of God as a part of the Legall worfhip, which had his end in the death of Chrift. Therefore it doth not iustifie a fet time of fafting in the new Teftament, where God hath left man to his owne libertie without giuing the like commandment. It is againe alleadged, that Zach. 7. 5. there were fet times appointed for the celebration of religious fafts vnto the Lord, the fifth and the feuenth moneths. Ans. They were appointed vpon occafion of the prefent afflictions of the Church in Babylon, and they ceafed vpon their deliuerance. The like vpon like occafion may we appoint. It is further objected, that fome Churches of the Proteftants obferue fet times of fafting. Ans. In fome Churches there be fet daies and times of fafting, not vpon the neceffity, or for conſcience or religious fake, but for politicke or ciuill regards, whereas in the Romifh Church it is held a mortall finne to deferre the fet time of fafting till the next day following.

Secondly, wee diffent from the Church of Rome touching the manner of keeping a faft. For the beft learned among them allow the drinking of wine, water, eleſtuaries, and that (a) often within the compaffe of their appointed faft: yea, they allow the eating of one meale on a fafting day at noone tide, & vpon a reafonable caufe, one houre before: the time of fafting not yet ended. But this praftife indeed is abſurd, and contrary to the praftife of the old Teftament yea it doth fruſtrate the end of fafting. For the bodily abſtinenſe is an outward meanes and figne whereby we acknowledge our guiltineffe and vnworthineffe of any of the bleffings of God. Again, they prefcribe a difference of meates, as whit-meate onely to be vfed on their fafting daies, & that of neceffity, and for conſcience fake in moſt cafes. But we hold this diftinction of meates, both to be foolifh and wicked. Foolifh, becauſe in ſuch meates as they prefcribe, there is as much filling & delight, as in any other meates: as namely in fiſh, fruits, wine, &c. which they permit. And it is againe the end of a religious faft to vſe any reſrefhing at all; fo far as neceffity of health and comelieneffe will permit. Thus the Church in times paſt vſed to abſtaine not onely from meate & drinke, but from all delights whatſoeuer, euen from ſoft apparell and ſweete oymments. Ier. 2. 15. — Sanctifie a faſt: let the bridegroome goe forth of his chamber, & the bride out of her bride chamber. Dan. 10. 3. I eate no pleaſant bread, neither can fleſh nor wine within my mouth, neither did I anoint my ſelfe at all, ſith three weekes of daies were fulfilled. 1 Cor. 7. 5. Deſtroy not one another, except it bee with conſent for a time, that ye may giue your ſelues to faſting and prayer.

Again, we hold this praftife to be wicked, becauſe it taketh away the libertie of Chriftians, by which, vnto the pure all things are pure. And the Apoſtle, Gal. 5. 1. biddes vs to ſtand faſt in this libertie, which the Church of Rome would thus abolifh. For the better vnderſtanding of this, let vs conſider how the Lord himſelfe hath from the beginning kept in his owne hands, as a maſter in his owne houſe, the diſpoſition of his creatures for the vſe of man, that he might depend on him & his word for temporal bleffings. In the firſt age, he appointed vnto him for meate euerie hearbe of the earth bearing feede, and euerie tree wherein there is the fruite of a tree bearing feede, Gen. 1. 29. And as for fleſh, whether God gaue vnto him libertie to eate or not to eate, we hold it vncertaine. After the flood the Lord renewed his grant of the vſe of the creatures, and gaue his people libertie to eate the fleſh of liuing creatures: yet ſo as he made ſome things vncleane, and forbade the eating of them: among the reſt, the eating of blood. But ſince the coming of Chrift he hath enlarged his word, and giuen libertie to both Iewes and Gentiles, to eate of all kinde of fleſh. This word of his we reſt vpon; holding it a doctrine of diuells, for men to command an abſtinenſe from meates for conſcience fake; which the Lord himſelfe hath created to be receiued with thankſgiuing. Socrates a Chriſtian hiftoriographer faith, that the Apoſtles left it free to euerie one to uſe what kinde of meate they would on faſting dayes and other times. Spiridon in Lent dreſſed ſwines fleſh, and ſet it before a ſtranger, eating himſelfe and bidding the ſtranger alſo to eate: who reſuſing, and profeſſing himſelfe to bee a Chriſtian, therefore (ſaith he) the rather muſt thou doſt: for ſo the pure all things are pure, as the word of God teacheth vs.

But they obiect, Ier. 35. 6. where Ionnadab commanded the Rechabites to abſtaine from wine: which commandment they obeyed, and are commended for doing well in obeying of it: therefore (ſay they) ſome kinde of meates may lawfully be forbidden. Ans. Ionnadab gaue this commandment not in awe of religion, or merit, but for other, wife and politicke regards. For he inioyned his poſterity not to drinke wine, nor to build houſes, not to ſow feede, or plant vineyards, or to haue any in poſſeſſion: but to lie in tents; to the end they might be prepared to beare the calamities, that ſhould befall them in time to come. But the popiſh abſtinenſe from certain meates, hath respect to conscience and religion, and therefore is of another kind, and can have no warrant thence.

11. Obiect. Dan. 10. 3. Daniel being in heathen for three weeks of daies, abstained from flesh, and his example is our warrant. Ans. It was the manner of the holy men in auncient times, when they fasted many daies together, of their owne accords freely to abstaine from sundry things; and thus Daniel abstained from flesh. But the popish abstinence from flesh is not free, but stands by commandment, & the omitting of it, is mortall sinne. Again, if they will follow Daniel in abstaining from flesh, why doe they not also abstaine from all pleasant bread and wine, yea from oymments; and why will they eate any thing in the time of their fast; whereas they cannot shew that Daniel ate any things at all till euenng? And Mol. 1. hath noted, that our ancestors abstained from wine and dainties, and that some of them ate nothing for two or three daies together.

Thirdly, they alludge the diet of Iohn Baptist, whose meate was Locusts and wild hony; & of Timothy, who abstained from wine. Ans. Their kind of diet, and that abstinence which they used, was onely for temperance sake; nor for conscience or to merit any thing thereby: let them proue the contrary if they can.

Thirdly and lastly, we dissent from them touching certaine ends of f.asting. For they make abstinence it selfe in a person fitly prepared, to be a part of the worshippe of God: but we take it to be a thing indifferent in it selfe, and therefore no part of Gods worshippe; and yet withall being well used, we esteeme it as a proppie or firmitie of the worshippe, in that we are made the fitter by it to worship God. And hereupon some of the more learned sort of them say: Not the worke of fasting done, but the deuotion of the worker, is to be reputed the seruice of God. Again, they say, that fasting in, or, with deuotion, is a worke of satisfaction to Gods iustice for the temporall punishment of our sins. Wherein we take it they doe blasphemously derogate from Christ our Saviour, who is the whole and perfect satisfaction for sinne both in respect of fault and punishment. Here they alludge the example of the Nineuites, and *Achab*s fasting, whereby they turned away the megements of God denounced against them by his Prophets. We answer, that Gods wrath was appeased towards the Nineuites, not by their fasting, but by faith laying hold on Gods mercie in Christ; and thereby staying his iudgement. Their fasting was onely a signe of their repentance: their repentance a fruit and signe of their faith, whereby they beleueed the preaching of Ioras. As for *Achab*s humiliatio, it is nothing to the purpose: for it was inly proffered: if they get any thing thereby, let them take it to themselves. To conclude, we for our parts doe not condemne this exercise of fasting, but the abuse of it: and it were to be wished, that fasting were more used of all Christians in all places: considering the Lord doth daily giue vs new and speciall occasions of publike and priuate fasting.

The XIII. point: of the state of perfection.

Our consent.

Our consent I will set downe in two conclusions. 1. All true beleeuers haue a state of true perfection in this life, Matth. 5. 48. Be ye perfect as your father in heauen is perfect. Gen. 6. 9. Noah was a just and perfect man in his time, and walked with God. Gen. 17. 1. Walk before mee and be perfect. And sundrie kings of Indab are said to walke vprightly before God with a perfect heart, as Dauid, Iosias, Heczekias, &c. and Paul accounteth himselfe with the rest of the faithfull to be perfect, saying, Let vs all that are perfect be thus minded. Phil. 3. 15. Now this perfection hath two parts: The first is, imputation of Christs perfect obedience, which is the ground and fountaine of all our perfection whatsoever. Hebrews 10. 14. By one offering, that is, by his obedience in his death and passion, hath he consecrated, or made perfect, for ever them that beleue. The second part of Christian perfection is sincerity, or, vprightnesse, standing in two things. The first is, to acknowledge our imperfection and vnworthinesse in respect of our selues: and hereupon, though Paul had said he was perfect, yet he addeth further, He did account of himselfe, not as though he had attained to perfection: but did forget the good things behinde, and endeauoured himselfe to that which was before. Here therefore it must bee remembered, that the perfection whereof I spake, may stand with sundrie wants and imperfections. It is said of Asa, that his heart was perfect with God all his daies: and yet he humbled downe the high places, and being diseased in his fecte, He put his trust in the physicians: and not in the Lord. Secondly, this vprightnesse stands in a constant purpose, endeauour, and care to keepe not some few, but all and euery commandment of the law of God, as Dauid saith, Psal. 119. 6. Then shall I not bee confounded, when I haue respect to all thy commandments. And this endeauour is a fruit of perfection, in that it proceeds from a man regenerate. For as all men through Adams fall, haue in them by nature the feedes of all sinne, none excepted, no not the sinne against the holy Ghost: so by grace of regeneration through Christ, all the faithfull haue in them likewise the feedes of all vertues needfull to saluation: and hereupon they both can and do endeauour to yeild perfect obedience vnto God, according to the whole law. And they may be tearmed perfect, as a child is called a perfect man: though it want perfection of age & stature & reason; yet

bath it perfection of parts: because it hath all and euery part and faculty both of body and soule that is required to a perfect man.

Conclus. 11. There be certaine workes of supererogation: that is, such workes as are not onely answerable to the law, and thereupon deserve life euerslasting; but goe beyond the law, and merit more then the law by it selfe can make any man to merit. But where may we finde these workes? not in the person of any meere man, or angel, nor in all men and angels: but onely in the person of Christ God & man; whose workes are not onely answerable to the perfection of the law, but goe farre beyond the same. For first, the obedience of his life considered alone by it selfe, was answerable euent to the rigour of the law: and therefore the suffering of his death & passion, were more then the law could require at his hand: considering it requirith no punishment of him that is a doer of all things contained therein. Secondly, the very rigour of the law requirith obedience onely of them that are meere men: but the obedience of Christ was the obedience of a person that was both God and man. Thirdly, the law requires personall obedience, that is, that euery man fulfill the lawe for himselfe, and it speaks of no more. Christ obeyed the law for himselfe, not because he did by his obedience merit his owne glorie: but because he was to be a perfect and pure high priest, not onely in nature, but also in life; and as hee was a creature, hee was to be conformable to the Lawe. Now the obedience which Christ performed, was not for himselfe alone, but it serueth also for all the elect: and considering it was the obedience of God (as Paul signified when hee said, Act. 20. 28. feede the Church of God, which he purchased with his blood) it was sufficient for many thousand worlds: and by reason the law requirith no obedience of him that is God: this obedience therefore may truly be tearmed a worke of supererogation. This one we acknowledge, and beside this we dare acknowledge none. And thus far we agree with the Church of Rome, in the doctrine of the estate of perfection; and further we dare not.

The difference.

The Papists hold (as the writings of the learned among them teach) that a man being in the state of grace, may not onely keepe all the commandments of the law, and thereby deserve his owne saluation; but also goe beyond the Lawe, and doe workes of supererogation which the law requirith not: as to performe the vow of single life, and the vow of regular obedience, &c. And by this meanes (they say) men deserve a greater degree of glorie then the Law can afford. Of perfection they make two kindes: one they call necessary perfection, which is the fulfilling of the Lawe in euery commandment, whereby eternall life is de-serued. The second, is profitable perfection, wherein men doe not onely such things as the law requires, but ouer and besides, they make certaine vowes, and performe certaine other duties which the law enioynes not: for the doing whereof, they shall be rewarded with a greater measure of glory, then the law designeth. This they make plaine by comparison: Two soldiers fight in the field vnder one and the same captain: the one onely keeps his standing, and thereby deserves his pay: the other in keeping of his place, doth also winne the enemies standard, or doe some other notable exploit: now this man besides his pay deserves a greater reward. And thus (say they) it is with all true Catholikes in the state of grace: they that keepe the law shall haue life eternall, but they that doe more then the law, as workes of supererogation, shall be crowned with greater glorie. This is their doctrine. But we on the contrary teach, that albeit we are to strue to a perfection as much as wee can, yet no man can fulfill the law of God in this life: much lesse doe workes of supererogations for the confirmation whereof, these reasons may be vied. 1. In the morall law two things are commanded. First, the loue of God and man. Secondly, the manner of this loue: now the manner of louing God, is to loue him with all our heart and strenght, Luke. 10. 27. Thou shalt loue the Lord thy God with all thy heart and with all thy soule, and with all thy strength, and with all thy thought, &c. As Bernard said, The measure of louing God, is to loue God without measure, and that is, to loue him with the greatest perfection of loue that can befall a creature. Hence it folloes, that in louing God no man can possibly doe more then the law requirith: and therefore the performance of all vowes whatsoever, and all like duties, comes short of the intention or scope of the law.

11. Reason. The compass of the law is large, and comprehendeth in it more then the mind of man can at the first conceiue: for euery commandment hath two parts, the negative, and the affirmative. In the negative is forbidden not onely the capital sinne named, as murder, theft, adultery, &c. but all sins of the same kinde, with all occasions and provocations thereto. And in the affirmative is commanded not onely the contrary vertues, as the loue of God, and the loue of our neighbours honour, life, chastity, goods, good name, but the vse of all helpes and meanes, whereby the said vertues may be preferred, furthered and practised. Thus hath our Saviour Christ himselfe expounded the law, Matth. 5. Vpon this plaine ground I conclude, that all duties pertaining to life and manners, come within the list of some morall commandment. And that the Papists making their workes of supererogation meanes to further the loue of God and man, must needs bring them vnder the compass of the law. Vnder which if they be, they cannot possibly goe beyond the same.

Reason III. Luke 17.10. When wee haue done all those things that are commanded vs, wee are vnprofitable seruants: we haue done that which was our duty to do. The Papists answer, that we are vnprofitable to God, but not to our selues; but this thirt of theirs is beside the very intent of the place. For a seruant in doing his duty is vnprofitable euen to himselfe, & doth not so much as deserve thanks at his matters hand, as Christ saith, verf. 9. Doth he thank that seruant? Secondly they answer, that we are vnprofitable seruants in doing things commanded; yet when we doe things prescribed in the way of counsell, we may profit our selues, and merit thereby. But this answer doth not stand with reason. For things commanded, in that they are commanded, are more excellent then things left to our liberty, because the will and commandment of God giues excellency and goodnesse vnto them. Again, counsels are thought to be harder then the commandments of the law; and if men cannot profit themselves by obedience of morall precepts, which are more easie, much lesse shall they be able to profit themselves by counsels which are of greater difficulty.

Reason IV. If it be not in the ability and power of man to keepe the law, then much lesse he is able to doe any work that is beyond and aboueall the law requireth: but no man is able to fulfill the law, and therefore no man is able to supererogate. Here the Papists deny the proposition: for (say they) though wee keepe not the law, yet wee may doe things of counsell aboue the law, and thereby merit. But by their leaue, they speake absurdly: for in common reason, if a man faile in the lesse, hee cannot but faile in the greater. Now (as I haue said) in popish doctrine, it is easier to obey the morall law then to preforme the counsels of perfection.

Objections of Papists.

1. 1st. 56.4. The Lord saith, Unto Eunuchs that keepe his Sabbath, and choose the thing that pleaseth him, will hee give a place and name better then the sonnes and daughters. Now (say they) an Eunuch is one that liues a single life, & keepe the vow of chastity, and hereupon he is said to deserve a greater measure of glory. Anf. If the words be wel considered, they prouoe nothing lesse: for honour is promised to Eunuchs, not because they make and performe the vow of single life, but because (as the text saith) they obserue the Lords Sabbath, and choose the thing that pleaseth God, and keepe his covenant, which is, to beleeue the word of God, & to obey the commandments of the morall law.

Obiect. II. Matth. 19.12. Christ saith, There are some which haue made themselves chaste for the kingdome of heauen: therefore the vow of single life is warrantable, and is a worke of speciall glory in heauen. Anf. The meaning of the text is, that some hauing received the gift of continency, doe willingly content themselves with single estate, that they may with more liberty without distraction further the good estate of the Church of God, or the kingdom of grace in themselves and others. This is that can be gathered out of this place; hence therefore cannot be gathered the merit of euertlasting glory by single life.

Obiect. III. Matth. 19.21. Christ saith to the young man, If thou wilt bee perfect, goe sell that thou hast, and giue to the poore, and thou shalt haue treasure in heauen. Therefore say they, a man by forsaking all may merit not only heauen, but also treasure there, that is, an exceeding measure of glory. Anf. This young man being in likelihood a strict Pharisee, thought to merit eternall life by the workes of the law, as his first question importeth, Good master, what shall I doe to be saved? and therefore Christ goeth about to discouer vnto him the secret corruption of his heart. And hereupon the words alledged are a commandment of trial not common to all, but speciall to him. The like commandment gaue the Lord to Abraham saying, Abraham, take thine only sonne Isaac, and offer him vpon the mountaine which I shall shew thee, Gen. 22.2.

IV. Obiect. 1. Cor. 7.8. Paul saith, It is good for thee single as he was: and verfe 38. he saith, It is better for virgins not to marrie: and this he speaks by permission, not by commandment, v. 25. Anf. Here the single life is not preferred simply, but only in respect of the present necessity, because the Church was then vnder persecution: & because such as liue a single life, are freed from the cares & distractions of the world.

V. Obiect. 1. Cor. 13.9. 15. 17, 18. Paul preached the Gospell freely, and that was more then he was bound to do; and for so doing he had a reward. Anf. It was generally in Pauls liberty to preach the Gospell freely or not to do it: but in Corinth vpon speciall circumstances, he was bound in conscience to preach it freely as hee did; by reason of the false teachers, who would otherwise haue taken occasion to disgrace his ministration, and haue hindered the glory of God. Now it was Pauls duty by all means to prevent the hindrances of the Gospell and the glorie of God: and if he had not so done, he had diminished his liberty. v. 18. Therefore he did no more in that case then the law it selfe required. For an action indifferent, or an action in our liberty, ceaseth to be in our liberty, and becomes morall in the case of offence. What is more free and indifferent then to eate flesh? yet in the case of offence Paul said, He would not eate flesh as long as the world stood, 1. Cor. 8.13.

The XIV. point: Of the worshipping of Saints, specially of Inuocation.

Our consents.

Conclus. I. The true Saints of God, as Prophets, Apostles, and Martyrs, and such like, are to bee worshipped and honoured, and that three waies. 1. By keeping a memorie of them in godly manner. Thus the Virgin Mary, as a Prophetesse foretelleth, that all nations shall call her blessed, Luke 1.48. When a certaine woman poured a boxe of oymnt on the head of Christ, he saith, This fact shall be spoken of in remembrance of her, wherefooe that Gospell should be preached throughout the world, Marke. 14.9.

This duty also was practised by David towards Moses, Aaron, Phineas, and the rest that are commended, Psalm 105. and 106. and by the author of the Epistle to the Hebrewes, vpon the Patriarkes and Prophets, and many others that excelled in faith, in the times of the old and new Testament. 11. They are to be honoured by giuing of thanks to God for them, and the benefits that God vouchsafed by them vnto his Church. Thus Paul saith, that when the Church heard of his conuersion, they glorified God for him, or in him. Gal. 1.23. And the like is to be done for the Saints departed. 111. They are to be honoured by an imitation of their faith, humility, meeknesse, repentance, the feare of God, and all good vertues wherein they excelled. For this cause the examples of godly men in the old and new Testament, are called a cloud of witnesses by allusion: for as the cloud did guide the Israelites through the wilderness to the land of Canaan, so the faithfull now are to be guided to the heavenly Canaan, by the examples of good men, that haue beleueed in God before vs, and haue walked the strait way to life euertlasting.

Conclus. II. Again, their true Reliques, that is, their vertues and good examples left to all posterity to be followed, we keepe and respect with due reuerence. Yea, if any man can shew vs the bodily relique of any true Saint, and prouoe it to be true, though wee will not worship it, yet will we not despise it, but keepe it as a monument, if it may conueniently be done without offence. And thus farre we consent with the Church of Rome. Further wee must not goe.

The dissent.

Our difference stands in the manner of worshipping of Saints. The Papists make two degrees of religious worship. The highest they call Latria, whereby God himselfe is worshipped, and that alone. The second lower then the former, is called Doulia, whereby the Saints & Angels that be in the speciall fauour of God, and glorified with euertlasting glorie in heauen, are worshipped. This worship they place in outward adoration, in bending of the knee, and bowing of the body to them being in heauen: in inuocation, whereby they call vpon them: in dedication of Churches and houses of religion vnto them: in Sabbaths and festiual daies, lastly, in pilgrimages vnto their reliques and images. We likewise distinguish adoration or worship: for it is either religious or ciuill. Religious worship, is that which is done to him that is Lord of all things, the feeder and trier of the heart, omnipotent, euer where present, able to heare and helpe them that call vpon him euer where, the author and first cause of euerie Gods thing: and that simply for himselfe, because he is absolute goodnesse it selfe. And this worship is due to God alone, being also commanded in the first and second commandment of the first table. Ciuill worship is the honour done to men set aboue vs by God himselfe, either in respect of their excellent gifts, or in respect of their offices and authority, whereby they gouerne others. The right end of this worship is, to testifie and declare, that we reuerence the gifts of God, and that power which he hath placed in those that be his instruments. And this kind of worship is commanded only in the second table, and in the first commandment thereof, Honour thy father and mother. Vpon this distinction we may iudge, what honour is due to euerie one. Honour is to be giuen to God, and to whom he commandeth. He commandeth that inferiours should honour or worship their betters. Therefore the vnreasonable creatures, and among the rest images, are not to be worshipped, either with ciuill or religious worship: being in deede farre baser then man himselfe is. Again, vnreasonable spirits the enemies of God, must not be worshipped: yea, to honour them at all, is to dishonour God. Good Angels, because they excell men both in nature and gifts, when they appeared were lawfully honoured: yet so, as when the least signification of honour was giuen, that was proper to God, they refused it. And because they appeare not now as in former times, not so much as ciuill adoration in any bodily gesture is to be done vnto them. Lastly, gouernours and Magistrates haue ciuill adoration as their due: and it cannot be omitted without offence. Thus Abraham worshipped the Hittites, Gen. 23. and Joseph his brethren, Gen. 50. To come to the very point, vpon the former distinction, we denie against the Papists, that any ciuill worship in the bending of the knee, or prostrating of the body, is to be giuen to the Saints, they being absent from vs: much lesse any religious worship: as namely, inuocation signified by any bodily adoration. For it is the honour of God himselfe, let them call it latria, or doulia, or by what name they will.

Our Reasons.

Reason I. All true inuocation and prayer made according to the will of God, must haue a double foundation: a commandment, and a promise. A commandment, to moue vs to pray: and a promise, to assure vs that we shall be heard. For all and euerie prayer must be made in faith: and without a commandment or promise, there is no faith. Vpon this vnfallible ground I conclude, that wee may not pray to Saints departed: for in the Scripture there is no word, either commanding vs to pray vnto them, or assuring vs that wee shall bee heard when we pray. Nay we are commanded, onely to call vpon God; Him onely shalt thou serue, Matth. 4. 10. And, How shall we call vpon him, in whom we haue not beleene? Rom. 10. 14. And wee haue no promise to bee heard, but for Christs sake. Therefore prayers made to Saints departed, are vnlawfull. Answer is made, that inuocation of Saints, is warranted by miracles & reuelations, which are answerable to commandements and promises. Ans. But miracles and reuelations had an end before this kinde of inuocation tooke any place in the Church of God: and that was about three hundred yeeres after Christ. Againe, to iudge of any point of doctrine by miracles, is deceitfull; vnlesse three things concur: the first is, doctrine of faith and pietie to be confirmed: the second is, praier vnto God, that something may be done for the ratifying of the said doctrine: the third, is the manifest edification of the Church by the two former. Where any of these three are wanting, miracles may be suspected: because otherwhiles false prophets haue their miracles, to try men, whether they will cleaue vnto God, or no, Deut. 13. 1. 3. Againe, miracles are not done, or to be done for them that beleue, but for infidels that beleue not: as Paul saith, 1. Cor. 14. 22. Tongues are a signe, not to them that beleue, but to vnbelleuers. And to this agree Chrysostom, Ambrose, and Isidore, who saith, Behold, a signe is not necessary to beleuers, which haue already beleue, but to infidels, that they may be conuerted. Lastly, our faith is to be confirmed, not by reuelation and apparitions of dead men, but by the writings of the Apostles and Prophets, Luke 16. 29.

Reason. II. To pray vnto Saints departed, to bow the knee vnto them, while they are in heauen, is to ascribe that vnto them, which is proper to God himselfe: namely, to know the heart, with the inward desires and motions thereof: and to know the speeches and behauiours of all men, in all places vpon earth at all times. The Papists answer, that Saints in heauen, see and heare all things vpon earth, not by themselves (for that were to make them Gods) but in God, and in the glasse of the Trinitie, in which they see mens prayers reuealed vnto them. I answer first, that the Saints are still made more then creatures; because they are said to know the thoughts, and all the doings of all men at all times, which no created power can well comprehend at once. Secondly, I answer, that this glasse in which all things are said to be seene, is but a forgerie of mans braine: and I proue it thus. The Angels themselves, who see further into God, then man can doe, neuer knew all things in God: which I confirme on this manner. In the temple vnder the law, vpon the Arke were placed two Cherubins, signifying the good

Angels of God: and they looked downward vpon the mercy-seat covering the arke, which was a figure of Christ: & their looking downward, figured their desire to see into the myserie of Christs incarnation, and our redemption by him: as Peter alluding, no doubt, to this type in the old Testament saith, 1. Peter 1. 12. Which things the Angels desire to behold: and Paul saith, *Eph. 3. 10. The manifold wisdom of God is reuealed by the Church, that is, to the Angels: but how & by what means? by the Church; and that two waies: first, by the Church, as by an example, in which the Angels saw the endlesse wisdom and mercy of God, in calling the Gentiles. Secondly, by the Church, as it was founded and honoured by the preaching of the Apostles. For it seemes that the Apostolical ministry in the new Testament, reuealed things touching Christ, which the Angels neuer knew, before that time: thus Chrysostome vpon occasion of this text of Paul saith, That the Angels learned something by the preaching of Iohn Baptist. Againe, Christ saith, that they know not the houre of the last iudgement, Matth. 24. 36. much lesse doe the Saints know all things in God. And hence it is that they are said to be vnder the altar, where they cry, How long Lord holy and true: wilt thou not avenge our blood? as being ignorant of the day of their full deliuerance. And the Iewes in affliction confesse Abraham was ignorant of them, and their estate, *Isa. 63. 16.

Reason III. Matth. 4. 10. Christ refused so much as to bow the knee to Satan, vpon this ground, because it was written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him onely shalt thou serue. Hence it was, that Peter would not suffer Cornelius so much as to kneele vnto him, though Cornelius intended not to honour him as God. Therefore neither Saint nor Angel is to be honoured so much as with the bowing of the knee: if it carry but the least signification of diuine or religious honour.

Reason IV. The iudgement of the ancient Church. August. We honour the Saints with charitie, and not by seruitude: neither doe wee erect Churches to them. And, Let it not be religion for vs to worship dead men. And, They are to be honoured for imitation, and not to be adored for religion. Epiph. Neither Tecla, nor any Saint is to be adored, for that ancient error may not ouer-vale vs, that wee should leaue the living God, and adore things made by him. Againe, Let Marie bee in honour: let the Father, Sonne and the holy Ghost be adored: let none adore Marie, I meane neither woman nor man. Againe, Marie is beautifull, holy, and honoured, yet not to adoration. When Julian objected to the Christians, that they worshipped their Martyrs as God, Cyrill grants the memory and honour of them, but denies their adoration: and of inuocation, hee makes no mention at all. Ambro. on Rom. 1. Is any fo mad that he will giue to the Earle the honour of the King? — Yes

these men doe not thinke themselves guilty, who giue the honour of Gods name to a creature, and leaue the Lord, adore their fellow seruants, as though there were any thing more referred for God.

Objections of Papists.

I. Gen. 48. 16. Let the Angels that kept me, blesse thy children. Here (say they) is a prayer made to Angels. But by the Angel is meant Christ, who is called the Angel of the covenant, Malac. 3. 1. and the Angel that guided Israel in the wilderness, 1. Cor. 10. 9. compared with Exod. 23. 20.

Obiect. II. Exod. 32. 13. Moses praiereth that God would respect his people, for Abrahams sake, and for Isaac & Israel his seruants, which were not then liuing. Ans. Moses prayeth God to be mercifull to the people, not for the intercession of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, but for his covenants sake which he had made with them; Psal. 132. 10. 11. Againe, by popish doctrine, the Fathers departed knew not the estate of men vpon earth, neither did they pray for them; because then they were not in heauen, but in Limbo Patrum.

III. Obiect. One liuing man makes intercession to God for another: therefore much more doe the Saints in glory, that are filled with loue, pray to God for vs; and we pray to them no otherwise then wee desire liuing men to pray for vs. Ans. The reason is naught: for wee haue a commandement, one liuing man to pray for another, and to desire others to pray for vs: but there is no warrant in the word of God, for vs to desire the prayers of men departed. Secondly, there is a great difference betweene these two: To request our friend either by word of mouth, or by letter to pray for vs: & by inuocation to request them that are absent from vs and departed this life to pray for vs: for this is indeed a worship, in which is giuen vnto them a power to heare and helpe all that call vpon them, at what place or time fouer, yea though they be not present in the place in which they are worshipped: and consequently the seeing of the heart, presence in all places, and infinite power to helpe all that pray vnto them, which things agree to no creature but GOD alone. Thirdly, when one liuing man requests another to pray for him, he onely makes him his companion and fellow member in his prayer made in the name of our mediator Christ; but when men inuocate Saints in heauen, they being then absent, they make them more then fellow members, euen mediators betweene Christ and them.

The XV. point. Of intercession of Saints.

Our consent.

Our consent with them I will set downe in two conclusions.

Conclus. I. The Saints departed pray vnto God, by giuing of thanks vnto him for their owne redemption, and for the redemption of the whole Church of God vpon earth, Renel. 5. 8. The foure beasts, and the foure and twentie Elders fell downe before the Lambe, —, 9. and they sung a new song, Thou art worthy to take the booke, and to open the seales thereof, because thou wast killed, and hast redeemed vs to God — 13. And all the creatures which are in heauen —, heard I say, ing, Praise and honour and glory and power be vnto him that sitteth vpon the throne, and to the Lambe for euermore.

II. Conclus. The Saints departed pray generally for the estate of the whole Church. *Ren. 6. 9. And I saw vnder the altar, the soules of them that were killed for the word of God —, and they cried, 10. How long Lord holy and true: dost thou not iudge and avenge our blood, on them that dwell on the earth? wherby we see they desire a final deliuerance of the Church, and a destruction of the enemies thereof: that they themselves, withall the people of God, might be aduanced to fullnesse of glory in body and soule: yea, the dumbe creatures, Rom. 8. 23. are said to groane & sigh, waiting for the adoption, euen the redemption of our bodies: much more then do the Saints in heauen desire the same. And thus far we consent.*

The dissent or difference.

They hold and teach, that the Saints in heauen, as the Virgin Mary, Peter, Paul, &c. do make intercession to God for particular men, according to their seuerall wants: and that hauing received particular mens praers, they present them vnto God. But this doctrine we flatly renounce vpon these grounds & reasons.

I. Gal. 3. 16. *The church saith to God, Doubtless thou art our father, though Abraham be ignorant of vs, and Israel know vs not. Now if Abraham knew not his posterity, neither Mary, nor Peter, nor any other of the Saints departed know vs, and our estate: and consequently they cannot make any particular intercession for vs. If they say that Abraham & Jacob were in Limbo, which they will haue to be a part of hell; what ioy could Lazarus haue in Abrahams bosome? Luke 16. 25. and with what comfort could Jacob lay on his death bed: *O Lord, I haue waited for thy salvation? Gen. 49. 18.

II. Reason. 2. King. 22. 20. Huldah the Prophetesse telleth Iosias, He must be gathered to his fathers, and put in his graue in peace, that his eyes may not see all the euill which God would bring on that place. Therefore the Saints departed see not the state of the Church on earth, much lesse do they know the thoughts & praers of men. This conclusion Augustine confirmeth at large.

III. Reason. No creature, Saint, or Angel, can bee a Mediatour for vs to God, suauing Christ alone, who is indeede the onely Advocate of his Church. For in a true and sufficient Mediatour there must be three properties. First of all, the word of God must reueale and pro-pound him vnto the Church, that we may in confidence be assured that praying to him, and to God in his name, we shall bee heard. Now there is no Scripture that mentioneth either Saints or Angels as Mediators in our behalfe: saue Christ alone. Secondly, a mediatur must be perfectly iust, so as no sinne bee found in him at all. 1. Job. 2.1. If any man sinne, we haue an advocate with the Father, Iesus Christ the righteous. Now the Saints in heauen, howsoever they be fully sanctified by Christ, yet in themselves they were conceived and borne in sin: and therefore must needs eternally stand before God by the mediation and merit of another. Thirdly, a mediatur must be a propitiator, that is, bring something to God, that may appease and satisfie the wrath and iustice of God for our finnes: therefore Iohn addeth, and he is a propitiator for our finnes. But neither Saint nor Angel can satisfie for the least of our finnes: Christ onely is the propitiator for them all. The virgin Mary, and the rest of the Saints being sinners, could not satisfie so much as for themselves.

IV. Reason. The iudgement of the Church. Augustine, All Christian men commended each other in their prayers to God. And, who prais for all, and for whom none praises, he is that one and true mediator. And, This faith by Saviour, thou hast no whether to goe but to me: thou hast no way to goe but by me. Chrysostome, Thou hast no need of Patrons to God, or much discourse that thou shouldst soothe others: but though thou be alone and want a Patron, and by thy selfe pray vnto God, thou shalt obtaine thy desire. And on the saying of Iohn, If any sinne, &c. Thy prayers haue no effect vntill they be such as the Lord commends vnto thy Father. And Augustine on the same place hath these words, He being such a man said not, ye haue an Advocate, but if any sinne we haue: hee said not, ye haue, neither said he, ye haue me.

Objections of Papists.

I. Reuel. 5.8.9. The foure and twentie Elders fall downe before the Lambe, hauing every one harpes and golden vials full of odours, which are the prayers of the Saints. Hence the Papists gather, that the Saints in heauen receiue the prayers of men on earth, and offer them vnto the father. Ans. There by prayers of the Saints, are meant their owne prayers, in which they sing praises to God and to the Lambe, as the verses following plainly declare. And these prayers are also presented vnto God, onely from the hand of the Angell, which is Christ himselfe.

II. Obiect. Luk. 16.17. Diues in hell prayeth for his brethren vpon earth, much more doe the Saints in heauen pray for vs. Ans. Out of a parable nothing can be gathered, but that which is agreeable to the intent and scope thereof: for by the same reason it may as well be gathered, that the soule of Diues being in hell, had a tongue. Again, if it were true which they gather, we may gather also that the wicked in hell haue compassion and loue to their brethren on earth, and a zeale to Gods glorie: all which are false.

III. Obiect. The Angels in heauen know euery mans estate: they know when any sinnet repenteth, and reioyce therat: and pray for particular men: therefore the Saints in heauen doe the like, for they are equal to the good Angels, Luk. 20.36. Ans. The place in Luke is to be vnderstood of the estate of holy men at the day of the last iudgement: as appears, Mat. 22.30. where it is said, that the seruants of God in the resurrection are as the Angels in heauen. Secondly, they are like the Angels, not in office and ministerie, by which they are ministring spirits for the good of men: but they are like them in glorie.

Secondly, wee dissent from the Papists, because they are not content to say that the Saints departed pray for vs in particular: but they adde further, that they make intercession for vs by their merits in heauen. New Iesuits denie this: but let them heare Lambard, I thinke (saith he, speaking of one that is but of meane goodnesse) that hee, as it were passing by the fire, shall be saved by the merits and intercessions of the heavenly Church: which doe alway make intercession for the faithfull by request and merits, till Christ shall bee complete in his members. And the Roman Catech. isme faith as much: Saints are so much the more to be worshipped, and called upon, because they make prayer daily for the saluation of men: and God for their merit and fauour bestowes many benefits vpon vs. Wee denie not, that men vpon earth haue helpe and benefit by the faith and pietie which the Saiats departed shewed, when they were in this life. For God shewes mercie on them that keepe his commandments, to a thousand generations. And Augustine saith, it was good for the Iewes, that they were loued of Moser, whom God loued. But wee vtterly denie, that wee are helped by merits of Saints, either liuing or departed. For Saints in glorie haue receiued the full reward of all their merits, if they could merit: and therefore there is nothing further that they can merit.

The 16. point: of Implicite or infolded faith.

Our consent.

Wee hold that there is a kind of implicite, or vnexpressed faith: yea, that the faith of euery man in some part of his life, as in the time of his conuersion, & in the time of some grievous temptatio or distresse, is implicite or infolded. The Samaritans are said to beleene, Ioh. 4.41. because they tooke Christ for the Mesias, and thereupon were content to learne and obey the glad tidings of saluation. And in the same place, verse 53. the Ruler with his family is said to beleene, who did no more but generally acknowledge that Christ was the Mesias, and yielded himselfe to beleene and obey his holy doctrine: being moued thereto by a miracle wrought vpon his young sonne. And Rahab. Hebr. 11.13. is said to beleene, yea, shee is commended for faith euen at the time when shee receiued the spies. Now in the word of God wee cannot finde, that shee had any more but a confused, general, or infolded faith, whereby shee beleened that the God of the Hebrewes was the true God, & his word to be obeyed. And this faith (as it seemes) was wrought in her by the report and relation of the miracles done in the land of Egypt, whereby shee was moued to ioyne her selfe vnto the people of God, and to beleene as they did. By these examples then it is manifest, that in the very seruants of God, there is and may bee for a time an implicite faith. For the better vnderstanding of this point, it is to bee considered that faith may bee infolded two waies: first, in respect of knowledge of things to be beleued: secondly, in respect of the apprehension of the object of faith, namely, Christ and his benefits.

Now faith is infolded in respect of knowledge, when as sundrie things that are necessarie to saluation are not as yet distinctly knowne. Though Christ commended the faith of his disciples, for such a faith, against which the gates of hell should neuer preuaile; yet was it vnexpressed or wrapped vp in regard of sundry points of religion: for first of all, Peter that made confession of Christ in the name of the rest, was at that time ignorant of the particular meanes whereby his redemption should be wrought. For after this, hee went about to disswade his master from the suffering of death at Ierusalem, whereupon Christ sharply rebuked him, saying, Mat. 16.23. Come behind mee Satana, thou art an offence vnto mee. Again, they were all ignorant of Christs resurrection, till certaine women, who first saw him after he was risen againe, had told them: and they by experience in the person of Christ had learned the truth. Thirdly, they were ignorant of the ascension: for they dreamed of an earthly kingdom at the very time when he was about to ascend: saying, With thou at this time restore the kingdom of Israel. Act. 1.6. And after Christs ascension, Peter knew nothing of the breaking downe of the partition wall betweene the Iewes and Gentiles, till God had better schooled him in a vision, Act. 10.14. And no doubt, we haue ordinary examples of this implicite faith in sundry persons among vs. For some there bee, which are dull and hard, both for vnderstanding and memorie, and thereupon make no such proceedings in knowledge, as many others doe: and yet for good affection and cohsience in their doings, so far as they know, they come not short of any; hauing withall a continuall care to increase in knowledge, and to walke in obedience according to that which they know. And such persons, though they bee ignorant in many things, yet haue they a measure of true faith: and that which is wanting in knowledge, is supplied in affection; and in some respects they are preferred before many that haue the glib tongue, and the braine swimming with knowledge. To this purpose Melancthon said well, we must acknowledge the great mercy of God, who putteth a difference betweene finnes of ignorance, and of such as are done wittingly: and forgives manifold ignorances to them, that know the foundation and be teachable: as may be seene by the Apostles in whom there was much want of vnderstanding before the resurrection of Christ. But as hath bene said, hee requires that wee be teachable, and he will not haue vs to be hardened in our sluggishness and dulnesse. As it is said, Psal. 1. He meditatech in his law day and night.

The second kinde of implicite faith is in regard of Apprehension; when as a man cannot say distinctly and certainly, I beleene the pardon of my finnes: but I doe vnfeignedly desire to beleene the pardon of them all, and I desire to repent. This case befalls many of Gods children, when they are touched in conscience for their finnes. But where men are displeased with themselves for their offences, and doe withall constantly from the heart desire to beleene, and to bee reconciled to God, there is faith, and many other graces of God infolded: as in the little and tender budde, is infolded the leafe, the blossome, and the fruite. For though a desire to repent and to beleene be not faith and repentance in nature, yet in Gods acceptation it is, God accepting the will for the deede. Isa. 42.3. Christ will not quench the smoking flaxe, which as yet by reason of weaknesse giues neither light nor heate. Christ saith, Mat. 5.6. Blessed are they that hunger and thirst after righteousnesse, for they shall be satisfied: where by persons hungering and thirsting are meant all such, as teele with griefe their owne want of righteousness, and withall desire to be iustified and sanctified. Rom. 8.26. God heares and regards the verie groanes and sighes of his seruants: yea, though they bee vnspokeable by reason they are oftentimes little, weak, and confused: yet God hath respect vnto them, because they are the worke of his owne spirit. Thus then wee see, that in a touched heart desiring to beleene, there is an infolded faith. And this is the faith which many of the true seruants of God haue: and our saluation stands not so much in our apprehending of Christ, as in Christs comprehending of vs: and therefore Paul saith, Phil. 2.12. befeoloweth, namely, after perfection if that hee might comprehend that, for whose sake hee is comprehended of Christ. Now it any shall say, that without a liuely faith in Christ none can be saved: I answer, that God accepts the desire to beleene for liuely faith, in the time of temptatio, & in the time of our first conversion, as I have said. Put case, a man that neuer yet repented fals into some gricuous sicknesse, and then begins to be touched in conscience for his finnes, and to be truly humbled: hereupon he is exhorted to beleue his owne reconciliation with God in Christ, and the pardon of his owne finnes. And as he is exhorted, so hee endeavoureth according to the measure of grace received, to beleue, yet after much triuing he cannot resolue himselfe, that hee doth distinctly and certainly beleue the pardon of his owne finnes: onely this he can say, that he doth heartily desire to beleue: this hee wisheth aboue all things in the world; and hee esteemes all things as dung for Christ: & thus hee dies. I demand now, what shall we say of him? surely we may say nothing, but that hee died the child of God, and is vndoubtedly faued. For howeouer it were an happie thing if men could come to that fulnesse of faith which was in Abraham, and many seruants of God: yet certain it is, that God in sundry cases accepts of this desire to beleue, for true faith indeede. And looke as it is in nature, so it is in graces in nature some die when they are children, some in old age, and some in full strength, and yet all die men: so againe, some die babes in Christ, some of more perfect faith: & yet the weakest haue the feedes of grace, is the child of God; and faith in his infancy is faith. All this while, it must be remembered, I say not, there is a true faith without apprehension, but without a distinct apprehension for some space of time: for this very desire, by faith to apprehend Christ and his merits, is a kinde of apprehension. And thus we see the kinds of implicite or infolded faith.

This doctrine is to be learned for two causes: first of all, it serueth to rectifie the consciences of weak ones, that they be not deceived touching their estate. For if we thinke that no faith can faue, but a full perswasion, such as the faith of Abraham was, many truly bearing the name of Christ must bee put out of the rolle of the children of God. Wee are therefore to know, that there be differences and degrees of true faith, and the least of them all is this infolded faith. This in effect is the doctrine of Master Caluin: that when wee begin by faith to know somewhat, and haue a desire to learne more, this may be termed an vnexpressed faith. Secondly, this point of doctrine serueth to rectifie and in part to expound sundry Carechismes, in that they seeme to propound faith vnto men as though a reach, as few can attain vnto it: defining it to be a certaine and full perswasion of Gods loue and fauour in Christ; whereas, though euerie faith be for his nature a certaine perswasion, yet onely the strong faith is the full perswasion. Therefore faith is not onely in generall termes to be defined, but also the degrees and measures thereof are to be expounded, that weak ones to their comfort may bee truly informed of their estate. And though we teach there is a kinde of implicite faith, which is the beginning of true and liuely faith; yet none must hereupon take an occasion to content themselves therewith, but labour to increase and goe one from faith to faith: and so indeede will euerie one doe that hath any beginnings of true faith, be they reuer for little. And hee which thinke hee hath a desire to beleue, and contents himselfe therewith; hath indeede no true desire to beleue.

The difference.

The pillars of the Romane Church laie downe this ground: that faith in his owne nature, is not a knowledge of things to be beleueed, but a reuerent assent vnto them, whether they be knowne or vnknowne. Hereupon they build: that if a man know some necessary points of religion, as the doctrine of the godhead, of the Trinity, of Christs incarnation, and of our redemption, &c. it is needlesse to know the rest by a particular or distinct knowledge, & it sufficeth to giue his consent to the Church, and to beleue as the Pastours beleue. Behold a ruinous building vpon a rotten foundation: for faith contains a knowledge of things to be beleueed, and knowledge is of the nature of faith: and nothing is beleueed that is not knowne, Ista 53.1. The knowledge of my righteous seruants, shall iustifie many. And Iohn 17.3. This is eternall life to know thee the eternall God, and whom thou hast sent Iesus Christ. In these places, by knowledge is meant faith grounded vpon knowledge, whereby we know, and are assured that Christ and his benefites belong vnto vs. Secondly, this kinde of assent is the mother of ignorance. For when men shall be taught, that for sundry points of religion they may beleue as the Church beleue: so that the study of the Scriptures is not to be required of them: yea, that to their good they may be barred the reading of them, so be it they know some principal things contained in the articles of faith: that common beleueers are not bound expressly to beleue all the articles of the Apostles Creede: so that it sufficeth them to beleue the articles by an implicite faith, by beleueing as the Church beleueeth: few or none will haue care to profit in knowledge. And yet Gods commandment is that wee should grow in knowledge, and that his word should dwell plentifully in vs, Coloss. 3.16. Again, the Papists say, that the doctrine of the ignorant, is often feruice better accepted then that which is done vpon knowledge. Such (say they) as pray in latine, pray with as great consolation of spirit, with as little tediousnesse, with as great deuotion and affection, and oftentimes more then the other, and alwayes more then any schismaticke or hereticke in his owne language. To conclude, they teach that some articles of faith are beleueed generally of the whole Church onely by a simple or implicite faith, which afterward by the authority of a generall Council are propounded to bee beleueed of the Church by expresse faith. Rossius against Luther giues an example of this, when hee confesseth that Purgatorie was little knowne at the first, but was made knowne partly by Scripture, and partly by reuelation in proceesse of time. This implicite faith touching articles of religion we reiect: holding that all things concerning faith and manners necessarie to saluation, are plainly expressed in Scripture: and accordingly to be beleueed.

The 17. point: Of Purgatorie.

Our consent.

We hold a Christian Purgatory, according as the word of God hath set downe the same vnto vs. And first of all, by this Purgatory we vnderstand the afflictions of Gods children here on earth. Lam. 1. the people afflicted say, Thou hast sent afire into our bones, Psal. 66. 12. We haue gone through water and fire. Mal. 3.3. The children of Leui must bee purged in a purging fire of affliction. 1. Pet. 1.7. Afflictions are called the fiery trial, whereby men are clenfed from their corruption, as gold from the drosse by the fire. Secondly, the blood of Christ is a Purgatory of our finnes. 1. Iohn 1.7. Christs blood purgeth vs from all our finnes. Heb. 9.14. It purgeth our consciences from dead workes. And Christ baptizeth with the holy Ghost & with fire: because our inward washing is by the blood of Christ: and the holy Ghost is as fire to consume and abolish the inward corruption of nature. To this effect faith Origen, Wib. out doubt, we shall see the unquenchable fire, unless wee shall now succurre the Lord to send downe from heauen a purgatorie fire vnto vs, whereby worldly desires may bee utterly consumed in our mindes. August. Suppose the mercy of God is thy purgatorie.

The difference or dissent.

We differ from the Papists touching purgatorie in two things. And first of all for the place. They hold it to be a part of hell, into which an entrance is made onely after this life: wee for our parts deny it, as hauing no warrant in the word of God: which mentioneth onely two places for men after this life, heauen and hell, with the two-fold condition thereof, ioy and torment, Luk. 16.25. 16. Ioh. 3.36. Apoc. 20.14.15. and at 7.8. Matthew 8.11. Nay, we finde the contrary, Reuel. 14.13. that they die in the Lord are said to rest from their labours: which cannot bee true if any of them goe to purgatory. And to cut off all casualties is further said, their workes, that is, the reward of their workes, follow them, euen at the heeles, as an Acoluth or seruant doth his master. Augustine faith well, After this life there remains no compunction or satisfaction. And,

Here is all remission of finnes: here bee temptations that moue vs to finne. Lastly, here is the end from which we desire to be deliuered: but there is none of all these. And, We are not here without finnes, but we shall goe hence without finne. Cyrill faith, They which are once dead, can add nothing to the things which they haue done, but shall remaine as they were left, and waite for the time of the last iudgement. Chrysostome, After the end of this life there be no occasions of meritis.

Secondly, we differ from them touching the meanes of Purgation. They say, that men are purged by suffering paine in Purgatory, whereby they satisfie for their venial finnes, and for the temporall punishment of their mortall finnes. We teach the contrary, holding that nothing can free vs from the least punishment of the smallest sin, but the sufferings of Christ, and purge vs from the least taint of corruption, sauing the blood of Christ. Indeece they say, that our sufferings in themselves considered, doe not purge and satisfie, but as they are made meritorious by the sufferings of Christ: but this I oppose one text of Scripture, Heb. 1.3. where it is said, that Christ hath purged our finnes by himselfe: where the last clause cuts the throat of all humane satisfactions and meritis: and it giueth vs to vnderstand, that whatsoever thing purgeth vs from our finnes, is not to be found in vs, but in Christ alone: otherwise it should haue bin said, that Christ purgeth the finnes of men by themselves, as well as by himselfe: and he should merit by his death, that we should become our owne sauours in part.

To this place I may well referre prayer for the dead: of which I will propound two conclusions affirmatiue, and one negatiue.

I. Concl. We hold that Christian charity is to extend it selfe to the very dead: and it must shew it selfe in their honest burial, in the preservation of their good names, in the help and reliefe of their posterity, as time and occasion shall be offered, Ruth 1.8. Iob. 19.40.

II. Concl. We pray further in generall manner for the faithfull departed, that God would hasten their ioyfull resurrection, and the faithfull accomplishment of their happinesse, both for the body and the soule: and thus much wee aske in saying, Thy kingdom come, that is, not onely the kingdom of grace, but also the kingdom of glorie in heauen. Thus farre we come: but nearer the gates of Babylon wee dare not approach.

III. Concl. To pray for particular men departed, and to pray for their deliuerance out of Purgatorie, we thinke it vnlawfull: because wee haue neither promise, nor commandment so to doe.

The 18. point: Of the Supremacy in causes Ecclesiasticall.

Our consent.

Touching the point of Supremacie Eccle.

statuall, I will set downe how neere we may come to the Romane church, in 2. conclusions.

Conclus. I. For the founding of the Primitive Church, the ministerie of the word was distinguished by degrees not onely of order, but also of power, and Peter was called to the highest degree. Eph. 4. 11. Christ ascended up on high, and gave gifts vnto men for the good of his Church: as some to be Apostles, some Prophets, some Euangelists, some Pastours & Doctors. Now howsoeuer one Apostle bee not above another, or one Euangelist above another, or one Pastour above another: yet an Apostle was above an Euangelist: and an Euangelist above all Pastours and teachers. And Peter was by calling an Apostle, and therefore above all Euangelists and Pastours, hauing the highest roome in the ministry of the new testament both for order and authority.

Conclus. II. Among the twelue Apostles Peter had a three-fold priuiledge or prerogative. I. The prerogative of authority. II. Of primacie. III. Of principality. For the first, by the priuiledge of authority, I meane a preheminance in regard of estimation, whereby hee was had in reuerence above the rest of the twelue Apostles: for Cephas with James and Iohn are called Pillars, and seemed to bee great, Gal. 2. 6. 9. Again, he had the preheminance of primacie, because he was the first named, as the fore-man of the quett. Matth. 10. 2. The names of the twelue Apostles are these, the first is Simon, called Peter, &c. Thirdly, hee had the preheminance of principallitie among the twelue, because in regard of the measure of grace, he excelled the rest: for when Christ asked his disciples whom they said hee was, Peter as being of greatest ability and zeale, answered for them all, Matth. 16. 16. I vse this clause among the twelue, because Paul excelled Peter euery way, in learning, zeale, vnderstanding, as farre as Peter excelled the rest. And thus neere we come to popish supremacy.

The difference.

The Church of Rome giues to Peter a supremacy vnder Christ about all causes and persons: that is, full power to gouerne and order the Catholike Church vpon the whole earth, both for doctrine and regiment. This supremacy stands (as they teach) in a power or iudgement, to determine of the true sense of all places of Scripture: to determine all causes of faith; to assemble generall Councils: to ratifie the decrees of the Councils: to excommunicate any man vpon earth, that liues within the Church, euen princes and nations; properly to absolve and forgive sinnes: to decide causes brought to him by appeal from all the parts of the earth: lastly, to make lawes that shall binde the conscience. This fullness of power with one consent is ascribed to Peter, and the Bishops of Rome that follow him in a supposed succession. Now wee hold on the contrary, that neither Peter, nor any Bishop of Rome hath any supremacy over the Catholike Church: but that all supremacy vnder Christ is pertaining to kings and princes within their dominions. And that this our doctrine is good, and theirs false and forged, I will make it manifest by sundry reasons.

I. Christ must bee considered of vs as a king two waies. First as he is God: and so is he an absolute king ouer all things in heauen and earth, with the Father and the holy Ghost, by the right of creation. Secondly, he is a king as he is a redeemer of mankind: and by the right of redemption he is a foueraigne king ouer the whole Church, and that in speciall manner. Now as Christ is God with the Father and the holy Ghost, he hath his deputies on earth to gouerne the worlds, as namely kings and princes, who are therefore in Scripture called Gods. But as Christ is Mediator, and consequently a King ouer his redeemed ones, he hath neither fellow, nor deputy. No fellow for then he should be an imperfect mediator. No deputy: for no creature is capable of this office, to do in the roome and stead of Christ, that which hee himselfe doth: because euery worke of the Mediator is a compound worke, arising of the effects of two natures concurring in one and the same action, namely, the Godhead and the manhood: and therefore to the effecting of the said worke, there is required an infinite power, which farre exceeds the strength of any created nature. Again, Hebr. 7. 24. Christ is said to haue a priesthood which cannot passe from his person to any other: whence it followes, that neither his kingly, nor his prophetically office can passe from him to any creature, either in whole or in part: because the three offices of mediation in this regard be equally. Nay, it is a needlesse thing for Christ to haue a deputy, to put in execution any part of his Mediatorship: considering a deputy onely serueth to supply the absence of the principal, whereas Christ is alwaies present with his Church by his Word and Spirit: for where two or three bee gathered together in his name, he is in the midst among them. It may bee said, that the Ministers in the work of the ministry are deputies of Christ. I answer, that they are nodeluties, but a true instruments. For in the preaching of the Word there be two actions: the first is the vttering or propounding of it: the care the second is the inward operation of the holy Ghost in the hearts: which indeede is the principal, and belongs to Christ alone: the action of speaking in the minister being onely instrumentall. Thus likewise the Church of God in cutting off any member by excommunication, is no more but an instrument performing a ministerie in the name of Christ, and that is, to testifie and pronounce whom Christ himselfe hath cut off from the kingdome of Heauen: whom hee also will haue for this cause, to bee severed from the

the company of his owne people till he repent. And so it is in all ecclesiastical actions. Christ hath no deputy, but onely instruments: the whole entire action being personall in respect of Christ. This one conclusion overthrowes not onely the Popes supremacy, but also many other points of poperie.

Reason II. All the Apostles in regard of power and authority were equal: for the commission Apostolically both for right and execution was giuen equally to them all, as the very words import, Mat. 28. 19. Go teach all nations, baptizing them, &c. And the promise, I will giue to thee the keyes of the kingdome of heauen, is not priuate to Peter, but is made in his person to the rest, according as his confession was in the name of the rest. Thus saith Theophylact, Mat. 16. They haue the power of committing and binding: that rectifies the gift of a Bishoppe as Peter. And Ambrose saith in Psal. 38. What is said to Peter is said to the Apostles. Therefore Peter had no supremacy ouer the rest of the Apostles in respect of right to the commission: which they say belongeth to him onely, and the execution thereof to the rest. But let all be graunted, that Peter was in commission about the rest for the time of his life: yet hence may not any superiouritie bee gathered for the Bishops of Rome; because the authoritie of the Apostles was personall, and consequently ceased with them, without being conieied to any other: because the Lord did not vouchsafe the like honour to any after them. For first of all, it was the priuiledge of the Apostles to be called immediately, and to see the Lord Iesus. Secondly, they had power to giue the gift of the holy Ghost by the imposition of hands. Thirdly, they had such a measure of the assistance of the spirit, that in their publike sermons, and in writing of the word, they could not erre: and these things were all denied to those that followed after them. And that their authoritie ceased in their persons, it stands with reason also, because it was giuen in so ample a manner for the founding of the Church of the new Testament: which being once founded, it was needfull onely, that there should be pastours and teachers for the building of it vnto the end of the world.

Reason III. When the sonnes of Zebedee sued vnto Christ for the greatest roomes of honour in his kingdome (deeming hee should be an earthly king) Christ answers them again, Mat. 20. 25. 26. Ye know that the Lords of the Gentiles haue dominion & they that are great, exercise authority over them: but it shall not be so with you. Bernard applies these very words to Pope Eugenius on this manner, It is plaine, saith he, that here dominion is forbidden the Apostles. Go to them: dare if you will, to take vpon you ruling and Apostleship, or in your Apostleship rule or dominion: if you will haue both alike, you shall lose both. Otherwise you must not thinke your selfe exempted from the number of them, of whom the Lord commandeth thus: they haue reigned, but not of me: they haue bene, but I haue not knowne them.

Reason IV. Eph. 4. 11. Mention is made of gifts which Christ gaue to his Church after his ascension, whereby some were Apostles, some Prophets, some Euangelists, some Pastours and teachers. Now if there had bene an office in which men as deputies of Christ should haue gouerned the whole Church to the end of the world, the calling might here haue bene named fitly with a gift thereto pertaining: and Paul (no doubt) would not here haue concealed it, where he mentioneth callings of lesser importance.

Reason V. The Popes supremacy was iudged by sentences of Scripture, & condemned long before it was manifest in the world: the spirit of prophetic fore-seeing and foretelling the state of things to come. 2. Thess. 2. 3. 4. The man of sin (which is that Antichrist) shall exalte himselfe above all that is called God, &c. Now this whole chapter with all the circumstances thereof, most fitly agrees to the Sea of Rome and the Head thereof: and the thing which then staied the revealing of the man of sin, v. 6. is of the most expounded to be the Romane Emperour. I will alledge one testimony in the roome of many. Chrysost. saith on this place. As long as the Empire shall be had in awe, no man shall straightly submit himselfe to Antichrist: but after that the Empire shall be dissolved, Antichrist shall invade the estate of the Empire standing void, and shall labour to pull vnto himselfe the Empire both of man and God. And this we find now in experience to be true: for the Sea of Rome neuer flourished, till the Empire decayed, and the state thereof was remoued from the city of Rome. Again, Rev. 13. mention is made of two beasts, one coming out of the sea, whom the Papists confesse to be the heathenish Romane Emperour: the second coming out of the earth: which doth all that the first beast could doe before him: and this fitly agreeth to the Popes of Rome, who doe and haue done all things that the Emperour did or could doe, and that in his very light.

Reason VI. The iudgement of the ancient Church. Cyprian saith. Doubtlesse the same mereth the rest of the Apostles that Peter was: indueed with equall fellowship both of honour and of power: but a beginning is made of unity, that the Church may appaare to be one. Gregorie saith, If one bee called vnto all Bishoppe: the vniuersal Church geth so decay. And chapter 144. I say boldly, that whosoever calleth or desireth to call himselfe vniuersal priest, in his pride is a forerunner of Antichrist. And, Behold, in the preface of the Epistle which ye directed vnto me, you caused to be set a proud title, calling mee vniuersal Pope. Bernard, Consider that thou art not a Lord of Bishops, but one of them. Churches are maintained, in that the Romane Bishoppe draweth all power to himselfe. Again, Gregorie himselfe being Pope saith to the Emperour, I which am subiect to your commandement, haue euery way discharged that which was due, in

In regi. l. 6. cap. 118.

Lit. 7. c. 30.

in: Thoue performed mine allegiance to the Emperour, and haue not concealed what I thought on Gods behalfe. And Pope Leo the fourth after Gregorie 200. yeares, acknowledged the Emperour Lotharius for his soveraigne Prince, and professed obedience without gaineclaying to his imperiall commandments.

To conclude, whereas they say, that there is a double head of the Church, one imperiall, which is Christ alone, the other ministeriall, which is the Pope, governing the whole Church vnder Christ; I answer, this distinction robbeth Christ of his honor, because in setting vp their ministeriall head, they are faine to borrow of Christ things proper vnto him, as the priuileges to forgiue sins (a) properly and the power to gouerne the whole earth by making of lawes, that shal as truly binde conscience as the lawes of God, &c.

The nineteenth point: Of the efficacy of the Sacraments.

Our Consent.

Conclus. I. We teach and beleue that the sacraments are signes to represent Christ with his benefits vnto vs.

Conclus. II. We teach further, that the Sacraments are indeede instruments whereby God offereth and giueth the fore-said benefits vnto vs. Thus farre wee consent with the Roman Church.

The difference.

The difference between vs stands in sundrie points. First of all, the best learned among them teach, that Sacraments are physicall instruments; that is, true and proper instrumentall causes, having force and efficacy in them to produce and giue grace. They vse to expresse their meaning by their comparisons: When the seruicier takes the pen into his hand and writes, the action of writing comes from the penne, moued by the hand of the writer: and in cutting of wood or stone, the diuision comes from the sawe, moued by the hand of the worke-man: euen so the grace (say they) that is giuen by God, is conferred by the Sacrament it selfe. Now we for our parts hold, that Sacraments are not physicall, but mere voluntarie instruments. Voluntarie, because it is the will and appointment of God, to vse them as certaine outward means of Grace. Instruments; because when we vse them aright according to the institution, God then answerably conueries grace from himselfe. In this respect only take wee them for instruments and no otherwise.

The second difference is this: They teach that the very action of the minister dispensing the sacrament as it is the worke done, giues grace immediately, if the partie be prepared: as the very washing or sprinkling of water in bap-

time, and the giuing of bread in the Lords Supper: euen as the orderly mouing of the pen vpon the paper by the hand of the writer causeth writing. We hold the contrary; namely, that no action in the dispensation of a Sacrament conferreth grace as it is a worke done, that is, by the efficacy and force of the very sacramentall action it selfe, though ordained of GOD: but for two other waies. First, by the signification thereof. For God testifies vnto vs his will and good pleasure partly by the word of promise; and partly by the sacrament: the signes representing to the eyes that which the word doth to the eares; beeing also types and certaine images of the very same things, that are promised in the word, and no other. Yea, the elements are not general and confused, but particular signes to the severall communicants, and by the vertue of the institution: for when the faithfull receiue the signes from God by the hands of the Minister, it is as much as if God himselfe with his owne mouth should speak vnto them severally, and by name promise to them remission of sinnes. And things said to them particularly, doe more affect, and more take away doubting, then if they were generally spoken of an whole companie. Therefore signes of grace are as it were an applying and binding of the promise of saluation to euery particular beleuerer; and by this means, the oftner they are receiued, the more they helpe our infirmity, and confirme our assurance of mercie.

Again, the Sacrament conferres grace, in that the figure thereof confirmes faith as a pledge, by reason it hath a promise annexed to it. For when God commands vs to receiue the signes in faith, & withall promisseth to the receiuer to giue the thing signified, he binde himselfe, as it were in bond vnto vs to stand to his owne word; euen as men bind themselves in obligations, putting to their hand and seales, so as they cannot goe backe. And when the signes are thus vsed as pledges, and that often, they greatly increase the grace of God; as a token sent from one friend to another, renewes and confirms the perswasion of loue.

There are two principall waies whereby the Sacraments are said to conferre grace, namely, in respect of their signification, and as they are pledges of Gods fauour vnto vs. And the very point here to be considered is, in what order and manner they confirme. And the manner is this: The signes and visible elements affect the senses outward and inward: the senses convey their object to the minde: the minde directed by the holy Ghost reasoneth on this manner, out of the promise annexed to the sacrament: He that vieth the elements aright, shall receiue grace thereby: but I vse the elements aright in faith & repentance, faith the mind of the beleuer: therefore shall I receiue from God increase of grace. Thus then, faith is confirmed not by the worke done, but by a kind of reasoning caused in the

minde, the argument or prooffe whereof is borrowed from the elements, beeing signes and pledges of Gods mercie.

The third difference. The Papists teach that in the Sacrament by the worke done, the very grace of iustificacion is conferred. We say no: because a man of yeares mult first beleue and be iustificed; before he can be a meete partaker of any sacrament. And the grace that is conferred, is onely the increase of our faith, hope, sanctification, &c.

Our Reasons.

Reason I. The word preached and the sacraments differ in the manner of giuing Christ and his benefits vnto vs: because in the word the spirit of God teacheth vs by a voice conuenient to the minde by the bodily eares: but in the sacraments annexed to the word, by certaine sensible and bodily signes viewed by the eye. a Sacraments are nothing but visible words and promisses. Otherwise for the giuing it selfe they differ not. Christ himselfe saith, that in the very word, is eaten his owne flesh, which he was to giue for the life of the world: and what can be said more of the Lords supper? Augustine saith, that beleuers are partakers of the body & blood of Christ in baptism: and Hierome to Edibis, that in baptism wee eate and drinke the body and blood of Christ. If thus much may be said of baptism, why may it not also be said of the word preached? Again, Hierome vpon Ecclesiastes saith, It is profitable to be filled with the bodie of Christ, and drinke his blood, not onely in mystrie but in knowledge of holy Scripture. Now vpon this it followes, that seeing the worke done in the word preached, conferres not grace, neither doth the worke done in the sacrament conferre any grace.

Reason II. Matth. 3. 11. I baptize you with water to repentance: but he that cometh after me is stronger than I —, he shall baptize you with the holy Ghost and with fire. Hence it is manifest that grace in the sacrament proceedes not from any action in the Sacrament: for Iohn though he doe not disioyne himselfe and his action from Christ and the action of his spirit, yet doth he distinguish them plainly in number, persons, and effect. To this purpose Paul, who had said of the Galathians, that hee trawelled of them and begat them by the Gospel, faith of himselfe, that hee is not any thing, not onely as he was a man, but as he was a faithful Apostle: thereby excluding the whole Evangelicall ministry, whereof the Sacrament is a part, from the least part of diuine operation, or efficacy in conferring of grace.

Reason III. The blessed Angels, say the very flesh of the Sonne of God hath not any quickning vertue from it selfe; but all this efficacy or vertue is in and from the Godhead of the Sonne: who by means of the flesh apprehended by faith, deriueth heavenly and spiritual life from himselfe to the members. Now if there be no efficacy in the flesh of Christ, but by reason of the hypostaticall vnion: how shall bodily actions about bodily elements conferre grace immediately?

Reason IV. Paul, Rom. 4. stands much vpon this, to prooue that iustificacion by faith is not conferred by the Sacraments. And from the circumstance of time hee gathereth that Abraham was first iustificed, & then afterward receiued circumcision, the signe and the seale of his righteousness. Now we know, that the general condition of all sacraments is one & the same, and that baptism succeeded circumcision. And what can be more plaine then the example of Cornelius, Act. 10. who before Peter came vnto him, had the commendation of the feare of God, and was indued with the spirit of prayer: and afterward when Peter by preaching opened more fully the way of the Lord, he & the rest receiued the holy Ghost? And after all this they were baptized. Now if they receiued the holy Ghost before baptism, then they receiued remission of sins, and were iustificed before baptism.

Reason V. The iudgement of the ancient Church. Basil, if there be any grace in the water, it is not from the nature of the water, but from the presence of the Spirit. Hierome saith, Man giues water, but God giues the holy Ghost. Augustine saith, Water toucheth the body, and washeth the heart: but he shewes his meaning elfewhere. There is one water (saith he) of the sacrament, another of the spirit: the water of the sacrament is visible, the water of the spirit invisible. That washeth the bodie, and signifieth what is done in the soule; by this the soule is purged and healed.

Obiect. Remission of sins, regeneration and saluation, is ascribed to the sacrament of baptism, Act. 22. 16. Eph. 5. 26. Gal. 3. 27. Tit. 3. 5. Anst. Saluation and remission of sins is ascribed to baptism and the Lords supper, as to the word; which is the power of God to saluation to all that beleuee: and that, as they are instruments of the holy Ghost to signifie, seale, and exhibite to the beleueing minde the foresaid benefits: but indeede the proper instrument whereby saluation is apprehended, is faith, & sacraments are but props of faith furthering saluation two waies: first, because by their signification they helpe to nourish and preserve faith: secondly, because they seale grace and saluation to vs: yea Gods giues grace and saluation when we vse them well: so be it we beleue the word of promise made to the sacrament, whereof alio they are seales. And thus we keepe the middle way, neither giuing too much, nor too little to the Sacrament.

The XX. point. Of fauing faith: or, the way to life.

Our consent.

Conclus. I. They teach it to be the propertie of faith, to beleue the whole word of God, and specially the redemption of mankind by Christ.

Conclus. II. They teach that they beleue and looke to be faued by Christ, and by Christ alone, and by the mere mercie of God in Christ.

Conclus. III. Thirdly, the most learned among them hold and confesse, that the obedience of Christ is imputed vnto them for the satisfaction of the law, and for their reconciliation with God.

Concl. IV. They auauch that they put their whole trust and confidence in Christ, and in the mere mercie of God, for their saluation.

Conclus. V. Lastly, they hold that every man must apply the promise of life euertlasting by Christ vnto himselfe: and this they grant we are bound to doe. And in these five points do they & we agree, at least in shew of words.

By the auouching of these five conclusions, Papists may easily escape the hands of many magistrates. And vnto the myserie of popish doctrine be well knowne, any common man may easily be deceived, and take such for good Protestants that are but popish priests. To this end therefore, that we may the better discern their guile, I will shew wherein they faile in each of their conclusions, and wherein they differ from vs.

The difference.

Touching the first conclusion, they beleue indeede all the written word of God, and more then all for they also beleue the bookes Apocryphall, which antiquity for many hundred yeares hath excluded from the canon: yea they beleue vnto written traditiōs receiued (as they say) from Counells, the writings of the Fathers, and the determinations of the Church: making them also of equall credit with the written word of God, giuen by inspiration of the spirir. Now wee for our parts despise not the Apocrypha, as namely, the bookes of the Machabees, Ecclesiasticus, and therest, but wee reuerence them in all conuenient manner, preferring them before any other bookes of men, in that they have beene approved by a vniuersall consent of the Church: yet we thinke them not meete to be receiued into the Canon of holy Scripture, and therefore not to be beleued, but as they are consenting with the written word. And for this our origin, we haue direction from Athanasius, Origen, Hierome, and the Council of Laodicea. As for the vnto written Traditions, they come not within the compasse of our faith, neither can they: because they come vnto vs by the hands of men, that may deuide and be deueied. And we hold and beleue, that the right Canon of the bookes of the old and new Testament, contains in it sufficient direction for the Church of God to life euertlasting, both for faith and manners. Here then is the point of difference, that they make the object of faith larger then it should be, or can be: & wee keepe our felues to the written word, beleueing nothing to saluation out of it.

In the second conclusion, touching saluation by Christ alone, there is a manifest deceit: because they craftily include and couer their owne workes vnder the name of Christ. For (say they) workes done by men regenerate, are not their owne, but Christs in them; & as they are the workes of Christ; they faue, and no otherwise. But we for our parts looke to be faued only by such workes as Christ himselfe did in his owne person, and not by any workes at all done by him in vs. For all workes done, are in the matter of iustification and saluation, opposed to the grace of Christ: Rom. xi. 6. Election is by grace, not of workes: if it be of workes, it is no more of grace. Again, whereas they teach that wee are faued by the workes of Christ, which he worketh in vs, and maketh vs to work: it is flat against the word: For Paul faith, We are not faued by such workes as God hath ordained that men regenerate should waite in, Eph. 2. 10 And he faith further, that he counted all things, euen after his conuersion, lesse vnto him, that he might be found in Christ, not hauing his owne righteousness which is of the law, Phil. 3. 8. Again, Heb. 1. 2. Christ washed away our sinnes by himselfe: which last words exclude the merit of all workes done by Christ within man. Thus indeede the papists ouerture all that which in word they seeme to hold touching their iustification & saluation. We confesse with them, that good workes in vs are the workes of Christ: yet are they not Christs alone, but ours also, in that they proceede from Christ by the minde and will of man: as water from the fountaine by the channell. And looke as the channell defiled, defiles the water, that is without defilement in the fountaine; euen so the minde and will of man defiled by the remnants of sinne, defile the workes, which as they come from Christ, are vndefiled. Hence it is, that the workes of grace, which we do by Christ, or Christ in vs, are defiled: and must be seuered from Christ in the act of iustification, or saluation.

The third conclusion is touching the imputation of Christs obedience, which some of the most learned among them acknowledge, and the difference betwene vs stands on this manner. They hold that Christs obedience is imputed onely to make satisfaction for sinne, and not to iustifie vs before God. We hold & beleue that the obedience of Christ is imputed to vs euen for our righteousness before God: Paul faith, 1. Cor. 1. 30. Christ is made vnto vs of God, wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption. Hence I reason thus. If Christ be both our sanctification, and our righteousness; then he is not onely vnto vs inherent righteousness, but also righteousness imputed. But he is not onely our sanctification (which the Papists themselves expound of inherent or habituall righteousness) but also our righteousness: for thus by Paul are they distinguished. Therefore he is vnto vs both inherent and imputed righteousness. And very reason

teacheth vs thus much. For in the end of the world at the barre of Gods iudgement, wee must bring some kind of righteousness for our iustification, that may stand in the rigour of the law according to which we are to be iudged. But our inherent righteousness is imperfect, and stained with manifold defects, and shall be as long as we live in this world, as experience tels vs; and consequently it is not suitable to the subiect of the law: and if we goe out of our felues, we shall finde no righteousness for our turnes either in men or Angels, that may or can procure our absolution before God, and acceptation to life euertlasting. We must therefore haue recourse to the person of Christ, and his obedience imputed vnto vs must serue not onely to be a satisfaction to God for all our sinnes, but also for our perfect iustification, in that God is content to accept of it for our righteousness, as if it were inherent in vs, or performed by vs.

Touching the fourth conclusion, they hold it the safest and the surest course to put their trust and confidence in the mercie of God alone for their saluation: yet they confend, that men may also (a) put their confidence in the merit of their owne workes, and in the merits also of other men, so it be in sobriety. But this doctrine quite marres the conclusion; because, by teaching that men are to put confidence in the creature, they ouerture all confidence in the Creatour. For in the very first commandement we are taught to make choice for the true God of our God, which thing we do when we giue to God our hearts: and we giue our hearts to God, when wee put our whole confidence in him for the saluation of our soules. Now then, to put confidence in men or in workes, is to make them our Gods. The true and ancient forme of making confession was on this manner: I beleue in God the Father, in Iesus Christ, and in the holy Ghost: without mention making of any confidence in workes or creatures: the ancient Church neuer knew any such confession or confidence. Cyprian faith, He beleueneth not in God, who putteth not assistance concerning his saluation in God alone. And indeed the Papists themselves when death comes, forsake the confidence of their merits, and flie to the mere mercie of God in Christ. And for a confirmation of this, I alledge the testimony of one Vinbergius of Colen, who writeth thus. There was a booke found in the Vetry of a certaine parish of Colen, written in the Dutch tongue, in the yeare of our Lord, 1475. which the priests vsed in visiting of the sicke. And in it these questions be found. (b) Doest thou beleue that thou canst not be faued but by the death of Christ? The sicke person answered, Yea. Then it is said vnto him, Goe too then, while breath remains in thee, put thy confidence in this death alone: haue assistance in nothing else: commit thyself wholly to this death: which is also: conuer thy selfe: die thy selfe in euery part vnto this death: in euery part pierce thy self with it:

infolde thy selfe in this death: and if the Lord will iudge thee, say, Lord, I put the death of our Lord Iesus Christ betwene me and thy iudgement, and by no other means I contend with thee. And if he shall say vnto thee, that thou art a sinner, say, Lord, the death of my Lord Iesus Christ, I put betwene thee and my sin. If he shall say vnto thee, that thou hast deserved damnation, say, Lord, I oppose the death of our Lord Iesus Christ betwene thee and my euill meritis, and I offer his merit for the merit which I should haue, & haue not. If he shall say, that he is angry with thee, say, Lord, I oppose the death of our Lord Iesus Christ betwene me & mine anger. Here we see, what Papists doe and haue done in the time of death. And that which they hold and praefise, when they are dying; they should hold and praefise euery day while they are liuing.

In the last conclusion they teach, that wee must not onely beleue in general, but also apply vnto our felues the promises of life euertlasting. But they differ from vs in the very manner of applying. They teach, that the promise is to be applied, not by faith assuring vs of our owne saluation: but onely by hope, in likelihood coniecturall. We hold that we are bound in duty to apply the promise of life by faith without making doubt thereof, and by hope to continue the certainty after the apprehension made by faith. We doe not teach that all and euery man liuing within the precincts of the Church, professing he name of Christ, is certaine of his saluation, and that by faith: but that he ought so to be, and must endeavour to attaine thereto. And here is a great point in the myserie of iniquity to be considered: for by this vncertain application of the promise of saluation, and this waivering hope, they ouerture halfe the doctrine of the Gospel. For it inioynes two things: first to beleue the promises thereof to be true in themselves: secondly to beleue, & by faith to apply them vnto our felues. And this latter part, without which the former is void of comfort, is quite ouerturned. The reasons which they alledge against our doctrine, I haue answered before: now therefore I let them passe.

To conclude, though in coloured termes they seeme to agree with vs in doctrine concerning faith; yet indeed they deny and abolish the substance thereof, namely, the particular and certaine application of Christ crucified, and his benefits vnto our felues. Again, they faile, in that they cut off the principall duty and office of true sauing faith, which is, to apprehend and to apply the blessing promised.

The XXI. point. Of Repentance.

Our consent.

Conclus. I. That repentance is the conuersion of a sinner. There is a two-fold conuersion, passiue,

abelar. l. i. c. 7. de milicie.

De duplici in Mart. iij.

Lib. de causis cur. Ritug. p. 456.

It is supposed to be questions of Anselme.

passive, and active; passive, is an action of God whereby he converteth man being as yet vncorrupted. Active, is an action whereby man being once turned of God, turnes himselfe: and of the latter mult this conclusion be understood. For the first conversion, considering it is a worke of God turning vs vnto himselfe, is not the repentance whereof the Scripture speaketh of; but it is called by the name of regeneration and repentance, whereby we being first turned of God doe turne our felues, and doe good workes, is the fruit thereof.

Conclus. 11. That repentance stands specially for practise, in contrition of heart, confession of mouth, and satisfaction in worke or deed. Touching contrition there be two kinds thereof: Legal, and Euangelicall. Legal contrition is nothing but a remorse of conscience for sinne in regard of the wrath & iudgement of God, and it is no grace of God at all: nor any part, or cause of repentance: but only an occasion thereof; and that by the mercie of God: for if it selfe, it is the sting of the law, and the very entrance into the pit of hell. Euangelicall contrition is, when a repentant sinner is grieved for his finnes, not so much for feare of hell, or any other punishment; as because hee hath offended and displeased for good and mercifull a GOD. This contrition is caused by the ministerie of the Gospell, and in the practise of repentance it is alwaies necessarie, and goes before as the beginning thereof. Secondly we hold and maintaine, that confession is to be made, and that in sundry respects: first to God, both publickly in the congregation, and also privately in our secret and private prayers. Secondly to the Church, when any person hath openly offended the congregation by any crime, and is therefore excommunicate. Thirdly, to our private neighbour, when we haue vpon any occasion offended and wronged him. Mat. 5.23. If thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath ought against thee, go first and be reconciled to him; now reconciliation presupposeth confession. Lastly, in all true repentance, we hold and acknowledge there must be satisfaction made: first to God, and that is, when we intreat him in our supplications to accept the death and passion of Christ, as a full, perfect and sufficient satisfaction for all our finnes. Secondly, it is to be made vnto the Church, after excommunication for the publicke offences; and it stands in duties of humiliation that fitly serue to testifie the truth of our repentance. Thirdly, satisfaction is to be made to our neighbour because if he be wronged, he must haue recompence and restitution made, Luke 19.8. and there repentance may iustly be suspected, where no satisfaction is made, if it lie in our power.

Conclus. 111. That in repentance we are to bring outward fruits worthe amendment of life: for repentance it selfe is in the heart: and therefore must be testified in all manner of good workes: whereof the principal is, to inendeavour day by day, by Gods grace to leaue and renounce all and euery sin, and in all things to doe the will of God. And here let it be remembered, that we are not patrons of licentiousnesse and enemies of good workes. For though we exclude them from the act of our iustification and saluation: yet we maintaine a profitable and necessarie vse of them in the life of euery Christian man. This vse is three-fold, in respect of God, of man, of our felues. Workes are to be done in respect of God, that his commandment may be obeyed. 1. Ioh. 3.22. that his will may be done. 1. Ioh. 4.3. that we may shew our felues to be obedient children to God our Father. 1. Pet. 1.14. that we may shew our felues thankful for our redemption by Christ. Tit. 2.14. that we might not grieve the spirit of God. Eph. 4.30. but walke according to the same. Gal. 6.22. that God by our good workes may be glorified. Mat. 5.16. that we may be good followers of God. Eph. 5.1. Again, workes are to be done in regard of men: that our neighbour may be helped in worldly things, Luk. 6.38. that hee may be won by our example to godlinesse. 1. Pet. 3.14. that we may prevent in our felues the giuing of any offence. 1. Cor. 10.32. that by doing good, we may stop the mouths of our aduersaries. Thirdly and lastly, they haue vse in respect of our felues: that we may shew our felues to be new creatures. 1. Cor. 5.17. that we may walke as the children of light. Eph. 5.8. that we may haue some assurance of our faith, and of our saluation. 1. Pet. 1.8-10. that we may discern dead and counterfeit faith, from true faith. Iam. 2.17. that faith and the gifts of God may be exercised and continued vnto the end. 2. Tim. 1.6. that the punishments of sinne, both temporall and eternall may be prevented. Psalm. 89.32 that the reward may be obtained, which God freely in mercie hath promised to men for their good workes. Gal. 6.9.

The difference.

We dissent not from the Church of Rome in the doctrine of repentance it selfe, but in the damnable abuses thereof, which are of two sorts, generall, and speciall. Generall, are those which concerne repentance wholly considered; and they are these. The first is, that they place the beginning of repentance, partly in the holy Ghost, or, in the power of their naturall free-will, being helped by the holy Ghost: whereas Paul indeede ascribeth this worke, wholly vnto God. 1. Tim. 2.25. Proving if God at any time will giue them repentance. And men that are not awake, but dead in trespasses and finnes, cannot do any thing that may further their conversion, though they be helped neuer so much: no more then dead men in their graues can rise from thence. The second abuse is, that they take penance, or rather repentance for that publicke discipline and order of correction that was vied against notorious offenders in the open congregation. For the Scripture sets downe but one repentance, and that common to all men without exception: and to be practised in euery part of our liues for the necessarie mortification of sin: whereas open Ecclesiasticall correction pertained not to all and euery man within the compasse of the Church, but to them alone that gaue any open offence. The third abuse is, that they make repentance to be not only a vertue, but also a Sacrament: whereas for the space of a thousand yeares after Christ, and vpwrd, it was not reckoned among the Sacraments: yea, it seemes that Luther was one of the first that called it a Sacrament: and the schoolmen after him disposed of the matter & forme of this Sacrament; not able any of them certainly to define, what should be the outward element. The fourth abuse is touching the effect and efficacy of repentance: for they make it a meritorious cause of remission of finnes, and of life euermlasting, flat against the word of GOD. Paul saith notably, Rom. 3.24. Wee are iustified freely by his grace through the redemption which is in Christ Iesus. whom God hath sent to be a reconciliation by faith in his blood. In these wordes these formes of speeches, redemption in Christ, reconciliation in his blood, by faith, freely by grace, must be observed and considered: for they shew plainly that no part of satisfaction or redemption is wrought in vs, or by vs: but out of vs only in the person of Christ. And therefore we esteeme of repentance only as a fruit of faith, and the effect, or efficacy of it, is to testifie remission of our finnes, and our reconciliation before God. It will be said, that remission of finnes & life euermlasting, are promised to repentance. Ans. It is not to the work of repentance, but to the person which repenteth, and that not for his own merits or worke of repentance, but for the merits of Christ, which hee applyeth to himselfe by faith. And thus we are to vnderstand the promises of the Gospell, in which workes are mentioned; presupposing alwaies in them the reconciliation of the person with God, to whom the promise is made. Thus wee see wherefore we dissent from the Romane Church touching the doctrine of repentance.

Speciall abuses doe concerne Contrition, Confession, and Satisfaction. The first abuse concerning contrition is, that they teach it must be sufficient & perfect. They vse now to helpe the matter by a distinction: saying, that the sorrow in contrition, must be in the highest degree in respect of (a) value and estimation. Yet the opinion of (b) Arian was otherwise, that in true repentance a man should be grieved according to all his indevour. And the Romane Catholike faith as much, (c) that the sorrow conceived of our sins must be so great, that none can be conceived to be greater: that we must be contrite in the same manner we loue God, and that is, with all our heart and strength, in most vehement sorrow: and that the barred of sinne must be not only the greatest, but also most vehement and perfect: that it may exclude all stubb and slachies. Indeed afterward it followes that true contrition may be effectual though it be imperfect, but how can this stand, if they will not only commend but also prescribe & amount, that contrition must be most perfect and vehement? We therefore only teach, that God requires not so much the measure, as the truth of any grace: and that it is a degree of vnaine contrition; to be grieved because we cannot be grieved for our finnes as wee should. The second abuse is, that they ascribe to their contrition the merit of congruity. But this cannot stand with the all-sufficient merit of Christ. And an ancient Councell saith, God inspires into vs first of all the faith and love of himselfe, no merits going before, that we may faithfully require the Sacrament of baptism, and after baptism doe the things that please him. And we for our parts hold, that God requires contrition at our hands, not to merit remission of finnes; but that we may acknowledge our owne vnworthinesse and bee humbled in the sight of God, and distrust all our owne merits: and further, that we may make the more account of the benefits of Christ, whereby we are received into the fauour of God: lastly, that we might more carefully auoid all sins in time to come, whereby so many paines and terrors of conscience are procured. And we acknowledge no contrition at all to be meritorious, save that of Christ: whereby he was broken for our iniquities. The third abuse is, that they make imperfect contrition or attrition arising of the feare of hell, to be good and profitable: & to it they apply the saying of the Prophet, The feare of God is the beginning of wisdom. But seruile feare of it selfe is the fruit of the law, which is the ministry of death and condemnation: and consequently it is the way to eternal destruction, if God leaue men to themselves: and if it turne to the good of any, it is only by accident: because God in mercie makes it to be an occasion going before, of grace to be giuen: another while remorse of conscience for sinne is no beginning of repentance, or the restraintment of any sinne: but rather is, and that properly, the beginning of vn-speakable horrors of conscience, and euermlasting death, vnlesse God shew mercy. And yet this feare of punishment, if it be tempered and dealed with other graces & gifts of God in holy men, it is not vnprofitable: in whom there is not only a sorrow for punishment, but also, and that much more, for the offence. And such a kind of feare or sorrow, is commanded. Mal. 1.6. If I be a Father, where is my honour? If I be a Lord, where is my feare? And Chrysostome saith, that the feare of hell in the heart of a iust man, is a strong man armed against devils and robbers to drine them from the house. And Ambrase saith, that Marys in the time of their sufferings, confirmed themselves against the crucifix of persecution by setting the face of hell before their eyes.

Abuses touching confession are these. The first is, that they use a forme of confession of their finnes vnto God, vttered in an vknown language: beeing therefore foolish and ridiculous, which requireth the aide and intercession of dead men and such as be absent; whereas there is but one Mediatour betwene God and man, the man Iesus Christ. The second, is that they in practise make confession of their finnes not onely to God, but to the Saints departed; in that they make prayer to them in which they aske their intercession for the pardon of their finnes: and this is, not onely to match them with God in seeing and knowing the heart, but also to giue a part of his diuine worship vnto them. The third and principall abuse is, that they have corrupted Canonick confession by turning it into priuate auricular confession: binding all men in conscience by a law made, to confesse al their mortall finnes, with all circumstances that change the kind of the sinne (as farre as possibly they can remember once every yeare at the least, and that to a priest, vnto if in the case of extreme necessity. But in the word of God there is no warrant for this confession, nor in the writings of Orthodoxe antiquitie for the space of many hundred yeares after Christ, as one of their owne side auoucheth. And the commandement of the holy Ghost, Confesse one to another, and pray one for another, Iam. 5. 16. bindes as well the priest to make confession vnto vs, as any of vs to the priest. And whereas it is said, Mat. 3. 6. that many were baptized confessing their finnes: and Act. 19. 18. many that beleeued came & confessed & shewed their works, the confession was voluntarie & not contrained: it was also generall and not particular of all & every kind, with the necessarie circumstances thereof. And in this liberty of confession the Church remained 1200. yeares till the Councell of Lateran, in which the law of auricular confessio was first inacted: being a notable inuention seruing to discouer the secrets of men & to enrich that couetous and ambitious See, with the riches of the world. It was not known to Augustine when he said, What haue I to doe with men that they should heare my confessions, as though they should heale my diseases? nor to Christyenne, when hee saith, I doe not compell thee to confesse thy finnes to others. And, If thou be ashamed to confesse them to any man, because thou hast sinned, say them daily in thine owne mind. I doe not bid thee confesse them to thy fellow seruants, but thou shouldst moue thee: confesse them to God that curseth thee.

The abuse of satisfaction is, that they haue turned canonick satisfaction, which was made to the congregation by open offenders, into a satisfaction of the iustice of God for the temporall punishment of their fins. Behold here a most horrible prephanation of the whole Gospell, and especially of the satisfaction of

A. Christ, which of it selfe without any supply is sufficient every way for the remission both of fault and punishment. But of this point I haue spoken before.

Hitherto I haue handled and proued by induction of sundry particulars, that we are to make a separation from the present Church of Rome, in respect of the foundation & substance of true religion. Many more things might be added to this very purpose, but here I conclude this first point: adding onely this one caveat, that we make separation from the Romane religio without hatred of the persons that are maintainers of it. May we ioyne in affection more with them, then they with vs. They die with vs not for their religion (A though they defende it) but for the treasons which they intend & enterprize: we are ready to doe the duties of loue vnto them inioyned vs in the word: we reuerence the good gifts in many of them: we pray for them, wishing their repentance and eternall saluation.

Now I meane to proceede, and to touch briefly other points of doctrine contained in this portion of Scripture, which I haue now in hand. In the second place therefore out of this commandement, Go out of her my people, I gather, that the true Church of God is and hath bin in the present Romane Church, as come in the heape of chaffe. Though Poperie reigned and ouer-spread the face of the earth for many hundred yeeres; yet in the midst thereof, God referred a people vnto himselfe, that truly worshipped him: and to this effect the holy Ghost saith, that the Dragon, which is the diuell, caused the woman, that is, the Church, to flee into the wilderness, where he sought to destroy her, but could not: and shee still retaines a remnant of her seed, which keep the commandments of God, and haue the testimony of Iesus Christ. Now this which I speake of the Church of Rome, cannot be said in like manner of the congregations of Turks and other infidels, that the hidden Church of God is preferred among them; because there is no meane to saluation at all: whereas the Church of Rome hath the Scriptures, though in a strange language; and baptism, for the outward formes which helpe God in all ages preferred that his elect might be gathered out of the midst of Babylon. This serues to stoppe the mouthes of Papists, which demand of vs, where our Church was foure score yeares ago, before the dayes of Luther: whereby they would insinuate to the world, that our Church and religion is greene or new; but they are answered out of this very text, that our Church hath cuer bene since the dayes of the Apostles, and that in the very midst of the papacy. It hath bene alwaies a Church, and did not first beginne to be in Luthers time; but onely then began to shew it selfe, as hauing bin hid by an vniuersall Apostasie, for many hundred yeares together. Again, we haue here occasion to consider the dealing of God with his owne Church and people. Hee will not haue them for externall society to be mixed with their enemies, and that for speciall purpose: namely, to exercise the humility and patience of his few seruants. When Elias saw idolatrie spread ouer all Israel, hee went apart into the wilderness, and in griefe desired to die. And David cried out: Woe is me that am constrained to dwell in Meshech, and to haue my habitation in the tents of Kedar, Ps. 120. 5. And iust Lot must haue his righteous soule vexed with seeing and hearing the abominations of Sodome.

Thirdly, by this commandement wee are taught what opinion to carrie of the present Church of Rome. It is often demanded, whether it bee a Church or no; and the answer may hence be formed on this manner. If by this Church be vnderstood a state or regiment of the people, whereof the Pope is head, and the members are all such as doe acknowledge him to be their head, and doe beleue the doctrine established in the Councell of Trent; wee take it to be no Church of God. Because Babylon, which I haue proued to bee the Church of Rome, is here opposed to the Church or people of God: and because wee are commanded to come out of it: whereas we may not wholly forsake any people till they forsake Christ. Some will happily say, the Church of Rome hath the Scriptures and the Sacrament of baptism. I answer first of all, they haue indeed the bookes of holy Scripture among them: but by the rest of their doctrine they ouerthrow the true sense thereof in the foundation, as I haue proued before. And though they haue the outward forme of baptism, yet they ouerturne the inward baptism, which is the substance of al, standing in the iustificiation and sanctification of a sinner. Again, I answer, that they haue the word and baptism, not for themselves, but for the true Church of God among them: like as the lantern holdeth the candle, not for it selfe, but for others. Secondly, it may be also alledged, that if the Pope be Antichrist, hee then sits in the temple, that is, the Church of God, & by this meane the Romane Church shall be the true Church. Answer. He sits in the temple of God, but make further how: as God, that is, not as a member, but as a manifest vsurper: like as the theefe sits in the true mans house. For the Popish Church and Gods Church are mingled like chaffe and come in one heape: and the Church of Rome may bee said to bee in the Church of God, & the Church of God in the Church of Rome, as we say the wheate is among the chaffe, and the chaffe in the wheate. Again, he is said to sit in the Temple of God, because the Romane Church, though falsely, takes vnto it selfe the title of the true Catholike Church. Some goe about to delay and qualifye the matter, by comparing the Church to a man lying sicke full of sores, hauing also his throat cut, yet so as a body and soule are ioynd together, and life is remaining still. But all

A. things well considered, it is rather like a dead carcasse, and is void of all spiritual life: as the popish errors in the foundation do manifest. Indee, a knowne harlot may afterward remaine a wife and be so feared; yet after the bill of diuorcement be giuen, the cleaith to be a wife, though she can shew her marriage ring: now that Church hath received the bill of her diuorcement in the written Word, namely, 2. Thes. 2. and Rev. 13. 11. 2. & c.

Furthermore, in this commandement wee may see a lively portraiture of the state of all mankind. Here wee see two sorts of mensome are pertaining to Babylon, a people running on to their destruction: some againe are a people of God seuered from Babylon, and referred to life euertlasting. If any aske the cause of this distinction; I answer, it is the very will of God vouchsafing mercie to some, and forsaking others by withdrawing his mercie from them, for the better declaration of his iustice. Thus saith the Lord, Rom. 11. 4. I haue referred seauen thousand that neuer bowed the knee to Baal: and the Prophet Esaia saith, Isa. 4. 9. Princesse the Lord had reserved a remnant, we had bene as Sodome and Gomorrah. By this distinction we are taught about all things to seeke to be of the number of Gods people, and to labour for assurance of this in our owne consciences. For if all should be saved, lesse care would suffice: but this mercie is not common to all: and therefore the more to be thought vpon.

Lastly, here I note the speciall care that God hath ouer his owne children. He first giueth them warning to depart, before hee begin to execute his iudgement vpon his enemies, with whom they lue: that they might not be partakers of their sins and punishments. Thus before God would punish Hierusalem, an Angel is sent to marke them in the fore-head that mourned for the abominations of the people. And in the destruction of the first borne of Egypt, the Angel passed ouer the houses of the Iews, that had their poits sprinkled with the blood of the Paschall lambe: and this passing ouer, betokeneth safety and preservation in the common destruction, to those that haue their hearts sprinkled with the blood of Christ. This blessing of protection should moue vs all, to become true and hearty seruants of God. Men usually become members of those societies & corporations, where they may inioy many freedoms and priuiledges. Well, behold: in the societie of the Saints of God, which is the true Church, there is the freedom from danger in all common destructions, and from eternall vengeance at the last day. When Hester had procured safety for the Iewes, and liberty to reuenge themselves vpon their enemies, it is said, that many of the people of the land became Iewes: Even so, considering Christ hath procured freedom from hell, death, and damnation for all that beleeue in him: we should labour about all things to become new creatures, ioyning our felicital waies to the true Church of God.

Hitherto I have spoken of the commandments: now follows the reason thereof drawne from the end, that they be not partakers of her sins: and that they receive not of her plagues. Hence it might stand long to shew what be the sins of the Church of Rome: but I will only name the principall. The first sinne is Atheisme: and that I prooue on this manner: Atheisme is twofold, open, coloured. Open Atheisme is, when men both in word and deed deny God and his word. Coloured Atheisme is not so manifest: & it hath two degrees. The first is, when men acknowledge God the Creator and gouernour of heauen and earth, and yet denie the Father, Sonne, and holy Ghost. Thus the Ephesians before they receiued the Gospell, are said to be without God, whom in their naturall iudgement they acknowledged; because they denied Christ, and consequently worshipped an idol of their owne braine, in that they worshipped God out of Christ. And in this respect though the Samaritans worshipped the God of Abraham, yet our Saviour Christ saith, Iohn 4. 22. they worshipped they knew not what. And the Psalmist saith of the Gentiles, Psal 96. 5. that their gods are idols. In this degree of Atheisme are placed Turkes and Iewes at this day: the Anti-Trinitaries, and Arians, and all that conueie and worship God out of the Trinity. The second degree is, when men doe rightly acknowledge the vniuersity of the Godhead in the Trinity of persons: yet so, as by other necessary consequents partly of their doctrine, and partly of the seruice of God, they ouer-tune that which they haue well maintained. And thus I say, that the very religion of the Church of Rome is a kinde of Atheisme. For whereas it makes the merit of the workes of men to concur with the grace of God, it ouerthrowes the grace of God, Rom. 11. In word they acknowledge the infinite iustice, and mercie of God: but by consequent both are denied. How can that be infinite iustice, which may any way be appeased by humane satisfaction? And how shall Gods mercie be infinite, when we by our satisfactions must adde a supply to the satisfaction of Christ? Again, I. Iohn 2. 23. Hee that hath not the Sonne, hath not the Father: and hence that hath neither Father nor Sonne, denies God. Now the present Romane religion hath not the Sonne, that is, Iesus Christ, God and man, the Mediatour of mankind: but hath transformed him into a fained Christ. And I shew it thus: For one Iesus Christ, in all things like vnto vs in his humanity, sinne onely excepted, they haue framed a Christ, to whom they ascribe two kinde of existence: one naturall, whereby he is visible, touchable, & circumscribed in heauen: the other not onely above, but also against nature; by which he is substantially according to his flesh in the hands of euery priest, in euery host, and in the mouth of euery communicant, insensible, vntouchable, vncircumscribed. And thus in effect they abolish

A his manhood. Yea they disgrace him of his offices. For one Iesus Christ the only king, lawgiuer, & head of the Church, they ioyne vnto him the Pope, not onely as a Vicar, but also as a fellow: in that they giue vnto him power to make lawes binding conscience, to resolve & determine vnfallibly the fence of holy scripture, properly to pardon sin both in respect of fault and temporal punishment, to haue authority ouer the whole earth and a part of hell: to depose Kings, to whom vnder Christ euery soule is to be subiect, to absolve subiects from the oath of allegiāce, &c. For one Iesus Christ the only reall Priest of the new testament, they ioyne many secondary priests vnto him, which offer Christ daily in the Masse for the sins of the quicke and the dead. For one Iesus Christ the al-sufficient Mediatour of intercession, they haue added many followers vnto him to make request for vs, namely, as many Saints as be in the Popes kalender. Lastly, for the onely merits of Christ, in whom alone the Father is well pleased, they haue deuised a Treasure of the Church, containing beside the merits of Christ, the ouerplus of the merits of Saints to be dispensed to men, at the discretion of the Pope. And thus we see, that Christ, and consequently God himselfe to be worshipped in Christ, is transformed in a phantasie or idol of mans conceit. Again, there is alwaies a proportion betweene the worship of God, and our perswasion of him: & men in giuing vnto God any worship, haue respect to his nature, that both may be futable, and he well pleased. Let vs then see what manner of worship the Romane religion affordeth. It is for the greatest part meer wil-worship, without any allowance or commendement from God, as Durand in his Rationale in effect acknowledged. It is a carnall seruice standing of innumerable bodily rites and ceremonies borrowed partly from the Iewes, & partly from the heathen: it is denied betweene God and some of his creatures; in that they are worshipped both with one kind of worship: let them point is as they can. Thus then, if by their manner of worshipping of God, we may iudge how they conceine of him, as we may; they haue plainly turned the true God into a phantasie of their own. For God is no other wife to be conceived, then he hath revealed himselfe in his creatures and word, and especially in Christ: who is the ingrauen image of the person of the Father.

The second sinne is idolatry, and that as grosse as was euer among the heathen. And it is to be scene in two things. First, that they worship the Saints with religious worship, which without exception is proper to God. Yea they transforme some of them into detestable idols, making them in truth mediators of redemption, specially the virgin Mary, whom they call a Ladie, a Goddesse, a Queene, whom (a) Christ her Sonne obeyed in heauen, a mediatrix of life, hope, the medicine of the diseased, and they pray vnto her thus, Prepare thou glory for vs: defend vs from our enemies, and in the house of death receive vs, loose the bonds of the quicke, bring light to the blinde, drina away all duncks. Shew thy life to be a mother: Let him receive thy prayers. Again, their idolatry is manifest, in that they worship God in, at, or before images: hauing no commendement so to doe, but the contrary. They allealedge, that they vie & worship images onely in a remembrance of God. But this is all one, as if an vnchast wife should receiue many louers into her house in the absence of her husband: and being reprooued, should answer, that they were the friends of her husband, and that shee kept them onely in remembrance of him. Thirdly, their Idolatry exceeds the Idolatry of the heathen, in that they worship a Breaden god, or Christ in and vnder the formes of bread and wine. And if Christ according to his humanity be absent from the earth, as I haue prooued, the Popish host is as abominable an idol as euer was.

The third sinne is the maintenance of Idolatry. And that is manifest: first of all in the toleration of the Iewes, flat against the commendement of God, Deut. 23. 17. There shall be no whore of the daughters of Israel, neither shall there be a whore keeper of the sons of Israel. And this toleration is an occasion of vncleanes to many young Men and Women, that otherwise would abstaine from all such kind of filthines. And what an abomination is this, when brother and brother, father and sonne, nephew & vncke, shall come to one and the same farle, either before or after the other? Secondly, their law beyond the fourth degree allows the marriage of any persons: and by this means, they sometime allow incest. For in the vnequal collateral line, the person next the common stocke is a father or mother to the brothers or sisters posterity, as for example:

- 1 John
- Anne
- Nicholas
- 2 Thomas
- 3 Lewes
- 4 Roger
- 5 Antonie
- 6 James

Here Anne and Nicholas are brother and sister, and Anne is distant from James six degrees, he being her nephew as farre off: and the marriage betweene them is allowed by the Church of Rome, they not being within the compasse of foure degrees: which neuertheless is against the law of nature. For Anne being the sister of Nicholas, is in stead of a mother to all that are begotten of Nicholas, euen to James, and James his posterity. Yet thus much I grant, that the daughter of Anne may lawfully marry James or Antonie, the case being altered, because they are not one to another as parents and children.

A The fourth sinne is Magicks, sorcery, or witchcraft, in the consecration of the host, in which they make their Breaden god: in exorcismes ouer holy bread, holy water, and salt; in the casting out or driving away of diuels, by the signe of the crosse, by soleme coniurations, by holy water, by the ringing of bells, by lighting tapers, by reliques, and such like. For these things haue not their suppo'd force either by creation, or by any institution of God in his holy Word: and therefore if any thing be done by them, it is from the secret operation of the diuell himselfe.

The fifth sin is, that in their doctrine they maintaine perjury, because they teach with one consent, that a Papist examined may answer doubtfully against the direct intention of the examiner: framing another meaning vnto himselfe in the ambiguitie of his words. As for example, when a man is asked whether he said or heard Masse in such a place: though he did: they ascribe he may say, no: and sweare vnto it: because hee was not there to reueale it to the examiner: whereas in the very law of nature, hee that takes an oath should sweare according to the intention of him that hath power to minister an oath: and that in truth, iustice, iudgement. Let them cleare their doctrine from all defence of perjury if they can.

The sixt sinne is, that they reuere many of Gods commandments, making that no sinne which Gods Word makes a sinne. Thus they teach, that if any man steale some little thing, that is thought not to cause any notable hurt, it is no mortal sinne: that the officious lie, and the lie made in sport, are venial sinnes: that, to pray for our enemies in particular, is no precept, but a counsell; and that none is bound to giue his enemy in the way of friendship, flatte against the rule of Christ, Mat. 5. 47. where the word enemies, signifieth all manner of enie and courtesie: that, raff iudgement, though consent come thereto, is regularly but a venial sinne: that, it is lawfull other whiles to faigne holines: that, the painting of the face is ordinarily but a venial sinne: that, it is not lawfull to forbid begging: whereas the Lord forbade there should be any beggar in Israel. Again, they teach, that men in their choler, when they are a chiding, and sweare wounds and blood, are not indeede blasphemers.

Lastly, their writers vse manifest lying, to iustifie their doctrine. They please fallily that all antiquitie is on their side; whereas it is as much against them, as for them: and as much for vs as them. Again, their manner hath bene, and is still to procure their opinions, by forged and counterfeit writings of men, some where of I will name.

- I might here rehearse many other finnes which with the former call for vengeance vpon the Romane Church, but it shall suffice to haue named a few of the principall.
- Now in this reason, our Saviour Christ prescribes another maine dutie to his owne people: and that is, to bee careful to eschew all the finnes of the Church of Rome, that they may withall escape her deferred plagues and punishments. And from this prescribed dutie I obserue two things. The first is, that euery good seruant of God, must carefully auoide contracts of marriage with professed Papists, that is, with such as holde the Pope for their head, & beleene the doctrine of the Councell of Trent. For in such matches men hardly keepe faith & good conscience, & hardly auoid communication with the fins of the Romane Church. A further ground of this doctrine I thus propound: In Gods word there is mentioned a double league between man & man, con-

try & conuntry. The first is, the league of concord when one kingdom binds it self to live in peace with another, for the maintenance of trafficke without disturbance: & this kind of league may stand betwene Gods Church, & the enemies thereof. The second is, the league of amity: which is when men, people, or countries bind themselves to defend each other in all causes: and to make the warres of the one, the warres of the other; and this league may not be made with those that bee enemies of God. Iehosaphat, otherwise a good king, made this kind of league with Ahab; and is therefore reprooued by the Prophet, saying, Wouldst thou helpe the wicked, & loue them that hate the Lord? 2. Chro. 19. 2. Now the marriages of Protestants with Papists, are priuate leagues of amity, between person and person: and therefore not to be allowed. Again, Iudah hath defiled the holines of the Lord which he loued, & hath married the daughter of a strange god; where is flately condemned marriages made with the people of a false god: Now the papists by the consequents of their doctrine & religio, turne the true Iehovah into an idol of their owne braine, as I haue shewed, and the true Christ reuealed in the written word, into a fained childe made of bread. Yet if such a marriage be once made and finished, it may not be dissolved. For such parties fin not simply in that they marry, but because they marry not in the Lord, being of diuers religions. The fault is not in the substance of marriage, but in the manner of making it; & for this cause, the Apostle commands the beleeuing party, not to forsake or refuse the vbeleuening party, being a very infidel (which no Papist is) if he or she will abide, 1. Cor. 7. 13.

The second thing is, that euery seruant of God must take heed how he trauels into such countries where Popish religion is established, lest he partake in the sins & punishments thereof. Indeed to go vpon ambassage to any place, or to trauell for this end, that we may performe the necessarie duties for our special or general callings, is not vnlawfull: but to trauell out of the precincts of the Church, only for pleasures sake, & to see strange fashions, hath no warrant. And hence it is, that many men which go forth in good order well minded, come home with crazed consciences. The best trauellder of all is he, that liuing at home or abroad, cange out of himselfe, and depart from his owne fins and corruptions by true repentance.

AN ADVERTISEMENT TO ALL FAVOVRERS OF THE Romane Religion, shewing that the said religion is against the Catholike principles and grounds of the Catechisme.

Great is the number of them that embrace the religion of the present Church of Rome; being deceived by the glorious titles of Vniuersality, Antiquity, Succession. And no doubt though some be wilfully blinded, yet many denoted this way, neuer saw any other truth. Now of the & the rest I desire this fauour, that they will but weigh & ponder with themselves this one thing, which I will now offer to their considerations, & that is, That the Romane religion now established by the Councell of Trent, is in the principall points thereof against the grounds of the Catechisme, that haue beene agreed vpon euer

since

since the dayes of the Apostles, by all Churches. These grounds are foure: the first is, the Apostles Creed: the second is the decalogue or ten commandments; the third is, the forme of prayer called the Lords prayer: the fourth is the institution of the two Sacraments, Baptisme, and the Lords Supper, 1. Cor. 11. 23.

That I may in some order manifest this which I say, I will begin with the Symbole or Creed. And first of all it must be considered, that some of the principall doctrines beleueed in the Church of Rome are, that the Pope or Bishop of Rome is the vicar of Christ, and the head of the Catholike Church: that there is a fire of purgatorie after this life: that images of God and Saints are to be placed in Churches and worshipped: that praier is to be made to Saints departed, & their intercession to be required: that there is a propitiatorie sacrifice daily offered in the Masse for the finnes of the quick & the dead. These points are of that moment, that without them the Romane religion can not stand: and in the Councell of Trent the curse Anathema is pronounced vpon all such as denie these or any of them. And yet marke; the Apostles Creed which haue been thought to containe all necessary points in religion to be beleueed, and hath therefore bene called the key and rule of faith; this Crede I say, hath not any of these points: nor the Expositions made thereof by the ancient fathers, nor any other Crede or confession of faith made by any Councell or Church for the space of many hundred yeares. This is a plaine prooffe to any indifferent man, that these be new articles of faith neuer knowne in the Apostolike Church: & that the fathers & councels could not find any such articles of faith in the books of the old and new testament. Answer is made, that all these points of doctrine are beleueed vnder that article, I beleue the Catholike church, the meaning whereof they will haue to be this, I beleue all things which the Catholike Church holdeth and teacheth to be beleueed. If this be as they say, wee must needs beleue in the Church: that is, put our confidence in the Church, for the manifestation and the certainty of all doctrines necessarie to saluation: and thus the eternall truth of God the Creator, shall depend on the determination of the creature; and the written word of God in this respect is made insufficient; as though it had not plainly reuealed all points of doctrine pertaining to saluation. And the auncient Churches haue been far ouerscen, that did not propound the former points to be beleueed as articles of faith, but left these to these latter times.

2. In this Crede, so beleue in God, and to beleue the Church are distinguished, so beleue in, is pertaining to the Creator, to beleue, to the creature: as Augustinus hath noted, when hee saith, that by this preposition in, the Creator is distinguished from the creature, and things pertaining to God from things pertaining to men. And Augustine saith, It must be knowne that we must beleue the Church, and not beleue in the Church: because the Church is not God, but the busse of God. Hence it follows that we must not beleue in the Saints, nor put our confidence in our workes, as the learned Papists teach. Therefore Eusebius saith, We ought of right to beleue Peter and Paul, but to beleue in Peter and Paul, that is, to give to the seruants the honour of the Lord, wee ought not. And Cyprian saith, He doth not beleue in God, which doth not place in him alone the trust of his whole felicity.

3. The article, concerning the holy Ghost, is ouerturned by the transubstantiation of bread & wine in the Masse, into the body and blood of Christ. For here we are taught to confesse the true and perpetuall incarnation of Christ, beginning in his conception, and neuer ending afterward; and we acknowledge the truth of his manhood, and that his body hath the essentiall properties of a true body, standing of flesh and bone: hauing quantity, figure, dimensions, namely length, breadth, thickness: hauing part out of part, as head out of feete, and feet out of head, being also circumscribed, visible, touchable: in a word, it hath all things in it, which by order of creation, belong to a body. It will be said, that the body of Christ may remaine a true body and yet be altered in respect of some qualitie, as namely circumscription. But I say againe, that local circumscription can no way be severed from a body, it remaining a body. For to be circumscribed in place, is an essentiall propertie of euery quantitie: and quantitie is the common essence of euery bodie. And therefore a bodie in respect of this quantitie must needs be circumscribed in one place. This was the iudgement of Leo, when he said, The body of Christ is by no means out of the truth of our bodie. And Augustine, when he said, Onely God in Christ so comes that he doth not depart: so returns, that hee doth not leave vs: but man according to body is in place, and goes out of the same place, and when hee shall come to another place, hee is not in that place whence he comes. To help the matter, they vie to distinguish thus: Christs body in respect of the whole essence thereof may be in many places; but in respect of the whole quantitie, whereby it is only in one place: but as I haue said, they speake contraries: for quantitie (by all learning) is of the essence of a body, without which a body cannot be.

4. In the Crede we confesse that Christ is ascended into heauen, and there after his ascension sits at the right hand of his Father, & that according to his manhood. Hence I conclude, that Christs body is not really and locally in the Sacrament, & in euery Host, which the priest consecrath. This argument was good when Vigilius against Eutyches said, When it (the flesh) was on earth, it was not in heauen: and because it is now in heauen, it is not on earth: and he addes afterward, that this is the Catholike faith & confession. And it was good when Fulgentius said, According to his humane substance

he was absent from earth, when he was in heaven, & he left the earth when he ascended into heaven. And, The same inseparable Christ, according to his whole mankind leaving the earth, locally ascended into heaven, & sits at the right hand, & according to the same whole mankind, he is to come to judgement.

And it was good when Cyril said, No man doubts but that when he ascended into heaven, though he be always present by the power of his spirit, he was absent in respect of the presence of his flesh. And it was good w^t Augustine said, According to the flesh which the Word assumed, he ascended into heaven, he is not here: there he sits at the right hand of the Father: and he is here according to the presence of his Majesty. And, Hee went as he was man, and he abode as he was God: he went by that whereby he was in one place; he abode by that whereby he was every where.

5. Again, in that we beleue the Catholike Church, it follows that the Catholike Church is inuisible: because things seene are not beleued. And the answer commonly v^d that we beleue the holines of the Church, will not serue the turne. For the words are plaine, and in them we make confession, that wee beleue not onely the holiness of the Church, but also the Church it selfe.

Lastly, the articles, Remission of finnes, Resurrection of the body, and Life euerslasting, containe a confession of speciall faith. For the meaning of them is thus much: I beleue the remission of mine owne finnes, and the resurrection of mine owne body to life euerslasting: and that by the iudgement of learned antiquitie. Augustine saith, If thou also beleue that thou shalt rise againe and ascend into heaven (because thou art sure of so great a payre) thou art certaine of so great a gift. And, Make not Christ lesse, who brings thee to the kingdom of heauen, for remission of finnes. Without this faith, if any come to baptisme, he shuts the gate of mercie against himselfe. And, whosoever faithfully beleueeth, and holds this profession of his faith (in which all his finnes are forgiven him) let him prepare his will to the will of God, and not feare his passage by death. And, The whole Sacrament of baptisme stands in this, that we beleue the resurrection of the body, and remission of finnes to be giuen vs of God. And, He gaue these keys to the Church —, that whosoever in his Church, should not beleue his finnes to be forgiven, they should not be forgiven vnto him; and whosoever beleued, and turned from them, abiding in the lappe of the said Church, at length shall be healed by faith and amendment of life. And, That which thou hast heard to be fulfilled in the glorious resurrection of Christ, beleue that the very same shall be fulfilled in thee, in the last iudgement, and the resurrection of thy flesh shall restore thee for all euill. For vnlesse thou shalt beleue that thou art to be repaired by death, thou canst not come to the reward of life euersall. And in ancient time, the article of the resurrection hath bene rehearsed on this manner. The resurrection of the flesh: and the last applied vnto it, To euerslasting life. Hence then two maner opinions of the Church of Rome are quite ouerthrowne: one, that we cannot by speciall faith be certaine of the remission of our finnes, and the saluation of our soules: the other that a man truly iustified may fall and be damned. Now this cannot be, if the practise of the ancient Church be good, which hath taught vs to beleue euerslasting life ioyntly with remission of finnes.

To come to the Decalogue, first of all it is a rule in expounding the fowerall commandements, that where any vice is forbidden, there the contrarie vertue is commanded, and all vertues of the same kind, with all their causes, occasions, furtherances. This rule is granted of all: and hence it followes, that counsels of perfections, if they haue in them any furtherance of vertue, are inioyned in and by the law, and therefore prescribe no state of perfection beyond the scope of the law.

Secondly, the commandement, Thou shalt not make to thy selfe any graven image, &c. hath two fowerall parts. The first forbids the making of carued or graven images: the second forbids the adoration of them. Now the first part is notably expounded by Moses, Deut. 4. 16. Take good keede vnto your selues that ye corrupt not your selues, and make you a graven image or representation of any figure in the likenes of male or female. Marke the reason of this prohibition in the same place: for (saith he) ye saw no image in the day the Lord spake vnto you in Horeb. And v. 12. Ye heard the voice of the words, but saw no similitude: saue a voice. Now the reason being vnderstood of the image of God himselfe, the prohibition must needs be vnderstood. Again, there is no question, that God directeth his commandement against a sinne in speculation, but against some common and wicked practise of the Iewes, & that was to reuelent God himselfe in likenesses and bodily formes, Esa. 40. 18. And that was also the practise of the Gentiles, that were more grosse in this kind then the Iewes. Rom. 1. 23. This then is plaine to any indifferent man, that the first part of the commandement forbids the making of graven images, or likenesses of the true Iehovah: and thus the Romane Catechisme vnderstandes the words. As for the second part, it must be vnderstood according to the meaning of the first: and therefore it forbids vs, to bow down to any image of God. Hence then it followes, that to worship God or Saints in, or at images, and to worship images with religious worship, is abominable idolatry. And common reason might teach vs thus much. For they that adore and worship the true God in images, doe bind the presence of God, his operation, grace, & his hearing vs, to certaine things, places, figures, to which he hath not bound himselfe, either by commandement or promise: and this is, otherwise to worship God, and to seeke for his blessings, then he hath commanded himselfe to be worshipped, or promised to heare vs.

Vpon

Vpon this ground is plainly ouerthrowne the excuse which they make, that they worship not images, but God and Saints in images: for neither God nor the Saints doe acknowledge this kinde of honour, but they abhorre it. Whence it followes necessarily, that they worship nothing beside the image, or the deuce of their owne braine, in which they faile to themselves such a God as will be worshipped, and receive our prayers at images. It will bee said, that the Papists doe not otherwise tie the worship and inuocation of God to images, then God tyed himselfe to the Sanctuary and the temple of Salomon. And I say againe, it was the will of God that he would shew his presence, and bee worshipped at the Sanctuary, and the Iewes had the warrant of Gods Word for it: but we haue no likewise warrant, either by promise or commandement to tie Gods presence to an image or crucifix. Again, reason yet further may discount their idolatry. They, which worship they know not what, worship an idol: but the Papists worship they know not what: I proue it thus. To the consecration of the host, there is required the intention of the Priest, at the least virtually, as they say; and if this be true, it followes that none of them can come to the Masse, or pray in faith, but hee must alwaies doubt of that which is lifted vp by the hands of the Priest in the Masse: whether it be bread or the bodie and blood of Christ. For none can haue any certainty of the intention of the priest in consecrating this bread and this wine: but rather may haue a iust occasion of doubting, by reason of the common ignorance and loosenesse of life in such persons.

Thirdly, the commandement touching the Sabbath, giues a liberty to worke fixe daies in the ordinary affaires of our callings: and this liberty cannot be repealed by any creature. The Church of Rome therefore erreth, in that it preferreth set and ordinarie festiual daies, not onely to God, but also to Saints, inioyning them as traitly and with as much solemnity to be observed as the Sabbath of the Lord.

Fourthly, the fifth commandement, or (as they say) the fourth, inioynes children to obey father and mother in all things, especially in matters of moment, as in their marriage and choice of their callings: and that euen to death: and yet the Church of Rome against the intent of this commandement, allows that clandestine marriages, and the vowe of religion shall bee in force, though they bee without, and against the consent of wife and carefull parents.

Fifthly, the last commandement of lust, forbids the first motions to sinne, that are before consent. I proue it thus. Lusting is forbidden in the former commandements as well as in the last, yea lusting that is ioynd with consent: as in the commandement, Thou shalt not commit adulterie, is forbidden lusting after our neighbours wife: and in the next, lusting after our neighbours goods, &c. Now if the last commandement also forbid no more but lust with consent, it is confounded with the rest: and by this meanes there shall not be ten distinct words, or commandements: which to say is absurd: it remains therefore that the lust here forbidden goes before consent. Again, the Philosophers knew that lust with consent was euill, euen by the light of nature: but Paul a learned Pharisee, and therefore more then a Philosopher, knew not lust to be sinne, that is forbidden in this commandement. Rom. 7. 7. Lust therefore that is forbidden here, is without consent. Wicked then is the doctrine of the Romane Church, teaching that in euery moral sinne is required an ill commanded of the will: and hence they say, many thoughts against faith, and vnclane imaginations are no finnes.

6. Lastly, the words of the second commandement, And thou shalt love me, &c. teach that Ioue me and keepe my commandments, ouerthrowes all humane merits. For if thereward be giuen of mercie to them that keepe the law, it is not giuen for the merit of the worke done.

To come to the third part of the Catechisme: the Lords prayer is a most absolute and perfect forme of prayer. For which cause it was called of Tertullian, The breuierie of the Gospel: and Celsinus saith, The law of praying is the law of beleuing, and the law of working. Now in this prayer wee are taught to direct our prayers to God alone, Our Father, &c. and that onely in the name and mediation of Christ. For God is our Father onely by Christ. It is needlesse therefore, to vse any inuocation of Saints, or to make them our mediators of intercession vnto God: and it is sufficient if we pray onely vnto God in the name of Christ alone.

2. In the fourth petition, we say thus, Give vs our daily bread. In which words, wee acknowledge that euery morsel of bread is the meere gift of God. What madnesse then is it for vs to thinke, that wee should merit the kingdom of heauen by workes, that cannot merit so much as bread?

3. In the next petition, Forgiue vs our debts, foure opinions of the Romane religion are directly ouerthrowne. The first is, concerning humane Satisfactions. For the child of God is here after his conuersion taught, to humble himselfe day by day, & to pray for the pardon of his daily sins; now to make satisfaction, and to sue for pardon, be contrary. The second opinion here ouerthrowne, is touching merits. For we doe acknowledge our selues to be debtors vnto God, yea bankrupts, and that beside the maine summe of many thousand talents, we daily increase the debt, therefore we cannot possibly merit any of the blessings of God. It is meere madnesse to thinke, that they which cannot pay their debts, but rather increase

tract. c. 27
con. 4.

Ggg 4 then

them day by day, should deserve or purchase any of the goods of the creditours, or the pardon of their debts: and if any favour be shewed them, it comes of meere good will without the least desert. In a word, this must be thought vpon, that if all we can doe, will not keepe vs from increasing the maine summe of our debt, much lesse shall wee be able by any merit to diminish the same: by good right therefore doe all good seruants cast downe themselves and pray, Forgiue vs our debts. The third opinion is, that punishment may be retained, the fault being wholly remitted: but this cannot stand, for here sinne is called our debt: because by nature we owe vnto God obedience, and for the defect of this payment, we further owe vnto him the forfeiture of punishment. Sinne then is called our debt in respect of the punishment. And therefore when we pray for the pardon of sinne, we require the pardon not only of fault, but of the whole punishment. And when a debt is pardoned, it is absurd to thinke that the least payment would remaine. The fourth opinion is, that a man in this life may fulfill the law, whereas in this place euery seruant of God is taught to aske a daily pardon for the breach of the law. Answer is made, that our daily sins are venial and not against the law, but beside the law. But this which they say is against the petition: for a debt that comes by forfeiture is against the bond or obligation. Now euery sinne is a debt causing the forfeiture of punishment; and therefore is not beside, but directly against the law.

4. In this clause, As we forgiue our debtors, it is taken for granted, that we may certainly know that we are in loue and charitie with men, when we make reconciliation: why then may we not know certainty that we repent, and beleue, and are reconciled to God? which all Romane Catholikes deny.

5. In the last words, and leade vs not into temptation, wee pray not, that God would free vs from temptation (for it is otherwhiles good to be tempted, 1. Pet. 2. 1.) but that we be not left to the malice of Sathan, and held captiue of the temptation, for here to be lede into temptation, and to be deliuered, are opposed. Now hence I gather, that hee which is the childe of God truly iustified and sanctified, shall neuer fall wholly and finally from the grace of God: and I conclude on this manner. That which we aske according to the will of GOD, shall be granted, but this the childe of God asketh, that he might neuer be wholly forsaken of his Father, and left captiue in temptation. This therefore shall be granted.

6. This clause Amen, signifieth a speciall faith touching all the former petitions, that they shall be granted: and therefore a speciall faith concerning remission of sinnes: which the Romane Church denieth.

To come to the last part, to the institution of the sacrament of the Lords supper, 1. Cor. 11. 23. In which first of all the recall presence is by many circumstances overthrowne. Out of the words, he tooke and brake, it is plaine, that which Christ tooke was not his body: because he cannot be said with his owne hands to haue taken, held, and broken himselfe, but the very bread. Again, Christ said not: vnder the forme of bread, or in bread: but This, that is, bread is my body. 3. Bread was not giuen for vs, but onely the body of Christ: and in this first institution, the body of Christ was not really giuen to death. 4. The cup is the new Testament by a figure: why may not the bread be the body of Christ by a figure also? 5. Christ did eate the supper, but not himselfe. 6. We are bidden to doe it, still he come: Christ then is not bodily present. 7. Christ bids the bread to be eaten in remembrance of him: but signes of remembrance are of things absent. If the Popish reall presence be granted, then the body and blood of Christ are either suered, or ioyned together: if suered, then Christ is still crucified: if ioyned together, then the bread is both the body and blood of Christ: whereas the institution faith, The bread is the body, and the wine is the blood.

2. Again, here is condemned the administration of the Sacrament vnder one only kinde. For the commandment of Christ is, Drinke ye all of this, Mat. 26. 27. And this commandment is rehearsed to the Church of Corinth in these words: Doethis as oft as ye drinke it in remembrance of me, 1. Cor. 11. 25. And no power can reuerse this commandment: because it was established by the soueraigne head of the Church.

These few lines, as also the former treatise, I offer to the view and reading of them that fauour the Romane religion: willing them with patience to consider this one thing, that their religion, if it were Catholike and Apostolike (as they pretend) could not be contrarie to much as in one point, to the grounds of all Catechismes, that haue bin vsed in Churches confessing the name of Christ, euer since the Apostles dayes. And whereas it crosseeth the said grounds in sundrie points of doctrine, (as I haue proued) it is a plaine argument, that the present Romane religion is degenerate. I write not this, despising or hating their persons for their religion, but wishing faithfully their conuerfion in this world, and their saluation in the world to come.

FINIS.

A DECLARATION OF THE TRUE MANNER OF KNOWING CHRIST CRUCIFIED.

GAL. 6. verse 14.

God forbid that I should reioyce, but in the Crosse of our Lord Iesus Christ, &c.

To the Reader.

T is the common sinne of men at this day, and that in the very places of learning, that Christ crucified is not knowne as he ought. The right knowledge of whom, is not to make often mention of his death and passion, and to call him our Saniour, or to handle the whole mystery of God incarnate soundly or learnedly; (though that be a worthy gift of God) but first of all, by the consideration of the passion to be touched with an inward and a lively feeling of our sinnes, for which our Redeemer suffered the pangs of hell, and to grow to a thorough dislike of our sinnes, and our liues past for them, and from the ground of the heart to purpose a reformation and a conformity with Christ in all good duties that concerne man: secondly, in the passion, as in a myrrour, to behold, and in beholding to labour to comprehend the length, the breadth, the height, the depth of the loue of the Father, that gave his owne deare Sonne to death; and the goodnesse of the Sonne, that loved his enemies more then himselfe: that our hearts might be rooted and grounded in the same loue, and be further inflamed to loue God againe.

To further this true manner of knowing Christ crucified, I haue penned these few lines, ready to be as thy leasure, and haue care to put them in print: otherwise, thou art but an enemy of the crosse of Christ, though thou professe his name neuer so much. Ian. 3. 1596.

WILLIAM PERKINS.

Of the right knowledge of Christ crucified.

Esa. 53. 11

Ioh. 17. 3.

1. Cor. 7.

Gal. 6. 14.

Phil. 3. 8.

IT is the most excellent and worthy part of diuine wisdom to know Christ crucified. The Prophet Esaia saith; The knowledge of my righteous seruant: that is, Christ crucified, shall iustifie many. And Christ himselfe saith; This is life eternall, to know thee the only God, and whom thou hast sent, Iesus Christ. And Paul saith; I have decreed to know nothing among you, but Iesus Christ and him crucified. Again, God forbid that I should reioyce in any thing, but in the crosse of our Lord Iesus Christ. Again, I thinke all things but losse for the excellent knowledge sake of Christ Iesus my Lord, and doe iudge them but dung, that I might winne Christ.

In the right way of knowing Christ crucified, two points must be considered: one, how Man for his part is to know Christ; the other, how he is to be knowne of Man.

Teaching the first: Man must know Christ not generally and confusedly, but by a lively, powerfull, and operative knowledge; for otherwise the diuels themselves know Christ.

In this knowledge, three things are required. The first is notice or consideration, whereby thou must conceiue in mind, vnderstand, and seriously thinke thy selfe of Christ, as he is reuealed in the history of the Gospell, and as he is offered to thy particular person, in the ministry of the word and Sacraments. And that this consideration may not be dead and idle in thee, two things must be done. First, thou must labour to feelle thy selfe to stand in need of Christ crucified; yea, to stand in excecutive need euen of the very least drop of his blood, for the washing away of thy sins. And vntill thou thoroughly feellest thy selfe, to want all that goodnes and gracie that is in Christ; and that thou euen stand in extreme need of his passion, thou shalt neuer learne to teach Christ in deed and truth. The second thing is, with the vnderstanding of the doctrine of Christ, to ioyne thirsting, whereby man in very foule and spirittuall long after the participation of Christ, and with in this case as Sampson said; Give me water, I die for thirst.

The second part of knowledge is application, whereby thou must know and beleue, not onely that Christ was crucified, but that hee was crucified for thee; for thee I say in particular. Here two rules must be remembered and practised. One, that Christ on the crosse was thy pledge and suretie in particular, that hee then stood in the very roome and place, in which thou thy selfe in thine owne person, shouldst haue stood: that thy very personall and particular sins were imputed and applied to him: that he stood guilty as a malefactor for them, and suffered the very pangs of hell, and that his sufferings are as much in acceptation with God, as if thou hadst borne the curse of the law in thine own person eternally. The holding and beleueing of this point, is the very foundation of religion, as also of the Church of God. Therefore in any wife be carefully to apply Christ crucified to thy selfe: and as Elizem, when hee would reuiue the childe of the Shunamite, went vp and lay vpon him, and put his mouth vpon his mouth, and his hands vpon his hands, and his eyes vpon his eyes, and stretched himselfe vpon him: euen so, if thou wouldest be reuiued to euertlasting life, thou must by faith as it were set thy selfe vpon the crosse of Christ, and apply thy hands to his hands, thy feete to his feete, and thy sinfull heart to his beleueing heart: and content not thy selfe with Thomas, to put thy finger in his side, but euen diue and plunge thy selfe wholly, both body and soule, into the wounds and blood of Christ. This will make thee to cry with Thomas, and say; My Lord my God: and this is to be crucified with Christ. And yet doe not content thy selfe with this, but by faith also descend with Christ from the crosse to the graue, and bury thy selfe in the very buriall of Christ; and then looke as the dead souldier tumbled into the graue of Elizem, was made aliue at the very touching of his body: so shalt thou by a spirituall touching of Christ dead & buried, be quickened to life euertlasting. The second rule is, that Christ crucified is thine, beeing really giuen thee of God the Father, euen as truly as houses and lands are giuen of earthly fathers to their children; thus must thou firmly hold and beleue: and hence it is, that the benefits of Christ, are before God ours inderde for our iustification and saluation.

The third point in liuely knowledge is, that by all the afflictions of our hearts, we must be carried to Christ, and as it were, transformed into him. Whereas he gaue himselfe wholly for vs, we can do no lesse then bestow our hearts vpon him. Wee must therefore labour about all, following the Martyr Ignatius, who said, that Christ his loue was crucified. Wee must value him at so high a price, that hee must be vnto vs better then ten thousand worlds: yea, all things which we enjoy, must be but as drosse and dung vnto vs in respect of him. Lastly, all our ioy, reioycing, comfort, and confidence; must be placed in him. And that thus much is requisite in knowledge, it appears by the common rule of expounding Scripture, that workes of knowledge imply affection. And indeed it is but a knowledge swimming in the braine, which doth not alter and dispose that affection, and the whole man.

Thus much of our knowledge. Now follows the second point, how Christ is to be knowne. Hee must not be knowne barely as God, or as man, or as a few, borne in the tribe of Judah, or as a terrible and iust Iudge, but as he is our Redeemer, and the very price of our redemption: and in this respect, hee must be considered as the common treasure and store house of Gods Church, as Paul testifieth when hee saith, In him are all the treasures of knowledge and wisdom hid. And againe, Blessed be God, which hath blessed vs with all spiritual blessings in Christ. And S. Iohn saith, that of his fullnesse, we receiue grace for grace. Here then let vs marke, that all the blessings of God, whether spirituall or temporall; all, I say, without exception are conueyed vnto vs from the Father, by Christ: and so they must be receiued of vs, and no otherwise. That this point may be further cleared, the benefits which we receiue from Christ, are to be handled, and the manner of knowing them. The benefits of Christ are three, his Merit, his Verite, his Example.

Eph. 1. 3.

Ioh. 1. 10.

2. King. 34.

The merit of Christ, is the value and price of his death and passion, whereby any man is perfectly reconciled to God. This reconciliation hath two parts, remission of finnes, and acceptation to life euertlasting. Remission of finnes, is the remouing, or the abolishing both of the guilt and punishment of mans finnes. By guilt, I vnderstand a subjection or obligation to punishment, according to the order of diuine iustice. And the punishment of sinne, is the condemnation or curse of the whole law, which is the suffering of the first, and second death. Acceptation to life euertlasting, is a giuing of right and title to the kingdome of heauen, and that for the merit of Christs obedience imputed. Now this benefit of reconciliation, must be knowne, not by conceit and imagination; nor by carnall presumption; but by the inward testimony of Gods spirit, certifying our consciences thereof; which for this cause, is called the spirit of Reuelation. And that we may attain to infallible assurance of this benefit, we must call to mind the promises of the Gospell, touching remission of finnes, and life euertlasting. This beeing done, wee must further strive and endeavour, by the assurance of Gods spirit, to apply them to our selues, and to beleue that they belong vnto vs; and we must also put our selues often to the exercises of innocation and true repentance. For in, and by our crying vnto heauen to God for our reconciliation, comes the assurance thereof, as Scriptures and christian experience makes manifest. And if so it fall out, that any man in temptation, apprehend and feelle nothing but the furious indignation and wrath of God against all reason and feeling, hee must hold to the merit of Christ, and know a point of religion hard to be learned, that God is a most louing Father to them that haue care to serue him, euen at that instant, when he shewes himselfe a most fierce and terrible enemy.

From the benefit of reconciliation proceede foure benefits. First, that excellent peace of God that passeth all vnderstanding, which hath fixe parts. The first is, peace with God and the blessed Trinity. Rom. 5. 1. Being iustified wee haue peace with God. The second, peace with the Angels of God ascending and descending vpon the Sonne of man. And that Angels, like armies of souldiers incampe about the seruants of God, and as nurces beare them in their armes, that they be neither hurt by the diuell and his Angels, nor by his instruments, it proceeds of this, that they being in Christ, are partakers of his merits. The third is, peace with all such as feare God, & beleue in Christ. This Esaia foretold when he said, that the wolfe shall dwell with the lambe, and the leopard with the kidde, and the lyon and a fat beest together, and that a little childe shall leade them, &c. 11. v. 6. The fourth is, peace with a mans owne selfe, when the conscience walked in the blood of Christ, ceaseth to accuse and terrifie; and when the will, affections and inclinations of the whole man, are obedient to the minde, enlightened by the Spirit and word of God, Coloss. 3. 15. Let the peace of God rule in your hearts. The fifth is, peace with enemies, and that two waies first, in that such as beleue in Christ, seeke to haue peace with all men, hurting none, but doing good to all. Secondly, in that God restraines the malice of the enemies, and inclines their hearts to be peaceable. Thus God brought Daniel into loue & fauour with the chiefe of the Eunuches. The last is, peace with all creatures in heauen & earth, in that they serue for mans saluation, Psalm. 91. 13. Thou shalt walke vpon the lyon & the Aspe, the yong Lyon & the Dragon shall thou tread vnder foote. Hof. 2. 18. And in that day will I make a couenant for them, with the beasts of the field, & with the fowles of heauen. Now this benefit of peace, is knowne, partly by the testimony of the spirit; & partly by a daily experience thereof.

The second benefit, is a recovery of that right and title, which man hath to all creatures in heauen and earth, and all temporall blessings, which right Adam lost to himselfe, and euerie one of his posteritie, 1. Cor. 3. 22. Whether it be the world, or life, or death, whether they be things present, or things to come, all are yours. Now, the right way of knowing this one benefit, is this. When God vouchsafeth meate, drinke, apparell, houses, lands, &c. Wee must not barely consider them as blessings of God, for that very heathen men, which know not Christ, can do: but we must acknowledge and esteeme them as blessings, proceeding from the special loue of God the Father, whereby he loues vs in Christ: and procured vnto vs by the merit of Christ crucified: and we must labour in this point to be settled and perswaded: and so of as we see and vfe the creatures of God for our owne benefite, this point should come to our minds. Blessings conceived apart from Christ, are misconceiued: whatsoever they are in themselves, they are no blessings vs, but in, and by Christs merits. Therefore this order must be obserued touching earthly blessings. First, we must haue part in the merit of Christ: and then secondly, by means of that merit, a right before God, and comfortable vfe of the thing we enioy. All men that haue and vfe the creatures of God otherwise, as gifts of God, but not by Christ, vfe them but as flat usurpers and theeves. For this cause it is not sufficient for vs generally & confusedly, to know Christ to be our Redeemer, but we must learne to see, know and acknowledge him in euery particular gift and blessing of God. If men, vying the creatures of meate and drinke, could, when they behold them, withall by the eye of faith, behold in them the merit of Christs passion, there would not be so much exesse and ryot, so much surfeiting & drunkennesse as there is: and if men could consider their houses and lands, &c. as blessings to them, and that by the fountaine of blessing, the merits of Christ, there should not be so much fraud & deceit, so much iniustice and oppression in bargaining as there is.

That which I haue now said of meates, drinckes, apparell, must likewise be vnderstood of Gentry and Nobilitie, in as much as noble birth without new birth in Christ, is but an earthly vantage: the like may be said of physicke, sleepe, health, libertie, yea, of the very breathing in the ayre. And to goe yet further, in our recreation Christ must be knowen: for all recreation staes in the vfe of all things indifferent, and the holy vfe of all things indifferent, is purchased vnto vs by the blood of Christ. For this cause it is very necesse, that Christian men and women, should with their carefully recreation, ioyne spiritual meditation of the death of Christ, and from the one, take occasion to bethinke themselves of the other. If this were practised, there should not be so many vnlawfull sports and delights, and so much abuse of lawfull recreation, as there is.

The third benefite is, that all crookes, afflictions, and iudgements whatsoever, cease to be curses and punishment to them that are in Christ, and are onely means of correction or triall, because his death hath taken away, not some few parts, but all, and euery part of the curse of the whole law. Now, in all croffes, Christ is to be knowen of vs on this manner. We must iudge of our afflictions, as chastisements or trials, proceeding not from a reuenging iudge, but from the hand of a bountifull and louing Father: and therefore they must be conceived in, and with the merit of Christ; and if we doe otherwise regard them, we take them as curses and punishment of sinne. And hence it followes, that subiection to Gods hand in all croffes, is a marke and badge of the true Church.

The last benefite is, that death is properly no death, but a rest or sleepe. Death therefore must be knowen and considered, not as it is set forth in the law, but as it is altered and changed by the death of Christ: and when death comes, we must then looke vpon it through Christs death, as through a glasse: and thus it will appeare to bee but a passage from this life to everlasting life.

Thus much of the merit of Christ crucified: Now, followes his vertue, which is the power of his godhead, whereby he creates new hearts in all them that beleene in him, and makes them new creatures. This vertue is double: the first is the power of his death, whereby he freed himselfe from the punishment and imputation of our finnes: and the same vertue serueth to mortifie and crucifie the corruptions of our minds, wills, affections, euen as a coraue doth waite and consume the rotten and dead flesh in any part of mans body.

The second is, the vertue of Christs resurrection, which is also the power of his Godhead, whereby he raised himselfe from death to life: and the very same power serueth to raise those that belong to Christ, from their sinns in this life, and from the graue in the day of the last iudgement. Now the knowledge of this double vertue, must not be onely speculative, that is, barely conceiued in the braine, but it must be experimentall: because we ought to haue experience of it in our hearts and liues, and we should labour by all means possible, to feele the power of Christs death, killing & mortifying our finnes, and the vertue of his resurrection, in the putting of spirituall life into vs, that we may be able to say, that we liue not, but that Christ liues in vs. This was one of the most excellent and principall things which Paul fought for, who saith: I haue counted all things losse, and doe iudge them to be dung, that I might know him, and the vertue of his resurrection, Phil. 3. 8. 10. And he saith that this is the right way to know and learne Christ, to cast off the old man, which is corrupt through the deceivable lusts, and to put on the new man, which is created in right conscience and true holinesse, Eph. 4. 21. 24.

The third benefite, is the example of Christ. We deceiue our selues, if we thinke that he is only to be knowen of vs as a redeemer, & not as a speciacle or pattern of all good duties, to which we ought to conform our selues. Good men indeed, that haue bene, or in present are vpon the earth the seruants of God, must be followed of vs: but they must be followed no otherwise then they follow Christ, and Christ must be followed in the practise of euery good duty that may concerne vs, without exception simply and absolutely, 1. Cor. 11. 1.

Our

Our conformity with Christ stands either in the framing of our inward & spirituall life, or in the practise of outward & morall duties.

Conformitie of spirituall life is, not by doing that which Christ did vpon the croffe, and afterward, but a doing of the like, by a certain kinde of imitation. And it hath foure parts. The first is, a spirituall oblation. For as Christ in the garden, and vpon the croffe, by prayer made with strong cries and teares, presented and resigned himselfe to be a sacrifice of propitiation to the iustice of his Father for mans sinnes: so must we also in prayer, present and resigne our selues, our soules, our bodies, our vnderstanding, will, memorie, affections, & all we haue, to the seruice of God, in the generall calling of a Christian, and in the particular callings, in which he hath placed vs. Take an example in Dauid: Sacrifice and burnt offering (saith he) thou wouldst not, but eates thou leaue pierced vnto me: then said I, loe I come: I desire to doe thy will. O God, yea, thy law is within my heart, Psa. 40. 7. The second is, conformity in the croffe two waies. For first, as he bare his own croffe to the place of execution: so must we as good disciples of Christ, deny our selues, and take vpon all the croffes & afflictions that the hand of God shall lay vpon vs. Again, we must become like vnto him, in the crucifying and mortifying the body of sinne, which we carry about vs. Gal. 5. 24. They which are Christs, haue crucified the flesh with the afflictions and lust thereof. We must doe as the Iewes did, we must sit vpon the croffes and gibbets whercon we are to fasten and hang this flesh of ours: that is, the sinne and corruption that cleaues and stickes vnto vs, and by the sword of the spirit, wound it euen to death. This being done, we must yet go further, and labour by experience to fee and feele the very death of it, & to lay it as it were in a graue neuer to rise againe: and therefore, we should daily cast new moulds vpon it. The third is, a spirituall resurrection, whereby wee should by Gods grace vfe means that we may euery day more & more come out of our sinns, as out of a loathsome graue, to liue vnto God in newnesse of life, as Christ rose from his graue. And because it is an hard matter for a man to come out of the graue or rather dungeon of his finnes, this worke cannot be done at once, but by degrees, as God shall giue grace.

Considering we lie by nature dead in our sinns, and stinke in them as loathsome carions: first we must begin to stirre our selues as a man that comes out of a swoone, awakened by the word and voice of Christs sounding in our deafe eares: secondly, we must raise vpon our minds to a better state and condition, as wee vfe to raise vpon our bodies: after this, we must put out of the graue, first one hand, then the other. This done, we must doe our endeavour as it were vpon our knees, at the least to put one foote out of the sepulcher of sinne, the rather when we see our selues to haue one piece of the body in the graue of the earth, that in the day of iudgement wee may be wholly deliuered from all bonds of corruption. The fourth part is, a spirituall ascension into heauen, by a continuall elevation of the heart and minde to Christ, sitting at the right hand of the Father, as Paul saith, Phil. 3. 20. Haue your conversation in heauen: and, Col. 3. 1. If ye be risen with Christ, seek those things that are above.

Conformitie in morall duties, is either general or speciall. General, isto be holy as he is holy. Rom. 8. 29. They whom he knew before he hath predestinate to be like the image of his son, that is, not onely in the croffe, but also in holinesse and glory. 1. Ioh. 3. 3. He which hath this hope, purifieth himselfe euen as he is pure.

Speciall conformitie, is chiefly in foure vertues: Faith, Loue, Meekenesse, Humilitie.

We must bee like him in faith. For as he, when he apprehended the wrath of God, and the very pangs of hell were vpon him, wholly staid himselfe vpon the aide, helpe, protection, and good pleasure of his Father, euen to the last: so must we by a true and liuely faith depend wholly on Gods mercy in Christ, as it were with both our hands, in peace, in trouble, in life, and in the very pang of death: and we must not in any wise let our hold goe; no though wee should feele our selues descend to hell.

We must bee like him in meekenesse. Math. 11. 29. Learn of me, that I am mecke and lowly. His meekenesse shewed it selfe in the patient bearing of all injuries & abuses, offered by the hands of sinfull and wretched men, and in the suffering of the curse of the law, without grudging or repining, & with submission to his Fathers will in all things. Now the more we follow him herein, the more that we be conformable to him in his death and passion, Phil. 3. 10.

Thirdly, he must be our example in loue: he loned his enemies more then himselfe. Eph. 5. 2. Walk in loue euen as Christ loued us, and hath giuen himselfe for us an oblation and sacrifice of a sweet smelling sauour vnto God. The like loue ought we to shew, by doing seruice to all men in the compass of our calling, and by beeing all things to all men (as Paul was) that wee might doe him all the good we can, both for body and soule, 1. Cor. 9. 19.

Lasting, we must follow Christ in humilitie: wherof he is a wonderful spectacle, in that being God, he became man for vs: and of a man, became a worme that is troden vnder foote, that he might saue man. Phil. 2. 5. Let the same minde bee in you that was in Iesus Christ, who being in the forme of God, humbled himselfe, and became obedient to the death, euen to the death of the croffe.

And here we must obserue, that the example of Christ hath something more in it then any other example hath or can haue: for it doth not onely shew vs what we ought to doe (as the examples of other men doe) but it is a remedie against many vices, and a maiore to many good duties. First of all, the glorious confidence ration of this, that the very Son of God himselfe suffered all the paines and torments of hell on the crosse for our finnes, is the proper and most effectual meane to stirre vp our hearts to a godly sorrow for them. And that this thing may come to passe, every man must be fetted without doubt, that he was the man that crucified Christ; that he is to be blamed as well as Indus, Herod, Pontius Pilate, and the Iewes: and that his sins should be the nailes, the speares, and the thornes that pierced him. When this meditation begins to take place, bitterness of spirit, with wailing and mourning, takes place in like manner. Zach. 12. 10. And they shall look upon him, whom they have pierced: and they shall lament for him as one lamenteth for his only sonne. Peter in his first Sermon strooke the Iewes as with a thunder-clappe from heaven, when he laid vnto them, To haue crucified the Lord of glorie, so at the same time 3. thousand men were pricked in their hearts, and said, Act. 2. 37. Men and brethren, what shall we do to be saved? Again, if Christ for our sins shed his heart blood, and if our sins made him sweate water and blood; O then why should not we our selues shed bitter teares, and why should not our hearts bleed for them? Hee that finds himselfe so dull and hardened that the passion of Christ doth not humble him, is in a lamentable case, for there is no faith in the death of Christ effectual in him as yet.

Secondly, the meditation of the passion of Christ, is a most notable meane to breed repentance and reformation of life in time to come. For when we begin to thinke, that Christ crucified, by suffering the first and second death, hath procured vnto vs remission of all our finnes past, and freed vs from hell, death, and damnation: then if there be but a sparke of grace in vs, we begin to be of another minde, and to reason thus with our selues: What? hath the Lord bene thus mercifull vnto mee, that am in my selfe but a firebrand of hell, as to free me from deserved destruction, & to receive me to fauour in Christ? yea, no doubt he hath; his name be blessed therefore: I will not therefore sinne any more as I haue done, but rather endeavour hereafter to keepe my selfe from euery euill way. And thus faith purifies both heart and life.

Thirdly, when thou art in any paine of body or sickness, thinke how light these are, compared to the agony and bloody sweate, to the crowne of thornes and nailes of Christ. When thou art wronged in word or deede, by any man, turne thine eye to the crosse, consider how meekely hee suffered all abuses for the most part in silence, and prayed for them that crucified him. When thou art tempted with pride or vain-glory, consider how for thy proper sins Christ was despised and mocked, and condemned among theues. When anger and desire of reuenge inflame thine heart, thinke how Christ gaue himselfe to death to save his enemies, euen then when they did most cruelly intreate him, and shed his blood: and by these meditations, specially if they be mingled with faith, thy minde shall be calfed.

Thus we see how Christ crucified, is to be known: and hence ariseth a three-fold knowledge of God, the second of our neighbours, the third of our selues.

Touching the first: if we would know the true God aright, and know him to our saluation, we must know him only in Christ crucified, God in himselfe and his owne maiestie, is inuisible, not onely to the eyes of the body, but also to the very minds of men; and he is revealed to vs onely in Christ, in whom he is to be seene, as in a glasse. For in Christ he setteth forth & giues his iustice, goodness, wisdom, and himselfe wholly vnto vs. For this cause he is called the brighnes of the glory, and the image of the person of the Father, Hebr. 1. 3. and the image of the invisible God, Coloss. 1. 15. Therefore we must not know God, and seeke him any where else but in Christ: and whatsoever out of Christ, comes vnto vs in the name of God, is a flat idol of mans braine.

As for our neighbours, those especially that are of Christs Church, they are to be knowne of vs on this manner: When we are to do any dutie vnto them, we must not barely respect their persons, but Christ crucified in them, and them in Christ. When Paul persecuted thus such as called on the name of Christ, hee then from heaven cried; Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? Here then let this be marked, that when the poore comes to vs for reliefe, it is Christ that comes to our doores, and faith, I am hungry, I am thiristie, I am naked: & let the bowels of compassion be in vs towards them: as towards Christ, vnlesse we will heare that fearefull sentence in the day of iudgement, Go ye cursed into hell &c. I was hungry, and ye fedde me not. I was naked, and ye did not cloath me &c. Mat. 25. 42.

Thirdly, the right knowledge of our selues, ariseth of the knowledge of Christ crucified, in whom, and by whom, we come to know five speciall things of our selues. The first, how grievous our finnes are, and therefore how miserable we are in regard of them. If we consider our offences in themselves, and as they are in vs, we may soone be deceived, because the conscience being corrupted, often erreth in giuing testimony, and by that meane, maketh sinne to appeare lesse then it is indeede. But if sin be considered in the death and passion of Christ, wherof it was the cause, and the vileness thereof measured by the vnspokeable torments endured by the Son of God: and if the greatness of the offence of man be esteemed by the endless satisfaction made to the iustice of God, the least sinne that is, will appeare to be a sin indeede, and that most grievous and ougly. Therefore Christ crucified must be vied of vs as a myrrour or looking glasse, in which we may fully take a view of our wretchedness and misery, and what we are by nature. For such as the passion of Christ was in the eyes of men, such is our passion or condition in the eyes of God: and that which wicked men did to Christ, the same doth sinne and Satan to our very soule.

The second point is, that men beleeuing in Christ, are not their own or Lords of themselves, but wholly both body and soule belong to Christ, in that they were giuen to him of God the Father, and he hath purchased them with his owne blood: 1. Corinth. 3. 13. They are Christs, and Christs Gods. Hence it cometh to passe (which is not to be forgotten) that Christ esteemeth all the crosse and afflictions of his peoples as his owne proper afflictions. Hence againe we must learne, to giue vp our selues both body and soule to the honour and seruice of Christ, whose we are.

The third is, that euery true beleuer, not as he is a man, but as he is a new man, or a Christian, hath his being and subsisting from Christ: We are members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bone, Ephes. 5. 30. In which wordes, Paul alludes to the speech of Adam, Gen. 2. 23. Thou art bone of my bone, and flesh of my flesh; and thereby he teacheth, that as Eue was made of a ribbe taken out of the side of Adam, so doth the whole Church of God, and euery man regenerate, spring and arise out of the blood that streamed from the heart and side of Christ crucified.

The fourth is, that all good workes done of vs, proceede from the vertue and merit of Christ crucified: hee is the cause of them in vs, and wee are the causes of them, in and by him. Without mee (saith he. Ioh. 15. 5.) ye can doe nothing: And, Euery branch that beareth not fruit in mee, marke well, hee saith, in mee, hee taketh away Ioh. 15. 2.

The fifth point is, that we owe vnto Christ an endless debt. For he was crucified onely as our suretie and pledge, and in the spectacle of his passion we must consider our selues as the chiefe debtors, and that the very discharge of our debt, that is, the finnes which are inherent in vs, were the proper cause of all the endless paines and torments that Christ endured, that hee might free vs most miserable bankrupts at libertie from hell, death and damnation. For this his vnspokeable goodness, if wee doe but once thinke of it seriously, we must needs confesse that we owe our selues, our soules, and bodies, and all that we haue, as a debt due vnto him. And so soone as any man begins to know Christ crucified, he knowes his owne debt, and thinkes of the payment of it.

Thus we see how Christ is to be known: now we shall not neede to take much examination whether this manner of knowing and acknowledging of Christ, take any place in the world or no: for few there bee that know him as they ought. The Turke euen at this very day knowes him not, but as he was a Prophet. The Iew scorneth his crosse, and passion. The Popish Churches, though in word they confesse him, yet do they not know him as they ought. The Fryers and Iesuites in their Sermons at this day, commonly vse the passion as a meane to stirre vppitie and compassion towards Christ, who being so righteous a man, was so hardly intreated, and to inflame their hearers to an hatred of the Iewes, and Indus, and Pontius Pilate, that put our blessed Saviour to death; but all this may be done in any other historie. And the seruice of God which in that Church stands now in force by the Canons of the Council of Trent, defaceth Christ crucified, in that the passions of Martyrs are made meritorious, and the very wood of the crosse their onely helpe: and the virgin Mary the Queene of heauen, and a mother of mercie, who in remission of finnes may command her sonne: and they giue religious adoration to dumbe crucifixes, made by the hand and art of man.

The common Protestant likewise commeth short herein for three causes. First, where as in word they acknowledge him to be their Saviour that hath redeemed them from their euill conseruation, yet indeede they make him a patron of their sinne. The theefe makes him the receiuer, the murderer makes him his refuge, (a) the adulterer (be it spoken with reuerence vnto his Maiesty) makes him the bawd. For generally men walk on in their euill wayes, some liuing in this sinne, some in that, and yet for all this, they perfwade themselves that God is mercifull, and that Christ hath freed them from death and damnation. Thus Christ that came to abolish sinne, is made a maintainer thereof, and the common pack-horse of the world, to beare euery mans burden. Secondly, men are content to take knowledge of the merit of Christs passion for the remission of their finnes, but in the meane season, the vertue of Christs death in the mortifying of sin, and the blessed example of his passion, which ought to be followed & exprest in our liues and conuerfations, is little or nothing regarded. Thirdly, men vniually content themselves generally and confusedly to know Christ to be their redeemer, neuer once seeking in euery particular estate and condition of life, and in euery particular blessing of God, to feele the benefit of his passion. What is the cause that almost all the world liue in security, neuer almost touched for their horrible finnes? Surely the reason is, because they did neuer yet seriously consider, that Christ in the garden lay grouching vpon the earth, sweating water and blood for their offences. Again, all such as by fraud and oppression, or any kinde of hard dealing suck the blood of poore men, neuer yet knew that their finnes drew out the heart blood of Christ. And proud men & women, that are puffed vp by reason of their attire, which is the badge of their shame, & neuer cease hunting after strange fashions, consider not that Christ was not crucified in gay attire, but naked, that he might beare the whole shame & curse of the law for vs. These & such like, what

on Gal. 6

foeuer they say in word, if wee respect the renown of their liues, are flatte enemies of the crosse of Christ, and tread his precious blood vnder their feete.

Now then, considering this so weighty and speciall point of religion is so much neglected, O man or woman, high or low, young or olde, if thou haue bene wanting this way, begin for very shame to learne, and learning truly to know Christ crucified. That thou maist attain to this, behold him often, not in the wooden crucifixe after the Popish manner, but in the preaching of the word, and in the Sacraments, in which thou shalt see him crucified before thine eyes, Gal. 3. 1. Desire not here vpon earth to beholde him with the bodily eye, but looke vpon him with the eye of true and liuely faith, applying him and his merits to thy selfe as thine owne, and that with broken and bruised heart, as the poore Israelites stung with fiery serpents euen to death, beheld the brazen Serpent. Again, thou must looke vpon him first of all as a glasse or spectacle, in which thou shalt see Gods glorie greater in thy redemption, then in thy creation. In the creation appeared Gods infinite wisdome, power, and goodnesse: in thy redemption by the passion of Christ, his endless iustice and mercie. In the creation thou art a member of the first Adam, and bearest his image: in thy redemption thou art a member of the second Adam. In the first thou art indued with naturall life, in the second with spirituall. In the first thou hast in the person of Eue, thy beginning of the rib of Adam: in the second thou hast thy beginning as thou art born of God out of the blood of Christ. Lastly, in the first God gaue life, in commanding that to bee, which was not: in the second hee giues life, not by life, but by death, euen of his owne Sonne. This is the mysterie, which the Angels themselves desire to looke into, 1. Pet. 1. 12. Secondly, thou must behold him as the full price of thy redemption, and perfect reconciliation with God; and pray earnestly to God, that he would seale vp the same in thy very conscience by his holy Spirit. Thirdly, thou must beholde Christ as an example, to whom thou must confirme thy selfe by regeneration. For this cause giue diligence, that thou maist by experience say, that thou art dead, and crucified, and buried with Christ, and that thou risest again with him to newnesse of life: that he enlighten thy mind, and by degrees reformes thy will and affections, and giues thee both the will and the deed in euery good thing. And that thou maist not faile in this thy knowledge, reade the historie of Christs passion, obserue all the parts and circumstances thereof, and apply them to thy selfe for thy full conuersion. When thou reade that Christ went to the garden, as his custome was, where the Iewes might soone attach him, consider that he went to the death of the crosse for thy sinnes willingly, & not of constraint; and that therefore thou for thy part shouldst do him all seruice freely, and frankly. Psalm 110. 3. When thou hearest that in his agonie his soule was heauie vnto death, know it was for thy sinnes, and that thou shouldst much more conceiue heauines of heart for the same: againe, that this sorrow of his is ioy and reioicing vnto thee, if thou wilt beleue in him; therefore Paul saith, I say againe, reioyce in the Lord. When thou readest that in the garden he prayed lying groueling on his face sweating water and blood, begin to thinke feriously what an vnspokeable measure of Gods wrath was vpon thy blessed Saviour, that did prostrate his body vpon the earth, and cause the blood to follow; and thinke that thy sinnes must needs be most hainous, that brought such bloody and grievous paines vpon him. Also thinke it is a very shame for thee to carry thy head to heauen with laughtie lookes, to wallow in thy pleasures, & to draw the innocent blood of thy poore brethren by oppression & deceit, for whom Christ sweat water & blood, and take an occasion from Christs agonie, to lay aside the pride of thy heart, to be ashamed of thy selfe, to grieue in heart, yea euen to bleed for thine owne offences, casting down & humbling thy selfe with Exra, saying, Exra 9. 6. O my God, I am confounded and ashamed to lift up mine eyes vnto thee, my God: for mine iniquities are increased, & my trespasses are growne vp into taken. When thou reade that Christ was heauen and bound, thinke that thy very sinnes brought him into the power of his enemies; and were the very bonds wherewith hee was tyed: thinke that thou shouldst haue bene bound in the very same manner, vnto him had bene a suretie and pledge for thee: thinke also that thou in the selfe same manner art bound and tyed with the chaines of thine owne sinne, and that by nature thy will, affections, & whole spirit is tyed & chained to the will of the diuel, so as thou canst doe nothing but that which hee willeth: lastly, thinke & beleue that the bonds of Christ serue to purchase thy libertie from hell, death, and damnation. When thou hearest that he was brought before Anas & Caiaphas, thinke it was mee, that thy fiery and pledge, who was to suffer the condemnation due vnto thee, should by the high Priest, as by the mouth of God, be condemned: and wonder at this, that the very coefficientall & eternall Sonne of God, euen the very soueraigne Iudge of the world, should be to be iudged, & that by wicked men; perswading thy selfe that this so great confusion comes of thy sins. Whereupon being further amazed at thy fearefull estate, humble thy selfe in dust & ashes, & pray God so to soften thy stonie heart, that thou maist turne to him, & by true faith lay hold on Christ, who hath thus exceedingly abased himselfe, that his ignominy may be thy glory; and his arraignment thy perfect absolution. When thou reade that Barrabas the murderer was preferred before Christ, though he exceeded both men and Angels in holinesse; thinke it was to manifest his innocencie, and that thy very sinnes pulled vpon him this shameful reproch; and in that for thy cause he was esteemed worse then Barrabas, thinke of thy selfe as a most heynous and wretched sinner, and (as Paul saith, 1. Tim. 1. 15.) the head of all sinners. When thou reade that hee was openly and iudicially condemned to the cursed death of the crosse, consider what is the wrath and furie of God against sinne, and what is his great and infinite mercy to sinners: and in this spectacle looke vpon thy selfe, and with groanes of heart cry out, and say, O good God, what fettest thou before mine eyes? I euen I haue sinned, I am guilty & worthy of damnation. Whence comes this change, that thy blessed Sonne is in my roome, but of thine vnspokeable mercy? Wretch that I am, how haue I forgotten my selfe, and thee also my God? O Sonne of God, how low hast thou abased thy selfe for me? Therefore giue me grace O God, that be-holding mine owne estate in the person of my Saviour thus condemned, I may detest and loathe my sinnes that are the cause thereof, and by a liuely faith imbrace that absolution which thou offerest me in him, who was condemned in my stead and roome. O Iesus Christ Saviour of the world, giue me thy holy and blessed Spirit, that I may iudge my selfe, and be as vile and base in mine owne eyes, as thou wast vile before the Iewes: also vnto me vnto thee by the same Spirit, that in thee I may be as worthy to be accepted before God, as I am worthy in my selfe to be detested for my sins. When thou reade that hee was clad in purple, and crowned with thornes, mocked and spit vpon, behold the euertlasting shame that is due vnto thee, and be ashamed of thy selfe; and in this point confirme thy selfe to Christ, and be content (as he was) to be reproched, abused, and despised, so it be for a good cause. When thou reade that before his crucifying, he was stript of all his cloathes, thinke it was, that hee being naked, might beare thy shame on the crosse, and with his most precious and rich nakednesse couer thy deformitie. When thou reade the complaint of Christ, that he was forsaken of his Father, consider how hee suffered the pangs and torments of hell as thy pledge and suretie. Learne by his vnspokeable torments what a fearefull thing it is to sin against God, and beginne to renounce thy selfe, and to detest thy sinnes, and to walke as a childe of light, according to the measure of grace receiued. When thou comest to die, set before thine eyes Christ in the middelt of all his torments on the crosse: in beholding of which spectacle to thy endless comfort, thou shalt see a paradise in the middelt of hell; God the Father reconciled vnto thee; thy Saviour reaching out his hand vnto thee to receive thy soule vnto him, and his crosse as a ladder to aduance it to eternal glory. Whereas hee cried aloud with a strong voice at the point of death, it was to shew that he died willingly without violence or constraint from any creature, and that if it had so pleased him, hee could haue freed himselfe from death, and haue cast his very enemies to the very bottom of hell. When thou reade that hee commended his soule into the hands of his Father, consider that thy soule also (so be it thou wilt beleue in him) is deliuered vp into the hands of God, and shall be preferred against the rage and malice of all thine enemies, and hereupon thou maist be bolde to commend thy spirit into the hands of God the Father. When thou reade of his death, consider that thy sinnes were the cause of it, and that thou shouldst haue suffered the same eternally, vnto lesse the Sonne of God had come in thy roome: againe, consider his death as a ransom, and apprehend the same by faith as the means of thy life; for by death Christ hath wounded both the first and second death, and hath made his crosse to be a throne or tribunal seate of iudgement against all his thine enemies. When thou reade of the trembling of the earth at the death of Christ, thinke with thy selfe, it did in his kinde, as it were groane vnder the burden of the sinnes of men in the world: and by his motion then, it signified that euen thou and the rest deserved rather to be swallowed of the earth and to go down into the pit alike, then to haue any part in the merit of Christ crucified. When thou reade of his buriall, thinke that it was to raise his death, and to vanquish death euen to his owne denne. Apply this buriall to thy selfe, and beleue that it serues to make thy graue a bed of downe, and to free thy body from corruption. Lastly, pray to God that thou maist feele the power of the spirit of Christ weakening and consuming the body of sinne, euen as a dead corps rots in the graue till it be reformed to dust.

When thou hast thus perused and applied to thy self the history of the passion of Christ, goe yet further, and labour by faith to see Christ crucified in all the workes of God either in thee or vpon thee. Beholde him at thy table at meate and drink, which as it were a liuely sermon, and a daily pledge of the mercie of God in Christ. Behold him in all thine afflictions, as thy partnerer that pitieth thy case & hath compassion on thee. Behold him in thy most dangerous temptations, in which the diuel thundereth damnation, behold him I say as a mightie Samson bearing away the gates of his enemies vpon his owne shoulders, and killing more by death thylife, crucifying the diuel, euen then when he is crucified, by death killing death: by entrance into the graue, opening the graue and giuing life to the dead, and in the house of death spoiling him of all his strength, & power. Behold him in all the afflictions of thy brethren, as though he himselfe were naked, hungry, sick, harbourlesse, and doe vnto them all the good thou canst as to Christ himselfe. If thou wouldst behold God himselfe; looke vnto him in Christ crucified, who is the ingrauen image of the Fathers person; and know it to be a terrible thing in the time of the trouble of thy conscience; to thinke of God without Christ, in whose face the glory of God in his endlesse mercy is to be seene. 2. Cor. 4: 6. If thou wouldst come to God for grace, for comfort, for saluation, for any blessing; come first to Christ hanging, bleeding, dying vpon the crosse; without whom there is no hearing God, no helping God, no saving God, no God to thee at all. In a word, let Christ

A be all things without exception vnto thee, Col. 3: 11. For when thou prayest for any blessing either temporall or spirituall, be it whatsoever it will be or can be, thou must aske it at the hands of God the Father by the merit and mediatio of Christ crucified. Now look as we aske blessings at Gods hand, so must wee receive them of him; and as they are received, so must we possesse and vse them daily, namely, as gifts of God procured to vs by the merit of Christ; which gifts for this very cause, must be wholly imployed to the honour of Christ.

TO THE RIGHT HONOURABLE

MARGARET, COVNTESSE OF Cumberland, Grace and Peace.

Right Honourable, the kingdome of heauen, of which the Scripture speaketh so oft, is properly a certaine state or condition, whereby we stand in the fauour and love of God in and by Christ. And this kingdome is compared to a Graine of Mustard-seede, to teach us that a man is euen at that instant already entred into the kingdome of heauen, when the Lord that good husbandman, hath cast but some little portion of faith repentance into the ground of the heart; yea thought it be but as one Graine of Mustard-seede. Of this little graine I haue penned this Treatise in quantitie answerable thereto: and now I present the same to your Ladship, not to supply your want, (for I hope you are stored with many graines of this kinde) but to performe some duty on my part. Hoping therefore that your Ladship will reade and except the same, I take my leave, commending you to the blessing and protection of the Almighty.

Your Honours to command,

A GRAINE OF MVSTERD-SEEDE:

OR, THE LEAST MEASURE OF GRACE that is, or can be effectual to saluation.

It is a very necessary point to be knowne, What is the least measure of grace that can befall the true childe of God, lesser then which, there is no grace effectual to saluation. For first of all, the right understanding of this point, is the very foundation of true comfort vnto all troubled and touched consciences. Secondly, it is a notable meane to stirre vp thankfulness in them that haue any grace at all; when they shall in examination of themselves consider, that they haue receiued of God the least measure of grace, or more. Thirdly, it will be an inducement and a spurre vnto many carelesse and vntrepentant persons, to imbrace the Gospell, and to begin repentance for their sinnes; when they shall perceiue, and that by the word of God, that God accepts the very feedes and rudiments of faith and repentance at the first, though they be but in measure, as a graine of mustard-seede. Now then for the opening and clearing of this point, I will set downe sixe seuerall conclusions, in such order, as one shall confirme and explaine the other, and one depend vpon the other.

I. Conclusion.

A man that doth but begin to bee conuerred, is euen at that instant, the very childe of God, though inwardly he be more carnall then spirituall.

The Exposition.

In a man, there must bee considered three things; the substance of the body and soule whereof a man is said to consist; the faculties placed in the soule, and exercised in the bodie, as understanding, will, affections: the integrity and puritie of the faculties, whereby they are conformable to the will of God, & beare his image. And since the fall of Adam, man is not deprived of his substance, or of the powers and faculties of his soule, but onely of the third, which is the purity or integrity of nature: And therefore the conuersion of a sinner, whereof the conclusion speaketh, is not the change of the substance of man, or of the faculties of the soule, but a renewing and restoring of that purity and holinesse, which was lost by mans fall, with the abolishment of that naturall corruption that is in all the powers of the soule. This is the worke of God, and of God alone, and that on this manner. First of all, when it pleaseth God to worke a change in any, hee doth it not first in one part, then afterward in another, as hee that repaires a decayed house by peece-meale;

but the worke, both for the beginning, continuance, and accomplishment, is in the whole man, and euery part at once, specially in the mind, conscience, will, and affections: as on the contrary, when Adam lost the image of God, hee lost it in euery part. Secondly, the conuersion of a sinner, is not wrought at one instant, but in continuance of time, & that by certaine measures and degrees. And a man is then in the first degree of his conuersion, when the holy Ghost by the meane of the word, inspires him with some spirituall motions, and begins to regenerate and renew the inward powers of his soule. And he may in this case very fitly be compared to the night, in the first dawning of the day, in which, though the darknesse remaine, and be more in quantitie then the light, yet the Sun hath already cast some beames of light into the ayre: whereupon we teame it the breaking of the day. Now then the very point which I teach, is, that a man at that instant, & in this very state, (God as yet hauing but laid certaine beginnings of true conuersion in his heart) is the very childe of God, (& that not onely in the eternall purpose of God, as al the elect are (but indeed by actual adoption): and this is plaine by a manifest reason. There be foure seuerall workes of grace in euery childe of God: his vnion with Christ, his adoption, iustification, and conuersion: and these foure are wrought all at one instant, so as for order of time, neither goes before or after other; and yet in regard of order of nature, vnion with Christ, iustification, and adoption, goes before the inward conuersion of a sinner, it being the fruit and effect of them all. Vpon this it followeth necessarily, that a sinner is the very first act of his conuersion, is iustified, adopted, and incorporated into the mysticall body of Christ. In the parable of the prodigal sonne, the father with ioy receiues the wicked childe; but when? surely when hee saw him coming a farre off, and when as yet he had made no confession or humiliation to his father, but only had conceited with himselfe a purpose to returne and to say; Father, I haue sinned against heauen and against thee, &c. and Paul saith of many of the Corinthians, that he would not speake vnto them as spirituall men, but as carnall, euen babes in Christ. When David reprooued by Nathan, did but begin to repent & say; I haue sinned: presently Nathan the Prophet of the Lord said; The Lord hath taken away thy sinne. Of this thing David seemes to speake in the 32. Psal. v. I said [that is, I purposed and thought with my selfe] I will confesse against my ſelfe mine unrighteouſneſſe, and thou forgaveſt mine iniquities. Vpon theſe words Auguſtine ſaith: Marke, he doth not confeſſe, but promiſeth to confeſſe, and God forgive him. Again, There bee (ſaith he) three ſyllables, peccavi, I have ſinned: and from theſe three ſyllables, the ſumme of a ſacrifice doth aſcend into heauen before God. Chryſoſtome ſaith, Say thou haſt ſinned, and thou haſt loſted by ſinne. And Ambroſe ſaith, If he ſaid, I will confeſſe, and obtained pardon before he confeſſed, how much more when he had confeſſed, ſaying: I know mine iniquitie, was his ſinne pardoned? Gregorie on this Pſal. ſaith, Marke how ſpedily pardon comes, and how great is the commendation of Gods mercy: in that pardon comes together with the deſire of confeſſion, and remiſſion comes to the heart, before confeſſion breakes forth in ſpeech.

II. Conclusion.

The firſt materiall beginnings of the conuerſion of a ſinner, or the ſmalleſt meſure of renewing grace, haue the promiſe of this life, and the life to come.

The Expoſition.

THE beginnings of conuerſion muſt bee diſtinguiſhed. Some are beginnings of preparation, ſome beginnings of compoſition. Beginnings of preparation are ſuch, as bring vnder, tame, and ſubdue the ſubbornneſſe of mans nature, without making any change at all. Of this ſort are the accusations of the conſcience, by the miniſtery of the law, feares and terrors ariſing thence, compunction of heart, which is the apprehending of Gods anger againſt ſinne. Now theſe and the like, I exclude in the concluſion; for though they go before to prepare a ſinner to his conuerſion following, yet are they no graces of God, but fruits both of the law, being the miniſtery of death, as alſo of an accusing conſcience. Beginnings of compoſition, I tearme all thoſe inward motions & inclinations of Gods ſpirit, that follow after the work of the law vpon the conſcience, and riſe vpon the meditation of the Goſpel, that promiſeth righteouſneſſe and life cuerlaſting by Chriſt: out of which motions the conuerſion of a ſinner ariſeth, & of which it conſiſteth: what theſe are, it ſhall afterward appeare. Again, grace muſt be diſtinguiſhed: It is two-fold, reſtraining grace, or renewing grace. Reſtraining grace, I tearme: certaine common gifts of God, ſeruing only to order and frame the outward conuerſation of men to the law of God, or ſeruing to bereaue men of excuſe in the day of iudgement. By this kind of grace, heathen men haue bin liberal, iuſt, ſober, valiant, mercifull. By it, men liuing in the Church of God, haue bin enlightened, and hauing taſted of the good word of God, haue reioyced therein, & for a time outwardly confirmed themſelues thereto. Renewing grace, is not common to all men, but proper to the elect, & it is a gift of Gods ſpirit, whereby the corruption of ſin, is not onely reſtrained, but alſo mortified, & the decayed image of God, reſtored in righteouſneſſe and true holines. Now then the concluſion muſt onely be vnderſtood of the ſecond, and not of the firſt: for though a man haue neuer ſo much of this reſtraining grace, yet wiſeſſe he haue the ſpirit of Chriſt, to create faith in the heart, and to ſanctifie him, he is as farre from ſaluation as any other. Thuſt then the ſenſe and meaning of the concluſion is, that the very leaſt meſure of ſauing grace, and the very beginnings or ſeedes of regeneration do declare, and after a ſort, giue title to men, of all the mercifull promiſes of God, whether they concerne this life, or the life to come; and are therefore approved of God, if they be in truth, and accepted as greater meſures of grace. That which our Sauour Chriſt ſaith of the worke of miracles; Mat. 17. 20. If ye haue faith as a graine of Muſterd ſeede, ye ſhall ſay vnto this mountaine, Remove hence to yonder place, and it ſhall remove, muſt by the law of equall proportion, be applied to ſauing faith, repentance, the feare of God, and all other graces; if they bee truly wrought in the heart, though they bee but as ſmal as one little graine of muſterd ſeede, they ſhall be ſufficiently effectuall to breake forth good workes, for which they are commended. The Prophet, Eſa. 42. 3. ſaith, thou Chriſt ſhalt not quench the ſmoking flaxe, nor breakeſt the briſke ſeede. Let the compariſon be marked, fire in flaxe muſt be both little and weak, in quantity as a ſparke or twaine, that cannot cauſe a flame, but onely a ſmoke, ſpecially in a matter ſo eaſie to burne. Here then is ſignified, that the gifts & graces of Gods ſpirit, that are both for meſure and ſtrength as a ſparke or twaine of fire, ſhall not be neglected, but rather accepted and cheriſhed by Chriſt. When our Sauour Chriſt heard the young man make a confeſſion of a praſtice but of outward and ciuill righteouſneſſe, Hee looked vpon him, and loved him, Mark. 10. 21. and when he heard the ſcribe ſpeake diſcreetly but one good ſpeech, that to loue God with all the heart is above all ſacrifices, he ſaid vnto him, Thou haſt bin ſure from the kingdom of heauen, Mark. 12. 34. Therefore no doubt, he will loue with a more ſpecial loue, and accept as the good ſubiect of his kingdom, thoſe that haue received a further mercie of God, to bee borne anew of water and of the ſpirit.

III. Conclusion.

A conſtant and earneſt deſire to be reconciled to God, to beleue, and to repent, if it be in a touched heart is in acceptation with God, as reconciliation, faith, repentance is it ſelfe.

The Expoſition.

LIſt or deſire is two-fold, naturall, and ſupernaturall. Natural is that, whoſe beginning and obiect is in nature, that is, which

a riſeth of the naturall will of man, and affecteth ſuch things as are thought to bee good according to the light of nature. And this kind of deſire hath his degrees, yet ſo as they are limited within the compaſſe of nature. Some deſire riches, honours, pleaſure, ſome learning and knowledge, becauſe it is the light and perfection of the minde: ſome goe further, and ſeek after the vertues of iuſtice, temperance, liberalitie, &c. and thus many heathen men haue excelled. Some againe deſire true happineſſe, as Balaam did, who wiſhed to die the death of the righteous: becauſe it is the perpetuie of nature to ſeek the preſeruation of it ſelfe. But here nature ſtays it ſelfe: for where the mind reveales not, the will affects not. Supernaturall deſires are ſuch, as both for their beginning and obiect, are aboue nature: for their beginning is from the holy Ghoſt; and the obiect or matter about which they are conuerſant, are things diuine and ſpiritual, which concerne the kingdom of heauen; and of this kind are the deſires, of which I ſpeake in this place. Again, that we may not be deceived in our deſires, but may the better diſcerne them from flittering and fleeting motions, I adde three reſtraints. Firſt of all, the deſire of reconciliation, the deſire to beleue, or the deſire to repent, &c. muſt be conſtant and haue continuance, otherwiſe it may iuſtly be ſuſpected. Secondly, it muſt be earneſt and ſerious; though not alwaies, yet at ſometimes, that wee may bee able to ſay with Dauid, My ſoule deſires after thee, O Lord, as the thirſty land. And, as the Hart braieth after the riuers of waters, ſo panteth my ſoule after thee: O Lord, my ſoule thirſteth for God, euen the liuing God. Thirdly, it muſt be in a touched heart; for when a man is touched in conſcience, the heart is caſt downe, and as much (as it can) it withdrawes it ſelfe from God. For this cauſe then, if there be any ſpiritual motions whereby the heart is lifted vp vnto God, they are without doubt from the Spirit of God. Thuſt then I auouch, that the deſire of reconciliation with God in Chriſt, is reconciliation it ſelfe: the deſire to beleue, is faith indeede; and the deſire to repent, repentance it ſelfe. But marke how: A deſire to be reconciled, is not reconciliation in nature (for the deſire is one thing, and reconciliation, another.) But in Gods acceptation: for if wee beeing touched thoroughly for our ſinnes, doe deſire to haue them pardoned, and to bee at one with God, God accepts vs as reconciled. Again, deſire to beleue, it is not faith in nature, but onely in Gods acceptation, God accepting the will for the deede. That this doctrine is the will and word of God, it appeares by theſe reaſons. Firſt of all, God hath annexed a promiſe of bleſſedneſſe, and of life eueraſting to the deſire of grace, Mat. 5. 5. Bleſſed are they which hunger and thirſt after righteouſneſſe, for they ſhall bee ſatisfied. Ioh. 7. 37. If any man thirſt, let him come to mee and drinke. Renel. 21. 6. I will giue vnto him which is athirſt, of the well of the water of life freely. Now what is this to thirſt? properly it is, when wee are in a drought or drieſſe and want drinke to reſreſh vs, to deſire it. And therefore by all reſemblance, they are ſaid to thirſt after righteouſneſſe, that want it, and would faine haue it. And they thirſt after Chriſt, that feele themſelues out of Chriſt, & deſire, yea long after the blood of Chriſt, that they might be reſreſhed with it in their conſciences. Here then wee ſee, that the deſire of mercy, in the want of mercy, is the obtaining of mercy; & the deſire to beleue in the want of faith, is faith. Marke then: though as yet thou want firme and liuely grace, yet art thou not altogether void of grace, if thou canſt vnfaignedly deſire it: thy deſire is the ſeed, conception or bud of that which thou wanteſt. Now is the ſpring time of the ingrafted word, or the immortall ſeed caſt into the furrowes of thy heart: waite but a while, vntill the good meſſage to this end appointed, and thou ſhalt ſee the leaues, bloſſomes, and fruit ſhall ſhortly follow after. Secondly, the deſire of any good thing is accepted of God, as the liuely inuocation of his holy name, Pſal. 10. 17. God heareth the deſire of the poore, Pſal. 145. 19. Hee will fulfil the deſire of them that feare him. Wh. 6. Moſes ſaid nothing, but only deſired in heart the helpe and protection of God at the red ſea, the Lord ſaid vnto him, Why cryeſt thou vnto me? Exod. 14. 15. And when we know not to pray as we ought, Paul ſaith, That the ſpirit maketh requeſt by the inward groanes of the heart, Rom. 8. 26. Hence I gatne, that when a man in his weakneſſe prayes with ſighes and groanes, for the gift of liuely faith, the want whereof he finds in himſelfe, his very prayer on this manner made, is as truly in acceptation with God, as the prayer made in liuely faith. And here it is further to be conſidered, that Paul calls theſe groanes vnſpeakable, and why? Of moſt ininterpreters they are thought to be vnſpeakable, by reaſon of their greatneſſe, and this I will not deny: it ſeemes neuertheleſſe that they are ſo termed by reaſon of their weakneſſe; for they are commonly ſmall, weak, and conſuſed in the hearts of Gods children when they are diſtreſſed. And the words following ſeeme to import this much: for when it had bin ſaid, that Gods ſpirit in vs makes requeſt with groanes not to be vttered, ſome man might haply reply and ſay, If wee cannot diſcerne & vtter theſe groanes in our ſelves, what are we the better? Paul addes therefore, that although we know not, yet God a ſearcher of all things hidden in the heart, knowes the minde and meaning of the ſpirit. And thus the words yet further afford a comfortable inſtruction to the children of God, namely, that being in diſtreſſe, whether in life or death, if by grace wee can but ſigh, or ſobbe vnto God, though it bee weak and feeble, like the faint pulſe in the time of death; wee, or the spirit of God in vs, doe indeed make request. A vnto God that shall be heard, yea (as the words are) we doe more then make request: & though we doe not alwaies see what Gods spirit makes vs to fight after, yet God doth. To the testimonie of Scripture I adde the testimonie of godly and learned men, not to procure the doctrine in hand, but to shew a consent, and to procure thus much, that the thing which I touch, is no private phantasmie of any man. Easily (saith Andros of God) is hee reconciled, if he bee instantly intreated. Augustine saith, Let thy desire be before him, and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly: for thy desire is thy prayer, & if thy desire be continual, thy prayer is continual. He adds further in the same place, that the desire is a continual voice, and the crye of the heart, and the inward invocation of God, which may be made without sin or carnalitie. Again, To desire the helpe of grace, is the beginning of grace. Again, (b) The whole life of a good Christian, is an holy will and desire. And that which thou desirest, thou shalt not but by desiring, as it were, enlarged, & made capable, that when it shall come to which thou shalt see, thou shalt be satisfied. Basil saith, Only thou must will, and God will come of his owne accord. (c) Bernard saith, What, is not desire a voice? yea, a very strong voice. God heareth the desire of the poore, and a continual desire, though we shalke nothing, is a voice continued. (d) Luther saith, Christ is then truly omnipotent, & then truly reigning in vs, when we are so weak, that wee can scarce begin our prayers. For Paul saith, that one such graine is a strong crye in the eares of God filling both heauen & earth. (e) Again, very few know, how weak and small faith and hope is under the crosse, & in temptation. For it appeares then to bee as smacking flax, which a good blast of wind would presently put out: but such as beleue in these combats and terrors, against hope, under hope, that is opposing themselves by faith in the promise of Christ against the feeling of sinne, and the wrath of God, do find afterwards that this little spark of faith, as it appeares to reason, which hardly perceiveth, is peradventure as the whole Element of fire which filleth all heauen, and swalloweth up all terrors and sinnes. (f) Again, The more we find our unworthinesse, & the less we finde the promises to belong unto vs, the more must we desire them, being assured that this desire doth greatly please God, who desireth and willeth that his grace should be earnestly desired. This doth faith, which judgeth as a precious thing, and therefore greatly longeth & thirsteth after it, and so obtrains it. For God is delighted to fill the hungry with good things, and to feed the rich with emptie away. (g) Theodore Beza saith, If thou findest thine heart inwardly touched, pray that it may be renewed: for then wilt thou know that this desire is a pleasure of the Fathers will to thee. (h) Kennicott saith, When I have a good desire, though it doth scarcely thinke it selfe to some little end and slender sight, I must be assured that the spirit of God is present, and worketh his good worke. (i) Vitus saith, Faith in the most holy birth in this life is imperfect & weak. It is heuere helpe, whole, ener feelles in his heart an earnest desire, and striving against his naturall doings, both can and must assure himselfe that hee is indited with true faith. Again, Wicked men doe not desire the grace of the holy spirit, whereby they may resist sinne. And therefore they are easily deceived: for hee that can resist desire the holy Ghost, hath it already: because this desire of the spirit cannot be but from the spirit: as it is said, Blessed are they that hunger and thirst, after righteousness: for they shall be satisfied. (k) Bradford saith, Thy sinnes are undoubtedly pardoned, & for God hath given thee a penitent and beleaving heart: that is, an heart which desireth to repent and beleue: for such an one is taken of him (bee accepting the will for the deed) for a penitent and beleaving heart indeed. (l) Tafine saith, Our faith may bee so small and weak, as it doth not yet bring forth fruites, that may be liuely felt in vs; but if they which feele themselves in such estate, desire to have these feelings (namely, of Gods favour and love) if they aske them at Gods hands by prayer, this desire and prayer are testimonies that the spirit of God is in them, and that they have faith already: for is such a desire a fruit of the flesh, or of the spirit? it is of the holy spirit, who bringeth it forth freely to such as he dwells in. & Then the holy desire and prayers, being the motions of the holy Ghost in vs, are testimonies of our faith, although they seeme to vs small and weak. As the woman that feelleth the mooving of a child in her body, though very weak, assureth herselfe that she hath conceived, and that the goeth with a line child: so if we have these motions, these holy affections, and desires before mentioned, let vs not doubt but that we have the holy Ghost (who is the author of them) dwelling in vs, and consequently that we have also faith. Again, he saith, 1. If thou hast begonne to hate and flee sinne, 2. If thou feelest that thou art disciplined at thine iniquities and corruptions, 3. If having offended God, thou feelest a griefe, and a sorrow for it, 4. If thou desirest to abstaince, 5. If thou avoidest the occasion, 6. If thou travellest to do thyne duty, 7. If thou prayest to God to give thee grace, all these be holy affections proceeding from none other then from the spirit of God, which be so many pledges and testimonies that hee is in thee. Matthias Rukos saith, Albeit your paines sometimes bee intolerable, that you find no relief, or comfort, neither in spirit nor body, yet if thy heart can only shew unto God, that thou hast desire, and that thou desirest to be free from sinne, and that thou art not of faith, for at such time as the flesh, naturall reason, the law of God, the present torment, the evil, as once doe cry, God is angry, and therefore there is neither helpe nor remedie to be hoped for at his hands: at such time, I say, to let bee vnto God, which is the demonstration of the secret seed of God, which is hidde in Gods elect children: and that prayer shall be vnto God a very acceptable sacrifice, that thou shalt thinke, to give our bodies to be buried, even for the sinnes sake. More testimonies might be alleged, but these shall suffice.

Against this point of doctrine it may be

is alledged, that if desire to beleue in our weaknesse be faith indeed; then some are justified and may be saved wanting a liuely apprehension and full perswasion of Gods mercie in Christ. Ans. Justifying faith in regard of his nature is alwaies one and the same, and the essentiall propertie thereof, is, to apprehend Christ with his benefits, & to assure the very confidence thereof. And therefore without some apprehension and assurance, there can bee no justification or salvation in them that for age are able to beleue. Yet there bee certaine degrees and measures of true faith. There is a strong faith, which causeth a full apprehension and perswasion of Gods mercie in Christ. This measure of faith the Lord vouchsafed Abraham, David, Paul, the Prophets, Apostles, and Martyrs of God. It were a blessed thing if all beleuers might attaine to this height of liuely faith, to say with Paul, I am perswaded, that neither life, nor death, nor any thing else, shall bee able to separate vs from the love of God in Christ: but all cannot; therefore there is another degree of faith lower then the former, and yet true faith, called a little or weak faith, & it also hath a power to apprehend and apply the promise of salvation, but as yet by reason of weaknesse, it is infolded (as it were) and wrapt vp in the heart, as the leaue and blossom in the bud. For such persons as have this weak faith, can say indeed, that they beleue their sinnes to be pardonable, & that seriously in their hearts they desire to have them pardoned: but as yet they cannot say, that they are without all doubt pardoned. And yet the mercy of God is not wanting vnto them. For in that they doe, and can desire, and endeavour to apprehend, they doe indeede apprehend; God accepting the desire to doe the thing, for the thing done. This which I say will the better appeare, if the grounds thereof be considered. Faith doth not iustifie in respect of it selfe, because it is an action or vertue: or because it is strong, liuely, and perfect: but in respect of the object thereof, namely Christ crucified, whom faith apprehendeth as hee is set forth vnto vs in the Word and Sacraments. It is Christ that is the author and matter of our iustice, and it is hee that applieth the fame vnto vs: as for faith in vs, it is but an instrument to apprehend and receive that which Christ for his part offereth and giveth. Therefore if faith erre not in his proper object, but follow the promise of God, though it doe but weakly apprehend, or at the least cause a man only to endeavour and desire to apprehend, it is true faith, and iustificatory. Though our apprehension be necessary, yet our salvation stands rather in this, that Gods apprehends vs for his owne, then that we apprehend him for ours. Phil. 3. verse 12. And rather in this, that wee are knowne of him, then that we know him, Gal. 4.9.

Out of this conclusion springs another not to be co-mitted, that God accepts the endeavour of the whole man today, for perfect obedience is selfe.

That is, if men endeavour to please God in all things, God will not iudge their doings by the rigour of his law: but will accept their little and weak endeavour, to doethat which they can do by his grace, as if they had perfectly fulfilled the law. But here remember, I put this caveat; that this endeavour must be in and by the whole man; the very mind, conscience, will, & affections, doing that which they can in their kinds: and thus the endeavour to obey, which is a fruit of the spirit, shall bee distinguished from civil right conscience, which may be in heathen men, & is only in the outward, and not in the inward man. The truth of this conclusion appeares by that which the Prophet Malachi saith, Mal. 3. 17. that God will spare them that feare him, as a father spares his child, who accepts the thing done, as well done, if the child shew his good will to please his father, and doe what he can.

IV. Conclusion.

To see and feele in our selves the want of any grace pertaining to salvation, and to be grieved therefore, is the grace it selfe.

The Exposition.

Understand this conclusion as the former, namely, that griefe of heart for the want of any grace necessarie to salvation, is as much with God as the grace it selfe. When being in distresse, we cannot pray as we ought, God accepts the very groanes, sobbes, and sighes of the perplexed heart, as the price it selfe, Rom. 8. 29. When wee are grieued, because we cannot be grieved for our sinnes, it is a degree and measure of Godly sorrow before God. Augustine saith well: Sometimes our prayer is like warme, or rather cold, and almost no prayer: nay sometime it is altogether no prayer at all, and yet we cannot wish griefe perceive this in our selves: for if we can but grieve because we cannot pray, we now pray indeede. Hierome saith, Thou we are in sin, when wee doe acknowledge our sinnes to be sinners. Again, This is the true wisdom of man, to know himselfe to bee imperfect: and (that I may so speake) the perfection of all iust men in the flesh is imperfect. Augustine againe saith, That the vertue which is now in a iust man is thus farre from perfect, that vnto the perfection thereof, there belongs a true acknowledgment, and an humble confession of the imperfection thereof. A broken and a contrite heart after an offence, is as much with God, as if there had been no offence at all. And therefore so soone as David after his grievous fall, in heavinesse of heart confessed his sinne, laying in effect but thus much, I have sinned, the Prophet in the name of the Lord pronounceth the pardon of his sinne in heauen, and that presently.

V. Conclusion.

He that hath begun to subiect himselfe to Christ & his word, though as yet hee bee ignorant in most points of religion yet if hee have a care to increase in knowledge, and to practise that which hee knowes, he is accepted of God as a true beleuer.

The Exposition.

Sundry persons by the Euangelists are said to beleuee, which had onely seene the miracles of Christ, and as yet had made no further proceedings but to acknowledge Christ to be the Messias, and to submit themselves to him and his doctrine, which afterward should bee taught. On this manner the woman of Samaria beleued, and many of the Samaritans vpon her report: and a certaine ruler, by reason of a miracle wrought vpon his sonne, is said to beleuee, and all his household, Iohn 4.42.53. When our Sauour Christ commended the faith of the Apostles, tearing it a rocke, against which the gates of hell should not preuaile, it was not for the plentiful knowledge of the doctrine of saluation (for they were ignorant of many articles of faith, as namely of the death, resurrection, ascension, & kingdom of Christ) but because they beleued him to be the Sonne of God, and the Saviour of mankind, and they had withal resolved themselves to cleaue vnto him, and the blessed doctrine of saluation which he taught, though as yet they were ignorant in many points. The holy Ghost commends the faith of Rahab when shee receiued the spies. Now this her faith was indeed but a feed & beginning of liuely faith: for then shee had onely heard of the miracles done in Egypt, and of the deliuerance of the Israelites, & was thereupon smitten with feare, and had conceived a resolution with her selfe, to ioyne her selfe to the Israelites, and to worship the true God. Now these and the like, are termed beleuers, vpon iust cause: for though they be ignorant as yet, yet their ignorance shall be no continuing or lasting ignorance: and they have excellent seedes of grace, namely, a purpose of heart to cleaue to Christ, and a care to profit in the doctrine of saluation, wherof they haue some little knowledge.

VI. Conclusion.

The fore-said beginnings of grace are counterfeit, vnlesse they increase.

The Exposition.

The wickednesse of mans nature, and the depth of hypocrisie is such, that a man may and can easily transforme himselfe into the counterfeit and resemblance of any grace of God. Therefore I put downe in this last conclusion a certaine note whereby the gifts of God may be discerned, namely, that they grow vp and increase as the Graine of Mustard-seed to a great tree, and beare fruit answerably. The grace in the heart is like the Graine of Mustard-seed in two things. First, it is small to see to at the beginning; secondly, after it is cast into the ground of the heart, it increaseth speedily & spreads it selfe. Therefore, if a man at the first haue but some little feeling of his wants, some weake and faint desire, some small obedience, he must not let this sparke of grace goe out, but these motions of the spirit must be increased by the vse of the word, Sacraments, & prayer: and they must daily be stirred vp by meditating, endeavouring, straining, asking, seeking, knocking. The master deliuering his talents to his seruants, saith vnto them, Occupy till I come, and not hide them in the earth, Matth. 25.26. Paul vlt an excellent speech to Timothie: 1. exhort thee to floure vp the gift of God which is in thee, namely, as fire is stirred vp by often blowing, and putting to of wood. 2. Tim. 1.6. As for such motions of the heart that last for a weeke, or a moneth, & after vanish away, they are not to be regarded: and the Lord by the Prophet Ose complains of them, saying, O Ephraim, thy righteousness is like the morning dew, cha. 6.4.

Therefore considering, grace vnlesse it bee confirmed and exercised, is indeed no grace; I will here adde certaine rules of direction, that we may the more easily put in practise the spiritual exercises of inuocation, faith, and repentance: and thereby also quicken and renewe the seedes and beginnings of grace.

1. In what place soeuer thou art, whether alone or abroad, by day or by night, and whatsoever thou art doing, set thy selfe in the presence of God, let this perswasion alwaies take place in thy heart, that thou art before the liuing God: and doe thy endeavour that this perswasion may smite thy heart with awe and reuerence, and make thee afraid to sinne. This counsell the Lord gaue Abraham, Gen. 17.1. Walke before me and be upright. This thing also was practised by Enoch, who for this cause is said to walke with God.

2. Esteeme of euery present day as the day of thy death: and therefore liue as though thou wert dying, and doe those good duties euery day, that thou wouldest doe if thou wert dying. This is Christian watchfulness; and remember it.

3. Make catalogues and bills of thine owne finnes, specially of those finnes that haue most dishonoured God, and wounded thine owne conscience: set them before thee often, specially then, when thou hast any particular occasion of renewing thy repentance, that thy heart by this dolefull sight may bee further humbled. This was Dauids practise when he considered his waies, & turned his feet to Gods commandments, Psal. 119.59. And when he considered the fins of his youth, Psal. 25. This was Iobs practise, when he said, he was not able to answer one of a thousand of his finnes vnto God, Iob 9.3.

4. When

4. When thou first openest thine eyes in a morning, pray to God, and giue him thanks heartily. God then shall haue his honour, and thy heart shall bee the better for it the whole day following. For we see in experience, that vessels keep long the taste of that liquor wherewith they are first seasoned. And while thou liest downe, let that bee the last alfo: for thou knowest not whether fallen asleepe, thou shalt cuer rise againe alius. Good therefore it is, that thou shouldst giue vp thy selfe into the hands of God, whilest thou art waking.

5. Labour to see and feele thy spirituall poeerty, that is, to see the want of grace in thy self, specially those inward corruptions, of vnbeleefe, pride, selfe-loue, &c. Labour to be displeased with thy selfe: and labor to feele, that by reason of them thou standest in need of euery drop of the blood of Christ to heale and cleanse thee from these wants: and let this practise take such place with thee, that if thou be demanded, what in thine estimation is the vilest of the creatures vpon earth? thine heart & conscience may answer with a loud voice, Ie. 1.1. uen I by reason of mine owne finnes: and againe, if thou be demanded, what is the best thing in the world for thee? thy heart and conscience may answer again with a strong and loud cry, One drop of the blood of Christ to wash away my finnes.

6. Shew thy selfe to be a member of Christ, and a seruant of God, not onely in the general calling of a Christian, but also in the particular calling in which thou art placed. It is not enough for a Magistrate to be a Christian man, but he must also be a Christian Magistrate: it is not enough for a master of a family to be a Christian man, or a Christian in the Church, but he must also be a Christian in his family, and in the trade which he followeth daily. Not euery one that is a common hearer of the word, and a frequenter of the Lords table, is therefore a good Christian, vnlesse his conversation in his priuate house, and in his priuate affaires and dealings bee fittable. There is a mantle to be seene what he is.

7. Search the Scriptures, to see what sin is, and what is not sin in euery action: this done, carry in thy heart a constant and resolute purpose, not to sin in any thing: for faith and the purpose of sinning can neuer stand together.

8. Let thine endeavour bee fittable to thy purpose: and therefore doe nothing at any time against thy conscience, rightly enforced by the word: exercise thy selfe to eschew euery sin, and to obey God in euery one of his commandments, that pertaine either to the general calling of a Christian, or to thy particular calling. This did good Iesus, who turned vnto God with all his heart, according to all the law of Moses, 2. King. 23.25. and thus did Zacharie, and Eliabab, that walked in all the commandments of God without reproofe, Luke 1.6.

9. If at any time against thy purpose and resolution, thou be ouertaken with any sinne little or great, lie not in it, but speedily recover thy selfe, confessing thine offence, and by prayer entreat the Lord to pardon the same, and that earnestly, till such time as thou findest thy conscience truly pacified, and thy care to eschew the same sinne increased.

10. Consider often of the right and proper end of thy life in this world, which is not to seeke profit, honour, pleasure, but that in serving of men, wee might serue God in our callings. God could, if it so pleased him, preferre man without the ministry of man, but his pleasure is to fulfill his worke and will, in the preferuation of our bodies, and saluation of our soules, by the imploiment of men in his seruice, euery one according to his vocation. Neither is there so much as a bondslawe, but he must in & by his faithfull seruice to his master, serue the Lord. Men therefore doe commonly profane their labours and liues, by aiming at a wrong end, when all their care consisteth onely in getting sufficient maintenance for them & theirs, for the obtaining of credit, riches, and carnall commodities. For thus men serue themselves, and not God, or men: much lesse doe they serue God in serving of men.

11. Giue all diligence to make thy election sure, and to gather manifold tokens thereof. For this cause observe the workes of Gods providence, loue, and mercy, both in thee, and vpon thee, from time to time: for the serious consideration of them, and the laying of them together when they are many and seuerall, minister much direction, assurance of Gods fauour and comfort. This was the practise of Dauid, 1. Sam. 17.34.36. Psal. 23. all.

12. Thinke euermore thy present estate whatsoeuer it be, to be the best estate for thee: because whatsoeuer befalls thee, though it bee sickness, or any other affliction or death, befalls thee of the good providence of God. That this may the better be done, labour to see, and acknowledge a providence of God, as well in poeerty, as in abundance, as well in disgrace as in good report, as well in sickness as in health, as well in life as in death.

13. Pray continually. I mean not by sollemne and set prayer, but by secret and inward reiterations of the heart, that is, by a continual eleuation of minde vnto Christ, sitting at the right hand of God the Father, and that either by prayer, or giuing of thanks, so often as any occasion shall be offered.

14. Thinke often of the worst and most grievous things that may befall thee, either in this life, or death, for the name of Christ: make a reckoning of them, and prepare thy selfe to beare them: that when they come, they may not seem strange, but be borne the more easily.

15. Make conscience of idle, vaine, vnholiest, and vn godly thoughts, for these are the seedes and beginnings of actual sinne in word and in deede. This want of care in ordering and composing of our thoughts, is often punished with a fearefull temptation in the very thought, called of Diuines, Tentatio blasphemiarum, a tentation of blasphemies.

16. When any good motion or affection riseth in the heart, suffer it not to passe away, but feede it by reading, meditating, praying.

17. Whatsoeuer good thing thou goest about, whether it be in word or deede, do it not in a conceit of thy selfe, or in the pride of thy heart, but in humilitie, ascribing the power whereby thou doest thy worke, and the praise thereof to God; otherwise thou shalt finde by experience, God will curse thy best doings.

18. Despise not ciuill honestie: good conscience and good manners must goe together: therefore remember to make conscience of lying, and customizable swearing in common talke: contend not either in deed or word with any man, bee courteous and gentle to all, good and bad; beare with mens wants and frailties, as hastinesse, frowardnesse, self-liking, curiosities, &c. passing by them as beeing not perceived: returne not euill for euill, but rather good for euill: vse meate, drinke, and apparell, in that manner and measure, that they may further godlines; and may be as it were signes, in which thou maiest expresse the hidden grace of thy heart. Striue not to goe beyond any, vnlesse it be in good things: goe before thine equals in giuing of honour, rather then in taking of it: making conscience of thy word, and let it be as a bond: professe no more outwardly then thou hast inwardly in heart: oppress or defraud no man in bargaining: in all companies, either doe good, or take good.

19. Cleane not by inordinate affection to any creature, but aboue all things, quiet and rest thy minde in Christ, aboue all dignity and honour, aboue all cunning and policy, aboue all glorie and honour, aboue all health and beauty, aboue all ioy and delight, aboue all fame and praise, aboue all mirth and consolation, that mans heart can feele or deuise beside Christ.

With these rules of praetise, ioyne rules of

PHIL. 3. verse 7.

But the things which were advantage to me, the same I accounted losse for Christ, &c.

TO THE RIGHT VVOR-SHIPFULL, SIR EDWARD DENNIE, KNIGHT.

T is a conclusion of our religion worthy to be considered: That Christ alone is our Mediatour, Iustifier, Propitiator, Saviour, by workes and meritis which he himselfe wrought within himselfe, and not by any workes, or meritis, which he worketh in vs by his Spirit. The Scripture saith thus much in expresse words. Iustified freely by the redemption THAT IS IN CHRIST IESVS, Rom. 3. 24. Hee hath by HIMSELF, purged our finnes, Heb. 1. 3. Hee was sinne for vs, that we should bee made the righteousnesse of God IN HIM, 2. Corinth. 5. 21. IN HIM are ye compleate, Col. 2. 10. By his OWNE BLOOD he entred once into the holy place, and obtained eternall redemption, Heb. 9. 12. Again, Christ is said to purge our consciences from dead workes by his blood: because he offered himselfe by his eternall spirit, without spot to his Father, v. 14. And common reason tells vs as much. For if men be mystically vnited vnto Christ, and by this vnion, doe receiue the spirit of Christ, and by the spirit doe good workes, and consequently meritis eternall life, they are then become partners with Christ, and are receiued into fellowship with him, in the worke of mans redemption: whereas he is the act of our reconciliation with God, admits neither deputy, nor partner.

This conclusion being thus infallible truth, it serueth greatly to exalte the grace of God, to abasene, and to beate downe the pride of all Iustitiary persons and religions. And for the further explaining of it, serueth this treatise following, which I present to your Worship. And the reason of my doing is this: I remember almost two yeeres agoe, in speech you entred into commendations of that golden text, Phil. 3. 7. and withall, gave signification of your desire, that something might be set downe, whereby you might bee brought to a further understanding of that place of Scripture. Therefore, to satisfie your desire, I haue here penned a short exposition of it. And I haue further presumed to publish it in your name, desiring it may be a testimonie of a thankfull minde, for your loue and fauour towards me.

Thus wishing to your Worship, continuance and encrease of loue to the holy word of God, I take my leave.

PHIL. 3. verse 7.

But the things which were advantage to me, the same I accounted losse for Christ.

8. Yea, doubtlesse I count all things but losse for the excellent knowledge of Christ Ies in my Lord, for whom I have counted all things losse, and doeudge them to bee dung, that I might winne Christ.

9. And be found in him

He scope of these words, is this. In the second vers. Paul admonisheth the Philippians, for to take heede of certaine counterfeit Apostles, which ioynd Christ and circumcision in the cause of their saluation; and put confidence in the flesh, that is, in the outward workes of the ceremoniall and morall law. And that this Admonition might take the better place, he vseth two reasons. The first propounded in the 3. verse, is this: True circumcision is to worship God in spirit, to reioyce in Christ, and not to put any confidence in the flesh. The second reason is framed thus: If any man might put confidence in outward things, then I much more; but not I: therefore no man. The proposition or first part of the reason is propounded in the 4. verse, and confirmed in the fifth and sixth. The second part, or assumption [but I doe not put confidence in outward things] is confirmed in the seventh & eight vers. thus: All things are losse to me in respect of Christ: therefore I put no confidence in any thing out of Christ. And this is the very drift of the former words.

In the second place the former fence and meaning of this portion of Scripture is to bee considered. And for this cause, we are to be aduertised of sundry things in the wordes themselves. And first of all, let it be observed, that Paul in the 7. verse saith, in the time past, I have counted all things losse: and in the next verse, in the time present, I doe count all things losse. The former speech is meant of that time in which he was first called to the knowledge of Christ: the second is spoken of the time, when he had long continued an Apostle of Christ, and writ this epistle to the Philippians. This distinction of times in one and the same word, makes much to the clearing of the doctrine that shall afterward bee delivered. Secondly, whereas in our Translation, it is said in the 8. v. for whom I have counted all things losse, the words are two. I count, and doe. notably expresse the meaning of the holy Ghost. For the words fully translated, signifie, I have made all things losse, or, I have cast away all things, or, I have de- prived my selfe of all things for Christ. And whereas Paul had said before, [I count all things losse,] his meaning is to amplify his owne words, by saying, I deprime my selfe of all things, & iudge them dung for Christ. Thirdly the word translated [dung] signifieth such things in the intrals of beaits, as being vsit for mans vse, are cast to dogges: and by it Paul signifies, that hee did not onely esteeme all things as losses, and deprime himselfe of them, but also cast them away with loathing, in a mind neuer to seeke the recovery of them. Lastly, it must be knowne, that Paul in these verses vseth a similitude borrowed from the Merchant man; & it may be framed on this manner. The Merchant, in hope of a treasure, is content to esteeme his commodities no commodities, but losses; yea he is further content to cast them out into the sea, and to esteeme them as things cast to dogges, that he may obtaine his intended treasure: so saith Paul, doe I count all my former prerogatives as losse, & am content to deprime my selfe of the yea to loathe as dung, for the obtaining of Christ.

Furthermore the summe and substance of the words, is a comparison of things unequal, and it may be formed thus: All things are losse to me for Christ, and Christ is my gaine. The first part of the comparison is of Pauls losses, & is amplified two waies. First, he sets down what things be his losse: and they are of two sorts, Priuiledges, vertues, and workes before his conuersion when hee was a Pharisee. Again, Priuiledges, vertues, and workes after his conuersion when hee was an Apostle of Christ: the first are mentioned in the 7. verse, the latter in the eight. Secondly, Paul sets downe, how all things are losses to him by a gradation, thus: I count all things losse: I deprime my selfe of them: I cast them dung.

The second part of the comparison is of Pauls Gaine. And it is amplified by a contrary gradation, thus: I esteeme the knowledge of Christ an excellent thing: I desire to gaine Christ: and I desire to be found in him. Of these points in order: and first of Pauls losses before his conuersion, in these words:

For the things which were vantage to mee, I counted losse for Christ.

That these things may be well knowne, let vs yet more narrowly search the meaning of these words. The things that were vantage to Paul are of three sorts. First, his priuiledges, that he was borne a Jew, that is, a member of the Church: and againe, that he was circumcised and brought up in the trait sect of the Pharises: Secondly, his vertues, namely, his iustice and zeale in his religion: Thirdly, his workes, whereby hee for outward carriage obferued the Ceremonial and Morall law, without reproofe. And all these things are called his aduantage, because he put his confidence in them, & thought to merit eternall life thereby, when he was a Pharisee. He addes further, that he counted these his aduantages to bee losse; because so soone as he new Christ, his confidence ceased, his former merits were no merits, but as things lost & cast away, yet not simply, but for Christ, that is, that he might gaine Christ, and be found in Christ, as he expounds himselfe in the words following.

The meaning thus laid downe, Iudric things may bee learned. The first, that it was an heresie of the Pharisees, to put confidence in their workes, and to thinke that they could merit eternall life by them: for here Paul faith, that being a Pharisee, workes were his gaine and aduantage in the cause of saluation. And hence we learne, what to iudge of the Popish religion, which teaches in substance the very same doctrine of confidence in workes, and of the merit of saluation thereby. And therefore the Papists of our time are the children of the old Pharisees, renewing & requiuing the old heresie touching merit, with new and fresh colours. If they alleadge, that they ascribe merit to the workes, not any ceremonial, but of the morall law, and to workes not of nature but grace; I answer, that the Pharisees did the same, as the Pharisee acknowledged in his prayer, when hee faith, I thank thee O Lord, I am not as other men, &c.

Secondly, in Pauls example being a Pharisee we learne, that it is the Pride and arrogancie of mans nature, to be something within himselfe, & to erect vp something vnto himselfe, to be his righteousness, and a meane of his saluation out of Christ. The iust (saith Habacuk) lure by faith, but hee whose soule is not right in him puffes up himselfe, or builds towers of defence to himselfe by vaine confidence out of God. The prodigall sonne must haue his part alone by himselfe from his father. Paul faith, of the Lewes, that they established their owne righteousness, and would not be subiect to the righteousness of God. This being so, let vs learne to see & detest this pride in our selues. For where it reignes and takes place, there Christ is not truly acknowledged: and when men begin to know Christ, this hidden & spiritual pride giues place. And further, by this we learne not to maruell, that Turkes and Iews denie Christ, and that Papists in the cause of their saluation, beside the passion of Christ, foyle in something of their owne, namely their own merits and satisfactions: for it is the proud nature of man to set vp himselfe, in whole, or in part, and to relye vpon something of his owne out of Christ. No maruile then, that such as be otherwise learned and wise, live and die in the opinion of iustification by their owne good workes.

Thirdly, whereas Paul accounts things of aduantage to be his losse, we learne, that no

priviledges out of Christ, minister true comfort or true happines. It is a priviledge to haue knowen Christ, and to haue eaten and drunken with him: but of such Christ faith, Depart from mee, I know you not. It is a priviledge to be of the kindred of our Saviour Christ, but it is of no moment: for Christ faith, Who is my mother and my brethren? be that doth the will of my father, my brother, sister, and mother. It is a priviledge that the virgin Mary was the mother of Christ: but if shee had not as well borne him in her heart by faith, as shee bare him in her wombe, she had not bin saved. It is a priviledge to prophesie in the name of Christ, but of such Christ faith, Mat. 7. 23. Depart from mee ye workers of iniquitie. Lastly, it is a priviledge to be indued with all kinde of learning, of arts and tongues; but alas all is nothing: for if a man had all wit, wisdom and learning, and could speake in all matters with the tongue of men & Angels, vnlesse he be found in Christ, he is no better in the sight of God, the damned wretch. This being so, we must learne first of all, to moderate our care and our affections, for worldly profits, honours, pleasures, and our principall care must euermore be cast on CHRIST. Secondly, such persons as liue in an honest and ciuill life, and stand vpon this that they are no theues, no murderers, no adulterers, no blasphemers, but in outward duties shew love to God and man, they must, I say, take heede lest they deceiue themselves, building vpon false grounds. For though ciuill honestie be a thing commendable before God, yet it is not sufficient to saue vs before God. And Paul, who was a strict obseruer of the law, after hee came to the knowledge of Christ, counted all his morall obedience, in which he had formerly trusted, but losse and dung for Christ.

Fourthly, it hath bin the doctrine of the popish Church this many yeares, that before a man can be in Christ, and be iustified, he must first of all prepare and dispose himselfe to receive his iustification: and that when he is sufficiently disposed, he doth merit of congruencie that God should iustifie righteousnesse, whereby of a sinner he is made no sinner, and righteousness before God. But I demand of the patrons of this doctrine; whether, when the workes of preparation are done, the doer is in Christ, or out of Christ? If it be in Christ, he is also iustified: If he be as yet out of Christ, Paul hath giuen the sentence, that the said workes are to be esteemed as losse, and that the merit of congruencie is no meate for them that desire to feed on Christ, but rather food for dogges.

Lastly, hence we learne, how Christ is to be received of vs. Such as would truly come to Christ and receive him, must make losse of all things: they must come naked and emptied of all their owne righteousness. As men in shipwracke cast out their commodities, and when there is no remedy leaue their ship and betake themselves to the sea, & thus come swimming to the shore: euen so must all men first forsake all, & then come to Christ. Beggars that they may obtaine their almes, come in their rags, vnfolded legs and armes, that their forces and booties may be seene. Benhadad king of Syria, that he might recouer the fauour of the king of Israel, casts off his crowne and royal robes: hee and his men come in sackcloth with halters about their heads: and thus he obaines his desire. In like manner comming to Christ we must lay aside all opinion of our goodnes, and in abasing of our selues follow beggars fashions, and with Benhadad cloathe our selues with signes of guilines and confusion of face. We must first be annihilated and vterly in respect of goodnesse be made nothing in our selues, that we may be what we are out of our selues in Christ. There is no entering into the kingdome of heauen, except we receive it and Christ, as a little child in all meekenes and humilitie. For there must be nothing in vs to receive Christ but meere faith resting on meere mercie. Let all such thinke on this, as desire to be in Christ, & to receive true comfort by him.

Thus much of Pauls losses before his conuersion: now come to be considered the things which were his losses after his conuersion: and they are set down in the words following.

[doublet I doe binke all things losses for the excellent knowledge of Iesus Christ my Lord.] But that these losses may be the better knowne, let vs a little consider the meaning of the words. Whereas before Paul had said, that therefore hee counted things to be losse vnto him for Christ that had bin his aduantage: some man might haply thinke, this is but rash iudgement in Paul; hee therefore, to cut off this surmise faith, doublet I count all things losses; that is, that I may not be thought to speake rashly, I say more, that I doe now account all things losse, and I speake it confidently, as being resolved what I say. When he faith, I doe account, he speaks in the time present of himselfe, as being not only a Christian: but also an Apostle of Christ. And when he faith, all things, the generall speech must be obserued: for hee excepteth nothing pertaining to him, but his knowledge & faith in Christ. Here therefore we must first of all vnderstand the priviledge of an Apostle: secondly, all inward and Christian vertues, as hope, feare, loue of God, good conscience, &c. for of all the inward gifts none is excepted but faith (as I haue said). Thirdly, here we must vnderstand workes not of nature but of grace, done & effected by the spirit of God in vs. For in the verse following he doth reiect his own righteousness which is of the law. Now he faith of all these, that they are his losses for Christ. But how are they losses? The speech must warily be vnderstood, lest it be offensive. They are losses not in respect of godly conuersion: for they are the causes thereof, & they are meane of shewing our thankfulness to God, & loue to man. Now then they are losses only in respect of iustification & saluation: when they are reputed and maintained as meritorious causes thereof either in whole or in part. Though, when they are rightly vied & applied, they are the excellent gifts of God: yet when they are brought into the Act of iustification and saluation, they become as losses & dungs: and this I take to be the meaning of these words. To the like purpose the Prophet Isay faith in the name of the whole Church confessing her sins, All our righteousnesses are as a cloath vterly to be cast away. And Paul to the Galatians: If righteousness be by the law, Christ died without cause, or in vaine; that is, if the righteousness of the law be our aduantage, Christ must be our losse: and on the contrary, if he be our aduantage, the righteousness of the law must be our losse.

This doctrine of Paul, that all vertues and workes both of nature and grace are losses in the case of our saluation, sounds not in mans reason, and there be many things brought to the contrary. First, it is alleadged, that God doth accept & crowne our workes: and therefore they are not losses. I answer: God doth as it were keepe a double court. One of iustice, the other of mercy. In the court of iustice hee giues iudgement by the law, and accurseth every man that doth not continue in all things written in the law to doe them. In this court nothing can stand but the passion and righteousness of Christ, and for the best workes that we can do, we may not looke for any acceptation or reward: but vnder the plea of Dauid: Enter not, O Lord, into iudgement with thy servant, for no flesh shall be iustified in thy sight. Now in the court of grace & mercy, God hath to deale with his owne children: that stand before him iustified and reconciled by Christ. And the obedience of such he accepteth in this court, & mercifully regardeth, though otherwise it be imperfect; yet not for the merit thereof, but for the merit and worthinesse of Christ. Thus then good workes in rigour of iustice are worthy condemnation, and are accepted of mercy procured by the merit of Christ. Secondly, it is alleadged, that workes are necessary to saluation, and therefore not to be reputed losses. I answer, workes may be considered either as causes of saluation, or onely as a way directing thereto. If they be considered as causes, they are not necessary, but in this respect they are dung. If they be respected as a way leading and directing to eternall life, they are indeede necessarie thus, and no otherwise. Thirdly, it is objected: that the law requires workes, and the law must be satisfied, & therefore that he which is iustified, must be iustified by workes. The answer is, that whosoever is iustified and saved, is iustified and saved by workes. But workes must be distinguished. Some are personall workes done in and by our selues. These neither iustifie, nor saue any man, but in the cause of saluation are losse and dung. Besides these, there be workes that are out of vs, wrought in & by the person of our Saviour Christ, namely, the workes of obedience in satisfying & fulfilling the law. These indeed are the works which inflame and save vs, and none that proceed from vs. To this effect Paul faith, That we are justified freely by the redemption that is in Christ. Lastly, it is all alleged, that if all virtues be losses for Christ, then faith it selfe. I answer. Faith must directly be considered: first of all, as a virtue working and bringing forth many good fruits in vs. And thus it is to be reputed losse, as all other virtues are. Secondly, it must be considered not as a virtue, but as an instrument or hand, not to give or worke any thing, but to apprehend & receive Christ and his benefits.

And thus it is no losse, but is a thing excepted in this text. Now then we see, that the doctrine of Paul is manifest: that all virtues and works both of nature and grace, are mere losses in the cause of our iustification and salvation.

Hence sundry things may be learned: The first, that the most holy workes of holy men cannot iustifie or merit eternall life. When they are brought within the act of iustification as causes, Paul faith they are but losses, and as offes to be cast to dogs. Let this be noted and remembered for ever against all iustificarie Papists: who, if they would but seriously consider this one text, they might be farre better resolved then they are.

Secondly, hence the doctrine of our Church is plainly gathered, namely, that we are saved and iustified by faith alone. For all things except our knowledge and faith in Christ are made as dung. And that this our doctrine may not be scandalous, sundry things must be remembered. The first, is the right meaning of the doctrine, which is, that there is nothing within vs, that is any cause either efficient, materiall, formal, or final, of iustification, but faith. The second, that faith in no principall cause, but only an instrument. The third, that faith is no instrument to procure or work our iustification and salvation, but an instrument to receive or to apprehend our iustification given by the Father, procured by the Sonne, applied by the holy Ghost. The last, that faith must be considered as a cause, or else as a way of salvation. If as an internal cause in vs, it only iustifies, and consequently saith vs. If as a way, it doth not save alone: for either virtues and workes, though they be not causes, yet are they ways to eternall life as well as faith. Here then when Paul makes our works against vs, saying, that we looke to be saved by faith alone:
the true & plain answer to them is this:
We consider faith two waies: first, as a cause within vs, not meriting any way, but instrumentally apprehending pardon in Christ, and applying it to vs for our eternall happiness.
Secondly, faith may be considered as a way wherein we are to walke for the attainment of everlasting life. In the first sense faith alone iustifies and saith vs. And nothing else within vs. To this doe the learned Fathers agree. Basil saith thus: This is perfect rejoycing in God, when a man is pushed up for his owne iustice, but acknow- ledge that he wants iustice, and that he is iustified by faith alone in Christ. Hilary: That is renun-ced of Christ by faith, which the law could not looke for faith alone iustifies. Ambrose: They are iustified freely which doe nothing, nor rejoyce like for like, are iustified by faith alone, through the gift of God. Againe, in his Commentarie vpon the Epistle to the Corinthians, This is appointed of God, that he which beleeveth in Christ should be saved without works, by faith alone: receiving remission of sin. Hierom: God iustifies by faith alone.

Hom. de

Nevertheless, if we speake of the way to life, then we are not saved onely by faith. For though faith be the onely instrument to apprehend Christ, yet it is not the onely way to life: repentance also is the way, yea all virtues, & all works are the way. In this sense, affliction is said to work unto us a more excellent weight of glory: not as a cause, but as a way guiding direction. And mothers are said to be saved by bearing of children, not as by a cause, but as by a strait and narrow way. Againe, Abrahams faith went not alone, but had a kinde of cooperation with his workes: faith and workes both being considered as a way to happiness, or as marks in a way. In this sense the Fathers have ascribed salvation to many things, not as to causes, but as to waies. Bernard said well, that workes are the way to the kingdom of heaven, and not the causes of reigning. Lactantius saith, Great is the helpe of repentance: which wo- scener takes away, cuts off to himselfe the way of life. Chrysostome: Some by watching by sleeping out have ground, by toiling their bodies with day-ly labour doe blot out their finnes: but thou mayest obtain the same by a more easie way, that is, by forgetting. Thus many hundred places of the Fathers are to be understood, when they ascribe remission of finnes to martyrdom, to fasting, prayer, workes of mercy, and such like.

Thirdly, here is laid downe the foundation of true humility. For if all our virtues and workes be losses in the case of our salvation, then all boasting is excluded, & we are to take nothing to our selves but shame and confusion and give all glory to God. Yea the more our virtues and workes, if we place any confidence in them, the greater are our losses.

Thus we see what things are losses to Paul:
in the next place let vs consider how they are losses. This Paul sets downe by a gradation thus, I count them losse, I make them my losses, I count them as dung. This gradation is nothing else but a repetition of one and the same thing enlarged and amplified in speech. Now repetitions in Scripture are not idle and vaine, as they are oftentimes in the writings of men, but they commonly signifie 2. things, namely, the certainty, and the necessity of the thing repeated: and in this place they signifie the certaintie and the necessity of Pauls losses. Certaine they are, because here that will be saved by Christ, must certainly endure these losses without recoverie. The foundation of this certaintie lies in an impossibilitie of merit by any works

works of man: which I will make manifest by five reasons. The first is this: It is a principall part of Christian inherent righteousness to have and keepe a good conscience: now Paul expressly excludes it from iustification, saying: I know nothing by my selfe, yet I am not thereby iustified. 1. Cor. 4. 4. The second is this, Paul saith, Eph. 2. 9. We are not saved by workes: now he means no other workes but such as follow faith, and are done by the spirit of God. And this appeareth by the reason which he vseth, that we are created to good workes. And againe, that they are ordained that we should walke in them. The third: before a worke can merit, it must please God; before the worke please God, the worke must please him: before the worke please him, he must be reconciled to God and perfectly iustified. Iustification therefore goes in order before good workes, and for this cause workes cannot be brought within the act of iustification as causes. Good workes make not good men in whole or in part: but men first of all made good by the goodnesse of Christ imputed, make good workes by their goodnesse. The fourth is this:
The humanity of Christ is the most excellent of all creatures in heaven and earth: yet being considered by it selfe, it cannot possibly merit at Gods hand. In a worke properly meritorious there be three conditions. First, the doer thereof must doe it by himselfe, and not by another, for then the praise is his by whom hee doth it, and not his own. Secondly, the worke to be done, must not be a debt and dutie, for then the doer deserves nothing. Thirdly, there must be a proportion betweene the worke and the reward of life eternall. Now the manhood of Christ considered apart by it selfe, cannot performe these three conditions.
For it doth what it doth by the spirit of God, wherby it was conceived and is filled without measure. Againe, it is a creature, and therefore whatsoever it is, hath or can do, it oweth all to God. Lastly, it can not doe a worke proportion-all to eternall glory; because it takes all of God, and can give nothing to him. If then it be demanded, how this man-hood of Christ merits in our behalfe: I answer, not by it selfe, but by means of the personall vnion, whereby it is exalted and preferred into the vnite of the second person, the eternal word of the Father. Hence it is that Christ meritteth: none can merit of God but God. Now then if Christ merit onely in this regard, no mere creature, man or angel can possibly merit by any worke. The fifth reason is this: there be two kinds of transgression of the law, one when a worke is directly against the law: the other is, when that is done that the law requires, but not in that manner and perfection the law requires. The second kinde of transgression is in every good worke which is done by men vpon earth: now where any transgression is, there must be pardon: where pardon is, there is no merit.

That this doctrine of the certaintie of our losses may yet the better be cleared, I will set downe the supposed grounds of merits, and discover their weakness. They are two: the first is, the promise that God hath made to workes, whereby he hath bound himselfe to reward them with eternall glory. I answer, that this very promise is made of the good pleasure, and mere good will of God: and of the same goodnesse it is, that any man is doer of any good worke, either by nature or grace.
Therefore if a man could fulfill the whole law, he should not merit at Gods hand. Thus saith the Lord. Exod. 20. 6. That he will shew mercie upon thousands of them that love him & keepe his commandments. The second ground is, That virtue of meriting is derived from Christ the head, to his members by diuine influence. I answer, it is a thing vnpossible. For the virtue of meriting is in Christ, not simply as hee is man, but as he is in one person God and man.
The worke which meritteth is done or acted euen by the manhood; but the merit of the worke is from the Godhead, or from the excellence of the person. Now then if this virtue be in Christ, not as he is man, but in respect he is Man-god, or God-man; it cannot be deriued to vs that are but men, vntill such beneficent should be deified, and made of a mere man God-man, which is impossible. Therefore there is no capabilitie or possibilitie of merit in the worke of any mere man or creature whosoever. For this cause the true Church of God ever detested humane merit. The merit of congruie before iustification, is a Pelagian conceit, and was neuer maintained of the Orthodoxe fathers. Stapleton confessed thus much, The merit of congruie (saith he) in respect of the first grace was of old bysed out: neither was it ever admitted of the better sort of Schoolemen, as of Thomas in his Summe, and his latter writings, nor of his followers. And the (4.) merit of condignitie, wherby workes are said of their owne dignity and that properly to deserve the increase of the first iustification, and eternall life, was not received of the learned in the Church for more then a thousand yeres after Christ. Ra- dolphus Ardens, a very learned man in his time saith thus: Seeing by one grace we come to another, they are called merits, and that im- properly. For as Augustine writeth, God crownes only his owne grace in vs. Againe, No man may think that God is bound as it were by a bargain to repay that which he hath promised. For as God is free to promise, so is hee free in respect of repaying, especially considering that as well merits as rewards are his grace. For God crowns nothing else in vs but his grace: because (c) if he would deal with vs but his grace, none living should be iustified in his sight.
And hereupon the Apostle, who laboured more then all, saith: I thinke that the afflictions of this time are not worthy the glory that shall be revealed. Therefore this counten or bargain is nothing else but a voluntary promise. Answe atter him saith, If a man should serve God a thou- land yeeres, and that most zealously, (a) he should not worthily deserve to be in the kingdom of heaven so much as half a day. S. Bernard faith, Touching eternal life, we know that the sufferings of this time are not worthy of the glory to come; no not if one should suffer all. For the merits of men are not such that eternal life may be due for them, or that God should do some unwise if he gave it not. For to let passe, that men must be the gifts of God, & so man is rather debtor to God for them, then God to man, what are all merits to so great a glory? Lastly, who is better than the Prophet, to whom the Lord giveth so worthy a testimony, saying: I have found a man, according to mine owne heart? For all that he had need to say to God, Enter not into judgement with thy servant. Again in processe of time, when the merit of condignitie had taken place, it was not generally received: for it was rejected of sundry schoolmen, and others, as of Gregory of Arimin, of Durand, of Waldensis, of Burgenfis, and Scotus. Wherefore to conclude, it now appears to be an infallible certaintie, that he that desires to be saved by Christ, must endure the losse of all his workes and vertues whatsoever, in the cause of his owne iustification. Now then if this doctrine be so certaine and infallible, as it is: then also must we be fed in this point without doubting, that the present Church of Rome erreth grievously, in that it magnifieth the merit of workes: Yea in this regard it reuerfeth the very foundation of true religion. For if they make advantage in the matter of saluation by their workes, Christ must needs vpon infallible certentie be their losse: because Paul makes all workes losse, that Christ may be advantage. Therefore, farre be it from vs all, to haue any dealing or contract of societie with that Church, lest we be partakers of her dangerous and fearefull losses.

Again, in that all vertues and workes of grace are but losses for Christ; wee must not only in our first conuersion, but euer afterward, though we be iustified and sanctified, euen in the pang of death, by meere faith, rest on the meere mercie of God, and apprehend naked Christ, that is, Christ seuered, in the calce of saluation, from all respects of all vertues and workes whatsoever. For there is nothing opposed to the seuerer judgement of God, but meere Christ. If we doe presume to oppose any of our doings to the sentence of the law, hell, death, condemnation, we are sure to goe by the losse.

Thus much of the certenty of Pauls losses, now follows the necessitie of them. They are necessarie, in as much as with them, no man can haue part in Christ. For the merit of our vertues and good workes, & the grace of God in Christ cannot stand together: yea they are contrary as fire & water, and one overthroweth another in the cause of iustification and saluation. Paul, to signifie this contrariety faith, If election be of grace, it is not of workes: and if it be of workes, it is not of grace. And againe, If ye be iustified by the law, ye are abolished from Christ.

And to the same purpose Ambrose faith grace is wholly received, or wholly lost: and Augustine: It is no way grace, that is not freely giuen euery way. Hence it followes, that the present religion of the Church of Rome abolisheth Christ, in as much as it maintaines & magnifies the merit of good workes. And this may be gathered by the very doctrine of that Church. For it teacheth, that men must be saved by their praier, fastings, almes, pilgrimages, building of Churches, chappels, bridges, &c. What then shall the passion of Christ doe? whereto serues it? They answer, that it frees vs from death, and giues to our workes, the merit of eternall life, and make them meritoriously to increase our iustification. Hence it followes, that Christ is no more but the 1. cause of our saluation, and that we our selues are secondary causes vnder him, and with him. And thus he is made, of a Saviour, no Saviour. Secondly, by the former necessitie we learne, that whoeuer will be saved by the merit of Christ, must come vnto him without vertues or workes of his owne, nor carrying in heart, so much as the least confidence in them, esteeming himselfe to be a most vile, wretched, and miserable sinner, as the Publican did, who prayed, Lord be mercifull to me a sinner.

Hitherto of Pauls losses: now follows the second part of the comparison, touching Pauls gaine, But Christ is my Gain. A sentence to be remembered, and to be written in the tables of our heart for euer. And the reason thereof is manifest: Christ our mediator God & man, is the onely fountaine of all good things, that are, or can be thought on, whether spiritual, or temporall. Saint Iohn faith, Of his fulnes we receive grace for grace. Againe Paul faith, In him all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge are hidde: and, Ye are complete in him. And he calls Christ our Ransome, or Counterprice. And as he makes Adams the roote of all euill in mankind, so he makes Christ the roote of all grace and goodnesse. For the better clearing of this doctrine, two points are to be handled: When Christ is our gaine? and how? Touching the time when I set downe three things. He is our gaine in this life: he is our gaine in death: and he is our gaine after death. To returne to the first: he is our gain in life, if we turne from our euill waies, and beleue in him, in as much as he hath giuen for vs many benefits, which I will reduce to tenne heads. The first is, pardon of sin, without tearme of time, whether past, present, or to come. Yet must we here remember, that pardon of sinne is not giuen absolutely, whether men repent or no, but vpon condition of our repentance. The second is the imputation of Christs obedience in fulfilling the law, for our iustification before God. From the former benefit ariseth our freedome from hell, and from the law, in respect of the curse thereof: and from the second ariseth a Right to eternall life; wherof the possession is referred to the life to come. The third is our Adoption, whereby wee are the children of God, and brethren of Christ. And hence haue wee a Right of Lordshippe or dominion ouer the whole world, and all things contained therein, whether in heaven or in earth: which Right was lost by Adam, & now restored by Christ. Indeepe wicked men and infidels haue & vse the things of this life at their wils, and that by Gods permission: but they receive and iniury them no other wise then children of traitours doe the goods of their parents, who peradventure are suffered to take the benefit of some part of them for the preferring of their lines, though the title and interest to them be not restored. The fourth is the ministration, that is, the preference, aide, and protection of good angels.

The fifth gain or benefit is, that all the miseries and calamities of this life, cease to be curses, and are made blessings, being turned to the good of this that are to be saved by Christ. The sixth is the mortification of original sin, withall the parts thereof, by the vertue of the death of Christ. The seventh is a spiritual life, whereby we live not, but Christ lives in vs, making vs partakers of his Anointing, & thereby enabling vs to live as Prophets, Priests, Kings. Prophets, to teach and make confession of our faith in Christ: Priests, to dedicate and present our bodies and soules to God for the service of his Maiesty: Kings, to beare rule and dominion ouer the corruptions, and lusts of our hearts. The eighth gain is, that Christ presents all our prayers & good workes to his Father in his owne name: & thus by his own Intercession makes them acceptable vnto him. The ninth gain is, the presence of his spirit: For when Christ ascended, he tooke with him our pawne, namely our flesh, and left with vs his owne pawne, the presence of the Comforter, to supply his owne presence, to guide, comfort, and to assure vs of our adoption and saluation. The tenth and last is, Perseuerance in hauing and holding the former graces. For thus saith the Lord, Ier. 32. 40. I will put my feare in their hearts, that they shall not depart from mee. And it must be remembered, that these words are not spoken onely in general to the Church, but also in singular to euery true member thereof; because they are the words of the covenant. Againe, David faith, Psal. 1. 3. that the righteous man is like a tree planted by the water side, whose leafe neuer withereth: who therefore hath alwaies lappe of grace in the heart to the end.

Again, as Christ is our gaine in life, so is he also our gaine in death, in as much as he hath taken away the sting of death, and hath changed the condition of it, by making it of the gate of hell, to be the way of eternall life. Thirdly, hee is our gaine after death three waies. Our first gain is the resurrection of our bodies to eternall life in the day of judgement. The second is a priuiledge to iudge the world. For first of all judgement shall passe vpon the godly: which done, they shall be taken vp to Christ, and there as witnesses and approouers of his sentence of condemnation, iudge together with him, the wicked world. The third is, the eternall retribution, in which God shall be all in all, first in Christ, & then in al the member of Christ, and that for euer and euer.

The next point to be handled is, How Christ is our gaine? For the answering of this, two questions are to be opened. The first is, According to what nature Christ is our gaine? I answer following the ancient and Catholike doctrine, That (a) whole Christ is our gaine, according to both natures. The godhead of Christ profits no sinner without the manhood, nor the manhood without the godhead. And as Leo faith; Each nature worketh that which is proper vnto it, hauing communication with the other. Againe, God may be considered two waies; God as God, or God made man, God absolute, that is, God absolutely considered without respect to Christ, is indeed a fountain of righteousnesse and life; but this fontaine is closed, sealed vp, and not to be attained vnto: because our sinnes made a separation betwene God and vs; and God thus considered, is a Maiestic full of terror to all finfull men. But God considered as he was made man, and manifested in our flesh, is also a fontaine of goodnes; yea the same fontaine opened, vnsealed, & flowing forth to all mankind. Hence it is that Christ is called the light of the world the bread and water of life; the way, the truth, the life. Here againe wee must remember to make a difference or distinction of the natures of Christ. For the godhead of Christ is our gaine, not in respect of essence, but in respect of vertue and operation shewed in, or vpon the manhood of Christ, whereby it makes things which were done and suffered in the said manhood, apt and sufficient to appeale Gods anger, and to merit eternall life for vs. As for the manhood, it is not onely in effect and operation, but also really communicated to the faith of the beleuing heart: and hereupon it is as it were a treasury and store-houle of all the rich graces of God, that serue to iustification, or any way to enrich the Elect of all ages and times, through the whole world. If any doubt of this, let them consider 3. things of this most glorious manhood. The first is, the grace of personall union; whereby it is received into the Vnitie of the second person, and hath no being or subsisting, but only in the substance thereof. And hence it is truly termed the humanity of the Sonne of God, or of the Word. The second is, that this manhood hath in it all fulnesse of grace. Now this fulnesse of grace contains in it all the gifts of the holy Ghost, and that in the highest degree of perfection. It hath therefore in it gifts more for number, and greater for measure, then all men and Angels haue. The third is, that it receiueeth this excellency of gifts and graces, not for it selfe, but that it may be as it were a pipe or conduit to conuey the same graces to all the elect. Our saluation and life dependeth on the fullnesse of the godhead, which is in Christ: neuertheless it is not conuicted vnto vs: but in the flesh, and by the flesh of Christ. Thus much Christ signifieth, when hee saith, *Ioh. 6. 33. 54. 55. My flesh is meate indeede. And, Except ye eate the flesh of the sonne of man, & drink his blood, ye haue no life in you. And, He which eateu my flesh, abides in me, and I in him. And Iohn the Baptist saith, Ioh. 1. 16. Of his fullnesse, we receiue grace for grace. The Supper of the Lord, is ordained for the increase and continuance of grace and life: and of it Paul saith, 1. Cor. 10. 16. The bread which we breake, is a fellowship or communion with the very body of Christ. On this manner Christ is said 1. Cor. 1. 30. to be made vnto vs of God, wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, redemption, wisdom, not because the essentiall wisdom of the godhead is giuen to vs: for that is infinite and incommunicable. Neither againe, because hee is the author of our wisdom, giuing vs knowledge of our saluation, as the Father and the holy Ghost doe. Not because he is the matter of our wisdom, the knowledge of whom is eternall life: but for an higher cause then all these. Our mediator the man Iesus Christ, who is also God, is an head vnto vs, and a roote of our wisdom: For hee was annointed with the spirit of wisdom in the assumed manhood, not priuately for himselfe, but that wee also which beleue might bee partakers of the same annointing, and that wisdom from him by his flesh might be conuicted vnto vs. Therefore from his wisdom there is wisdom deriued in some measure, to all that are mystically vnited vnto him, as light in one candle is deriued to an hundred, or as heate is deriued from heate. Again, he is our iustice, not onely because he is the author and giuer of our iustice, with the Father and the holy Ghost: neither because the essentiall iustice of Christ is giuen to vs: for then we should be all deified: but because that iustice which is in the manhood, consisting partly in the purity of nature, and partly in the purity of action, whereby he obeyed his Fathers will, and suffered all things to be suffered for vs: this iustice I say, is imputed to vs, and accounted ours, according to the tenour of the covenent, as if it were inuicent in vs. He is our Sanctification, not onely because he is the author of it, neither because the sanctity or holiness of the godhead is communicated to vs: but because he was sanctified in his manhood about all men and Angels. And from this holiness of his, our holiness is deriued, and springs as a fruit: as the corruption in Adams posterity is deriued from the corruption of Adams. Christ saith, Ioh. 17. 19. For their sakes sanctifie I my selfe, that they also may be sanctified through the truth. Cyrill saith, As God, hee giues himselfe the spirit, as man he receiues it: which hee doth not for himselfe, but for vs, that the grace of sanctification out of him, and in him first receiued, might passe to all mankind. Again hee saith,*

That the body of our Lord, being sanctified by the vertue of the Word signified to it, is made so effectually for mysticall benediction, that it can satisfie his sanctification into vs. Lastly, Christ is our Redemption or life, on this manner: In the person of the Mediator, being one and the same, there is a double life: one vncreated and essentiall, agreeing to Christ as he is God. And this life is not giuen to vs at all, save in respect of the efficacy thereof. For in God we liue, moue, and haue our being. The other is the created life of the manhood; and it is either naturall, or spirituall. Naturall, is that wherewith hee liued in the estate of humiliation by ordinarie means, as all other men doe. Spirituall, is that whereby hee now especially liueth in the estate of exaltation and glorie. And this life he liueth not onely for himselfe, but also for vs; that we being partakers thereof, may liue together with him. Thus the ancient Church hath taught; the flesh of Christ vnited to the Word, is made quickening flesh, that it might turtle or quicken them with spirituall life, that are vnited to it.

The next question is, In what estate Christ is our Gaine; The estate of Christ is twofold: the estate of humiliation from his birth to his death; and the estate of exaltation in his resurrection, ascension, and his sitting at the right hand of God. In this first estate nee workes and procures our Gaine. Christ lying basely in the manger, and crucified ignominiously on the Crosse, gained our deliuerance from hell, and a right to life euertlasting. In the second estate, he communicates to vs the gaine before named, and by degrees, puts vs in possession of it. And for this end, he now sits at the right hand of God, and makes request for vs.

The vse of this doctrine, that Christ is our Gaine, is manifold. First it sheweth, that wee in our selues are poore, and altogether destitute of spirituall good things. For to this end is Christ our Gaine, that hee may supply our want, and fill them with graces that are otherwise emptie, & euert hunger-starued. Secondly it teacheth, that men doe in vaine seeke for so much as the least droppe of goodnesse out of Christ, who alone is the store-house of all good things. Heauen and earth, men and Angels, and all things are but as nothing to vs, if by them, wee seeke to enioy any thing out of Christ: yea GOD is no God to vs without Christ. Thirdly, we learne to detest the treasury which the Church of Rome maintaines and magnifies. It is as it were a chest, in which is contained, not onely the ouerplus of the merites of Christ, but also of Martyrs & Saints, to be dispensed in pardons at the Popes pleasure. But Christ is alone our full and perfect gaine; and therefore in himselfe there is an all-sufficient Treasure of the Church: and as Paul saith, Coloss. 2. 10. In him we are complete. As for the merites of Martyrs and Saints, they bring no aduantage to the people of God, but are indeed matter of the dung-hill. Fourthly, if Christ be our treasure and gaine, our hearts must be set on him. Our minds vse to be vpon our penny, and we hunger after gaine: let vs therefore hunger after Christ; he is our penny, and he is our gaine. Nay, wee must about all pleasures, honours, profits, loue him, and reioyce in him: yea, wee should be swallowed vp with loue of him. Lastly, here is matter of comfort. In the losse of goods and friends, and calamities of this life, we may not be dismayed: all the losses of this life, are but petty losses, so long as we haue Christ for our gaine. Nothing can be wanting vnto vs, in the midst of all our losses and miseries, so long as we receiue of his fullnesse, who is the fountaine of goodnesse, neuer dried vp.

To proceede further, the second part of the comparison [Christ is my gaine] is amplified by a gradation on this manner: I esteeme the knowledge of Christ Iesus my Lord an excellent thing: I desire to haue Christ: I desire to be found in Christ. Of these in order. By the knowledge of Christ, we are to vnderstand the doctrine of the Gospel, or the doctrine of the persons and offices of Christ, conceived and knowne of vs. To this knowledge an excellency is ascribed, of which I will speake a litle. This excellency appeares partly in the matter and contents, and partly in the effects thereof. Touching the matter, it is full of excellent mysteries, which Paul reduceth to sixe heads in his Epistle to Timothy, 1. Tim. 3. 16. The first is, the Incarnation of the Sonne of God, in these words: God made manifest in the flesh. And here two wonders offer themselves to be considered: the first, whereas Adams flesh and Adams sinne are inseparably ioyned together, in respect of all that nature can doe; yet did the Sonne of God take vnto him mans nature and flesh without mans sinne: because he was conceived of a Virgin by the operation of the holy Ghost: whereas if he had beene conceived by naturall generation, hee had with Adams flesh taken Adams corruption. The other wonder in the Incarnation of Christ is, that the flesh of man is vnited to the person of the Sonne of God, & thence hath his substance, otherwise hauing no substance of his owne. The like example is not to be found in the world againe: sauing that wee haue some resemblance thereof in the plant called Mistletoe, which hath no roote of his owne, but growes as a branch of the oake, or some other tree, and hath his life and sap from the roote thereof. The second mystery in the knowledge of Christ, is the iustification of Christ, in these words, Iustified in the spirit: and it was on this manner: Christ made man become our surety, and was made subiect to the law for vs. Hereupon our sinnes were imputed to him, and the punishment due thereto laide vpon him, that is, the first death with the paines of the second: yea further, death in the graue had dominion ouer him. After all this, by his spirit or power of the godhead hee raised himselfe from death, and thereby acquit himselfe of our sinnes: and this acquittal or absolution is his iustification, whereby hee declareth himselfe to be a Sauour perfectly righteous. For if hee had not satisfied the wrath of God to the full, and brought perfect righteousness, hee had neuer risen againe, considering he was iudged and condemned for our sinnes.

The third myserie is, the sight of Angels, who desired to looke into the Incarnation of Christ: in which they saw three things, as Luke testifieth. The first, that it was a meane to manifest the glorie of God: the second, that it brought peace and good successe to men vpon earth: the third, that it was a meane to reueale the good will of God to the world. The fourth is, the preaching of Christ to the Gentiles. This appeareth to be a great myserie; because the knowledge of Christ was kept secret from the nations, for the space of more then foure thousand years. For from the creation to Moses the Church of God was shut vp in a little family: from Moses to Christ, it was included within the precincts of Iewry: which was not so much as the fourth part of England. The fifth myserie was the conversion of the world to the faith of Christ. And this is so much the greater wonder; because this conversion was wrought by the preaching of the Gospel, which is flat against the naturall reason and will of man, and therefore vnfit to persewade: and the preachers thereof were simple and silly men to see to: and some of them which were converted, were the very Iewes that crucified Christ. The last myserie was the ascension of Christ into glorie. The greatnesse of this myserie appeares in two things. The first, that Christs ascension was a reall and full opening of the kingdom of heauen, which had formerly bin shut by our sin. The second, that the ascension of Christ, was no personall or priuate ascension: for he ascended in the roome and stead of all the Elect: and they ascended together in and with him, and now after a sort are together in and with him in glory. Thus we see the excellency of the knowledge of Christ in respect of the Mysteries contained therein: the like excellency appeares in the effects thereof; which are two: the knowledge of God, and of our selues.

For the first, by the knowledge of Christ, we know God aright. Hence Christ is called Ioh. 1. 3. The brightnesse of the glory of the Father, and the image of the invisible God, Col. 1. 15. And Paul faith notably, that when God shineth in our hearts by the light of the Gospel, his glory is to be seene in the face of Christ, 2. Cor. 4. 6. The wisdom, power, and goodnes of God is made manifest in Christ: and that more fully then euert it was in the creation. In the creation Adam being but a meere man was our head; but in the estate of grace, Christ is our head, God & man. By creation we receiue but a naturall life to be continued by food: by Christ we receive a spiritual, to be preferred eternally without food, by the operation of the spirit. As the spouse of Adam was bone of his bone, and flesh of his flesh: so is the spouse of Christ bone of his bone, & flesh of his flesh: and that in more excellent manner: because every particular man, as he is borne anew, and the whole Catholic Church the true spouse of Christ, springeth and ariseth out of the merit and efficacy of the blood that distilled out of the heart and side of Christ. In the creation God makes life of nothing: but by Christ he draws our life forth of death, and changeth death into life. Again, in the law the iustice of God is set down and revealed in Christ we see more, namely, perfect iustice and perfect mercie, revealed to the fully yea (which is a wonder) iustice and mercie reconciled. Lastly, in Christ we see the length, the breadth, the height, the depth of the love of God, in that God vouchsafeth to love the elect with the very same love wherewith he loveth Christ.

As by Christ we know God so also by Christ we know our selves: and that on this manner: First we must consider, that in the Passion hee took our person upon him, and that upon the crosse, he stood in our place, room, and stead. Secondly, we are to consider the greatness of his agonie and passion, set forth unto vs especially by five things. The first is, the testimonie of the Evangelists, who say in emphaticall words, that he was full of sorrow, and grievously troubled. The second, his complaint, that his soule was beane unto the death: and, that he was forsaken of the Father. The third, his prayer with strong cries: See mee from this houre, let this cup passe. The fourth, the coming of an Angell to comfort him. The last, his sweat of water & thicke or clotted blood. Now in Christ thus considered, we see the greatness of Gods anger against vs for our finnes: we see the greatness of our finnes: we see the wilkenesse of our persons: we see the hardness of our hearts, that never so much as sigh for our offences, for which the Son of God sweat water and blood: we see our unthankfulness, that little respect or regard this work of Christ. Lastly, we see our dutie: that we are to be thoroughly touched with true repentance, and to humble our selves as it wereto the very pit of hell: for it is the Sonne of God mourne and cry for our finnes imputed, we are much more to cry and bleed in our hearts for them, seeing they are ours properly, and with them we have pierced Christ. And thus the excellencie of the knowledge of Christ is manifest.

Hence we learne sundry things: First, if the knowledge of Christ be so excellent, we may not marvaile, that by the malice of the diuell it hath bene corrupted many hundred yeares in the Romish Church: which teacheth, that the Gospel is nothing else in effect, but the law of Moses perverted. Now if this were so, Christ doubtles died in vaine, and we might place our hope in our owne righteousness; and the promise of life eternall by Christ, should be of no effect. For the lawneruiliatifies before God, till it be perfectly kept: which condition of perfection if men could performe, there should be little neede of Christ, or of the Gospel. Secondly, if this knowledge be of such excellencie, it must be learned of vs, and that in speciall manner. If to other inferior learning we lend the vnderstanding & memory to this we are to apply the whole man. The minde must learne it by opening it self to conceiue it: the memory must learne it, by storing it vp: the wil & affections must learne it, by resigning and conforming themselves in their kinde vnto it. Thus Paul teacheth, That to keane Christ, as the truth is in Christ, is to put off the old man, & to put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and holinesse. Thirdly, by this we learne to value and prize the knowledge of Christ, about all things in the world. The Angels of God themselves desire to profit in this knowledge. Daniel, who in the darknes of the old Testament desired to be a doore-keeper in the house of God, if he were now living on earth, would be content with an office a thousand folde more base, that he might enioy this cleare light of the knowledge of Christ. But alas, there are no such Daniels now adades. It is our fault, and the fault of our times, that this knowledge is of little or no value and account among men; and little fruit thereof to be scene.

And therefore it is to be feared, that God will take this treasure of knowledge from vs, and send forth strong illusions to beleue lies; because it is little or nothing loved.

Paul yet further commendeth this knowledge in that he calls it, The knowledge of Christ, HIS LORD. Now hee is our Lord foure waies. First, by the right of donation (because all the Elect are giuen to him of the Father in the eternall counsell of election:) Secondly, by creation: thirdly, by the right of redemption: fourthly, by the right of headship: in that as a living head he giues sense and spiritual life to thē that beleue in him. And Paul calls Christ his Lord, because he beleueed his owne election, in which he was giuen to Christ, his creation & redemption by him, and his mysticall coniunction with him, as with his head. And here Paul in his example teacheth vs two things. The first, how we should know Christ, & the doctrine of the Gospel. For the right knowledge wherof, there is required, beside general vnderstanding of Christ & his benefits, with general assest, a special application therof. It is not sufficient to beleue the election, redemption, iustification, glorification of Gods peoples: but we must goe further, & beleue the very same things in our selves. The reason may be taken from the Contents of the Gospel. For it contains two parts, the first is a promise, in which Christ with all his benefits is offered and propounded vnto vs. The second is a commandement to apply the said promise & the substance thereof to our selves, and that by our faith. And he that takes away this second part, overthrowes halfe the Gospel of Christ. Here is the foundation of sauing knowledge, which iustifieth and bringeth life eternall; and the foundation of speciall faith. The second thing to be learned in Pauls example is, that we are to resigne our selves, our bodies and soules, and to render all subiection to Christ. For in that hee calleth him Lord, hee professeth himselfe to be the seruant of Christ. The end of all preaching is to bring, not onely our words and deeds, but also our secret thoughts in subiection to him. And the end why Christ sitteth in glory at the right hand of the Father is, that every knee may bow vnto him, of things in heaven and earth. It behooueth vs therefore to lue and carry our selves in our places as true and vnfaigned seruants of Christ.

The second degree in Pauls gradation is, that he desires to gaine Christ. Now to gaine Christ is nothing else, but to make Christ his gaine, as appears by the opposition of the words. For he faith, he had deprivd himselfe of all things, that is, made all things his losse, that he might gaine Christ. And he is made our gaine if two things be done. First, he must be made ours, that is, thy Christ, or my Christ in particular: secondly, we must put our confidence in him. For the first, that Christ may be made ours, a double consent is required: Gods consent, to giue Christ, and our consent to receive him. Gods consent, that Christ shall be ours, is giuen in the reuelation of the promise touching the womans seed, made to our first parents, in the continual remuing of the said promise to our forefathers, in the incarnation and birth of Christ, in his passion, in the preaching of the Gospel, in the administration of both the Sacraments, Baptisme, and the Lords supper. Our consent to receive Christ, is when we begin to be touched in our hearts for our finnes, and to hunger and thirst after Christ. Thus by the concurrence of these two contents is our Saviour Christ really made ours. And further yet, that he may be not onely ours, but also our gaine, we must set and fixe the whole confidence of our hearts vpon him alone, for the forgiveness of our finnes, and the salvation of our soules. For where the gaine is, there must the heart be. When riches increase we may not set our hearts on them, because, though they be good, yet are they not our gaine and treasure: Christ is not onely good vnto vs, but our gaine, and the very fountaine of all good things: and therefore we must bestow our hearts on him.

Hence we learne, that the Popish religion teacheth wickednesse. For it maintaines that we are not onely to beleue in God, but (also) in the Church: it maintaines an hope & confidence in Saints, especially in the Virgin Mary; it maintaines lastly a confidence in our owne workes: so it be as they say in sobriety. This is to make the creature our gain, and to put downe Christ our redeemer.

Again, Paul had said in the former chapter, that Christ was his gaine both in life and death: and yet now he faith, that he hath desired to gaine Christ. And by his example we learne, that in this life our affections must neuer be satisfied and filled with the desire of Christ, till we haue the full fruition of him. Naturally our desires be vnstable, in respect of riches, honours, pleasures: but we must learne to moderate and stint our selves in seeking of earthly things; being content with the portion that God doth allot vs: and the insatiableness of our affections must indeede be directed and turned vpon Christ. The woman in the Gospel, that had the bloody issue, desired to touch the hemme of his garment; wee must goe further, not onely to touch him, but also by our faith to lay hold on him, and as it were with both the hands to hang vpon him. Thomas desired for his contentation, but to put his finger into his side: we must set before our eyes Christ crucified: and his pretious blood as it were, afresh distilling from his hands, feet, and side: and we must not onely touch this blood, but sprinkle our selves with it, yea dip, and as it were diue our selves into it, body, soule, & al.

The third and last degree in Pauls gradation is, that he desires to be found in Christ. And here his desire is two-fold: the first, to be in Christ: the second, so to be found of God in the day of iudgement. The first, to be in Christ, is to be taken out of the first Adam, and to be vnto Christ as his very flesh; or as a true member of his mystical body. Now this incorporation and vnion into Christ is a mystery, and for the better vnderstanding of it, foure rules must be obserued. The first, that not onely our soules are vnited to the soule or Godhead of Christ: but also the whole person of him that beleueeth is vnited to the whole person of Christ. For the Redeemer & they which are redeemed, are vnited together: and Christ, God and man, redeemed vs, not onely in soule, but also in body. We therefore beleueers, haue our whole persons vnited to the whole person of Christ. And Saint Paul faith, 1. Cor. 6. 15. That our very bodies are the members of Christ. And Christ himselfe faith, Ioh. 6. 56. That we must eate his flesh, & drinke his blood, that we may be in him, and he in vs. The second rule is, touching the order of this vnion: That wee are ioined to the flesh of Christ, and by his flesh, to his godhead. For that which brings vs to haue fellowship with God, ioynes vs to God. Now by Christs flesh, we haue our fellowship with God. It is the velle of the temple, whereby the high Priest entred into the Holy of holies, and into the presence of God. Again, it seems as a pipe, or conduit, to deriue the efficacy and operation of the godhead vnto vs. The third rule is, that this vnion stands not in imagination, but is a true and real coniunction: Neither doth the distance of place (we being on earth, and the flesh of Christ in heaven) hinder this vnion. The minde is vnited after a sort, to the thing it mindeth. After the contract of marriage, two distinct persons beeing a thousand miles asunder, remaine one flesh. If nature afforded thus much: why may not the like bee found in the coniunction that is about nature?

The last rule is, That the bond of this our coniunction, is one and the same spirit, beeing both in Christ and vs: first in Christ, and then in vs. This teacheth S. Iohn, saying, 1. Ioh. 4. 13.
That Christ dwells in vs by his spirit giuen vnto vs. Again, this spirit worketh in vs faith, which also knits vs to Christ: who, as Paul saith, Ephes. 3. 17. dwells in our hearts by faith.
And by this we further see that distance of place hinders not this vnion. The spirit of God being infinite, may dwell both in Christ and vs:
and our faith though it be seated within our hearts, yet can it reach forth it selfe, and apprehend Christ in heaven.

The second desire of Paul is, That he may be found of God to be in Christ: that is, that God would respect him as a member of Christ, and accept him into his fauor eternally for Christ.
For the better vnderstanding of this, the order that God vseth in shewing his loue must be obserued. First of all, he begins his loue in Christ, whom he loues simply for himselfe;
then from Christ he defendeth to them that are vnited to Christ, considering them euen as parts of Christ whom also he loues, yet not simply, but respectiue in and for Christ. He that looks vpon things of diuers kinds thro-rough a greene glasse, beholds them all to be greene: euen so, whom God respecteth in and for Christ, they are loued of God, as he is loued and righteous as he is righteous. And this is the thing which Paul desireth that in the day of iudgement hee may be thus respected.

Hence we learne, that God will make an examination of al our hearts, liues, and works, in the day of iudgement. For this Finding, which Paul mentioneth, presupposeth, that God sees, and obserues our waies, and will one day certainly discouer the, knowing euen now certainly whether we be in Christ or no. For this cause we are to cal our selues to an account, y^eat to a strict account: for God will finde out whatsoever is amisse, though we haue skill to make faire shewes before men. And we are withall to amend our selues. Salomon vpon this ground disuades the yong man from fornication: Why shouldst thou my sonne (saith hee, Prou. 5. 20. 21.) take delight in a strange woman, seeing the waies of men are before the eye of God, &
he pondereth all their paths? To this purpose the Iews haue a saying worth our marking: write, say they, 3. things in thy heart, and thou shalt neuer sinne: There is an eye that seeth thee, an ear that heareth thee, and a hand that writeth all thy doings in a booke. The cause of our manifold sins is, that men fallily thinke, that God neither sees, nor heares them. Thus saith David of his enemies, Psal. 59. 7. They brag in their talke, and

A swords are in their lips: for they say, who heareth vs?
Again, here we see Pauls care, yea the pitch of all his desires, and his principall fore-cast, that he might be found of God in the day of iudgement, to be a member of Christ. The like must be our care and fore-cast now in the time of this life: yea, this must be the care of all cares, that we may be knit to Christ, and so accepted of God, when he shall rise to iudge-ment. Christ bids vs, Luk. 21. 36. Watch & pray, that we may stand before the sonne of man: and this we cannot doe, vnles we be incorporated into Christ. We are bidden first to seeke the kingdom of heauen: & that is indeed to be in Christ.
To be wise and circumspect in many matters, & yet to want fore-cast to compass our maine and principall good, is the greatest folly of all.
What is the fault of the foolish virgins? vir-gins they are as the wise: they carried the burning lamps of Christian profession: likewise they had oyle, that is, the oyle of Grace: but alas, they had not oyle enough to furnish their lamps. Their fault was, that they wanted forecast to furnish themselves with oyle sufficient.
And there is neuer sufficiencie of oyle, till wee be true and liuely members of Christ. And this was their damnable folly, that they contented themselves with the name and profession of Christ, & had not a serious and speciall care indeed to be members of Christ. Therefore let vs now diligently endeavour to be that in this life, which we desire to be found of God in the day of iudgement. There be three iudgments which weare to vndergoe, the iudgment of men, of our selues, and of God. The two first we may falsifie, the third we cannot.
For men wee may deceive, and our selues wee may deceive; but God we cannot. It is the foundation of all good things to be ingrafted into Christ: and for this cause, all the fore-cast of our heads, all other cares and studies should giue place, that this might be accomplished.
Some man may hereupon demand, what hee should doe, that he might be in Christ? I answer two things: first, he must breake off all his sinnes, and turne vnto God: secondly, he must pray earnestly euen vnto the death, that his heart may be knit to Christ. Again, it may be demanded, how it may be knowne of vs, that we are in Christ? S. Iohn answereth, 1. Ioh. 4. 13 Hereby we know that he dwelleth in vs, by the spirit which he hath giuen vs. And we may know that we haue the spirit of Christ, if the same mind, inclination, and disposition, the like loue to God and man, the like meekenes, patience, and obedience be in vs which was in Christ.
For the same fruits argue the same spirit.

v. 9. Not having mine owne righteousness, which is of the law, but that which is of the faith of Christ, &c.

The Apostle hauing taught in generall tearmes, that Christ is his gaine, here begins to declare the same in more particular forth.
For hee sets downe a three-fold gaine which hee desired to obtaine of Christ: the first is, *the right conscience of Christ: the second is, inward fellowship with him: the third is, the resurrection of the body to eternall glory. Now this righte-ousnesse of Christ which Paul makes his first gaine, is handled in the 9. verse, for the better knowledge whereof, I will first open the meaning of the words. And first of all, it must be knowne, that they are an exposition of the wordes which went before. For whereas Paul had desired to be found in Christ, now hee shewes his owne meaning, that hee desired therein nothing else but that he might be accepted of God for Christs sake, and be electe righteous in his righteousness. And that this righteousnesse may be the better discerned, he sets downe two sorts of iustice: the one hee reuseth, the other hee desireth and chooseth. The righteousness hee refused, he calls it his owne: because it is within him, and it is exercised by the powers of his soule, namely his minde, will, affections. He saith further, it is of the law, that is, of the workes which the law requirith: for (as Paul saith) the righte-ousnesse of the law is this, He that doth these things shall liue therein. Again, of the iustice desired, he saith, it is by the faith of Christ, that is, it is the obedience of Christ apprehended by faith. For in this manner to the Roma-nes, he puts the faith of Christ, for faith in the blood of Christ. And whereas some man might haply say, that euen this righteousness is ours, as the former, Paul addeth further, that it is of God, wholly & onely, and not of vs, either in whole, or in part, being freely giue-

n of him vpon our faith, that is, when we beleue.*

In these few words Paul coucheth many weightie points of doctrine. I will distinctly propound them one by one. First of all, hee makes a double iustice, one of the law, the other of the Gospell: yea he opposeth them as contraries in the case of iustification: and that they may the better be conceived, he describes them severally. Touching the iustice of the law, he sets it downe by two things. First he saith, it is within vs: because it is nothing else but a conformitie of heart and life to the will of God reuealed in the said law. And the law knowes not the righteousness which is without vs. Secondly, he notes the matter of it, that it consists of such vertues and workes as the law prescribeth. Now the iustice of the Gospell it is likewise set forth by four things.
First, it is not in vs, but forth of vs: because Paul opposeth it to the righteousness which is ours, and within vs. Secondly, Paul sets downe the matter of it, or the person in whom it is, namely, Christ. Of whom Ieremy saith; Jehovah is our righteousness. And Christ must be considered two waies: as God, and as Media-tour; according to which two respects, hee hath a double righteousness. One as God, and that is infinite, and therefore incommu-nicable: The other as Mediatour, is the obedience of Christ, which hee performed in his manhood, consisting of two parts; his iusto-ring in life and death, and his fulfilling of the law for vs. And this very obedience which is in Christ, and not in vs, is the very matter of the iustice of the Gospell. Thirdly, Paul sets downe the meanes whereby this iustice is made ours, and that is faith, which doth rest on Christ, and apply his obedience to vs. Lastly, Paul sets downe the author of this iustice, and that is God, who of his grace and mercie, freely giues Christ and his obedience vnto vs, when we beleue. Out of these foure points a definition of the iustice of the Gospell may be framed thus: It is the righteousness of the Mediatour, namely, the obedience of Christ, giue-n vs freely of God, & receiued by our faith.

By this distinction of Legall and Euangelicall iustice, we learne the difference of the law and the Gospell. The law promitteth life vpon the condition of our workes, or obedience performed, according to the tenour of the law. The Gospell requires not the condition of merit, or of any worke to be done on our parts in the case of our iustification, but only prescribes vs to beleue in Christ, and to rest on his obedience, as our iustice before the tribunall seat of God. Secondly, by this wee learne, that the Church of Rome, and the learned therein, are ignorant of the right difference betweene the Law and the Gospell. For they teach, that the righteousness which stands in our inherent vertues and workes done by vs, is required for iustification, as well in the Gospell, as in the Law: and that the difference lies onely in this, that the Law is more darke, and without grace; the Gospell more plaine, hauing also the grace of God annexed vnto it, to inable vs in our owne persons, to doe that which both Law & Gospell require. But this is indeed to make a confusion of the law & Gos-pell, and to abolish the distinction of the twofold iustice before named, which may not be.

The second point of doctrine deliuered by Paul is, That a sinner stands iust before the tribunall seat of God, not by the iustice of the Law, but by the iustice of faith, which is the obedience of Christ, without any workes of ours. And because this point of doctrine is of great moment, & is withall oppugned of many, I will further confirme it by some speciall reasons. First of all in the iustification of a sinner, God manifesteth his mercie and iustice to the full. For as Paul saith: Hee iustificeth freely by his grace: and in iustificing, hee is not onely a iustifier, but also iust. Now this concurrence of mercy and iustice, is no where to be found, but in the obedience of Christ, performed by him in our roome and our stead. As for all Christian vertues and workes of godly men, they are by mercie accepted of God, but they doe not satisfie the iustice of God, according to the tenour of the law. Secondly, Paul in the Epistle to the Romaes, considering Abraham not as an idolater vnconverted, but as a beleuer, yea as the father of all the faithfull, saith, that then he was iustified without workes.

K k k 4 and

and that his faith, that is, the Mefias apprehended by his faith, was counted vnto him for righteousness, long after his conuerfion. Now as he, who is a patterne for vs to follow, is iustified; fo mult we be iustified, and no otherwife. Thirdly, as by Adams disobedience we are made finners, so by Christs obedience we are made righteous: but by Adams disobedience (A) imputed to vs, are we made finners: therefore we are made iust by the obedience of Christ imputed. Bernard vsd this reason: Whom (saith he) another mans fault defiled, another mans water washed. Yet in calling it another mans fault, I doe not denie it to be ours: otherwife it could not defile vs. But it is another mans, because we all not knowing of it, sinned in Adam. It is ours, because we haue sinned, though in another; and it is imputed to vs by the iust iudgement of God, though it be secret. Yet, that thou maist not complain, O man, against the disobedience of Adam, there is giuen thee the obedience of Christ: that being sold for nought, thou maist bee redeemed for nought. Again, the doctrine of imputed iustice here teacheth exprefly, saying: All are dead, that the satisfaction of one might be imputed to all, as he alone bare the sins of all. Again, Death is put to fight by the death of Christ: & the righteousness of Christ is imputed to vs. Fourthly, Paul saith: Christ is made vnto vs of God, iustice, that is, iustice imputed: for in the next word he saith, he is made our justification, that is, our iustice not imputed, but inherent. Fifthly, as Christ was made fin, to are we made the iustice of God; but Christ was made our sinne, not by any conuincence of any corruption into his most holy heart, but by imputation. We therefore are made the iustice of God by like imputation. And lest any man should yet surmise that this iustice is not imputed, but infused vnto vs, Paul saith, We are made the iustice of God in him, that is, in Christ. Hence it followeth manifestly, that there is no vertue or worke within vs which iustifieth before God, and that our iustice, whereby we are iust in the sight of God, and accepted to life eternall, is out of vs, and placed in Christ. Thus much haue the Fathers obserued vpon this text of Paul. Augustine saith, that Christ was made sinne, that we might be made iustice, not our iustice, but Gods iustice: neither in vs, but in him: as he declared sinne not to be his, but ours, nor placed in him, but in vs. Herome saith, Christ being offered for vs, tooke the name of sinne, that wee might bee made the righteousness of God in him, not ours nor in vs. In the same manner speake Theophylact. Anselme, Sedulius presbyter, and others. Lastly, man considered as a creature before his fall, owed vnto God the fulfilling of the law, which as a certaine tribute was daily to be payed vnto him. After the fall, he doubled his debt, because he then became debter to God of a satisfaction due for the breach of the law. Now the payment of the doubled debt, is our righteousness. But where may we finde

A sufficient payment for this debt? wee ourselves by our sinnes, daily increase the said debt. And our owne works, though proceeding of faith, are no convenient payment: because wee cannot by one debt pay another. And if wee shall search through heauen and earth, there is nothing to be found, that may stand for payment with God, but the obedience of the Redeemer, which he hath presented and laid downe before the throne of the Almighty, as an endless treasure to make payment in our behalfe. And because the said obedience is a satisfaction for our varietie of sinnes, it is also our iustice in the acceptation of God. By these and other reasons, it appears, that nothing can absolve vs before God, and procure the Right of eternall life, but the onely obedience of the Mediatour Christ, God and man: and that without any vertue or worke of ours.

Hence it folloves, that the present Church of Rome corrupts the article of iustification, by mingling things together, which can no more be compounded and mingled together, then fire and water: namely, the iustice of the Gospell with the iustice of the Law. For it makes a double iustificatio: the first contains two parts, pardon of sinne by the death of Christ, and the infused habite of charitie. The second is, by works, which (they say) doe meritiously increase the first iustification, and procure eternall life. Here wee see the foueraigne medicine of the Gospell, namely remission of sins, tempered with the poyson of the Law. For though vertues and workes prescribed in the Law, haue their place, as good gifts of God, in our liues and conuersations: yet when they are set vp higher, and brought within the circle of iustification as meritorious causes; they are put quite out of their place, and are no better then poyson: and hercupon are termed of Paul, Loffe and dung. But such as desire to be taught Catholikes, alledge for themselves against vs, that the obedience of Christ, that is, the righteousness of an other cannot possibly be our righteousness. I answer that the iustice of another may be our iustice, if it be really made ours. And this is true in Christ. For when wee begin to beleue in him, though our persons remaine euermore distinct and vnconfounded, yet are we made one with him, and according to the renour of the Euangelicall coveuant, are wee giuen to him, and he to vs: so as wee may truly say, Christ is mine, as we can truly say, this house, or this land is mine. Now if Christ be ours, then also his obedience is not onely his, but ours also: his, because it is in him: ours, because with him it is giuen vs of God. Again, they alledge, That when Paul refuseth the righteousness of the law, he means nothing else but the workes of the law that are performed by the strength of Nature, and that he doth not exclude the workes of grace. I answer, it is false: for he speaketh of himselfe in the time present when he was a Christian Apostle: and therefore he excludes all righteousness of his owne, which he had by the law, euen when he was an Apostle. And the objection, Rom 6. 1. What then shall we sinne that grace may abound? cannot bee inferred vpon iustification by workes of grace: but vpon a iustification by the obedience of Christ imputed to vs, without all workes of our owne.

Again, that we are iustified, not by the iustice of the law, but by the iustice of faith, here is the foundation of our comfort. For hercupon, if we be tempted in the time of this life, we may oppose against the tempter this our iustice. If Satan plead against vs, that we are sinners, & therefore subiect to eternall damnation, let vs answer him, that the obedience of Christ hath freed vs from this damnation: if he plead further, that we neuer fulfilled the law; & consequently, that we haue no right to eternall life, we must answer him, that Christ fulfilled the law for vs. If he shall vex and vpbraid vs with the consideration of our manifold wants and corruptions: let vs tell him, that so long as we turne vnto God, from all our euill waies, bewaile our corruptions, & beleue in Christ, all our wants are couered in his obedience. Again, if in the time of death, the feare & apprehension of the iudgement & anger of God terrifie vs, we are to oppose this obedience of our Mediatour Christ Iesus, to the iudgement of God, and to put it betweene Gods anger and vs: yea we are to rest vpon it, and to infold and wrappe our soules in it, and thus to present them to God. I say the Prophet saith, that the Mefias is a place of refuge, shelter, or shade, against the tempest, or burning heat of the wrath of God. And Paul saith, he is our propitiatorie: to signifie, that, as the propitiatorie couered the Arke, and the law in the Arke, which is the hand-writing against vs, from the presence of God: so Christ couereth our sinnes, and puts himselfe betweene vs and the indignation of his Father.

The third and last point of doctrine here deliuered by Paul, is: That faith is the meanes to receiue & to obtaine the obedience of Christ for our iustice. That this may the better be conceiued, four points are to be handled. What this faith is? how it is a meanes to obtaine iustice? whether alone by it selfe, or by the helpe of other vertues? when, and how long it is the onely meanes? For the first: Faith is a special gift of God, whereby we beleue Christ & his benefites to be ours. In the first place I say, it is a gift of God: because it comes wholly of God, and not from the minde or will of man. Thus Paul saith, It is giuen you for Christ to beleue in him: and Christ our Saviour faith to two of his disciples, O foolish and slow of hearts to beleue. If it be objected, that when we beleue first, we then beleue willingly: I answer, it is so indeed: yet is not this willingness in vs by nature, but by grace: because whē God giues vnto vs the gifts of faith, he giues vs also to wil to beleue. None comes to Christ but hee is drawne of the father: & to be drawne is, when the vnnwilling will is changed, & by the power of God made a willing wil. I adde further, that faith in the Mefias is a speciall gift for two causes. First, because it is a gift about not only corrupted, but also about the first created nature. For it was neuer in mans nature by creation. Adam neuer had it: neither did the morall law recale it vnto vs; because it neuer knew this faith. Neurtherlesse other vertues, as loue of God and man, feare of God, &c. are recale of the law, and were in mans nature by creation. Again, whereas all other gifts of God are giuen to them that are ingrafted into Christ, faith is giuen to them that (A) are to be ingrafted: because it is the ingrafting, & therefore cannot be giuen to them that are already in Christ, but to them that are to be in Christ. Further, I say, that by faith, we beleue Christ, and his benefites to be ours. For this is the propertie of faith, whereby it differs from all other graces of God. When Thomas had put his finger into the side of Christ, he said, My Lord, and my God: to whom Christ replied, Because thou hast sente, thou hast beleued: where we see, that this is faith, to beleue Christ to be our Lord and our God. Paul saith, I liue by the faith of Christ: now what he means by faith, he shewes in the next words: who hath loued ME, and giuen himselfe FOR ME.

If a man shall demand, on what grounds (because wee are not to goe by imagination) I say, vpon what grounds he is to conceiue a faith, that Christ is his Christ; I answer, the grounds are two. The first is the commandment of God, to beleue Christ and his benefites to be ours, 1. Ioh. 3. 23. This is his commandment, that we beleue in the name of his Son Iesus Christ. Now to beleue in Christ, is to put our confidence in him: and we can put no confidence in him, vnlesse we be first assured that he with his benefites is ours. And whatsoever we aske in prayer, we are commanded to beleue that it shall be giuen vnto vs. Now about all things we are to aske, that Christ & his benefites may be giuen to vs of God. This therefore mult we beleue. The second ground is this, we must consider the manner that God vseth in propounding the promise of grace vnto vs: for hee doth not onely set it forth vnto vs in a general sort, but also he vseth meere & conuenient meanes to apply it to the persons of men. First of all, he confirms it by oath, that we our selues might the better apply it & reap sure cololation thereby. Secondly, God giueth vnto vs the spirit of adoption; which beareth witness to our consciences of such things as God hath giuen vnto vs in particular, and are onely in general manner propounded in the promise. And this testimony must be certaine in it selfe, and also plainly knowne vnto vs: else it is no testimony. Thirdly, both the Sacraments are seales of the promise: in the lawfull vſe whereof God offers, yea exhibites

Christ vnto vs, and doth (as it were) write our names within the promise, that we might not doubt. Now then, looke as God giues the promise, so must wee by faith receiue it. But God giues the promise, and withall applies it: we therefore must receiue the promise, and by faith apply it to our selues. If any man shall say, that hee cannot conceiue a speciall faith vpon these grounds by reason of his vnbelleefe: I answer, that he must stricke against his vnbelleefe, & indeauour to beleuee by desiring, asking, seeking, knocking: & God will accept the will to beleuee for faith it selfe, so be it there be an honest heart touched with sorrow for sins past, and a purpose to sinne no more.

That wee may yet better know what faith is, vnderstand that there be two kinds of false faith, like indeed to true faith, and yet no faith at all. The first is, when a man conceiues in his heart a strong persuasion, that Christ is his Saviour, & yet carries in the same heart a purpose to sinne, and makes no change or amendment of his life. This persuasion is nothing but presumption, and a counterfeit of true faith, whose proprietie is to purifie the heart, & to shew it selfe in the exercises of inuocation and true repentance. The second is, when men conceiue a strong persuasion, that Christ is their Saviour, & yet for all this contemne and despise the Ministerie of the word and Sacraments. This also is another counterfeit. For true faith is conceiued, cherished, and confirmed by the vse of the word and Sacraments. And we must therefore seeke Christ, where God will giue him vnto vs: now God giues Christ in the word and sacraments; and in him he doth as it were open his hand and reach forth all the blessings of Christ vnto vs. We must not therefore imagine to finde Christ, where and how we list; but wee must seeke him in the word and Sacraments, and there must wee receiue him, if we desire to receiue him aright.

The second point to be considered is: How faith is a means to iustifie? I answer thus: Faith doth not iustifie as it is an excellent worke of God in vs: for then all vertues might be means of iustification, as well as faith. It doth not iustifie as it is an excellent vertue it selfe: because it is imperfect and mingled with vnbelleefe. It doth not iustifie as a means to prepare and dispose vs to our iustification: for so loone as we begin to beleuee in Christ, we are iustified (A) without any disposition or preparation coming betwene faith & iustification. Lastly, it doth not iustifie as it contains in it all other vertues and good workes, as the kernell contains the tree with all his branches: For then should it be a part, yea the principall part of our iustification. Whereas Saint Paul distinguisheth iustification and faith, saying, that our righteousness is of God vpon faith: and not for faith, but, by faith. Now then faith iustifies, as it is an instrument or hand to apprehend or receiue the benefits of Christ for ours; and this apprehension is made, when we doe indeed beleuee

Christ and his benefits to be ours. And left any should imagine, that the very actio of faith in apprehending Christ, iustifieth: we are to vnderstand, that faith doth not apprehend by power from it selfe, but by vertue of the covenant. If a man beleuee the kingdome of France to be his, it is not therefore his, yet if he beleuee Christ and the kingdome of heauen by Christ to be his, it is his indeede: not simply because he beleuees, but because he beleueeth vpon commandement and promise: for in the tenour of the covenant, God promisseth to impute the obedience of Christ vnto vs for our righteousnesses, if we beleuee.

The third point is, Whether faith alone be the means to obtaine the iustice of Christ for vs or no? I answer, it is the onely means without the help of any other vertue or work. For Paul here teacheth, that faith apprehendeth Christ for righteousness, without the law: that is, without any thing that the law requires at our hands. And here by this exclusive particle (without the law) hee teacheth three things. The first, that nothing within vs is an efficient or meritorious cause, either principall or lesse principall, in whole or in part, of our iustification or reconciliation with God. The second, that nothing within vs is an instrument or means to apply the obedience of Christ vnto vs, but faith which is ordained of God to be an hand to receiue the free fauour of God in the merit of Christ. The third, that our renouation or sanctification is no matter, forme, or part of our iustification, but that it wholly stands in the imputation of the iustice of Christ. In a word, Paul vtrly excludes all things that are within vs, whether by nature or by grace, fro the act of iustification: that in this article, onely grace, onely Christ, onely faith, onely mercy in pardon of sin may reigne. It may be here objected, that Abraham was iustified not by faith alone, but by workes, as Saint James teacheth. I answer, there is a double iustification, one of the person whereby a man of a sinner is made no sinner: the second is, the iustification of the faith of the person, whereby faith is declared to be true faith; and this second is by workes, and of it Saint James speaketh, as appeares, v. 18. where hee saith, Show me thy faith by thy workes. And whereas he saith, that Abraham our father was iustified by workes, his meaning is, that Abraham by workes iustified himselfe to be a true beleueer, yea the father of all the faithful; and his faith was made perfect by workes, v. 22. that is, declared or iustified to be a true faith.

The fourth or last point is, When and how long faith alone iustifieth? I answer, not onely in the beginning of our conuersion, but also in the continuance, & a small accomplishment thereof. For heere Paul desires in the day of iudgement to stand before God onely by the iustice of faith, without his owne iustice of the law. And Paul brings in Abraham (as I haue noted before) in the very middelt of godly

uerfation and holy obedience to bee iustified without any workes by his faith to the Messias. And Paul anoucheth three things of faith: by it we haue access to the grace of God: by it wee stand in the same grace: by it wee reioyce vnder the hope of glory. Thus then, we see there is one onely way of iustification, namely, that wee are iustified and accepted of God to life eternall, through grace alone, by faith alone, for Christ alone, in the beginning, middle, and end of our conuersion. And here is plainly discovered the error of the Church of Rome. It makes a double iustification: one whereby a sinner is made of an euill man a iust man; and this they say is by faith alone: the second is, whereby a iust man of a iust man is made more iust: and this (say they) is by faith and workes together: but fairly, as I haue shewed.

By all this which hath bin said, we see how righteousness comes by and vpon the faith of Christ. And hence we learne, that it stands vs in hand to proue whether wee haue faith or no: because where is no faith, there is no iustice. Secodly, our duty is to labour for such a faith, that can and doth iustifie it selfe to be true faith, by workes of loue to God and man. Thirdly, we must by this faith, rest and wholly relie our felues on the obedience of Christ both in life and death: yea whatsoever doth befall vs. Though God should reach out his hand & destroy vs, we must still rest vpon him.

Secodly, if our iustice be forth of vs, and we must by faith trust God for it: then much more must we trust him for health, wealth, libertie, peace, food, and raiment, and for all the things of this life. And if we cannot trust him in the lesse, we shal neuer trust him in the principall. Therefore it is our part to walke in the duties of our callings, and to obey God therein: and for the successe of our labours to trust him vpon his word; yea when all worldly helps and succours faile, to trust in him still. If we cannot trust him for our temporall life, we shal neuer trust him for our saluation.

The second gaine which Paul desireth, is fellowship with Christ: in the 10. vers. Where it is set forth first generally, and then by his parts. Generally in these words [That I may know him]. Here it must be remembered that knowledge is two-fold, knowledge of faith, and of experience. Knowledge of faith, is to be assured of Christ and his benefits, though it be against all humane reason, hope, and experience. Of this Christ saith, It is eternall life to know thee the only God, &c. The knowledge of experience, is to haue a sense and feeling of our inward fellowship with Christ, and vpon obseruation of his goodnesse, to grow more and more in experience of his loue. Now this knowledge is here meant, and not the first, which was before mentioned, verse 8. And therefore Pauls desire is, that he may grow more and more in holy experience of the endless loue of God, and fellowship with Christ.

The parts of the desired communion are two: Fellowship with Christ in his resurrection, and fellowship with him in his death. The former is expressed in these wordes, [And the verue of his resurrection]. And for the better conceiuing of it; we are to consider what the resurrection of Christ is? and what is the vertue thereof? That the resurrection of Christ may be rightly conceiued, fise points are to be scanned. The first, touching the person of him that rose: and that was Christ, God and man. Indeed properly the body alone did rise, and not the soule or Godhead, yet by reason of the vniou of the two natures in the vniou of one person, whole Christ arose, or God himselfe made man arose. This commends to vs the excellency of Christs resurrection, and makes it to be the foundation vnto vs of our resurrection. The second point is, For whom he rose? Hee rose not as a priuate person for himselfe alone; but he rose in our roome and stead, and that for vs: so when he arose, all the elect arose with him, and in him. Thus saith Paul, that the Ephesians were raised together with him. His resurrection therefore was publike: and this is the ground of our comfort. The third point is, When he arose? Hee arose then, when he lay in bondage vnder death, and that in the graue, which is as it were the cattle and hold of death. When Peter saith, That God loosed the forrowes of death, hee significeth that Christ was made captiue for a time to the first death, and to the forrowes of the second. Now in the midst of this captiuitie and bondage, hee raised himselfe: and this argues, that his resurrection is a full victory and conquest ouer death and all our spirituall enemies. The fourth point is, That he rose by his owne power, as he saith of himselfe, I haue power to lay downe my life, and to take it up againe. If this had not bin, though hee had risen a thousand times by the power of another, hee had not bin a perfect Redeemer. The last point is, Wherein stands the resurrection of Christ? Ans. It consists in three actioes of Christ. The first is, the reuniting of his body to his soule, both which were seuered for a time, though neither of them were seuered from the God-head. The second actio is the change of this natural life, which he led in the estate of humiliation, into a heavenly and spiritual life without infirmities, & not maintained by food as before. For wee finde not that after his resurrection he euer tooke meat for necessity, but onely vpon occasion, to manifest the truth of his manhood. And this life hee tooke vnto himselfe, that he might conuey it to all that should beleuee in him. The third actio is, his coming forth of the graue; whereby death it selfe did as it were acknowledge him to be a conquerour, and that it had no title or interest in him. These fise things considered, the Article of Christs resurrection shall be rightly vnderstood.

Touthing the vertue of Christs resurrection, it is nothing els but the power of his Godhead, or the power of his spirit, whereby he raised himself mightily from death to life, and that in our behalfe. The excellencie of it may be knowne by the effects, which bee in number eight. The first, that by it he shewed himselfe to be the true and perfect Saviour of the world. For it was foretold of the Mesias that he should die and rise againe. Psal. 16. 10. Math. 12. 40. And all this was accordingly accomplished by the vertue of Christs resurrection. The second effect is, that by it he shewed himselfe to be the true and naturall sonne of God. Paul faith, He was declared mightily to be the Sonne of God, by the spirit of holynesse in his rising from the dead. The third effect is, that by this vertue he declared himselfe to haue made a full and perfect satisfaction for the finnes of the world. For if he had not satisfied to the full, he had not risen againe. And Paul faith, If Christ be not risen, we are yet in our finnes. On the contrary then, seeing he is risen, such as beleene in him, are not in their finnes. Againe, Who shall condemne vs? it is Christ which is dead, yete or rather which is risen againe. The fourth effect is iustification, as Paul testifieth, He died for our finnes, and rose againe for our iustification, and that was in this manner. When he was vpon the Crosse, he stood there in our roome, haining our finnes imputed vnto him: and when he rose from death, he acquit and iustified himselfe from our finnes, and ceased to be any more a reputed sinner for vs: and thus, all that doe or shall beleene in him, are in him acquit, absolved, and iustified from all their finnes. If any demand, how they which liued in the time of the old Testament, before the resurrection of Christ, could be iustified thereby, considering the effect must follow the cause: I answer, that they were iustified by the future resurrection of Christ: which though it followed in time, yet did the value and vertue thereof reach euen to the beginning of the world. The fifth effect is, the conferring and bestowing of all such gifts and graces as hee had merited and procured for vs by his death and passion. Thus Christ testifieth that the giuing of the spirit in large and plentiful manner, was referred to his glorification of Christ, which began in his resurrection. And the preaching of repentance and remission of sins is referred till after his resurrection. And S. Peter faith, that the Elect are regenerate to a lively hope by the resurrection of Christ. By reason of his bestowing of graces and gifts, the resurrection of Christ is the beginning of a new and spiritual world, which the holy Ghost calls the world to come, in which shall be a new heauen and a new earth, as Isaiah speakech, and a peculiar people of God, zealous of good workes, keeping an eternal Sabbath vnto God. This one effect alone sufficiently declares the excellencie of this vertue of Christ. The sixth effect is viuification, which is raising of vs from the death of sinne to newnesse of life. And the reason hereof is plain. For Christ in his resurrection put away his naturall life, which with our nature he received from Adam; and tooke vnto him a spiritual life, that he might communicate the said life to all that beleene in him. Againe, as the first Adam makes vs like himselfe in sinne & death: so Christ the second Adam renews vs, and makes vs like to himselfe in righteousnesse and life. And the head quickened with spirituall life, will not suffer the members to remaine in the death of sin. The seventh effect is, to preferre safe and found the gifts and graces which he hath procured by his death, and bestowed on them that beleene: and this hee doth by the vertue of his resurrection. For to this end hath he conquered all our spiritual enemies, and doth by his power conquer them still in vs; so as none shall be able to take his sheepe out of his hands. The last effect is, to raise the body from the graue in the day of iudgement to eternal glory. If it bee objected, that the wicked are also raised then by the power of Christ: I answer, that the power of Christ is two-fold. One is the power of iudgement, the other a power of a Saviour. By the first, Christ as iudge raiseth the vngodly, that hee may execute on them the curse denounced from the beginning of the world [what is it then that eate the forbidden fruit, thou shalt die the death.] The second power is here termed the power of Christs resurrection; & it belongs to him as he is our Saviour: and by it he will raise to life eternal, all those that by the bond of the spirit are mystically vniued to him. For by means of this vniou, this raising power shall flow from the head to the dead bodies of them that are in Christ. Thus we see what the vertue here mentioned is, and what Paul desires, namely, that he may haue experience of these effects in himselfe.

The vse of the doctrine followeth. First of all, in that Christ rose for vs, and in that his resurrection is of endless efficacy: here is the foundation of all our spiritual comfort. For by this vertue of Christs resurrection from death to life, all our spiritual enemies are conquered and subdued; and by the said vertue doth he daily more and more subdue them in vs. Vpon this ground said Christ: I see shall haue affliction in the world: but be of good comfort, I haue overcome the world. And this victory is for vs, and it is made ours by our faith, as Iohn faith, This is the victory which ouercometh the world, euen your faith. Art thou then terrified and affrayed with the conscience of thy finnes, with the cruelty of tyrants, the rage of the world, the paines of hell, the pangs of death, the temptations of the diuill? Be not dismayed, but by thy faith rest on Christ that rose againe from death to life for thee, & thereby shewed himselfe to be a rocke for thee to rest on, and to be the Lyon of the Tribe of Iudah: and thus shalt thou be sure to finde certaine remedie against all the troubles and miseries of life and death. Again, here we are taught to rise with Christ from our finnes, and to liue vnto God in newnesse of life: and for this end to pray that we may feele the vertue of Christs resurrection to change and renew vs. Great are the benefits which we reape by this vertue, and we are to shew our felues thankfull to God for them: which we can doe no way, but by newnesse of life. Again, the end why Christ rose for vs, was that we might rise from our sins and corruptions, in which we lie buried as in a graue, to a new spirituall life. And the reward is great to them that make this happy change. For hee that is partaker of the first resurrection, shall neuer see the second death, Rom. 2. 6. as on the contrary, hee which neuer riseth from his owne fins and euill waies, shall certainly feele and endure the second death. And further, it must bee knowne, that the vertue of Christs resurrection, and the merit of his death, are inseparably ioyned together: and therefore he that findes not the vertue of Christ to raise him to an holy and spirituall life acceptable to God, failly perswades himselfe of the merit of his death in the remission of his finnes. Christ by rising put vnder his feete all our enemies, and led captiuitie captiue, euen sinne it selfe. It is therefore ashamme for vs to walke in the waies of sinne, and to make our felues slaues and captiuities to it. Christ by rising from death made himselfe a principall leader and guide to eternal life. What wickednes then is it to walke in the waies of our owne heart, and not to follow this heavenly guide? The care and purpose to keepe a good conscience is a certain fruit and effect of Christs resurrection. Thus S. Peter faith, 1. Pet. 3. 21. that the effect of our baptism is the stipulation of a good conscience by the resurrection of Christ. Where the word which I translate, Stipulation, signifies an interrogation vpon an interrogation. For the minister in the name of God demands, whether wee renounce the world, the flesh, and the diuell, and take the true God for our God. And we vpon this demand, do further in our hearts demand of God, whether he will vouchsafe to accept vs being wretched sinners for his seruants; and thus we make profession of our mind and desire. When Christ rose, by the vertue of his resurrection the earth trembled, and thereby this brut creature in his kinde professed his subiection and homage to Christ that rose againe. If then we beleue that Christ rose from death for vs, much more should our hearts tremble and we yeeld our felues in subiection to him in all spiritual obedience. Some men may say, you bid vs rise from out finnes, as Christ rose to the glory of his Father, whereas this is wholly Gods worke in vs, and not ours: I answer, it is so indeed: yet can we vse the outward meanes of hearing and reading; & if we haue any spark of grace, wee can aske and desire the spirit of God that worketh in vs. Again, exhortations, admonitions, and such like, are meanes appointed of God, whereby he worketh in vs the things that he requirerth and commandeth.

Wherefore let vs listen to the voice of Christ, Awake thou that sleepest, stand up from the dead, and Christ shall giue thee life. And worldly cares must not hinder vs in this worke: for as Paul faith, they which are risen with Christ, must seeke the things that are aboue.

Again, here we are taught, that we may not content our felues, if we know Christ in the braine, and can speake well of him with a glib tongue; wee must yet goe further, and by all meanes labour, to see that taste and feele by experience how good & sweet a Saviour Christ is vnto vs; that our hearts may be rooted and grounded in his loue. This is the thing which Paul aimed at which also we must seeke by all possible meanes to attaine vnto.

To proceede that we may haue right knowledge of our communion with Christ in his death, two points are to be handled. The first is, what are the sufferings of Christ? I answer, not only the sufferings which he endured in his owne person, but also those which are endured of his members. Thus Saul persecuting the church, is said to persecute Christ himselfe. And Paul faith, Col. 1. 24. that he fulfilled the rest of the afflictions of Christ in his OWNE FLESH. And whereas the Lord said of the people of Israel, Hos. 11. 1. I haue brought my some out of Egypt: it is supplied by Matthew to Christ himselfe. Yet here it must be remembered, that if the members of Christ suffer either ciuill or ecclesiasticall punishments, for euill doings; they are not the sufferings of Christ. For when S. Peter had said, 1. Pet. 4. 13. Reioyce in that you are partakers of the sufferings of Christ: he addeth further, v. 15. Let no man suffer as an euill doer, opposing the one kind of sufferings to the other. Therefore our sufferings are then to be accoued the sufferings of Christ, when they are for good cause, and for the name of Christ.

For the second point, fellowship with Christ in his death is either within vs, or without vs. That within vs is called the mortification of the flesh, or the crucifying of the affections and the lusts thereof. The other without vs, is the mortification of the outward man by manifold afflictions: and of this Paul speakes in this place: and it may be thus described out of this text. Fellowship with Christ in his death is, nothing but a conformity in vs to his sufferings and death. And it is a thing worthy our consideration to search wherein stands this conformitie. For in two respects there is no conformitie betweene our sufferings and the sufferings of Christ. For 1. of all, God poured forth on Christ the whole malediction of the law due to our finnes: and by this meanes shewed vpon him iustice without mercy. Contrariwise in our afflictions God moderates his anger, and in iustice remembers mercie: because he layeth no more vpon vs, then we are able to beare. Secondly, Christs sufferings are a redemption and satisfaction to Gods iustice for our finnes: so are not ours; because before God wee stand but as priuate persons, and for this cause the sufferings of man can not satisfie for another, and there is no proportion betwene our sufferings and the glorie which shall be revealed. And Christ faith of himselfe, Iſa. 63. 6. I have trod the wine-press alone.

Now this conformitie stands (as I take it) properly in the manner of suffering; and that in foure things. First of all, Christ suffered for a iust and righteous cause: for he suffered as our redeemer, the righteous for the vnrigh- teousnesse sake. Secondly, Christ in suffering was a mirror of all patience and meekenesse.

And wee in our sufferings must shew the like patience. And that wee be not deceived here- in, our patience must haue three properties. It must be voluntary, that is, we must willingly and quietly renounce our owne wills, and sub- iect our selues in our sufferings to the will of God. Patience perforce is no patience. A- gaine, it must not be mercenary, that is, we must suffer, not for by respects, as for praise, or profit, but for the glory of God, and that we may shew our obedience to him. Hence it appears, that the patience of the papist, that suffers in way of satisfaction, is no right pati- ence. Lastly, our patience must be constant.

If we endure afflictions for a brunt, and after- ward begin to grudge and repine, casting off the yoke of Christ, we faile in our patience. Further, if it be demanded, whether the affec- tions of griefe and sorrow may stand with patience: I answer, yea, for Christian religion doth not abolish these afflictions, but only mo- derate them, and bring them in subiection to the will of God, when we lie vnder the crosse. The third point wherein stands our conformi- ty with the sufferings of Christ, is this, Heb. 5. 8. Christ learned obedience by the things which hee suffered, not because he was a sinner, but be- cause being righteous hee had experience of obedience. And we likewise in our sufferings must be more careful to take the fruit thereof, than to haue them taken away. And the fruit of them is to learne obedience thereby, speci- ally to the commandments of faith and re- pentance. When Iob was afflicted of God, not for his finnes, but that he might make a triall of his faith and patience, hee neuer thelesse in the end tooke an occasion thereby to renew his old repentance. And Paul faith, that hee re- ceived in his owne selfe the sentence of death, that he might learne by faith to trust in God alone. Lastly, Christs sufferings were euen to death it selfe: euen so must we resist sinne, fight- ing against it to the shedding of our blood.

Faith and good conscience are things more precious then the very blood of our hearts: and therefore if need be, we must conforme our selues to Christ, euen in the paines of death.

This is that conformity which Paul here speakes of, which also he magnifies as a speci- al gaine. And there be many reasons thereof. For first of all this conformity is a marke of Gods child. For if we obediently endure afflictions

1. Cor. 11. 28. God in them, and by them, offereth himselfe as a father vnto vs. Secondly, it is a signe that the spirit of God dwelleth in vs: as Peter faith, 1. Pet. 4. 14. If ye be reailed vpon for the name of Christ, the spirit of glory, and of God resteth vpon you. Thirdly, the grace of God is most of all manifested in affliction, in which God seemes most of all in mans reason to withdraw his grace. Gods power is made manifest in weaknes.

Afflictions bring forth patience: not of it selfe, but because then the loue of God is shedde a- broad in our hearts. Hope of eternal life shew- eth it selfe most in the patient bearing of afflic- tions. In peace and ease naturall life reignes: Contrariwise in our sufferings naturall life de- caies, and the spiritual life of Christ apparent- ly sheweth it selfe. Lastly, this conformity with Christ, is the right and beaten way to eternal life. By many tribulations we must enter into the kingdome of heauen. That we may reigne & liue with Christ, we must first die with him. The estate of humiliation is the way of exaltation and glory, first in him, and then in vs.

The vse of this doctrine followes. Here we see what for this life is the condition of al true beleuers: namely, that after they are made partakers of Christ and his benefits, by the vertue of his resurrection, they must also be made conformable to his death. The com- mandement of our Saviour Christ to them that will be his Disciples, is, To deny themselves, and to take vpon their owne crosse every day. Lucy. 9. 23.

And there be three weighty causes, why God will haue it so. The one, that hee may correct finnes past; the other, that hee may prevent finnes to come: the third, that he may proue what is in our hearts. Secondly, we learne by this which hath beene said, to comfort our selues in our sufferings. For in them Christ and we are partners, and hee vouchsafes to make vs his fellowes. Hence it followes, that all our af- flictions are well knowne to Christ, and that they are laid on vs with his consent: and for this cause we should frame our selues to beare them with all meekenesse. And hence againe we learne, that he being our partner, will help vs to beare them, either by moderating the weight of them, or by ending them for our good. Lastly, here we learne that our afflictions, are either blessings or benefites, and such may we discern them to be, though not by the light of reason, yet by the eye of faith: because they are meanes to make vs conformable to our head Christ Iesus. Benefits of God are of two sorts, positiue and priuatiue. Positiue, whereby God bestoweth something vnto vs. Priuatiue, whereby God takes away a blessing, & couer- tly giues another. Benefits of this kind be afflic- tions. Of the twaine, these are the rarer for the time of this life: and the other for the life to come. And therefore while we liue in this world our duty is with Paul to labour to attaine to this conformity with the sufferings of Christ, when vpon any occasion we shall be afflicted for then shall we be fashioned like vnto him,

and

and reape much comfort thereby.

Thus much of the second gaine: now fol- lows the third in these words, (If by any meanes I may attaine to the resurrection of the dead.) The word [resurrection] here signifies the reward of eternal life; the antecedent be- ing put for the consequent. For to rise againe of it selfe is no gaine, considering it is common both to good and bad, but eternal life that followeth is the reward. And the forme of speech, [If by any meanes] doth not signifie or imply any doubting in Paul of his owne re- surrection to life: for hee was perswaded that nothing should sepeate him from Christ: and it is an article of our & Pauls faith to beleue the resurrection of the body to eternal life. Wherefore it signifies properly a difficultie to obtaine the gaine desired: and an earnest af- fectiō in Paul to obtaine the same. And when hee saith, [If by any meanes] we must know that there be three waies or meanes to come to et- ernal life. One is a by peaceable life and death: the other is by a life laden with many afflictions: the third is by a violent, cruell and bloody end. And Pauls minde and desire is, to obtaine the crowne of eternal glory by a- ny of these waies: and if not by the first or second, yet by the third.

In these words foure things are to be con- sidered. The first is the gaine it selfe, and that is the reward of eternal glorie. And that wee may the more with Paul be stirred vp to a de- sire thereof, I will stand a while to declare the excellencie and the conditions of it. It is no- thing else but a certaine estate of life, in which all the promises of God are in, and by Christ accomplished vnto vs in heauen. And it will the better be conceiued by the answering of three questions: What shall cease in this estate? What we shall haue? What we shall doe?

For the first, seuen things shall cease. The first is, the execution of the Mediatorship of Christ, or of the offices of a king, priest, pro- phet. Thus much Paul teacheth, whe he saith, that Christ in the last day must giue vp his king- dome to his Father, 1. Cor. 15. 24. And though the execution that then cease: yet nothing shall be wanting to them that beleue: because then shall be the full and eternal fruition of all the benefites of our redemption. Secondly, then shall cease all callings in family, Church, and common-wealth: because Christ shal then put downe all power, rule, and authoritie. In this blessed estate, there shall not be magistrate and people, master and seruant, husband and wife, parent and children, pastor and people: but all such outward distinctions of persons shall cease, and wee shall bee as the Angels of God. Thirdly, all vertues that pertaine to vs, as we are pilgrimes here vpon earth, shall haue an end, as faith, hope, patience, because the things beleued and hoped for shall then be ob- tained. Withal, the part of inuocation called Pe- tition, shall cease, as also the preaching & hear- ing of the word, & the vse of the Sacraments.

The fourth thing that shall cease, is original sinne with the fruits thereof: because no vn- cleane thing may enter into the heavenly Je- rusalem. Fifthly, then shall cease all miseries and sorrowes, all infirmities of bodie and minde: for then all the defects of eyes, armes, & legs, shall be restored. The fixt thing that shall cease, is naturall life with the meanes thereof, as meat, drinke, cloathing, physicke, recreation. For then our bodies shall be spiritual, that is, im- mediately and eternally preferred by the op- eration of the spirit of God, as now the body of Christ is in heauen. The last thing to be abol- ished is the vanity of the creatures, specially of heauen and earth: which in the last iudgment shall be restored to their former excellency.

The second question is, what we shall haue and enjoy in this estate? I answer, three things. The first is, immediate and eternal fellowship with God the Father, Sonne, and holy Ghost. For in this happy estate the tabernacle of God shall be with men, as S. Iohn faith: and God shall bee all things that heart can wish to all the Elect. Augustine saith notably, There shall bee exceeding peace in vs, and among vs, and with God himselfe. Because we shall see him, and inioy him alwayes and euery where. Therefore blessed shall that life be, for the thing which we shall inioy, for we shall inioy him by himselfe, all other meanes ceasing. For the measure of inioying him: for we shall fully inioy him. For the time: for we shall eternally inioy him. For the certainty, whereby we shall know that it shall be so. For the place: for we shall inioy him in heauen. Lastly, for the compari- son, inioyned with vs: for they be the Elect. From this fruition of God shall arise endlesse and vnsp- eakable ioy, Psal. 16. 11. In thy presence is fulnesse of ioy, at thy right hand are pleasures for euermore.

In the transfiguration of Christ, which was but a shadow of eternal glorie, Peter was ra- uished with ioy and delight: the ioy therefore that shall be in the kingdome of heauen, must needs bee vnsp- eakable. The second thing which shall be inioyed, is glory both in minde and body. In minde, because we shall then be partakers of the Diuine, not essence, (for then we should be deified) but nature, that is, di- uine vertues and qualities, more excellent then those which God bestowd on Adam, though of the same kinde. The third thing is, Domini- on and lordship ouer heauen and earth: which lordship once lost by Adam, shall then fully be restored. He that ouercometh, shall possesse all things, Reu. 21. 7.

The third question is, what we shall doe? I answer, briefly, keepe an eternal Sabbath in praising of God, and giuing thanks vnto him. And thus by the consideration of these things we may take a taste of the excellencie of this third and last gaine.

The second point here to bee considered, is the difficulty of obtaining this desired gaine of eternal life. And the reason is plaine. For the way to eternal life is full of impediments, which I reduce to foure heads. First of all, in 13.

Srr. de temp. 148

this way wee are to fight, not with flesh and blood, but with principalities and powers in spirituall things, seeking the destruction of our foules. Secondly, there be within vs innumerable lusts that compass vs round about, presse vs downe, and draw vs away to the broad way of destruction. Thirdly, this way lies full of offences, partly in doctrines, partly in cuill examples; al tending to this end, either to make vs fall, or to goe out of the way. Lastly, it is beset with manifold and diuers tribulations; from the beginning euen to the ende. Hence wee learne, that we must giue all diligence that wee may attaine to the reward of glorie: and therefore we must struggle, strive and wrestle to enter in at the straight gate. The principal gaine, and the hardnesse to obtaine it, requires our principall studie and labour. Therefore they deale wickedly that vie no meanes, but (as they say) leaue all to God, thinking it the easiest matter in the world to wiane the kingdome of heauen. The like is their fault, that professe religion in a slacke & negligent manner, being neither hot nor colde.

The third point, is Pauls minde and desire of eternall life. If it be said, that wicked men haue the like desire, as for example Balaam: I answer, in Paul there was an endeaueur answerable to his desire, as appears, Act. 24. 16. where he saith, that hee waited for the resurrection of the iust and vniust: and that in the meane season hee laboured to keepe a good conscience before God and men: now this desire in the vngodly is barren, and yeelds not his fruit. Again, Paul being iustified, still desires to attaine to full fellowship with Christ, and to conformity with him in glorie. The like desire, with the like endeaueur, should be in all vs.

The last point, is Pauls courage and fortitude. Hee is content to endure any kinde of death, yea cruell death, so he may obtaine this third and last gaine. And thus it is verified, which he saith, 2. Tim. 1. 7. that God hath giuen him the spirit, not of fearfulness, but of courage.

A Like was the courage of Moses, who was content to endure afflictions with the people of God, that he might wiane the recompence of reward. Like was the courage of the Martyrs, That were racked and would not be deliured, that they might obtaine a better resurrection. We likewise walking in the way to eternall life, must take the like courage vnto vs in all dangers. For this cause we must pray vnto God, to giue vs the spirit of courage: and wee must alwaies attend vpon the calling and commandement of God, making it the stay and foundation of our courage: and we must yet further stay our selues on the promise of Gods preface and protection, so long as we obey him. If it be alledged, that we are by nature fearefull in dangers, and therefore vncapable of courage: I answer, there is a three-fold feare. The first is, feare of nature, when mans nature feares, flies, and eschewes that which is hurtful vnto it. This feare was in Christ, whose soule was heauie vnto death, who also feared the cursed death which he endured. And therefore this feare of it selfe is no sinne, and it may stand with a true fortitude. The second feare is that which riseth of the corruption of nature, when a man feares without cause, or without measure. Without cause, as when the disciples feared Christ walking vpon the sea: or when they feared drowning, Christ lying asleepe in the ship. Without measure, as when men distrustful God, neglect their callings in time of danger, and the durie of inuocation, flying to vnlawfull meanes of deliuerance. Now this second feare is an enemy vnto all courage. The third feare is, when perils and death are indeede feared: but yet feare is ordered by faith in the mercy and prouidence of God, by hopes by inuocation; and it is ioynd with obedience to God in the time of danger. This is a proceeding of grace, and it may well stand with courage, and it serues to order the two former feares, the one of nature, the other of distrust.

Trin-vni Deo gloria.

TO THE RIGHT HONOURABLE
LORD HENRY, EARLE OF KENT, LORD
of Hasting, Weisford, and Ruthyn.

Right Honourable, &c. Great hath bene the mercy of God to this our English nation, in that beside peace and protection, hee hath bestowed on us the treasure of his Gospell, now more then forty yeeres, and that under the government of a most gracious Queene. It is a benefit unspeakable: and England (as I thinke) neuer had the like before.

For this great mercy, we owe to God all thankfulness that heart can thinke, or tongue can speake. Our thankfulness must shew it selfe in the fruit of obedience to the Gospell. And obedience is to turne enen unto God from every evil way, to beloeve in Christ, and to walke in newnesse of good life.

But alas, in respect of the greatest number, we are a nation very unthankfull: yielding small obedience to the Gospell of life. If the things which have bene done in England, had bene done in Barbary, or Turkie, or America, it may be they would have repented in sackcloth and ashes, and have turned more earnestly unto God then we have done. And for this cause we have deserved, that God should take away his Gospell from us, and give it to a nation that will bring forth the fruits thereof. For the preventing of this evil which we have deserved, it stands us in hand to repent of our unthankfulness, to embrace the Gospell more then we have done, and to walke worthy of it in holiness of life.

For the furthering of this good worke, I have penned this small Treatise of Idols, and the true worship of God. For this is the right practise of the Gospell, to put from vs all manner of idols, and to sanctifie God in our hearts, that is, to serue him in minde and spirit, namely, with a pure heart, a good conscience, and faith vnfeined.

And having penned this Treatise, I now present it to your Honour, and presume to publish it in your name. First, because God hath made you Honourable, not onely by civil dignitie, but also by an vnfeined love and obedience to the Gospell of Christ. Again, my desire is, to giue some testimony of a thankfull minde for your vnderstanding. Thus I take my leave, praying God to establish the heart of your Honour, and all his people, without blame in holiness before him, euen our Father, against the coming of our Lord Iesus Christ with all the Saints.

Your H. in all dutie to command, W. PERKINS.

To the Reader.

If any demand, wherefore I haue penned, and am allowed to publish a Treatise of Idolatry, now in the light of the Gospel, and in a Church, where Idolatry is condemned to the pit of hell: let them vnderstand that I doe it for sundry causes.

The first is, to declare and conuince the Church of Rome of manifest Idolatry: and consequently, to shew that they are deceived, who thinke that Protestants and Papists differ not in the substance of religion, but in circumstances.

The second is, to aduertise our Recusants (if they will vouchsafe to reade and consider what I haue said) that they ought to be Recusants to the Church of Rome: because thence is a maintainer and worshipper of idols.

The third is, to stirre vp and kindle in the minds of our country-men a further detestation and loathing of the Romish religion. For if it had no other fault or defect, the very crime of Idolatry vnexcusable, wherewith it is iustly charged, is a sufficient inducement to moue all men that regard their owne saluation, to an vnfeined loathing of it.

The last is, to informe the ignorant multitude touching the true worship of God. For the remainders of Popery yet stickie in the minds of many of them, and they thinke, that to serue God, is nothing else but to deale truly with men, and to babble a few words morning and euening, at home, or in the Church, though there be no vnderstanding.

1. Iohn 5. verse 21.

Babes, keepe your selues from Idols.

He intent and scope of the Apostle in this Epistle is to set downe markes and tokens, whereby men may know whether they bee the children of God or no. Having performed this from the beginning of the Epistle to the end thereof, toward the end of this chapter in the 18. ver. he answers a secret obiection which may be framed on this manner. He that is the child of God may fall from God, commit a sinne vnto death, and so consequently loose his assurance. Therefore it seemes, that there is no comfort by the assurance of our adoption, but for the time present. To this the Apostle answers negatively in the 18, 19, 20. verses: the effect of the answer is, That hee which is borne of God so preserves himselfe by grace, that he cannot be drawne by Satan to commit the sinne that is to death. And in this last verse of this chapter, he sets downe a rule how men should preferre themselves that they fall not into this sinne; Babes, keepe your selues from Idols: that is, hold fast the true and spirituall worship of God; and for this cause avoide all things that may withdraw your hearts from God, especially take heede of Idols.

In this rule I consider two things: a commandment, Keepe your selues from Idols. The reason is infolded in the word Babes. That the right meaning of the commandment may appeare the better, I will stand a while to shew first, what is meant by Idols; & secondly, how wee are to keepe our selues from them. The word Idol generally and properly signifies as much as Image; that is, the resemblance of any thing either good or bad. For that which I magize in Latine, Idol is in Greeke. Terrillan faith, that Idol signifies a forme or little forme; and the distinction of Idol and Image was not observed of the (A) Latin interpreter. Yet by more narrow and more vsuall significatio, the word Idol is put for any such Image as is erected to represent either false or true God. That Idols are images of false Gods, all men grant; but that they are images also of the true God, there is the question. But I make it manifest thus. The golden calfe of the Israelites, was an idol, as it is called by Saint Seuen Act. 7. 41. and it was an image of Iehoua. For after the calfe was once framed, Aaron proclaimed a day of solemnity, and said, To morrow shall be the holy day of Iehoua, Exod. 34. 5. That which the Israelites did in this case, was no doubt the same which they had often seene the Egyptians doe before them. Now the Egyptians represented and worshipped God in the formes of wilde and tame beastes, as Strabo the Geographer plainly faith, Images in vfe of religion, erected by the wisest of the heathen, were nothing but Idols: and many of them verily were images of the true God, as Paul testifieth, when he faith, Rom. 1. 23. They turned the glory of the incorruptible God, to the similitude of an image of corruptible man, and of birds, &c. Thirdly, idols often signify false gods themselves, 1. Chrom. 16. 26. The gods of the people are vaine things, or idols: Thus Rahel is said to steale Idols, or the Gods of her father. And Paul, 1. Cor. 8. 4. makes an opposition betweene an Idol and the true God. Yet are not false gods idols properly so termed, but by a metaphor. Because as images made in the way of Religion, draw the heart from the true God: euen so doe false gods, truly called idols. Thus then, an idol is any thing set vp to bee worshipped, either in the roome of God, or as God. In the roome of God, as prophane images: as God, namely false gods.

The general property of idols, is, that they are NOTHING in the world, as Paul faith, 1. Cor. 8. 4. and they are so termed, because they haue nothing in them of the diuinity or godhead, whether wee regard the nature or the efficacy thereof. And this appeares by Pauls reason, An idol, faith hee, is nothing in the world: because vnto vs there is but on God. Furthermore, it is nothing in respect of representation: for an idol sometime is nothing at all: sometime it representeth as God, that which is merely nothing: sometime it representeth the true God, otherwise then he is; and in this respect also it representeth nothing.

The Kindes and sorts of Idols are likewise to be considered, specially such as haue beene erected since the daies of the Apostle. For there is no question, but he did foresee, that the Apollolical religion would be corrupted by Idolatrie, & that made him say; Babes keepe your selues from Idols. That the diuers kinds of

Idols may be knowne, we must consider how many waies a man may erect an idol to himselfe. And this may be done three waies. The first is; If God be otherwise conceived, then he hath manifested and reuealed himselfe in his owne word: God is to be conceived as he reueales himselfe vnto vs, and no other wise if otherwise, God is not conceived, but a fiction or idol of the braine. Augustine vpon the words of Iohn, Take away the strange Gods from among you, faith on this manner: The holy Prophet Iohn saith in their hearts, thoughts of God, not befeeming God, and he wils them to be taken away. For whosoener conceiveth God to be such an one, as he is not indeede, carries in minde a strange and false God. Two famous examples we haue in this kind. The first is, when the true God is conceived out of the Father, Sonne, and holy Ghost; or out of Christ our Redeemer God & man. For when the minde abstracts the Godhead from the Father, Sonne, and holy Ghost, God is transformed into an Idol. The Ephesians before their conuerſion, worshipped God the maker of heauen and earth, and so did the Galatians. And yet neuertheless Paul faith of the first, that they were without God, Ephesians, chap. 2. 12. and of the second, that they worshipped them that were not god, by nature, Gal. 4. 8. because they worshipped God out of Christ; for he that denies the Sonne, hath not the Father. And the vnicie of the Godhead is to be adored in the Trinitie of persons. Here then behold the Idol-god of the great nations of all the world; of Turkes, of Iewes; yea of many that pretend Chritianitie, who vpon ignorance, worship nothing but an absolute God, that is; God absolutely considered without any relation to Father, Christ, or holy Spirit. Yea the multitude in all places set vp vnto themselves, a god that is all mercy, and no iustice: because they content themselves with the light of blinde nature, and frame God according to their owne desires and affections. And by this meanes they erect vnto themselves Idols within their owne hearts, and commit a most secret and spirituall Idolatry, which the world cannot discern.

The second example followeth, and that is, Christ Iesus falsly and farre otherwise conceived then hee hath reuealed himselfe in the word. For hee in one person is perfect God and perfect man: our only redeemer all sufficient in himselfe, and therefore perfect king, priest, prophet; without either partner or fellow in the worke of mans saluation. And hee which otherwise conceiveth of him, turns him into an idol or forged Christ. This doth that great and famous Italian Diana, I meane the religion that stands in force by the late Council of Trent. For it presenteth vnto vs Christ indeede, but yet a poore disguised and deformed Christ. For it spoylth him of his manhood, and degrades him of his offices. Hee is spoyled of his manhood by the presence in the sacrament: for if the bread be ve-riely transubstantiated into the body of Christ, this very body must needs be made, not only of the substance of the Virgin, but also of the substance of bread: nay, it is made a very monstrous bodie. For being in his full quantitie and dimensions, and so remaining, it is supposed to bee included and contained in the quantitie of a small round cake: as if a solide bodie of many foot could be contained in a solide bodie of two or three inches. Againe, if Christ be bodily in the bread, & in the hand of the receivers, remission is to be asked of God, from that which wee hold in our hands, and receive with our mouth. For remission of sinnes must be asked and looked for at Gods hands for Christs sake, specially in the vfe of the Lords Supper. Communicants therefore must thus thinke with themselves, & speake vnto God; I pray thee, O heauenly Father be mercifull vnto me for this thine owne sonne, whom being now bodily present, I hold in this mine owne hand, and receive with my mouth. And this is the oblation of the Popish Masse, in which the Priest imagines that he holdeth and carrieth Christ bodily in his hands, and there offereth him to his Father, that hee may obtaine remission of sinnes for himselfe and others, and that for his sake whom hee holds in his hands. And this, no doubt, is horrible and detestable idolatry: and it were better to endure many deaths, then so much as once to be a doer in it. For wee are taught by the word of God, to waite for our saluation by Christ made man, and now appearing at the right hand of his Father in heauen, and not for him whom wee hold and carry in our hands. Touching his offices, the said religion degrades him of his priest-hood by sue things. The first is, the daily offering of Christ in the masse, & that in reall manner, and also for the sinnes of the quicke and the dead. For by this meanes, the sacrifice vpon the crosse is either continued as a thing but begun and after to be perfected, or it is repeated. If continued, it was not then accomplished on the crosse. If repeated, then also it is imperfect: imperfect, then no sacrifice of a Redeemer. The second is the doctrine of humane satisfaction. For if our sufferings considered as satisfaction for the temporall punishment of our sinnes, must concur in the worke of our redemption with his satisfaction for the fault and the eternall punishment of the same sin, then is this satisfaction of his in very deede imperfect, because it receiues an addition and supplement from ours. And if I satisfie for my selfe to my creditor, my friend doth not make full satisfaction for mee: neither is it requisite. And so farre forth as I satisfie for my selfe, I redeeme my selfe. The third is the doctrine of the merit of workes, which makes void the worke of redemption wrought by Christ. For if Christ merited by his death and passion, that we might merit by our workes eternall life: then is not Christ a full and perfect Saviour, but only the principal cause of our saluation; or rather an instrument of God to make vs our owne Saviours. The fourth is the doctrine of venial sinne: for if manye manye sinnes are venial in their owne nature, so as wee our selues may satisfie for them, it was not needfull that Christ should die, and by his death redeme vs from all sinnes. The fifth is the doctrine of the Intercession of Saints; who in Romish doctrine make intercession not only by requesting, but also by meriting; (a) yeaby commanding. For thus the Virgin Mary doth; more then which Christ himselfe can not doe.

In the reformed Masse-booke there is ascribed to the intercession of Saints, first, protection. Let blessed Sabbath by making intercession for vs, protect vs, O Lord. Again, by (c) thy Apostles keepe vs with thy continuall protection. Secondly, appealement, a Being appealed by the intercession of thy Saints, grant, O Lord, we pray thee, &c. Again, Let not the prayer of Saint Chrysostome be wanting vnto vs, which may cause our gifts robe accepted and obtaine thy pardon for vs. Again, By the prayer of Martin make us to be cleane of our sinnes and defended. Thirdly, Confidence, (c) by resting on their suffrages.

What can be said more of the intercession of Christ? I know they adde in the end; per Dominum, but what is that to the purpose? If wee giue any point of supremacie to a subiect, it is treason; though otherwise in termes we magnifie the fouraignty of the Prince. Again, the false Catholike religion degrades him of his kingly office, by giuing vnto the Pope two royalties of the kingdom of Christ: One is, a power to giue pardon of sins vnto men, both fully and (f) properly, which none can doe but God. The other is to make lawes truly binding the consciences of all men in the Catholike Church vpon earth, and that as truly as (g) the lawes of God; whereas there is but one Law-giuer that can make and destroy the soule.

Lastly, it degrades Christ of his prophetical office. First, because it giues vnto the Pope a power supreme and infallible to determine in his Consistorie and in generall Councils, of all controuerfies in religion, whether concerning faith or manners; whereas this power in Christ is inseparably annexed to the person of Christ, who in and by his written word determines of all matters pertaining to saluation, and that infallibly and sufficiently to the contentation of an humble minde, and to the settling of any conscience. Secondly, it adde and takes away, it changes and renuerfes the doctrine Christ hath left vnto the Church, specially in the bookes of the new Testament, by an heape of humane traditions, specially by the law of single life, and the communion in one kinde, &c.

It may haply bee alleaged, that the Religion pretended to bee Catholike, holdeth the Vnitie of the Godhead, the Trinitie of

A persons, the distinction of natures in Christ; the personall vnion, the offices of the Mediator as we doe. I answer that in word it doth, but in deede by infallible consequence of doctrine it doth abolish Christ, as I haue shewed. Papists in word confesse him to be Our Lord, but with this condition, that the Seruant of Seruants may alter and change his precepts, whose power (they say) is of that greatnesse; that hee may bee iudged of none, and that he can open or shut heauen to whom hee please. They confesse him to be Iesus Our Saviour; yet a Saviour in vs, in that he giues vs this grace, that by our owne merits we may be our owne Saviours, borrowing also (if neede be) a supply from Martyrs and the rest of the Saints. They confesse him to be crucified, dead, and buried, for vs: yet with this condition, that the fault being pardoned, wee our selues must satisfie for some part of the punishment, either in this world or in purgatorie. They confesse, that he sits at the right hand of God the Father, to be vnto him the Mediator of intercession for vs; and yet withall, they hold that his mother is the Queene of heauen, hauing authoritie to controll and command her sonne. What a Christ is hee, that in sundry actions pertaining to our redemption hath partners or fellowes ioyned with him? For this cause wee reiect this religion, because it turnes our onely and perfect Redeemer into a fained Christ of mans deuiling. It may be further said, that some false opinions conceived of Christ, doe not straight-way turne him into an Idoll. I answer with Hierome: Euen to this day an Idoll is set vp in the house of God, or in the hearts and soules of beleaguers when a new doctrine is deuised. Again, A false opinion, is an Idoll of falsehood.

The second way of erecting an Idoll is, when God is worshipped otherwise, and by other meanes, then hee hath revealed in the word. For when men set vp a deuised worship, they set vp also a deuised God, Angustine faith of the Gentiles, that they refused to worship the God of the Hebrewes, Because, if their pleasures were to worshipping him in another sort then hee had appointed, they should not in deede worshipping him, but that which they had fained. The Samaritans worshipped the God of Abraham, Isaac and Iacob: and they waited for the coming of the Messias; and yet Christ faith of them, See worshipping ye know not what: because they worshipped the true God by a worship deuised of old, and set vp by men. The Lord faith to the Israelites, ye shall call mee no more BAALE: whereby he signifieth, that because the Iewes did sometime worshipping God in the same manner, with the same images, rites, and names, whereby the heathen worshipped the false God Baal, therefore they made him indec to be euen as the Idol Baal. And this I take to be the right meaning of the former words; because the words following are: For I will take away the names of Baalim out of her mouth: verse 17. When the Iewes in Ieremie chapter 2. vers. 23. denied that they worshipped Baalim, there can bee no reason (I suppose) of their denial, but this, that they intended to worship God in the Idols of Baal. Again, Saint Iohn faith; 1. Iob. 2. 24. If that which ye haue heard from the beginning remaine in you, ye also shall continue in the Father and the Sonne. Hence it followes, that they which abide not in the doctrine of the Prophets and Apostles, but set vp some other forme of worshipping God, abide not in the Sonne and the Father. Gods worshipping must bee according to his nature, heauenly; diuine and spiritual; but all deuised worshipping is according to the nature and disposition of the deuiler, foolish, carnall, vaine as Christ faith, Math. 15. 9. In vaine doe they worshipping mee, teaching for precepts the commandments of men. And according to this worship is the God that is worshipped. Therefore when God is worshipped, not according to his owne will, but according to the pleasure and will of man, the true God is not worshipped, but a God of mans inuention is set vp. One notable example wee haue in this kinde. When God is either represented or worshipped in any Image of mans deuiling, there is presently made a double Idoll, the one is the Image representing: the other is GOD represented, who is by this meanes turned into an Idoll.

That the Image made of vs to resemble and represent God, is an Idoll, I proue it thus: The Image which Michas erected was a statue Idoll: for it is called Teraphim, which all commonly translate, Idols. And it was an image of Iehonab. For before it was made, the filuer whereof it was made, was dedicated to God: and after it was made, when he had got a priest into her house, to offer sacrifice vnto it, shee said: Now I know that Iehonab will be good vnto me. The two golden calves erected in Dan and Bethel by Jeroboam, were Idols in the iudgement of all men: yet were they nothing else but Images to represent the true God of Israel. For the worship of them, is called the fears of Iehonab. Iohn neuer departed from the sinne of Jeroboam, and therefore hee was indec a patron and defender of the golden calves: neuertheless it was not his minde and meaning to make Gods of them, but to worship the Lord of hosts in them and by them. For when he was about to destroy the Images and priests of Baal, hee said, Come see how zealous I will be for the Lord of hosts. Grauen images and likenesses mentioned in the second commandment, are plaine Idols, and they are Images, not onely of false Gods, but of the true God. For Moses expounding this commandment, faith thus: Deut. 4. 16. Take heede to your selues, that ye corrupt not your selues, and make you a grauen Image, for representation of any figure: and his reason is, ver. 15. for ye see saw no image in the day the

When the Iewes in Ieremie chapter 2. vers. 23. denied that they worshipped Baalim, there can bee no reason (I suppose) of their denial, but this, that they intended to worship God in the Idols of Baal. Again, Saint Iohn faith; 1. Iob. 2. 24. If that which ye haue heard from the beginning remaine in you, ye also shall continue in the Father and the Sonne. Hence it followes, that they which abide not in the doctrine of the Prophets and Apostles, but set vp some other forme of worshipping God, abide not in the Sonne and the Father. Gods worshipping must bee according to his nature, heauenly; diuine and spiritual; but all deuised worshipping is according to the nature and disposition of the deuiler, foolish, carnall, vaine as Christ faith, Math. 15. 9. In vaine doe they worshipping mee, teaching for precepts the commandments of men. And according to this worship is the God that is worshipped. Therefore when God is worshipped, not according to his owne will, but according to the pleasure and will of man, the true God is not worshipped, but a God of mans inuention is set vp. One notable example wee haue in this kinde. When God is either represented or worshipped in any Image of mans deuiling, there is presently made a double Idoll, the one is the Image representing: the other is GOD represented, who is by this meanes turned into an Idoll.

That the Image made of vs to resemble and represent God, is an Idoll, I proue it thus: The Image which Michas erected was a statue Idoll: for it is called Teraphim, which all commonly translate, Idols. And it was an image of Iehonab. For before it was made, the filuer whereof it was made, was dedicated to God: and after it was made, when he had got a priest into her house, to offer sacrifice vnto it, shee said: Now I know that Iehonab will be good vnto me. The two golden calves erected in Dan and Bethel by Jeroboam, were Idols in the iudgement of all men: yet were they nothing else but Images to represent the true God of Israel. For the worship of them, is called the fears of Iehonab. Iohn neuer departed from the sinne of Jeroboam, and therefore hee was indec a patron and defender of the golden calves: neuertheless it was not his minde and meaning to make Gods of them, but to worship the Lord of hosts in them and by them. For when he was about to destroy the Images and priests of Baal, hee said, Come see how zealous I will be for the Lord of hosts. Grauen images and likenesses mentioned in the second commandment, are plaine Idols, and they are Images, not onely of false Gods, but of the true God. For Moses expounding this commandment, faith thus: Deut. 4. 16. Take heede to your selues, that ye corrupt not your selues, and make you a grauen Image, for representation of any figure: and his reason is, ver. 15. for ye see saw no image in the day the

take away the names of Baalim out of her mouth: verse 17. When the Iewes in Ieremie chapter 2. vers. 23. denied that they worshipped Baalim, there can bee no reason (I suppose) of their denial, but this, that they intended to worship God in the Idols of Baal. Again, Saint Iohn faith; 1. Iob. 2. 24. If that which ye haue heard from the beginning remaine in you, ye also shall continue in the Father and the Sonne. Hence it followes, that they which abide not in the doctrine of the Prophets and Apostles, but set vp some other forme of worshipping God, abide not in the Sonne and the Father. Therefore when God is worshipped, not according to his owne will, but according to the pleasure and will of man, the true God is not worshipped, but a God of mans inuention is set vp. One notable example wee haue in this kinde. When God is either represented or worshipped in any Image of mans deuiling, there is presently made a double Idoll, the one is the Image representing: the other is GOD represented, who is by this meanes turned into an Idoll.

A Lord spake vnto you in Flore out of the midst of the fire, that is, ye saw no image of the true God, but only heard his voice: therefore ye shall make no image, namely, of God, to represent him, or his presence. Notable is the testimonie of Strabo for the proofe of this point: his words are to this effect, Moses (saith he) did affirme and teach, that the Egyptians did woridge aright, who represented God in the shapes of wilde and tame beasts: nor the Libyans and the Greeks, who figured God in the forme of men. For God is that thing alone which contains vs, and the earth and the sea, which we call heauen, and the world, and the nature of all things: that are: the image of whom, who in his right wits dare presume to make like to any of the things that are about vs?

B But we must put away all making of (a) Images, and set a temple and a secret place before him, and worshipping him without any forme. A little after he addes of his owne, that (c) the Iewes are true worshippers of God. Origen faith against Celsus; that Angels may not bee adored, and that religion keepe Iewes and Christians from worshipping of God in temples, altars, Images; because the Law faith: There shall be no other Gods vnto thee before my face: and, thou shalt not make to thy selfe any grauen Image. Hence it followes, that the framing or erecting of an image, with an intent to represent or worship God thereby, is the erecting of an idoll, though it be not further applied to Idolatrous vse. It may be objected, that we may lawfully make an image of Christ and that this image is no Idol. I answer: it is not vnlawfull to make or to haue the image of Christ, two cautes being remembered. The first, that this image be only of the manhood: the second, that it be out of vse of religion. For if otherwise it bee made to represent whole Christ, God and man, or if it be vfed as an instrument or a signe in which, & before which men worship Christ himselfe, it is by the former doctrine a flat Idol. Again, friends of Images plead on this manner. Though we may not set vp what Images we will vnto God, yet may wee represent him in such formes and shapes, in which he hath vfed to manifest himselfe vnto men in the forme of a man, or in the forme of a done, &c. I answer first of all, that the formes in which the Son and holy Ghost haue appeared, were not their Images, but onely sensible signes and pledges of their presence; and signes not for euer, but only for the present time, when they appeared; and therefore neither signes nor images of Gods presence now. Hence it followes, that when the historie of the Bible is painted or pictured, as in some of our Bibles it is, there are no images of God described, but onely such visible appearances as (sometime) were signes of the presence of God, are expressed. Again, I answer that the commandment of God doth generally forbid images, not excepting the very shapes in which God himselfe hath heretofore testified his presence.

And

And where the prohibition of God is against vs, it is vaine to deuise shifts or excuses. For there is no exception against Gods commandement. Thirdly, it is a fallshood for vs to thinke that we may lawfully doe whatsoeuer God doth. And therefore wee must warily reason from the example of God, when wee would defend our own doings. Fourthly, God will not bee so adored and worshipped as Idols are worshipped. Thou shalt not doe thus vnto the Lord thy God. Fifthly, God hath power to represent himselfe in what signes hee will; and to hath not any creature, neither hath hee given vs any power to represent him in this or that forme. Sixthly, God can at his pleasure auoid and cut off all occasions of idolatry, when hee represents himselfe in visible formes; so can not men doe, as common experience declares. Therefore in so doing they tempt God; and lay open themselves to the danger of Idolatrie. Lastly, Images which men set vp vnto God, abolish and deface his Maieestic, breede absurd opinions of God in the minds of men, and doe as little becommen his endlesse glory, as a picture of an Ape, or of a foole doth the excellency of an Emperour. Thirdly, it is objected that the Scriptures doe not simply condemne religious images, but onely because Iewes and Gentiles esteemed & held them for their gods; and that this opinion of theirs is confuted by Paul, when he saith, They are not Gods which are made with hands. I answer againe, it was not the opinion either of the Iewes, or of the wisest of the Gentiles, that grauen or carued images were their gods; the very light of nature did teach them the contrarie. That they made a distinction betweene their gods and the images thereof, it appeares by the very distinction of the first and second commandement. In the first, are forbidden the false or strange gods themselves; in the second are condemned the Images, which are either of the true Iehovah, or false gods. And if images be onely forbidden, because they are reputed and worshipped for gods, then the first and second commandements of (a) ancient time distinguished, shall be indeed but one and the same commandement. Images (I grant) are called often in scripture gods, but for two other causes. First, because in mans intention they haue relation to God, and represent him. And therefore by a metonymie they borrow his name; as a painted man is called a man, or, as he that plays the part of a king, is called a king. Secondly, they are called gods, because men, though not in opinion and iudgement, yet in truth made them their gods, in that they gaue religious worship vnto them. And for this end both Paul say, they are not Gods which are made with hands, to draw the Ephesians by consequent of reason from doing of any worship to the image of Diana.

The second point to be confirmed, is, that God being either represented or worshipped, in, at, or before an image, is presently transformed into an Idoll. Habakuk saith, that Images are dolours of lies. Because so soone as God is represented in an Image, he is deprived of his glory, and changed into a bodily, visible, circumscribed, & finite Maieestic. Where the Iewes intended to worshipping God in the golden calfe, the Psalmist saith, they turned God into the likeness of a beast that eateth grasse. Secondly, we may not binde the presence of God, the operation of his Spirit, and his hearing of vs, to any thing, to which God hath not bound himselfe by word of commandement, or promise, or both. Now God hath not bound himselfe by any word to be present at images, & to heare vs when we call vpon him, at them, or before them. Hence it follows, that when men present themselves before Images, thereto worship God, they worship not God, but either a fained God that can and will be present and heare at images or the very Images themselves. For God is not worshipped of vs, but when it is his will to accept our worship; and it is not his will to accept our worship, but when it is according to his will. Patrons of images will here protest and protest, that they intend not to worship the images themselves properly, or any false God, but onely the true God maker of heauen and earth. I answer first of all, that this was the very excuse of the wisest sort among the heathen (as afterwards shall appeare) and it could not excuse them from Idolatry. Secondly I answer, that mans intention makes not Gods worship, but Gods will. And it is not his will to accept the worship that is done to him in images; and therefore hee indeeds is not worshipped, but something else in his name. It was the real intention of the Israelites (as I haue shewed) to worshipping the God of their forefathers in the golden calfe: and it was the intention of Ieroboam to doe the like in the calves of Dan and Bethel: and their meaning was not to adresse or direct their seruice to the molten images; yet hath the holy Ghost given his iudgement & sentence, that the Israelites in the wilderness worshipped the molten Image, and that Ieroboam offered sacrifices to the calves. The Gentiles are said to sacrifice to Dionys, whereas they at the least some of them, offered sacrifices to God in images. And the reason is, because God did not accept their seruice at their hands. And indeeds diuels were serued, though the Gentiles intended the contrary. For they thought verily that their images were the receptacles of celestiall powers, and good Angels, but Paul giueth sentence that they were diuels, or wicked spirits. Again, when God is adored in deuised Images, the worshippers are said to forget God, though they thinke that they well remember him. And the reason is, because they forget not onely his commandement, but also the true knowledge or acknowledgement of God, so soone as they represent him in an image;

for then he is conceived to be otherwise, then he is.

By this which hath bin said vpon manifest grounds out of the word of God, wee may take a cleare view of the idolatry of the pretended Catholike Church of Rome. For it teacheth men to worship God and Christ, in and before Images; especially Crucifixes; which in very truth is nothing else but the idolatry before described. Again, this Romane Church adoreth Christ, in, at, and before a peece of bread in the Eucharist, and it teacheth men to doe so. Now to direct our adoration to the bread, or the place where the bread is, what is it lesse then idolatry? For first of all, it is manifest, that adoration is not tyed, either to the bread it selfe, or to the forme of bread, or to the place thereof by any commandement of God, or by any promise. And it is a practise very idolatrous, to bind adoration to any particular thing, or to any particular place: that is, to determine that God is to be adored, and that hee heares vs in any set place, in which he hath not expressly commanded himselfe to be worshipped, and made promise to heare vs. Again, in the new Testament, or after the ascension of Christ, it is certain, that spirituall adoration is onely required; and that worship which is tyed to any certain thing or place on earth, is utterly abolished and forbidden. This Christ himselfe teacheth, Ioh. 4. 21, 22. The hour cometh and now is, when ye shall worship neither in Ierusalem, nor in this mountaine; and therefore neither in the bread nor wine of the Lords Supper, nor on the altar, nor in the hand of the Minister. For by a figure Synecdoche he takes away all circumstance of place on earth, to which the worship of God may possibly be tyed & directed. And this appeares manifestly by the opposition in the words following; But in spirit & truth. If it be said, that the Iews worshipped God, at, and before the Arke: I answer, they did so: and for this deed of theirs, they had both commandement and promise; and therefore they which worshipped God at the Arke and Temple in Hierusalem, were accounted true worshippers of God. But they that worshipped the very same God in Dan & Bethel, before, & at the golden calves, or in the temple of Samaria without a word or warrant from God, were, though not equally, yet in like sort reputed Idolaters, as if they had worshipped the golde it selfe whereof the calves were made. For it is Idolatry to turne, dispose or direct the worship of God, or any part thereof, to any particular place or creature, without the appointment of God. Now they of the Church of Rome, direct their worship to God, in, at, and before Crucifixes, or before the bread in the Sacrament, hauing no warrant of their doing, either by commandement, or promise. If they haue, let them shew it: if they haue not, they are to know, it is a deuised worship which they performe; and it is a deuised God which they worship, namely, a god that will be present and specially heare them, in, or at images. Their intention to worship the true Christ is nothing; vnto which they worship him according to his owne will. Baal in Israel sometime was worshipped for the true God; if we respect the intention of men; and yet for all this, Baal still remained an Idoll; and was nothing else but an idle and empty name: and so, considering there is no such Christ as will be corporally present, and lie hid vnder the forme of bread nor Christ which is now corporally in heauē, but a meere fiction of the braine of man is worshipped.

Furthermore, vpon the former ground it follows, that not onely false gods, but also Angels and Saints departed, when they are worshipped, at, in, and before their Images, are likewise turned into idolls: for if God thus worshipped be turned to an idoll, then they much more, because wee haue no warrant more to worship them on this manner, then God himselfe.

The third and last way whereby idolls are erected, is, when that which is Gods in propriety, is given to the creatures. For to whatsoever thing the glory which is due vnto God, is ascribed, it is made another God. The reason and foundation of this doctrine is this: When Raebel said, Giue me children, else I die: Isaac answered, Am I as God who hath deprived thee of the fruit of thy wombe? Genes. 30. 1, 2. When the king of Syria had written to the king of Israel, that Rezean might be cured of his leprosie: he rent his cloaths & cried out: Am I God to kill and to giue life? 2. King. 5. 7. I am Iehonah, this is my name, and my glory will I not giue to any other, neither my praise to grauen images. Isa. 42. 8. And that which is proper to God is given to the creatures three waies.

The first is, when the godhead, diuinitie, or diuine nature is ascribed to any other things whatsoever, that are not by nature Gods: for then they are made false or strange gods: False gods are especially of two sorts, the gods of the Gentiles, and the Romane gods of this time. That we may the better haue some little conceiving of the gods of the heathen, three points are to be explained: what be the sorts and kinds of them? what is meant by them? what images they had? Touching the first, the heathen gods are of two sorts: some superior, some inferior. Superior gods are these: (a) Baal the god of the Chaldeans and Assyrians (b) Astarte the god of the Sidonians: (c) Moloch or Melcom the god of the Ammonites: (d) Chamos the god of the Moabites: (e) Rimmon the god of the Syrians: (f) Dagon the god of the Philistines: (g) Remphan mentioned by Isaiah called Cuijib by Amos. The Scripture besides these mentioneth others, but I omit them. Inferiour gods were lying or dead men: for it was the manner of the Assyrians and Romanes to make their kings & princes gods, yea while they were living. King Asuerus exalted Haman. And this exaltation was not in respect of civill degree, but in respect of some higher & divine estate, whereby he was made a peti-god: For Mardochai refused to honour him whom the King honoured, and that because hee was a Jew which he could not have done with good confidence, if no more had beene expected but civill honour. And the fragments of the booke of Hester (as much to be beleev'd, as any humane historie) have these words of Mardochai Chap. 13. 14. I did it because I would not prefer the honour of a man above the glory of God: & would not worship any but thee my Lord. In like manner Canon an heathen man refused to adore king Ariaxerxes, as the manner of the Persians was. In like manner the men of Lisrahele hearing and seeing Paul and Barnabas; presently, say, Act. 14. 12. they are Gods in the forme of men: and would have offered sacrifice unto them:

In the second place, if it be demanded what is meant by the gods before mentioned: I answer, that the first and principally, namely, Baal, signifies Jupiter; the same in the firmament, or the host of heaven, yet not always: for the holy Ghost in the booke of the Kings distinguisheth Baal from the Sunne, y^e Moone, Stars, and the host of heaven. If I might conjecture, I would thinke it should sometime signifie Saturnus; that is, Time, which the heathen worshipped as a speciall God. For the Prophet Eliakim taking occasion (as I suppose) from the fashions of Baal, in mocke saies to his priests, That he is a sheepe in his journey, or that he is a sheepe at noon tide: which three properties fitly agree to Saturne; who hath of old beene vasily represented (as) pursuing and denouncing his owne children, that is, all things, which hee bringeth forth: having also foure wings, two alwaies spread, and two closed, to signifie, (b) that though he seeme to stand, yet is hee alwaies going swiftly, as in a journey: likewise with foure eyes, two open, two shut: whereby hee is alwaies waking and alwaies sleeping, even at noone tide. And in (c) ancient writers, Baal or Bel is the name of Saturne. Moloch is thought likewise to bee Jupiter or Saturne; and Remphan to be Saturne or Lucifer, that is the day-starre. And the rest signifie either the world, or nature, or time, or fortune, or fate, or the Sun, the Moone, or the Starres, or foules, or the foules of men departed, or some unknowne God.

Touching their images, Baal had many. One among the rest was the forme or representation of a flie: and hence hee is called Baalezebub the lord of flies, because hee was thought to be the chiefe flie in the world: and as Nathan saith, A flie was the god of Accorom. Astharoth Sidonian gods were worshipped in the formes of sheepe, as the name seemes to import: Dagon in the forme of a fish: Diana in silver plates, in which was stamped the figure of a temple, and the forme of Diana. When the Affrians came to inhabit Samaritania, they brought their gods with them, Sam- conh; Bennoth, Mergol, Asima, Nehobaz, Tharhaz, Acramelech, Anamelech; all which in the Syrian tongue, are said to borrow their names of cockes, hennes, chickens, goates, dogs, asses, horses, mules, peacocks, &c. Thus we see in part what were the heathen gods commonly mentioned in Scripture. And here wee are to take knowledge of the mercy of God towards vs, that hath not left vs to our owne waies, as hee did the Gentiles in former ages, who went without God and without Christ, but he hath revealed himselfe unto vs, and his will, and chosen vs to be his owne people. For his mercie let vs bee thankfull, and shew it by electing unto him alone with our hearts.

The Romane false gods are two. The first is the Virgin Mary, whom the pretended Catholics of this time, of a Saint make a goddesse: for they call her the queene of heaven, the queene of the world: our Ladie the mother of grace and mercie. Shee is esteemed as an universall advocate to the whole world, and there be other mediators unto her, as to a queene: there be eight solemne feasts for the honour and invocation of her: besides this, there is no day passeth in which there is not invocated in hymnes or in the masse. And they ascribe to her, power to command and controll her sonne in heaven, saying, Aske the Father: command the Sonne, and command him by the authority of a mother: againe, cause him to receive our prayers. This is to make her not only a goddesse, but also to place her above God himselfe. Here they alleadge, that these formes of speech are spoken by a metaphor, or by a Prosopopoeie: but this cannot be. For the ground of these speeches is properly ascribed to Mary, namely, the right of a mother, and therefore also the act of commanding is without figure properly ascribed to her.

Wee take our selves beholden to Thursell the Iesuite for his five bookes of the Ladie of Lauretto, as she is called. For two things may plainly thence be gathered. The first, that she is made a goddesse, being worshipped with the very same worship wherewith God himselfe is worshipped. For when men be in any danger, necessitie, or extremitee, straightwaies they offer up their prayers to her with solemne vowes. Secondly, when in their Pilgrimages they come neere to the towne of Lauretto, and behold the place where her image is, as farre off they fall downe and worship her: and some goe bare-head afterward in the very midst of winter, till they come to her Temple, at the dores whereof they fall downe againe and worship. Thirdly, when they come before her image, all yea the greatest persons in the basest manner that may be humble themselves before her, kneeling or lying vpon the bare ground, and kneeling among the base multitude. Fourthly, she hath a quire of boies to sing praises to her. Fifthly, she is honoured with a double feast, one of her conception, the other of her nativite: one in the Spring, the other in the autumn: the solemnitie of each of the last three moneths: and there resorts to her at every feast, two hundred thousand people. Lastly, shee is worshipped with Temple, altar, and offerings without measure: for none almost come to her emperie handed. The furniture pertaining to her image is of gold, silver, pearle, pretious stones, filke: and of all things of excellencie that heart can wish.

The second point is, that the thing worshipped under the name of the Ladie of Lauretto is indeed neither God nor Saint, but the diuell himselfe. For first her countenance appeares to be unsatiable, because shee finds no measure in taking & accepting of gifts; whereas God and his true servants doe the contrary. Secondly, her miracles bee as many as those which we read to be done by Christ and his Apostles. And yet they indeede are such as may be done by Satanicall operation. For the diuell knowes the secrets of nature more then all men doe, and by this means hee can doe things like miracles, which indeede are no miracles: and hee is the best physician in the world, & can cure diseases, which in the judgment of man seeme incurable: yet cannot hee give fight to them that are borne blind, nor raise the dead: and therefore among all her miracles there is no mention of such. Thirdly, her apparitions and her miracles tend all to erect, establish, and mainaine the worship of her selfe: whereas the true Saints of God seeke not to advance their owne honour, but the honour of God. Fourthly, when men make absolute formes of prayer to the Virgin Mary for any temporal helpe or deliverance, they have neither commandement nor promise so to doe: and yet these prayers are commonly accomplished. Fifthly, our Saviour Christ, being King of heaven and earth, never medled with matters pertaining to the execution of civill iustice in private persons: but this Ladie of Lauretto sometimes breakes the halter when men be in hanging: and when they are hanging shee preferres their lives till they be taken downe: when prayers be made for infidels shee heares them; thus was the Turkes Baga cured of an impostume in his breast.

The second false god is the Romane Bishop, who though he be not called god commonly yet is hee made god. For first he takes to himselfe the titles of God, and suffers himselfe to be called god in his ownlaw, in which the tenour of a certaine canon is to this effect: Hee that is God may be judged of none. The Pope is God: for so hee is called of the Emperour Constantine. Therefore hee may be judged of none. And it must be remembered, that these words are found, not onely in the olde copies of the Canon law, but in the new corrected edition of Gregorie the thirteenth. Again, he suffers himselfe to be called the Dei and spouse of the Church, and the spouse of the Church. And he himselfe calls the Catholicke Church his owne spouse, in expresse words, whereas this fauour is proper to Christ. And it had beene enough for him to be a friend of the apostle. Bernard saith of him, that he is by appointment Christ. Secondly, the Pope challengeth to himselfe infinite power, according to the place in Matthew. All power is given to me in heaven and earth. Thus saith the booke of the Pontificall Ceremonies; This Pontificall sword doth figure that supreme Pontificall power, which is given of Christ to his Vicar upon earth the Bishop of Rome, according to that, All power is given to me in heaven and earth; and againe, he shall rule from sea to sea, and from the floods to the ends of the world. And this is signified by that velvet cap which the Popes use to wear on the height of the navitie of our Lord. And this appears in that he usurpes power and authoritie over all creatures, yea over kings and princes: and will be deputy of Christ for the government of the universall Church. Thirdly, he takes to himselfe a souveraigne indgement over all persons and causes; so as if he carry innumerable people into hell with him, no man may iudge him. Lastly, he takes to himselfe fullness of power to dispense with the lawes of God. In his law it is said, That men do with such reverence respect the Apostolical seat, that they rather desire to know the ancient infinites of Christian religion from the Popes mouth, then from holy Writ: that they inquire onely what is his pleasure, and according to it order their conversation. And therefore in the Council of Trent he hath presumed to forbid under paine of Anathema, more degrees of consanguinity then God hath forbidden. What is this else but to verifie the saying of the Apostle, that he exalts himselfe above all that is called God or worshipped?

The second way whereby that which is Gods is given to the creatures, is when properties or proper actions of the godhead are ascribed to them. And thus are creatures made gods in part, and consequently idols. Heretofore it hath beene thought a kinde of idolatry, to appoint the constellations of heaven, and to make them signes to manifest secret truths, because that which is indeede proper to God is given to them. And the Church of Rome at this day affords vs foure notable examples. First of all, it makes the Saints in heaven idols. For it teacheth men to kneele downe to them, and to make prayer to them, being absent from vs, as farre as heaven is from earth. And by praying to them, men doe acknowledge, that they have power to heare & helpe in all places, and at all times, & that they know the secret minds and hearts of men. Now to heare and to discern the very heart, is a property of the Godhead. As Salomon saith, Hear thou in heaven in thy dwelling place: for thou only knowest the hearts of all the children of men. And Paul takes it for a granted truth, that there is one only that searcheth the hearts and knowes the meaning of the spirit, and that no man knows what is within a man, but the spirit or conscience of man. Answer is made; that God heares and knows the hearts of men, of himselfe, and by his owne nature, and that the Saints doe it not of themselves, but by communication or reuelation. I answer again, that God doth sometime reueale to his seruants some particular and seeret sayings and doings of men, as he did to Elías and Peter, we denie not; but that God should reueale all the thoughts and desires of all that pray in all times, and all places, and that the Saints by reuelation should know thus much, this we denie. For this is to communicate the glory of God to the creature, and consequently to make the creature God: though not by nature, yet by communication. Such were the gods of the Gentiles for the most part, for they were men indeed, and were made gods by (a) participation, and no otherwise.

Secondly, the Church of Rome transformeth the Sacraments to idols, by teaching that they conferre grace ex opere operato, by the very worke done: that is, that the outward elements or words duly spoken; or both, in the administration of the Sacraments, doe as physall causes effectiually, actively, & immediately worke & produce in the heart, the grace of regeneration & iustification. To this effect the priest is appointed to pray, that the nature of waters might conceiue the vertue of sanctification: that God would make the water fruitful by the seeret admixtion of his Godhead, that hauing conceiued sanctification, a new creature may spring out of the immaculate womb of the diuine fontaine, that it may be liuing waters, that it may be effectiuall to purifie our minds, that the holy Ghost would ascend into the fulnesse of the fontaine; that he would make the whole substance of the water fruitful in effecting of regeneration. Now the worke of regeneration in man, is a proper and immediate worke of the godhead, and I proue it thus: To create, is a proper & immediate worke of the godhead: To regenerate, is to create, and man in that he is regenerated, is created againe. To regenerate therefore, is the proper & immediate worke of God. Nothing therefore can actually regenerate but God. Sacraments are said to regenerate as morall instruments, because when they are rightly vsed, God himselfe conferres grace; yet if they doe, and can effectiually and actively regenerate and iustifie, they are not onely morall, but they are more then physall instruments, nay they are as God himselfe in this regard. Paul saith; That in planting and watering he is not any thing. We receiue not new and spirituall life from the Sonne, but by the meanes of his flesh; apprehended by our faith: yet the power and efficacy of quickning or reuiuing, is not in the flesh, as in a proper subiect, but in the godhead. God will not giue his glory to men or angels, nor to the flesh and manhood of the Sonne of God, much lesse to creatures without life or sense: and therefore no to Sacraments.

Thirdly, the Romane Church makes very idols of worke; by ascribing the merit of iustification and saluation to them. For none can merit of God, but he that is God. The creature can doe nothing to benefite God; and therefore God is not bound by the bond of mans desire to reward man for any thing he doth. If he be bound, it is because hee binds himselfe by his owne promise: and he is bound to make his promise, not for the goodnesse of any worke to be done by man, but merely vpon his owne goodnesse. If it be said that Christ meritteth, and yet he himselfe can doe nothing, to benefite God; I answer, that Christ meritteth properly vpon the dignitie of his person: for in that God incarnate, or God-ma suffered & fulfilled the law for vs, diuine iustice doth require that should be giuen him, which by suffering and obeying he hath deferred. This cause is found in no man or Angel. For God, as becoming the chiefe good, is to magnifie himselfe, and to maintaine his owne honour, and that by the order of diuine iustice: and he is not so bound to his creatures, but of his free & meeere good will he giues the blessings which he giues.

Fourthly, they of the Romane Church make the bread in the Eucharist to be that which it is not, and consequently an idol. For the chiefe of them say, that the bread after consecration, without annihilation, is made by conuersion, the very body of Christ; and by this meanes, bread is exalted aboue men and Angels, and is receiued into the vinity of the secd person. If it be said; that in their opinion the bread is no idol, because they beleue this conuersion: I answer, that Sacraments out of their vse, the administration being ended, cease to be Sacraments, and bread ceaseth to be the bodie of Christ. Therefore the Host, (as it is called) or the bread in the boxe, carried in procession & worshipped, is nothing else but a wheaten or breaden God, and an idol, not inferior to Aaron calfe, or Ierobams calves, or the Nehustan that Ezechias brake in pieces; nay, as vile and detestable, as any idol among the heathen.

The third way, whereby that which is Gods, is giuen to creatures, is, when his worship is giuen to them. And thus are they transformed into idols. For Gods worship is proper vnto him, as Christ our Saviour saith, Mat. 4. 10. Him only shalt thou serue. And whic diuine worship is directed or giuen to any creature, that creature is made a God, or equal to God; & therefore an idol. Now images made by the mis-applying of Gods worship, are of three sorts. First of all, creatures are made idols, when men giue their hearts vnto them, & fixe their principal affections on them. The Scripture binds vs straitly to giue our hearts and the affections thereof to God, and the obedience of the inward and outward man, Mat. 10. 29. We must rather feare God than men. Mat. 10. 28. Feare not them that kill the body, 1. Pet. 3. 14. Feare not their feare, but sanctifie the Lord in your hearts. Psal. 118. 8. It is better to trust in the

the Lord, then to put any confidence in man. Ier. 17. 5. Cursed is he that trusteth in man. Mat. 10. 37. He that loveth father or mother more than me, is not worthy of me. Ierem. 10. 5. Feare not idols, they can doe neither good nor euill, There is none like to thee, O King. And the Scripture requires these things at our hands, because by them we acknowledge God to be our God. Wherefore on the contrarie, when any creature is placed aboue God, or matched with him, in regard of obedience, feare, loue, confidence, &c. it is made another god to vs. For then the first commandment is broken, and there is no possible securing of two masters. Matth. 6. 24. Sathan is called the god of this world, 2. Cor. 4. 4. because men rather obey his suggestions, then God. In this respect also Antichrist is called God: because he more traitly inioynes men to obey his owne traditions, then he doth the very word of God. Saint Paul saith, Coloss. 3. 5. Couetousnesse is the worshipping of idols: because the couetous man puts his confidence in his riches, for the preferuation of his life. Againe he saith; that some make their bellies their god: because they minde nothing but earthly things, and loue their pleasures more then God. (a) A learned man calls this, Idolatrie in manners. His words are these: An idolatrie is due that is giuen to the creature, the worship that is due to the Creator. And there be two kinds of Idolatrie: for some are idolaters in opinion, as they which in opinion doe ascribe to the Sonne or Moone, or any other creature, a certaine diuinitie. Others be idolaters in manners, as they which prefer the creature before the Creator. For that which a man loues more then God, he makes his God. And therefore hee that preferres the pampering of his belly before God, makes it his God. He that preferres wine before God, makes Bacchus his god. He that preferres lust before God, makes lust his god. Of which sort, (I cannot speake it without grieue) are many at this day, rather serving their vices and sinnes then God, which though they say with their mouthes, they beleue in God, yet in their deeds and manners they denie him. And thus doth the Church of Rome make idols of worke, because it teacheth, that men may put their confidence in them, touching their saluation; b^o fo they doe it in fobriety. This is indeed to deifie them, and to put them in the roome of God. Hierome (c) saith well; If we must put our confidence in any, let vs haue our assistance in God alone. (d) Basil: As it is meete to worship nothing beside God, so must we fixe our hope in one God.

Againe, Angels and Saints departed, are made idols, and that by the Church of Rome, foure waies. First, in that she giues vnto them religious worship or adoration; that is, the bending of the knee, or the prostrating of the body. The diuelli desired no more of Christ, but the bowing of the knee, in token and signification, that by Gods permission, hee was the disposer of the Kingdomes of the world: But answer was made, that he might not; because it was written: Thou shalt worshipspe the thy God, and him only shalt thou serue. When Iohn the Apostle fell downe to worship the Angell, he meant not to worship him as God, for he had learned to distinguish betweene the creature and the Creator; onely he meant to worship him as a wonderful and diuine creature, & therefore to adore him with some portion of diuine honour. But hee is forbidden by the Angell, Rev. 19. 10. See thou do it not, for I am thy fellow seruant: worship God. Hence I reason thus: They which bee our fellow-seruants, are not to be worshipped with diuine honour: Angels and Saints are our fellow-seruants: therefore they are not to bee worshipped with diuine worship. It may be alledged, B that we adore kings and princes, yea inferior persons. I answer: Adoration or worship, is either diuine or ciuill. The bowing of the knee, or the prostrating of the body, is one and the same in both, and the cause of bowing makes the difference. Wherefore it is diuine adoration, when we bow the body vpon some diuine cause, properly concerning God: as when we kneele downe vnto him, in token of subiection, because he is Lord of all things, yea of our bodies and consciences: because he knowes all things, and knowes the heart; because he is e-uer where present, and can doe what he will; because he is the author and giuer of all good things; because he is able to heare, and helpe all that call vpon him through the whole world at all times. And thus God alone is to bee adored. Ciuill adoration is vpon ciuill cause; as when we bow to men, either because they are in gouernement, or because they are indued with excellent gifts & graces of God. And this ciuill adoration hath his degrees, as the authoritie and gifts of men are more or lesse. Vpon this ground I answer, that kings and princes are worshipped onely with ciuill, not with diuine adoration; whereas Angels & Saints are worshipped in the Romane Church with diuine adoration. For wee haue no outward society with them: and therefore if any worship be done to them, it is not for politike considerations, but for some higher respect. Yea, the cause for which they are worshipped, is properly diuine: for there is giuen to them, the faculty of hearing and helping all such as pray vnto them, in what place, & at what time soeuer; yea, though they be absent from the place, in which they are adored. And this kind of adoration giues vnto them, knowing and feeling of our hearts, preference in all places, and an infinite power to helpe all that call vpon them. And they that worship Saints and Angels, do suppose with themselves, that they being in heauen, can heare and helpe them at all times, and in all places, if they pray vnto them. Therefore it is nothing but a vaine shift, when the Papists say; they giue worship to God, and no more but a certaine kinde of seruice to the Saints: when they giue that which is Gods to the Saints. When certaine silly women vpon foolish deuotion, did not fo

the reason follows not. For when we bow to the chaire of Estate, or to the Seale of a Prince, it is but ciuill worship, for a publick end, that we may doe homage and signifie our loyalty and subiection to our lawfull Prince: whereas bowing to Images, is done in religious regard. Secondly, The chaire of Estate, is a signe of the Princes presence, and His, or Her letters, are signes of their pleasures, and that by Princes will: and so are not Images signes and monuments, either of Gods presence, or pleasure: because God will not be worshipped in them, by them, or at them: neither doth he binde his presence or his hearing of vs to them. Thirdly, Men vse not to bow to the chaire of Estate, when the Prince is present: yet men that worship Images, vse to bow to them, though God be present neuer so: as he is alwayes present. And I returne the argument on their owne heads, on this manner. He that sets vp a chaire of Estate, and faith, it is the Presence; he that sends a letter in the Princes name, and puts to a counterseit seale, is guiltie of treason: euen so they which set vp of their owne heads, Images, as signes and monuments of the presence of God, and of Christ, what doe they else, but commit treason against God himselfe? When Nadab and Abihu offered sacrifices, that God had appointed, with fire of their owne appointment, it was present death vnto them. When the Iewes worshipped the true God, with his owne worship, in places of their owne choice and appointment, the Holy Ghost faith; They corrupted themselves, and did not prepare their hearts to the Lord. What wickednesse then doe they that worship God in Images without commendement vpon their owne heads? When the Iewes set their thresholds by Gods thresholds, and their posts by Gods posts, that is, joined their traditions to Gods commandments, They set a wall betwene them and God, and defiled his holy name with their abominations. An oath may not be made by the creatures, though they be considered as signes and pledges of the presence and power of God: and though when they be named, all the worship in the oath be directed vnto God. For the right manner of swearing, which the Scripture allowes, is, that our oath be simple, without fraud; direct, and not oblique oaths: left the authoritie of God be diminished, or our neighbour deceiued (which is against the order of humane societie) or the Religion of an oath grow into contempt, as commonly it comes to passe, when it is made by the creatures. And therefore Christ said; Ye shall not swear at all, neither by heauen, &c. Now as one part of Gods worship is, so are all the rest, direct, and not oblique. And therefore we may not worship God, in, at, and before Images, though they be considered of vs as signes and pledges of the presence of God, and we onely intend to worship God in them.

Again they alledge: The wooden Crosse of Christ, was an instrument of our Redemption; and therefore it is to be worshipped. I answer. First of all, it was an instrument of Christ death, but it was no cause nor instrument of mans redemption, which came by his death. Secondly, by the same proportion of reason, Indus, and the Iewes, pearses, and thornes are to be worshipped: because they were instruments of the death of Christ: yea, spitte and clay is to be worshipped, because Christ vsed them sometime in working of miracles.

Thirdly, the words vsed to Moses and Iosua, are vsed, Put off thy shoes, for the place where thou standest is holy. Answer. Moses and Iosua put off their shoes, not to the place where they stood, but to God, whose presence made the place holy. Secondly, the place was not holy alwayes, but onely for the time, in which God manifested his presence. Now images and reliques, are said to be holy at all times, and in all places.

Again, images and reliques are made idols, when incense is offered to them, when tapers are lighted before them, when altars are erected, and gifts offered to them, when men go on pilgrimage to them. For all these are parts of religious worship: and when they are performed to images and reliques, it is because there is a secret perswasion in mens mindes, that there is some diuine power and presence, and operation in them, or at least about them. The brazen Serpent was an ordinance of God, a figure of Christ, and a monument of deliuerance, from fiery Serpents in the wilderness: yet when the Israelites offered incense to it, (b) incense being a part of Gods worship, it was turned into an idol: and for this cause was destroyed by Ezechias, whose fact is commended in Scripture.

Vpon this which hath beene said, we are to take notice of the professed idolatry of the Church of Rome, whereof the principall ring-leaders teach and defend, that Roodes or Crucifixes, and other images of God, are to be worshipped with the very same worship wherewith Christ himself is worshipped. And as one faith, with the (d) same kinde of worship, with the same affection, and the same deuotion. What is this else, but to make gods of crucifixes? And the excuse, that crucifixes are worshipped with respect to Christ, and that the worship passeth by the image to him, will not serue the turne: because still the image is honoured with religious honour, which may not bee. Agastius conceiued the manhood of Christ to be a distinct person from the word or Sonne of God: and withall, hee faigned a co-adoration, whereby this manhood was to be adored with the word. Now the (e) Councill of Ephesus condemnes this co-adoration: much more then would it haue condemned a co-adoration of the crucifix with Christ. It will here bee said, that adoration is giuen to God properly and directly, and not to the image in the same manner, but in-properly, and indirectly. I answer againe, there is more giuen to the image of God and Christ, then should be, if any adoration be giuen: and there is more giuen by farre then co-adoration. For they ascribe due things to images. The first is, an Vnion with God, whereby, when we see the image, the thing signified comes to the minde. Vpon this Vnion, standing in relation, followes a relative Presence: whereby God and Christ, are in their images and their images with them, as one and the same object. The third is, the propertie of Signification, whereby the image, as an image signifies God and Christ. The fourth is the propertie of Representation, whereby the image stands in stead, place, and roome of God; not onely as an ambassador, but as a vice-roy or depute is in the roome of a Prince. And by this means all things must be done about the image which should be done about God, or Christ, if hee should manifest his owne presence. And this is verily a portion of diuine honour. For the image is in the roome of God to receive honour for God, and God by it. The fifth is the communication of religious worship to God and the image. And that is two-fold, one, when the worship passeth by the image to God directly, and returnes to the image by (a) consequent indirectly: as when a man kneels down before an image, & praises, the worship is Gods properly, and pertaines to the image onely by consequent. The second is, when worship is directly to the image, and comes to God by consequent, as when a man passing by, salutes the image, or puts garments and Iewels vpon it. Vpon this communication of worship followes a communion of worship whereby God perakes in the worship of the image, and the image againe pertakes in the worship of God. Now this communion in religious worship abaseth the honour of God, and exalts the image into a diuine estate above the condition of men and angels. If a king shall make one of his subiects to be his image, and to be his Deputy, for worship, so as ordinarily the worship of the king shall be done before the deputy, though there bee neuer so many intentions in the mindes of the subiects to worship the king, and not the deputy; yet indeede the deputy is king, and the other onely beaues the name. And so images being not onely images of God, but also his deputies, haue indeede the honour of God giuen vnto them. Again, when Latria, diuine honour is giuen to God in his image, it hath his termination in the image: for this worship is first directed to God, and secondarily by consequent in one and the same motion, it is extended to the image. Now that religious worship, whose termination is in the creature, is by common consent, Idolatry.

Hitherto haue I shewed what an Idoll is, and the kindes thereof, and the waies of erecting them: now I will proceede to a second point, and that is, to shew how we should keepe our selues from Idols. And that we may thoroughly preserue our selues from the contagion of them, foure things must be done. We must auoide the making of them, the hauing of them, the vsing of them, the vlers of them.

The making of them must be auoided by the expresse commandement of God. Thou shalt not make to thy selfe any graven Image, or the likeness of any thing. In these words are forbidden Images of all kindes, grauen or painted: and images of all things in heauen, earth, vnderneath the earth: and therefore of God whose dwelling is in heauen. Tertullian saith thus: Little children (saith Iohn) keepe your selues from Idols, not now from Idolatrie, that is, as it were from the seruice, but from the Idols, that is, (b) from the image of them. Yet is not the making of images here forbidden simply. For there is a two-fold lawfull vse of images: one holy, the other common. The holy vse is, when they serue to signifie the holy things of God. Such Images are properly signes and types, and are onely at the appointment of God. Thus the Cherubims vpon the Mercie seate, were figures of the presence of God: the brazen serpent a figure of Christ crucified; the outward elements in both the Sacraments of the new Testament, signes and seales of the body and blood of Christ, with the benefits thereof. The common vse of images is three-fold. One is Symbolicall, or politically, as when they serue for the distinction of coynes. Thus the Iewes, who might not on their own heads erect images in the Temple or Synagogues, had libertie to make & vse images in their coynes. Christ hauing scene and acknowledged the Image and superscription of Cesar in the coyne, said: Giue vnto Cesar that which is Cæsars. The second vse is Historicall, when Images serue to represent humane or diuine historie. And here it must be remembered, that the painting of the historie of the Bible, though otherwise lawfull in it selfe, is not expedient in Churches: because danger of idolatrie may rise thence. And therefore commendable is the practise of the Church of England, that suffers not in places, that serue for vse of religion, images either painted or carued, no not in the historie of the Bible painted. And the cause is otherwise with such representations of the history as are found in sundry Bibles, because there is not the like occasion of Idolatrie. The third vse is, when Images are made for the beautifying of houses, either publicke, or priuate, that serue onely for ciuill meetings. Wherefore it is the scope and intent of the commandement of God, onely to forbid the making of images, in respect they are to be applied to diuine or religious vse, that is, to represent God in his nature or properties, or presence. Some man may thus object: when we thinke on God, wee conceiue an internal image or forme of him in our mindes, and that which we conceive we may proportionally set downe by painting or carving. Again, if the eternall forme of God be lawfully conceived, why may not the externall be made? I answer, the right way to conceive God, is not to conceive any forme: but to conceive in minde his properties and proper effects. So soone as the minde frames vnto it selfe any forme of God (as when hee is popishly conceived to be like an old man, sitting in heaven in a throne with a scepter in his hand) an idoll is set vp in the minde. And the formes of things internall conceived in mind are neuer worshipped of vs, as painted and carved images be. Lastly, God who allows internall images rightly conceived, forbids the externall in vfe of Religion.

The second thing to be auoyded, is the keeping and hauing of idolls, that is, images that have bene abused to idolatry, and are in likelihood still to be abused, specially if they stand in publicke places. The commandement of God is to destroy the idolls of the heathen, their altars, and their high places. According to this commandement Moses destroyed the golden calfe, Exechias the brazen serpent. And there be sundry weightie reasons of this commandement of God. First, idolls preferred are signes and monuments preferred of the worship of diuels, and of the contempt of the true God: and therefore this preferuation tends but to continue a memory of the dishonour of God, and of things that are an abomination to him, Deut. 7. 25. A good subiect will not preferre and keepe in store the signes of conquest made by the enemy: for thus he declares, that he carries no loyal mind to his owne prince. Secondly, our dutie is to make confession, not onely in word, but also in deede, that we are the people of God, and worship no idolls. And this confession is not made if wee keepe them in store and lay them vp. This reason the Lord himselfe vseth. Ye shall destroy them, because ye are an holy people to the Lord. Thirdly, the keeping of them is a scandall to them that carry idolatrous mindes: for hereby they conceive an opinion, that there is some reuerend regard had of the. Fourthly, our duty is to cut off all occasions of idolatry. This is not done when idolls are preferred: for hence they have often opportunity and occasion to worship them, that are superstitiously minded. Fifthly, occasion is giuen to the simpler sort to abuse them. When the idolls of the nations remained in the fight of the Israelites, they were a snare vnto them. Lastly, idolls are called by the holy Ghost, vanities, not as other things which serue for good vfe, but they are simply vanities, because they are altogether vnpurposefull: and therefore the keeping of them is to no good end: whereas among the people of God all things must in their kinde tend to the glory of God, either more or lesse. If it be said, they are Lay-mens bookes, and that in this regard they may be kept: I answer, they are not bookes of Lay-men: for the Lord hath giuen the fence, that they are mere vanities. Augustine saith, they are worthy to be decciued that seek Christ and his Apostles, not in Scriptures, but in painted wallis.

The third thing to be auoyded, is the vfe of idolls in religious manner, which vfe stands in the worship thereof, vterly condemned in the second part of the second commandement: Thou shalt not bow downe to them and worship them. In which wordes the Lord makes two parts of the worship of Idolls, Honour, and Serue. Honour is either inward or outward. Inward, in the affection of reuerence. Outward honour stands in all gestures of the body, which signifie honour, as the putting off the hat, the lifting vp of hands, and eyes, bowing of the knees, prostrating of the body, and such like. Serue likewise is either outward or inward. Inward stands in the deuotion of the mind in confidence, hope, inuocation, vowes, and such like. Outward serue stands in all other duties that are beside the gesture of the body: as sacrifices, oblations, lighting of tapers, burning incense, the erection of Altars and Temples, and pilgrimages to them, &c. And all these, with all of like kinde are vterly forbidden. Furthermore, that there may be no place for the vfe of idolls among the people of God, he hath by law straitly barred vs the vfe of all such things as are properly memories and monuments of idolls: Thou shalt make no mention of the name of other Gods, neither shall it be heard out of thy mouth. Yea, all things that pertaine any way to the worship of idolls must be eschewed. Vpon this ground Paul disputes at large, that the Corinthians might not be present, or sit downe at the feasts, which were made to the honour of heathen Gods, though otherwise they abstained from the worshippe thereof. Thus Tertullian saith, It is a custome of the ignorant of some that doe not know it is an oath by Hercules: and yet he saith the former law doth not forbid vs to pronounce the names of false gods, which conseruation with men constraines vs to speake.

In the fourth and last place, we are to auoid the vfers of idolls, and that in two speciall regards. First, in respect of the vain decciets they vfe: secondly, in respect of fellowship. Touching the decciets whereof the idolaters of this last age paint ouer their idolatries, and beare the eyes of the world, we haue a speciall caueat giuen vs by the holy Ghost to beware of them. Take heede lest no man spoile or make a praye of you by Philosophy and vaine decciets, through the traditions of men. And that we may the better be auoyded, I will note sune of the principall.

First of all, they tell vs that they worship no idolls, but images of God, Saints, and Angels. Behold a poore & silly shift. For the golden calfe, Ieroboams calves in Dan and Bethel, and and Michas Terephim were images of God (as I haue proued (& they were idolls as I haue proued) Against an image of a faired god, is a flat idol in the bottom iudgement of all. Now the image that is erected to the honour of the true God, is an image of a faired god: For God will not be honoured by any image of man appointing, though the honour be neuer so much directed to him in the minde and intention of man: and therefore the thing that is honoured is indeede a god of a mans deuoting, who will heare, be present, and giue his blessing in, at, and before images: Hence it followes, that the image which is supposed to be the image of God, is indeed the image, not of God; but of an idol: and every image of an idoll is an idoll. They say, that there is a difference betweene the images of the heathen, and the Images of Christians. Well, but let them consider the 115. Psalm, and let them shew, that their images can heare, smel, speake, and ge better then those of the heathen, and I will grant a difference, else not: for many of them were images of the true God, as well as theirs: Irenaeus reprooueth the Gnosticks, not onely because they made images of Pithagoras and of Aristotle; but also because they made the images of Christ, and Paul, and worshipped them. Ambrose hath these words, The Gentiles adore wood, because they thinke it to be the image of God. Furthermore they define an idoll falsely, for it is a false image (a) not onely representing that which is not, but that which is, as is said. This (b) Popish Diuines teach and write, and by name Catharin saith thus: *The adoration and worship of Saints which the Church of Rome especially vsith, hath his termination in God. For God is adored, not absolutely, but as he is laudable or glorious in this or that man; who is acknowledged for a Saint. Therefore, if he be not so acknowledged for a Saint, and God so worshipped, is Saint, it is false worship; and God so worshipped, is indeede a false God: For God is not adored absolutely, but as hee is existing in him by amicitia and grace: But this God is not: and therefore it may be called Idolatrie. And the case is like in the best not consecrated. For God and Christ is not adored simply, but as he is existing under the formes of bread and wine. Therefore if he be not there, not Christ; but a creature for Christ is found, to whom diuine worshippe is giuen, and therefore this is Idolatry also. For euen in this regard they also were Idolaters: who adored beuen (for example) or any other thing, supposing with themselves that they adored in it, whom they called the soule of the world, according to *Varro*s diuinitie. Therefore they are not to be cleared from idolatrie, because they intended to worshipspe one God, as indeede there was but one God: but because they adored him there, where hee was not, in that manner they supposed him to be.*

The second excuse is, that they worshipspe not images properly and principally, but Christ, Angels, and Saints in them; & attemeth I answer: so did the heathen. Thus witnesseth

Lactantius of them: Wee feare not Images, say they, but them after whose likeness they be figured, and in whose names they are dedicated. And in Saint Augustine, I worship (say they) neither the Image, nor the Diuel; but in a bodily figure I behold the figure of that which I ought to worship. Again, I do not worship the statue or that image that is withoute soule; but I do adore that which I see, and serue him whom I see not. Who is that? the inuisible diuine power: which is president of that image. And Chrysostome saith thus: *When we say vnto him that they worship an image: No, say they, not the image, but Petrus and Mars. And when we aske them what is this Venus, the greater sort among them answer, Pleasure. And who is Mars? A manlike and valiant courage. And yet could not this excuse free them from Idolatrie. Again, that worship only pleasest God; which he himselfe hath directedly prescribed in his word. It is a vaine thing to worship God by the precepts and inuentiones of men. Now for the worshipspe of God in Images, there is no word: may the word faith the contrary, you shall not do so to the Lord your God; namely, as the heathen due to their false gods. And that Christ is not to be worshipped in a crucifix, it is plaine: For when he is worshipped, the god-head is worshipped, and the persons thereof: because the Trinitie is to be worshipped in the vnitie; and the vnitie in the Trinitie. And the Godhead being a substance immaterial, and inuisible, is not to be worshipped in any sensible thing: as Damasius, otherwise a friend of Idolatrie, teacheth.*

The third excuse, is that they giue worship to God alone, and that they honour Angels, Saints, and Images with seruer. I answer first of all, that religious adoration, inuocation, vowes, & such like, are part of Gods serue, as I haue shewed before: and therefore they may not be giuen to the creature, by what termes fouer they be called. Inuocation and the rest, wherthey be called worshipspe or serue, they are still proper to God; who will not be mocked with words. And it is absurd to think, that a distinction of termes, should make the proper worship of God to be the worship of the creature. The diuell required no more of Christ but Dulia, serue. For he desired not to be worshipped of Christ with diuine honour, but onely to be worshipped as a minister of God, to whom he had (as he falsely said) committed the disposition of the Kingdomes of the world, Luke 4. 6. And this to doe Christ refused, because it is said, Hum only thou shalt serue. Therefore not onely religious worship, but also religious serue is Gods. Secondly, that we may the better arme our selues against this vaine distinction of worship and serue; wee must vnderstand that worship is of two kinds: The worship of religion; and the worship of society. The worship of religion is that, wherby the creature worships the Creator, because he is the author and giuer of all good things. And all the parts and the manner of the performance gods, which rulerth the sea and land and the whole world with diuers seasons; so that nothing is wrought forth greater then he, neither is there any thing like him, or second to him. Yet Pallas receiveth the next honour to him. The very same say the Papists at this day of God and our Ladie. And even hence it appears, that the Gentiles having many gods, worship one as the chiefe, namely, Jupiter; and their inferior gods they worshipped, as Papists worship Saints. By this which hath bin said it appears, that heathenish idolatrie, and the worship of Images and Saints in the Romane Church, are for substance all one. Yet a difference I acknowledge. For the wisest among the heathen saw the vanity of their religion. Seneca said to this effect: We will doe worship; yet so, as we remember, that this worship is rather for fashion, then for anything else. Lactantius speaks in a certaine booke to Tully, in this manner: I see thou dost worship to these earthly things made with hands: thou seest they are vaine things; and yet thou dost the same things that they doe, whom thou confessest to be the veriest fooles of all. Nevertheless the vanitie of images, and the worship of them, the Papists will not acknowledge, neither can they abide to heare of it.

Again, as we are to take heede of all the vaine deceits of idolaters of our time, whereby they doe nothing else but varnish over the idoll service of the Pagans, and present vnto vs old things with new names: to must we auoide their fellowship. For S. Paul saith, 2. Cor. 6. 14. We may not carry one and the same yoke with infidels: and that there may bee no agreement between the Temple of God, & idols. Fellowship with them is either in religion, or in the things of this life. Fellowship of religion is two waies: One, when we are content to bee of the same faith with them. The second, when we ioyne with them in the exercises of their religion.

Touching the first, wee may not have any fellowship with them, in one and the same faith, or in the doctrine of the worship of God: for their religion ouerturnes the foundation of our saluation. Saint Paul saith, Colossians 2. 19. That they which worship Angels, hold not the head Christ. Now worshippers of Angels, were such as thought they might not approach vnto God, without the mediation of Angels: and therefore they prayed to them, that they would pray to God in their behalfe: as Theodoret testifieth. This error (saith he) touching the worship of Angels, remained long in Phrygia, and Pisidia. Wherefore, when a Synode assembled at Laodicea which is the mother City of Phrygia, by an ordinance forbade men to pray to Angels. And so this day we may see in those quarters, and in the country about, Chappels of Saint Michael. They therefore gaue this aduise, vsing for sooth humilitie, and saying, that the God of all things, can neither be seene, nor comprehended, nor that men can come vnto him, but that they must attaine the good will of God by Angels. And this is that which Paul saith, in humilitie and worship of Angels. Again, Paul (saith he) commands that they give thanks to God the Father, by Christ, & not by Angels. And the Council of Laodicea, following this law, and willing to remedie that old disease, provided men should not pray to Angels, and forsake Christ. Further it appears by the words of Theodoret, that the Council of Laodicea iudged Angels when they were inuocated, to be idols, and inuocation of them to be abominable idolatrie. Papists alledge, that the Council condemnes them that denied Christ, and prayed to Angels in his name. Indeed Chrysostome saith as much; yet I answer two things. First, that Theodoret doth not speake of them that reiect Christ, and betooke themselves to the mediation of Angels: because he saith, they made a mixture of the Law and Gospell: which mixture cannot stand, vnlesse Christ, at the least in word be confessed. Secondly, that the error might be redressed which took place in Phrygia & Pisidia, (whatsoever it was) Theodoret saith, that the very act of inuocation, directed to Angels, was condemned. Thus much his very words import. Again, idolatrie is spiritual adultery; and therefore it breakes the band of spiritual wedlock, that is between man and God: and makes a people of God to become no people, and quite excludeth them from the covenat of God. By this it appears, that wee haue vpon good ground departed from the Church of Rome, and that we may not so much as dreame of any Vnion to be made, or Reconciliation of the two religions. It is not true which many suppose, that wee differ onely in matters of circumstance. Idolatrie is one speciall cause that makes vs to renounce the Romane religion.

Again, it is vtterly vnlawfull to ioyne with idolaters in their exercises of religion. Saint Paul exhorts the Corinthians on this manner: Flee idolatrie: that is, all feasts and meetings that tend to maintaine the honour of idols. And he vrgeth his exhortation by sundry reasons. The first is framed thus: They which are partakers in one and the same diuine seruice, haue fellowship with him whose seruice it is. This proposition is confirmed by a double example: the first of the Lords supper, in which they that partake of bread and wine, are also partakers of the body & blood of Christ. The second is, the Iewish sacrifices: of which, whoeuer did eat, were partakers with the Iews in their religion. The minor follows: they which are partakers of the feasts of idols, are partakers of their diuine seruice: they therefore which are partakers of the feasts of idols, haue fellowship with the idols themselves. The second reason is this, they which are partakers of things offered to idols, haue fellowship with diuels: but ye may not haue fellowship with diuels: therefore ye may not be partakers of things offered to idols. The third reason is this: they which are partakers of the Lords Table, may not be partakers of the table of diuels: but ye are partakers of the Lords

Table: therefore yee may not be partakers of the tables of diuels. Now against these reasons the Corinthians might haply reply thus: That they did not present themselves at idol feasts, with an euill minde, as though they approved the idols themselves, & their seruice; that they went with their kindred and friends for this end; that they might preserue them in the faith, by keeping their old loue and acquaintance; or at least, winne them to Christ. To this Paul answereth, What shall we prouoke God to anger? are we stronger then he? signifying thereby, that albeit they had coloured shifts to defend themselves, yet indeed by so doing, they incurred the wrath of God. Furthermore he shewes it to be vnlawfull for the Corinthians to eat things offered to Idols, and that euene in private feasts, to be it they shall by their example offend their weake brethren, & draw them to doe that whereof they are not as yet peruerbed. Vpon this doctrine of Paul, it folloves by necessarie consequent, that it is wickednesse, yea flat idolatrie to be present at the Masse, though men keepe their hearts and their faith neuer so firmly vnto God.

Sundry things there be which are obiected to the contrary: And first of all, the example of Naaman, who saith to Elisba, 2. King. 5. 18. When I bow in the house of Rimmon, the Lord bee mercifull to me in this thing. & Elisba answered, Goe in peace. Therefore (say some) hee giueth leaue to Naaman, to bow in the house of Rimmon. A double answer (to omit many) is giuen to this place. The first is, that Naaman kneeled in the Temple of Rimmon, onely in ciuill respect, that the King might leane on his shoulders; and that he did this with open and publicke protestation, that he would indeede worship none but the God of Israel. The second answer, to which I rather incline, is this: In the words of Naaman, there be two things plainly to be gathered. The first is a confession, in which he doth acknowledge it to be a sinne to enter into the Temple of Rimmon, there to kneele downe before idols, or to giue any signe of reuerence to them. And therefore he saith twice, The Lord be mercifull to his seruant. The Lord be mercifull to his seruant in this thing. And by this also it appears, that his resolution and purpose, was no way to bow downe in the Temple of idols, but to worship the God of the Hebrewes, of whom he had beene healed. And for this cause hee craued that two Mules might be laden with the earth, where the Prophet dwelt: (a) no doubt for this end, to make an Altar thereon in his owne Countrey, that might be a monument of the health of his body restored, and a place of spiritual sacrifice in prayer and thanksgiving. The second thing in the words of Naaman, is a request to the Prophet, that he would pray for him, that he might be constant in his profession and purpose, and that if he were drawne against his purpose, and by humane frailty yeelded to bow againe in the house of Rimmon, with his king, he would likewise pray, that God would pardon his sinne of infirmite. And to this request of his, Elisba answered, Go in peace: and hereby he signified, that he would pray for him, that he might no more fall to idolatrie; and if he fell vpon weaknesse, that he might obtaine forgiveness. This place therefore giues no warrant to them, that ioyne themselves to idolatrous assemblies; but rather it proues the contrary.

Secondly, it is alledged, that none refused to worshipping the image of Nebuchadnezzar, but the three children; and consequently, that Daniel bowed as the rest. Answer. There is indeed no mention made that Daniel refused to worship: because (it may be) he was neuer accused, as they were; and if he had beene accused, yet were not the accusations received of the King: because hee was in fauour both with Prince & people. Furthermore, that he did not worship the image, it appears by his constancie in godlines: & by his refusal in lesse matters, as namely, to eat the portion of the kings meat.

Thirdly it is obiected, that there is great difference betweene the feast of idols, & the popish Masse; and that the idolatries of the Gentiles were inuented of the diuell, whereas the Masse was at the first inuented by Christ, though now it be corrupted by men. I answer, that the Masse is an abridgement, or compendium of all superstition and idolatrie: there is adoration directed to bread, or the formes of bread: there is the body of Christ offered really in a sacrifice of propitiation, which was neuer offered; but once with shedding of blood: there is adoration of stockes and stones, inuocation of dead men, saying of Masse to the honour of Saints & Angels, worshipping of dead mens bones, and such like abominations.

Fourthly, it is alledged, that the godly, as Ioseph and Marie, Christ, his Apostles, & the rest, came to the Temple: & there worshipped God: the worship then being corrupted with many abuses. I answer. First, they were bound by commandement, to offer sacrifice, & to do other parts of Gods worship at Ierusalem, and they could doe it no where else. Secondly, the outward worship of God in Sacrifice and Sacraments, was not corrupted for substance: doctine indeed was corrupted by sundry errors, but the godly did not therein communicate with the rest. Now in the Church of Rome, doctrine and sacraments are corrupted in substance, & abound with idolatrous abominations (as I haue shewed): & their outward worship of God, hath more infirmitie with Gentilisme, then with the first institution of the Lord.

Lastly, it is said, if we goe not to Masse, men count vs for hereticks: hate vs, & take offence at vs; and all offence must be avoided. Answer. Offence is either active, or passive. Active offence giuen: passive offence taken. Offence active, must alwaies be avoided of vs: passive cannot possibly be avoided. And we must doe our dutie, though men be offended neuer so:

remem-

remembering the rule of Christ, concerning them that be offended, Mat. 15. 24. Let them alone, they are the blind leaders of the blind. Furthermore, by hearing of Masse, weak ones are discouraged, and obstinate idolaters are confirmed, and made more obstinate. Thus they that feare lest offence be taken, give offence. Here it may bee demanded, whether it be lawful for Christian men to go into the temples of idols. I answer, they may, if they have a calling so to doe, and doe not communicate with idolaters in their superstitions, or give any honour to idols: but on the contrary, doe openly professe, either by word, or by their deeds, or both, that they abhorre both the idols, and their service. Thus was Elia present with the Priests of Baal. Thus were the three children present, when the golden image was worshipped. Thus was the Prophet of God present at the altar of Bethel, when Jeroboam stretched out his hand to offer incense to the idol. Thus Paul was present in Athens, and in the places of idolatry, that hee might behold their superstitions. The Protestant princes, in the crowning of Maximilian at Frankfurt, brought the Emperor to the Church, and to the place whereas he was to sit this done, they returned without doing any reverence at all, and thereby professed their dislike of popish idols, and their service. It may be objected, that the Prophet of the Lord prayed in the place where idolatry was exercised: because he prayed at the altar of Bethel, for the restoring of the Kings arme. Answer, He did not assimile. For to the cleane, all things indifferent are cleane: and therefore the place, though polluted with idolatry of others, was cleane to the cleane Prophet. And the Iewes were commanded, when they were in the midst of idolatrous nations, to worship GOD towards the Temple at Hierusalem. And God heard his prayer, by miracle restoring the kings arme: and therefore hee approved it. And a prayer made in an idolatrous assembly is no approbation of idolatry, if there be an open profession of the milke thereof: and the prayer bee made vpon some necessity, as this of the Prophets was, that the king might be convinced of his impietie. It may be objected, that the Prophet, refusing to eat in the place, should also have refused to pray there. I answer, no: because God appointed abstinence from meate, to bee the signe of detestation of the idolatry committed in Bethel, and not abstinence from prayer. And this example of the Prophet, doth not warrant vs to bee present at idolatrous service, there to worship the true God: because he did not dissemble, but he openly professed the truth against idolaters.

On the contrary, if men resolute not to professe their detestation of idolatrous worship, either by word of mouth, gesture, or some other way: but only desire vpon curiositie, to see new fashions, and hereupon, enter into the

A Temples of idols; I thinke they ought not to doe it. For they themselves tempt God by so doing; they offend their weak brethren, and draw them by their example, to doe the like. And lastly, by their presence they confirme the obstinate idolaters, in their superstition. The like is to be said of them, that curiously without calling, go out of the precincts of the Church, into idolatrous countries, for this end only to see, and to be seene.

Touching ciuill societie with them, two points are to be handled. What societie may be vsed with them, and what not. For the first, we may vse their societie vpon necessitie, that cannot be avoided, vntill we will vterly reiect the fellowship of mankind. Paul, who forbids the Corinthians, to company with a brother that is an idolater; for all this giues them libertie to conuerse with the idolatrous of the world. This may seeme strange, but the reason is, because the companie of beleeuers was then but small, and the whole world beset with them; but idolaters: and therefore it was impossible for beleeuers to auoid their societie, vntill they meant to goe out of the world. And vpon this necessitie, Paul permits the Church in his daies, to vse the fellowship of idolaters: and for the very same cause hee saith, 1. Cor. 10. 27. If any of them that beleue not, bid you to a feast, get if ye will. Secondly, beleu-ers may lawfully ioyne with idolaters, in the societie of Concord. For by the generall calling of Christianitie, they are bound to haue peace with all men. Vpon this ground may the Church make covenants of peace with idolaters, vpon euene and iust conditions. Heb. 12. 14. Haue peace towards all men, and holiness. Rom. 12. 18. Haue peace with all men, if it be possible, and as much as in you lyeth. Thus Abraham made a league of peace with Amer and Eshel, king of the Amorites, & with Abimelech: and Isaac with Abimelech: and Jacob with Laban: and Heber the Kenite, with Isab a forraigne king: and these examples haue sufficient warrant. For that which we may doe, we may bind our selues to doe. Thirdly, we may vse any such fellowship with them, as is, or shall bee occasioned by vertue of our particular calling.

Thus Christ being the Sauour of the world, conuerfed with publicans and sinners. Thus Paul being the Apostle of the Gentiles, enters into Athens, and their beholds their deuotions. It is Gods commandement, that the beleeuing wife, shall not forsake her vnbelleu- ing husband, if hee be willing or desirous to dwell with her. If it be alledged, that Ezra constrained the Israelites to put away their Ammonitish, and Moabitish, and the rest of their heathen wiues: I answer, that their marriages were in deede voided, and no marriages. First, because the nations with whom they married, were people according to Gods law, ciuilly dead: in that God had commanded their destruction, vntill when peace was offered, they accepted of it. Secondly, in that that they were not onely idolaters, but also infesters to idolatry, God by expresse commandement, did simply forbid the Iewes to marry with them; vntill they did repent & change their religion. And in regard of this commandement, the foresaid marriages were nullities, as incestuous marriages are no marriages, by reason of the absolute prohibition of God.

Touching the societie forbidden vs with idolaters, it is the societie of Amity: that is, of familiarity and speciall loue. Two examples, whereof we finde in the word of God. One is of contracts of marriage with idolaters, which the Scripture precisely condemneth, as an abominacion in Israel, & a prophanation of the name of God, whē Iuda marries the daughter of a strange god. Mal. 2. 11. Boaz indeed married Ruth, a Moabitess; but shee was entred and receiued into the body of the Israelites, by a former marriage: and shee was one that beleued in the God of Israel: Thy people (saith the Lord to Namias, Ruth 1. 16.) shall be my people, and thy God, my God. Samson likewise married a woman of the Philistines, but that was by diuine intinct, and consequently, by a speciall appointment of God. Againe it is alledged, that God by expresse law, gaue leaue to the Israelites, to marry heathenish women taken captiues in warre. Ans. That is a law onely of toleracion, without approbation: in which, God for the hardness of their hearts, permits the euill, which cannot by policie be quite taken away.

And this appeares by two things: First before the marriage, the woman by Gods appointment must bee deformed, by cutting off her haire, by the growing of her nailes, by putting off the garments of her captiuitie, & by mourning for her father and mother: for the space of a moneth: and the end of this was, to cause a dislike in the Israelites, of their intended marriages, or to signifie a change of religion at the least in pretence, in the parties espoused. The second example is of leagues of mutuall aide & protection, which may not be contracted between beleu-ers and idolaters. Iehaphaz for making this kinde of league with Abah, is thus reprooued, 2. Chron. 19. 2. Wouldst thou helpe the wicked, and loose them that hate thee? Therefore for this thing, the wrath of the Lord is upon thee. Again, that which we may not doe, we may not couenant to doe; now we may not mutually giue and take aide and protection of idolaters. This tends to the dishonour of God, because it makes idolaters boast, that the people of God cannot stand without their aide. It is further an occasion of idolatry; and this league often inuols the people of God in the same plagues and iudgement with idolaters. It hath bene the decay both of Greece and Hungarie, that they haue heretofore entred into leagues of amitie with the Turkes. It may be objected, that Abraham made this couenant of protection with the Amorites, Amer, Eshel, Mamre: and that thereupon they aided him in refusing of Lot, and in the slaughter of the Kings. I answer, First, it may be they were beleu-ers, embracing the faith of Abraham: nothing can be shewed to the contrary. Secondly, if they were infidels, the couenant that was betweene them, was of peace onely: and they ayded Abraham, not by request made by him, but by secret & speciall motion of God. Thirdly, the Fathers did sundry actions vpon bad custome, which God by law afterward redressed: and their examples may not be followed in all things. Lastly, I suppose that Abraham ioynd with them, as against a common aduersary: and therefore the protection they ministred to Abraham, was as necessary for themselves, as for him and his people.

Here one exception must not be omitted. Put the case; that the husband is an idolater, and is content to dwell with his beleu- ing wife: shee then is to liue with him, not onely in the societie of peace, but also in the societie of amity, by doing all duties of loue that concerne a wife, so far as may stand with good conscience. For the precept of Paul is, that marriage and marriage duties, are to be preferred of the beleu- ing party with an infidell, so be it the said infidell be content. It may be alledged, that thus the beleu-er exposeth himselfe to danger of idolatry: I answer, no; because God defends them that call vpon him, who thrust not themselves into danger, but beare the danger and calamity into which they are fallen, attending vpon their callings. Again, if the vnbelleu- ing partie shall sollicit the other, & vse all means, both faire and foule, to draw him or her to idolatry, the beleu- ing party in this case, may goe aside for a time, and omit the duty of marriage. For this is all one, as if the idolatrous & vnbelleu- ing partie should depart. For indeed, that partie is said to depart, in whom the cause of departing is; as in the Church, he is schismaticke, in whom the cause of the schisme is, and not alwaies he that separates. Secondly, it may be objected, that a Christian may not become the member of a harlot, much lesse of an idolater; considering idolatry is a great sin. I answer: the reason is not like. For the fornicator consents to the fornication: and so doth not the beleu- ing party, by doing duties that pertaine to marriage, consent to the idolatry of the vnbelleu- ing party. And the fornicator willingly ioynes himselfe with an harlot; whereas the beleu- ing partie, desires hee might be yoked with a beleu-er, and not with an infidell. Lastly, it may be objected, If for adultery, diuorce may be made, why not for idolatry which is spirituall adultery? I answer, That not any sinne by it selfe, as it is a sinne, not breaking the troth and bond of marriage, is the proper cause of a diuorce; and not any kinde of idolatry, but the sinne of adultery breaks this troth.

Hitherto haue I shewed the meaning of this commandement: Keepe your selues from idols. Now I come to the reason of the commandement, in the word Babes, or Little chil-

den, The word (child) in Scripture, is given to them that be any way inferior to others: And it is applied ten waies. First, they which come of others, in respect of blood & generatio, are called children. It needs no prooffe. Secondly, they are called children, which are in the right descending line. Christ saith to the Iewes, John. 6. 58. Your Fathers eat Manna: and this was about 1500. yeeres after. Again he saith, Luke 11. 47. You build the tombs of the Prophets, which your fathers killed: and that was at the least 500 yeeres after. A widow to her nephew, is as a parent. Yea they which defend in the line collateral, are children, or as children. Thirdly, subjects be children. David speaks thus to Saul, the King my father, 1. Sam. 24. 11. Thus Abimelech is named father and Kings. Fourthly, they which succeed others in the title or right of inheritance, are called children. Thus Leconian that neuer had child, is said to beget Salathiel, because Salathiel was the next of *Dauid*es stocke, who therefore did succeed Leconian, in the kingdom of Iuda. Fifthly, they who were guided by the counsell of others, are called children. Thus Ioseph saith, Gen. 45. God hath made me a father to Pharaon. Sixty, seruants are called children. The seruants of Naaman say vnto him, 2. Kin. 5. 13. Father, if the Prophet had bidden thee do a great thing. Seventhy, yonger men & womē, in respect of their elders, are as children. S. Paul saith, 1. Tim. 5. 1. Rebuke not an elder: but exhort him as a father. V 111. They which be in the tuition of others, are children. Christ commending his mother to Iohn, saith, John. 19. 26. Behold thy mother, behold thy sonne. Ioh. Ioh. Ioh. 29. 16. he was a father to the poore. IX. They which learn arts inuented of others, are children. Thus Iubal is called the father of all that play on Harpes, Gen. 4. 21. Lastly, scholars are called the sonnes of the Prophets. Elizus saith to Elisha, 2. Kin. 2. 12. My father, my father. And hearers are called children, in respect of their teachers. King Iosai said to Eliakim, 1. King. 13. 14. O my father, my father, the charers of Israel & horsemen. Paul saith to the Corinth. 1. Cor. 4. 15. I have many teachers; but not many fathers: and to the Galath. 4. 19. I have begot you by the Gospel. And in this place Iohn faith to all true belecuers: my little children. And hereby he signifies his tender loue, & his fatherly care to the Catholike Church in generall, and to all in singular, that imbrace the faith of Christ: that the commendment touching idols, might take the better place, and be the more respected.

Thus much of the reason. Now I do earnestly exhort and with all persons that tender their owne saluation, to remember it, & to be doers offit to the end. And that they may the better be refouled, let the first consider the greatnes of the sinne. The Prophet saith, 1. Sam. 15. 23. That disobedience is as much credit, & transgression as idols. The greatnes hereof appeares in two things. Firsh to erect any image to God, is to abolish his maiesty & glory: Paul saith; Rom. 1. 23. the Gentiles turned the glory of the incorrupt- ible God, into the similitude of man and beast. He that shall goe about to represent the person or presence of a mightie Monarch, by setting vp the image of any beast, as namely, of an Ape, with a scepter & a crown, doth no doubt; greatly abuse himself, & disgrace the said Monarch: much more then is our heavenly King disgraced, when men take vpon them to represent, either his maiesty, or his presence, with the image & picture of any creature. Secondly, the worship of idols, is the worship not of God, but of the diuell himselfe: because it is prescribed by the diuell, according to his pleasures, against the will of God. Again, we are to consider the foule attendants & companions that goe with the worship of idols, namely, adulteries and fornications. For in the iudgement of God, they are left to bodily fornication, that giue themselves to that which is spiritual. Paul faith, that the Gentiles because they dishonour God in idols, were for the cause given up to the lusts of their owne hearts, vnto uncleannesse, to defile their owne bodies, and to commit sinnes against nature, Rom. 1. 24. When the Israelites fell from God to idols, oftentimes they fell to Sodomie. In Italy, for their idolatries, men are left to themselves to permit the stewes, and to abound (as the same is) in whoredoms and fornications. Thirdly, such as worship idols, sever themselves from God and Christ, as I have proued. Lastly, the punishment of idolatry is detable. For the foule, Ren. 21. 8. a portion in the lake that burnes with fire and brimstone: for the body, captiuitie or destruction. Thus saith the Lord, Deut. 32. 21. because they have provoked mee to jealousy in them that are no gods, I will also provoke them to jealousy in them that are no people. Thus in this last age, Horle-men from Empyras: that is, (4) Saracens or Turks, shall destroy them that worship idols of gold or silver: that is, the idolaters of the Romane Church.

If any here shall say, that they are not yet refouled, that the Church of Rome is a worshipper of idols, let them consider these reasons that follow. The first is this:

Babylon is a worshipper of idols.

Rome is Babylon. Ergo

Rome is a worshipper of idols.

The maior is manifest. For Babylon is called the mother of fornications, Ren. 17. 5. & the dwelling place of diuels; chap. 18. ver. 2. by reason of her idolatries. The minor is also manifest. For Babylon is called, Ren. 17. 18. A city that rules over the kings of the earth; & that is Rome which was the seat of the Empire in the daies of Iohn. Here answer is made, that Saint Iohn speaks of heathenish Rome, after it had received the Gospel. I answer, it is false: for Rome ruled by the Emperor, did not make the kings of the earth drinke the wine of her fornications; because it left every nation and countrey to his owne religion and deuotions. For this was the common error of the heathen; to approve of all religions; & to admit the sects of all Philosophers. Themistius the Philosopher went about to perswade Valens the Emperour, that the varietie of sects was pleasing vnto God, while he was worshipped in iudry forts. Leo saith thus: This came not knowing the author of her aduancement, when she ruled almost ouer all nations, she serued and gaue her selfe to the errors of all nations, and seemed to haue taken vp a great height of religion, when she refused no manner of falsehood. Therefore heathenish Rome dranke of the wine of the nations, and did not cause the nations to drinke of her cup. This therefore is spoken and meant of Rome governed by the Pope. Again, Reuelat. 13. 1. there a beast is rising out of the sea with seven heads and ten hornes, which by common consent of interpreters is the Romane Empire; and the other beast, ver. 11. arising out of the earth with the voice of the dragon, and the hornes of the lamb, is the estate of the church of Rome governed by the Pope. For it doth all things that the other beast did, and that in his fight: and it giues a spirit, to the image of the beast, because it reuiues and puts in practise the dignitie, authority, and tyrannie of the Romane Emperours. Thus Irenaeus of old vnderstood this chapter, who saith, that the number of the name of the beast is contained in the word Laticius, which signifieth a Latine or Romane. Abbat Isachim in his Commentary vpon the Renel, hath these words: (a) Some that carry a shew of the face of God, that is, the Catholike Church, are made the state of the beast, which is the kingdom of Antichrist, reigning euery where in his members, from the beginning of the Church. Again, We have by Tradition from our Fathers, that Rome is spiritually Babylon. Again, The Merchants of the earth are Priests themselves, who sell prayers and Masses for (b) pence, making the house of prayer a place of merchandise. Again, We know that not only Bishops and Priests, are entangled in the affairs of Babylon; that they may grow rich: but also some Abbots, Monks, and religious persons, or rather, which seeme to be and are not. Honorius signifies in platonic words, that the Pope and his Cleargie is the very Babylon of the Apocalyps. The summe of his words are these: I turne thee to the citizens of Babylon, and looke what ones they are, and by what fires they goe. Behold her Princes and Iudges: for in them is the state of the Beast. Turne to the Cleargie, & in them thou shalt see the Tent of the beast. Behold be Cloysters of Monks, and in them thou shalt see the tabernacles of the beast. Behold the houses of Nunnes, and thou shalt see in them also prepared for the beast. Now then the conclusion must needs follow, that Rome governed by the Pope, is a worshipper of idols. If please some to auouch, that if the learned papists and Protestants might conference together, they should be found to differ, not in substance, but only in circumstances: but in substance which they say, vntill by skill they be able to make idolatry a circumstance.

A second reason. A thing faint in the mind by imagination is an idoll. This is the

A expresse doctrine of Theodoret and Origen: of whom, not only the Images of things fained, but also the things themselves, as Titan, Sphinx, Centaurs, men with dogs heads, and such like are called idolls.

Now I assume: But Images which the Church of Rome faith are the Images of the true God, and of Christ, are indeed the Images of things that are not. For there is no such God that doth annex his presence to painted or carued Images, that doth heare and helpe such as pray before them, more then any where else: that will be worshipped in, at, and by Images: if there be such a God, he hath either revealed himselfe, or not. If he haue revealed himselfe, let the promise of his presence and of his hearing, of vs at images be brought forth. Again, let his commandment binding vs to worship him in images be shewed. And if neither (as I verily thinke) can be shewed, the worship if it life is but a vaine thing. And the thing worshipped is but a fiction of the braine.

Again I assume: The image of the virgin Mary, is the image of a thing that is not. For there is no such mother of Christ, that is present with her image, and heareth men and women praying to her there. And there is no man vpon earth that can possibly by sufficient reason prouoe it to bee: whereas for all our actions, speciall fractions of religious worship, faith must be the ground.

The third reason. To turre the glorie of God into the image of a corruptible man, is idolatry: thus Paul proues at large, Rom. 1.

Now the papists represent God in the image of a man, and the learned among them defend it. I say (saith one) it is lawfull to paint the Father in the forme of an old man, and the holy Ghost in the forme of a dove. And such kind of paintings turne the glory of God into the similitude of a corruptible man. Let Austine speake in this case. Wee must not therefore forbid (saith he) that God the Father be circumscribed as it were with an humans shape, that when we thinke of him, a right or left side should come into our mind: or that which is said, that the Father doth sit, wee must not thinke so bee done with the bowing of the legs; that we fall not into that sacrilege wherewith the Apostle censurh them that haue changed the glory of the incorruptible God into the similitude of a corruptible man. For it is extreme wickednesse, that a Christian man should place such an image for God in the temple, much more it is wicked in his heart where the temple of God is inuade, if it be cleauid from earthly desire and error. Furthermore, the Father neuer appeared in this forme, but the Sonne.

The fourth reason. To inuocate a brute creature, is idolatry. Now the Popish Church inuocates a brute creature when they say, All hail, O Croffe, our onely hope in this time of the passion, increas of righteousness to the godly, and give pardon to guilty persons: If any thail say these words are directed to Christ: I say again they are spoken ken to the very wood of the croffe. For the words in the Hymn immediately going before, are these: Blessed is that Croffe on whose armes the price of the world did hang, it was made a beam to weigh his body, and took the prey for hell.

The fifth reason. The worship of God that is deified and taken up by man, is indeed effect idolatry: because it is a worshippe that God doth abhorre & detest: who will precisely be worshipped according to his own word; without any addition, detraction, or change.

Now the worship of God in the Church of Rome, is deified and taken up by man. And this I declare in five particulars. The first is, the invocation of Saints departed, of which I propound these conclusions. The first is, that for 350. years after the death of Christ, there was no practise or acknowledgement of prayer to Saints in the true Church of God. For till 200. years after Christ, the intercession of Saints was utterly unknown: as appears plainly by the writings of Irenaeus, Iulian, Clement, Tertullian; and about the year of our Lord, 240. Origen began to broach the doctrine of intercession of Saints: notas the publicke doctrine of the Church, but as his owne private conjecture. And after three hundred years from Christ, the learned disputed against the Arians on this manner: Christ is invoked, therefore Christ is God. Which kinde of reasoning had bene vnusit, if prayer to Saints had then taken place.

2. Concluf. Vpon the point of 400. years, Basil, Nyssen, Nazianzen gave further occasion of prayer to the dead. For by a rhetorical figure they vsed to speake to the dead, and as it were to talke with them after the manner of Orators. And these speeches of theirs may seeme to be prayers, but indeede they are no prayers, but wishes. For in the same manner they vsed to speake to the soules of damned men, as the soule of Julian, and to things without life, as to the Passouer. Secondly, their speeches were directed to Saints in doubtfull and wauering termes, to this effect: (a) Heare vs if there be in thee any care of vs, if there be any sense in thee. Thirdly, they supplicd the Saints to be (b) present with them, to heare them when they spake vnto them.

3. Concluf. Till 500. years after Christ were expired, invocation of Saints was not receiued into the publicke Liturgie of the Church. After 400. years Saint Augustine faith of publicke prayer: Wee doe not make gods of Martyrs: they are not made of the Priest, but no prayer is made vnto them. After 500. years Petrus Gnaphan an heretike is said to put invocation of Saints into the publicke prayers of the Church. And Gregorie the Great, about 600. years after Christ brought prayers to the dead into the Letanies of the West Church.

The second particular is touching Images of Saints, of which I set downe foure conclusions.

1. Concluf. There was no use of Images a mong Christians specially in their Churches; for 370. years after Christ. The contrary cannot be shewed.

2. Concluf. Solitary or single Images of God or Saints were not allowed to be set up in Churches for any use of religion, till more then 400. years after Christ. And the contrary cannot be shewed.

3. Concluf. Images erected in Churches for Lay-mens books, were not publicly allowed to be worshipped, till after sixe hundred years. Gregory the great, faith thus to Sirenus, And indeede because you forbid images to be worshipped, we altogether praised you, but that you haue broken them, we haue reprehended you, I say, publicly; because sundry priuate men, and particular Churches, after 400. years began religiously, or rather superstitiously to adore the wood of the croffe and the peeces thereof; but this was then a particular and priuate act: not the act of the Catholike Church.

4. Concluf. Adoration of images was neuer publicly authorized, till 789. years after Christ, in the second Councell of Nice. And in the writings of the Fathers there is nothing for that religious worshipping of images which is more then veneration or reuerence, till about the former time. And this authorisment in that Councell wanted vniuersalitie. For shortly after a Synod at Frankford (in which Charles the great, and the Legates of the Bishop of Rome were present) condemned the Councell of Nice, as hereticall. Homon an English historiā faith well of this point. Charles (saith he) King of the Franks, sent the booke of a Synod to Brytayne, directed to him from Constantinople. In which booke, alas, many things are found very true comment and contrary to true faith, specially that it is confirmed by ioynt consent of almost all the Doctors of the East, being three hundred, or there abouts, Bishops, that Images are to be worshipped: Which thing the Church of God doth altogether a curse. And against which Albin, write an Epistle marvelously confirmed by the Authorities of the Scriptures, and brought in with the same booke to the king of the Franks, in the name of our Bishops and Princes.

The third particular is of religious worship. One Conclusion. The distinction of religious worship into Latrine worship, & Dulia-grace, was not knowne & received into the Church till 400. years after Christ. Augustine was one of the first that vsed this distinction in another sense. For hee puts Latrine for religious worshipping, prescribed in the first table, & when he puts Dulia for more then ciuill worship, he flatly denies it to be due vnto Saints, as in these words of this. We honour Saints with charitie, & not with seruice. Again, Let it not be our religio the worshipping of dead men. And I would faine see the Author within 500. yeeres after Christ, that ascribes Dulia to any meere creature, when it signifies an higher worship the positive or ciuill honor.

The fourth particulars of the crucifix. Of which I set downe one conclusion: That crucifixes were not in use till 400. years after Christ.

The

The single croffe was, I grant, but not the croffe with the image of Christ put thereto. The testimonies of Iustin, (a) Lactantius, (b) Minutius Felix, (c) Tertullian, (d) Cyprianus, are alleaded to the contrary. But they indeede, speake onely of the real crucifix, that is of Christ himselfe crucified vpon his owne proper croffe: and not of the formed crucifix. The booke of visiting the sicke, that goes vnder Augustines name, mentions the painted crucifix. But that is a knowne counterfeit of latter times. Metaphrastes reporteth that a christall Croffe with the image of Christ appeared to Procopius the Martyr, and that hee was bidden to make the like of gold and silver, which he carried about him, & obtained victory against the Saracens. This testimonie of Metaphrastes is of no value, for he is but a fabler. Yet his testimonie declares thus much, that in the daies of Dioscorus, which was vpon the point of 300. yeeres, Popish crucifixes were not in vfe. Because Procopius made the crucifix which he wore about him, vpon the speciall occasion of a reuelation. And it seemes that crucifixes were not publicly receiued in the Church till 700. yeeres after Christ. For then the sixth Councell of Constantinople, whose Canons are not counterfeit, commands that the image of Christ be set vp in the roome of Adams dei.

The last particular, is touching the worship of Christ, and his Image. The first conclusion. The adoration of the Sacrament or of Christ after the Romane manner, in, at, and vnder the forme of bread, was not knowne or vsed in the Church of God, within eight hundred yeeres after Christ. For Transubstantiation the ground of adoration was not knowne or receiued of the learned, till after this time. Let them of the Romane religion study till their heads and hearts ake, they shal neuer be able soundly to prooue the contrary. And Honorius III. is said to haue instituted this adoration about the yeere of our Lord 1220.

The 2. Conclusion. The worship Latrine or diuine honor, was not giuen by the learned any way to the image of Christ for a thousand yeeres after his ascension, and vpperward. This the Papists see & confesse. Catharin faith, Indee more of the ancient (as farre as I could reade and marke) neuer said, that images are to be worshipped with the worship of Latrine, but they all deified this king of speaking. Again, It is not found in ancient writers, that an image (considered as an image) is to be adored with Latrine, but contrariwise that it is not so to be adored. And we reade this often protested in the answers of the Bishops of the fourth Synod, & in the Decree most manifestly, which I lately beleue neuer came to the hand of Thomas. Of the same opinion is Francis Suarez the Iesuite, who thinke that Thomas neuer saw the fourth Synode, or the second councell of Nice.

Vpon this which hath bin said, it appears that sundry maine points of religious worship haue bene deified by men in the Church of Rome, & consequently that their worship is in effect idolatry. For all this, pur case that the Romane worship bee no idolatry: neuerthelesse it is subiect to a possibility of being idolatry, and therefore naught, and thus I reason.

The true worship of God is not subiect to a possibility of being Idolatry. For there is no possibility of darknes inlight, no possibility of euill in goodnes. The worship of God in the Romane Church is subiect to a possibility of Idolatry. For it is possible that he which by signes manifests his presence, and heares them that pray before images, be the diuel himselfe, and do it by Satanical operation. There is no such likelihood in the Sacraments and word preached: because they are founded in the institution of God, & so are not images or worship at them. Again, in the adoration of images, three caueats must be obserued, as they teach.

The first, that no confidence be placed in images: the second, that wee aske nothing of them: the third, that we doe not ascribe any diuinity vnto them. Now it is a possible thing (nay it is not ordinary) that the common people omit these, or some of the cautions. August. faith, Who doth worship or pray beholding an image, which is not so affected that hee thinketh hee is not heard of it, and hope that shall be performed by it, which he desireth? Again, the similitude of a shape, and the counterfeit composition of lines doth leade, and with a certaine weak and sicke affection, doth brauise the weaker sort of mortall men.

Again, it is possible that the priest faile in his intention, by wandering-by-thoughts when he is in the consecration of the Host, or hee may of bad purpose intend not to consecrate: or he may of negligence omit some word or words of consecration: & then there is no right consecration: if no consecration, no transubstantiation, if no transubstantiation, Christ is not adored, but a peece of bread for the liuing God.

Again, there is a possibility that some of them that bee worshipped for Saints in heauen, bee no Saints, but damned in hell. And Hierom said, Wee worship the bodies of many vpon earth, whose soules are tormented in hell. Sundry images in the Church of Rome at the first, in all likelihood were inuented to represent, not the persons of men, but mysteries after the manner of Emblems. The figure which is called Saint Margaret, destroying a dragon after she was deuoured of it, in former times serued to represent the calling of the Church of the Gentiles, being gathered by the preaching of the Gospel out of the bowels (as it were) of the diuel, of whom they were deuoured. S. George on horse-backe was in former times a representation of Christ our Saviour, who vanquished the diuel for the deliuerance of his Church. S. Christopher, who was indeed a meere fiction, was in former times nothing else but a representation of the life of a Christian man as the very name declares. For Christopherus is one that beares the name of Christ before men. Now these and the like pictures of mysteries, were in proceffe of time reputed pictures of Saints; and are worshipped at this day of many, as they haue bene heretofore, for the images of Saints indeed. To this I adde, that reliques are very often counterfeits: that the feast of the Assumption of the virgin Mary is of no better stamp: because there is no certentie in historie to prooue this assumption. Thus much of the Idolatrie of our times.

Christ

In P. 11. 113. & Epist. 49. ad Doct. gratias.

Having thus declared, what is meant by Idols, and how they bee to be avoided, I must yet proceed further. For it is the property of a diuine law, in forbidding any thing to command the contrarie: and therefore when Idols are forbidden in this text, the true worship of God is commanded: and it is the very scope of this place to inioyne vs to preferre our felues in the true worshipp of God. Of which durie I will speake a little, because it is of special weight and moment. That we may the better keepe our felues in the right worship of God, we must consider first, what is meant by the worship of God; & secondly, what are the spirituall heads and parts thereof. That wee may conceiue aright what is meant by the worship or seruice of God, fixe points are distinctly to be considered. The first is the foundation of Gods worship. For they that would truly worship God, must lay downe a foundation thereof in their hearts; and that consisteth of two parts, the knowledge of God, and of our felues. Of the knowledge of God, the Prophet Isay speaks thus, The Egyptians shall know the Lord in that day, and doe sacrifices and oblations, and shall vow vowes, vnto the Lord. And Paul saith, How shall they call on him, of whom they haue not heard? If it bee demanded, what knowledge of God is required, I answer, we must not only know God as he is in himselfe, that is, the vnitie of the Godhead in the Trinitie of persons, with the properties and workes thereof; but we must know him as hee is to vs, that is, our God, extending his mercie and his prouidence ouer vs. For the sense, or experimental knowledge of the fauour and goodnes of God, breeds in vs the true worship of God. Concerning our felues we must know two things. The first, what we are by nature, namely, vile, wretched, and miserable sinners, vnable to doe any good, prone to all euill, deserving many thousand damnations. This knowledge of our miserie is indeed no cause that moues vs to worshipp God, yet is it an occasion thereof. The woman of Samaria did no better then scorne Christ, till shee was brought to a sight of her finnes, and then afterward shee reuerenced him as the Messiah. The prodigall sonne, when hee was touched with a feeling of his owne misery, came & yielded himselfe in subiection to his father. Again, we must further know, what we are by grace, namely, the children and seruants of God, and the heires of the kingdom of heauen. And this knowledge is a notable inducement to the worshipp of God. For the mercies of God are they which moue men, to bring vnto God the true and reasorable seruice.

Vpon the former doctrine, two things offer themselves to be considered, the fin of our times, and our duty. The fin is noted by the Prophet, There is none that understandeth, and seeketh after God. This we see by daily experience. Men content themselves with that knowledge of God which nature affordeth, & they endeavour not to know and acknowledge him as hee hath reuealed himselfe in the written word, specially in the covenant of grace. And so great is the force of selfe-loue in most men, that they cannot abide to consider of themselves, as they are in themselves out of Christ. Thus most men present a worship vnto God, but it is without ground or foundation. Now the duty of all men is to study for the knowledge of God & of themselves; and to increase herein. For hence it is, that al godly men haue stirred vp themselves to duties pertaining to the honour of God. Daniel blesteth God, praefeth him, and brings gifts & offerings to him, vpon the knowledge he had, that kingdome, power, & glory, was Gods, and that all things were his. Daniel makes solemne prayer & confession to God, because he considered him to be great and terrible, and to be a keeper of covenants with them that loue him. The ground of the nine latter commandments is the first, Thou shalt haue no other gods before me. And the ground of this commandment is a knowledge and faith, that Iehovah is our God. And this appeares, because the words, I am Iehovah thy God, which, &c. are closed vpon the first commandment, and shut vp with it in one & the same period in the Hebrew text. Moreover when God is not known aright, he is not worshipped aright, but either the idols of our braine are worshipped, or diuels. Thus Paul saith, that the Galatians, when they knew not God, worshipped them that are no Gods by nature. For such as our knowledge is, such is our worship.

The second point, is the rule of the worship: and that is. That nothing may goe vnder the name of the worship of God, which hee hath not ordained in his owne word, and commanded to vs as his owne worship. For we are forbidden vnder paine of the curse of God, either to adde, or to take away any thing from the precepts of God, in which hee prescribes his owne worship. When the Iewes worshipped God after the denised fashions of the Gentils, though their meaning was to worship nothing but God, yet the text saith, they worshipped nothing but diuels. Again, the Lord forbids vs in his worship to follow after our owne hearts and eyes, or to walke in the ordinances of our forfathers, but only in his commandments. And he holds it as a vaine thing, to teach his worshipp and feare by the precepts of men. That we may worshipping

God

God with reasonable seruice, wee must prooue what is the good, acceptable, and perfect will of God. And those are good workes indeed, acceptable to God, which hee hath prepared for men to walke in. All voluntarie religion, and will-seruice, is utterly condemned. Therefore nothing may goe vnder the name of Gods worshipp, but that which hee prescribes. It is alleadged to the contrary, that when a work is done without commandment, so there be an intention to honour God, it is the worship of God. I answer, it is false. For that any worke or action may bee the worship of God, foure things are required; the person or doer must be regenerate; the matter of the worke must bee a thing commanded: it must be done in faith; and then, in the intention of the minde, it must be directed to the honour of God. Secondly, the intention to honour God, is not alwaies good, vnlesse it be an intention to honour him, by yielding obedience to that which hee commandeth. Again, it is alleadged, that a work done in loue to God, though there be no commandment thereof, is the worship of God. I answer, that loue keeps it selfe to the word, & will of God: and things done without a word from God are not of loue. For loue is the fulfilling of the law. Thirdly, it is objected, that vows in the old Testament were a part of the worship of God, and that they were not commanded. I answer, though God did not bind all men by a commandment to make vowes: yet hath hee testified in his word, that vowes were acceptable to him: for hee prescribed the matter of vowes, and the manner of making, and the keeping of them. Furthermore, it is vrged, that Mary who annointed Christ, had no commandment so to doe, and yet shee did a worke acceptable to Christ. I answer, though shee had no particular commandment, yet had shee a general. For the worke shee did, was a confession of her faith and loue to Christ, and that is commanded. Likewise Pauls example is vrged, who preached the Gospel freely, and looked for his reward of God: and yet hee had no commandment so to doe. I answer, to take a stipend for preaching the Gospel, is in it selfe a thing indifferent, and may be done, or not done. Yet was it not a thing indifferent in the Church of Corinth, by reason of the offence of many. And therefore Paul preached freely: and hee could doe no otherwise, vnlesse hee would haue abused (as hee saith) his authority. For a thing indifferent, in the case of skandall, ceaseth to be indifferent, & is a thing commanded. Lastly, some object, Luk. 10. 16. He which heareth you, heareth me. Therefore (say they) the very commandments of Pastours prescribe Gods worshipp. I answer, first the place is properly to be vnderstood, not of all teachers, but of the Apostles. Secondly, if it be spoken of all teachers, the words must be vnderstood with limitation: for thus is the Ministerie of commission, Teach them to observe all things which I haue commanded you. As Christ was sent of the Father, so are the ministers sent of him: but he was sent to do his Fathers will: As my Father hath commanded me, so doe I.

Thus the truth of this rule is manifest: and we must lay it vp in our hearts as a treasure, & neuer suffer our felues to be deprived of it; for the vse of it is great. By it we may discern the prophanes of our times. All men can say, God must be worshipped: but when it comes to the point, what is the worship wherewith they honour God? Surely, what they list themselves. Some worshipp God with their good meaning; some with their good dealing; some with the babbling of a few words, as namely, of the Apostles Creed, and ten Commandments for prayers. This seruice of God is very common: but alas, it is poore seruice. For the rule of diuine honour is not the will of him that honoureth; but the will of him which is honoured. Secondly, here we learne to detest the seruice and worship which is performed to God in the Church of Rome. For it contains many parts and points of will-worshipp, hauing no warrant from God, either by commandment or promise: of this kind are the Sacraments of penance, confirmation, matrimonie, orders, and the last anointment: The consecration of the bodie of Christ by fine words, For this is my bodie; the oblation and sacrifice of Christ in the Masse for the finnes of the quicke and dead: the vow of continencie, perpetual poeuitie, and of regular obedience: the religious distinction of meates, garments, times; the hallowing of ashes, palmes, bread, water, &c. for the driving away of diuels, and for the health of the body and soule. For these and many other practises, let them bring forth the word of God, if they can. They plead for many things: that they haue the word of Traditions. I answer, that Traditions Ecclesiasticall are no word of God; but the word of man: and Traditions which are called Apoltolical, are either of no moment, or doubtful. For how shall we know certainly, that they were the Traditions of the Apostles, considering none hath said so, but some of the Fathers, whose testimonies are not sufficient, because they are subiect to error?

The third point, is the end which God hath appointed of all his worshipping: and that is, not to giue or adde glory to God: for nothing can be added to absolute perfection. But the end is, to acknowledge, praise, and confesse the infinite glory of GOD. Furthermore, the end of this acknowledgment or confession, is our happinesse & saluation, Ioh. 17. 3. This is eternall life, to know thee the only true God —, & I will deliver thee. Paul saith, God times is our gaine: & the reason is, because it hath the promise of this life, and the life to come. Vpon this we must be admonished euermore to worship God, and that with all care & diligence, because the worship of God is not his benefit, but our benefit & saluation.

The fourth point is concerning apt & able persons to performe worships acceptable vnto God. And they are onely such as turne vnto God, and are reuened by the holy Ghost. And the worship of God performed by any other persons, is not worship, but sinne. Prou. 15. 8. The sacrifice of the wicked is an abomination vnto the Lord. The Lord by the Prophet Iſay protesteth, that the oblations and sacrifices of the Iewes were an abomination to him, and that he hated them, because their hands were full of blood. Againe he saith, That he which killeth a bullocke, is as he which killeth a man, and he which offers a sheepe in sacrifice, as he which cuts off a dogs head; because of their vile abominations. Ioh. 9. 31. God heareth not sinners. Whatfoeuer is not of faith, is sinne; whatfoeuer worshop of God is performed by vnrepentant sinners, it is not of faith, because they want that faith, without which there is no pleasing of God. He that turnes not to God, doth not acknowledge his owne guilt, he that doth not acknowledge his guilt, doth neither acknowledge Gods iustice, nor his mercie; he that doth not acknowledge the iustice and mercy of God, can not truly worship him: he therefore that turnes not to God, can not vnfainedly worships him. If it be demanded, how the worship of God should be a sinne in any man, considering it is commanded: I answer, sinnes be of two sorts. The first, is, when something is done that is flat contrary to the commandement of God: the second is, when that is done which God commandeth, but not in that manner God commandeth. And thus the worship of God in wicked men is a sinne. Because though they doe that which God commands, yet they doe it not as he commands. Againe it may be said, if the worships of God be a sinne in the vnregenerate, then must not they be exhorted to the worship of God: because we may not exhort to sinne. I answer, that exhortations may not be made for the doing of any thing that is a sinne of it selfe: now the worship of God is not a sinne of it selfe, but onely by accident; that is, because it is performed by vngodly persons, to whom being vnclane, all things are vnclane. Againe, vngodly men are not to be exhorted to the worship of God, but in meete and conuenient order. For first, they must be admonished to turne vnto God, and then afterward to worship him.

Here let vs take notice of the ouer-sight of many, who liuing without reformation and amendment of life, thinke neuerthelesse if they pray vnto God, heare his word, come to the Lords Table, that they doe great matters, and that the Lord is highly bound vnto them; whereas indeed they doe nothing elsse but offend him and prouoke him to anger: not because they worships God, but because they worships him without faith and repentance. Likewise their loue of God, their strong and lively faith (of which they boast,) their confidence in Christ, are but fictions of the braine, so long as they are seuered from amendment of heart and life.

Here againe we are taught, that if wee indeed would serue and worship God, we must first turne to him with all our hearts; yea continually make a renouation of our first conuersion, and seek reconciliation with God and man. Mark. 11. 25. When ye shall stand and pray, forgive. The beleeuing Corinthians, because they wanted this renewed reconciliation, when they came to the Lords Table, did eate iudgement to themselves.

It may here be demanded, in what part the man regenerate worships God. I answer, in the whole man both body and soule, as Paul saith, 1. Cor. 6. 20. Glorifye God in your bodies and in your spirits. Yet there must some distinction and difference be obserued. For principally and properly God is worshipped in our spirit. Ioh. 4. 24. The true worshippers shall worship the Father in spirit. Rom. 1. 9. Whome I serue in my spirit. 1. Pet. 3. 15. Sanctifie God in your hearts. By the spirit, I vnderstand the thought of the minde, the conscience, and the affections of the heart. For in these is the first and principal seate of diuine and spirituall worship. As for the body, it is but a secondary instrument of the seruice of God. By this wee may discern the vanity of Popish religion. For it consists for the most part, vpon externall and bodily rites, gestures, & ceremonies, borrowed partly from the Iewes, and partly from the heathen; whereas the true Religion of the new Testament, hath but few prescribed ceremonies, and for the most part is diuine and spirituall.

The fifth point is, concerning the particular thing or place to which the worship of God is to be directed. And this rule must be remembered. The worship of God both inward and outward must be directed towards that thing in which, and at which, God will be worshipped. Now God hath straighly bound the worship of the Sonne, and consequently of himselfe, to that masse and lump of humane nature, receiued into the vinity of the second person. For this is the vniuersall commandement of God touching his Sonne Christ, He is thy Lord, and thou shalt worship him. And, Adore him al thy Angels. Therefore in euery place, in which we know him to be bodily present, without any more adoe, we are by directing our bodies and mindes vnto him according to the place in which he is, or abides, to doe him homage. For this finite and created masse of the manhood carries with it the adoration of the person to euery place, in which we certainly know the said manhood to exist substantially. And it matters not whether it be seene with bodily eyes or no. For it is sufficient, if we be certain, either by sense, or by the word of God of the bodily presence of Christ. By vertue of the former commandement, the wise men fall downe before the childe Iesus and worships him, turning eyes and mindes to that part of the house in which they saw him present. The woman of Canaan comes and falls downe at the feete of Christ, and worships him at the place in which hee stood. Thomas as soone as he knew that Christ stood before him, he directs his speech vnto him, and saies, Ioh. 20. 22. My Lord and my God. The disciples adore him in the cloudes, so long as they could see him: and when he was taken out of their sight, they still adored him, by directing minde, and gesture of body, not to Sonne, Moone, Starres, ayre, cloudes, much lesse to any earthly creature or place, but to the place of celestiall happiness, which is about and beyond this visible world, into which hee ascended bodily, where also Steuens worshipped him, and all the people of God euer since, directing hand and heart to heauen. As concerning the Arke of the couenant, the commandement of God is, Exalt the Lord your God, and fall downe before his foot. Isa. 66. 1. for he is holy. By means of this commandement, the Iewes were bound to worship God by directing themselves toward the Arke or mercy-seate, euen as if they had seene God himselfe there visibly present. Now the manhood of Christ is the true Propitiatory, and comes in the roome of the Arke of the couenant now in the time of the new Testament. And further seeing it is a part of Christ the Mediator, God will rather be worshipped in it, than at the arke of the couenant, and carries with it the adoration and worship of God to the place, in which it is knowne certainly to be more then the Arke. Furthermore, considering adoration is styed to the manhood of the Sonne of God, and God in it is worshipped, now in the daies of the new Testament, we are not bound by any commandement to direct our worships toward any place or creature vpon earth: but on the contrary without reuerence or respect to this or that place, to worship in spirit and truth. Ioh. 4. 23. lifting vp heart and minde to heauen, where our Redeemer is at the right hand of God.

The sixth and last point is, concerning the properties of the worship of God, & they are three. The first is, that the worship of God is incommunicable, Iſay 42. 8. I will not give my glory to any other nor my praise to graven images. Math. 4. 10. Him onely shalt thou serue. It may be objected, that diuine adoration is giuen to the manhood of Christ, which is a creature. I answer, that adoration or inuocation pertaines, and is to be giuen to whole Christ, lest we should seeme to diuide the person; and separate the natures. And yet a distinction must be made of the godhead and manhood. For the godhead is the proper object to which religious adoration is properly and simply directed, & so is not the manhood. For no creature is simply to be honoured with diuine adoration. Athanasius saith, God is to be adored in regard or respect of the Godhead. Cyril saith, Do we adore Immanuel as (a) a man? God forbid. For this were a detage, deceit, and error. For in this we should nothing differ from them which worship the creature beyond the Creator and maker. Againe, The godhead in Christ is a nature to be adored, and the humanity is the nature adoring. Neuerthelesse though adoration bee directed simply to the godhead, yet is not the said godhead to be adored without the flesh. Athanasius saith thus: When wee are about to adore, we doe not separate the Word from the flesh. For who will say, stand apart from the flesh, that I may adore thee? Lastly, wee are to holde that the very manhood of Christ, is to be adored of man and angels with religious adoration due to the Sonne of God: in regard it is the manhood of the Word, and is receiued into the vinity of the second person. But how to be adored? not directly as the godhead: but in (b) oblique manner, by reason of the vinity with the godhead. When subiects civilly worships their Prince wearing a crowne, and bearing a scepter: in this worship they doe not separate the Prince from his crowne and scepter, but they honour the person directly, and the crowne & scepter onely by consequent, namely, as signes and testimonies of Princely Maieste. And so is the manhood adored in the person of the Sonne, yet not properly and simply as the godhead (for that were damnable idolatry) but so far forth as it is vinity to the said godhead of the Sonne: not as a garment, which may be put off and on, but inseparably as a part of the second person: so as the Mediator worshipped shall bee God-man or Man-god in the vinity of one person. And the Catholike Church hath accused them which hold, that the flesh of Christ is not to be adored; considering it is the flesh of God: & that in one and the same adoration Christ is to be adored with his flesh. Thomas the school-man saith, The adoration of Latria or diuine worship is not giuen to the humanity in respect of it selfe, but in respect of the diuinitie to which it is vinity, according to which Christ is not lesse than the Father. Here by the way, let it be obserued; seeing Latria diuine worship is giuen to the manhood of Christ, onely in respect of the personall vinity, that therefore the images of God and Christ, as crucifixes, are to be worshipped with Latria. For there is no vinity betweene them and God, but only in the blinde conceit of man. Furthermore, beside this religious oblique adoration, there is due to the manhood of Christ greater honour then to any creature beside. For euen as he is man, hee hath receiued a name about all names, at which all things bow in heauen and earth, Philip. 2. 10. to wit, the name of a Iudge and Governour of all things in heauen and earth, Math. 28. 18. in which respect we are commanded to kisse the Sonne, Psalm. 2. 12.

Againe, if the worship of God bee proper to him, and not to be giuen either to man or angel, it may be demanded, how Angels and Saints in heauen are to be worshipped? I answer, whether they appeare vnto vs or not, a certaine generall kinds of worship is to be giuen to them, and it consists of two parts; Commemoration, and Imitation. Commemoration is reuerend remembrance of their persons and vertues. Of this faith the virgin Mary in way of prophesie, All nations shall call me blessed, Luk. 1. 48. Of this commemoration we haue a notable example in the eleuenth chapter to the Hebrewes, where the worthy deeds and vertues of the Saints of the olde and new Testament are rehearsed. Here two caueats must be obserued: first, that we fixe not our mindes vpon the Saints, but lift them vp to God, by giuing thanks to him for his mercies vpon them, & for their vertuous example towards vs. Thus the Church of Galatia glorified God for Paul, Galat. 1. 23. Secondly, wee must not keepe a memory of Saints departed in hypocritie, as the Pharisees did, who builded the tombes of the Prophets, but despiſed their doctrine: & as the Papists doe, who magnifie the Apostles, and persecute their doctrine. The second part of their honour is Imitation. And that this imitation may be worthy praise and commendation, ſue caueats must be remembered. First, wee may not imitate actions done vpon singular cōmōdement; as for example; we may not imitate Abraham in offering his sonne Iſaac. Secondly, we may not imitate actions done by extraordinary and herōical instinct. Whē the disciples would haue commanded the fire to come down from heauen vpon the Samaritans, as Eliaz did vpon the captiues with their fisties. Christ said, Luk. 9. 54. To know not of what spirit ye are. Thirdly, we must not imitate personall actions, as Peters walking on the water. Fourthly, we must not imitate their miracles: For they serued onely for a time, to confirme the doctrine which they taught. Lastly, we must not follow them in their attire, gestures, infirmities of body or vices: for this is but apish imitation, specially to imitate their fashions: but wee must follow them in substantiall duties of the morall law. Paul saith, 1. Corinth. 11. 1. Fellow me, as I follow Christ: now he followed Christ in morall obedience to God. And thus in a generall sort are Saints to be honoured.

Againē, if Saints or angels certainly appeare vnto vs, wee may then worship them with bodily gesture, but it must bee remembered, that this gesture be altogether ciuill. For there is no other kinde of honour due vnto them, but that which appertaines to princes & great personages. But whē they appeare not to vs (as now in these last times) wee may not worship thē at al, either by gesture or speech.

The second propertie of the worship of God is, that it must be free and voluntary, without all constraint and compulsion; Pſal. 110. 3. Thy people shall come willingly in the day of assembly. If there bee a minde, God accepts a man according to that which he hath, and not according to that which he hath not, 2. Cor. 8. 12. This is the seruice of the kingdome of God: & earthly princes haue not the like. This seruice is not from nature, but from the spirit of grace: and therefore with Dauid we must pray to God to bee established and guided by his free or voluntary spirit.

The third propertie of the worship of God is, that it must bee ioynd with honesty and comelines, 1. Tim. 2. 1. Pray for kings & princes that ye may line in godlines & honesty. Add to your faith vertue, 2. Pet. 1. 5. Whereby honesty and vertue is meant, a graue, sober, decent, comely, modest behaviour towards all men, and before all men. For this ciuill and vertuous honesty is the ornament of diuine worship, and therefore the commō saying, must not be despiſed: That good conscience, and good manners must goe together. The Lord condemnes all such as doe but take his word in their mouth, when they haue to be performed in their liues.

Comelines is, when the worship of God is performed with meete and conuenient circumstances of time, place, person, gesture. Publike worship must bee performed by publike persons, in publike places, and it must haue publike and solemne gesture. Priuate worship is to be giuen to God by priuate persons, in priuate places, with priuate gestures & signes. Secret worships must secretly be yielded to God; and the signes thereof concealed from the eyes and hearing of men. Thus Nebuchadnezzar prayed in the presence of Affertus, Nebe. 2. 4. And Anna before Elie the priest, 1. Sam. 1. 13. Her lips moued onely, but her voice was not heard. Men therefore are deceiued that thinke the open Church the fittest place for the priuate & secret prayers which they are to make to God.

Vpon the former points of doctrine ioyntly considered, a definition of the worship of God may be framed thus: The worship or seruice of God, is when vpon the right knowledge of God, we freely giue him the honour that is proper to him, in our hearts, according to his owne will.

Worship thus defined, must bee considered as a distinct thing from that honour which is called (a) Veneration. For worship properly belongs to persons, and veneration to things which appertaine to persons. And veneration is to haue a reuerent estimation of any thing, or to preſerue and keepe it without hurt, as making store of it: and to vſe it reuerently if it be to be vſed. In this sense Augustine saith, we worship or reuerence the baptisme of Christ. And in the Canon law it is said, Let them diligently heare, and faithfully reuerence the words of God. And thus are all holy things of God worshipped, and all signes or remembrances of excellent things past. When Dauid fetched home the Arke and danced before it, hee gaue no worship to the Arke, but veneration.

The worship of God is two-fold, principall, or lesse principall. The Lord saith, Oſe. 6. 6. I will mercy, not sacrifice, that is, rather mercy then sacrifice. Where mercy is made the maine and principall worship of God, and sacrifice also is worship, but the necessary or lesse principall.

The principall worship of God, is a worke of God in vs, whereby wee are made conformable to him in holinesse and goodnesse: and whereby his image is renewed or restored to vs. That this conformitie with God is indeed the maine and proper worship of God, it appeares by these reasons: It is the commandment of God, Luk. 6. 36. Be mercifull as your heavenly Father is mercifull: and again, Leu. 11. 24. Sanctifie your selves, and be ye holy, for I am holy. Now the intent of these commandments is to set downe the maine worship of God, as S. James testifieth, Iam. 1. 17. Pure religion & undefiled before God, is to visit the fatherlesse & widowes in their aduersitie, and to keepe himselfe vnspotted of the world. Againē Christ saith, Ioh. 4. 24. The true worshippers worship God in spirit and truth. Where by Spirit, is to bee vnderstood, not onely the heart, but also the spirituall renewed motions thereof: or as S. Paul saith, 2. Tim. 1. 5. Love out of a pure heart, good conscience, and faith vnfeined. And this appeares by the opposition: for Christ here opposeth Spirit, to the ceremoniall worship of the Iewes, which was carnall, vpon a carnall commandement (as the holy Ghost speaketh) because it stood in outward and bodily rites & actions, which had no power to sanctifie. And by truth, is meant not sincerity, but all such duties of ours, as were figured by Iewish types and ceremonies, namely and specially our mortification, viuification, and such like. Paul saith notably, Rom. 14. 18. Hee that seruet God in theſe things, that is, right consciences, peace of conscience, and ioy in the holy Ghost, is acceptable to God. And againe he saith, chap. 12. 1. that our reasonable or spiritual seruice of God, is to dedicate our selues in body and soule to his honour. Euerie man talks of the seruice of God: but few there be that thinke of this seruice which stands in the conforming of our selues to the image of God, which is in iustice and holinesse.

This principall worship hath two properties. The first is Eternitie: for it begins in this life, and is perfected in the life to come. Because it is that eueraſtling worship, wherwith Angels and Saints shall for euer worship God in heauen. And herein it differs from ceremonies and sacraments, which haue an end in this life. The second is, that it pleaseth God of it selfe, and that without sacraments, or ceremonies: so there be no contempt of them: as it was in theſe vpon the croſſe. And the reason is plaine. God is not only a spirit or spiritual substance, but he is euery way infinite and hath sufficiency of all perfection in himselfe. And therefore he takes no delight in any good thing that the creature can communicate to him: but his delight is in the communication of his owne goodnes to vs, and in all such duties whereby we conforme our selues to him & magnifie his goodnes. Thus Paul saith, Ad. 17. 25. That God needs nothing: and therefore he is not worshipped with any thing made by the hands of man. And the Lord saith by the Pſal. 50. 8. 14. that he doth not principally respect our gifts and our sacrifices: because all things are his, but he respects praise and thanksgiving.

The principall worship of God hath two parts: one is to yield subiection to him, the other to draw neere to him, and to cleaue vnto him. By the first we put adifference betwene our selues and God, by reason of the greatnes of his maiesty. By the other we make our selues one with him as with the fountain of goodnes.

Subiection to God is, when we put away, & as it were banish from our selues our own reason & will, and make the wisdom of God to be our wisdom, & his wil to be our wil, euen then when it is against our will: by causing our will to be subiect to his wil, & to depend vpon it. This will of God, to which we must be subiect, is reuealed, partly by the written word, in commandments, promises, threats; and partly by the euent of any thing: as when a man is sicke, we know by the euent in that he is sicke, it is the will of God he should be sicke: nothing fails out without the will of the heavenly Father. If it be alledged, that subiection is due vnto men: I answer, that the subiection due to God is absolute: first, because it is to be giuen by the whole man in body and soule, and confidence: secondly, because it is to be yielded to him in all things without exception, whereas subiection to men must alwaies be in the Lord.

In subiection there be two things. The first is, the foundation thereof, & that is, a knowledge, and faith, that God is our soveraigne Lord and King, and our Iudge of infinite iustice, able to saue and to destroy body & soule. The second is, vpon this knowledge a Recognition of our selues to the pleasure of God. And that is againe in two things: wē we suffer him to rule vs by his word: and when we suffer him to dispose of our bodies and soules, and all things that belong vnto vs, as shall make for his glory and our good. This is the right subiection and right seruice of God. Take an example in Dauid, when he fled out of his kingdome being pursued by his sonne Achishai. Let him say, that I please him not, behold, here I am, let him doe vnto me as shall seeme good in his own eyes, 2. Sam. 15. 26.

Subiection to God is practised by three vertues, faith, adoration, feare. Faith is a subiection to God is practised by three vertues, faith, adoration, feare. Faith is a subiection to God, that bids vs beleue him, and trust him in his word. Of this faith I haue spoken at large, when I shewed how we should liue by faith. Only one thing I adde, that faith is the finglee of which our Saviour speaketh, Mat. 6. 22. which giueth light of directiō to all the actions of our hearts and liues. Adoration is, when we subiect our selues to the greatnes and maiesty of God. In it be two actions: the exaltation of God to the highest degree: and the abasing of our selues to the lowest degree: Thus Abraham in prayer calls God his Lord, and himselfe dust and ashes, Gen. 18. 27. Thus Daniel in prayer giues all glory to God, to himselfe and the people, Shema and confusion of face. Thus the woman of Canaan adores Christ by calling him Lord; and by acknowledging her selfe to be but a dogge.

Pſal. 50. 8. 14.

Dan. 9. 7. 8.

Fear is a subiection to all the threatnings and commandements of God. In feare which is the worship of God, there are two things, the foundation and the propertie. The foundation is the knowledge of three things. The first is knowledge of the precepts of God, Deut. 4. 10. I will cause them to heare my words, that they may learne to feare me. The second is, knowledge of his threatnings and iudgements. The righteous (saith David, Psal. 52. 6.) shall see this, that is, the destruction of Doeg, and feare.

The third is, the knowledge & consideration of the presence of God. Carnelius is said to be a man fearing God: and the holy Ghost hath noted the ground of his feare in his owne words: We are here, (saith he, Act. 10. 2. 33.) in the presence of God, to heare all things which God hath commanded thee. The propertie of true feare is, to make vs in our hearts to stand in awe of God, and to feare, hate, and eschew the offence of God. Pro 8. 13. The feare of God is to hate enill, pride, arrogancie, & the enill way. Exod. 20. 20. His feare must be before you that ye sin not. If it be demanded, why we are to feare the offence of God; I answer, it is first of all to be feared for it selfe, because it is the offence of God; though there should no punishment issue, considering it is the greatest euill that can befall the creature, to offend the Creator. And in the second place it is feared for punishment. And that feare in which nothing is feared but punishment, is no worship of God.

Thus we see what true subiection to God is: now we are to be exhorted euermore to yeeld this subiection vnto him. For first it is Gods commandement so to do, Mat. 11. 26. Take my yoke vpon you, learne of me that I am meeke & lowly, and ye shall finde rest to your soules. Now this yoke is subiection to God in his precepts, and in his corrections. Secondly, subiection is a thing of great excellency. That we are subiect to God, it is not for his benefit, but ours. To be in this subiection, is to be in perfect liberty, & to haue the kingdom of God within vs. Thirdly, subiection is a matter of absolute necessity. The diuels & damned spirits, will they nil, they must yeeld a subiection, & there is no way to auoid it. Let vs therefore willingly subiect our selues to God. Fourthly, to deny subiection, or to grudge therat, is the propertie of a wicked man: Who is the Almighty, saith the wicked man, that we should serue or be subiect to him? Job 21. 15. Lastly, the punishment of them that will not be subiect, must be considered. Theisme enemies, saith the Sonne of God, Luk. 19. 29. that without that I should reigne ouer them, bring them hither and flay them before me. And contrariwise subiection brings rest to our soules.

The second part of the principall worship of God, is to cleaue vnto him: and that is to be knit vnto him in heart without purpose of any separation. Of this we haue commandements:

Serue the Lord thy God, & cleaue vnto him. Likewise a promise: Draw meere vnto God, & he will draw meere vnto you. Again, The Lord is with you while ye be with him: if ye seeke him, he will be seene of you: if ye forsake him, he will forsake you.

Furthermore we cleaue vnto God by two vertues, Loue and Confidence. In Loue I consider two things; the foundation, and the properties. The foundation is the knowledge of the loue & mercie of God towards vs. 1. Joh. 4. 19. We loue him because he loued vs first. Psal. 116. 1. I loue the Lord because he hath heard my prayer. And Psalm. 31. 23. Lone the Lord all ye Saints, because he sauerh them that be faithfull.

The properties of loue are two. The first is, to maintain an heavenly fellowship and communion with God and Christ. For the nature of loue is to unite it selfe as much as may be, to the thing loued. Again, in the want of this fellowship, Loue makes vs desire & seek it according to Gods will about all things in the world. The spouse of Christ, that is, the Church, or euerie Christian soule faith of Christ, Cant. 2. 2. 5. I greatly desire to sit vnder his shadow, and I mislike of leuents at is, I faint because I do want that fellowship with Christ my head which I desire. I add this clause [according to his will] for two causes. The first, because true loue seeks fellowship with God only, in such meanes as he hath appointed to communicate himselfe vnto vs, as the word preached, prayer, sacraments, and not in visions, dreames, reuelations. The second is, because our loue, if it be without hypocrisy, doth communicate it selfe vnto God in things in which he will be loued of vs; as namely, in the person of our neighbour, & specially of the poore. For God will haue our neighbor, in respect of loue, to be in his room & head: and in the loue of our neighbor, with whom we conuerse, will he be loued of vs. Hence it is that Paul saith, Gal. 5. 13. That the loue of our neighbour is the fulfilling of the whole law.

The second property of loue is, to stirre our minds to a doing and fulfilling of the will of God. The nature of loue is to make vs accomplish the mind and will of him whom we loue. Christ saith, Joh. 14. 21. He that hath my commandments, and doth them, he that loueth me. And S. John, 1. Joh. 5. 3. This is the loue of God, that we keepe his commandments.

The second vertue whereby we cleaue vnto God, is Confidence: the foundation whereof is knowledge of the wisdom, goodness, iustice, and mercy of God, specially of his power and will in performing his promises. This we see in Abraham, who trusted God because hee was perswaded, as he had promised, so he was able to performe. The property of confidence is, to cause vs to rest and depend vpon the bare and naked promise of God without meanes, and against meanes, and to quiet and pacifie our minds in the will of GOD when it is come to passe. Thus Abraham depended vpon God for issue, when hee was aged, and Sara barren, and when hee put the knife to the throat of his onely sonne Isaac. Iehosaphat, when the great army of the Ammonites and Moabites came against him, said in a liuely confidence, Lord we know not what to doe, but our eyes are toward thee. 2. Chron. 20. 12. And thus in time of danger and distresse, to rest our selues on the word of God, when we see neither helpe nor comfort, and hauing nothing to stay our selues on, but the bare testimony of God, is the right honouring and seruing of God.

Deut. 10. 12. I am 4. 8. 2. Chron. 15. 2.

Besides the heads and points of the worship of God before described generally, there is a certaine mixed and compounded worship of God, when men in one and the same act both yeeld subiection and cleaue vnto God. And that is done by foure things: Humilitie, Patience, Prayer, and Thanksgiuing.

Humilitie is, when in our hearts we humble our selues before God. Of this the Prophet saith, Mich. 6. 8. He will shew thee, O man, what is good, and what the Lord requireth of thee; to doe iustice, to loue mercie, and to humble thy life, in walking before God. Of this we haue a notable example in Manasse, who in tribulation prayed vnto God, and humbled himselfe exceedingly before the God of his fathers, and was heard & deliuered. 2. Chron. 33. 12. In true humilitie there be two things; the first, is the glorifying and exalting of God; when we doe wholly giue and ascribe vnto God, whatsoever we are, haue, or can doe that is truly good. The second is, Pouerie of our spirits, which shewes it selfe in three actions. The first is, Annihilation (as some call it) and that is, when we in our hearts acknowledge, that we are nothing in our selues, and of our selues, and that we do nothing that is truly good: nay, that we are most vile and wretched sinners, deserving nothing but euermalting perdition. The second is Despaire: not the despaire of the damned, but a good despaire, when we are vntirely out of all hope of saluation, in respect of our owne strength, vertues, workes, or any thing that we can possibly doe. The third action is, vpon the sense of our spirituall pouertie, to goe out of our selues as beggars out of their houses, and to flie to the throne of grace, and to plead nothing but mercie: yea meere mercie in all times both in life and death.

Thus we see what humilitie is, and how we are to humble our selues before God. Now I would perswade all men that desire truly to serue God, to take out the lesson which our Saviour Christ teacheth, Mat. 11. 29. Learn to be meeke and humble, and learne of me. And there be many weighty reasons to moue vs to condescend to this counsell. First, humilitie is the way to obtaine heavenly wisdom. Psa. 25. 9. He teacheth the humble his way. Secondly, it maketh a blessed & happie alteration of our liues wher it takes place in the heart. For it restrains hatreds, griefes and forrowes, that commonly arise in the mindes of all men, because others haue better gifts and callings then they haue. When Ishma was grieved that Eldad and Me-

had prophesied in the campe, humilitie made Moses to say, Numb. 11. 29. Enuieist thou for my conquest? would God that all Gods people were prophets. It was no griefe, but a ioy to Iob, Baptist, that Christ increased, and he decreased, Iob. 3. 30. Again, humilitie makes vs not to come and condemne others, but to thinke better of others then our selues: not to fret and chafe, but to be content, that others haue better gifts then we our better places, or callings: to giue honour cheerfully to all whom any degree or measure of honour belongs: to be content with our own gifts, be they more, be they lesse, and to be content with our own estate & condition, & to range our selues within the compass of our own callings, & not to seek to be exalted, and to be content to be dispised, when we see our selues despised, because we know our selues worthy of contempt. Thirdly, humilitie is as it were an estate or condition in which we obtaine the grace of God, & haue fellowship with him. Luk. 1. 53. He resisteth the proud & giveth grace to the humble. Esa. 57. 15. I dwell with him that is of a contrite & humble spirit, to reuine the spirit of the humble, & to giue life to them that are of a contrite heart. Again, 66. 2. To him will I look that is poore, and of a contrite spirit, & trembleth at my words. Lastly, humilitie is the way to eternall life. Christ humbled himselfe; and therefore was he exalted of his Father. They that would enter into the kingdom of heauen must be conuerted, and become as little children in respect of humilitie. Wherefore let vs giue our selues now & euermore to serue our God in humbling our spirits before his Maiestie. This is the right seruing of God: hee respects not the seruice of the multitude, which stands onely in the performance of certaine ceremonies, and is nothing but lip-labour.

In patience we must consider first of all the ground, and that is faith and hope. By faith I vnderstand that perswasion, whereby we are assured that God is iust in his corrections: wise, imposing them for good ends: and mercifull, not dealing with vs according to our deserts. S. Paul saith, Rom. 5. 3. that afflictions bring forth patience, not properly of themselves, but because they are ioyned with the sense & apprehension of the loue of God shed abroad in their hearts: who are afflicted, v. 5. Saint James saith, Jame. 1. 5. the trial of your faith bringeth forth patience; that is, faith exercised by afflictions, and proued to be true faith, causeth patience. Hope likewise is the ground of patience: because while it is begun by faith, it is continued and preferred by hope: which makes vs in our afflictions to looke for some ease, or end, or for euermalting life. And therefore patience is called the patience of hope, 1. Thess. 1. 3. The propertie of patience is to moue vs quietly and willingly to yeeld subiection to the hand of God in all our afflictions to the very death: & to moderate our afflictions by the consideration of the will & pleasure of God. David saith, Psal. 4. 4.

Eph. 1. 8. Mat. 18. 3.

Examine your selues vpon your bed, and bee still: Again, 37. 7. be silent to Iehouah. Now this is the silent of the heart, whereby without grudging, repining, or rebelling, men subiect their wills, and resigne themselves to the wil of God in their aduerities, and are well content therewith. When Gods hand was heauie on Job, he worshipped God, and gaue thanks, saying, Job 1. 21. 10. The Lord hath giuen, the Lord hath taken away, blessed be the name of the Lord: anouncing also that we must be content to receive euill things of the Lord as well as good things. Christ our Saviour was the mirror of all patience; who in his agony said, Mat. 26. 39. Father, let this cup passe from me: yet not my will, but thy will be done: againe he saith, verf. 53. he could pray to his Father, and he would giue him twelve legions of Angels to deliuer him, but hee would not because his Fathers will must be fulfilled. And this is right patience. The diuell and his angels yeeld subiection to God in their punishments, not feely vpon consideration of the wil of God, but by constraint, because they can no otherwise choose. The childe of God in his afflictions yeelds himselfe to the pleasure of God, and will not seeke to be free from them, when he knows it to be the wil of God that he must endure them. As Paul saith, Phil. 4. 12. I haue learned, in whatsoeuer state I am, therewith to be content. And this practise of patience, is the true seruice of God: and therefore is the promise made, that if wee subiect our selues to afflictions, God offereth himselfe vnto vs as to children, Heb. 12. 7.

In the prayer of the heart, distinguished from vocall prayer, I consider two things. The first is the rule thereof, and that is the wil of God: according to which we must aske whatsoever we aske. And therefore for euery petition we direct vnto God, we must haue either commandement, or promise, or both. Secondly, prayer contains in it a double action of the heart. The first is, from touched and feeling hearts to present vnto God the honest desires, and the godly sorrows thereof. For these are before God liuely & real requests. Dauid saith Psal. 10. 17. The Lord heareth the desires of the poore. And Paul, Rom. 8. 26. The spirit maketh request for vs with groanes that cannot be uttered. By honest desires, I vnderstand the desire that we may glorifie the name of God, the desire that his kingdom may be erected in our hearts, the desire of obedience to his will, the desire that we may depend on his providence for the things of this life, the desire of mercy and forgiveness, & the desire of strength, & the presence of God in temptations. By godly sorrow, I mean griefe conceiued for want of the grace & blessings of God before named. The second action of the heart in prayer, is by faith to depend on God, and to put o trust in him for the accomplishment of our honest desires. For we must aske in faith and waite not, 1. am. 1. 7. By means of these two actions, prayer is (as the pouring out of the soule before God: and the (b) seeking of God, that is, of his fauour, providence, presence; and our (c) lying vnto him for refuge.

In thanksgiving vnto God, there bee two things. The first is memorie, meditation, and serious acknowledgement of the blessings of God bestowed vpon vs, specially of our redemption by Christ. The second is in way of thankfulness to God, to dedicate and consecrate our bodies and soules and all we haue to diuine vles, that is, to the honour and seruice of God. This thing was figured in the sacrifices of the old law, which were first set before the altar, and so presented vnto God, and then afterward were offered vnto him. This dedication is made, when in the intention of our minds, and purpose of our hearts, and in all our affections, we giue vp and set our selues apart to the seruice of God; and this was first done in our Baptisme, and is continually renewed in the Lords Supper.

Thus haue I shewd the heads of the maine and principall worship of God. Now we are to bee admonished to present vnto God the worship of our spirits, in our faith, feare, loue, confidence, humilitie, patience, thankfulness of heart. For this cause we must labour to be renewed in the spirit of our minds. It is neither circumcision nor vncircumcision, as Paul saith; it is neither Baptisme, nor the Lords Supper: it is neither preaching nor hearing that auaileth, nor the profession of the Gospel, but the new creation in a pure heart, good conscience, and faith vnfeined, that is the spiritual seruice of God.

Thus much of the principall worshippes of God. The lesse principall is the outward worship of God, standing in sundry exercises of godlinesse. Of outward worship two things must generally be considered. The first, though it bee the lesse principall, yet it is altogether necessary. Wee are commanded to loue God with all our strengths: and therefore loue must not only be conceiued in minde, but also testified in the actions of the body. God created as well the body as the soule: Christ redeemed both body and soule: therefore saith Paul 1. Cor. 6. 20. Glorifie God in your body and in your spirit. Christ is an head to the whole man, as well in respect of body as soule. For this cause not only soule, but also body must stand in subiection to Christ. Paul saith, Rom. 10. 20. With the heart we beleene to righteousnes, and with the mouth we make confession to saluation.

The worship of the body is called Adoration, which stands in the bowing of the knee, the bending or prostrating of the body, the lifting vp of hands or eyes. Here it may be demanded, whether it may be giuen to any other thing then God, and how farre forth. I answer thus: The gesture of adoration is properly a signification of reuerence and subiection. And therefore adoration may be yeelded to them to whom reuerence, humiliation, obedience, or subiection is due. Now Gods pleasure is, that men shall be subiect, first of all to himselfe, and secondly, to some of the creatures: but in a diuerse kind of subiection. The subiection which is due to God, is absolute, and for himselfe, first, in regard he is soueraigne Lord of our bodies, and soules, and consciences: secondly, in regard of the infinite excellency of his Diuine attributes, especially that hee is the Author and giuer of all good things; that he heares and helps men euery where calling vpon him in the secrets of their hearts. And the adoration that is done euen for the acknowledgement and signification of these things, is the adoration that is proper to God, and is therefore called diuine or religious adoration. And of it Christ saith, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God: & him only shalt thou serue. The Angels refused this adoration, when it was giuen them. Daniel chose rather to be cast to the den of the Lyons, then to giue this kind of worship to Darius; or at the least, to offer an occasion to mento suspect the giuing of it.

Subiection likewise is due to the creatures that are set ouer vs, or about vs, by God: either by reason of greater gifts bestowed on them, or by reason of the office of gouernment which they beare. And this subiection is not absolute, but in part according to Gods will, and for God: that is, to signifie the reuerent regard we beare to the gifts of God, and the order which he hath set among men. And the gesture of adoration done to acknowledge and signifie these things, is called Ciuill Adoration. And according as the degrees of dignity, by reason of diuersity of gifts and offices are among men, so are the degrees of honour, and the signes of honour or reuerence in gesture, whereof the chiefe is the prostrating of the body. Vpon this ground it appears to bee the wil of God, that man should yeeld subiection, and consequently adoration, onely to creatures that are more excellent and worthy then himselfe. Therefore it is not the wil of God, that man shall be subiect to unreasonable creatures, and giue to them either ciuill or religious adoration, much lesse to Images. Secondly, God will not that we adore the wicked spirits being his enemies, adidged to eternall paines, but that we hold them accursed, as God himselfe doth. Thirdly, good Angels, considering they excell both men in nature and gifts, were rightly honoured of the Patriarks when they appeared: but seeing they appeared not now, as they were wont heretofore, no adoration at all is to be giuen them. Lastly, ciuill or politicke adoration, or the bending of the body, without sinne or iniurie to God, is giuen to men that be in office, or excell in gifts: and oftentimes is due by the ordinance of God, and cannot without sinne be omitted. Thus Abraham honoured the Hittites. Joseph his brethren, Mephibosheth Dauid, and Paul saith, Honour to whom honour belongeth. Of ciuill adoration two cautes must be remembered: one, that it must not exceede

the custome of the Countrey, where it is performed: the other, it must bee done as to a meere creature, though it be a Prince. If it exceede in either of these, it inclines to religious worship. Cornelius worshipped not Peter as though he had bene a God by nature, for he knew him to be a man: but he worshipped him as one that was by extraordinary grace exalted above the condition of men and Angels, as though hee had bene more then a man, though not so much as God himselfe: and the adoration that is done vnto him to signifie and acknowledge this condition of his, is disallowed of Peter himselfe. The worship that is done to the Pope, is ciuill adoration, inclining to religious honour: because the kissing of the foot is not giuen to any man or prince vpon earth besides: and it is giuen to him as hee is vicar of Christ, hauing power to make lawes binding conscience, and to forgiue finnes.

The second point is, that the outward worship doth not please God of it selfe, but by means of the inward before described. Again, it is spiritual, not by it selfe, because it stands in bodily actions; but by reason of the inward worship, whence it proceeds, & whereof it is a signe. Moreover, being seuered from inward worship, it is worship in shew, and not worship in truth. If the eye be euill, the whole body is darke. Christ bids the Pharisees to wash the inside of the cup, & platter, and then all shall be cleane. To the vncleane their very minde and conscience, and all things else are vncleane.

The outward worshippes of God, is either generally to all, or speciall to some. Worship common to all, is either Church-seruice, or household-seruice. Church-seruice is that which is performed publicly in the Congregation of the people of God. The ground of this worshippes is, that we separate, not onely from idols, but also ioyne our selues to the true Church and people of God. For the Church of God vpon earth is the Kingdom of Heauen, in which righteousefnesse, peace of conscience, and ioy in the holy Ghost, with all blessings else, are to be found: and out of it is nothing to bee found but shame and confusion. Again, the Church of God vpon earth is as it were the suburbs of the citie of God, and the gate of heauen: and therefore entrance must be made into heauen, in and by the Church. Hence it is that Luke saith: And the Lord added to the Church from day to day, such as should be saved. When Isaiah erected golden Calues in Dan and Bethel, Priests and Leuites, and such as set their hearts to seeke the Lord, ioynd themselves with Iuda and Ierusalem. And thus also must we doe so oft as we liue among idolaters and superstitious persons.

Church-seruice stands in foure things, the doctrine of the Apostles (as Luke calleth it) fellowship, breaking of bread, & prayer. By doctrine I vnderstand the hearing of Apostolical doctrine preached, or the frequenting of sermons. Of it two things are to be taught, first the necessity, and then the manner of hearing. The necessity of this duty appears by sundry reasons. First of all, the hearing of the word of God preached by the Ministerie of man, is an ordinance of God. The Israelites at Mount Sinai say unto Moses, Speak thou unto vs, and we will heare thee: but not the Lord speake unto vs, lest we die. Exod. 20. 16. To this request of theirs, the Lord yields first his approbation, They have spoken well: and then his promise; I will raise them up a Prophet from among their brethren like unto thee, and I will put my words in his mouth, and he shall speake unto them all that I shall command him. Indeed these words are spoken directly & principally of Christ, yet other Prophets and teachers must together with him bee understood: because so much was the request of the Iewes. And if it bee not so, I see not the reason of adding the words following, Deut. 18. 20. The Prophet which shall presume to speake a word in my name, which I have not commanded, or to teach in the name of other gods, shall die. Because these things are not incident to Christ. Thus then (as I take it) the hearing & preaching of the word by man, was ordained & founded by God himselfe in Mount Sinai. This ordinance Christ renewed, when he said, The Scribes and Pharisees sit in Moses chaire, Heare them. And that this ordinance must continue to the end of the world, the Prophet Isai teacheth, In the last daies the mountaine of the house of the Lord shall be prepared in the top of the mountaines: & many people shall goe and say: Come let vs goe up to the mountaine of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob: and he will teach vs his waies, and we will walke in his pathes. Secondly, the preaching and hearing of the word of God is a common and usually means of God to begin and confirme faith and all graces of God that depend on faith, and consequently to worke our saluation. Rom. 1. 16. The Gospell is the power of God to saluation to all that beleue, verf. 11. from faith to faith. And cap. 10. v. 14. How shall they call on him, in whom they haue not beleuened? and how shall they beleue in him of whom they haue not heard? and how shall they heare without a preacher? 1. Cor. 1. 21. It hath pleased God by the foolishnesse of preaching to saue them that beleue. That we may be faued, we must haue a speciall faith: speciall faith requires a speciall word: and the written word beinge otherwise general, is made speciall by application: and this application is effectuall made by the ministerie of the word, in which men called thereto, apply particularly to the consciences of their hearts, the commandements and the promises of God, & that in the name of God. By this it appeares of what weight & moment this ordinance of God is. Thirdly, vntill a man be borne anew by the holy Ghost, he cannot enter into the kingdome of heauen: and the hearing of the word preached is the means of the new birth. 2 Cor. 4. 15. In Christ Iesus I haue begotten you through the Gospell. Gal. 4. 16. My little children, of whom I

travell in birth againe, vntill Christ be formed in you. And hereupon the word of God is called the immortall seede. The hearing therefore of the word is not (as many thinke) a matter of indifference. Fourthly, the hearing of the word is a note of seruice & subiection to God. Iob. 8. 47. He that is of God heareth Gods word. And 10. 27. My sheepe heare my voice and follow me. Fifthly, the want of the preaching and hearing of the word, is one of the great curses of God vpon earth. Salomon saith, Prou. 29. 18. Where vision faileth, the people are made naked. The greatest famine of all, faith the Prophet Amos, is the famine of hearing the word of God. Of. 9. 7. The daies of visitation are come, the daies of recompence are come, Israel shall know it: but why? mark what follows: The Prophet is a fool: the man of the spirit is mad, for the multitude of their iniquities. Sixtly, the preaching of the word, is a meane to beate downe the kingdome of the diuell, and it is the key of the kingdome of heauen. When the disciples returned from preaching in Iudea: Christ saith that he saw Sathan fall downe for heauen like lightning. And promising to Peter authority to dispense the word, he saith; I will giue thee the keys of the kingdome of heauen. Lastly, it is the old ancient practise of the people of God to frequent and heare sermons. When the Shunammite craued leave of her husband to goe to the Prophet, he said, Wherefore wilt thou goe to day? it is neither new Moone nor Sabbath day. Hence it appeares to be the ancient practise, to resort to the prophets vpon Sabbath and other dayes. And the Prophet Isai foretels what shall be the practise of men in the new Testament, who shall say, Come, let vs goe up to the mountaine of the Lord, for he will teach vs his waies, and we will walke in his statutes.

To put the matter out of question, I will answer the principall objections that are made against this ordinance of God: and they are made either by the heretickes called Enthusiastes, or by the common multitude. The Enthusiastes alledge on this manner. First, they say: No creature can worke faith, and regenerate vs: the word preached is but a creature: for it is no more but a found confisting of letters and syllables: and the vertue of it can doe no more but signifie to vs the will of God. I answer thus: The word preached and the right vse of it must be distinguished. And the right vse of it is, when we vnderstand it, meditate thereon, endeavour to beleue and to obey it. Now the word preached is of force, not simply, because it is preached and vttered, and the found thereof comes to our eares; but because when it is preached, wee heare it by the blessing of God, which docible, attentue, and tractable hearts. And the word, when it is rightly vied, is no principall cause of faith and regeneration, but only an instrument. And it is not an instrument, because it hath vertue init to worke faith, and to regenerate, as a medicine hath to heale the body (for then it should be a naturall instrument) but it is an instrument in this respect, because when we heare and meditate on the word, God withall giues his spirit to worke that in vs which the Word signifieth and testifieth, and to make vs not onely to heare with our bodily eares, but also with the eares of our hearts, by yecding subiection. The Lord saith, Isa. 59. 21. My spirit that is vpon thee, and my words which I haue put in thy mouth, shall not depart out of thy mouth. Now by reason of this coniunction betwene the word and the spirit, in that the word by the senses comes to the minde that which the spirit works in the heart: the preaching of the word is said to be an instrument of grace, and no otherswife. Secondly it is objected, that the preaching of the word ferues for the conuersion of the elect: and that no man knowes who be elect: whereupon they say, that all exhortations to repentance are in vaine. I answer two things: the first, that the minister of the word in preaching, is in the iudgement of charitie to presume that all his hearers be elect, leaning all ferer iudgement to God. Thus Paul in his Epistles calls the Ephesians, Philippians, Thessalonians, &c. elect. The second is, that the word preached ferues indeed: principally for the calling and conuersion of the elect, but not onely. For it ferues also for the hardening of obdurate sinners, and for the taking of all excuse from them that are not elect. The Lord saith to the prophet Isai, Isa. 6. 9. 10. Goe & say to this people, ye shall heare indeed, but ye shall not vnderstand, make the heart of this people fat, make their eares beate, and shut their eyes, lest they see with their eyes, and heare with their eares, and vnderstand with their hearts & conuert, & be heale them. And we may not maruel at this, that the word should be the means of the conuersion of some, and an occasion of hardening others. For they which are hardened deserue to be hardened, and God will haue mercy on whom he will haue mercie. Thirdly, it is objected, that they which are ordained to saluation, shall be faued, whether they heare the word preached, or no: and consequently that there is no such need of hearing. I answer, it is false which is said. They which are ordained to life euertlasting cannot but heare the word. They which are ordained to the end, are likewise ordained to the means which tend to that end. Whom God hath predestinate, them he hath called. And as many as be ordained to euertlasting life, shall beleue in Christ. In the counsell of God, the ordination of the means is as certain as the ordination of the end. The fourth obiection is this. The hearing of the word is vnpromittable without the spirit of God, which is not giuen to all: therefore we must waite till we receiue the spirit: and then afterward heare. By the like reason we might refuse meate, drinke, apparell, and all meanes that serue to preferue life. For without the blessing of God, they are all vnpromittable, and therefore according to this wicked counsell we should first of all waite till we feele the blessing of God in our bodies: and then afterward should we feele the means. And this were to commit murder. For wee must vse the means first, and then in the means shall wee finde the blessing of God. Lastly, it is objected, that the ministers of the new Testament, are not ministers of the letter, that is, (as they say), of the written and vttered word. I answer, that by the letter we must vnderstand the bare law without the Gospell; and it is so called, because it was written by the finger of God in tables of stone.

Obiections of the common people are many. First, say some, if Christ himselife would preach, or an Angell from heauen, we would heare; but seeing men like to our felars speake vnto vs, we care not so much for hearing. First of all, I answer, it is the ordinance of God that men should speake in his name, or stead, and that their doctrine should be accepted, as if the Lord himselife did speake. Luk. 10. 16. He that heareth vs, heareth me: he that despiseth vs, despiseth me. 2. Cor. 5. 20. Wee are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you through vs, we pray you in Christs stead, that ye be reconciled to God. Paul commends the Thessalonians, that they receiued his doctrine, not as the word of man, but as the word of God: and hee adds, that it was founded. Again, it is the will of God, that the treasure of his word, should be deliuered to vs in earthen vessels, that all glorie might be giuen to him. Lastly, it was the mind of some in Corinth, that they would heare none but Christ: and for this Paul condemnes them. Secondly, there are others that say, they can reade the Bible in their houses: and that there be the most perfect sermons of Christ and the Apostles: and hereupon they say, that they can as well serue God at home, as they which heare all the sermons in the world. To this I answer, first, that the sermons of Christ though they bee most perfect in themselves, yet are they not so profitable vnto vs, till they bee explained and applied to our consciences in the ministerie of the word: as a loafe of the finest bread is vsit for nourishment till it be quartered and shued out vnto vs. Secondly, the publike preaching of the word is a part of the publike seruice of God: as Paul testifieth saying, Rom. 1. 9. Whom I serue in my spirit in the Gospell of his Sonne. Therefore men may not at their pleasure lie lolling at home, but they must ioyne themselves to the congregation, and serue God in the Gospell of his Sonne. Thirdly, there be others that say, or at the least thinke, that they haue knowledge enough: and therefore neede not heare and frequent sermons. But such must vnderstand, that they know but in part: that the ministerie of the word ferues to build vs up till we become perfect men in Christ; and that is not till after this life: that the preaching of the word ferues to teach not only knowledge, but also practise of our knowledges & in this latter respect all men must be hearers. Fourthly, some alludge, that sermons be sometime erroneous, & consequently occasion of errors; and that there is no such thing, that comes by readings: therefore say they, they will content themselves with reading. To this Paul answers, 1. Theff. 5. 20. Despise not prophesie. And whereas some might object, that Prophets teach falsehood oftentimes, he adds further in way of answer, Verf. 21. Proue all things, hold that which is good. Again, if by reason of the defects of teachers, preaching should be abolished, then reading both publicly and privately, though it bee an ordinance of God, should much more bee abolished: For in reading there is sometimes misreading, sometimes no understanding, sometimes mis-understanding, sometimes mis-applying of the word read; and all these defects are helped by preaching. Fifthly, some say, that if they should frequent sermons, they should bee accounted precise, and be mocked for their labour. But we must know, that whosoever is ashamed of Christ & of his word, the heavenly Father will be ashamed of him in the day of iudgement. It was Nicodemus fault, not that hee came to Christ, but that he came to him by night, being ashamed openly to professe himselfe to be a Disciple. Again, others say, that there is no good that comes by sermons; because they say, there is none worse then they that are common hearers of sermons. I answer, this badnes is not the fault either of preaching or hearing: it is onely the fault of the persons that heare. There are none worse then such as be common frequenters of tauerne; and yet the buying, selling, and drinking of wine is not vnlawfull. Such as were hearers of the sermons of our Saviour Christ, were of foure sorts; three of them bad, and one onely good. Lastly, some say, they will provide for their bodies, and leaue their soules to God. But the commandement of Christ is, Matth. 6. 33. Seeke first of all the kingdom of God, and his righteousness. By this which hath bin said, it appears, that wee are all bound in conscience to frequent sermons so oft as liberty, ability, and opportunitie serues; and that they greatly offend God, that seldome or neuer frequent the congregation, but giue themselves libertie for hearing to do as they list; and such ought to bee reformed by the authority of the Magistrate.

Thus much of the necessity of hearing: now follows the manner of hearing: In the right hearing of the word, two things are required. The first, that we yeeld our selues in subiection to the word we heare: the second that we fix our hearts vpon it. For God dealeth with vs in and by his word. And therefore the honour we doe to God, must be done with reuerence and respect to his word. Subiection to God must be yeelded in giuing subiection to his word: and our cleauing vnto God must be by fixing our hearts vpon his word. Subiection to the word is prescribed when Paul saith, Col. 3. 16. Let the word of God dwell in you plentifully. Now it dwells in vs, when we keepe in memory, and withall giue vnto it a foueraignty, and superiority ouer vs, suffering our selues to be ruled by it. Subiection is yeelded by faith, feare, humility.

Faith, is to giue credence to the whole word of God when we heare it, whether that which we heare be promise, commandment, or threat. For this Paul commendeth the Theffalians, that they received the word with much assurance. Without this faith, the word is but a dead letter. When the old Hebreues had the word, it was not profitable vnto them, Heb. 4. 2. because it was not mixed with faith.

Faithlikewise in respect of the word which we heare, is required. It is the right feare of God, to feare God in his word, and to auoide the breach of it. The Prophet Isai saith, the Lord hath respect to them that are of a contrite heart, Isai. 66. 2. and tremble at his word.

Humility in hearing is necessary, that wee may humble our selues before God, by meanes of the word we heare. In this regard Saint Iames bids vs receive the word of God with meekenes. When Iosias heard the law read, his heart melted within him, and he humbled himselfe. The Iewes at the sermon of Peter cried out, pricked in their hearts, Act. 2. 37. Men & brethren, what shall we doe to be saved?

To come to the second point. Our hearts are fixed on the word of God two waies. First when we make it our treasure by louing it above all things, and by placing our principall delight in it. Consider the example of Dauid: The law of thy mouth (saith he) is better vnto me then thousands of gold or silver: And Oh how I doe loue thy law! it is my meditation continually. And he that will be a good hearer, and make any proceeding in the schoole of Christ, must in the true affection of his heart preferre the law of God above all earthly things.

Again, we fixe our hearts vpon the word, when we make it our stay or foundation; to build our selues vpon it. Thus Iude bids vs build our selues on our most holy faith. That is, vpon the word of God beleued. The world in which we liue, is like a troubled sea: in it we find no stay or footing for our selues: therefore we must lift vp our hands to the word of God, and make it our stay or foundation. It is a foundation two waies. First, of our actions. Thus Dauid said that the statutes of God are the men of his counsell. When Rebecca felt two twinnes to striue in her wombe, shee went straight to aske the Lord, that is, the Prophet of the Lord. And the like must we do for all our actions. Furthermore, the word and doctrine of saluation is the foundation of our comfort both in life & death. Remember (saith Dauid) the promise made to thy servant, wherein thou hast caused me to trust: it is my comfort in my trouble: For thy promise hath quickened me. Paul saith, that the hope we conceiue, is by patience and the comfort of Scriptures. God hath made promise of his presence, fauour, aide, and protection of life and death, to them that trust in his word: in this must we establish our hearts in all our sorrows and troubles, and against the feares of death and damnation.

Thus much of the first part of the public worship of God in the hearing and frequenting of sermons, the second followes, namely, Fellowship.

Fellowship is a worke of mercy, standing in the reliefe of them that be in need. And it is an excellent part of the worship of God: as hee himselfe testifieth; To doe good and to distribute forget not: for with such sacrifice God is well pleased. The almes of Cornelius did ascend vp in the presence of God into heauen, as incense.

For the better vnderstanding of this Fellowship, I will consider five things. Who must relieue? how reliefe must be giuen? and how many waies? In what order? and with what minde?

For the first, the Scripture makes two kinde of men, one that haue possessions, and are giuers: the other, such as be in need, and are receivers. And there is no third sort mentioned in the word: for all must either be giuers or receivers. The man that gets his liuing with the labour of his hand, must labour for this end, that he may haue to giue to him that needeth. The poore widow call her misse into the treasure. Christ was poore, and yet he gaue almes. Such as could not bring vessels of gold to the building of the Tabernacle; yet, if they brought goates haire, and rams skins, it was accepted. And they which are of any ability at all, be it neuer so small, should giue something, be it neuer so little, in regard that reliefe is the honouring and worshipping of God.

For the second, how much? I answer, two things: First, that euery particular man must giue according to his ability, and, if neede require, beyond his ability. Paul commendeth the Macedonians for their liberality. For (saith hee) to their power (I haue record) yea beyond their power, they were willing. And where hee saith, beyond their ability, he sets downe a caueat afterwards: Neither is it that other men should be eased, and you grieved. The second point is, that euery Body or Church, yeeld sufficiency of reliefe to their owne poore, and that from themselves, if it be possible: if not, by helpe from others. And this Paul teacheth, when he requires, that Churches bee not charged; to the end that there may be sufficient for them that are widows in need. And that there alwaies be a sufficiency, three caueats must be obserued. The first, that they which can labour, must be forced to labour, and if they will not, they must not be releued. This is the order that God hath set downe. Ability to labour in his kind, is as good as land and renewewes; and therefore the neglect of labour, is as much to the hurt of Church and common-wealth, as the contempt of gold, silver, and land. Again, the Lord requires, that men labour for this end, that they may eate their owne bread, and that (as much as possibly may be) nothing bee wanting vnto them. The second is, that vaine and superfluous expences, in feasting, costly apparell, and gaming, be cut off. For by these things, mendicable themselves, to doe the good they ought to do. The third is, that in extreme necessity, where there is no other way of reliefe, men must sell their goods, that the poore may bee relieued. Thus must the commandement of Christ be vnderstood, Sell that which you haue, and giue almes. And the Psalmes; The righteous hath dispersed and giuen to the poore. And in this case did they of Hierusalem sell their possessions, and giue to euery man according as they had neede.

Touching the third point, there bee three waies of relieuing. The first, is the giuing and bestowing of any part of our owne goods, and this is commonly called Almes: and it is to be giuen for the reliefe of such as want both possessions and ability to helpe themselves by labour. The second is, Free lending of goods, or money to such as can liue of themselves by part, if they be thus helped. This duty hath the Lord straightly commanded, in respect of the poore, that they borrow freely, and borrow sufficient. But alas, this worke of mercy, is little or nothing regarded. If there be hope of any thing to be lent, the rich presently cease vpon it, with their interest: so as there is no place for the request of the poore. The third way of reliefe is, to forgive dues and debts to them that are fallen to decay, without their owne default. Reade and consider the practise of Nehemias, chap. 5. verse 9.

The fourth point is, what order is to be vied in releuing. The answer is, that the poore may not be suffered to gather their almes far doore to doore by begging. For this is a proclamation to the world of mens hardness of heart, and want of charity, when reliefe is not to be had, but by crying & calling. Again, in the almes that is obtained by begging, no proportion is obserued: for the bold and instant begger gets al, & the rest haue nothing. Lastly, to suffer wandering & begging for reliefe, is to set vp a schoole of idleness. For wile it is known, that the poore may be suffered to begge, all thought of taking paines for aliuing, by many is laid aside, and begging is made an occupation, and beggars shall haue their apprentices, as men of trade; as if that bin heretofore. What then is the right order of dispensing reliefe? I answer, that conuenient reliefe must be collected, and accordingly deuoted to the poore, by fit and able men. Among the Iewes, tithes and offerings to the poore, were brought into fower-houses, and into the treasury of the Temple: that they might afterward be diuided according to euery mans need. Possessions sold to releue the poore in the Primitive Church, were laid down at the Apostles feete. And the Apostles moued by the spirit of God, set downe this order; that wife and godly men, must be choſen to gather and diſpenſe the reliefe of the poore. By Gods providence, like order is eſtabliſhed in our Church and land: & becauſe it is the ordinance of God, all men muſt ſecke to further it: and they that ſhall neglect their dutie here-in, wittingly & willingly, are not in this point, friends of God and their country.

The laſt point is, with what mind muſt wee giue reliefe? I anſwer, Firſt, with a thankfull mind to God. For we muſt conſider, that God hath giuen Chriſt to vs: and hereupon in way of thankfullneſſe, we muſt giue our ſelues, our bodies, ſoules, and goods, and all we haue, to God for his honour and glory. And hauing thus dedicated and giuen our ſelues to God; then ſhall we be able to giue part of our goods in way of reliefe to the poore. Paul commendeth the Macedonians for their rich liberality. But what was the ground of it? They gaue their owne ſelues (ſaith he) ſirſt to the Lord, and after unto vs by the will of God. After the conuerſion of Tyrrus, the merchandise and the gaine thereof, is ſanctified to the Lord. And what is this? marke what the Prophet addeth; her merchandise ſhall not be laid up and kept in ſtore, but it ſhall be for them that dwell before the Lord, ſo as each ſufficiently, and to haue durable clothing. Secondly, reliefe muſt be giuen in loue; becauſe the poore bee our ſelf. If a man giue all his goods to the poore, and haue no loue, it is nothing, ſaith Saint Paul. Thirdly, in reliefe, there muſt be the pitee and compaſſion. The Prophet Eſay ſaith, We muſt plucke out our hearts to the hungry. And wee are commanded, to remember them that be in bonds; as though we were bound with them; and them that be in affliction; as if we were afflicted with them. Fourthly, reliefe muſt be giuen in ſimplicitie. Rom. 12.8. He that diſtributeth in ſimplicitie. Now ſimplicitie is, when in this action, wee aime neither at profit, nor praife, but only in tend to pleaſe and obey God. To this purpoſe ſaith Chriſt, Matth. 6.3, that when we giue our almes, The left hand muſt not know what the right hand doeth: becauſe we may not ſecke to pleaſe our ſelues or men in our almes, but ſimply to approue our hearts to God. Fifthly, cheerefulneſſe is required: The Lord loueth a cheerefull giuer. Paul bids rich men, that they be ready to diſtribute and communicate. To this purpoſe Salomon ſaith; Say not to thy neighbor, goe, and come againe to morrow, and I will giue thee, if thou haſt it now. And Iob ſaith; that he neuer reſtrained the deſire of the poore, nor made the eye of the widow to ſaile. The fixth thing required, is bountyfullneſſe, which the Lord commandeth, by bidding vs to open our hands to the poore: and promiſing plentiful reward. He that ſoweth bleeſſings: that is plentifully ſhall reape plentifully. The ſeventh, is iuſtice, whereby we giue reliefe of our owne. Mercie will not ſtand with iniuſtice: and the Lord biddeſ vs deale our owne bread to the poore. The laſt thing is, that reliefe muſt be giuen, not in hypocriſie, but in truth: 1. Iob. 3.18. Let vs not loue in word, neither in tongue only, but in deed and truth. Saint Iames notes, It was a vaine thing to ſay to the hungry and naked, Warme your ſelues and fill your bellies, when as things needfull are not giuen them.

Thus much of reliefe. Now we are to be exhorted, to praſtice this dutie beforeſaid, and that in the manner before ſcribbed. Inducements hereto are many. Firſt, It is the commandement of God, to giue reliefe: and for the better enforcing hereof, he hath added his promiſe; Bleſſed are the mercifull, for they ſhall obtaine mercie: and his threat; There ſhall be iudgement mercileſſe, to him that ſhowes no mercie. Hereupon the ſentence of condemnation ſhall proceed, according to the neglect of workes of mercie: I was naked, and ye clothed me not, I was hungry, and ye fed me not, &c. Goe ye curſed into hell fire, prepared for the Diuel and his angels. The ſecond inducement to giue reliefe, is from the excellencie of the worke, and that in ſix reſpects. Firſt, of all reliefe is the beſt kind of thrift or huſbandry that is: He that ſowes plentifully, ſhall reape plentifully, ſaith the Lord. Where the poore are compared to ground, ready dreſſed and tilled to our hands, without any coſt or labour on our parts: and our reliefe, is ſeed caſt vpon this ground: and for our paines in ſowing of it, we are promiſed by God, to reape the whole crop our ſelues. Secondly, Giuing of almes, is not giuing, but lending; and that to the Lord, who in his good time, will returne the gift with increaſe. Thirdly, Reliefe is the beſt exchange that can be: for thereby, we change an earthly treaſure, into heavenly, as our Saviour Chriſt ſaith: Giue almes —: and lay up treaſure in heauen. Fourthly, Reliefe is a ſigne of Gods mercie to vs-ward. Salomon ſaith; By mercie and truth, finnes are forgiven, that is, within our conſciences we know them to be forgiven. And in this ſence, Paul bids rich men; Lay up a good foundation againſt the time to come: not becauſe our ſaluation is founded on the workes of mercie; but becauſe by them, we are to make our ſaluation ſure and certaine vnto vs. Chriſt bids vs make friends of the mammon of iniquitie, that they may receive vs into euerlaſting Tabernacles: and this they doe, when they pray for men that are mercifull, and giue teſtimonie of them, that they are ſuch as are to enter into the Kingdome of Heauen. The mercie and bowels of compaſſion that is in vs, as it were a print or ſtampe of the mercie of God ſet in our hearts; and therefore by the little ſpark of mercie in vs, we know the fullneſſe of his mercie. Sixthly, By giuing reliefe, we come to a right vie of our goods: Giue almes, ſaith Chriſt, and all things ſhall be cleane vnto you: that is, whereas ye are giuen to couetouſneſſe, and oppreſſion, repent hereof, and teſtifie your repentance by Almes-deeds: then ſhall this ſinne of couetouſneſſe be redreſſed, wherewith your liues are deſiled, and yee ſhall likewiſe haue the pure vie of your goods: which now ye want. The Philitiſt ſometimes ſpakes in like manner: your diſeaſe comes of fullneſſe, abſtaine of faſt, and ye ſhall be well. Laſtly, reliefe ſometimes is a means of ſatisfaction to men. For reſtitution is a neceſſary worke of repentance. And when it is vncertaine to whom reſtitution is due, by almes we are to make a ſupply thereof. Thus Dauid ſaith to Nathan: Adonizerar, Dan 4.24, who had enriched himſelfe by oppreſſion; O Kinge breake off thy ſinnes by mercy. Luk. 19.8: Zaccheus in his conuerſion, reſtored foure-fold for all his known oppreſſions and deceits, and becauſe many of them were forgotten, or vnknoſſe, therefore in way of ſome recompence, he gaue halfe his goods to the poore. By the conſideration of theſe, & many other excellencies of this worke, wee are to ſtirre vp our ſelues to reliefe. This third inducement is from examples, 1. Cor. 8. 6: Chriſt being the fountaine of riches, became poore: to make his enemies rich, 1. Ia. 53.3. When the Merchants of Tyrrus repented, they left off to hoard vp riches & gaine, according to their olde manner, and dedicated them to holy vies, and a part thereof to the poore. Like was the merite of Iob, and the merite of the beleeuers of the primitive Church, who in the caſe of extreme neceſſity, ſold their goods, and gaue to every man as he had need, Act. 4.34, 35. To exceeſſe the neglect of this duty, men haue ſinfully thiſts: ſome ſay, they are poore, & haue little, and therefore they can giue no reliefe, but ſuch men know, that if there be a willing minde, a man is accepted according to that he hath; & not according to that he hath not. The widowes mite, giuen of her penurie, was more reſpected of Chriſt, then the abundance of other rich. Others pleade, that if they ſhall vie to giue reliefe, they ſhall want themſelues. I anſwer, as for Salomon ſaith, Prou. 28.27. They that giue almes ſhall not want. And againe, Ecc. 11.1: though the goods wee giue ſeeme to bee loſt, and as it were, caſt into the ſea, yet ſhall they be ſaved; and ſome againe ſay, they muſt ſpare for their children. I anſwer with Dauid, Pſal. 37.25. The righteous ſhall not be forſaken, nor their feed for their breads. One man may, as Lazarus, but not both the righteous & their feed. Such as ſet their hearts to gather for their children, with draw themſelues commonly from relieving the poore: and by this means, bring a curſe vpon their owne goods. And for the execution of this curſe, ſome one or other of the poſterity, riotouſly makes hauock of al. Some againe there are; that will giue no almes becauſe the poore are ſlow and wicked, and idle, and ſo the almes, if they be giuen, will be loſt. I anſwer thus. When Paul had ſaid, that ſuch like perſons which will not labor, muſt not eate, he added one thing further: That they muſt not be weary of it: doing, 12. Theſſ. 3.10. And though it ſeemeth, that the tongues of the poore curſe vs, yet if we relieue the, their tongues (as Iob ſaith) ſhall bleeſſe vs, Iob. 31.20.

The third part of Church ſervice, is termed by S. Luke, breaking of bread. Whereby two things are ſignified, ſeaſts of loue, which the ſeſt Chriſtians obſerued: and the vie of the Lords Supper at the end thereof, which in the new Teſtament, as alſo Baptiſme, is a part of the ſervice of God. And of it two things muſt be conſidered, the neceſſity, and the manner. The neceſſity of viſing the Lords Supper, according to the cuſtome of the Church, whereof we are members, appears, becauſe it is a part of Gods worſhip; & becauſe we are bound to it by commandment; Let a man proue himſelfe, and ſo eate of this bread, & drink of this cup. 1. Cor. 11.28. In the old Teſtament, hee that had neglected to eate the Paſſe-ouer, hauing liberty and opportunitie ſo to doe, was cut off from the people of God. Now looke what regard was had of the Paſſe-ouer in the old Teſtament, the ſame muſt bee had of the Lords Supper in the new Teſtament.

By this which hath bene ſaid, a double abuſe is diſcouered. The firſt; that men depart the Congregation in the time of the adminiſtration of Baptiſme, as though it were no part of Gods worſhip, and nothing concerned them: The ſecond is, that men take libertie to themſelues, to receive the Lords Supper, as oft and as ſeldome as they liſt; ſuch as though it were a thing indifferent, that might be done, or not done: They alledge for themſelues, that they are not in charitie, or that they are fallen into ſome one ſinne or other: and therefore if they ſhould communicate, they ſhould eate iudgement to themſelues. I anſwer: if they be out of charitie, they ſhould reconcile themſelues to God and men; and being fallen into any fin, they ſhould renew their old repentance, without delay, and ſo come to the Lords table: and by abſtaining, they doe nothing elſe but double their ſinne. For they continue in their old finnes, and breake the commandement of God, touching the vie of the Sacrament.

The right manner of viſing the Lords Supper, ſtands in three things. The firſt, is the obſeruation of the inſtitution, without addition, detraction or change. The ſecond is, that the communicants muſt bring not only a true faith, and the firſt initiall repentance, but alſo a renewing of them, both in reſpect of new & daily finnes. The Corinthians had both faith and repentance; yet becauſe they failed in this point, of the renouation of their faith and repentance, they are ſaid many of them to bee unworthy receivers, and to eate iudgement to themſelues: The third thing is, that the Sacrament muſt be applied to his right end. And therefore it muſt be vie'd, as a means to leade vs to Chriſt, as a means to confirme our faith in him, as a ſigne of thankfullneſſe to God, as a means to increaſe loue among men. Thus is the Lords Supper cuſtome to be vie'd. Hence it followes, that it is greatly prophaned and abuſed in the Church of Rome. For it is vie'd only in one kind, againſt the inſtitution; & it is applied to ſuperſtitious againſt the right end, in that it is made a means to conferre grace, and that by the worke done.

The fourth part of Church-service, is publick prayer; at which all are to be present, & to assit in the congregation. For this is a due or addebt which we owe unto God as David saith, Praise waiteth for thee in Synn; & to thee shall the voice be performed. To this hath God annexed the promise of his presence: If two or three be gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them. The petition of an whole corporation joynly together, is more effectually, then the petition of one single man; and so the praier of the Congregation, is of greater force, then the praier of private persons. In this regard David saith; That the tabernacles of God are most amiable unto him; and that he had rather be a dove-keeper in the house of God, then dwell in the Temples of gold and silver. Zachary fore-tellets the practise of true believers in the new Testament, saying; They that dwell in one City shall goe to another, saying, up, let us goe & pray before the Lord, and seek the Lord of Hosts: I will goe also. And this hath bene accordingly accomplished. For Christians of the primitive Church, contented themselves with any place, so they might have liberty to assemble themselves to pray unto God.

The manner of our assiting in publick prayer is this: Ministers in teaching are the mouth of God to the people, and in praying, they are the mouth of the people to God; and therefore must the people in fervent affection, lift up their hearts unto God, and in mind give assent to the prayers made in the name and behalfe of the Congregation, by their teachers: and for this cause it is, that they are all to say Amen. Hence it appeares to be a fault, to depart the Congregation in the time of prayer; to sit and chink nothing, as though we had no foule: to haue our mindes drowned in worldly affaires, and to be waipdring, to and fro.

Thus we see that Church-service stands in the right manner of hearing the word, of praying; using the Sacraments, & works of mercy. Hereupon many are to be aduertised, to amend & acknowledge their ignorance, who thinke, that if they say the Beleeve, tenne Commandements, and the Lords praier, when they are in the congregation, God is served and worshipped of them to the full, though otherwise they profit little or nothing by the word, prayer, or Sacraments.

Thus much of Church-service now follows household-service. Of it three things are to be considered. The first is that of necessity in every family worship & service is to be directed unto God. This is the commandment of God. Lift up pure hearts in every place; and therefore in the family. Zachary fore-tels, that when God shall poure forth the spirit of grace and praier upon men in the latter daies, then every family apart shall mount for their sinnes, whereby they haue crucified Christ. The place where Adams family assembled, is called the face of God; because there they prayed unto God, and offered sacrifice, and there likewise he testified his fauour and presence to them. Iesus saith, I and my household will serve the Lord. Cornelius feared, that is, served God, with his whole household. Paul saith, Priscilla and Aquila salute you, and the Church in their house. Now the Church is said to be in their house, not onely because it was the place of the congregation, but because in regard of Gods worship, it was, as it were, a little Church. A family cannot stand without the blessing and protection of God: and this blessing is annexed to the worship of God. For godlines hath the promises of this life, and the life to come. Lastly, the families in which God is not worshipped, are no better then copanies & conspiracies of Atheists. For this is one property of an Atheist, not to call vpon God. Let all such persons mark this doctrine, that thinke it sufficient, if they pray in the congregation.

Though it be thus necessary (as we see) that God be worshipped in every family apart yet is the time, and place, and manner of this worship, left free to the Christian wisdom and discretion of men.

The second point to be considered is concerning the parts of this worship, and they are two, instruction, and prayer. Instruction stands in teaching and learning, and it is called by Paul, the Instruction and information of the Church. Instruction must be of three things. First, of the commandments of God. Deut. 6. 7. Thou shalt rehearse them continually to thy children. And whereas householders might alledge that their children and seruants are dull of conceit, and wil not learne that which they are taught, the Lord gives further charge to parents to vrge and repeate the commandments. For the word translated rehearse [i.e. teach] signifieth to sharpen the commandments vpon children, as men vse to sharpen a flake that it may enter into the ground. Again, parents are commanded by God, to command their children, that they observe the words of the law. Deut. 32. 46. This was the commendation Abraham had, I know Abraham saith the Lord, Gen. 18. 19. I know he will command his sonnes and his household after him, that they keep the way of the Lord to doe righteously and iudgement.

Secondly, there must be instruction in the family concerning all ordinances of God. Thus the Israelites were commanded to teach their children the meaning of the Passouer; the meaning of the oblation of the first borne unto God; the meaning of the twelve stones, that were taken out of Iordan and were erected in Gilgal. Thirdly, there must be instruction touching the workes of God, whether they be iudgements or mercies. Parents are bidden by God to teach their sonnes; and their sonnes likewise the things that they haue seene. Ezechiel in way of thankfulness saith, The father to the children shall declare thy wrath. Esa. 38. 19.

The second part of household-service is private prayer; of it I haue spoken before. There fore I proceed. The third point to be considered, is concerning the person to whom belongeth the care & charge of household service; and that is the master of the family. His office is two-fold. The first, is to prepare & fit his family to the worship of God, whether publick or private. When Jacob was to worship God in Beir, he caused his family to cleanse themselves. Iob calls his children and sanctifies them. Now this cleansing or sanctifying of the family stands in two things: the first is, to purge it of all open vices as much as may be: the second, to cause every person, at the least outwardly, to walke in the waies of God. King Ezechiel, when the Priests and Levites were negligent, and men of certain Tribes were not prepared to receive the Passouer, he made a sopply of this want by his prayer, and was heard. In the like case, like is the duty of the household within his owne family.

That this may the better be effected, the charge of teaching & instructing is laid vpon every master of a family by expresse commandement, Thou shalt rehearse them to thy children. Paul saith, the wife must ask her husband as her head; thereby signifying, that he must instruct & teach all persons in his family. And in the second place, the wife is to do the like. Bartholome instructeth Lemuel, that is, her Son Salomon. Lois and Eunice bring up Timothy in the scriptures of a child. And that this teaching may not be in vaine, the master of a family hath authority giuen him to command them whom hee teacheth to walke in the waies of God, as Abraham did. It is objected, that if a master of a family must teach & exhort, he must then doe the office of a Minister: for he can do no more but teach and exhort. I answer, that teaching by the master of a family, differs in kind from the teaching of the Minister, as the government of the household from the government of the Magistrate. For the household teacheth onely by the authority of a father or master; whereas Ministers of the word teach and exhort by the authority & name of God; as Paul saith to Titus, Speak and exhort, and reprove with all authority. Secondly, Ministers in teaching are in the roome & stead of Christ, and beare his person as Ambassadors hereupon they which heare them, heare Christ; & they that despise the, despise Christ; and therefore they are called in speciall manner, Men of God, seruants of God: & it is not so with householders in teaching and exhorting: for they beare onely the private persons of masters, fathers, husbands, when they teach. Thirdly, teaching in the family is but a preparation to publick teaching, that all persons may the better profit by the publick ministry. Lastly, private teaching dependson publick teaching, and must be ruled by it. For men may not teach at their pleasures, what they wil in their families but such doctrine as they haue learned and received from the publick ministry. And thus, albeit the matter of doctrine be one and the same in the house, & in the Church: yet is not the office of teaching one and the same.

Again it is demanded, seeing the master of a family must teach them of his owne house, whether he is to doe it by himselfe in his owne person, or by a deputy. I answer, as much as possibly may be, he is in his owne person to performe this duty; yet in the case, not of negligence, but of necessity, when the family is great, and he is not so able to teach, & is withall employed in publick affaires, and thereupon oftentimes absent, he may haue his deputy to teach in his roome. Thus Abraham performed the weightiest matter that concerned the establishment and continuance of his familie, not by himselfe, but by his steward; as namely, the choice of a wife for his sonne Isaac.

The second office of the master of the family is, to be the principall agent, doer, & director in the worship of God within his family. For this cause the fourth commandment is giuen first of all and principally to the master of the family: that he might see the Sabbath kept, and bee a principall doer in all parts of Gods worship. The company of the Disciples were the household of Christ; and he himselfe did admit all parts of Gods worship with them, and among them.

Thus householders fee their duty: and they must in the next place be admonished and exhorted with conscience to performe the same. Let the example of Moses be considered. He was to doe service to God and his country in Egypt: & when he was now in his journey in a certaine Inne, the Lord withstood him, and made as though hee would haue killed him. But for what cause? Surely he had not sanctified and purged his owne family; and that appeares, because hee had not circumcised his childe. Men in our dayes may looke for the like iudgements, that liue in the like negligence.

The last kind of worship is that which concerneth the person of every particular man in his place and calling; and that is, to keepe and maintaine faith, that is, true religion, & hope of everlasting life, and a cleere conscience before God & man. This is the serving of God, and not to babble a few words, either in the morning or evening, without vnderstanding or affection. Thus much Paul teacheth in his owne example. Act. 24. 14, 15. 16. In the way (which some call before) I worship the God of our fore-fathers, beleeuing all things written in the law and the Prophets; having hope of the resurrection of the iust and iust, and endeavouring to keepe a cleere conscience before God and man.

That this personall worship may be performed & continued, two things must be practised. The first, is the private reading and searching of the Scriptures. This was the common practise of the Iewes: Search, or see I search the Scriptures. The Scriptures are a light shining in a dark place: whether our mind attend vnto the, while wee are wandering in the night of this world, & we cannot attend vnto them, vnles

we read them. The word of God is the sword of the spirit, Eph. 6.17. and there is no handling of this sword, unless we be well acquainted with it: David a Prophet, did use to read and meditate in the Scriptures. Daniel taught by revelation, did read for all this, the Prophet Jeremy. Great is the neglect of this duty in our daies. In many houses ye shall find a faire paire of tables, but no Bible at all. Others cannot find in their hearts to disburse so much money as will buy them a Bible: others take delight in reading of ballads, and idle discourses, and have no minde to read the Scriptures. It is an evil signe. When the stomacke refuseth meats, it is sicke; and when there is no delight nor savour in Gods word, it argues the wickednesse of the heart. For the Scripture is like spice, which the more it is chafed and rubbed, the sweeter it is. And this negligence hath indgements of God tending on it, Isa. 5.13. My people goe into captivity, because they want knowledge. Prov. 28.9. Hence that turnes his care from hearing the law, his very prayer is abominable.

The second meane to maintaine faith, hope, good conscience, is private or secret prayer. Isaac went out in the evening to meditate or pray. Adams prayed for his daies, and for his nights, for the children of Israel. Samuel saith, God forbid that I should sin against God, and cease to pray for you. David prayed three times, and seven times a day, Christ who was not subject to sinne as we are, went often apart and prayed, and continued in praying whole nights. Paul in sundry Epistles calls vpon the faithfull for priuate prayer, as when he bids them pray continually, 1. Thess. 5.17.

It may be said, how shall we maintaine true faith, or religion, when by reason of manifold dissensions, we cannot tell which is the true religion? I answer, subject your hearts and liues to God, and obey him in all his commandments, and ye shall certainly know and be assured without faile of the true religion: for God reueales his covenant to the humble. Psal. 25.14. And Christ saith, Ioh. 7.17. If any will obey his Fathers will, he shall know whether his doctrine bee of God or no. Let this be remembered. For the way to the attainment of the truth, is not inquired by subtill disputation, unless humble obedience to God goe withall. Furthermore, for the keeping of a good conscience, two things must be done. First, we must evermore attend on the calling of God, that is, the duty we owe to God and men, not daring at any time to goe out of the precincts of our callings. For this cause we must put a difference betweene duties that bee necessary and such as are not necessary to be done. The first must be done, and the second left vndone, that we be not busie bodies in other mens matters.

The second thing is, that we must doe the offices and works of our callings in good manner. For this cause first of all, they must bee done in obedience to God, that is, with a minde and intention to please and obey God. Secondly, they must bee done in the name of Christ, that is, with prayer and thanksgiving in the name of Christ. Thirdly, they must be done in faith, because we must alwaies by our faith depend on God for the blessing & good successe of our labours. Fourthly, they must be done in love to God and man, yea, all the religion we haue, all the grace and goodnesse of our hearts, must shew it selfe in the works of our particular callings. For looke what a man is in his particular place and calling, that he is indeed. Lastly, they must bee done with patience. The good ground brings forth fruit with patience. And the reason is, because it is the will of God to exercise men with manifold miseries in euery estate and condition of life. And the workes of our callings thus performed, are fruits of good conscience, and the seruice of God.

A TREATISE OF GODS FREE-GRACE, AND MANS FREE-WILL.

LONDON,
Printed by JOHN LEGATT:
1626.

TO THE RIGHT VVORSHIPFULL SIR EDWARD DENNIE, KNIGHT.

Right Worshipfull, it is a thing most evident, that the present Religion of the Church of Rome, is an enemy to the grace of God, two waies. First, because it exalts the liberie of mans will, and extenuates the grace of God: And this it doth in five respects. For first of all it teacheth, that naturall free-will of man, hath in it, not onely a passive or potentiall, but also an active power or imperfect strength in duties of godlinesse; and so much the lesse power is ascribed to the grace of God. This doctrine of theirs is flat against reason. For the will of man in it selfe, is a naturall thing: and therefore it is neither fit nor able to effect any supernaturall action: (as all actions of godlinesse are) unless it be first of all (as they say) elevated above his condition, by the impression of a supernaturall habite. And the Scripture is utterly against this doctrine, when it saith: Ye were once darknesse, Ephes. 5. 8. We are not sufficient of our selues, to thinke any thing of our selues, 2 Cor. 3. 5. The naturall man (that is, he that wants the Spirit of God) cannot perceiue the things of God, 1 Cor. 2. 14. Ye were dead in sinnes and trespasses, Ephes. 2. 1. Without Christ, and without God in the world, vers. 12. Again, Scripture saith further; that the heart of man is flow, Luk. 24. 25. and vaine, Psal. 5. 9. and hard that cannot repent, Rom. 2. 5. and stonie, Ezech. 36. 26. and that the Iewes were obtinate, their necke as any iron line, and their brow braile, Isa. 48. 4. and that it is God who giues eyes to see, and an heart to vnderstand, Deut. 29. 4. By these testimonies it is manifest, that grace doth not onely helpe and assist our weak nature, but altogether change the puerse qualitie thereof, and bring it from darknesse to light, Act. 26. 18. and from death to life, Eph. 2. 1. Which grace, whosoever doth not so farre forth acknowledge, neuer yet knew what the Gospel meant, neither did he euer consider the words of our Saviour Christ. No man comes vnto mee, unless the Father draw him, Joh. 6. 44. Proper, The Choller of S. Augustine hath a notable saying, which I marvell the Papists of our age doe not consider. Wee haue (saith hee) free-will by nature, but for qualitie and condition, it must be changed by our Lord Iesus Christ.

Secondly, some of the Romish Religion auouch, that the efficacy of Gods presenting grace, depends vpon the co-operation of mans will; and they affirme, that the Council of Trete is of this minde: but then to the question of Paul, 1 Cor. 4. 7. Who hath separated thee? The answer may be made, I my selfe haue done it by mine owne will. And that shall be selfe which Paul teacheth, that beside posse velle, the power of well-willing, ipsum velle, shall be the all of well-willing, is of God, Phil. 2. 13. Others therefore praise the efficacy of grace, as the conquering of fit objects and perswasions: as though it were sufficient to strike vpon the heart, and to incline the will in spiritual matters, and our weaknesse might be cured with so easie a medicine: but God is further said to soften the heart, Ezech. 36. 26. to turne the heart, Luke 1. 17. to open the heart, Act. 16. 14. And because our hearts are ouer hard, he wounds them, Cant. 4. 9. the circumciseeth them, Deut. 10. 6. For he bruileth them, Ezech. 6. 9. And when nothing will doe good, at length, Gods said to take away the stonie heart, Ezech. 11. 19. to quicken them that are contrite, Isa. 57. 15. Eph. 2. 5. to giue a new heart, Eph. 4. 22. Ezech. 36. 26. nay, to create a new heart, Eph. 2. 10. and 4. 28.

Thirdly, they giue vnto God in all conuersion, a depending will, whereby God wils and determines nothing, but according to his owne free will that the will of man will determine it selfe. And thus to maintain the supposed liberie of the will, that is, the indifference and indetermination thereof, they deprive God of his honour and generall grace. For by this they make God, but the will it selfe, is the first mouer and begimmer of her owne actions. And this is euery of the Papists themselves, that condemne this doctrine as a conceit.

Fourthly they teach, that the grace which makes vs acceptable and gratefull to God, stands in the inward gifts of the minde, specially in the gifts of charitie. But this is most false which they teach; for charitie is the fulfilling of the law. And Paul saith; we are not vnder the law, but vnder grace, Rom. 6. 14. And againe, as many as are iustified by the law, are fallen from grace, Gal. 5. 4. Now the grace that doth indeede make vs gratefull to God, is the free fauour and mercy of God, pardoning our sinnes in Christ, and accepting vs to eternall life, and not any qualitie in vs, as Paul signifies when he saith, we are sanctified, not according to our workes, but according to his purpose and grace, which is giuen to vs in Christ before all times, 2 Tim. 1. 9.

Lastly they teach, that the renewed will of man, by the generall directing and co-operation of God, can performe the duties of godlines, without any speciall helpe from Goddy new grace. But the Scripture speaks other wise. By the grace of God, I am that I am. I haue laboured, yet not I, but the grace of God which is with me, 1 Cor. 15. 10. No man can say, that Iesus is the Lord, but by the H. Ghost, 1 Cor. 12. 3.

Without me ye can doe nothing, Ioh. 15. 5. After ye beleueed, ye were sealed with the spirit, Eph. 1. 13. He which hath begunne this good worke in you, will finish it vntill the day of Christ, Phil. 1. 6. That ye may abound with hope by the verue of the spirit, Rom. 15. 13. It is God that workes in you the will and the deede, Phil. 2. 13. Though the righteous fall, he shall not be cast off, for the Lord puts vnder his hand, Psal. 37. 24. Incline mine heart to thy testimonies, turne away mine eyes from beholding of vanity, and quicken me in thy way, Psal. 119. 37. Teach me to doe thy will, because thou art my God: let thy good Spirit leade me in the land of righteousness, Psal. 143. 10. Create in me a new heart, renew a right spirit in me—and stablish me by thy free spirit, Psal. 51. 12. Draw me, and I will run after thee. By these and many other places it is evident, that God, after he hath indueed vs with his spirit, doth not leave vs to be guided by our selues, (for then we should fall againe to our former misery) but he direct vs, he lifts vs up, he leades vs, he confirms and sustains vs: by the same grace, and by the same spirit dwelling in vs, that walking in the way of his commandments, we may at length attaine to euermlasting happinesse.

The second way whereby the Papist shewes himselfe to be an enemy of the grace of God, is that he ioynes the merie of workes, as a Con. ca. s. with the grace of God, in that which they call the second iustificacion, and in the procurement of eternall life: whereas on the contrary, Paul in the article of iustificacion, opposeth grace to workes, yea to such as are the gifts and fruites of the spirit. For Abraham did good workes, not by naturall free will, but by faith, Heb. 11. 8. And Paul opposeth iustifying grace to the workes of Abraham, when he saith; to him that worketh, it he wages is not imputed according to grace. And Tit. 3. 5. Not of the workes of righteousness, which we haue done, but of his mercie he saued vs. Rom. 11. 6. If by grace, then not of workes, or else were grace no more grace. Augustine saith well, that grace is no way grace, unless it be freely giuen euery way.

Thus then all things considered, it is the best to ascribe all we haue or can do that is good, wholly to the grace of God. Excellent is the speech of Augustine: Only hold this as a true point of godlinesse, that no good thing can come either to the sense or mind, or be any way conceiued, which is not of God. And Bernard: The Church shewes her selfe to be full of grace, when she giues all she hath to grace, namely, by ascribing to it both the first and last place. Otherwise, how is the full of grace, if she haue any thing which is not of grace? Again, I tremble to thinke any thing mine owne, that I may be mine owne. This doctrine is the safest and the surest, in respect of peace of conscience, and the saluation of our soules. So much the Papists themselves (betraying their owne cause) say and confesse. Bellar. the lesuit saith: By reason of the vncertainty of our owne iustitie, and for feare of falling into vaine glory, it (a) is the safest, to put our whole confidence in the alone mercy and goodnesse of God. Cassander in his booke called the Consultation of Articles in question, to Maximilian the Emperour, cites a saying of Bonanum, which is on this manner. It is the duty of godly mindes, to ascribe nothing to themselves, but all to the grace of God. Hence it followes, that how much soeuer a man giues vnto grace, though in giuing many things to the grace of God, he takes something from the power of nature and free-will, he departs not from godlinesse: but when any thing is taken from the grace of God, and giuen to nature, which pertaines to grace, there may be some danger. Thus then to hold and maintaine iustificacion by faith without workes, and to ascribe the whole worke of our conuersion to God without making any diuision betwene grace and nature, is the safest.

These things I shew more at large in this Treatise following, which I now present to your Worship, as a small testimonie of mine humble duty and loue: desiring you to accept the mind of the giuer, and to perseuer in your labours. And thus I commend your Worship to the protection and grace of God in Christ.

Your Worships in the Lord,

Mat.

Matth. 23. verse 37, 38.

Ierusalem, Ierusalem, which killest the Prophets, and stonest them which are sent to thee: how often would I have gathered thy children together, as the henne gathereth her chickens vnder her wings, and ye would not: Behold, your habitation shall be left vnto you desolate.

His whole chapter contains a Sermon that our Sauour Christ made to the Iewes at Ierusalem. It hath two parts. The first is a reproofe of the Iewish Doctors, namely, the Scribes and Pharisees, for sundry vices; from the beginning of the chapter, to the 36. verse. The second is an Inuective against Ierusalem, in the words I haue now read: Ierusalem, Ierusalem, which killest the Prophets, &c. In the Inuective, two things are to be considered, the rebellion of Ierusalem in the 37. verse, and the punishment of this sinne, verse 38.

Touching the rebellion it selfe, three things are set downe, the place and persons, in the words Ierusalem, Ierusalem: the degree and practise of rebellion, in these words: which killest the Prophets, &c. the manner and forme of their rebellion, in these words: How oft would I haue gathered you, and ye would not?

According to the order of the holy Ghost, first, I will begin with the place. It is a wonder that Ierusalem, of all the places in the world, should be charged with the height of rebellion against God. For it was the Citie of God, and had prerogatiues aboue all cities in the world. Saint Paul hath noted seuen of them. The first is, that they were Israelites: that is, of the posteritie of Iacob. The second is, Adoption, in that they were reputed and called the children of God. The third is, that they had the glory of God: that is, the Mercy-seate, the pledge of the presence of God. The fourth is, the Covenants: that is, the two Tables of the couenant. The fifth is, the giving of the law, namely, of the iudiciall and ceremoniall law. The sixth is, the worship of God, the publicke solemnitie whereof, was tyed to the temple at Ierusalem. The seventh, that to them pertained the promises made to the Patriarkes, touching the Mesias. To these the Prophet Micah addeth the eight priuilege, that the first Church of the new Testament, should be gathered in Ierusalem, and that consequently, the preaching of the Gospel, should passe thence to all nations. Now, for all these blessings and mercies, Christ our Sauour cries out and complains of Ierusalem's rebellion. And this is not the first time of his complaint. In the daies of the Prophet Isay, hee saith that when hee had done all that hee could doe for his vineyard, it brought forth nothing but wilde grapes. By the Prophet Ezechiel, hee sets downe a long catalogue of his blessings to this people, and withall, a catalogue of their vnthankfulness. Hence it appeares, that where God shewes the greatest mercie, there oftentimes is the greatest wickednesse and vnthankfulness. And this is partly verified in this land: for within the compass of this forty yeares, wee haue receiued great blessings from God, both for this life, and for the life to come, specially, the Gospel, with peace and protection: and the like hath not bene seene in former ages: yet there was neuer more vnthankfulness then now. For now commonly men are wearie of the Gospel, and beginne to decline from that which they haue bene: and the care to please God, and doe his will, is accounted but a curious preticement of many.

Secondly, hence it may be gathered, that God doth not tyre the infallible assistance of his spirit to any place or condition of men. If euer any city in the world had this priuilege, it was Ierusalem. But Ierusalem, which was the seate and habitation of God, had not this priuilege, because it is here charged with rebellion against God. No place therefore nor condition of men, hath it. It is alledged, that God hath made a promise to the order of Priesthood: the Priests shal preserue knowledge, and thou shalt require the law at his mouth. I answer, that these words are not a promise, but a commandement. For sometimes words of the future tense are put for words Imperative; and therefore the sense is this, the Priests shal preserue knowledge, that is, let them keepe knowledge. Again, it is alledged that we are commanded to heare the Scribes & Pharisees; because they sit in Moses chaire. I answer, that the Chaire of Moses is not a place or seate, but the doctrine of Moses: and to this doctrine, I graunt, the spirit of God is annexed, when it is truly taught and beleued. Thirdly, it is alledged, that God hath promised the spirit of truth, to lead men into all truth. I answer, that this promise doth not directly and absolutely concerne all beleueers, or all Ministers, but onely the Apostles, to whom it was made: and not to them for all times, & in all actions but onely while they were in the execution of their Apostolicall ministerie, which stands in the founding of the Church of the new Testament, partly by publishing of the Gospel, and partly by writing the Scriptures of the new Testament. In a word, no Scripture can bee brought to proue, that God hath, doth, or will binde his Spirit to any particular place or persons. Here then falls to the ground, three popish conceits. The first, though the members of the Catholike Church may feuerally erre; yet they cannot erre, when they are together in a generall Councell, lawfully assembled. The second, that the Pope cannot erre in his Confitorie. The third, that personall fission, is a mark of the Catholike Church: which neuertheless, may be seuered from the Spirit of God, as we see.

Where our Sauour Christ vseth a repetition, saying, O Ierusalem, Ierusalem; hee doth three things therein. First, he signifies thereby, that he takes it for a wonder, and for a thing incredible, that the Iewes after so many blessings, should be so exceedingly vnthankfull. Secondly, he testifies hereby his owne detestation of their vnthankfulness. Thirdly, by this repetition, he doth awake the Iewes, and stirre them vp to a serious consideration and loathing of this their sinne: and he doth (as it were) proclaime the same vnto vs. And not without cause: for in vnthankfulness, there bee two grievous finnes against God, false witness bearing, and iniustice: false witness bearing; because the vnthankfull person denies in his heart, God to be the fountaine and giuer of the good things he hath, and he ascribes them to his own wisdom, goodness, strength, indeavour. Iniustice, because he yeeldes not to God, the duties which he owes vnto him for his blessings.

Ioh. 16. 13

The second point to be considered is, the degree of the Iewish rebellion. David makes three degrees hereof. The first is, to walke in the councell of the vngodly. The second is, to stand in the way of sinners. The third is, to sit downe in the corners chaire. And this is the very top of desperate rebellion, and the sinne of Ierusalem. For when Christ saith, [which killest the Prophets, and stonest them which are sent vnto thee] hee notes out three finnes in this Citie. Impenitencie, whereby they persevered in their wicked waies, without hope of amendment: sacrilegious and prophane contempt of God, and the meanes of their saluation: cruelty in shedding of blood. And by cruelty, I meane not one or two actions of cruelty, but an habite therein, and the custome thereof: for the words are thus to be read; Ierusalem killing the Prophets, and stoning them that are sent vnto thee: where stoning and killing, signifie not one act, but a continuance and multiplication of acts: that is, a custome in shedding of blood.

It may be demanded, how the Iewes should grow to this height of wickednesse. I answer

A thus. In euery actual sinne, there be four things distinctly to be considered; the fault, which is the offence of God in any action; the guilt, or obligation to punishment for the fault; the punishment it selfe, which is death: a blot or spot, set in the soule of him that sinneth, and that by the fault or offence: and this blot is nothing else but a pronesse to the sinne committed, or to any other sinne. In the sinne of our first parents, besides the fault, guilt, punishment, there followed a blot or deformity in the soule, which was the losse of Gods Image, and the disposition of their hearts to all manner of euils. Since the fall of Adam, hee that commits an actual offence, besides the fault, guilt, punishment, imprints in his heart a new blot, and that is an increase of his natural pronesse to sinne, even as the dropie-man, the more hee drinks, the more hee may, & by drinking he increaseth his thirst. Thus the Iewes by custome in sinning, attaine to an height in wickednes; because euery act of offence, hath his blot, and the multiplication of acts offendeth, is the continuall increase of the blot or blemish of the soule, till the light of nature be extinguished, & men come to a reprobate sense. This must be a warning to all men, to take heede lest they commit any offence against God in thought, word, or deede, considering euery offence imprints a blot in the soule.

C Secondly it may be demanded, how Ierusalem, grown to this height of rebellion, can truly be called the holy Citie, or the City of the great King. I answer, two waies. First, there were many holy men and women in Iurie and Ierusalem, that truly serued God, and waited for the Kingdome of Christ, as Ioseph, Mary, Zachary, Elizabeth, Anna, Simon, Nicodemus, Ioseph of Arimathea, and many others. Now a Church is named not of the greater, but of the better part; as an heape of corne is so called, though there bee more chaffe then corne. Secondly, I answer, that a people or Church that haue forsaken God, remains still a reputed Church, till God forsake them, as a wife committing adulterie, remains still a supposed wife, till her husband giue her the bill of diuorcement. Ierusalem indeed had forsaken God, but God had not forsaken Ierusalem. For there hee preferred still the Temple, and his worshipp, when Ierusalem had condemned and crucified Christ, Saint Peter inspired by the holy Ghost, saith still; To you belong the promises, and to your children. And Ierusalem did not utterly cease to be a citie or Church of God, till they contradicted and blasphemed the Apostolicall ministerie: for then, and not before, the Apostles withdrew themselves from the Iewes. Here wee see a depth of mercy in God: for though the Iewes for their parts, had deserved a thousand times to be forsaken, yet God for his part, did not forsake them, but still pursued them with mercy. And wee are taught hereby, not to giue any sentence of the persons of euill men. For though they forsake God, yet know wee not whether God haue forsaken them or no.

In this example of Ierusalem's rebellion, we learne many things. First, in it we may behold the vilenesse of mans nature, and our violent pronenesse to sin. For the Iewes meant to abolish and quench as much as they could, the doctrine of saluation; yea to quench it with blood, and which is more, with the blood of the Prophets: and this shews, that man drinks iniquity, as the fish drinks in water.

Secondly, in Ierusalem we may behold the desperate condition of the Church of Rome at this day. For it follows in rebellious way it goes beyond Ierusalem. If any man will indifferently consider, it will appeare, that by the whore of Babylon, is meant, the present Church of Rome: and this whore is said to be drunke with the blood of the Saints. The locusts out of the bottomles pit, go to the kings of the earth, to stirre them vp to warre against the Church of God. And these locusts are in all likelihood, Iwarms of monkes, friars, and Iesuits of the Church of Rome. And we haue found it by long and much experience, that they of the Romane Church, haue long thirsted for the blood of Prince and people in this land.

Thirdly, we are here taught to exerceise our selues in the duties of meeknes, goodnesse, peace to all men. The Prophet I say faith that men in the kingdom of Christ, shall not apply their swordes and speares to the hurt of any as the Iewes here doe, but shall turne them to instruments of husbandrie, as mattookes and sithes. Whereby is signified, that men truly regenerate, shall lay aside all purpose and minde of doing any hurt, and shal giue themselves to doe the good they can. Againe, he faith that the wolfe and the lambe shall dwell together, and that there shall be no hurt in all the holy mountes of God. The diuall by the sinne of our first parents, of men, made vs beasts, lyons wolues, tigers, beares, cockatrices: and Christ againe of beasts, hath made vs his lambs and sheepe, in respect of meekenes and patience.

Fourthly, wee are here taught, not to oppose our selues against the Ministers of God, but without pride and fiercenes, to yeeld subiection and obedience to their ministerie. I say foretels, that in the Church of the new Testament, a little child, that is, Ministers, otherwise weak and silly men, shall by their doctrine, rule and guide wolues, leopards, lyons: that is, fiery and cruel men by nature. My people (saith the Lord) shall come willingly in the day of assembly: and the sheepe of Christ heare his voice and follow him. The Iewes arraigne and iudge the Prophets that are sent vnto them: but we must suffer them in their ministry to arraigne and iudge vs, that we be not iudged of the Lord. Againe, the Iewes kill their teachers; but we must permit our teachers after a fort to kill vs: for their ministry must be as it were, a sacrificing knife, to kill the old man in vs, that wee may be an acceptable offering vnto God.

Lastly, Ministers of the word, must learne hence, not to be troubled, if they be hated and persecuted of mē. For this befele the holy prophets of God, & that in the City of Ierusalem.

The third point is, the manner or forme of their rebellion. In it I consider foure things. The will of God, against which the Iewes rebel. I would: the will of the Iews rebelling. I would not: the cōcord of both, I would ye would not: the manner of Gods will. He wils their saluation in loue, I would haue gathered you as an hen gathereth her chickens: in patience. How oft would I before I come to handle these points in particular, I will set down a generall preamble touching the nature of will.

Will, is a power of willing, nilling, choosing, refusing, suspending, which depends on reason. By power, I meane an abilitie or created faculty: and it is so properly in men and Angels; but in God onely by analogie or proportion. Because his will in his essence or Godhead indeed. Secondly, I say, it is a power of willing, &c. Because to will, nill, choofe, refuse, suspend, (that is, neither to wil, nor to nill) are the proper effects of will, whereby it is known & discerned. Lastly, I say, it depends on reason, because it is incident onely to natures reasonable; as God, Angels, men; and because, though it goe against good reason, yet is not without reason altogether. When a man knows and approves that which is good, and yet doth the contrary; it is because it seemes good to him to doe the contrary. And in euery act of will, there are two things, Reason to guide, and Election to assure, or dissent.

Will hath his property, and that is the Liberty of the will, which is a freedome from compulsion or constraint, but not from all necessity. From compulsion: because compulsion and will be contrary, and where compulsion takes place, there will giues place: and will constrained is no will. Neuertheless, will and necessity may stand together. God wils many things of absolute necessity, as the eternall generation of the Sonne, the proceeding of the holy Ghost, the doing of iustice, and such like: & he wils them with most perfect liberty of will. The good Angels will their owne happines, and the doing of iustice: and that of necessity; for they cannot will to sinne, or to be in misery: and all this they wil most freely. Nay, the necessity of not sinning, is the glory and ornament of will; for he that doth good so as he cannot sin, is more at liberty in doing good, then he that can doe either good or euil. Whē the creature is in that estate, that it willingly serueth God, and cannot but serue God, then is our perfect liberty. Againe, the liberty of will, since the fall of man, is ioyned with a necessity of sinning; because it stands in bondage vnder sin in this respect, it is fully

tearmed of Augustine, the bond free-will. Wherefore we may not imagine in the will, a liberty which is a freedome from all necessity. That this may the better appeare, let vs consider the kinds of necessity. There is a simple or absolute necessity, when a thing cannot possibly be otherwise: thus we may say, there is a God, & he is righteous, &c. This necessity stands not with the will of the creature, yet doth it stand with Gods will, in whom an absolute necessity of holinesse and goodnesse is ioyned, with absolute freedome of will. Againe, there is a necessity by violence or compulsion, and this abolisheth freedome and consent of will. Thirdly, there is a necessity of infallibility, or of consequence, when something followes necessarily vpon a supposed antecedent, as namely vpon the determination & decree of God. This necessity and freedome of will, may both stand together. For in the doing of a voluntary action, it is sufficient that it proceed of iudgement, and haue his beginning from within the will, though otherwise, in respect of Gods will, it be of vnchangeable necessitie. The certentie of Gods decree, doth not abolish the consent of mans will, but rather order it, and mildly incline, or draw it forth. And the thing that is directly contrary to freedome of will, is compulsion: because it abolisheth consent.

The liberty of will, stands in a double power. The first is, when it wils any thing of it owne selfe, to bee apt and able to nill the same; and so on the contrary: and it is called in schooles, the liberty of contradiction. The second is, when it wils any thing, to bee able to will another thing, or the contrary. As for example, when God willed the creation of the world, he could haue nilled the same: and when he willed the creation of the world, hee could haue willed the creation of more worlds. And this latter is called the liberty of contrariety.

Will by this liberty, is distinguished from the inclinations of naturall Agents, which alwayes shew themselves in the same manner. Put matter to the fire, it burnes alwaies, and it cannot but burne. Cast vp a stone into the aire, it falls downe alwaies, and cannot but fall downe. Secondly, will by this liberty, is distinguished from the appetite of beasts: for it followes sense, and in choosing or refusing keeps alwaies one order. The sheepe flies the wolfe, and all sheepe doe so at all times, and in all places. Bees gather honey, and they do so alwaies, and in all places, and they can doe no otherwise. When the beast in the field chooseth one hearb, and refuseth another, there is a shew of liberty, yet no true liberty. For that which it chooseth or refuseth once, it chooseth or refuseth alwaies, in the same manner.

Thus much of the generall nature of will; now I come to the points in hand. The first is touching the will of Christ, I would. According to the two natures of Christ, so be there two wils in him; the will of his Godhead, and the will of his manhood. Somethink that these

A words are meant of the will of his manhood. For they suppose him heere to speake as the minister of circumcision, and consequently as a man. This I thinke is a truth, but not all the truth. Because the thing which hee willett, namely, the gathering of the Iewes by the ministry of the Prophets, was begonne and practised long before his incarnation. Wherefore (as I take it) here his diuine will is meant, or the will of his Godhead, which is also the will of the Father, and the holy Ghost.

This will is one and the same, as God is one: yet may it be distinguished on this manner. It is either the will of his good pleasure, or, his signifying will. The truth of this distinction we may see in earthly Princes, who beare the image of God. A king determines within himselfe according to his pleasure what shall be done in his kingdome, and what not: this is his will. Againe, he signifies some part of his secret pleasure to his subiects, as occasion shall be offered: and this is also his will. Euen so the pleasure of GOD within himselfe, and the significations thereof to his creature either in whole or in part, are his will.

The first is mentioned, Eph. 1. 5, where Paul faith the Ephesians were predestinate according to the good pleasure of his will. That it may rightly be conceived of vs, I will set downe foure things. The first is, that this will is Gods purpose or decree according to counsell. For in it these two concur, his counsell, and his decree. His counsell sees all things, and all the causes of them: His decree determines what shall be done, and what vndone; and he determines according to his owne eternall counsell. Yet is not counsell a rule to his will. For there is nothing higher then his will, and his counsell also is according to his will which goodnesse it selfe. And therefore by Paul, Counsell is called the counsell of his will.

Secondly, in Gods will there is a Sovereignty, that is, an absolute power, whereby he is Lord of all the actions that he willett, willing of himselfe without dependance from any, without impediment or controulement, what he wil, when he wil, & how he wil. Thus much is signified in the parable, may I not do with mine own as I will? And by Paul alcauding Moses, I will haue mercy on whom I will haue mercy; teaching also, that we are at Gods pleasure, as clay at the pleasure of the potter. This must teach vs whē we thinke or speake of Gods works & iudgements, to thinke & speake with modesty & sobriety, with admiration & reuerence, not daring to search into the reason of the, or thinke hardly of them, when they found not with our reason, cōtēting our selues with this, that we know God to haue a soveraignty in his will, to will at his pleasure, and his will to be good.

The third point is, that the will of God is the beginning or first cause of all things without exception, and of all their motions and actions: And it is a beginning 2-waies. First, in regard of the exsistence or being of things;

Secondly,

Rom. 15, 16.

Voluntas Benefici: Voluntas signi.

Eph. 1. 11

Nat. 20. 15. Rom. 9. 16.

Secondly, in regard of their goodnes. That all things in particular haue their being, from the will of God, as from the first efficient cause, I shew it thus. God is of that power that nothing can come to passe which hee nulleth, or which is vtterly against his will; therefore, what soeuer comes to passe, comes to passe because he wils it either simply, or in some part. A wife governour of a family, or of an army, hauing all things in his owne power, suffers nothing to be done without his will, and he desires in the very smallest matters to haue a stroke; and nothing hinders his desire, but his own weaknesse, which is not incident to the maiesty of God. God by an vnchangeable prescience, fore-sees all things that shall come to passe: and therefore by an vnchangeable will, he willethe the being of them. For Gods foreknowledge depends on his will. Not because God fore-sees things to come, therefore they come to passe: but because according to Gods will, they are to come to passe, therefore he fore-sees the. Indeed there is in God, a knowledge of things that possibly may bee, though they neuer be: and this knowledge goes before Gods decree. Yet the diuine knowledge of things that certainly shall be, follows the will and determination of God. To proceede further: In that God willethe the being of all things, he makes them to be: for his wil is operative, not seuered from his power, but distinguished: his willing of any thing is his doing of it: & therefore it pleaseeth the holy Ghost to signifye the wil of God by an operative word of commandement. In the beginning God said, let there be light, & there was light: and it was for now this commanding word of God, that is, by any thing that God in his pleasure wils to be our food. Things in respect of being must haue dependance on the will of God, or on themselves, or on some other thing. If they depend on themselves for their being, they are gods: if they depend on any other thing without and beside God, that thing is gods also. It remains therefore that all things & acts in the world considered as acts, haue their being by a dependance on God as on the highest cause, or the cause of causes: this doctrine must be remembered. For it is the foundation of true patience: when wee consider, whatsoeuer comes to passe befalls vs according to the will of God. Vpon this ground Job, arnes himself to patience: and David saith, I held my tongue, and said nothing: because thou Lord saidst it. Secondly, this doctrine is the means of all true comfort, when we consider that all our afflictions are from the good pleasure of God. Thus did the primitive Church comfort it selfe, when it considered, that the Iewes, Herod, Pontius Pilate, and the rest, did nothing against Christ, but that which the counsel of God had decreed before hee came: and it must be our comfort, that we are predestinate to be made conformable to the image of Christ in afflictions.

Furthermore, the will of God is the beginning of the goodnes of things. For a thing is not first good, and then willed by God: but it is first willed by God, & thus it becomes good: this is a manifest truth, I wil not stand vpon this may here be demanded, whence the euill in the creature, namely sin, hath his beginning. I answer, it comes of the wil of the declining creature, and not from the wil of God: yet is it not without the wil of God. For though he wil not sin properly because he hates it: yet doth he wil the being of it in the world. For in respect of the counsel of God, it is good that euill should be. And God wils the being of sin: not because it is his wil to effect, produce, or geue a being to it, but because his wil is to forsake his creature, & not to hinder the being of euill while he may: & thus euill not hindered comes to passe. And whereas God foresew it in his eternal counsel, and yet willed not to hinder it when he might, in effect he willed the being of it in the world, though simply he wils it not. The last point is, that this will of Gods good pleasure being hidden from vs, is not the rule of our actions & of our faith. Moses saith, Secret things belong to the Lord our God: & things revealed, to vs & to our children. Hence it follows, that we doe & may (with a submission) in our wils differ from this will of God, before it is known to vs, without sin. Paul would, by vertue of his Apostolical commission haue preached in Asia and Bythinia, & God would not, because it is said, the spirit withstood him: yet did not Paul sin herein. One good thing may differ from another and that which the creature sometime wils without offence, God willethe otherwise by his most righteous pleasure. Samuel praises for Saul, otherwise then the secret pleasure of God was; but when the decree of God was revealed to him, hee then stayd his praying. Here sundry men are to be reprobated that reason thus: If it be the will of God that I shall be saved, it shall be so, howsoeuer I liue: therefore I will liue as I list: they make the secret will of God the rule of their liues which should not be: because the revealed will of God is the Law, or the only rule of things to be done and beleueed.

Thus we see what the will of Gods pleasure is. Now this will is not meant in this text, how oft would I? For the pleasure of God cannot be withouted or resisted, Isa. 46. 10. My counsel shall stand, and I will doe as my pleasure: But the will here mentioned, may be resisted, and withouted, & would, ye would not. The signifying wil of God is, when he reuealeth some part and portion of his pleasure, so far forth as it ferues for the good of his creature, & the manifestation of his iustice or mercy: this signifying wil is not indeed the will of God properly, as the will of his good pleasure is, for it is the effect thereof: yet may it truly be soeareed. For as the effects of anger without the passion are called anger in God: so the signification of his wil, may be termed wil.

This

This will is propounded sometime more plainly, sometimes more darkly. It is propounded more plainly three waies, by his word, by his permission, by his operation. His word is his wil, for so Paul saith, Prone was the good wil of God. And it is not his decree or pleasure, but his signifying wil: because it ferues to declare & manifest what is pleasing & acceptable vnto God, what is our duty, & what he requires of vs, if we desire to come to life eternal. For this cause, both the law & the Gospel, and all the commandments, prohibitions, promises, & threatnings thereof, are the signifying wil of God. For commandments signifie what we are to do: prohibitions, what we are to leaue vndone: promises, what good he wil do vnto vs: threatnings, what punishment is due to sin. Furthermore, by reason of the world, the ministry & dispensation thereof is Gods signifying wil. For by it God signifies his pleasure touching mens saluation. Diuine permission is likewise the signifying wil of God. For by it he signifies that he wil not hinder the being of the thing permitted: & consequently that the thing permitted shall come to passe.

Thirdly, euery operatio or work of God signifies what God wil haue done, & what must come to passe. For when a thing is done, we know thereby what is & was the pleasure of God, considering nothing comes to passe without his will. When the signifying wil is more darkly propounded, it is because some things appertaining to the said wil, are concealed. And by reason of this concealment, sometime there seemes to be a contrariety between the signifying wil, & the wil of his good pleasure: but indeed there is none: & the end why God doth so darkly signifie & propound his pleasure, is not to hurt or deceive, but to procure the good of his creature. Examples of this kind, there be in Scriptures 3. sorts. First of all, God sometimes propounds a commandement to men, and conceales the end of the commandement. For the ends of diuine precepts are 3. one is Obedience, when God wil haue the thing commanded, to be done precisely as it is commanded: the other is Trial, when he wils not the thing commanded to be done absolutely, but only wils to make trial of the loyalty of his creature: the 3. is Conuictio, when by commanding God intends to couince his creature of disobedience. Thus paters sometime giue precepts to their children, that must be done: & sometime again they giue a commandement, the doing whereof they intend not, but only intend thereby to make experience of the affection & duty of their children. And sometime one man commands another only in way of conuictio: as when the creditor saith to the bankrupt, pay thy debt, which he neuer looks for, & which peraduenture he minds to forgive. Diuine precepts therefore be of 3. sorts, precepts of obedience, as the commandments of the moral law, precepts of trial, & precepts of conuictio. Now when God signifying wil is propounded in a precept, & the end of the precept is concealed, the pleasure of God is darkly signified. God giues a commandement to Abraham, Offer thine only sonne Isaac. The end was only to try Abraham, & this end was concealed, till Abraham was in doing the fact, for then the Angel of the Lord staied him, and said, Now I see Abraham feares God. And the very commandement, Offer Isaac, seemes to be flatte contrary to the will of Gods pleasure or decree: for as it appears by the euents, Isaac was not to be slain: neither for the not dayling of Isaac was decreed by God. Now then it may be said, why should God command any thing contrary to his decree? I answer, there is an apparent contrary, by reason the end of the commandement was concealed; but indeed there is none. For as it was gods decree that Isaac should not be offered: so also was it his decree, that Abraham should be tried in offering of Isaac. And with this decree doth this commandement accord. For it is a commandement not so much of absolute obedience, as of trial, & therefore it is a fit & conuenient means to accomplish Gods decree. The Lord by the hand of Moses giues a commandement to Pharaoh, Let the people goe: & yet Gods secret pleasure & purpose was, that he should not let them goe. Heere is contrariety in shew, but indeed none. For it was also gods decree, to couince Pharaoh of rebellion & hardnesse of heart: and to this end ferues this commandement: because properly according to Gods intention it was a commandement of conuictio: though Pharaoh for his part was to accept of it as of a commandement to be obeyed and accomplished.

By this doctrine the publicke Ministry of the word receiues a iust defence. Some are of opinion, it is a means to delude the world: because in it a commandement is giuen to all without exception to repent & beleue, & yet grace to repent & beleue is not. But they are deceived. For the commandement, Repent and beleue, though in the intent of the Minister it haue onely one end; namely the saluation of all, yet in the intention & counsell of God, it hath diuers ends. In them which be ordained to eternal life, it is a precept of obedience: because God wil enable them to do that which he commandeth: in the rest it is a commandement of trial or conuictio, that to vnbeleueers their sinne might be discovered, & all excuse cut off. Thus when the precept is giuen to beleue, and not the grace of faith, God doth not delude, but reprove & couince men of vnbeleefe, and that in his iustice.

The 2. example of the signifying wil of God darkly propounded, is when God propounds his promises, concealing the exception or condition thereof. Thou shalt rule over the fowles of the aire, the fishes of the sea, &c. And of Ierusalem the Lord saith, This is my rest for euermore: the promises take no place now; & yet there is no contrariety in Gods will, because the said promises must be vnderstood with the exceptions vnto vs fall from me, & prouoke mine anger by your sins.

The 3. example is, when God propounds his threats, concealing the conditions and exceptions thereof. I will faith the Lord, deliuer you no more: and it was his pleasure afterward to deliuer them again and again. Let me alone thus my

which may wax hot for I will consume them: & he spared the at the prayer of Moses. Yet forty daies & Ninive shall be destroyed: for all this Ninive was spared, & not destroyed: We may not here to much as dreame of any change or vntuith in God. For all threatnings denounced, must be vnderstood with this clause, Except ye repent & turne vnto me. And this exception God conceales, which he may the better terrifie mens consciences, & so prepare them to true repentance. Isa. 38.1. The Lord faith by the Prophet to Ezechias, Set thine house in order, for thou shalt die & not live: and yet he liued 15. yeares after. Here God conceales his own pleasure, in lengthning the daies of Ezechias, and signifies what shall befall him in respect of nature, and the helpe thereof. In all these examples we may not surmise any fraud or double dealing in God. For he doth not speake one thing, and minde another, after the fashion of hypocrites: but he conceales part of his will, & reueales part: and this he doth not for the hurt of any after the manner of the decciuers, but for the good of men.

Thus much for the signifying will of God: now I come to the text in hand. The wordes, I would haue gathered you, are not to be vnderstood of the decree of God, but of his signifying will, and namely of the ministry of the word. For when God sent his word to Hierusalem by his Prophets, he thereby signified that it was his pleasure and will to gather and conuert them. And he is said to will the conuersion of the Iewes in and by his word, two waies. First, because he approoueth it as a good thing in it selfe, being agreeable to his goodnesse and mercy. Secondly, because he commanded and required it of them as a duty of theirs, and as a thing necessarie to saluation. Some may haply say, it is a point of hard dealing, for God to command the Iewes to do that which they cannot doe, and to complaine because they are not gathered: and that a master might as well command his seruant to carry a mountaine vpon his backe, & complaine because it is not done. I answer thus: If a matter could giue to his seruant power & ability to carry a mountaine, he might then command him to do it: & if he should by his owne default lose this ability, the said master might stil command him and complaine, if he did not the thing commanded. And this is the case with God. For he gaue all men grace in our first parents to obey any of his commandements: this grace in them we haue cast away, & do not of our felues so much as desire it of God: and God for his part is not bound to giue vs this grace againe. He therefore may iustly command vs to turne vnto him, though we now be vnable to turye.

If we compare this text with Esa. 6.10. they may seeme to be contrary. For here Christ faith, I would haue gathered you: there he faith, Harden them that they be not gathered and conuerted. God therefore seemeth to will and not to will one and the same thing. Ans. There is but one will in God: yet doth it not equally will all things, but in diuers respects it doth will and will the same thing. He willett the conuersion of Hierusalem, in that hee approoueth it as a good thing in it selfe: in that hee commands it, and exhorts men to it: in that he giues them outward means of their conuersion. He wils it not, in that he did not decree effectually to worke their conuersion. For God doth approoue, & he may require many things, which neuertheless for iust causes known to himselfe, he will not do. The confirmation of the Angels that fell, God approoued as a thing good in it selfe, yet did he not will to confirme the. A Iudge in compassion approoues & wils the life of a malefactor: and yet withall, he wils the execution of iustice in his death: Euen so God sometime willett in his signifying will, which he wils not in the will of his good pleasure.

By this which hath bene said, wee learne, that where God erecteth the ministry of his word, he signifies thereby, that his pleasure is to gather men to saluation. In this regard the Prophet Esa. 49. 22. that the preaching of the Gospell, is a banner displayed, that all nations may come vnto it. All this is verified in this our English nation. For more then forty yeares hath God displayed this banner vnto vs, and more then forty yeares hath he signified in the ministry of his word, that his will is to giue mercy and saluation vnto vs. First therefore we owe vnto God all thankfulness & praise for this endles mercy. Secondly, wee are to reuerence the ministry of the word, in as much as God signifies his good will vnto vs thereby, and we are in all obedience to subiect our felues to it: and for this cause we must suffer our felues to be conuerted and gathered by it. Subiects vie to reuerence the letter of their Prince, how much more then must wee reuerence the letter of the liuing God, sent vnto vs, that is, the ministry of the word, and conforme our felues to it? Thirdly, hence we learne to fore-see our miserable condition in this land. For though God for his part haue long signified his will vnto vs, touching our euilllasting good, yet there is nothing to be found in the most of vs, but a neglect or contempt of the Gospell: and in most places men are wearie of it, as the Israelites were of Manna. What wearie of the goodnes of God, that offers and proclaimes mercy vnto vs? yea verily. And the more wearie we are of this, the more wearie we are of our owne happinesse, and consequently hasten to our owne perdition.

Secondly, it is to be obserued, that the rebellion of Ierusalem is against the signifying will of Christ, when he faith I would, ye would not. And hence it followes, that the signifying will of God is the rule of our obedience, and not the reuealed will. And therefore fo oft as God signifies vnto vs his will & pleasure, we must yeeld our felues in obedience to it. Now God signifies his will 3. waies (as I haue said) by his commandements and prohibitions, by his permission, & by his operation. Therefore

Therefore when he commands, we must obey: when he forbids, we must also obey: when he permits any euill, we must be content. Lastly, when God doth any thing, and brings it to passe, he signifies his pleasure: and we must obey. We are bidden to say, Thy will be done: & this is not only the will reuealed in his word, but also his will reuealed by any euent. For when any thing comes to passe, it comes to passe because it was the will of God. Furthermore, this signifying will must be the stay and ground of our patience & comfort. For when a thing is come to passe, the wil of God is past vpon it, & he hath signified his pleasure: for example, when a man is slain, the wil of God is past vpon his life: & he hath reuealed his pleasure touching his death. Vpon this consideration in all euents, are we to stay our minds.

Thirdly, it appeares hence, what mind must be in the Ministers and teachers of the word. They must put away all blind respects of profit and praise, and simply with honest hearts apply themselves and their ministry to this end, that they may gather a people to God: for that which is the minde of the master in any businesse, the same must also be the minde of the seruant: the mind of the master is here set downe, How oft would I haue gathered you?

Thus much of the will of God: now let vs come to the second point, to consider what is the will of man. That this may appeare, two things must be handled, the nature of mans will, and the strength thereof. Of the nature of will, I spake something before generally, there is yet some what more to be added. The nature of mans will may be gathered by the practise thereof. The practise of will stads in three things: the first is the action of the minde, namely, a consideration of the things to be done, and the end thereof: the second is Deliberation of the diuers means, whereby the fore-said thing may be done: the third is, after deliberation a determination what shall be done. The fourth action is proper to the wil, and that is election, whereby the will vpon determination of the minde, chooseth or refuseth, that is willett what shall be done, what not. The fit is, that the will in all her elections, keepest and maintaines her liberty. Because when it wils or nills any thing, it moues it selfe freely of it selfe to will or nill, without any external compulsion: and when it wils any thing, it so wils, as it retaining a naturall apettite to nill the same: and when it wils any one particular thing, it remains still apt not to will it, but to will another thing, or the contrary.

Again, the will of man must be distinguished from the power of man, whereby he doth any thing. Will and power in God are onely distinguished in our conceiuing, being indeede one and the same thing, namely, the essence of God. And therefore what God can will, he can do: what he willett, he doth, and his willing of any thing, is his doing of it. It is not so in man, who can will that which he cannot do; as Paul

A faith, To will is present wish me, but I cannot doe that which I would. Will therefore is one thing, and power to do the thing willed is another.

The second thing to be handled, is the strength of will, that is, what will can do, what not; and how farre it extends it selfe. That this may appeare: Will must be considered according to the foure estates of man, the estate of innocency before the fall, the estate of corruption after the fall, the estate of regeneration after conuersion, and the estate of glory after this life.

In the estate of innocency, the will of man is a power of willing either good or euill. For God gaue Adam a commandement, in which he forbade him to eat of the tree of knowledge of good and euill. Adam therefore could either keepe or breake this commandement. This reason holds not in vs since the fall, yet doth it hold in Adam: because with this commandement he receiued the power to obey: and that he could not obey, it appeared by the euent: because hee did not obey. Ecclesiastes faith, Eccle. 7. 31. God made man right from the beginning: there is the power to will that which is good: and they found many inueniours: there is also a power towil that which is euill. Moses faith to the Israelites, I fe before you this day life or death, blessing and cursing: therefore choose life, that thou and thy seed may liue. Deut. 30. 19. These wordes are a sentence of the law, telling what we ought to do, & not what we can now doe, but what we could do by the gift of creation before the fall. Here a difference of powers must be made: the power to will that which is good, was a gift put into Adams heart by God: and the power to will that which is euill, was in him before his fall, not a gift, but onely a possibility to will euill, if he should cease to do this duty. And thus had hee power to will both good and euill.

In Adams will there were two things, Liberty and Mutabilitie. Liberty was two-folde. The first is a liberty empty to will, or to nill, or to suspend. And this is liberty of nature, because it is founded in the nature of will, from which it cannot possibly be severed; and therefore it still remains in the damned spirits: because where this liberty is wanting, there is no will.

The second liberty is liberty of grace, which is a power to will or nill well, or to will that which is good, & to nill that which is euill. This liberty is founded, not in the nature, but in the goodnes of the will. By goodnes I meane the holines of the will, which is the image of God. And here we must take heed of the opinion of some, who thinke that Adam was created and placed in such a condition, in which hee was neither righteous, nor vnrigheteous, but in a meane between both. But this is directly contrary to the Apostles, who faith, that man was created in righteousnesse and holinesse. And by this meane in the first instant of Adams creation, he wanted liberty of grace. Again, by reason of the second liberty, Adam had a further liberty from sin, & a liberty from misery. The changeableness of Adams will appeares

Rom. 7. 18

Eph. 4. 24
Col. 3. 10

in this, that though it was created in goodness, yet was it made changeably good. For such was the goodness and inclination of his will to obey God, as might be altered and changed by force of temptation. The cause of this mutability must be considered, and it is this: That a creature righteous by creation may remain eternal and constantly righteous, two favours or helps of God are required: the (a) first is, a power to persevere in goodness. Without this power the creature of it self ceaseth to be good. The (b) second is an act or decree, and that is the will to persevere, or perseverance it self. This also is required with the former, for God gives not only the power, but also the will & the deed, and the creature doth not the good which it can do, vntles God cause it to do the said good, as he causeth it to be able to do good. Both these helps the good Angels haue, and therefore they stand. And as for Adam, he receiued of God the first helpe and not the second. For before the goodness of his will he receiued of God a power constantly to persevere in goodness, if he would; yet the act of perseverance was left to the choice and liberty of his owne will. We may behold the like in nature. God creates the eye, & put into it the faculty of seeing; & withal, he adds to the eye necessary helpe by the light of the Sunne: as for the act of seeing, it is left to mans liberie: for he may see if he will, and againe if he will, he may shut his eyes. The Physician by art procures an appetite: this done, in the next place he provides conuenient food; yet the act of eating is in the pleasure of the patient: for he may eat if he will, & if he will he may abstaine. And thus God gaue Adam the power to persevere in righteousness, but the will he left to himselfe.

It may be said, If Adam receiued power to doe good if he would, and not the will to will that he could, he then receiued not sufficient grace. I answer, he receiued sufficient for the perfection of his nature, for the full obedience of the will of God, and for the attainment of euermlasting happines, if he would not be wanting to himselfe; but he receiued not sufficient grace for the causing of the immutability of his nature: neither was it of necessity to be given to a creature. A Goldsmith intends to make a Jewell of greatest value and price: he compounds it of golde, pearle and precious stones: when he hath brought it to perfection, hee doth not put this condition to it, that if it fall, it shal not be broued or broken. And God created Adam in all perfection, and gaue him a power & ability to continue in the said perfection, if he would: yet did not he put vnto his nature this condition, that hee would be vnchangeable & vntolerable, when it should be assailed by the force of outward temptation.

The vice of the former doctrine. In Adams example, we see the weakness of the excellent creature in it self without the grace of God: For Adam hauing power to persevere, could not for all this, act or put in execution the said power, without the further helpe of God. He could fall of himselfe, he could not stand or rise againe: hee could not auoide the least cull, but as he was helped of God. Wee therefore being sinfull wretches, much more are to acknowledge our infirmities, and to ascribe all we doe or can do that is good, to the grace of God. Thus haue the godly alwaies done. The Iewes in their repentance say: Conuert thou me, and I will conuert, Ier. 31. 18. The spouse of Christ, Cant. 1. 3. Draw vs, & we will run after thee. David saith, Psal. 119. 37. Incline my heart to thy commandments; turne mine eyes from the beholding of vanity, and quicken me in thy precepts. Aug. saith, Give that which thou commandest, and command that thou wilt. We are to God as the sicke man to his keeper, who saith: Take me vp, and I will rise: holde me, & I will stand. In regard of this faculty, it is the best for vs to deny our selues, and by faith to depend on the prouidence and mercy of God.

Againe, such as beleue in Christ haue great cause to be thankfull to God. For they haue the beginnings of further grace then euer Adam receiued. He receiued onely the power to persevere in his happie estate, if hee himselfe would: but they that beleue befall the power of perseverance, receiue the will and the deed. Paul saith, Work your saluation with feare & trembling; and then he adds, Phil. 2. 13. It is God that workes in vs the will and the deed, whereby we runne the race to eternall life.

In the estate of corruption two things are to be considered of mans will, the first what it can doe, and how neere it comes to the doing of a good worke. The second, what it cannot doe. For the declaratio of the first, two things must be considered in corrupt will: a liberty, & a possibility. The liberty is a certain freedom to will or not, or to suspend. For this liberty is remaining since the fall of Adam, & it is natural to the wil, from which it cannot possibly be seuered. This liberty is large, and shews it selfe in three kinds of actions: natural, humane, ecclesiasticall. natural actions are such as are common to men and beasts, as to eat, drink, sleepe, smell, heare, taste, moue: common experience declares a freedom to will in all these actions. Humane actions are such as are common to all men: & I may fitly reduce them to three heads. The first is, the study and practise of arts, trades, or occupations, & professions of all kinds. And that man hath freedom to will in all these, experience testifies. The second is, the gouernment of societies, namely of families and commonwealths. The Lord said to Cain of Abel, Gen. 4. 7. His appetite shall be subiect to thee, that is, in freedom of thy will thou shalt rule ouer him, and his will shall be subiect to thine. Peter said to Amantias, that the giuing, or the not giuing of his lands was before hee gaue them, in his own liberty. And Paul saith, 1 Cor. 7. 37. that the father hath power of his own will to giue or not to giue his child in marriage, as hee shall see occasion. The third is the practise of ciuill vertue, iustice,

iustice, temperance, liberality, chastity. To this purpose Paul saith, Rom. 2. 14. that the Gentiles do other things contained in the law, and that by nature. For outwardly to be chaste, iust, bountifull, and so forth, is in the power of natural and corrupt will. It may be said, that these things are the gifts of the holy Ghost, I answer thus: the gifts of the holy Ghost are twofold, gifts of restraint, & gifts of renouation. Gifts of restraint are such as serue only to keepe in the corruption of nature, & not to mortifie or abolish it. And they are common to all men both good and bad, and serue only to maintaine outward peace, and comely order in the societies of men. Of this kinde are ciuill vertues. Gifts of renouation, are such graces of the holy Ghost, as serue not onely to restrain the corruption of the inward man, but also to mortifie in the roote, and to make a change of our sinfull nature. Now vertues of this kinde are onely incident to such as are in Christ.

The third kind of actions are Ecclesiasticall, namely, such as pertaine to the outward duties of the worship of God. And there is also a liberty of will in them. For corrupt and sinfull man, hath power and liberty to thinke of God, and to thinke many things of him, good in themselves: power to reade and search the Scriptures: power to speake and talke of the word of God: power to come to the congregation and heare a sermon, as the Athenians did: power to conceiue a zeale (I say not a good zeale, but onely a zeale I say) for the maintenance of outward duties of religion. Paul saith Rom. 10. 2. that the obinate Iewes had a zeale of God, and were followers of the iustice of the law; and that his selfe being a Pharisee vnconnected, was vnreprouable in respect of the law of God, Phil. 3. 6. Thus farre can man proceed by the freedom of corrupt will: and the diuel by natural strength goes somewhat further. For he is said to beleue: and he conceiues his faith, not by illumination of the Spirit of God, as man doth, but by the remainders of the light of nature, & by the power which yet remaines in his corrupted will. For we may not suppose, that since his fall he is enlightened by the spirit of God in any thing.

Thus wee see what is the liberty of corrupt will. We may yet further conceiue it to be full of weakness and incibility, which I will expresse in three rules.

The first: That which the will can will, it cannot doe, vnlesse God will. Hereupon Saint James bids vs say, We will doe this or that, if God will. And Paul wishing that hee might haue a prosperous journey to Rome, adds this clause, By the will of God, Hierod. Pontius, Pilate, and the Iewes, did nothing against Christ, but that which the counsell of God hath determined before to be done.

The second: That which the will can will, it cannot doe without the helpe of God: for in him we liue, moue, and haue our being. This helpe is two fold, Preferuatiue of the wil both for power and act, and the Directiue thereof, whereby it is ordered & applied to the thing it willeth.

The third: Often the will neither willeth nor doth the things it can will and doe, because it is hindered. It is hindered sometimes by the minde that misleades the will: sometimes againe by the worke of Satan. Thus Paul saith, Thou Satan hindered him from coming to Theſſalonica.

The vse of this doctrine is two-fold; first the liberty of the will is the condemnation of the world. For in ciuill & ecclesiasticall actions men do not that which they can do: so farre be the most from doing that which the Gospell requires, that they do not that which nature can doe. Some pleade, that if they be ordained to saluation, they shall certainly be saved, otherwise not: and therefore they say, they will leaue all to God, and liue as they list: but this shall be their condemnation, that they haue not liued according to ciuill vertue as they might, they come not to the Church, they search not the scriptures, nor hear sermons: in a word, they vse not the good meanes of saluation so far as they are able to vse them by the strength of nature.

Secondly, the weakness of will in his liberie, must reach vs to abate our pride, and to humble our selues: because we cannot doe any thing, no not so much as moue hand, foot, or finger, without the helpe of God. Ieroboam when hee had stretched out his hand to lay hold on the Prophet, could not so much as pull it in againe. And this consideration must like wise moue vs to be thankfull to God, because the actions we doe, we doe by him.

The second thing to be considered in the corrupt will, is (a) a Possibility of willing that which is good. This Possibility is a certaine condition of the will, whereby it can will that which is good, after that God hath presented vs with his grace. A stone is not of this nature, neither is the beast, because they are creatures vnreasonable, wanting both will and understanding: and therefore no way capable of grace: whereas man in that hee hath will and vnderstanding, hath a possibility of doing that which he cannot do. The Fathers in this fence say, To be able to haue faith is nature, to haue faith indeed is grace.

Hitherto I haue shewed what we can do in the corrupt estate of man: now let vs see what it cannot doe. And because here the main differences come to be considered, between vs & the Church of Rome; I will first lay downe a sure ground, & then build vpon it: The ground is this: though liberty of nature remains, yet liberty of grace, that is, to will well, is lost, exiungit, sed abolsed by the fall of Adam. I proue it thus: Liberty of grace is founded in the goodness of integrity of the wil: now this goodness of the wil is abolished by the fall of Adam: and therefore the liberty it self that is founded thereon, that the goodnesse or integrity of the wil is lost. I confirme it thus: That which wee put on in our conuerſion, we want by nature: we put on this goodnesse in our conuerſion. For in it we put on the new man created according to the Image of God in justice and holiness, as Paul faith, Eph. 4. 24. Again, if all the motions and inclinations of the heart be euill, and only euill, and continually euill, there is no goodness in the heart: but the first is true: For the Lord faith, Gen. 6. 3. that he saw the frame of the thoughts of the heart to be only euill continually. Paul makes three parts of man in the estate of innocency, the body, the soule, & the spirit; that is, the image of God wrought by the spirit, being the ornament and glory of both the former. Now since the fall, the spirit is turned to flesh: for whatsoever is born of flesh is flesh (saith Christ, Ioh. 3. 6.) that is, wholly flesh, and only flesh: and the naturall disposition of the flesh is to lust against the spirit; what goodnesse then can be in the will? Hee that must enter into the kingdome of heauen must first be borne againe: now looke as it is in the first birth, so it is in the second. In the first, an imperfect man is not made a perfect man, but that which is no man is made a man: euen so in the second birth, hee that is a sinner, and hath nothing in him to please God, is made iust and righteous. For regeneration is not in respect of the substance of body or soule, or in respect of the faculties of the soule, but only in respect of the goodnesse thereof, which is a conformity to the will of God. And if there be any part or portion thereof yet remaining, there cannot be a new birth, but only a repairing of that which is decayed with a confirmation and increase of it.

The second reason. There is a no power or aptnes in the wil corrupted, to will that which is truly good. Therefore liberty of grace to will well is lost. The minor I prouue thus: Eze. 36. 26. A new hart also will I giue you, & a new spirit will I put within you, and I will take away the stony hart out of your body, and I will giue you a hart of flesh. Here two things are set down distinctly. The first, that the new and fleshy heart is the gift of God, that is, an heart ready and apt to giue obedience. The second, that there is in vs no aptnes or ability to receiue this gift of God because our hearts are stony. God therefore giues the fleshy heart, and the aptnesse to receiue this gift, by taking away the stony heart. Christ faith, that none can come vnto him, vntill the Father draw him. Now if there were in vs by nature the least power or aptnesse to come to Christ, then drawing were needless, (for that argues obstinate rebellion) & it were sufficient to succour, helpe, and confirme the fore-said power, without any morcadoe. Saint Paul faith, that the wisdom of the flesh, that is, the best inclinations and motions of the mind of a naturall man, are not only enemies, but euen enmity to God. Now in enmity, there is nothing but hatred and contempt of God. And in the hatred of God, what inclination or aptnes can there be to loue and obey him? Again Paul faith, The naturall man is not capable of the things of God: for they are foolishnesse to him: neither can he know them, for they are spiritually discerned: In the mind of a naturall man there be two things to be considered, the act, and the power of knowing and approving that which is truly good. And here Paul giues his sentence of both; of the act, that the mind cannot know the things of God: of the power, that the mind hath no capacibility or aptnesse to acknowledge or approve them; as a little vessel hath no aptnes to receive a great quantity of liquor. Again, we are not apt or sufficient of our selues to thinke a good thought as of our selues, but our sufficiency is of God. Therefore nature corrupted wants ability so much as to thinke a good thought: much lesse to will that which is good. Again Paul tells the Ephesians, that they were dead in sinnes and trespasses. And this death or deadnesse is not only in respect of the performance of that which is good, but also in regard of power to performe it. For if the least power to do good remaine since the fall, man is not dead as yet, but dying or drawing on, because as yet some portion of spirituall life remains. And if this be so, how are we quickened together with Christ? and how is it a wonder that the dead heare the voice of Christ? Ioh. 5. 25. Again Paul faith to the Ephesians, Eph. 5. 8. that they were once darknesse, but now are light in the Lord. Now in darknesse there is no aptnesse at all, either to giue or to receiue light. But how were they made light? without any worke or co-operation of theirs: euen as in the creation light was taken, not from some other precedent beginnings of light, but out of darknesse, which conferred nothing at all to the being of light.

The third reason: There is not only an impotency to good, but such a forcible pronenes & dispositio to euill, as that we can do nothing but sinne. Ieremie saith, that the heart of man is wicked about all things, who can know it? Paul saith, that the Romans were once seruants of sinne, and free in respect of righteousness: and of himself, that the law was spiritual, he carnal & sold vnder sinne. And of vnrepentant sinners hee saith, that they are in the snare of the diuell according to his will. And this disposition of which I speake, is not to some few sinnes, but to all sinnes without exceptio: because, as euery man takes of Adam the whole nature of man; euen so he takes the whole corruption of mans nature. And where this huge and horrible masse of corruption takes place, there all inclination and power to goodnes must needs giue place. It may be objected, that if the will be in bondage vnder sin, it hath lost his liberty quite. I answer, not so: for both may stand together. The prisoner though hee haue lost a great part of his liberty yet hath he not lost all: for within the prison he may (as he will) either sit stand, lie, or walke. And though hee which is captiue to sin can do nothing but sinne, yet may hee in sinning vse his liberty: & in the diuers kinds of euils intended, shew the freedom of his will.

The fourth reason. All the goodnes we haue and all wee can doe that is pleasing to God, is wholly wholly in Scripture ascribed to God. He that is the child of God, is borne of God: not of blood, that is, not of naturall generation: not of the will of the flesh, that is, not of the power and inclination of naturall will, not of the will of man, that is, the heroically inclination of excellent men. We are the workmanship of God created in Christ to good workes. Now the creature conferres nothing to his creation, which is wholly from the Creator: because to create is not to make something of something, but something of nothing. Christ faith, without me ye can do nothing. And the reason is there rendered: Because Christ is the vine, and they which beleue are vine-branches: which branches, that they may bring forth good fruit, must first be set into Christ, & then draw their sap, that is, power to doe good from him.

Patrons of nature against the grace of God, alleadge foure speciall reasons for libertie of wil in moral acts, that is, in things and actions good according to the morall law. The first is this: God hath giue sundry comandements to man since his fall, some pertaining to the law, some to the Gospel, as comandements to turne vnto God, to beleue, to repēt. And all comandements are giuen in vaine, vales there be freedom of will to do them, or not to do them. I answer first, these comandements set not down what we can do, but what we should doe: they signifie, not our ability, but our office & duty, whereby we should please God and come to saluation. And if the comandements be impossible, it is not Gods fault, but ours, for they are not impossible to created but to corrupt nature: secondly, though we cannot will to doe that which God commands, yet are not his comandements idle. For they are the instruments and meanes of the Spirit of God, whereby he effects in vs the good hee commands.

The second objection. Wee are bound to giue vnto God an account of all our doings in the day of iudgement, and this were not equall, vnlesse we had power to will both good and euill. I answer, it sufficeth to bind vs to a reckoning, that once we had liberty in Adam to will either good or euill. And all men since the fall haue some measure of liberty of will: the wicked liberty in sinne: the righteous liberty in duties of righteousness.

The third objection from testimonies of Scripture. It is alleaged that the Samaritane, which lay wounded betwene Iericho and Ierusalem, is a figure of mankind halfe dead in sinne. I answer, that in parables nothing may be gathered that is beside the scope thereof: and the scope of this parable is nothing els, but to shew who is our neighbour. Again, we graunt that liberty of wil is not abolished, but wounded: because though liberty of grace to will well be lost, yet liberty of nature to will, still remains. Again, the words of Christ to the Angel of Laodicea are objected; Be hold I stand at the dore and knocke: if any man open, I will come in. Here (say some) to knocke, is the worke of grace, and to open, the worke of free-will. I answer, that the words, (if any man open) are conditionall: and therefore determine nothing of power of wil either to or fro. Again, the words set not down what the Angel is able to doe, but what his office is, and what hee can doe by grace. Furthermore the place of Deuteronomie is objected, The word which I command thee, is neere thee, that thou mayest doe it. But in these words Moses sets down, what the Israelites can doe by the grace of a Mediatour, who fulfilling the law for vs, and giuing grace to obey the same: makes the comandements of the law (which otherwise are impossible) to be easie. Thus Paul hath expounded this text, Rom. 10. 8. where he signifies, that sentences of the law must not legally, but euangelically be vnderstood of them that are in Christ, and fulfill the law by him.

The fourth objection. When man is conuerted, he is not conuerted against his will: for then God should deale with a man after the manner of a stone or a beast. Therefore hee which is conuerted, is conuerted with the content of his owne will. Answer. This content is not of our selues, but of God. For as the conuersion is of God, so is the will to be conuerted. Of this point, more afterward.

Vpon the ground formerly deliuered, sundry questions of great moment are resolved. The first is, whether a naturall man or an infidel, can by the freedom of his will, without faith, and without the helpe of God, doe any worke morally good, that is, a worke in which there is no fin: they of the Church (as of Rome for many hundred yeares haue answered, yea: for they confidently teach, that a man pressed with temptation, may without faith by the speciall blesse of God, & without it, by his owne strength, doe that which is morally good, that no sin at all be committed therein. We answer, no: & that vpon sufficient warrant. For such as the beginning of an action is, such is the action it selfe: now the minde and will of man are the beginnings of all their actions: & in them there is no ability to think or to will that which is truly good, but a continual disposition to the contrary. All actions therefore proceeding thence are only and continually euill: Vpon this ground Paul faith, that to the vnclane, the vse of all things is vnclane: And Christ faith, that as euill tree cannot bring forth good fruit. And, Whatsoeuer is not of faith, without exception, is sinne. To this doctrine alwaies subscribed the Orthodox & ancient Church. The Ararican Council faith, It is from the gift of God, that we keepe ourselues from iniustice: And, that a man (a) doth no good things, which God enables him not to do. Cyprian faith, All we can do is Gods. Hierome faith, Without Christ every vertue is but a vice, Gregorie, If faith be not first wrought in our hearts, other things cannot be good, though they seeme to be so. Augustin. faith expressly, that all the worke of vnbeleuers are finnes: because whatsoever is not of faith, is sinne. And hee faith thus of Pelagius the heretick: Sometimes he payed the power of the will with such equal weights in even balance, that he might determine how it availeth somewhat to cause us not to sinne: which if it be so, there is no place reserved for the helpe of grace, without which we say, free will hath no force at all in causing us not to sinne. In this speech there are two things worthy observation. One, that (in Augustines judgement) free will of it selfe hath no force at all to cause man not to sin. Of the same mind is the master of the sentences, who faith, that man before hee be repaired by grace, cannot but sin; though the Schoolers afterward, for the most part dissent from him. The second, that it was the heresie of Pelagius to teach, that free will somewhat availeth to cause vs not to sinne. With this jumbles the determination of the Councell of Trent, when it faith, Let him be accursed, that saith, all workes done before any iustificacion, are sinnes indeede. For, thus it innuents closely, that will, before the grace of iustificacion, partly helps, and partly of it selfe, can do that which is good, at the least morally, as they speake. And this is the resolute sentence almost of all Papists. I doubt not therefore to avouch that the present religion of the Church of Rome renues in part, the heresie of Pelagius, and in these last daies propounds it againe to the world with new varnish and fresh colours. To avoide this charge, they answer the place of Augustine before alleaged, thus. When Pelagius faith, the will is of force not to sinne, his meaning (say they) was, that will was of force to cause vs neuer to sinne through the course of our liues. I answer againe, Augustine, who knew the meaning of Pelagius, speaks not onely of the life of man, but even of particular actions, as appeares by these words, Hee that praies, Leade vs not into temptation, praies that hee may not doe any sinne. Vincentius Tyrimensis tooke this to be the heresie of Pelagius, that man by his owne free-will might do some good things. For these are his words: Who before that propheticke Pelagius, did ever presume that the vertue of free-will was so great, that he did not thinke the grace of God was necessarie for the helping of it in this doing of good things according to euery act?

It is objected to the contrary, that Infidels can doe things of the law which are good: and that they haue bin and are indued with many vertues, which are the gifts of God. Ans. Infidels may doe things good in their kind, but they cannot doe them well: because they apply them to wrong ends, as honour, profit, pleasure. And a good thing done to a wrong end, ceaseth to be good, and is euill in the doct. Again, the vertues of the heathen, as they are of GOD, are good; yet as they are vied, or rather abused of men, they are turned to sinnes.

It is alleaged, that wicked Pharao did a good worke, when he said, I haue sinned, the Lord is righteous, I and my people are sinners: pray forme, &c. Answer. The confession is good in his kind, but not good in Pharao: because it

A proceeded not of loue to God, but of feare of punishment; and it was made in hypocrisie, because afterward it hardened his heart.

Further it is alleaged, that Nebuchadnezzar a heathen man was rewarded of God for sucking of Tyrus; and that God would not haue rewarded him, if his worke had beene a sinne. Ans. The reward was temporal; and he was rewarded for his labour onely, and not for the goodnesse thereof.

Lastly, it may be objected, that if wee can not doe good workes by freedome of corrupt will, then all our actions, ouerating, drinking, sleeping, buying, selling, and whatsoever wee can doe, is sinne: and no sinne may be done, and therefore nothing must be done. Ans. Actions before named, incident to the life of man, are not sinnes of themselves: for then they might not be done at all; but they are sinnes onely in respect of the manner of doing: because they are not done in obedience to God; and referred to him as to their right end, but by ends are propounded. And this is the condition of euery man til he be converted, that he can doe nothing but sin and displease God, even when the action is praise-worthy before men.

The consideration of this doctrine serueth to correct the erroneous opinion of many, who thinke themselves in good case and highly in the fauour of God; because they are no theues, murderers, blasphemers, adulterers, &c. But alas they are deceived; there is matter enough of condemnation within them, though they be no outrageous malefactors. For all they doe is sinne before God, till they be renewed by grace. In eating, drinking, sleeping, buying, selling, in all they doe, they sinne. Not that eating, drinking, sleeping, buying, selling, are sinnes in themselves, but because they faile in the right manner of doing these actions.

Secondly, in that wee can doe nothing but sin till we be regenerate, we are taught to acknowledge our bondage vnder sinne and Satan; yea; we must labour to feele this bondage and to groane vnder the burden of it. This being done, we must goe further yet, and with hungering and thirsting hearts feele to the Mediator Christ, who preacheth deliuerance to captiues, and which giueth deliuerance from sinne, Satan, hell, death, condemnation, to all such as with touched and bruiued hearts flie vnto him.

The second question is. Whether a naturall man by the power of his wil may be able to resist & overcome a temptation. The Papist answers, that he is able to overcome lesse & easier temptations of himselfe; yea, & greater too, if he be helped by God: and that sundry temptations do not exceed the strength of mans nature. But we are to hold, & we teach the contrary, that the will of man since the fall of Adam cannot overcome so much as the least temptation. Because the power wherby a temptation should be overcome, is lost and abolished, that is, the power to nill that that is euill, & to will that that is good. And where is no power to resist, there can be no resistance. When we pray to God, and say, Leade vs not into temptation, we acknowledge that there is no temptation at all that we can of our selues withstand without the helpe of God. Peter bids vs Resist Satan our aduersarie: and hee shewes the right means when he addes these words, stedfast in faith.

It is objected, that a naturall man can either sinne, or not sinne. I answer; 'Tis true in regard of actions pertaining to outward gouernement, and in regard of open sinnes, murder, theft, adultery, &c. yet not alwaies true, but onely at sometimes. For euen the righteous sometime fall into open offences. And though the nature man occasioned to sinne, abtaine from open offence, yet gets hee no victory. For though hee auoide the outward act, yet can hee not auoid the wicked inclination of his heart. And the abstinence from outward sin, is not without sinne. Because it proceeds from a person vnreconciled to God, it hath not his beginning from faith: againe, it is for by respects, for the getting of a praise, the auoiding of open shame, and not for the honour of God.

The third question is, whether an vnregenerate man by the power of his will can obserue the law, though not fully, yet in respect of the substance of the act. The doctrine of long time hath bin in schools and Church, that he can: and that by his owne strength, hee may keepe all the morall precepts, so as no sin he committed, (a) for some short space of time. But the truth is, he can not. For if wee graunt and suppose an action, we must presuppose the ground and beginning thereof. Now the integritie or sanitie of will, whereby it was able to will that which is good, is the ground of a good act: and it is lost: and therefore there can be no keeping of the law in respect of substance. The substance of the first table is, to loue God with all the heart, soule, strength: and the substance of all negatiue commandments is, Thou shalt not lust. And the naturall will cannot possibly reach to the doing of these. It is alleaged, that a naturall man may giue almes and doe iustice to others, and such like. Answer, in the substance of any duty commanded there be two things, the act to be done, and the manner of doing it: & that is to doe it in faith, with a mind to obey God, and to intend his honour thereby. And this manner of doing a worke is the forme of euery worke, that makes it to be good indeede: and without it, works commanded in the law, are but as a body without life or soule, or as matter without forme. Will therefore is vnable to obserue any one commandment in his owne intire substance.

And it must be remembered as a maine ground, that the law beside external duties requires inward obedience, in knowledge of

A God and his will, in faith, hope, loue, patience, and the subiection of our thoughts, wills, and affections to the will of God. In respect of this inward and spirittual obedience, the holy Ghost faith, the law is impossible, Rom. 8. 3. and that the wisdom of the flesh cannot be subiect to the law of God, v. 7. that this is the yoke, which neither we nor our fathers could beare, Act. 15. 10.

Again, it was the heresie of Pelagius, that a man by the strength of his owne free-will may keepe all the commandments of God, though (as they say) hee doth it somewhat hardly. And the Papists are not farre from this when they say, that man by naturall strength may keepe the whole law for some little time.

The fourth question is, whether natural corrupted will can any way prepare and dispose it selfe to his owne conuerfion and iustificacion: that is take away the impediments and make himselfe apt and capable of his iustificacion. The (b) doctrine hath bin for diuers hundreds of yeares, that will can doe it: and the doctrine of the Papists now is, that the will, so it be stirred vp by God, can doe it. But the certaine truth is, that will cannot. The conuerfion of a sinner is a creation: and no creature can prepare it selfe to his owne creation. That very thing (c) whereby a man should prepare himselfe to any good duty, is lost by Adams fall: and therefore the worke of preparation is Gods and not ours; vnlesse it be possible for a man dead in his sinnes to prepare himselfe to his owne spirittual viuification: by nature we are seruants of sinne, and our liberty begins in our iustificacion. Therefore before we are iustified, we cannot so much as will that which is good. Indeede the Israelites prepared their hearts to seeke the Lord: and Ezra prepared his heart to seeke the law of the Lord. But this was the worke of men regenerate, whereby they renewed in themselves the purpose of obeying God, and of persevering in duties of Godlinesse.

The fifth and principall question of all is, whether a naturall man can will his owne conuerfion or regeneration. The learned among the Papists teach on this manner. d That will alone by it selfe cannot: yet that will can, if it be preuented and stirred vp by some good cogitation cast into the mind and some good desire stirred vp in the heart, and be withal helped and directed by God. They vse to open their mindes by these comparisons. The eye in darknes sees nothing, and is as it were without the faculty of seeing: yet if an object be set before the eye, and light be brought in, then can it see. Again, a man lies a sleepe in a dungeon, and he doth not so much as thinke of coming forth: yet let a man come and call him, and reach downe a corde vnto him, he will then awake, take hold of the cord, and put it vnder his arme holes, as Jeremy did, & hang thereupon. And being thus helped, he thob can and doth come forth of the dungeon. The doctrine we teach is the plaine contrary, That will before is bee stirred and converted cannot so much as will his owne conversion. This follows vpon the former ground: for the power to will that that is truly good, is lost: a power to will our conversion, is a power to will that which is good: therefore the power to will our owne conversion, is lost. Beside preventing and exciting motions that serue to stirre vp and helpe the will, there is further required, that the will be regenerate, before it can will that which is good: and without this gift of regeneration (which is the true preventing grace) all external motions and excitations to that which is good, are of no effect. For the cause must goe before the effect. Now that the will may effect and do that which is good, the cause is the regeneration thereof: in which is giuen to the will, not only a new action, whereby it is able well, but also a new quality, whereby it is able and can will well. And this abilitie of willing well, goes before the act of good will, as the cause before the effect. When a man is dead, chafe him and rubbe him, put aqua viva into him to warme him at the heart: when this is done, take him by the hand, plucke him vp, & bid him walke: for all this, he will not stirre the least ioynt, neither can he. All chafing and rubbing, all speech and perswasion, and all helps in the world be in vaine, vnles the soule be restored to the body: Euen so, no perswasion offered to the minde, nor good desires to the will, are of any moment, till the image of God standing in holines, which is a conformity to the will of God, and the very foule of our soules, begin to be restored. Nay, the mind is vacapable of any good thought, and the will of a good desire, till God once againe create in them anew qualitie or property of holinesse, that the minde in thinking may thinke well, and the will in willing may will well, or will that which is good. For though it bee the nature of the will, to will or not will, yet the power and formal beginning of wel-willing is the integrity or goodness of the will. It is objected, that the will to accept and receive grace, is in vs before grace be received. I answer thus, the first act of will; whereby the will in his regeneration begins to assent vnto God, & begins to will to be converted, is indeede the worke of the will, (because it is the will that willet) yet doth it not arise of the naturall strength of the will, but from the grace of God that reneweth it. For to will to be regenerate, is the effect and testimony of regeneration begun. Paul handling the point of the predestination & iustificatiō of a sinner, compares God to a potter & vs to clay. Now the clay before it is framed to a vessel of honour, and while it is in framing, is merely pafsiue, and doth nothing at all for the framing of it selfe. When a man is to bee regenerate, God takes away the stony heart, that is by nature disobedient and altogether vnapt to obey: and he giues

A a fleshy heart, that is pliable and flexible to obedience. Now to will to be converted, is a good thing, & one point of true obedience: and therefore it proceedes not from the heart of man, till it be mollified and framed by God to that which is good. What hast thou, saith Paul, that thou hast not receiued, and if thou hast receiued it, why dost thou boast? Now, if to will to be healed were of vs, we haue matter of boasting in our selues. Againe, he saith, we are not sufficient or able to thinke a good thought as of our selues, but our sufficiency is of God: much lesse then can we of our selues will or desire to be regenerat. The health and life of the soule is of God, who raiseth vs from death to life: now to will to be healed, and to will to liue vnto God, is the beginning of health and life. A certaine Councill saith, If any man doe anouch, that God doth expect our will, that it may be purged from sinne, and doth not confesse that it is the operation of the Spirit of God in vs, that doth make us to will to be purged, he resists the holy Ghost, saying by Salomon. The will is prepared by God. Augustine saith, It is not in him that runneth, but in God that breueth mercy, that all may be giuen to God, who both prepares the will of man to be helped, and helps it being prepared: who presents him that willet that he may will, & followes him with helpe that willet, that he will not in vaine. They which are bodily sicke, can will to be healed before they begin to be healed, because they be aluie: but they which are spiriually sicke in sinne before their conversion, are dead in their sinne: and therefore they can neither thinke, nor will, nor desire their conversion. When Christ was about to cure a sicke man, he moues this question to him, Wilt thou be healed? and so when God is about the worke of regeneration in any man, he inwardly moues this question in the heart, whether he will be regenerate or no: and by this means stirres vp a desire to be regenerate. If any man thinke that by this doctrine, men are regenerate against their wills: I answer, when God begins to regenerate vs, he makes vs then willing, being otherwise by nature vnwilling: and thus he regenerates vs not against our wills yet so, as the willingness to be regenerate is not of vs, but of God. It may be alledged further, that the act of the will whereby it wills to be converted, goes before the act of God, whereby he turns vs to himselfe: that otherwise, we are converted without our consent, and that God works vpon vs as vpon a block or stone. Ans. in respect of time they are both done together, but in respect of order of nature, first the will begins to be turned of God, before it can will to be turned. For every cause is before his effect, if not in time, yet in priority of nature. The wil converted so soone as God hath begonne to renew it, wills to be renewed: and it could not will the conversion of it selfe, vnlesse it had formerly tasted of the goodnesse thereof. And though we first feele the desire to bee converted, before the grace of conversion, it is nothing: for sometimes wee perceiue the effect before the cause: as we see the light of the Sunne before the Sunne: and we see the light of a candle in a house before we see the candle. Therefore to will to be regenerate may be the effect of regeneration begun, though it first of all appeare. For the better clearing of this our doctrine, I will propound two other questions.

The first, whether the will of man by his naturall strength, be any cause of his owne conversion. The answer of the Papists is; that the will is a cause with the grace of God: and that both together worke our conversion; grace as the principall, will as the lesse principall, and both as causes formerly. But we teach & hold (as truth is) that will in the act of working, effecting, producing of our conversion or regeneration is no cause at all, but in it selfe considered, a meer potence or subiect to receiue the grace of conversion giuen and wrought by God. It is absurd to thinke, that a creature should bee a cause of his creation, or a dead man of his quickening. Therefore (as I thinke) the doctrine of them that teach, that there are three efficient causes of mans conversion, Gods spirit, Gods word, mans will, hath his defect. The spirit is the principall cause, the word in his right vse is the means or instrument, whereby the operation of the spirit is effectuall. And for the will of man, it stands onely as a patient or object of diuine operation. It is alledged, that men which repent, are worthy praise therefore: and this cannot well be, vnlesse repentance proceede from freedom of will. I answer: repentance is praised because it is a thing that pleaseth God, and in that respect praise-worthy: and the repentant person is praised, not because he is the cause of his owne repentance, but because hee repents being thereto enabled by the mercy of God.

The second question is, whether the conversion of a sinner be in the power of mans will any way. The answer of the Papist is, that our regeneration and conversion is in part in the power of mans will: so as the will stirred vp can either apply it selfe to the grace of God, or reiect the same. Contrariwise (as we teach), that regeneration is not within the power of mans will, but that it wholly depēdeth on the will of God: and, that when GOD will convert and renew vs, though will for his own nature be apt to resist, yet in respect of Gods vnchangeable will, and in respect of the efficacy of his inward operation, it cannot resist & repell the worke of God. For when God himselfe workes any thing, his worke cannot be resisted. For his working of a thing is onely to will it to be; and his will can not be resisted. Now in mans conversion, he workes the will, and he workes the deede: and he causeth men to walke in his commandments. Resistance therefore can not be made. Secondly, the Scripture euery where teaches, that our conversion & saluatiō wholly depends on Gods will, and not on the

A will of man. Of the distinction of man and man, in the matter of saluation, Paul alleadgeth the testimony of Moses, It is neither in him that willet, nor in him that runneth, but in God that sheweth mercy. Our Saviour Christ teacheth that the secrets of the kingdome of God are reuealed to some, and to others concealed, because the pleasure of God is so: and because the gift of vnderstanding is giuen to some, and not to others. Our conversion is termed a new generation and a new creation: for this cause it cannot depend on the will of man at all, because a creature hath not his creation or regeneration in his owne will, so as he may either accept or refuse it. And it is a great overshadowing of Gods grace, to make the hauiing, or the not hauiing of it, to be in the choice of mans will. But the text in hand is objected. When Christ would haue converted Ierusalem, they resisted & would not. I answer, There is a double worke of God. Ones, outwardly in the word & Sacrament to offer grace: and this indeed may be resisted. Of this Christ speaks here when he saith, they would not and Stephen when he saith, they resisted the holy Ghost. Act. 7. 51. The Lord saith, Gen. 6. 2. My spirit shall not alway strive with man: and Peter applies this striuing to Noes minitry saying: that Christ went in spirit and preached. 1. Pet. 3. 19. The second is, when God inwardly by his spirit, turns, renews, sanctifies the whole man, and this worke cannot be resisted by the will of man; no more then Lazarus could resist the worke of Christ, when he was raised from the dead. If it be said, that this doctrine abolisheth liberty, because it cannot choise and refuse the grace of God: I answer, the Angels of God which will good & cannot will euill, haue neuertheless perfect liberty of will. And it is greater perfection of liberty freely and onely to will that which is good, then to bee able to will both good and euill. Hee is at more libertie, that cannot be a sinner, then hee which may be either a freeman or a seruant. And a necessity of yielding to the wil of God is no hurt to our will. For it is a speciall liberty, to will that which God wills & nothing els. By all this which hath bene said, it appeares what is the difference betwene vs, and the Church of Rome in the point of free-will. They say, liberty of grace to will well is onely weakened, diminished, and held captiue by sinne: we say, it is quite lost and abolished by the fall of Adam.

Again, by te former doctrine, the common question is easily answered: namely wherein lieth the efficacy of Gods grace. (b) Some Papists answer that it lies ordinarily in the free consent and co-operation of free-will ioyned with grace. And this comes directly to be the opinion of the Councell of Trent. But it is much derogatory to the diuine grace of God, to place the (d) efficacy therof in mans will: and it minisfers much matter of (e) boasting vnto men. Others place the efficacy of grace in the congruity of the object, (f) that is, in morall perswasion, which God knows to be apt and fite to moue and allure the will according to the condition thereof, euen as a beatt is moued by the sight of a bottle of hay. But there is no efficacie in these perswasions presented to the minde: because the will lies in thraldome and bondage vnder sin and Sathan. And the will must not onely bee helpt, but also bee deliuered from this bondage, before any perswasion can moue it. Lumbard in his time much declined from the purity of the former dayes: and yet hee is farre founden then the Testimes of our daies. For hee saith thus: Freewill now is hindered by the law of the flesh from doing good, and stirred vpon euill, so as it cannot will and doe good, vnlesse it bee deliuered and helped by grace. We leauing the Papiſts in their dissensions, place the efficacie of grace in the grace it selfe. For faith Christi. Euery man that hath heard and learned of the Father, comes vnto me. Again, we place in it this, that God addes the second grace to the first. For hauing giuen the power, hee saies not there, but proceeds further and giues the will, and with the will, the deede. And thus is the grace of God effectuall.

The consideration and vse of this & the former doctrines, is of great consequent. For if liberty of grace be lost, great is the necessity of our redemption by Christi, and great is the excellency thereof. Secondly, this doctrine cuts off the excuse of all sin: for though we sin necessarily because liberty of grace is lost yet we sinne freely, because liberty in euill remains. Thirdly, it appeares hence, that man of himself can not haue or retaine any goodnes, but that which God giueth and preferueth in vs. This thing must moue vs to pray earnestly for the grace we want: and to giue hearty thanks for the graces wee haue. Fourthly, we are taught deeply to humble our selues for the losse of our liberty, and for the bondage vnder sinne: & to pray instantly for deliuerance by Christi. Fifthly, seeing of our selues we cannot preuaile against the least temptation, we must pray to bee guided and assisted continually by God. Lastly, seeing our conuersion dependeth on Gods mercy, & not on our will, we are taught to deny our owne wils, wisdom, power, and to ascribe our iustificatiſation and saluation wholly and onely to God.

The third estate of man, is the estate of regeneration: in which the will hath power to will, partly that which is good, and partly that which is euill, as daily experience declareth in the liues of iust me. And the reason is, because the wil of man renewed, hath in it a three-fold liberty. The first is, the liberty of nature, to wil, or nill which is in all men. The second is, liberty of sinne, whereby the will, when it willet an euill, willet it freely. And this liberty is diminished according to the measure of grace which God bestoweth. The third is, liberty of grace, to wil that which pleaseth God, and it is restored in part in regeneration: so far forth as liberty to sinne is diminished. And because these three alwaies remaine in the will to the death, therefore sometime it willet wel, sometime euill, sometime both, and in the best actions we doe, there is a mixture: because they are not perfectly good for the time of this life, but partly good and partly euill.

That this power of the will may the better appeare, I will propound foure questions. The first is, whether the wil preuented or renewed, haue any stroke, action, or operation in the first regeneration of a sinner. I answer; In the renovation or conuersion of a sinner I consider two things. First, the beginning or ground thereof, and that is the setting or imprinting of the new qualities & inclinations in the mind, will, affections of the heart. And this is the intire or meere worke of God in vs, and vpon vs; and wee in it are merely passiue and aduise. The second is the euidence of the former in new and spiritual actions, as namely in thinking, willing and desiring that that is good. Now these actions are workes of God in and by mans will: and mans will is not onely a subiect of them, but also an instrument. A subiect, in that God is the first and principal worker of these workes in the will. An instrument; because it pleaseth God to vse the will, and to moue it by his grace for the acting and effecting of the things which he appointeth. And thus the will is not meere passiue, but passiue and active both: first passiue, and then active. For being acted and moued by God, who works the will and the deede, it also acteth & moueth. And wee doe not vterly deny the co-operation of mans will with Gods grace. It is necessary indeede that God first regenerate vs, and make vs his children and new creatures. And in this thing we doe not worke with GOD, but stand as patients, that God may worke vpon vs, and reforme vs, euen in the same manner, as when hee made vs in the beginning without any helpe of ours: yet, after our regeneration, by faith we are brought from death to life, and to will is present with vs, though in weak measure by reason of the remainders of corruption: and then we begin to bee co-workers with the grace of God, moued to will, and so indeede willing that which is good. In this sense haue the learned said, that which is repaired in vs, is not repaired without vs: and, that God in them whom hee calls, prepares the will that is may be a receiver and handmaid of his gifts.

The same answer, in eff. & I. I propound another way. In the worke of our regeneration, three graces be required, the preuenting grace, the working grace, and the co-working grace. The preuenting grace is, when God of his mercy sets and imprints in the mind a new light, in the will a new quality or inclination, in the heart new affections. The working grace is, when God giues to the wil the act of well-willing, namely, (a) the will to beleue, the will to repent, the will to obey God in his word. The co-working grace is, when God giueth the deede to the will, that is, the exercise and practise of faith and repentance. The first giues the power of doing good; the second, the will; the third, the deede: and all three together make the worke of regeneration. Now the will of man in respect of operation, concurteth not with Gods preuenting grace, but is meere patient as a subiect to receive grace. For it is the proper worke of God, to set or imprint a new facultie or inclination of the wil, and that without any action of the said will. Neuerthelesse the will being once renewed and preuented, concurteth by his operatio with the working and co-working grace of God. For the will being moued by grace, willet and doth indeede that whereto it is moued. And the will to obey God, or to performe any like duty, proceeds ioyntly from two causes. From grace; in that it moueth and causeth the will to will to beleue. From the will of man; in that being preuented and moued by God, it wils to beleue, or to doe any like duty. And therefore the ancient saying hath his truth: He that made thee without thee, doth not regenerate or save thee without thee. Because our conuersion is not without the motion and consent of will, as our creation was. And that we doe not mistake in this point, the order that is between mans wil and Gods grace, must here againe bee remembered. In respect of time they are both together, and concur in the very first moment of our regeneration: in respect of the order of nature, the will doth not first begin that which is good and then after borrow aide from grace, but grace preuents, renews, and moues the will, & then the will moued or changed, wils to be conuerted, and to be healed in the first instant of conuersion.

This operation of the wil to will to beleue, to will to repent and to obey, is the least grace and signe of Gods fauour; (for nothing can be less then to will to do that which is good yet is it of great and excellent price. For it hath the promise of God annexed to it. The Prophet saith to the rebellious Israelites, Wash, and make you cleane — cease to doe euill, learne to doe well. Now they might peraduenture say, Alas, we cannot wash our selues: he therefore addes, If ye will and obey, that is, if ye doe but wil to be cleaſed and reſtifie this will by your endeavour to obey, ye shall see the good things of the land. And Christi saith, that the heavenly Father giueth the holy Ghost to them that desire him. And to them that are in Christi, God accepts this act of good wil for the deede it selfe. Marke the comfort that flowes from this doctrine. The full obedience to the law of God is impossible to all men, except Christi, in this life: yea to them which are conuerted and sanctified, and greatly desire the fulfilling of the law in themselves: and therefore no man can be iustified by it before God, and obtaine saluation thereby. Neuerthelesse faith in Christi and repentance is so farre forth possible, to all that will and haue a desire that whoſoeuer do but will in earnest to beleue, and to bee conuerted, do indeed beleue, and are conuerted, and please God, and shall not perish eternally, though the beginning of faith and conuersion be weak; so it be in truth, and not counterfeit. And yet such is the naughtines of our nature, that faith and conuersion is impossible vnto vs, vnlesse of the singular mercy of God, it be stirred vp in the hearts of the Elect by his holy Spirit. In this respect Christi saith, Mat. 11. 30. My yoke is easie, and my burden light. And againe, His commandments are not grievous. It may be objected; that the will & desire of re-

B nouation and reconciliation with God, may be where there is a mind and purpose to sin, and where is no true hatred and detestation of iniquity. Ans. The ferious and instant will or desire to beleue in Christi, and to repent, includes in it the hatred of sinne, and the purpose of not sinning. For he that truly desires to beleue, doth so, because he detests his vbelieve; and he that desires to repent, doth so, because hee hates his own euill waies, and purposeth to sinne no more.

The second question is, whether the will, after it is renewed, be able to cause and bring forth good workes of it selfe, or no? I answer two things. The first, that will cannot, vnlesse God further giue a double grace. The one is Assisting grace: and it stands in three actions, preseruation, confirmation, protection. Preseruation is, whereby GOD continueth the being of the will renewed. For that which is good, doth not continue good the least moment, vnlesse God make it to continue. Confirmation is, when God fixeth the minde in that which is good, & causeth the will constantly to follow the good inclination thereof, it being otherwise mutable and apt to decline. Protection is, whereby God defendeth his grace in vs against the violence of temptation. Of this he saith to Peter, Sathan hath desired to sift you, but I haue prayed for thee that thy faith faile not. And God promisseth, that he will not suffer the faithfull to be tempted above that they are able to beare. The second grace may bee called, Exciting grace, whereby God moues and stirs vp the will, that it may indeede will and doe the good to be done. And this grace is ordinarily required to the effecting of euery good worke. Dauid will was exceedingly renewed by the holy Ghost; yet hee prayes still, Incline mine ears vnto thy reſtormations. The Christian soule, that is already drawne to Christi, prayeth still, Draw mee, and wee will runne after thee. Paul saith, they which are the children of God, are guided, moued, or stirred by the Spirit of God. Again, he saith of the Philippians, after they were renewed and wrought their owne saluation with feare and trembling, that God did still work in them beside the power, the act of willing and of doing that which is good. And hee works the will, by mouing it to will and to doe indeede, that which it can will and doe. And this moouing cause, is the good will of God. It may not seeme strange, that I say, new grace is required to stirre vp the will to the doing of euery new worke. For grace in the will is like the fire of greene wood, which hardly burnes, and continues not to burne vntill it be continually stirred vp and blowed: even so the good inclination of the will, because it is loyned, may mixed with contrary corruption that presseth downe, tempteth, intriceth, & draweth away the will from God, & all goodnesse, hath need continually to be excited, stirred, and mooued. The man regenerate is able to pray to God, yet can he not pray sometime by reason of the weight of corruption, vntill the spirit helpe to beare the infirmities of nature, and make request in vs by stirring and moouing vs to make request. The doctrine of the ancient Church hath beene, that new grace is to be giuen to the doing of euery good act. And (4) that we do not that good which we can do, vntill God make vs do it, as he made vs able to do it. This doctrine multi the rather be remembered, because the treame of Popish doctrine, runs another way; by teaching that our willes assisted by grace, can doe good, without the concurrence of new grace to excite and stirre vp the will. Indeed, for the doing of naturall actions, the generall co-operation of God sufficient but to the effecting of actiōs supernaturall, the special helpe of God is required. A child that can goe vp and downe in an euen floore, beinge taught by the mothers hand, for al this it cannot goe vp a paire of staires, vntill it be lifted at euery stepp. Like is the case of the children of God, in things which concerne the kingdome of heauen.

The second part of the answer is, that when renewed will doth a good worke, it doth not perfectly. To will, saith Paul, Rom. 7. 18. is present with vs, but I cannot do the good I would: that is, I cannot perfectly do it as I would. It may be objected thus: The workes of God are perfect: good workes done by vs, are workes of God: therefore they are perfect. I answer to the maior or first part of the reason: it is true of such workes as are workes of God alone, & not of such workes as are ioyned both of God and man, God beinge the principall agent, & man the instrument. For then the work done, takes vnto it the quality and condition of man, considering it proceeds from God, through the sinfull minde and will of man. The Seruener, when he writes by himself, he writes a perfect hand: but when a learner & he write both together, hee takinge the learners hand into his owne, then that which is writte, will carry the imperfection of the learner. Like is the case in all such workes as are from God and by vs.

The third question is, whether the reliques of corruption be of that force in sinning, that they can utterly quench the Spirit of God in the renewed will. The answer is, that corruption remaining is of it selfe apt to doe it: and the grace of Gods Spirit, is apt to be extinguished, because of it selfe it is mutable: neither is it wholly & vterly cannot be lost, for foure causes. The first is the promise of God in the couenant of grace: I will put my feare into their hearts, that they shall not depart from me: and this promise particularly belongs to all them that truly beleue, because it is the promise of the Euangelical couenant. The second is, the intercession of Christ in the behaue of al the elect. Christ saith to Peter, Sathan hath desired to sift you as wheate, but I haue prayed for thee Peter, that thy faith faile not. And this he did especially, in that solemne prayer made, Ioh. 17. in which he praied, not only for Peter, but for all the Apostles, and for all that did or should beleue in him. The third cause, is the omnipotent power of God in preferring all them that are in Christ. No man (saith Christ) take my sheep from my hand. And marke the reason: my Father is greater then all. The last cause, is the efficacy of Gods spirit. Saint Iohn saith, that the seed of God remains in him that is borne anew: and that this seed keeps him that he neither doth nor can sin in two respects. First, if he sin, yet he sins not with full consent of will. For he hates & nills in part the euill which he wills. Secondly, if by humane frailty he fall, he makes not a trade of sin, neither doth he keep a course in wickednes, but the seed of grace remaining within causeth him to returne to God, and to recover himselfe by new repentance.

The last question is, whether the renewed will, can of it selfe perseuere in doing good. I answer: thirour perseuerance depends and proceedes onely from the will of God. That we may perseuere, two things are required: the power to perseuere, and the will of perseuerance: and both these beeing good things, are of God. Because every good giuing and every good gift is from above, and cometh downe from the Father of lights, Iam. 1. 17.

This former doctrine is of great vse. In that the new birth & regeneration of a sinner, is not without the motion of his owne will, we are taught, that we must, if we desire our own saluation, vse the good means, and strive against our own corruptions, and endeavour earnestly, by asking, seeking, knocking. It will be said, that faith, repentance, and the rest, are all gifts of God. I answer: there is no vertue or gift of God in vs, without our wils: & in euery good act, Gods grace, & mans will, concur: Gods grace, as the principall cause, mans will renewed, as the instrument of God. And therefore in all good things, industrie, and labour, and inuocation on our parts is required.

Secondly, this doctrine ministers true comfort to all true seruants of God. For, if when they vse the good means of saluatio, the word, prayer, sacraments, they will lie not dead, but begin to oppose it selfe against vnto beleeue, will to repent, will to be turned to God; they haue begun to turne vnto God, and

God hath begunne to regenerate them: so bee it this will in them to do the good they ought to doe, be in good earnest, vntained, and they will haue beene careful to cherishe this little graine, till it come to a bigger quantity.

Thirdly, seeing to euery new act that pleaseth God, new grace is required, we are taught not to presume of our wisdome, will, and strength; nor to glory in any thing we doe, but alwaies to acknowledge our own impotency, and in euery good thing wee doe, to giue all the glory to God: and to be watchfull in prayer continually, because wee stand by grace so long as we stand: and hauing done one worke, wee doe not the second, but by a continued supply of new grace.

Lastly, seeing Gods preuenient and working grace turnes our wils, and makes them, of vnto will, most willing wils, all our obedience must be voluntary, and come from such freeness of will, as if there were no bond in the law of God, to force and compell vs thereto. The people of God, that are turned and guided by the free spirit of God, must be a voluntary people, and with all alacrity and cheerfulness, doe the duties that pertaine to them of a ready minde, euen as if there were neither heauen nor hell, Iudge nor iudgement after this life. The spirit of life that is in Christ must be a law vnto them.

The last estate is, the estate of glorification after this life. In this estate the liberty of will is a certain freedome, onely to will that which is good, and pleasing vnto God. For it is the continual voice (as it were) and cry of the glorified will: I doe no euill, and I will not doe it: I do that which is good, and I will doe it. And this indeede is the perfect liberty, in which mans will is conformed to the Free-will of God and good Angels, who will onely that which is good, and cannot will that which is euill.

By this which hath beene said, it appeares, that the words of the text in hand [& ye would not be spoken of the will of man, according to the estate of corruption. For the voice of the regenerate will is, I do that which is euill, but I would not doe it: I do that which is good, but I cannot doe it as I would. And the voice of the corrupted will is, I doe that which is euill, and I will doe it: I do not that which is good, and I will not doe it. And this last voice is plainly exprest in these words, And ye would not.

The third point comes now to bee considered, namely, the harmony or consent of both wils. For the wordes are, I would ye would not. Here it may iustly be demanded, whether there be an harmonie or consent betwene Gods will, and mans will, & how it stands with this text. I answer: there is an excellent harmonie: and generally it stands in this, that Gods will hath a soveraigne Lordship ouer the will of man, & mans will stands subiect to it absolutely, and simply depends vpon it. And by this means, where man hath a will, God hath an antecedent will; and where mans will hath any stroke or action, there Gods will formerly had his stroke and action.

Furthermore, mans will depends on Gods will in respect of three things, namely, Sustentation, Determination, Ordination, or gouernement. It depends on the will of God, in respect of sustentation; because man for his nature, strength and all his motions, depends on the will of God, and could not haue being for the space of one moment, vntill it were vpholden by God. It may be objected, that if God sustaine the will which is sinfull, hee sustaines not onely the will, but also the sinne thereof.

Answer. God sustaines nature, and not the sinne of nature: and therefore he onely sustaines will as will, and not as it is corrupted or sinfull will.

The like we see in nature: when a man halts in walking, the motion of the body is from the soule, and is preferred by it: but the halting which goes with the motion, and disorders it, is not from the soule, neither hath it his perpetuation thence, but from a defect in the legge or foot. By this we are taught to acknowledge the endlesse long-suffering of God, who sustaines the members of our bodies and soules, the faculties and actions thereof, euen in the workes, in which men offend and dishonour him. Secondly, we are taught to acknowledge the vile abomination of euery sinne: for wee sinne in the very hands of God, sustaining and preferring vs: and in the very actions, which we could not do, vntill we were sustained by him, we offend him and prouoke him to anger against vs.

Secondly, mans will depends on Gods will in respect of determination: because we neither can or doe will any thing without the will of God. A sparrows saies Christ, lights not on the ground, without the heavenly Father: that is, without his decree or will. The malicious and wicked will of the Iewes, could not so much as will, much lesse do any thing against Christ, but that which the hand and counsel of God had determined to be so. Moreover, God determines the will two waies. In good things, hee inwardly moues and inclines the will to the willing, and doing of the good it willett. For in that Gods will is the first cause of all good things, mans will depends on it, in respect of vertue, in respect of application, & in respect of order of working. In respect of vertue, because the vertues of second causes, proceede from the first. In respect of application, because God vnto the will of man, as an instrument of his own will, and hee applyeth it to the doing of things which he intends, euen as the carper vnto the mouer, & applies his tooles.

In respect of order of working: because alwaies the first cause begins the worke, and the second mooues not without the first. Vpon this ground it followes, that the good things which man willett, hee so willett, because God first willett them. And therefore Paul faith, that good workes are prepared of God for vs to walk in: and this preparation is made, because God decrees and determines with himselfe, the doing of all worke to be done.

In enill things, the determinatio of God is, (a) to will not to hinder them as he may. Vpon this will in God, follows sinne in the will of man; as a consequent, not as an effect. As a consequent, because when God suspends or withdraws sustentation and government from the will, it cannot of it selfe, but will amisse; as the staffe in my hand presently fals, when I doe but pull back my hand. To avoid euill is good; & therefore we cannot avoid the least euill, vnlesse God inable vs to avoid it. And (b) euill is not the effect of Gods will; because God puts nothing into mans will, to cause it to will amiss; but he only ceaseth to confer vnto it helpe & direction, which he is not bound to confer.

Here long and tedious disputes are made by many touching the concord of Gods decree, and the liberty of mans will. And it is alleadged; that mans will loseth his liberty, and ceaseth indeed to be will, if it stand subiect to the necessary and vntchangeable decree of God. I answer. First, that when the will of man determines in it selfe to one thing, it doth not lose his liberty: much more then may the liberty of will stand with the determination of God. Secondly, Gods decree doth not abolish liberty, but only moderate and order it: by (c) inclining the will in mild and easie manner with fit and convenient objects, and that according to the condition of the will. That Christ should die when he died, it was necessary in respect of Gods decree: yet if we respect the constitution of his nature, hee might still haue prolonged his dayes: and if we consider the will of Christ, he died most freely and willingly. Otherwise, his death had bene no satisfaction for sinne. God himselfe doth something of an absolute necessitie, and yet with perfect freedom of will: now then if absolute necessitie doe not abolish freedom of will: much lesse shall conditional necessity, depending on Gods decree, doe it. Lastly, the decree of God establisheth the liberty of will. For his determination is, that the Agency of second causes, shall be according to their condition; so as natural causes, shall worke naturally; free causes, freely necessary causes, necessarily contingent causes, in contingent and variable sort. And therefore the necessary decree of God is, that man shall will this or that, not necessarily in respect of himselfe, but freely.

Thirdly, mans will depends on Gods will in respect of government: This government is of two sorts. First, he gouernes the wills of the righteous by working his owne good worke in them, and by them. In them, because hee moues and inclineth the by his spirit. By them; because they are coley instruments of his will.

Secondly, he gouernes the wills of the wicked and vngodly, by fixe actions. The first is, permission, when God withdraws his grace from the will, not enlightning the minde, nor inclining the will, but leaving it to it selfe; as when

A man giues the rein to a wild horse. The second is, a delivery of the will to Satan; and that is, when God giues the diuell liberty to tempt, assault, and vexeth the will of man, being left to it selfe. And this thing is incident to obliuate sinners; & we pray against it in these words, Lead vs not into temptation. The third action is, a ceasing to restrain corruption of will, either in whole or in part; as when he restrains all sinne faue one, or hauing restrained for a time, for the punishment of former sinne, he omits restraint, permitting man to the lusts of his own heart. The fourth action is, the bending, moouing, or inclining of the wicked will. And this God doth not by inward inspiratio (for then he should be the cause of sinne) but by presenting to the minde and will, objects good, or at the least, indifferent in the felues: upon which objects, the will takes occasion to be willfull, obstinate, and rebellious, not moued thereto by God, but freely moouing it selfe. The heate of the stomacke in the winter season, is increased, not by the heat of things taken inwardly, but by the cold of the ayre, euery way compassing the body. An vnbroken horse being spurde because he goes out of order, hee flings out, and calts his side. And thus the sinfull wil of man, vrged by commandments, threatnings, iudgements; allured by promises & blessings, grows more sinfull and wicked. Paul saith, that sinne took occasion vpon the good commandments of God, to reuine & to be sinfull out of measure. David saith, that God moued the heart of the Egyptians to hate his people. But how? He blessed the Israelites exceedingly more then the Egyptians. And vpon this worke of God, they tooke occasion to enuie and to hate the Israelites.

The fifth action is, ordination, whereby God vseth well the wickednesse of the will of man, and directeth it against the nature thereof to good ends, even as the learned Physician sometimes of poyson makes a remedy. In this sense Aflur is called the rod of his indignation: and the Medes & Persians, his sanctified ones: The Iews in the crucifying of Christ, willed and minded nothing but his death & destruction; yet God willed, and by them wrought the redemption of mankind. He works his owne good worke by mans will, as by an active instrument, and withal, he leaues the will to it selfe, to worke his owne euill worke. The last action of God is, when a man is going on in his own wickednesse, he turns him vnto himselfe, of his exceeding mercy: and sometimes againe, he opens a way, that that person, who of himselfe runnes into wickednesse, may rush headlong to his owne destruction, for the further execution of diuine iustice: as when an house is falling, the owner thereof will not vnder-prop it, neither will hee push it downe: but he takes away all impediments, and digs away the earth round about it, not touching the foundation, that when it fals, it may fall downe right.

Thus we see briefly, the harmonie of mans will & Gods will: now let vs come to the vse, which

which is manifold. First of all, by the former doctrine, we are brought to a right vnderstanding of many places of Scripture. The Lord saith of Pharaoh, I will harden his heart. And this he is said to doe, not because he fetts and imprineth hardnesse in his heart; but because by fustury actions, hee orders and gouernes his wicked will; and they are foure. First, he permits Pharaoh to his own will; secondly, he leaues him to the malice of the diuell, and the lusts of his owne heart: thirdly, he vrges him with a commandment, to let the people goe. And Pharaoh the more hee is vrged, the stiffer and stubbornner hee is; and the more hee rebels against God; whereas hee ought indeed to haue bene the more obedient. Lastly, God vseth the hardnesse of Pharaohs heart, to the manifestation of his owne iustice and iudgement; and therefore he opens him away, that hee may runne head-long to his owne destruction. In this manner, and no otherwise, are the places to be vnderstood, when the Scripture saith, that God put a lying spirit into the mouthes of the prophets of Ahab: that if a prophet be deceived, the Lord deceiued him: that he giues vp men to vayne hope: that he sends strong illusions to beleue lies. In the booke of Samuel it is said, The Lord commanded Shemi to curse David; because about this curfing, there is a two-fold action in God: One, that he restrains the wicked heart of Shemi, in respect of all other sinne, and not in respect of this sinne of railing, to which God leaues him. The second, he vseth him as an instrument to curse; and to humble David. And thus likewise must the places be vnderstood, when it is said, that God deliuered the wines of David to Aholon. And thus he stirred up David to number the people. Lastly, Ioseph saith, that the Lord sent him into Egypt; & that for two causes: One, because when his brethren were about to make him away, God by his providence, caused Merchants to passe by in their fight; whereupon they tooke occasion to sel him into Egypt. The second, because God disposed this fact of theirs, to the good of Jacob and his family, in time to come. And thus are all like places of Scripture to be vnderstood.

Againe, some Schoole-Diuines, following Damascen, make and ascribe to God, an appli- ed or depending will, on this manner: God for his part, would haue all men without exception to be saued: why then are they not saued? They themselves will not; and because they will not; God therefore doth ofset some, and resisteth others. But according to the former doctrine, I take this kinde of applied will, to be an inuention of mans braine. For the contrary is the truth, namely, that mans will wholly depends on the will of God. That vessel be some of honour, some of dishonour; it is not in the power of the clay, but in the will of the potter. The first cause orders the second, not the second the first. To make Gods will depend on mans will, is to put God out of his throne of maiesty; and to set the creature in his room. Others set forth the depending will of God in this manner: God (say they) decrees nothing in particular, of things that are casual and contingent; that he fore-see vs with himselfe, whas the will of the creature will doe, or no; doe, when things are thus or thus ordered; and vpon this fore-sight, hee consequently determines what shall bee done: But this opinion, as I haue shewed, is against Gods generall providence, so it takes away the certain determination of God, reaching all particular causes. And it is absurd to thinke, that God should fore-see the future acts of mans free-will, when as yet he hath determined nothing: for things that shall be, are therefore to come to passe, because God by decree hath determined their being. And therefore, the fore-knowledge of things that shall be, follows the decree of God. And if, Gods decree presupposes mans willing of this or that; and thereupon determine, how shall this speech of the Lord stand, I will cause them to walke in my statutes? For hereby is signified, that God doth not attend on the will of man, determining mans will in subiection to himselfe. And therefore this attending will ascribed to God, is improued even of the Papists themselves.

Thirdly, in that mans will stands subiect absolutely to the pleasure of God, our duty is, to yeeld voluntary subiection to him in all things, when his will is manifest vnto vs. Lastly, this doctrine of the consent and concurrence of mans will & Gods will must be the stay & ground of our patience & comfort. For there is no calamity or misery, that beides vs by, & from the will of man, without the will of God. The creature can will nothing against vs, vnlesse it be first the will of God: and it can do neither more nor lesse, then God wil. The diuell could not touch Iob without leaue: & he could not enter into the heard of swine without leaue. Vpon this ground David speaks on this effect: Let Sermi curse, for hee curseth, because the Lord; bids him doe so. Ioseph comforts himselfe and his brethren in this, that our duty is to follow as the Lord, sent him into Egypt.

As there is an harmony between Gods will & mans will; so there is a differ between mans will & Gods word, or his signifying will, as appears by the text in hand. (a) Schoolemen vpon this differ, make a distinction of Gods grace, into sufficient & effectual. Sufficient they call that, whereby a man may be saued, if he will not be wanting to himselfe. Effectual, whereby a man is indeed saued. The first (they say) is giuen to all men, at one time or another: the second is not. And this distinction of grace, they gather on this manner: Whe Christ would haue gathered the Iewes, they would not; therefore they had not effectual grace; & because they would not, they are blamed and rebuked by Christ; therefore (saith the Papist) God gaue them sufficient grace to be converted, if they would; els could he not haue blamed them. I answer: this proues, that once God gaue them sufficient grace to obey any commandment of his, namely, in the creation: but hence cannot be gathered, that when God called the Jewes by his word, that then, then I say he gave them sufficient grace. Secondly, it is objected, that God did at that might be done to his Vine, to make it bring forth good fruit; and yet for all this, it brought forth nothing but wild grapes: therefore it is said, there must needs be a grace sufficient to salvation, which is not effectual. Answer: God did that to his vineyard, that was sufficient to make a good Vine bring forth fruit; (and that is the meaning of the place in I say) though not sufficient to change the nature of an evil vine, & to make it a good vine. It is urged, that the Lord faith, he waited for grapes; which he would not have done, vntles there had bin hope; by reason of sufficient grace given. Answer: again: that the Lord waited for fruit, not because God then gave the sufficient grace which he waited, but because the Church of the Jewes was in the way & pretence a good vine, & thereby gave hope of good fruit. Thirdly it is objected, that Adam received sufficient grace: and that he had not effectual grace, because he fell. Answer: Adam had sufficient to the perfection of a creature, but not sufficient to unchangeable perseverance, specially, if he should be assaulted by temptation. Like wife he had grace effectual, in respect of righteousness & happiness, but not in respect of perseverance in both. Grace in him so far forth as it was sufficient to happiness, it was also effectual. Lastly it is objected, that God forsakes no man, till he first forsake God: and therefore, that God for his part, gives grace sufficient to salvation. Ans. There is a double kind of forsaking in God: one is for trial, the other for punishment. The forsaking which is for trials sake, goes before mans sin, in which he forsakes God. In this regard, Adam was for order of nature, first forsaken of God, before he forsooke God. The forsaking which is for punishment, alwaies follows after sin, & of this must the rule be understood; that they which are forsaken of God, did first forsake God. Now the truth which we are to hold in this point, is thus much: There is a grace which is sufficient to the conviction of a sinner, which is not effectual to salvation; and again, there is a grace which is sufficient to the leading of a ciuill life, which is not effectual to salvation: yet the grace which is indeed sufficient to salvation, is also effectual; namely, the gift of regeneration, in which God gives not only the power to be converted, but also the will & the deed.

This much of the Harmonie: now comes the fourth point to be considered, namely, in what manner Christ willed the conversion of Ierusalem. He willed it first, in love, secondly, in patience. His love is set forth by two things. The first, albeit hee was God, full of maiesty, and yet we wretches, his enemies by nature, yet was he content to take vpon him; a vile and base condition, to bee vnto the Jewes as an thorn: The second was, that hee takes vnto him; the passions, the disposition, and tender affection of the hen to her young ones.

That all this may the better be conceived, three questions are to be propounded. The first is, whether there bee such an affection of love in God, as is in man and beast? I answer: that affections of the creatures, are not properly incident vnto God, because they make many changes, and God is without change. And therefore all affections, and the love that is in man and beast, is ascribed to God by figure: and that for two causes. First, because there is in God an vnchangeable nature, that is well pleased with every good thing, and a will that seriously willethe the preservation of every good thing: and of this nature and will of God, the best love in the creature is but a light shadow. Secondly, the affection of love is ascribed to God; because hee doth the same things that love makes the creature do: because he bestoweth blessings and benefits vpon his creature, as the lover doth on the person loved. In this sort are all other affections ascribed to God, and no otherwise.

The second question is, whether there bee in God, an hatred of his creatures: for God is compared to the hen which loueth her young ones. Ans. If hatred be taken for a passion incident to man, it is not incident to God: if it be taken for a worke of Gods providence and iustice, it is in God: & that in three respects. First of all in Scripture, hatred sometimes signifies a denial of love & mercy: as when it is said; that he which will follow Christ, must hate father & mother: that is, neglect them, or not loue them, in respect of Christ. In this sense, hatred agrees vnto God. For he is said to love Jacob, and to hate Esau; that is, not to love Esau with that love wherewith hee loved Jacob. Again, there is in God a nature that abhorreth and detesteth iniquity: thus saith the Psalmist, that God loneth righteousness, and hateth iniquity. And thus God hates man, not simply, because he is the handy-work of God, but because he is a sinner, and by reason of the worke of the diuell in man, namely sin, which is simply hated of God. Thirdly, God plagueth & punisheth offenders, and in this regard he is said to hate them. Thus, saith David, That God hateth the workers of iniquity, & destroys them that speak lies. By this which hath beene said, it appears that there be two degrees of hatred in God: one is Negative, whe God as an absolute Lord, bestowes his speciall love on some, & denies it vnto others, because his pleasure is for the second is Positive: whe he hates and detesteth his creature: and this second alwaies follows sin, and it is euer for sin: but the other goes before sinne. And whereas it is said in this text, that God is as the hen that loueth her chickens, & gathers them all together; it must be understood, that our Saviour Christ here sets down his dealing, not with all his creatures, and with all mankind: but only his dealing toward his own Church, in which he calleth all outwardly, by the sound of his word, & receiues all outwardly into the covenant. By this which hath beene said, wee are taught, after the example of God, to hate and detest iniquity, and yet alwaies to make difference betweene the person and the sinne.

The third question is, in what thing is Christ as an hen to his Church? Ans. In temporall blessings and deliverances: in afflictions and manifold corrections: but especially & principally in his word published in the ministry of the prophets. For it is the wing which he spread over his people: and it is the voice whereby he called, and (as it were) clocked them vnto him.

Thus wee see the meaning of the similitude, that Christ would haue gathered Ierusalem as the hen gathereth her chickens: now follows the vñ. By this wee see the tender love of God to this Church and land. For it hath pleased him to propound vnto vs the Gospel of salvation, and that now more then 40. yeares. And in so doing he hath offered long to embrace vs in the armes of his mercy: and in spreading his wing over vs to become our God and our Saviour: for this tender love, our hearts must be filled with love to Christ, and our mouths with praise. Again we learne hence, that the Gospel brings all other blessings of God with it. For God in it communicates his owne selfe vnto vs, as hee henne to her young ones. The kingdom of God brings all things else with it, that may serue for the good of man: and where the Gospel is embraced, there is Gods kingdom. The peace and protection of this Church and land, whereby we haue bin preferred from being a prey to our enemies, comes by means of the Gospell of life. Therefore foolish and false is the conceit of sundry popish persons, that say, there was neuer such plentie in the world, as when the old learning (as they say) or old religion was. Secondly, by this we are aduertised, if we would haue all necessarie blessings for this life, first of all to embrace the Gospell of Christ. Thirdly, if Christ take vnto him the disposition of the hen: wee likewise must take vnto vs the disposition of the chicken in respect of Christ, and that in three things. First, we must suffer our selues to be gathered to Christ; that is, to be turned vnto him from all our sins, to beleue in him, to be of the same mind and disposition with him, to suffer him to quicken vs with his heavenly and spiritual life, as the hen cherisheth her chickens by sitting on them. Secondly, wee must attend vpon the word & wil of Christ, as the chicken vpon the call of the henne: and suffer him to rule vs both in heart and life for all things. The third thing is, that wee must depend on the sweet and merciful promises of Christ, and shrowd our selues vnder his wing against hell, Satan, death, damnation. And verily all such among vs, who are not careful to performe these three things to Christ, are no better then monstrous rebels, considering hee hath in his mercifull and tender love, fought to win vs to himselfe for these forty yeares.

Thus much of the love of Christ: now I come to his patience in these words: How often would I have gathered thee, as the hen would? The meaning whereof is this; you haue continually from time to time provoked me by your finnes: yet did I not withdraw my love from you, but sent my Prophets from time to time vnto you, to call you and gather you vnto me. And this patience of God is here expressed to aggravate the rebellion of Ierusalem. I will therefore speak alittle of it. And first it may be demanded, whether the vertue of patience that is in men, bee also in God. I answer, properly it is not. For where this kind of patience is, there is passion & suffering: now God is not subject to any passion or suffering, because his nature is vnchangeable. Again, that which is in God properly, is in him eternally: this patience is not in him eternally, but for the time of the continuance of this world. Neuertheless, Scripture ascribes this patience to God for two causes. The first is, because there is in God an infinite goodness of will and nature, whereby he neuer simply wils the perdition or destruction of any creature. Ezechiel faith, God wils not, that is, takes no delight in the death of a sinner. And whereas it is said, that vengeance is Gods, and hee will repay; it must be thus taken, that God in reuenge doth not absolutely intend to destroy, but only to execute iustice in the punishment of sinne. It may be objected, that God is said, to make vessels of wrath prepared to destruction. I answer, this place must circumspectly and warily be understood, & I take the meaning of it to be this, that God makes vessels of wrath, or vessels for wrath by his will and decree, whereby he decrees to passe by some and to forsake them, in respect of his love and mercy. And this act of God in passing by, and in forsaking of men, is as it were, to set them apart to become vessels of wrath. And though God in secret and iust iudgement doe this, yet he neuer fills any of these vessels with his wrath, vntill they haue beene tainted with iniquity: and though they be prepared to destruction, yet they are neuer indeed destroyed but for their sins. Thus then, by reason of this excellent and incomprehensible goodness of God, whereby the vertue of patience is but a shadow, God is said to be patient.

The second cause, why God is said to be patient, is because hee doth the same things that patient men doe. First, hee invites men to repentance: secondly, hee promitteth pardon: thirdly, hee defers punishment: fourthly, at the first hee only inflicts lesse punishment, when they doe no good, hee inflicts greater: and lastly, when there is no hope of amendment, hee inflicts euermlasting death and destruction. The end of Gods patience is two-fold, one, that the elect of God may bee gathered and called; the other, that all excuse might bee taken from the vngodly.

The patience of God is either vniuersall, or particular. Vniuersall, which pertains to all me. The decree of diuine iustice was set downe to Adam, and in him to all mankind: When thou shalt eat of the forbidden fruit, in dying thou shalt die. That is, presently dye the first and second death. Dathan and Abiram, presently vpon their rebellion, went downe into the earth quicke. The captaines with their fifties, were presently vpon their coming to Elias destroyed with fire from heauen. And so oft as any man sinnes, he deserves present destruction: and so many sins as we haue committed, so many damnations haue we deserved. Here it may be demanded, why God doth not execute his decree accordingly. I answer, God in iustice remembers mercy, yea his iustice giues place to mercy. For there is another decree of mercy, which he will haue as well to be accomplished as the decree of iustice, and that is, The seeds of the woman shall bruise the Serpents head. Again, Aske of me and I will giue thee the heauen for thine inheritance, and the end of the earth for thy possession. That mercy then may be shewed vpon mankind, iustice is executed in great patience by ceter degrees. And this patience pertaines to all men without exception, that come of Adam by generation.

Speciall patience is that which concerns particular men or countries. Thus God spared the old world 120. yeares before hee sent the flood: he spared the Amorites till their iniquities were full: he spared the Egyptians 400. yeares. He deferred the punishment of the idolatry of Israel 350. yeares, and then he punished it with seventy yeares captiuitie. Hewinked at the ignorance of the Gentiles 4000. yeares. Antichrist shall not vntirely be destroyed till the coming of Christ. When men blaspheme God and Christ, swearing wounds, blood, heart, sides, nailes, life: if they had their desert, they should descend to hell quicke, and that presently: but God forbears them, and sundry such persons are vouchsafed the grace of true repentance. The very least offence vpon earth is partaker of the great patience of God. For he sustaines the members of our bodies, the powers and motions of the soule in such actions in which we offend him. And no creature can sufficiently consider the greatness of this long suffering.

The vs to be made of the patience of God follows. First, it seemeth to teach all men to turne to God by true repentance. Rom. 2. 4. Despisest thou the patience & long suffering of God, not knowing that his goodnessse of God leads thee to repentance? God is patient towards vs, and would haue no man to perish, but would haue all men to come to repentance. To come more neere vnto our felices and this English nation. Now is the day of our visitation, and hath bin for the space of these forty yeares and more, in which God in great patience hath continually called vpon vs, knocking at the doore of our hearts, and stretched out the armes of his mercy vnto vs. Wherefore the common duty of all English people is, to turne vnto God with all their hearts according to all the law of God, as it is said of Jesus. And that this duty may indeed be practised, I will vs certain reasons, that may serue to stirre vp our dead minds. First, the time of the continuance of the patience of God is hidden and vknownen vnto vs. And hereupon, when men abusing the patience of God shall say, peace, peace, then shall come sudaine destruction, as traualle vpon a woman. And therefore the time is to be redeemed, and as S. Peter saith: We must watch and make haste for the coming of the Lord. Secondly, the greater the patience of God is and hath bin, the greater shall his anger be. A blow, the longer it is in coming, the greater it is. Yea the very wrath of God in it selfe is most horrible. The wrath of a lion, of a prince, yea the wrath of all creatures to the wrath of God, is but as a drop of water to the whole sea. At his indignation the very mountaines melt: the heauens and the elements shall melt at his coming: much more shall our rocky & stony hearts melt. Thirdly, God hath his treasury, and storehouses for iudgement: and they which goe on in their sinnes from day to day fill this treasury of God with wrath and iudgements against the day of wrath. And when menturne heartily from their euill wayes, this treasury is emptied, as appeares by the example of the Ninuites. Wherefore let vs all from the highest to the lowest thinke our felices what cuill we haue done, and how we haue abused the mercifull patience of God, and make speed to turne vnto God and Christ our mercifull Saviour. Some will say, wee abuse not Gods patience; we haue repented long agoe. I answer, the number of them that truly turne vnto God in their hearts, is but very small, in comparison, euen as the gleaming is to the whole harvest. It will be said again, we are not as the Iewes, that deny Iesus Christ to be the Messias. I answer, we confesse Christ in word, but there is a great multitude among vs, that deny him in their deedes and naughty liues. For to omit the sinnes of the second table, there be five notorious sins that are common among vs. Wilfull ignorance; in that men haue little or no care to know God, & to know the way of life. The second is, the prophane concept of the Gospel. For now the obedience to this blessed doctrine of life, yea, the very shew of it, is in common reputation. Precisions. And now adae vnder this name the profession of the Gospel comes otherwhiles vpon the stage to helpe to make vp the play, and to minister matter of mirth. Vpon this we may iustly feare the Gospel is going from vs. The third sinne is worldliness, which reignes and beares sway in all places, as though there were no other world, and as though heauen were vpon earth. The fourth sinne of our daies is luke-warmnesse. For commonly men are not lost in themselves, that they might be found of Christ, they feele not their owne powerie, they know not in what neede they stand of the blood of Christ; and therefore they make profession of the faith formally, not seriously, onely because they are forced so to doe by the good lawes of a good Prince. The last sinne is Hypocritie, for all among vs cometo the Lords table, and thereby enter into the highest degree of Christianity that can be vpon earth: for thereby they make profession that they are vnto Christ, and haue fellowship with him, and grow vp therein. And yet the most being departed from this wholly Sacrament, take liberty to liue as they list, despising all others that will not say and do as they doe. These and many other, are the common fruits of al our English vineyard. It stands vs all in hand to pray vnto God, that he would blow vpon his vineyard; that wee may bring forth better fruit, and preuent the iudgements that otherwise are like to fall.

Secondly, in that God is so patient towards vs, we are taught to exercise our felices in patience in respect of God when we are afflicted & corrected by him. For whē he laies his hand vpon vs, we may not be angry, fret, chafe, and rage, but quiet our hearts in his will, though the Crosse be grievous for measure, and long for continuance. This patience to God, ward is tearmed in Scripture by an excellent name, The silence of the heart, whereby the heart without repining subiects it selfe to the will of God in all things. Psal. 4. 4. Examine your heart: vpon your bed, & be still. And 37. 7. Be silent to Iehoua.

Thirdly, if God be thus patient towards men, we againe must be patient one towards another: as Paul saith, Forbear one another, and forgive one another, as God for Christs sake forgave you. The faith of the mercifull patience of God cannot but breed and bring forth in vs patience and long suffering, in regard of anger and reuenge.

Lastly, in that God calls vs to saluation with great patience, we must suffer our felices to be called, and run the race of our saluation with like patience. Wee must heare the word, and bring forth fruit with patience. Wee must pray without fainting & without taking repulse, as the woman of Canaan did: and therefore with patience. Our hope must be by patience & through comfort of the Scripture. In a word, wee cannot obtain the promises without patience.

The fit and last point to be considered is, what is meant by the childre of Hierusalem. I answer it thus. Children in Scripture are taken 4. waies, First, some are children by generation: of them reade, Luk. the 3. chap. where a long genealogie is set down from Adam to Christ. Secondly, some are called children by adoption without generation. Michal that neuer bare child to her death, is said to beare five to Adriel: because the did adopt his children, and bring them vpon her owne. Thirdly, some are called children in regard of legal succession, in title to this or that thing. Thus Zedechias, who indeed was vncle to Iehakim, is said to be the sonne of Iehokim, because he did succeed Iehokim (as being the next of the blood) in the

Mat. 1.12.

Kingdome. Ieconias or Conias was childlesse; and yet he is said to beget Salathiel, because Salathiel was to succeed him in the kingdome of Iudea, in that he was the next of Danias house. Lastly, men, in that they appertaine to any thing or place, as children do to their parents, are called children thereof. Thus men are called children of light, of darkenes, of sinne, of wrath. Thus Ierusalem is called the daughter of Sion. And in this text: citizens, the inhabitants of Hierusalem, are called the children thereof.

Thus much of the Rebellion of Ierusalem: now follows the punishment in these words: Behold, your habitation shall be left vnto you desolate: or thus, your house, that is, both citie and temple (as it is in the next chapter) shall be left vnto you as a wilderness.

Here wee must obserue, that the punishment of Ierusalem rebellion is a decreed desolation both of Citie and Temple. And the right consideration of it is of great vse. For this desolation is as it were a looking glasse to this our English nation, in which wee may see our future condition: except we repent of our vnthankfulness to God for his mercies, & shew better fruits of the Gospel, then commonly we doe. The old world little regarded the ministry of Noah the preacher of righteousness, & was destroyed by an vniversal flood. It is a general decree of God, The Gentiles and kingdomes that will not serue thee, shall perish, and be utterly destroyed. If God spare not the naturall branches, hee will much lesse spare vs that are but wild branches, if we neglect and lightly esteeme the Gospel of life, as men euer where commonly doe.

Secondly, the desolation of Hierusalem may be a glas to euery one of vs, who in these daies of Gods mercifull visitation, set the ministry of the Gospel aright, or lightly respect it; for vnlesse such persons amend, and that betime, vtter desolation will befall both them and their families, God hath passed his sentence. They that withdraw themselves from God shall perish. Now they withdraw themselves from God, that cannot abide to haue fellowship with him in his word, & to bring the felices in subiection thereto. Thirdly it appears here by the contrary, that the stability of all kingdomes stands in the obedience of the Gospel of Christ: for Gods kingdome is most sure & stable, against which nothing can preuaile. And whē the Gospel is obeyed in any kingdom, it is (as it were) founded in the kingdom of God.

Moreover, this desolation is both perpetual, and terrible: it is perpetual, that is, to the last iudgement. For Hierusalem must be under foot, till the time of the Gentiles be fulfilled; and this is, till there be signes in the Sunne and Moone, and the powers of heauen be shaken, and that is immediately before the last iudgement. Hence I gather, that there is no citie of Hierusalem, nor Temple now standing. It will be said, that since the destruction thereof, they might haue bene reedified. I answer, by reason of the curse of God, it cannot so be. Three hundred and 30 years after the death of Christ, the Jewes by the leaue and helpe of Julian the Emperour, went about to build againe their temple and city, but their worke was ouerthrowne, & they hindred by thunder and lightning, & earth quakes, and many of them slaine thereby. Againe, it may be said, that there is a city now standing that is called Hierusalem. I answer, it is either Hierusalem in her ruines, or the citie Bethara, fenced, and walled by Elus Adrianus. Secondly, by this it appeares, that the warres that were made heretofore for the recovery of the Holy land, and of Hierusalem, were in vaine. This enterprife was the policy of the Pope, that hee might the better fear himselfe in Europe. And there was little good to be looked for in the place that God had accorded with perpetuall desolation. Thirdly, by this it appeares, that pilgrimages made to the Holy land, are superstitious. And lastly, I gather hence, that Antichrist shall not reigne in the Temple at Hierusalem. This is but a Popish fiction. For how is it possible for him to sit in a Temple that is vterly destroyed, in such sort, that stone doth not lye vpon stone? It is objected, that Antichrist shall destroy the two Prophets of God in the citie in which Christ was crucified. I answer, Christ is as well crucified in his members, as in his owne person: and thus he was and is still crucified in Rome: and in respect of his members more crucified in Rome then in Hierusalem.

Mat. 24.

Againe this desolation was most terrible, & the tribulation thereof so great, that the like was neuer since the beginning of the world. Histories written thereof declare as much. For the citie was at the first besieged by the armie of Titus Vespasianus, called the abomination of desolation, and it was withall compassed with a wall that had 12. castles in it, to command the whole citie. In the time of the siege, the Jewes were oppressed with a grieuous famine: in which their food was old shoos, old leather, old hay, and the dung of beasts. There died, partly of the sword, and partly of the famine, eleven hundred thousand of the poorer sort: two thousand in one night were imbowelled: fixe thousand were burned in a porch of the Temple: the whole city was sacked and burnt, and laid leuell to the ground: and nine tie thousand taken captiues, and to be applied to base & miserable seruice. This horrible desolation must teach vs to dread and feare God, and to yeeld vnaigned subiection to Christ. And as the Psalmist saith, to keepe some, lest he be angry, and we perish in the

Touching this desolation there bee three things done by Christ. First, he determines it, saying, Your house shall be left vnto you desolate. Hence I gather, that there is a prouidence of God, touching things that come to passe. That is one point. The second is, that the disposition of kingdoms, for the beginning, continuance, and end, is of God. The God of beaues (saith Cyrus) hath giuen me all the kingdomes of the world. And Daniel to Nebuchadnezzar, The God of beaues hath giuen thee kingdome, power, and glory. And the hand-writing vpon the wall in the sight of Belshazzar, was to this effect, Thy kingdome is numbred, for continuance of yeares: it is weighed, and found light in respect of the sinnes of the people: and it is deuised to the Medes and Persians. This must teach all good subiects in England, to lift vp their hearts to God, for the continuance of peace and protection to this Church and land.

Extra. 1. a.

Secondly, Christ reueals the desolation of Hierusalem, & that certainly yea, he determines the very particular time, This generation (saith he) shall not passe till all these things be fulfilled. And according to this reuelation and prediction of Christ, all things came to passe. For within the compasse of 40. yeares after it was destroyed. Hence, I gather, that this Gospell of Matthew, and the rest, are the very word of God; on this manner. That which foretels particular things to come certainly and truly, is of God: but the Gospels foretell particular things to come certainly and truly, as in this place we see: therefore they are of God.

Mat. 24.

Thirdly and lastly, Christ labours to bring the Jewes to a serious consideration of their punishment, when he saith, Behold. For he doth as it were take them by the hand, and bring them to a present view of their miserie. And thus he hath alwaies dealt with his people fro the beginning. Yea thus he dealt with Adam before his fall, when he said, If thou eate the forbidden fruite, in dying thou shalt die. This serious consideration of deferred punishment, is of great vse. It is an occasion of repentance to man. It is a meanes, if not of repentance, yet of restraint of open vices. Againe, the consideration of euermlasting punishments, is a meanes to make vs patiently beare lesser crosses that befall vs in this life. And therefore it wets to be wished, that men now adays would seriously speake and thinke of hell, and of the paines thereof. For then there would be more amendment then there is. But this good is hindered, partly, by blindness of minde, and partly by false imaginings, that the iudgements and punishments of God may easily be escaped.

The memoriall of the iust shall be blessed: but the name of the wicked shall rot.

To the VVorshipfull Master

Robert Tailor, Esquire, one of the Tellers in her Majesties Exchequer, my very good friend.

Experience teacheth, and it is a true conclusion propounded and proued in the Scriptures of the old and new Testament, that as God in the beginning by his omnipotent power established the whole frame of the heauens and the earth, so he hath in his wisdom directed them, and all things contained in them, vnto one maine end, the manifestation of his glorie. Wherunto, though euery thing created, by his appointment, according to the law of creation, and the principles of it owne entrie nature is, and ought to bee referred, yet among the workes of God, some doe more principally and directly make for that purpose, as namely, man, whom God hath endued with the gifts of vnderstanding and knowledge, and in whom hee hath engrauen his owne image in righteousness and true holinesse. Now if the Question be, how man being fallen from that integrity wherein he was created, and having brought a confusion vpon the whole world by the fall, should yet be fitted and framed for such an end. The answer is: that God who is able to draw light out of darkness, and to rectifie things that are confounded, hath in great wisdom set an order in mankind, which by certaine degrees tendeth directly to the aduancement of his owne glory. For in the first place, hee would haue man to acknowledge him his soveraigne Lord, and to serue him immediately in the duties of faith and obedience. Secondly, it is his will, that man being made a sociable creature, apt to conuerse with his owne kinde, should doe seruice vnto himselfe, by seruing of man in the duties of loue. Thirdly, he would not that men conuerse each with other should be as wandering Rechabites tyed to no certaine place or calling; and therefore bindeth all men, both by speciall assignement vnto Adam in his innocencie, and by particular commandment to him and all his posterity, to be confirmed within some certaine state and condition of life, in the family, in the common-wealth, or in the Church. Lastly, that man should vse the place and office assigned vnto him by God, in a holy manner, performing the duties

duties annexed vnto it in faith and obedience, and eschewing those vices that vially attend vpon it, with all care and circumspection. In this manner hath God disposed the whole estate of mankind, for the accomplishment of the foresaid end, the honour and glory of his name.

Against this order, doe offend two sorts of men. The first, are such as live in the bosome of the Church, and are not ranged within the compass of any calling or condition of life, wherein they might gaine glory vnto God, or good vnto men. Under these are comprehended all Popish Votaries; as Monkes, Friars, &c. who have bene iustly condemned of auncient times for theues and robbers, because living apart from the common societies of men, they are neyther the members of any body, nor maintainers of any of the three states before named. And to them may be referred all wandering and straggling persons, who having no settled place of abode, and being neither members of any ciuill society, nor annexed to any particular Church, or do the least good vnto men. The liues of these persons are so much the more odious, because they are like the vnprofitable drone, that bringeth nothing into the hie, and yet feedes of the hony, that is brought in by the labours of others. Another sort of men are they, who indeed are called vnto some certaine condition and trade of life, wherein they do walke, and yeeld some benefit vnto others; and yet they are greatly to be blamed, in respect of their want in the right vse and exercise of their callings. For though they may be skilfull and expert in their kinde, yet they erre in the maine point, in that they do not practise their personall callings in, and with the generall. Whereas on the contrary, the principall scope of their liues, ought to be the honouring of God in the seruice of men; and the rule of direction for the attainment of that end, is nothing else but a constant performance of the duties of the morall law, in that very calling wherein they be placed.

A remedy for these and sundry more corruptions, incident vnto the liues of men, as also a warning to those that offend in this kind, the Author hereof, whose memory is blessed, hath presented vnto our view, in the discourse following, wherein are handled at large, out of the word of God, the differences and right vse of all callings whatsoeuer. In publishing wherof, I have thought good to make choise of your Worship, to whose protection, I might commend the same, and that vpon these considerations. First, because you are, and haue bin an ancient fauourer and well-willer to learning, and learned men, whereof amongst the rest, our Colledge hath already had very sufficient testimony; for which it doth acknowledge you, by the name of a louing and liberall benefactor. Secondly, for that (in my knowledge) you were very lovingly affected vnto the Author of this Treatise whilst he liued, hauing alwaies a reuerent opinion of his gifts, and wishing him encouragement in al his proceedings. Beside these respects, it is my desire, by this dedication to giue vnto you some testimony of a thankful mind, for your loue and kindeesse towards mee. And thus crauing your acceptation hereof, I take my leaue, and commend you, with all your affaires, to the grace and fauour of God. Cambridge, Febr. 16. 1602.

I. Cor.

1. Cor. 7. verse 20.

Let every man abide in that calling, wherein hee was called.

From the 17. verse of this chapt. to the 25. there are two questions handled. First, whether a man being called to Christianity vncircumcised, must be circumcised after his calling. The second is, whether being a bondman when he is called, hee must then leave his calling. Now the sum of the Apostles answer to the both, is laid downe in this 20. verse: as if hee should say; let every man continue in that calling, wherein hee was called vnto Christ: that is, wherein hee walked and liued when it pleased God by the ministry of his Gospel, to call him vnto the profession of Christian religion. The cause why I haue chosen to speake of these words, is, because I meane to intreate of this point of vocation or calling: considering few men rightly know how to liue and goe on in their callings, so as they may please God. Therefore to proceede in order, in speaking of this point; First, I will shew what Vocation or Calling is. Secondly, I will set downe the parts and kindes thereof. Thirdly, the holy & lawfull use of euery mans particular calling: all which are in some fort touched in the words of my text.

For the first: A vocation or calling, is a certain kind of life, ordained and imposed on man by God, for the common good. First of all I say, it is a certain condition or kind of life: that is, a certaine manner of leadin g our liues in this world. For example, the life of a king is to spend his time in the gouerning of his subjects, and that is his calling: and the life of a subiect is to liue in obedience to the Magistrate, and that is his calling. The state and condition of a Minister is, to leade his life in preaching of the Gospell and word of God, and that is his calling. A master of a family, is to leade his life in the gouernment of his family, and that is his calling. In a word, that particular and honest manner of conseruation, whereunto euery man is called and set apart, that is (I say) his calling.

Now in euery calling we must consider two causes. First, the efficient and author thereof. Secondly, the final and proper end. The author of euery calling, is God himselfe: and therefore Paul saith; As God hath called euery man, let him walke; vnto. 17. And for this cause, the order & manner of liuing in this world, is called a Voca- tion; because euery man is to liue as he is called of God. For looke as in the campe, the Generall appointeth to euery man his place and standing; one place for the horse-man, & another for the foot-man, and to euery particular souldier likewise, his office and standing, in which hee is to abide against the enemy, and therein to liue and die: euen so it is in humane societies: God is the Generall, appointing to euery man his particular calling, and as it were his standing: and in that calling he assigns vnto him his particular office; in performance whereof he is to liue & die. And as in a campe, no souldier can depart his standing, without the leaue of the Generall; no more may any man leave his calling, except he receiue liberty from God. Againe, in a clocke, made by the art and handy-woke of man, there be many wheeles, and euery one hath his seuerall motion, some turne this way, somewhat way, some goe softly, some apace: and they are all ordered by the motion of the watch. Behold here a notable resemblance of Gods special providence ouer mankind, which is the watch of the great world, allotting to euery man his motion and calling: and in that calling, his particular office and function. Therefore it is true that I say, that God himselfe is the author and beginning of callings.

This ouerthroweth the heathenish opinion of men; which thinke that the particular condition and state of man in this life comes by chance; or by the bare will & pleasure of man himselfe. Secondly, by this which hath bin said, we learn, that many perfwading themselves of their callings, haue for all this, no calling at all. As for exaple, such as liue by vsury by carding and dicing, by maintaining houses of gaming, by plaies and such like: For God is the author of euery lawfull calling; but these and such miserable courses of liuing, are either against the word of God, or else are not grounded thereupon. And therefore are no callings or vocations, but anocations from God and his waies.

Now as God is the author of euery calling, so he hath two actions therein. First, he ordaineth the calling it selfe. And secondly he imposeth it on man called: and therefore I say, vocation is a certain kind of life, ordained & imposed by God. For the first, God ordaineth a calling, when he prescribeth and commandeth the same, in, and by his word: and those callings and states of life,

life, which haue no warrant from Gods word, are vnlawfull. Now God in his word, ordaineth callings two waies. First by commanding and prescribing them particularly, as hee doth the most weightie callings in the family, Church, or common-wealth. Secondly, by appointing and setting downe certain lawes and commandements, generally; whereby we may easily gather, that he doth either approue, or not approue of them, though they be not particularly prescribed in the word.

The second action of God, which is the imposition of callings, is, when he doth particularly set apart any man, to any particular calling in the world. Now God doth this two waies. First by himselfe immediately, without the helpe of any creature. Thus in the beginning was Adam called & appointed to dress the garden of Eden. Thus Abraham was called from the idolatry of his fore-fathers, and receiued into the covenant of grace. Thus was Moses called to be a Prince ouer the Israelites, to guide them out of Egypt, into the promised land. And in the new Testament, thus were the Apostles called to preach the Gospell. Secondly, God calls mediately by meanes, which be of two sorts; men and angels. By an angel was Philip, being a Deacon, called to be an Euangelist: and the set or appointed callings in Church and common-wealth, are ordinarily disposed by men, who are in this matter the instruments of God. And therefore men lawfully called by them, are truly called by God. Thus the Elders of Ephesus, called by the Apostles, and the rest of the Church, are said to be called by the holy Ghost. And thus we see how God is the author of euery calling.

The final cause or end of euery calling, I note in the last words of the description; For the common good: that is, for the benefite and good estate of mankind. In mans body there be sundry parts and members, and euery one hath his seuerall vse and office, which it performeth not for it selfe, but for the good of the whole bodie; as the office of the eye, is to see, of the eare to heare, and the foot to goe. Now all societies of men, are bodies, a family is a bodie, and so is euery particular Church a bodie, and the common-wealth also: and in these bodies there be seuerall members, which are men walking in seuerall callings and offices, the execution whereof, must tend to the happy and good estate of the rest; yea of all men euenly where, as much as possible is. The common good of men stands in this, not only that they liue, but that they liue well, in righteousness and holines, and consequently in true happinesse. And for the attainment hereunto, God hath ordained and disposed all callings, and in his providence designed the persons to beare them. Here then we must in generall know, that he abuseth his calling, who forsake he be that against the end thereof, imployes it for himselfe, seeking wholly his own, and not the common good. And that common saying, Euery man for himselfe, and God for vs all, is wicked, and is directly against the end of euery calling or honest kinde of life.

Thus much of the description of Vocation in generall. Now before I come particularly to intreate of the speciall kindes of callings, there are two generall rules to be learned of all, which belong to euery calling.

The first: whatsoever any man enterprizeth or doth, either in word or dede, he must doe it by vertue of his calling, and he must keepe himselfe within the compasse, limits, or precincts thereof. This rule is laid downe in the words of the Apostles: Let euery man abide in that calling, wherein he was called: the drift whereof is, to binde men to their calling, & to teach them to performe all their actions by warrant thereof. It is said, Hebr. 11. 6. Without faith it is impossible to please God: and Whatsoever is not of faith, is sinne. Whatsoever is not done within the compasse of a calling, is not of faith, because a man must first haue some warrant and word of God to assure him of his callings, to do this or that thing, before he can do it in faith. When the two brethren that strove about their inheritance came to Christ: & willed him to make agreement betweene them, Christ answered, Luk. 12. 14. Who made me a Iudge or decider betweene you? as if hee should say, it is not within the compasse of my calling: for I came to accomplish the worke of mans redemption, and not to decide inheritances: hereby giuing vs to vnderstand, that euery thing to be done must be done by warrant of some calling: and so long as men keepe themselves in their callings, they haue a promise of protection from God. Psal. 91. 11. Hee shall giue his Angels charge ouer thee, so keepe thee in all thy waies: that is, so long as thou keepst thy selfe within the waies of thy calling, so long shall my Angels preserve thee. The example of Dauid is worthy our considering, for he depending on the prouidence of God, & walking in his calling, had the protection of God, when Saul smote twice at him with a spear: when he was made a captain of a thousand that he might beaine of the Philistines: when Michol was promised to be his wife for an hundred fore-skins of the Philistines: when Saul commanded his own seruants to kill him, when he smote againe at him with a spear: when he fought to take him in his owne house: when he followed him to Naiab in Ramah: when he was absent from the solemn feast made by Saul: when the priests of Aph were slaine, 85. persons, and all the inhabitants of the place: when Saul persecuted him in the desert of Abdon. Contrariwise, when any man is without the compasse of his calling, he is out of the way, and by this meanes hee bereaues himselfe of the protection of the Almighty; and lies open and naked to all the punishments & plagues of God. And if we marke it well, the word of God shewes evidently to what dangers they are subiect, that doe any thing either without or against their callings. Sampsons strength lay not in his haire (as men commonly thinke) but because he went out of his calling, by breaking the vow of a Nazarite, when he gave occasiō to Dallab to cut off his haire, therefore he lost his strength, for God promisth strength, but with a commandement, that he should bee a Nazarite to the end. Jud. 13. 5. When Saul was commanded to slay the Amalekites, against his calling he spared Agag vpon a foolish pity, and the best things; and thereupon Samuel reprooued him of rebellio against God, which was as the sin of witchcraft, and for this very cause was he reiected of God frō being king ouer Israel. Iona being called to preach at Ninuite, went about by flight to shake off the calling of God, but whē he comes to the sea, he is tossed by a tempest, and cast out of the ship, and swallowed by a fish that God hath prepared for this purpose. When Peter beyond the limits of his calling, would needs warme him at the high Priests fire, it cost him the breach of his conscience; for at the very voice of a Damocel he denied Christ with cursing and banning. And the Exorcists in the Acts, that without sufficient calling, tooke on them to coniure euill spirits in the name of Iesus, were overcome by the same spirits; & were faine to flie away naked & wounded. In a word, looke what iudgements befall men, marke well the time and circumstance thereof, it shall be found, that they are cast vpon them by the hand of God, when they are forth of their callings, which God hath prescribed them to keepe. Therefore this mistalwaies be remembered & practised carefully, that we doe take nothing in hand, vntill we haue first ranked our selues within the precincts of our callings.

The second generall rule which must be remembered, is this: That Every man must doe the duties of his calling with diligence: & therefore Salomon saith, Ecc. 9. 10. Whatsoever is in thine hand to doe, doe it with all thy power. S. Paul bids him that ruleth, rule with diligence; and euery man to wait on his office, Rom. 12. 8. And Jeremy saith, Ier. 48. 10 Cursed be that doth the work of the Lord negligently. That which Christ faith of the worke of our redemption, It is meane and drinke for me to do my Fathers will: the same must euery man say in like sort of his particular calling. Of this diligence there be two reasons: first of al, the end why God bestowes his gifts vpon vs, is that they might be employed in his seruice, and to his glory, and that in this life. Therefore Paul faith, Redeeme the time: and Christ, Wake while ye haue light. And againe, I must doe his work while it is day: For wee trades men and traualers rise early to their businesse, lest night ouertake them. Secondly to them which employ their gifts; more is giuen, and from them which employ them not, is taken that which they haue: and labour in a calling is as pretious as gold or silver. Hereupon hee that naines a man, & disables him to doe the

A worke of his calling, by Gods law is bound to giue him the value of his labour, Exod. 21. 19. And to like purpose our people haue a common saying, that an occupation is as good as land, because land may be lost; but skill and labour in a good occupation is profitable to the end, because it will helpe at neede, when land and all things faile. And on the other side, wee must take heed of two damnable finnes that are contrary to this diligence. The first is idleness, whereby the duties of our callings, and the occasions of glorifying God, are neglected or omitted. The second is slothfulness, whereby they are performed slackly and carelessly. God in the Parable of the hus-bandman, calls them that are idle into his vineyard, saying, Why stand ye idle all the day? Mat. 20. 6. And the servant that had receiued but one talent is called an euill seruant, because he was slothfull in the vse of it: for so it is said. Thou euill seruant and slothfull, Mat. 25. 26. S. Paul giues this rule to the Thessalonians, He that would not labour, must not eate: yet such a one hee would haue to bee noted by a letter, as walked inordinately. And this he fieweth, that sloth and negligence in the duties of our callings, are a disorder against that conly order which God hath set in the societies of mankind, both in church and common-wealth. And indeed, idleness and sloth are the causes of many damnable finnes.

Thus much of the two general rules. Now follow the parts and kinds of Vocations: and they are of two sorts: Generall, or Particular. The generall calling is the calling of Christianity, which is common to all that liue in the Church of God. The particular, is that special calling that belongs to some particular men: as the calling of a Magistrate, the calling of a Minister, the calling of a Master, of a father, of a childe, of a seruant, of a subiect, or any other calling that is common to all. And Paul acknowledging this distinction of Callings, when he saith, Let euery man abide in that calling wherein he is called, that is, in that particular and personal calling, in which he was called to bee a Christian. Of these two in order.

The generall Calling is that whereby a man is called out of the world to bee a child of God, a member of Christ, & heire of the kingdome of heauen. This calling belongs to euery one within the compasse of the Church, not any one accepted. Here I haue iust occasion to make a long discourse touching the calling of men to Christ and Christian Religion, but I will only touch the maine duties thereof, which are especially foure. The first is, the inuocation of the name of God in Christ. When as Sau got letters from the high Priests to persecute the Church, it is said by S. Luk. Att. 9. 14. that he receiued authoritie to bind all that call vpon the name of God. Paul writing to the Church of Corinth, calleth the members thereof Saints: and such as call on the name of the Lord Iesus, 1. Cor. 1. 2. By both which places the holy Ghost would giue vs to vnderstand, that inuocation is a maine duty which euery Christian man is to performe continually; and it contains both prayer and thanksgiving in the name and mediation of Iesus Christ. And indeed by this action a Christian is distinguished and seuered from all other sort of men in the world, that pretend deuotion or religion. By this it appeareth, howeouer al men do desire to beare this name, & take vnto them this generall calling, yet very few are indeed true and sound Christians; for not one of an hundred can rightly inuocate the name of God, though they can indeed repeat the words of prayer, yet they want the spirit of grace, & supplications, whereby they should aske grace in Christs name, and giue thanks for benefits received. Thus many bearing in shew the name of Christ, want the power thereof. Nay which is more, not to call on the name of God is made by the Prophet David, the note and marke of an Atheist, that faith in his heart there is no God, Psal. 14. 9.

The second duty is, as much as possibly we can, to further the good estate of the true Church of God. It is indeede principally the duty of the Minister, and yet generally it appertaines to all; for as in mans body, the eye by seeing, the eare by hearing, the tongue by speaking, and euery part by his proper office doth further the good of the whole body: Euen so, all that are called to bee members of Christ, must as much as in them lieth, procure the good of the whole mystical body of Christ. David in the name of the whole Church saith, Psal. 122. 69. I will procure thy wealth, and pray for the peace of Ierusalem, they shall prosper that loue thee. And after hee had humbled himselfe for the two greivous sins of adultery and murder, in the end he praises to God to build the walles of Ierusalem. For the building of the tabernacle, the Iews brought free-will offerings according to their ability. Some brought gold and precious stones, others silver and like, & such as had no better thing, brought rammes skins, and badgers skins: euen so, in the building of Gods Church his spiritual tabernacle, euery Christian must bring a free-will offering, he must doe something euen to the utmost of his power, to the building of Gods Church, though his seruice be but meane. Though men (as I haue said) fondly imagine, that this duty is proper to the ministers of the word; yet the truth is, it belongs not onely vnto them, but to euery one that professeth himselfe to bee a member of the body of Christ: in which respect he must, so much as he can, procure and further the good of the whole.

Here then wee are to consider the meanes

A whereby this dutie may bee done. They are especially three. The first is prayer, not onely for our selues, but for the good estate of the whole Church of God on earth. To this effect spake Christ to his disciples, when he saw the Iewes like scattered sheepe without a shepherd: Pray to the Lord of the harvest, that hee would thrust forth labourers into the harvest, Mat. 9. 38. And in that prayer, commonly called the Lords prayer, we are taught to say, Let thy kingdome come: where by kingdome is not onely meant the kingdome of glory in heauen, but the kingdome of grace, which is the happy and blessed condition of Gods Church on earth. And therefore Paul biddeth the Thessalonians pray, that Gods word may haue free passage and be glorified, 2. Thess. 3. 1.

The second meanes is, the worke of edification, which Paul enioynes the Thessalonians: Edifie one another, 1. Thess. 5. 11. And Saint Iudo v. 20. Edifie your selues vpon your most holy faith. The Church of God is a Temple made without hands, the foundation is Christ; and euery member of Christ with all that appertaine to Gods election, are liuing stones: the builders of this temple principally, are Pastours and teachers, and not onely they, but all Christian persons generally. The care stands here as it did in the building of the materiall temple, the principall builders whereof were such as cut and laid stones, and wrought curious workes; besides whom, there were many others, which though they could neither cut nor frame, yet did they further the building, either by carrying of burthens, or making of mortar: euen so in the building of Gods spiritual Church, though all cannot square stones like Masons, nor build as the Minister doth, yet all without exception pertaining to the Church of God, must put their helping hands to further this building. And this may bee done two waies: first, by vsing all good means, whereby we may draw our kindred, friends, & neighbours to the loue and obedience of true religion. This duty Paul propoundeth to the Corinthians in his owne example, saying: He pleased all men in all things, not seeking his own profit, but the profit of many, that they might be saved, 1. Cor. 10. 33. Secondly, this thing is done by confirming those which are called, by often admonitions, exhortations, consolations, and all other like duties that serue to this end. And by these duties may the meaneest person in the Church of God, build or edifie.

Heere I may iustly complaine of the neglect of this duty: for the care stands vs in the barren and fruitlesse age of the world: men are so farre from the duties of edification, that they vse all meanes, rather to pull downe then to build. For he that giues himselfe but to learne the duties of religion, and in some sort to liue accordingly, is made a signe and a by-word among the common people, & also a wonder. And this shewes, that the practise of this duty of edification lies dead, whereto neuerthe leffe we are bound, by vertue of generall calling.

The third meanes of furthering the good of Gods Church, is, to conferre the temporall blessings that God hath bestowed vpon vs according to our abilitie, to the good thereof. Honour God with thy riches, saith Salomon, Prouerb. 3. 9. and that is done especially, when they are employed to the maintaining and furthering of true religion, and the worshipp of God. There be other ends for which God hath giuen riches, but this of all is the principall. Yet alas, this dutie is but slenderly practised of such as carry the name of Christ: for many of the richer sort spend a great part of their increase vpon hawkes, buls, beares, dogs, or riotously mispend the same in some sporting or gaming: and disable themselves to do that good they should vnto the Church of God. And the meaner sort nowadaies spend that they get in fine apparell, and good chere: and by this meanes the house of God is lesse regarded: for euery common man nowadaies must be a gentleman, and it is very hard sometimes for a stranger to discern the master from the seruant: and there is such excee in all degrees, that now for daily attire, the noblest are the plainest. To this dutie I may also adde, that euery Christian parent, by vertue of his generall calling, is to dedicate some of his male children, as much as possible is, to the seruice of the ministrie; if so be they haue gifts and inclinations of nature fit for that calling. And in this case the example of Anna may bee a good direction for vs to follow, who did before-hand consecrate Sammuel her first borne to the Lord. By this meanes the ministrie shall be continued, Gods Church and religion maintained, and his Gospell published from age to age to the end of the world.

The third generall dutie of Christianitie, is, that euery man should become a seruant to his brother in all the duties of loue. A Christian is the freest of all men in the world. For in that respect he is the child of God in Christ, he is truly freed from hel, death, and condemnation; yea, and in part from sinne and Satan; and that in this life: and yet for al this, he must bee a seruant vnto euery man. But how? by all the duties of loue, as occasion shall be offered, and that for the common good of all men. Marke well the words of Saint Paul, 1. Cor. 9. 19. Though I be free from all men, yet haue I made my selfe seruant to all, that I might winne the more. If it bee said, this dutie appertaines to an Apostle, I answer, that Paul enioynes it indifferently to euery man, Galat. 5. 13. Do ye serue one to another in loue. And for this cause the seruants of God are said to bee trees of righteousness, whose leaues serue for medicine, and their fruit for meate, not for themselves, but for others. Let vs therefore in the feare of God bee careful to learne this dutie: for the practise of it is the speciall ornament of Christs holy Gospell.

The last generall duty is set downe by Saint Paul, Eph. 4. 1. Walke worthy that calling whereto God hath called you. Again, 1. Tim. 2. 10. he biddeth seruants so to carry themselves toward their masters, that they may adorne the Gospell of God in all things: and he sets downe in the words following, how men may adorne religion by their profession: namely, by denying ungodlinesse and worldly lusts, by liuing soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world. In a word, this calling of Christianitie is the most excellent calling in the world, and hee walketh worthy the same that keepeth a good conscience before God, and is vnblameable before all men.

This dutie I commend to the meditation and practise of all men whatsoever: we were once baptized, and therin gaue vp our names to God and Christ: and wee are content to heare the word, and receiue the Supper of the Lord as a pledge of his mercy and loue. Wee must therefore walke as they to whom the mercy and loue of God pertaines. Christ pronounceth a woe to them that giue offence, Matth. 18. 7. And indeed it were better for any man to be as farre vnder the earth, as he is about it, then by abad and loose conuersation to slander the name of God, whose professed seruant hee is: and as Christ saith, It were better a millstone were hanged about his necke, and hee were throwne into the bottom of the sea. As David prayeth, Psal. 119. 39. Lord, sake from me rebuke and shame, which I desire, because thy iudgements are good: so must we pray, Lord take from me rebuke & shame, for thy Gospell is good. And that wee may euermore walke worthy of this calling, wee first of all must depend by faith on the prouidence and mercy of God at all times. Secondly, wee must daily turne vnto him, by a continuall renewing of our repentance. Thirdly, wee must indeauour to performe new obedience in respect of all his commandements.

Thus much of the generall calling common to all men as they are Christians. Now followeth the second kinde of calling, and that is personall. A personall calling is the execution of some particular office, arising of that distinction which God makes betwene man and man in euery societie. First I say, it is the execution of some particular office; as for example, the calling of a magistrate is to execute the office of government ouer his subiects, the office of a minister is to execute the duty of teaching his people, the calling of a master, is to execute the office of authority and government ouer his seruants: the office of a Physician, is to put in practise the good means whereby life and health are preferred. In a word, in euery estate the practise and execution of that particular office, wherein any man is placed, is his personall calling.

Secondly I adde, that it ariseth from that distinction which God maketh betwene man and man in euery societie: to shew what is the foundation and ground of all personall callings. And it is a point to bee considered of vs, which I thus explaine: God in his word hath ordained the societie of man with man, partly in the Common-wealth, partly in the Church, and partly in the family: and it is not the will of God that man should liue and conuerse alone by himselfe. Now for the maintaining of societie, he hath ordained a certaine bond to linke men together, which Saint Paul calleth the bond of peace, and the bond of perfection, namely, loue. And howsoeuer hee hath ordained societie, and the bond of them all, yet hath he appointed that there should still remaine a distinction betwene man and man, not only in regard of person, but also in other respects: for as the whole bodie is not the hand, nor the foote, nor the eye, but the hand one part, the foot another, and the eye another: and howsoeuer in the bodie one part is linked to another, yet there is a distinction betwixt the members, whereby it cometh to passe, that the hand is the hand, not the foot, and the foote, the foote, not the hand, nor the eye: so it is in societie; there is a distinction in the members thereof, and that in two respects: first, in regard of the inward gifts which God bestowes on euery man, giuing to eueryall men severall gifts according to his good pleasure. Of this distinction in regard of inward gifts, Paul intreateth at large, 1. Cor. 12. through the whole chapter, where he sheweth the diuersty of gifts that God bestowes on his Church, and so proportionally in euery societie. Now looke as the inward gifts of men are feuered, so are the persons distinguished in their societie accordingly. Secondly, persons are distinguished by order, whereby God hath appointed, that in euery societie one person should bee about or vnder another: not making all equal, as though the bodie should bee all head and nothing else: but euen in degree and order, hee hath set a distinction, that one should be about another. And by reason of this distinction of men, partly in respect of gifts, partly, in respect of order, come personall callings. For if all men had the same gifts, and all were in the same degree and order, then should all haue one and the same calling: but in as much as God giueth diuersty of gifts inwardly, and distinction of order outwardly, hence proceede diuersty of personall callings, and therefore I added, that personall callings arise from that distinction which God maketh betwene man and man in euery societie. And thus wee see what is a personall calling. Now before I come to intreate of the parts thereof, there bee other generall rules to bee learned, which concerne all personall callings whatsoever.

1. Rule. Euery person of euery degree, state, sexe, or condition without exception, must haue some personall and particular calling to walke in. This appeareth plainly by the whole word of God. Adam so soone as he was created, euen in his integrity had a personall calling assigned him by God: which was, to dreffe and keepe the garden. And after Adams fall, the Lord giueth a particular commandement to him and all his posterity, which bindeth all men to walke in some calling, either in the Church or Common-wealth, saying, Gen. 3. 19. In the sweate of thy browes shalt thou eate thy bread. Again, in the renewing of the law in mount Sinai, the fourth commandement doth not onely permit labour on fixe daies, but also enioynes the same (as I take it) vs all. For Gods example is there propounded for vs to follow, that as he rested the seventh day, so must also wee: and consequently, as hee spent fixe daies in the worke of creation, so should wee in our personall callings. And S. Paul giueth this rule, Eph. 4. 28. Let him that stole steal no more, but let him rather worke with his hands the thing that is good, that hee may haue to giue to him that needeth. Christ the head of men, liued with Ioseph in the calling of a Carpenter, till the time of his baptisme, and hereupon it was that the Iewes said, Is not this the carpenter the sonne of Mary? and after he was baptized, and was as it were solemnly admitted into the office of a Mediator, the worke of our redemption was then his calling, in which he both liued and died. Yea the Angels of God haue their particular callings, in that they doe his commandements in obeying the voyce of his word. And therefore all that descend of Adam must needs haue some calling to walke in, either publique, or priuate, whether it be in the Church, or Common-wealth, or family.

Hence we may learne sundry points of instruction, first of all, that it is a foule disorder in any Common-wealth, that there should bee suffered rogues, beggars, vagabonds; for such kinde of persons commonly are of no ciuill societie or corporation, nor of any particular Church: and are as rotten legges, and armes that drop from the body. Again, to wander vp and downe from yeere to yeere to this end, to seeke and procure bodily maintenance, is no calling, but the life of a beast: and consequently a condition or state of life against the rule; That euery one must haue a particular calling. And therefore the Statute made the last Parliament for the restraining of beggars and rogues, is an excellent Statute, and being in substance the very law of God, is neuer to be repealed.

Again, hereby is ouerthrowen the condition of Monkes and Friars: who challenge to themselves that they liue in a state of perfection, because they liue apart from the societie of men in fasting and prayer: but contrariwise, this Monkish kind of liuing is damnable; for besides the generall duties of fasting and prayer, which appertaine to al Christians, euery man must haue a particular & personall calling, that he may bee a good and profitable member of some society and body. And the ancient Church condemned all Monkes for theennes and robbers, that besides the generall duties of prayer and fasting, did not wish to employ themselves in some other calling for their better maintenance.

Thirdly, we learne by this, that miserable and damnable is the estate of those that being enriched with great liuings and reuenues, do spend their daies in eating and drinking, in sports and pastimes, not employing themselves in seruice for Church or Common-wealth. It may be haply thought, that such gentlemen haue happy liues; but it is farre otherwise: considering euery one, rich or poore, man or woman, is bound to haue a personall calling, in which they must performe some duties for the common good, according to the measure of the gifts that God hath bestowed vpon them.

Fourthly, hereby also it is required that such as we commonly call seruing men, should haue, beside the office of waiting, some other particular calling, vntill they tend on men of great place and state: for onely to waite, and giue attendance, is not a sufficient calling, as common experience telleth: for waiting seruants, by reason they spend the most of their time in eating and drinking, sleeping and gaming after dinner and after supper, do procure the most vnprofitable members both in Church and Common-wealth. For when either their good matters die, or they be turned out of their office for some mildemeanor, they are fit for no calling, being vnable to labour: and thus they giue themselves either to begge or steale. The waiting man of Cornelius that Centurion, was also by calling a fouler: and it were to be wished now adays, that gentlemen would make choice of such seruants that might not onely tend on their person, but also tend vpon some other conuenient office. It is good for euery man to haue two strings to his bow.

II. Rule. Euery man must iudge that particular calling, in which God hath placed him, to be the best of all callings for him: I say not simply best, but best for him. This rule is set forth vnto vs in the example of Paul, I haue learned (saith he) in whatsoever state I am, to be content and well pleased. The practise of this doctrine is the stay & foundation of the good estate both of Church and Common-wealth: for it maketh euery man to keepe his owne standing, and to employ himselfe painefully within his calling; but when we begin to mislike the wise disposition of God, and to thinke other mens callings better for vs then our owne, then folloes confusion and disorder in euery society. When Asalam a child, and subiect of king Dauid, was not content with his estate, but sought his fathers kingdom, and said, O that I were iudge among you: many contentions and huriburies followed in the Common-wealth of the Iewes all his daies. And the sonnes of Zebedeus not contenting themselves with the calling of Disciples, but being inflamed with desire of honour and dignity, sought two principal offices in Christ his kingdom, which (as they deemed) should be a ciuill and worldly kingdom. Hence arose enuy and heart-burning among the disciples, and further euils would haue ensued, vntill the wisdom of our Sauour Christ had cut them off. The Bishops of the Church of Rome, not contented with their Ecclesiasticall estate, assisted the honour of the Empire: and by this means brought hauocke and ruine vpon the whole Church: yea, the very first family that euer was in the world, felt the smart of this euill. Cain, because he feared the losse of his primacy, whereby he was to be a Priest, Prophet, & ruler in Adams house, after this decease, slew his brother Abel. And this may well be gathered by the words of the text, where when Cain began to be angry, the Lord said; If thou dost well, there is remission; if not, sin lieth at the doore. Now Cain might haply reply & say; this is well, but my grieue remains, that I must loose my right & dignity. To this God answereth thus, in the next words; And his appetite shall be to thee, and thou shalt rule ouer him; namely, if thou dost well. And from time to time, the greates discord that haue fallen out in the Church of God, haue issued fro this fountaine. And the same is also true in the Common-wealth: hence come treacheries, treasons, and seditions, when men, not content with their owne estate and honors, seeke higher places: and being disappointed, grow to discontentments, & so forward to all mischief. Therefore in a word, the good estate of the Church and common-wealth, is when euery person keepe himselfe to his owne calling. And this wil vndoubtedly come to passe, if we consider what be our callings; and that we are placed in them of God; and therefore iudge them to be the best callings of all for vs.

III. Rule. Euery man must ioyne the practise of his personall calling, with the practise of the generall calling of Christianity, before described. More plainly: Euery particular calling must be practised in, & with the generall calling of a Christian. It is not sufficient for a man in the congregation, and in common conuersation, to bee a Christian, but in his very personall calling, he must shew himselfe to be so. As for example. A Magistrate must not onely in generall bee a Christian, as euery man is, but he must bee a Christian Magistrate, in executing the office of a Magistrate in bearing the sword. A matter of a family, must not onely bee a Christian abroad in the towne, and in the congregation, in the sight of strangers, but also in the administration and regiment of his particular family, towards wife, children, and seruants. It is not enough for a woman to be vertuous openly to strangers; but her vertue must priuately shew it selfe in her subiection and obedience to her owne husband. A Schoolemaster must not onely be a Christian

Gen. 4.7.

Gen. 4.7.

Col. 3.28.

in the assembly, when hee heareth the word, and receiue the Sacraments, but he must also shew himselfe to bee a Christian in the office of teaching. And thus must euery man be haue himselfe in his particular calling; because the particular calling & practise of the duties thereof, seuered from the foresaid generall calling, is nothing else but a practise of iniustice and profanenes. And the generall calling of Christianity, without the practise of some particular calling, is nothing els, but the forme of godlinesse, without the power thereof: And therefore both callings must be ioyned, as body and soule are ioyned in a liuing man. And that wee may the better ioyne both our callings together, wee must consider the maine end of our liues, and that is, to serue God in the seruing of men in the workes of our callings. God, as he made man, so can hee preferre man, without the helpe of man: but his pleasure is, that men should be his instruments, for the good of one another. For this cause hath he ordained the excellent office of Magistrates & Ministers, and almost an infinite variety of trades of life, all tending to preserue the body or soule, or both. Thus God manifesteth his fatherly care ouer vs, by the employment of men in his seruice, according to their severall vocations, for our good: and there is not so much as the vassall or bond-man; but hee must serue God by seruing his master: as Paul teacheth; And by this one point, wee may learne two things. The first, that they profane their liues & callings that employ them to get honors, pleasures, profits, worldly commodities, &c. for thus wee lye to another end then God hath appointed, and thus we serue our felues, & consequently, neither God, nor man. Some man will say perchance; What must we not labour in our callings, to maintaine our families? I answer; this must be done: but this is not the scope and end of our liues. The true end of our liues is, to do seruice to God, in seruing of man; and for a recompence of this seruice, God sends his blessings on mens trauailes, and he allows them to take for their labours. Secondly, by this we learne, how men of mean place & calling, may comfort themselves. Let them consider, that in seruing of men, by performance of poore and base duties they serue God: and therefore that their seruice is not base in his sight: & though their reward from men be little, yet the reward at Gods hand, shall not be wanting. For seeing they serue God in seruing of men, they may iustly looke for reward from both. And thus may we reape maruailous contentation in any kind of calling, though it be but to sweepe the house, or keepe sheepe, if we can thus in practise, vntie our callings.

By this rule may any man rightly iudge of himselfe & others. For wherefoeuer these two callings are seuered, whatfoeuer is in them, there is nothing in substance. And by this also we may discern a common fault in the liues of many men, who shew themselves ready and willing to heare the word of God; yea, they approue it, receiue the Sacraments, and professe themselves to be members of Christ: and all these bee good duties of the first and generall calling; but goe on further, and looke into their particular callings, there shalt thou find nothing lesse, there is a sort of orderfome bee viuers and oppressours, some ingrossers, some vnto false weights and measures, some lying and swearing, some are loose & lasciuious. It may be, such persons resolute themselves that all is well, when they doe some duties of their generall calling: but whereas they neglect the performance of the said duties, in their particular callings, they are farre out of order; yea, they leade a dangerous and lamentable course of life. For though they be indued with excellent gifts, and be able to speake well, conceiue prayer, and with some reuerence to heare the Word, and receiue the Sacraments, yet if they practise not the duties of godlinesse within their own callings, all is but hypocrisie. And therefore, vntill they repent & greater their gifts are, the more shall they make to their deeper condemnation at the day of iudgement.

Againe, this rule serueth to teach all men the right way to reforme their liues. If thou wouldest leade a life vnblameable both before God & man, thou must first of all bethinke thy selfe, what is thy particular calling, and then proceede to practise duties of the moral law, and all other duties of Christianity, in that very calling. And if thou wouldest haue signes and tokens of thy election and saluation, thou must fetch them from the constant practise of thy two callings ioynly together: seuer them in thy life, and thou shalt finde no comfort, but rather shame and confusion of face, vntill thou repent.

IV. Rule. Such as beare publike callings, must first reforme themselves in priuate. When Moses went from Midian to Egypt, to be a gouernour of the Israelites, the Lord withstood him in the way, by reason of a fault in his priuate family, that his child was not circumcised according to the law of God: How shall he order publike matters for the common good, that cannot order his owne priuate estate?

V. Rule. A particular calling must giue place to the generall calling of a Christian, when they cannot both stand together. As for example: a seruant is bound to his master to obey him; either because he is a vassall, or at the least because he is hired to serue for wages: the said master being a zealous Papist, threatneth his seruant, being a Protestant, that vntill hee condescend to heare Masse, hee shall either burne at a stake, or carry a faggot. Now the seruant seeing the malicious purpose of his master, and not finding himselfe able to beare the brunt of a trial, in this case, he departs & withdraws himselfe for a time: And the questiō is, whether he doth well or no? The answer is, he doth: and in such a case, he may lawfully flee from his master: for a servant that by personall calling is bound to an earthly master, is further by a generall calling, bound vnto God. And the particular calling of any man, is inferior to the generall calling of a Christian: and when they cannot both stand together, the particular calling must giue place; because we are bound vnto God in the first place, and vnto man, vnder God: and so farre only as we may withall, keepe our bond with God. And thus much of the five generall rules, that are to be practised in euery particular calling.

To proceede. Personall callings be of two sorts: of the first sort, are all such as be of the essence and foundation of any societie, without which, the societie cannot be. As in a family, the calling of a master, and the calling of a seruants; the calling of a husband & wife; of parents and children. And in the common-wealth, the calling of Magistrates, and subiects. And in the Church, the calling of the Minister and of the people. Of the second sort, are all such as serue onely for the good, happy, and quiet estate of a societie. And these be of sundry sorts, some of them seruing for the preservation of the life of man, as the calling of an husbandman, of a Merchant, &c. some seruing for the preservation of health, as the calling of a Physician, and of the Surgeon, &c. some seruing for the outward peace, as the calling of a Souldier, of the Lawyer, &c. some seruing for the clothing and attiring of the body, and they be almost so many, as be the parts of the body: some also seruing for building, as the calling of a Carpenter, and Mason. In a word, looke how many things be necessarie, for the good estate of any societie, so many personall callings there be, which belong not to the essence and being of a societie, but serue onely for the good of the same. And to one of these two kinds, may all lawfull personall callings bee referred. Thus much of callings in generall, and of the kinds thereof.

The third point to be considered, which is the most principall is this: How euery man may in a good and holy manner vse his calling: this still being remembered, that I speake not of extraordinary callings, or of the generall calling of a Christian, but onely of ordinarie and personall callings. The handling of this point, is of great weight and moment: for by the right vse of euery calling, the workes thereof are made good workes, though otherwise they be but meane & base in themselves. In a good worke are three things required: first, it must be done in obedience: secondly, in faith: thirdly, it must be directed to the glory of God. Now the workes of euery calling, while they are performed in an holy manner, are done in faith and obedience, and serue notably for Gods glory, bee the calling neuer so base. As for example, a man is by profession a shepheard, the calling is but base and meane, and the duties thereof are fensible: yet if there be grace to vse that calling aright, the duties thereof are good workes before God; being done with conscience of obedience vnto God, for his glorie, and the good of the master. The meane effect of the calling, doth not abate the goodnesse of the worke: for God looketh not at the excellency of the worke, but at the heart of the worker. And the action of a shepheard in keeping sheepe, performed as I haue said, in his kind, is as good a worke before God, as is the action of a Iudge, in giuing sentence; or of a Magistrate in ruling, or a Minister in preaching. Thus then we see there is good reason why we would search how euery man is rightly to vse his particular calling. In the right vse of any calling, foure things are to be considered and performed. I. good choice of a calling. II. good entrance into it. III. good continuance therein. IV. an honest and good leauing of the same. For the first, in the choice of our callings, we must remember and obserue three particular rules.

I. Rule. That we are to chooe honest and lawfull callings to walke in. Eph. 4. 28. Let him that stole (saith Paul) steale no more: but let him rather labour and worke with his hands, the thing that is good. Here we are warned by the holy Ghost, to make choice of such callings as be honest. Again, all the workes of our callings must be done in faith, and there is no faith, vntill the calling be honest.

For better direction in the choice of an honest calling, this generall ground must be obserued: Euery calling that serueth to vphold and maintaine the three seuerall estates and societies, namely, the estate of the Church, or the estate of the Common-wealth, or the estate of the family, is grounded vpon the morall law; and therefore lawfull, and consequently may be had, vsed, and inioyed with good conscience. On the contrary, if it be an hinderance to any of these three estates, in whole, or in part, it is an vlawfull calling.

II. Rule. Euery man must chooe a fit calling to walke in; that is, euery calling must be fitted to the man, and euery man be fitted to his calling. This rule is as necessary as the former: for while men are out of their proper callings in any societie, it is as much, as if a ioynt were out of the place in the body. Now in the choice of callings, two sorts of men must be considered, men of yeeres, & children. Men of yeeres make choice of fit callings for themselves, when they trie, iudge, and examine themselves to what things they are apt and fit, and to what things they are not. And euery man must examine himselfe of two things: first, touching his affection; secondly, touching his gifts. For his affection, he must search what minde hee hath to any calling, and in what calling he desireth most of all to glorifie God. For his gifts he must examine, for, & to what calling they are fitted. Having thus tried both his affection and gifts, finding also the calling to which they tend with one consent, hee may say, that is his calling, because he liketh it best, and is euery way the fittest to it. As for example: one brought vp in the Schooles of learning, desireth to know what ought to be his calling; well, he examines his affections or desire, and findes it most of all inclined to the ministry of the Gospell: he examines his gifts also, and findeth both knowledge and vtterance fitt for the same. Now such a one may safely say; that the ministry is the calling, to which he is set apart. And the like may any other man in any other calling say for himselfe. Yet, because many men are partiall in iudging of their inclination and gifts, the best way for them is, to vse the aduise and helpe of others, that are able to giue direction herein, and to discern better then themselves.

Now touching children, it is the dutie of parents, to make choice of fitt callings for them, before they apply them to any particular condition of life. And that they may the better iudge aright, for what callings their children are fit, they must obserue two things in them: first, their inclination: secondly, their naturall gifts. Touching inclination, euery child, even in his first yeeres doth affect some one particular calling, more then another; as some are affected more with musike, then others, some with merchandise, some with a more liberrall kinde of learning: some with this, some with that. And by this may the parents something iudge of their inclination and towardnesse. This was practised among the Athenians, who before they placed their children in any calling, did first bring them into a publike place, where instruments of all sorts were laid: and they obserued with what kinde of instrument they tooke delight, and to the like Art did they afterwards apply them with good success. And it will not be amisse, for Christians to be followers of the heathen in this, or any other commendable practise. Secondly, the naturall gifts which parents are to obserue in their children, are either in their bodies, or in their mindes. And those children which excell in the gifts of the body, are to be brought vp in callings, performed by the labour of the body: as in Mechanicall Arts. And such as excell in the gifts of minde, are to be applied to those sciences that are performed by wit and learning. The (a) notes of a child that is fit for learning, are these: a loue of learning, a loue of labour, a loue of praise, and a wit neither too quicke, nor too dull. A fine wit in a child, is like a pen-knife that will not shine a great lease, but onely serue to cut a quill. Again, in the gifts of the minde, make a speciall difference. There be two kinds of vnderstanding, Active, and Passiue. The active vnderstanding is that, which not onely conceiveth of thing inuented by others, but also can inuent things of it selfe. The passiue vnderstanding is that, which onely conceiveth of things deuised by others, and cannot inuent, but very hardly of it selfe. And euery one, both old and yong, haue one of these kindes of vnderstanding. Now all those children that excell in this active vnderstanding, are to bee set apart, for the greatest callings in the Church and common-wealth. Demetrius the Philosopher, chose Protagoras to be his scholler, because he shewed him in the artificiall binding of a bundle of stickes. Athenasius that famous Bishop, was first put to learning, because he was found by the sea side doing the part of a Minister, among the company of little children like himselfe, examining and baptizing them according to the solemne order vsed in the congregation. Origen, that famous cleare, when he was a child, vsed to question with his father Leonidas about the sense of the Scripture, and to demand of trades-men, the causes of things, and the vse of their tooles and instruments. And thus we see in some euery how parents may iudge to what calling their child is fit.

And here all parents must be warned, that the neglect of this duty, is a great and common sin: for the care of the most is, that their children may liue, nothing regarding whether they liue well, & do seruice to God in a fit calling or no. And the truth is, parents cannot do greater wrong to their children, and the societie of men, then to apply them vnto vnfit callings, when a child is fit for learning, to apply him to a trade, or other bodily seruice, contrarywise, to apply him to learning, when he is fittest for a trade: for this is as much, as if a man should apply his toes to feeling, and not his fingers; & to go on his hands, and not on his feet, and to let the members of the body out of their proper places. And this is the second rule.

III. Rule. He that is fit for sundry callings, must make choise of the best. Thus much S. Paul teacheth plainly in the next verse of this chapter: Art thou (saith he) called, being a seruant? care not for it; but if thou must bee free, chooe it rather. Where he giues this counsell, that a bondman hauing liberty in his choice, must accept of it, rather then continue a bondman still. Again, Paul bids the Corinthians to conuict spiriual gifts, but especially that they may prophesie: wher he giues this rule, that in the choice of gifts, we must labour for the best gifts: & if we are to seek after the best gifts, the proportionally we must seeke for the best callings.

Here is a speciall rule for all yong students in the Vniuersities. Such as are brought vp in the schooles of the Prophets, desire to know what particular calling is best for them, because they haue libertie to be either Schoole-masters, or Physicians, or Lawyers, or Ministers of the word of God. S. Paul according to this generall rule, sheweth that a choise must be made of the best calling. And in the first place, if gifts will serue, a choise must be made of the calling of a Prophet or teacher, and that about all other. Academicall callings must haue the first place. Thus much of choice.

II. Point. Where choice is once made, we must then consider, how a good entrance is to be made into the calling which we haue chosen. Touching entrance, many points are to be scanned. The first is, in what sort & manner an entrance must be made. And the right manner is this; Every man must loenter, that hee may truly in conscience say; God hath placed me in this calling, be it neuer so base a calling. Thus Paul faith in this chapt. v. 17. As God hath called euery man, so let him walke. And Christ our Sauour neuer tooke vpon him openly, the office of a Mediatour, till hee was baptized, and therein called vnto it, by the voice of his father from heauen, saying; This is my beloved Sonne, in whom I am well pleased. But immediately after hee beganne to teach and preach, and to shew himselfe the true Messias, in performing the duties of a King, Priest, and Prophet. There is no calling vpon earth, since the fall of Adam, but hath crofles and calamities attending on it, but they are delayed, by comfort sufficient, when our conscience can tell vs, wee were placed in our callings by God himselfe; and when our conscience can not say thus much the comfort is gone.

Now, that euery man may certainly know himselfe to be called of God to this or that calling, hee must haue two things: Gifts for the calling from God, and Allowance from men. For the first, whom God calleth to them hee giueth competent and conuenient gifts or knowledge, vnderstanding, dexterity to this or that, and such like; and thereby makes them able for the performance of the duties of their callings. Contrariwise, they that enter into any calling, being utterly vnable to performe the duties thereof, were neuer called of God. For the second, men are to be set apart to their particular callings by the appointment of men, whom God hath left on earth as his instruments, for the ordering and disposing of vocations. For God hath his deputies to allot men their offices in euery society, as parents and masters to dispose of persons in priuate families: for ecclesiasticall callings, the Gouernours of the Church; for ciuill, the Magistrate, and men of authority in the Commonwealth. And he that would truly say, God hath placed him in any particular calling, must also haue the outward calling of men. And here it is to be remembered, that trial of gifts & free election, without partiality should be in the designement of all, specially of public callings. Thus in the Primitive Church, not so much as Deacons were admitted without iust and sufficient trial, 1. Tim. 3. 10. And here sundry abuses are to be reproofed: as first of all, the buying and selling, the chopping and changing of ciuill offices; for where the calling is set to sale, there little or no trial, little or no election takes place. And he that buies his office, must rather say, his money called him then God: wherefore, such as lay vp money to buy offices, had best take heed before hand: for the saying is true; hee that buies the seate, must sell iustice: and where iustice is sold, the poore is oppressed, and all goes to wracke. The like is to be said of the sale of Ecclesiasticall linings, to which, cure of soules is annexed: yea of the dispensing and giuing them hand ouer head. Indeede, to buy or sell the linings of the Church, is not properly the tunc of Simon, who sought to get the gifts of the holy Ghost with money; yet is this buying a grieuous sin, flat against the order that God hath set down touching entrance into any calling. The very heathen themselves haue complained of this chopping and changing of places, as of the ruines of Itates, and Commonwealths. (A) Alexander Seneca the Emperour faith it is necessarie that he which buyeth, must sell. I will not suffer (b) buyers and sellers of offices: if I suffer them, it is because I cannot conueniently such. For I am ashamed to punish him that buies and sells. Seneca (c) faith this buying is the spoiling of Provinces: and that he which buies, must needs sell. Iulianian (d) complains, that his Domesticks are robbed and pilled, because men take gold for offices, and he straitly forbids it.

Thus much of entrance in general. Now follow certaine questions thereof. If this be as I haue said, that such as enter into any calling specially publicke, must first be enabled with gifts from God, and also set apart by men, after due trial and examination: then a question is to be skanned, which the Papists vs to propound; namely What calling the first Preachers of the Gospel, and planters of our Church had? The answer to this question is needfull: for if they had no calling, neither haue we that are the followers. And I answer two things. First, that they had their callings, by vertue whereof they restored the Gospel of Christ, from the Romish Church it selfe; for they were either Priests, or Schoole-Doctors, as in England, Wickliffe, in Germanie, Luther, in Bohemia, Iohn Huss, & Jerome of Prague, at Basil, Oecolampadius in Italy, Peter Martyr, and others. And therefore these, with many others, were ordained, either in Popish Churches, or in schooles, and there by oath solemnly bound to do the duties of their callings with good conscience, by confuting of error, and maintaining the ancient Apostolike faith. Wherefore if this their calling, be of any moment to stoppe their mouths, we say, the first restorers of the Gospel in our times, had their first callings of them. If it be said; that these men were all periured, for preaching against the Church of Rome, to whose allegiance they were bound by oath: I answer, that by vertue of their oaths at their ordination, they were bound onely to the Catholike and Apostolike Church, and not to the present Church of Rome: for the words [the Catholike and Apostolike Church of Rome] which now run in the tenour of the oath, were not so strictly vsed in former times, but are more vtged now of late. Secondly I answer; that that many of them had callings in some sort, extraordinary; I say in some sort, distinguishing the office of teaching, & the vse of it. The office which they performed, was ordinary, but the execution of this office, in purging and restoring true religion, not in respect of that true order which God had set downe in his word: but in respect of the abuse of it in the Romish Church, was extraordinary. Which I declare on this manner: God calleth men extraordinarily, when he binds not himselfe to ordinarie lawes of vocation, set downe in his word. And this he doth three waies. First, by his owne immediate voice. And thus was Abraham called, and Moses in the bush, and so were al the Apostles of Christ called immediately; and Paul likewise after Christs ascension. Secondly, he calls extraordinarily, by the ministry of creatures: as Elisha was called by Elisha, 1. Kin. 19. thus was Aaron called by Moses; and Philip called to baptize the Eunuch, by the message of an Angel, Act. 8. 26. Thirdly, by speciall instinct, and extraordinary inspiration of the spirit. Examples herof we haue in the word of God: in Philip who by his first calling was a Deacon, went and preached the Gospel in Samaria, and first began the Church of God there; nor by calling from the Apostles, because they were ignorant of his preaching, Act. 8. 14. and we may not thinke that he did enterprize this worke vpon his owne braine, and therefore by all likelihood, his calling was by a speciall instinct of the spirit of God. Again, when the Church of Ierusalem was disperfed, there came men of Cyprus and Cyreneto Antioch, without any outward calling, and yet preached there, no doubt by the instinct of the holy Ghost, as appeares, in that the hand of God was with them. The like I say of Luther, and the rest, namely, that they were stirred vp by speciall instinct of the spirit of God; whereby they were moued to restore the Gospel to his former purity, as they did. But some will say, this doctrine lieth open a gap to all hereticks and deceiuers, for they may likewise pleade extraordinary instincts, and by this meanes, seduce and deceiue the people of God. I answer, there be certain speciall notes and marks, whereby we may discern an extraordinary calling from the illusions of the diuel, whereby he suborneth hereticks, to deceiue the world. First, extraordinary calling neuer hath place, but when ordinarie calling faileth. There be two speciall times, when God calleth men extraordinarily. The first is, in the founding and planting of the Church; and hereupon were the Apostles and Euangelists called extraordinarily. The second time is, when the Church of God is defaced, and vniuersall Apostasie takes place; for then there is no place for ordinarie calling; & therefore to restore the Church againe, to her former estate he calleth men extraordinarily: we may not looke for any reformation of a few fro them that liue thereby, vale the occasion

be extraordinary: & the like is to be thought of the reformation of an hereticall and Apostaticall Church, as without doubt is the Church of Rome. Secondly, we may discern of men extraordinarily called by the doctrine which they deliuer, which must be the very doctrine of Prophets & Apostles; and he that pleadeth extraordinary calling, yet brings any other doctrine, is not called by God, but is deluded by the diuell. Thus hath Moses taught vs to iudge of true and false Prophets, not by their miracles, but by their doctrine, Deuteronom. 13. 3. And when Christ was demanded by the Scribes and Pharisees, by what authoritie hee did those things: hee answered by demanding a like question: whether Iohns baptisme, that is, his ministry and doctrine, were of God or not? Luke 20. 4. and if his doctrine were of God, then also his calling, and consequently the calling of Christ, because it was the office of Iohns to testify of him. Thirdly, they may be discerned by their liues and conuersations. Christ hath fore told, that there should come false prophets in sheepes clothing, which are inwardly rauening wolves, Math. 7. 15. How then shall we know them? the answer is, by their fruits, that is, not only by their doctrine, but also by their liues: because their office is to teach, not onely by doctrine, but also by example. Now the men whom God called to the restoring of the Gospel, to them he gaue with sincerity of iudgement, integrity of heart and life: which the Lord in mercy ioyned together for the confirmation of the truth of their calling. And he that teacheth whole some doctrine, & brings forth contrary fruits, is in that regard a false prophet, though his doctrine be neuer so true. Fourthly, whom God calleth extraordinarily, them doth he furnish with gifts aboue the ordinarie measure of men: as namely, with knowledge, zeal, wisdom, constancy, courage, & other gifts, that serue for the discharge of extraordinary callings. And this we finde to be true in the first ministers of the Gospel, but especially in Luther, whom God notably armed with boldnes, & courage to withstand the whole Church of Rome. In our age some strange vses haue said, they were Elhi, Iohn Baptist, and Christ, but by this last note they haue bene detected: for when their gifts were examined, they haue bene found to come farre short of the gifts of many ordinarie men.

Now if wee lay all these notes together, it will easily appeare; that the first preachers of the Gospel in this last age, may at least some of them, be said truly to haue received extraordinary callings from God. For first, they preached in such a time, when no face of a true Church was to be seene, and a general Apostasie ouer-spread the world. Secondly, they renewed the very doctrine of the Apostles & Prophets. Thirdly, they adorned their doctrine with godly life and conuersation. And lastly, were all, or mozt of them furnished in great measure with sufficient gifts of knowledge, wisdom, zeale, and courage to mannage their callings and professions. But the Papists say, there was nothing in them extraordinary, because they could not confirme their doctrine by miracles. I answer first, the doctrine which they taught, needed not then to be confirmed with miracles, seeing it was at the first publishing thereof, sufficiently confirmed by miracles wrought by the Prophets and Apostles. Secondly, I answer, that extraordinary men do not alwayes confirme their callings by miracles, as Iohn Baptists, and sundry Prophets in the old Testament, who neuer wrought any miracles. Thirdly, the gift of working a miracle may be giuen to him that is an enemy to God and his Church; as the gift of prophetic may, that is greater: for Balaam and Cambus, both propheticied, and yet were professed enemies to Christ & his Church. And Moses saith plainly, that false Prophets coming among the people, would work miracles for this end, to trie them, Deut. 13. 2. Therefore the working of a miracle serueth not alwayes to confirme an extraordinary calling.

Quest. 11. Secondly, it may be demanded, if entrance be made into a lawfull calling with an euill mind, and by euill meanes, what must then be done? I answer, he is not to forsake his place, but to repent of that his bad entrance, and to doe the duties of his calling with diligence and good conscience, waiting after this for further approbation from God; and also from men: which when he hath in any measure obtained, he may with good conscience proceed in his calling: for the after approbation, & acceptance (though it doth not iustify the bad entrance) yet doth it make a supply thereof. A Prince, as W. Conquerour enters into a land or kingdom, & by warre & bloodshed seekes to subdue the people, & to make them subject vnto him: now by the bad entrance, he is no lawfull king: for euery lawfull king is placed by God, and by men that are appointed vnder God to set vp Princes ouer them, according to the lawes and customes of seuerall kingdomes. Yet if the people do willingly submit themselves to this vntuer, and be content to yeild subiection, and the king likewise to rule them by good & wholesome lawes, he is now become a lawfull Prince, though his entrance was but tyrannicall. Vpon this ground another question is answered, touching the callings of the Ministers of our Church. Some there be that say our Church is no Church, our Ministrs are no Ministers; yea the preachers of the Gospell the worst of all. The ground of their opinion is, because (as they say) we haue no good & lawfull entrance of our callings & ministry, according to the word of God for answer to them, put the case that all the preachers and Ministers in the Church of England were vnlawfully called, yea wanting the very substance of true calling (which no man can with good conscience ci-

ther (peak or think) yet is it possible that there may be a true Church of God among vs, and lawfull preachers of the word, because they may haue an after-acceptation and approbation, both from God, and from man: and an after-acceptation makes supply of a bad entrance. Nay further it is euident, that our ministers haue approbation both from God and man. For first of all, God inablen them to teach the true and wholesome doctrine of the Prophets and Apostles, which is one speciall note to distinguish a false prophet from a true. Secondly, God inables them with grace to adorne their doctrine & profession with reformed liues. Thirdly, Gods hand is with them, in that he blesteth their labours, for the conuersion of many soules vnto God in all parts of this land. And by this God doth as it were set to his hand and seale, for the approbation of our callings. The question was among the Corinthians, whether Paul was an Apostle or no? And Paul himselfe answered, That if he were not an Apostle to others, yet was he to them, because he was the minister of their conuersion. 1. Cor. 9. 2. Now if this be a good reason to proue the extraordinary calling of an Apostle, then no doubt but it will ferue much more to proue the calling of an ordinary minister.

Quest. 111. Thirdly, it may be demanded, whether a man being to enter into a calling, may lawfully offer himselfe and make meanes to enter into it or no? Ans. This question S. Paul answered, when he saith, 1. Tim. 3. 1. He that desireth the office of a Bishop, desireth a worthy work: here he giueth vs to vnderstand, how it is not vnlawful to desire an office. It is true indeed, there be vnlawful desires of places and callings, namely, when they are sought, vpon a vain & greedy mind, for pleasure, or for lucre sake; yet when they are desired or sought for vpon conscience to discharge a duty vnto God and man, there is no offence. Now if the desire of an office be lawfull: then to shew the fame desire by honest and lawfull meanes is not vnlawfull. Therefore men may vse honest and lawfull meanes to enter into callings meet for themselves: soe they bring sufficient gifts for the discharge thereof, and withall submit themselves to examination and election according to lawfull order. The Prophet Isaiah, as soone as God had touched his young with a coale from the Altar, was ready to goe at the call of God, and when the Lord said, Whom shal I send? he answered, here am I, send me. Esa. 6. 6, 7, 8. And after this example of this holy Prophet, may any man shew himselfe willing to enter into an office, when God hath furnished him with gifts, if so he may be called. Here then is a lesson for such as are brought vp in the schooles of the Prophets; their duty is, so soone as they are inabled to do the offices of ministers, to shew themselves willing and ready in godly manner to take vpon them this kind of calling, And therefore without question, it is a fault in many, that being inabled with gifts sufficient, neuertheless do employ themselves wholly in their priuate studies: nor shewing any willingness to take vpon them to discharge any ministeriall calling, for which they are fit. For howsoeuer to seek a calling in the Church of God for lucre sake, is vnlawfull, yet to seeke a calling is not simply vnlawfull, if there be an honest mind, good meanes, and the glory of God be truly intended.

Quest. 1V. Fourthly, it may be demanded, whether a man may enter into two callings at once or not? I answer by distinguishing, in some respects he may, and in some he may not. An entrance may be made into two callings in three cases: First, when God hath combined two callings together by his own appointment. Thus Melchisedech, that he might be a liuely figure of Christ our Saviour, was a king and a priest, and did the office both of a King and Priest, Heb. 7. 1. And the high priests that were the successors of Aaron, by Gods appointment, were not only Priests, but ciuill Iudges also. Lehoada the high Priest was protector of Iuda, in the nonage of Iehoshaphat, & by vertue of his protectorship slew Athaliah that usurping Queene, 2. Kings. 11. 15. And there is no maruell of this, because the Leuites were the common lawyers, and the Scriptures were the positive lawes of the Iewes: and therefore none were so fit to be Iudges as priests and Leuites. Euen as in this land, the best Iudges in causes both ciuill and criminall, are Lawyers, that are expert in the lawes of the land. In this regard, it was not so great a burden among the Iewes to manage the office of a Priest, and to execute ciuill iudgment. Secondly, two callings may be combined, when the entering into them at once is not against the word, and for the common good. Thus Eli in the kingdom of Israel, was a Priest by one calling, and by another calling a Iudge. Thus Sammuel was a Prophet and a Iudge. Thus Moses was a Prophet and a ciuill gouernour, yea a Prince: for in those times, both states were so corrupt, that there could not be found ordinary men sufficient to discharge either calling seuerally.

Thirdly, two callings may be indured, when being ioyned, they hinder not each other, nor the common good. Thus a man may lawfully be a Master of a family, and a Merchant, or any other trade whatsoever. Examples hereof we haue in the word of God. Abraham, besides that he was a Master of a great family, & in his family also a prophet & a priest in offering sacrifice, was by another calling a mighty prince, and a great warrior. And the same may be said of the Patriarkes; they were gouernours in their families, & also princes bearing the ciuill sword; as may appear in the example of Iuda. Now there were two causes why they might beare both these offices lawfully, because the Church of God was then very small, & comprised in one family: & secondly, the doctrine of religion was comprised in few heads, and deliuered from man to man by tradition. And in this case S. Paul was by one calling an Apostle, and at the same time by another calling a Tent-maker, because of the povertrie of the Church of Corinth as also because he would hereby stoppe the mouths of false Apostles, which would haue accused him for making aduantage of the Gospell. And in like case of necessity, I doubt not but the ministers of the Gospell now may take vnto the other callings: this alwayes remembered, that they be no hinderance to their principall callings, nor offence to men.

Now I come to the second part of my distinction, to shew that men may not enter into two distinct callings at once: and that in three cases. First, if God hath disioyned these callings by his word and commandement. Secondly, if the practise of the one hinder the practise of the other. Thirdly, if the combining of them together, hinder the common good. On these grounds our Saviour Christ being the Doctor of the Church, refused to be Iudge of inheritance betwixt the two brethren. Luk. 12. 13, 14. And hereupon the Apostles refused to do the duties of their owne callings, being to performe the office of Deacons, Act. 6. 2. Hence I gather, that in towns, corporations, & societies, care (as much as may be) is to be had, that sundry offices & charges being of themselves weighty, and of diuerse kinds, be not laid on the shoulders of one man: for the execution of them all breedeth distraction, and distraction disableth the most able man in the discharge of one office. He that comes to the congre heape, the more he openeth his hand to receive, the lesse he holdeth: so he that doth as it were enlarge himselfe to beare the most offices, the fewer shall he discharge.

Quest. V. Furthermore, it may here be demanded, whether it be lawfull to enter into two trades at once, or no? Ans. It is not vnlawfull, if so be they hinder not each other, nor the combining of them, hinder the common good of men, and the partie intend not filthy lucre, but the common good. Neuertheless it is inconuenient in a peopled common wealth, for then one man shall hardly liue by another: yet if one be not sufficient to maintaine the charge of a family, a second calling may be added vpon the former condition.

Again; it may be demanded, whether one may haue two farms at once or no? Answer. Some haue thought it not conuenient; but the truth is, it may as well be demanded, whether it be lawfull to haue two coates at once or not for in a common wealth all must not be equally but some above some vnder others in regard of wealth. And therefore such as haue sundry farms, whether it be by inheritance, or by honest purchase, may lawfully inioy the. And thus much of good entrance.

The third maine point to be considered, is, the good continuance in a calling, which continuance consisteth in the constant practise of the duties and workes of the same calling. And herein two points must be considered. First, what be the works of our callings which must be done, & of what sort the second, in what manner they must be done. For the first, the works of our callings must be qualified by three notes. First, they must be the proper works of our callings: secondly, they must be profitable: and thirdly, necessary. The first is Saint Paul's rule, 1. Thess. 4. 11. Line in peace, faith her: but how shall that be done? he answereth, by doing his owne businesse. And Saint Peter giueth the same rule: requiring that no man suffer as a busie-body in other mens matters, 1. Pet. 4. 15. In both which places, the holy Ghost teacheth vs, that we must first of all search, what be the proper works of our own callings, and then afterwards do them. The husband-man must attend on husbandry: and the Minister on preaching, &c. By this one point sundry faults are opened, that commonly fall out in the liues of many, as first, when men looke at the rhings of others, not regarding their owne matters. We haue example of this, Iob. 21. ver. 21, 22. Our Saviour Christ laid to Peter, Peter follow thou me: now Peter little regarding his owne dutie, must needs in a kind of curiositie aske what Iob must doe: but our Saviour Christ giues him a checke, and saith, If I will that he tarry till I come, what is it to thee? And this is the common fault of the worldmen that lightly regard, & sleekly performe the duties of their owne callings, are neuertheless very ready to talke of, and enquire into the state & liues of other men: and it is meate and drinke vnto them. Let a good report be giuen out of a man, it is not regarded; but euill reports are taken vp at the first rebound: they run like wild-fire, and all this ariseth from vaine curiositie, which is here condemned, as the bane of all societies. These busie-bodies are like to such as reade bookes, with intent onely to spy out the faults thereof: and they are like to the spiders, that creepes ouer all the garden onely to gather poyson. But men that feare God must learne to know their owne businesse, and to suffer their talke and meditation to be employed that way.

Againe, here is condemned the curiositie of those, that enter vpon the duties of other mens callings. It is a dangerous sinne, as I shewed heretofore, by the example of Pharaoh, who was slaine for touching the Arke; though his intent was onely to keepe it from falling: for he had no such calling. And of the men of Beth-shemesh, of whom there dyed fiftie thousand, for looking into the said Arke of God, when they had no calling so to do. And of Corah, Dathan, and Ahiraam, who would needs challenge vnto them the calling and office of Moses.

Thirdly, hereby is condemned the studie and practise of figure-calling, and iudiciall Astrologie: for the rebey, many, and that vpon false grounds, goe about to search what shall befall other men, either in liue or death, things

A that God will not haue knowne before they come to passe. In a word, every one that doth not the duties of his owne calling diligently, and with good conscience, is hereby condemned.

The second proprietie is, that the workes of our callings be profitable, not only to the doers, but to the common-wealth. This the law of nature teacheth: By this second proprietie sundry men are to be blamed. First, the tradesman, that getteth his liuing by making forreign and fond fashions of attire, which serue for no vse, but to be displaied flagges, and banners, either of folly, or pride, or wantonnesse: for all such fashions are condemned by the word of God, yea by the very light of nature. And therefore such as liue by selling & making of them, cannot be free from offence: nay their offence is the greater. For if there were no inuentors of vaine nouelties, they should not be so commonly vsed as they are. Secondly, here the Alchymist is to be reprooued, that spends his time and substance in labouring to change baser metals into gold, a thing in truth vnpossible: for it is a kinde of new creation, to turne one kind of creature into a creature of another kinde, as euery metall is. And that which is said, or rather dreamed of, the Philosophers stoncs; but a coccit, & no where to be found; but in Phisophs: & there is no question, but one day an accompt must be made of the good time vnprofitably spent in seeking for it.

C The third condition of our actions is, that they must be necessary. We must consider the nature and qualitie of the workes of our callings. In euery calling there be two kinds of workes. Some be principall, without which the calling cannot be maintained. And some lesse principall, which giue no essence to the calling. Now men must especially giue themselves to practise the principall workes of their callings: as for example, the action of a Minister in his calling is to reade, and to preach the word of God: now readeing is a work lesse necessary, & preaching the most principall: and for this cause he must giue himselfe especially to the practise thereof. On this manner we might go through the callings of all men, & note many wants therein. Magistrats in towns and corporations carry & draw the sword for the maintenance of peace and ciuill order: it is well done, for it is a worke of their callings; yet not the principall, and they doe commonly faile in this, that they vse not the sword for this end, to vrge men to the keeping of the commandements of the first table, to a practise of pure religion, & to the keeping of the Sabbath day. This is the maine duty of the Magistrate, who bears the sword (specially for the good of mens soules). A master of a family, is to care not onely for the bodie, but also for the souls of his household, for this is the principall duty: & most householders are faulty herein: for commonly they betake themselves to the lesse duties, & leaue the principall: they care for the bodies of their wiues, children, seruants; neglecting the means of the saluation of their soules. Cleanse contrary to the rule in hand, which inioyneth the practise of the principall duties in the first place: therefore all carelesse & ignorant masters of families are here to be warned, to haue special care to provide for the sauing of the soules of all the char liue vnder their government. This also sheweth vs the faults of many students, who setting themselves apart for the worke of the ministry, doe first giue themselves to study the Fathers and ancient writers, whereas their first principall duty is, to be soundly instructed in the word of God, and to ground themselves in the maine points of religion; that they may be able to know what is true, what is false; what is to be done, what is not to be done in all matters: whether they concerne faith or manners. And while this good foundation is laid, & therefore said helps may with good successe be aduoynd.

Againe, necessary works I call those, which vpon due consideration, are not onely lawfull in themselves, and agreeable to our calling, but also expedient in the doer: for if they be inexpedient, though otherwise lawfull, they are not to be done.

Before I proceed any further, here is a necessary question to be handled: Whether the workes and actions of a calling done by a man which entrench vnlawfully into that calling, be nullities or not, that is, to be reputed vs as actions not done. I answer, that in things done, there be two kinds of faults; one in the work, another in the worker. A fault in the work is, when the action it selfe is done amisse: and it may be done amisse in substance, or in circumstance; & if the fault be in the substance thereof, it is indeed a nullitie, and must be reputed as not done. Secondly, the fault of the worker is, when an action of a lawfull calling is done by one that is not called lawfully. Now then, when the fault of an action is not in the work it selfe, but in the person that worketh it, it is not to be reputed a nullitie, neither to be reversed as nothing. As for example, one called lawfully to the ministry, baptizeth infants in the name of the Father, and of the virgin Mary: here is a fault in the action done, and that in the substance of baptism, & therefore here is no baptism, but rather a profanation of the ordinance of God. Now put the case further, that baptism is administered by a man that is called, though not lawfully, I say, if there be no fault in the actio, but only in the man, that baptism is not to be reputed a nullitie.

This doctrine is agreed vpon by the common consent of Diuines, as also by the lawes & orders of kingdomes, as may appeare plainly in particular. Augustus Caesar a Romane Emperour, inuaded the kingdom of the Iewes, and brought it into a Prouince: and thus was hee made king of the Iewes, not by lawfull means, but by intrusion. For all this, the actions done, and the commandements giuen by

A him, were the reputed commandements of a king, not reuered by any Iewe, but obeyed of all. For when he gaue commandement that all the world, yea the Iewes should be taxed, they yielded themselves to this commandement; yea righteous Ioseph and Mary went to their own towne to be taxed. Caiphas was honoured as high Priest among the Iewes; and though his entrance was by corruption & bribery, yet notwithstanding, the actions done by him in his office, were not esteemed nullities, but actions done. And therefore our Saviour Christ suffered himselfe to be accused; arraigned, and iudged of him: and also was content to come into the Temple & worship God according to the manner of the Iewes, euen before Caiphas himselfe. The Scribes and Pharisees that were the Doctors of the Iewes, had not many of the their calling by succession from Aaron, and for iudgment were also in part heretical, holding some things against the foundation, namely, iustification by works, &c. and yet our Saviour Christ, because they were in Moses chaire, bids the Church of the Iewes, & his disciples heare them, so far forth as they taught the doctrine of Moses. Whereby it is manifest, that if there be no fault in the work, the defective calling of the worker, doth not make a nullitie of the action done. For howeuer the worker sinnes in his vnlawfull entrance, and in that regard is not to be approved, yet the actions in the calling to which he is intruded, are the actions of that calling: for though he be called amisse, yet hee standeth in the roome of one lawfully called. And wee are to make difference betwixt him that is called, though vnlawfully, & him that hath no calling at all. For the actions done without calling are indeed nullities, whereas if there be any calling, though entrance be badly made, it doth not make the action void. And whosoever denieth this ground of truth, ouerturnes the regiment of kingdomes, Churches, states, and societies whatsoever.

By this which hath bene said, a question is resolved concerning baptism: many of our ancestors heretofore haue bene baptized by Masse-priests, and neuer receiued any baptism but in the Church of Rome: now the demand is, whether that baptism were sufficient or no: & whether they must be rebaptized? I answer thus: the Romish priest is no minister of God & Christ, but of Antichrist, in that he offers Christ a real sacrifice for the quick & the dead, wherein chiefly stands his office: yet because he hath bin, & is designed by men to baptize, & stands in the roome of a lawfull minister, his actio is not void: for though he be not a minister lawfully called to baptize, yet is he not a mere priuie man; but he is between both, that is, one called, though amisse, through ignorance & oversight of men: & consequently, he is one that in the act of baptizing, stands in roome of a right & lawfull minister. Againe, it pleaseth some, carried more by affection then judgement, to dispute on this manner. There is no right and lawfull calling allotted for ministers in the Church of England: therefore there are no Sacraments among vs, nor true preaching of the word of God: our Sacraments (say they) are but Sacraments in shew, & the effect of al preaching with vs, is no better then the illusion of the diabolus. Answer, we are granted there is no lawfull calling of ministers in the Church of England, (which neuertheless to say is both false and wicked) yet will not this follow, that our Sacraments are no Sacraments, and our preaching no preaching, for though men be unlawfully called, yet their actions be the actions of Ministers, if they be called at all. The preaching of a minister unlawfully called, may be true preaching, and Sacraments, true Sacraments, else Christ would not have said of the Scribes & Pharisees, Heare them: whereas they were of other Tribes then Leui, & came in of any bribery: & like corruption. A bad entrance maketh not the actions done, to be voided of all none effect, if so be the door be shut to stand in the roome of a right & lawfull entrance. And, as good entrance maketh not alwise the actions good, because, where there is a good entrance into a lawfull calling, there is an after Apostasie to some contrary, the due & after good entrance maketh not a syllable of ministeriall actions, to be void. Now I come to the second point touching continuance in calling, namely, in what manner the actions thereof are to be done. It is not sufficient for a man to do the proper workes of his calling, but he must do them in a good and godly manner: & that a man may so do the, two things are principally required. Holinesse and constancy. To do a worke in Holinesse, the word of God teacheth, that there is required a double sanctification. The first, of the worke; the second, of the work and action to be done. That the worke should be sanctified, it is necessary for two causes: 1. because the person must first please God, before the worke of the person please him. For to the unbelievers all things are unclean, 1. Tim. 1. 5. yea, not only their workes, but their minds and consciences are defiled: and the reason is plaine, for to great is the corruption of our wicked natures, that we defile whatsoever thing we lay our hands vnto. If men be not repentant sinners, al the actions which they do, though good workes in themselves, are very sinnes, & offences before God, in that they proceede not from an vpright heart; neither are done to the glory of God. Secondly, sanctification of our persons is required: because, vnlesse we be borne anew of water & the spirit, we can look for no successe or blessing vpon our labours: it is the righteous mans privilege, Whatsoever he doth is shall prosper, Psal. 1. 3. no man els must looke for this fauour at Gods hand. Righteous Ioseph prospered in all that he did, for the Lord was with him, when he was made ruler ouer the house of Potiphar the Egyptian, Gen. 39. 2, 3. And Iehosaphat saith, 2. Chron. 20. 20. Betweene the Lord and his Prophets, and then shall prosper. While the Ark was yet in the house of Obad-Edom, hee prospered and all his house. How much more then shall he prosper, that hath not only the signe of Gods presence, but God himselfe dwelling in his heart? If hee be said, that in experience we finde the vngodly man to prosper as well as the godly: I answer, the prosperity of the wicked, is like the quakes which God did send to the Israelites in the wilderness, which brought a plague and destruction with them, for they died while the meate was yet in their mowes. The prosperity of the wicked serues to their deeper condemnation.

Hence we learne, that being designed and set apart to any calling, we must first of all from our hearts turne vnto God, from all our sins, and vnto means to become new creatures, because vnlesse we repent and turne vnto God, and with constant purpose cleaue vnto him, the best actions of our callings, though we had no other sins, shall be sufficient to condemne vs; considering no worke euer pleased God, till the person of the worke be accepted in his sight. The blind diuinity of the world is this, that such as walk diligently after their business, liue peaceably with all men, & do no man hurt, haue all things to go well with them, and God will haue mercy vpon the. These things indeede are good and commendable, but not sufficient for vnles the person that doth these things goe further, and repent him of his sins, and die vnto them by the vertue of the death of Christ, and liue vnto God, all his peaceable and vpright dealing will in the end proue no better then fig-leaves before God. For euen the best workes that can be, are damnable sins in the doer, vnlesse he turne vnto God, and be in Christ. In the same field, at the same time, in the same businesse, there is the worke of the oxe, and the worke of a man; now I demand which of these twaine is the better worke? I know the answer will be, the worke of the man; but the truth is, vnlesse he be renewed by the grace of God, his labour is worse then the labour of the beast; for the beast in his kinde obeys God, so doth not the vnrepentant sinner. And thus actions lawfull in themselves, in him become vnlawfull, not because they are done, but because they are done in euil maner, euen as the chanel is faulty, not because it carries the water, but because it defiles the water.

The second thing required, is sanctification of the worke or action. This point also must be learned and practised: for it is not sufficient to doe a lawfull action, but it must be done in holy manner: for lawfull actions vnlesse they be sanctified, are sin: as may appeare by one & the same action done by two persons. The Publican and the Pharisee goe together to pray, they doe both one and the same actions, and yet the one for his prayer is approoued,

Luk. 18. 10.

the other is not; because the one, that is, the Pharisee prayed in the pride of his heart, and profaned the lawfull action of prayer: the Publican prayed in the humilitie of his heart for the pardon of his sins, and his action was not onely lawfull in it selfe, but also holy in the doer. And this is the point that must be learned and practised in all the actions of our callings: that they must not onely be lawfull in themselves, but also lawfull in regard of vs.

This discovereth the blindness, and ignorance of most men amongst vs: which think it is sufficient for them, if their actions which they doe, be lawfull. As for example; chapmen think they may vse their owne liberty in buying and selling, because bargaining is Gods ordinance, and thinke it needlesse to regard in what manner they buy or sell; nay commonly they do not so much as dreame of this, that they are in such order to performe their actions, that in their doing they may approue themselves vnto God.

In the sanctification of the workes of our calling two things are required: The word & prayer. 1. Tim. 4. 5. for that which Paul lets downe of the vie of meates and drinks, must be extended to all the ordinances of God whatsoever. I will speake of both these in order. And first of all, the word of God must be our rule & square, whereby we are to frame and fashion all our actions, and according to direction receiued thence, we must doe the things we doe, or leaue them vndone. Dauid a King had no doubt a wise and godly Counsellor, and he himselfe was a man of great wisdom, being a Prophet of God: and yet hee saith, The word and the lawes of God are his Counsellors. And that which the Lord commandeth the Kings, that sitting vpon his throne he should haue the booke of the law before him, to doe all things therein: the same must euery subiect likewise in his particular place and standing performe. Peter fished all night and caught nothing, in the morning Christ came and bad him cast his net into the sea; who presently, though discouraged with bad successe before, saith, Luke 5. 5. Lord, at thy word I will doe it. And thus much should euery man dayly say in his place, that he will doe the works of his calling at Gods commandement, and according to his word. When the people of Israel came out of Egypt, and went into Canaan, a type of the kingdom of heauen, in their whole journey, they were led by a pillar of a cloud in the day, and by a pillar of fire in the night; when the cloud stood still, they stood still, and they were to follow it by waye forer: it went, forward or backward: Now looke as the Israelites went to the earthly Canaan by following the pillar of fire, & the cloud: so must we as it were goe blind-fold, and suffer our selues to be ruled by the word of God in the works of our calling: though we seeeme in reason to goe backward: what it doth command, that must we doe; and what it forbiddeth, that must we eschew. Many things might be rehearsed out of Gods word for our better direction in particular actions, but I will reduce them al to two heads. For some directions serue for the eschewing of vice, and some other for the practise of vertue. The vices to be eschewed in the workes of mens callings, are especially two: Couetousnes, and Injustice. Couetousnes is a notorious vice, whereby all men almost apply their callings, and the workes thereof, to the gathering of wealth and riches: this is one of the head of euils flow both into Church & Commonwealth. There be many that haue good affections, & receiue the word with ioy: yet like the thornie ground, they are choaked with the cares of this world. Now then consider Couetousnesse is so vile a sin, let such as be placed in any calling, take heed of it, and be carefull lest it take place in their hearts, and draw them to many other euils. Saint Paul saith, 1. Tim. 6. 20. They that will by such, that is, such as reuerie the labour of their callings to the gathering of wealth, fall into many and grievous temptations, & so consequently into damnation: and therefore he addeth that Couetousnesse is the root of all euil. It may be objected, that vnbeliefe is the first particular sinne that euer came into the world, & consequently, that couetousnes is not the toore of all euil: answer, that vnbeliefe is a mother of sin, whoso euer other sins arise, yet couetousnesse also is a roote in another respect; because, as the roote giueth sappe and nourishment to all the branches, so doth couetousnesse so euery other sin, whatsoeuer: where it reignes, no sinne dies or decays. In the body when the spleene swelles, all other parts decay and consume: euen so, when the heart swelles with desire of riches, all the graces of God, consume and fade away. Iudas no doubt had many good things in him: he forsooke all to be a discipule of Christ, hee preached the Gospell to the Iewes as the rest of the disciples; he wrought miracles, and cast out diuels; nay which is more, he was one of Christs owne family, and as it were a steward: he bare the bag and disposed of all things; & yet at the last, because he suffered this damnable sinne of couetousnesse to preuaile within his owne heart, hee condescended to sell his Matter for thirty pieces of siluer. And thus all good things in him came to nought: for presently vpon this fact, he went and desperately hanged himselfe; and with such violence cast himselfe downe, that his bowells gushed out. And thus will it fall out with all such as nourish this sinne, and give place vnto it, though they be neuer so furnished with knowledge, zeale, and commendable life. If it be suffered to preuaile, it will bring them at last to fearful and lamentable ends. In a common family, it is a great disorder to see the Master play the seruant, and the seruant to doe the office of the Master: much more then it is a disorder in the Church of God, which is

he family of Christ, that men see their minds in the world, and make themselves servants of riches, which should rather serve the Our Saviour Christ faith, 7 the Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath; then much more riches were made for man, and not man for riches. As thus, covetous and worldly desires are against the order of nature: for when we come into the world, we bring nothing with vs, and while we live here, Nature is contented with little and when we die, we must carry nothing with vs, but a coffin, or a winding sheet; why then should we set our minds to much on earthly things? Again, the gate of heaven is straight, & the way narrow, so as we must be a little to struggle and creep before we can make any entrance, & deny all that we enjoy. Now when in the works of our calling we are only to get wealth, we do as it were set barriers on heaven's gates, & load our selves with burdens, which make vs unable to passe. Therefore special care must be had, that our time & calling be not spent in gathering earthly treasures. And every man in his calling may divide this vice, and the practise thereof, by doing these two duties. First, he must restrain his action from the world. Secondly, he must turn and dispose of to better things. For the first, our affliction is like a sea, which being suffered to passe his banks, overflowes the whole country; and therefore to keepe our desires in compass, every man in his place and calling must labour for two things: first, for contentation; so faith the holy Ghost, Let not your hearts be troubled in contentment, but be content with that which you have. This contentation is the keeping of that particular estate wherein God hath placed vs, so be the best of all estates for vs that can be. A notable example of this virtue we have in the Apostle Paul; who had learned in whatsoever estate he was, cherishing to be content. And therefore he saith, Phil. 4. 11. 12. I can be abased, and I can abound, every where and in all things I am instructed both to be full, and to be hungry, to abound, and to have want. This which Paul practised, is soone said, but not so soone done. Now that we for our parts may after his example be content in every estate of life, we are to performe these duties. First, we must labour to see a particular providence of God, and to have experience hereof in all things that come to passe. In health, wealth, and liberty, all men acknowledge a providence; but in the contrary estates of sickness, bondage, & poverty, &c. the blind world seeth no providence, nor goodnesse of God; it thrusts vp all the goodnesse of God in health and wealth. But such as profess the knowledge of the true God, must better acquaint themselves with this providence and goodnesse of God, and labour to feele it, as well in sickness as in health, in want as in wealth, in persecution as in libertie and peace. And when we can in some good measure do this, experience of diuine providence will breede and bring forth contentation. An example of this we have in Iob, who in the midst of his troubles, saith, Iob. 1. 21. The Lord giueth, and the Lord taketh away, now blessed be the name of the Lord; let vs in these wordes marke his contentation, and the cause thereof: namely his perswasion, that God himselfe did lay that affliction vpon him, in which perswasion being settled, he giues thanks to God. Secondly, we must labour to be resolute euen in conscience with David, that God is our portion, that is, that God the father is our father, Christ Iesus our Redeemer, and the holy Ghost our sanctifier and comforter: herein we must settle our consciences: and then may we say as David saith, Psal. 136. 6. I have a goodly heritage: and we shall finde our minds more settled and contented, with any estate good or bad that befalls vs by the will and appointment of God. All men are well pleased with health, liberty, wealth; and if we could be able in truth to say, the Lord is my portion, we should be well pleased with sickness, bondage, and poverty: And thus are we to indure our selves to contentation.

Now for the better restraining of our affections from the world, two things must be done: first of all, we must in this life resolute our selves to seek for no more, but things that be necessary and sufficient for vs and ours. For to seeke for abundance is not lawfull, neither doth it stand with good conscience, which I proue on this manner. We may seeke for that which we may pray for: but we have no warrant to pray for abundance: for things necessary & sufficient, we have warrant to pray, as Agur doth, Prov. 30. 8. Give me neither poverty nor riches, feed me with food convenient for me. And Christ taught vs to pray on this manner, Matth. 6. 11. Give vs this day our daily bread: that is, bread for our subsistence, or such bread as is sufficient to preserve our liues. And S. Paul plainly condemnes the desire of riches, that is, of things more then necessary, affirming that such as desire to be rich, fall into the snare of the diuill. Some haue obserued 12 wonders in the Manna of the Iewes. 1. The children of Israel were fed with it, 40. years. 2. To the godly it tasted according to euery one his desire. 3. To the vngodly it was loathsome. 4. A Gomar of it sufficed all stomachs. 5. Wheter men gathered more or lesse, they had full measure, neither more nor lesse, that is, a Gomar full. 6. Two Gomars full before the Sabbath, on other dayes but one Gomar full. 7. It fell euery day, but on the Sabbath, 8. It melted in the sun, and was hardened in the fire. 9. It was kept many years in the Arke; unpurified 10. Being preferred till the morrow it putrified, except on the Sabbath. 11. He that gathered least had his Gomar full. 12. He that gathered most, had but his Gomar. Now by the most of these wonders, and specially for that Manna laid vp till the next day putrified, and that euery Iew had his competent measure, were his labour more or lesse, we are taught, that the seeking & desire of abundance, pleaseh not God. The Lord commandeth the king by expresse law, that he should not multiply his horses, nor his silver & gold: it is not here the intent of God to bar Kings from seeking for things sufficient to maintain their kingdoms; but to moderate their affections, that they seeke not for that abundance, which may serue to maintaine, not one, but two or three kingdoms. If God send abundance of things more then necessary to Princes, they may receiue them at the hand of God, & they are to be thankfull therefore: but kings themselves may not seeke for more, then which is sufficient for their estates.

Now if this be the dutie of the Prince, then much more is it the dutie of the people: and subiects in kingdoms should content themselves, if they haue as much as will provide them food and raiment, and thus much lawfully may they seeke for. As for example, a master of a family, may with good conscience seeke for that measure of wealth, as shall in Christian wisdom be thought meete to maintaine him & his family, with convenient food and raiment; hauing obtained thus much, a pause must be made, and he may not proceed further, to enlarge his estate, by seeking for that abundance that may well serue his own house, and a second, or many families more. It may be here demanded, how we are to judge what is sufficient for any man? I answer, we must estimate sufficiency, not by the affliction of conuict men, for then nothing shall euer be sufficient: but we are to proceed by the same rule in this manner, as in like case of apparrell. Because the word of God hath giuen no particular rule, how euery man or woman should be attired: therefore our rule must be the example & judgement of the godly, & graue men & women of our estate and order. So likewise for a sufficiency in things of this life, our rule must be the common judgement and practise of the most godly, frugal, and wise men with whom we liue: and that which they in good conscience judge sufficient and necessary for euery man, according to his place and calling, that is to be esteemed sufficient. And here we must remember, not to make one rule for all men, that things sufficient for one should be sufficient for all: but euery man must be measured according to his condition and degree. For as one man is above another in degree, more or lesse, so to one is more required for sufficiency then to another. But the conuict man may except, and say, Every gift of God may be sought for: But abundance is the blessing and gift of God, and therefore it may be sought for. I answer, We must distinguish the blessings and gifts of God, some of them are simply blessings, and some only in respect. Those which are simply blessings are such gifts and graces of God as are not only blessings in themselves, but also in euery man that hath them: and such are the gifts of faith, of repentance, of the feare of God, & the loue of God & man. The second kind of blessings which be in respect, are such as are good in themselves, but not good to euery person that hath them: such are riches and abundance of worldly things. Thus then I answer, Euery blessing of God may be sought, if so bee I know it is a blessing to me: therefore I may lawfully seeke for faith, & repentance, & all such gifts of God, as are simply blessings. But we may not seeke for such things, as are only blessings in some respect, vntill we can say they are blessings to vs: a sword or a knife are good things in themselves, & haue their vse: but they are not good in the hand of a child, or of a mad man, because they may thereby hurt themselves. And so are riches good in themselves, but not for euery man: and therefore no further to be sought, then we know they are good and profitable for vs.

Secondly, it is alledged, when men do seeke for abundance, they finde it, and God would not giue it them, vntill it were a blessing because, whatsoeuer is of God, is good. I answer, first of all, that God in giuing abundance to the conuict man, is void of all blame: for the question is, of the mans seeking & receiving; not of Gods giuing. Again, when God giueth abundance to some that seeke it, he giueth a blessing, but like to the quails which he gaue to the Israelites, that brought a plague with them: for God oftentimes giueth temporal blessings in his wrath. Thirdly, it may be alledged, that God hath made a promise to euery righteous man, that hee shall receiue abundance: riches and treasures shall be in his house (saith David) & therefore hee may lawfully seeke for riches. I answer, two waies; first, that by riches in the word of God is oftentimes vnderstood things necessary, and not abundance. Secondly, if riches be taken for abundance; I answer, that promises concerning temporal blessings must be vnderstood with exception of the crosse and chastisement: and therefore the meaning of the Psalmist is, that riches shall be giuen to the righteous, vntill it be the will of God to exercise and try him by want & poverty. And that this place must thus be vnderstood, it appears plainly; Heb. 11. 37. where some are commended, because they endured poverty by faith, wandering too and fro in sheeps-skins and goats-skins. And Lazarus when hee died, was receiued into Abrahams bosome, though in his life time hee had not so much as crummes from the rich mans table, to feede his body. Now then if the promise were absolute, euery man might seeke for abundance, and euery beleuer should haue it: but seeing it is conditional, & we are vncertain whether it will please God to try vs by want or no; therefore wee may not seeke for abundance. Fourthly, it may be alledged, that euery man must doe good to the Church and Common-wealth, & therefore hee must seeke for plenty, that he may haue wherewith to do this good. I answer, we must do good indeed, but yet within the compasse of our estates and callings, and according to our ability, for God accepteth eury man according to that he hath, and not according to that he hath not.

Psal. 112. 3.

He

Lastly, it is alleaged, that there be examples of righteous men; as Abraham, Jacob, and Salomon, that abounded with riches. I answer, they got not their riches by seeking abundance: they were made rich by Gods sending, not by their own seeking. So may any man accept abundance, when it is the pleasure of God to bestow it vpon them, while they walke in their callings. And it ca not be shewed, that either Abraham, Jacob, or Salomon, wanting riches, sought for them; but commonly the covetous man layes plots how to get thus much for himselfe, & thus much for his children, so many hundreds, and so many thousands: whereas Jacob asked of God, but food and rayment. Therefore whatsoever is said to the contrary, the truth is, that no man can with good conscience seek for things more then necessary. And this one thing must be as a corde vnto vs, to restraîne our affections from the world: that God hath giuen a commandement, that we must seeke onely for things, that may be in Christian wisdom esteemed necessary.

Now let vs proceed to search how we may turne our affections from the world to better things. The way is this. As the cholericke persons that desire to restraîne their hastinesse, must turne it against themselves for their own finnes: Euen so the worldling that desires to turne his gripple mind from earthly things, must set his minde on the kingdome of heauen. And for the doing of this, two things are especially required: first, we must endeavour to haue the eyes of our mindes enlightened by Gods spirit, that we may see how happy the estate is, that God hath prepared in his owne Kingdome for them that loue him. This Paul prayed for the Ephesians, Eph. 1. 18. That the eyes of their understanding might be enlightened, that they might know what the hope was of their calling, and what the riches of his glorious inheritance is in the Saints. The beast that goes in a bare cōmon, if once it set eye on a better pasture, will without further delay, ouer hedge, and ditch and all, till it come into the said pasture. Now that which is in nature, shold much more be in them that are partakers of the grace of Christ. Therefore although like moales we haue our heads alwaies roing vnder the earth: yet if we do by grace but cast our eyes to the ioyes of heauē, we cannot but turne our hearts from the loue of this present world. A notable example of this we haue in Moses, who when hemight haue bin heire to *Pharao*s daughter, refused honor, esteeming the rebuke of Christ greater riches then the treasures of Egypt: because he had respect to the recompence of reward. Thus God in mercy opened his eyes, and made him see the happy estate of the kingdome of heauen, and thereby caused him to leaue and forsake the honour and wealth of Egypt.

Secondly, we must in deauor to haue in our hearts, a sense & feeling of the want of Christ, & to see our damnable estate in our selues, & how greatly we stand in need of the blood of Christ to wash away our sins. Behold a notable meane to make any mā (though he were couetousnesse in selfe) to turn his heart from the pelle of this world, and to seek wholly after spiritual & heavenly things. For the consideration of our own misery in our selues, & a lively sense of the neede we haue of Christ, will make vs hunger after him and his righteousness, about all things in the world. We find by experience, that many are indued with good gifts of knowledge, of ioy in the word of God, of zeale, &c. who neuertheless in their callings be overcome with this foule sin of couetousnesse: & the reason is, because they were neuer thoroughly touched with any sense or feeling of the need they had of Christ, their hearts are dead in sin & corruption, and they neuer knew the vileness of their own natures, and in what extreme misery they are out of Christ. And if they might be brought to a feeling of their vnworthinesse, & made to hunger after him, they would then begin to say with S. Paul, I esteeme all thing as dung in regard of Christ. And with David, at the Harb brachieth after the rivers of waters, so thirsteth my soule after thee, O Lord. This is the counsell of Christ, first seeke the kingdome of God & his righteousness, Matth. 6. 33. We must in our selues be as the wounded man that lay in the way, that Christ Iesus the true Samaritane may come by vs to supple our wounds, and to powre his owne precious blood into our foules. For as Mary said, God fill the hungry with good things, but the rich he sends empty away. And thus shall we be able by Gods gracetoe turn our affections set on the world, to heavenly things. Thus also we see how to walke in our callings with good conscience, & to avoid the sin of couetousnesse.

Now I come to the second sin of iniustice, whereby men abuse their callings, to the hurt and hindrance of others, either publicly or priuately. Example of this we haue in Zacheus the Publican, who enriched himselfe by caualation. Now this sin spreads it selfe as largely through all degrees and states of men, as the former sinne of couetousnesse: as will appeare, if we do but take a view of such as be the principall callings. And first, to begin with Emperors and Princes, by whom is practised the greatest iniustice that can be, as they are in the greatest callings: for many of them content not themselves with their own dominions, but encroache either by fraud or by violence on their neighbor kingdomes, and for the encreasing of their estates, spare not to shed rivers of blood. As at this day, the Turke in Asia, and the Spaniard also, who seekes by all means to make himselfe the Emperour of the West parts of the world. Like iniustice appeares in the calling of such magistrates as vie to take bribes, to respect mens persons in executing iustice and judgement, iniustice also creepes into the chaire of Moses, when the word of God, the food of mens foules is with-held, as also when it is corrupted, partly by the poison of mens errors, partly by the deuises of mans braine. Iniustice in the calling of the Lawyer, is to take larger fees, then statutes or conscience will allow: and to make delay of suites, yea to delay them, not from morning till night, as Iethro said to Moses, but from terme to terme, yea from yeare to yeare, for the increasing of their gaine. In the calling of the Physician, it is iniustice, to minister physick to the bodies of men, that is learned out of bookes, without any experience: also to minister physicke vpon the bare inspection of the vaine, which by the best learned is judged to be insufficient: & oftentimes deceitfull: yea to prescribe drunckenness and fornication for the cure of some diseases: and to minister physicke to parties absent, vpon the erecting of the figure at the time of their terrogatio. In the calling of the Merchant & trades-man, there is false weights and false measures, diuers weighes and diuers measures, ingrossing, mingling, changing, setting a glosse on wares by powdering, starching, blowing, darke shoppes, glowing, smoothing, lying, swearing, & all manner of bad dealing. In the pasture, there is presentation giuen, but with secret condition of hauing his owne tythes, or some other fleece out of the liuing. In the land-lord, there is racking of rents, taking immoderate fines, inclosing of grounds that haue been common time out of mind: & the cause is, want of sobriety and temperance in diet & apparel. In the husbandman & cornemonger, there is exceeding iniustice, in hording vp graine till the time of further advantage: & in taking whatsoever they can get for their owne, though it be to the shedding of the blood of the poore. In the calling of the Printer, which shold serue for the special good of the Church and Common-wealth, there is exceeding iniustice done to both by the publishing of scates, and hereticall bookes, whereby errors are spread abroad, as also by publishing vncleane, immodest, & vnprofitable writings. And in the calling of the Booke-seller there is like iniustice, in that they sell bookes good and bad, of truth and falshood, and that hand ouer head, without any regard, to eury one that cometh. For at this day in England a Papist may furnish himselfe almost with all kind of bookes of his own heresie, and that in the shoppes of the Protestants. A thing to be thought vpon, & that which greatly hinders the good of this our Church. Thus ouer all estates & callings the canker of iniustice hath spread it selfe, so as we may take vp the complaint of the Prophet Micah, It is hard to finde a righteous man among men, laies a net for his brother, and seeketh his burs, his blood, and utter vndoeing. This is so plaine, that he which hath but half an eye may see it. Yet the vnjust man watech not excuses, but faith, The world is nauight, & therefore they that will line in the world must doe as other me do. Ans. This indeed is the blind reason of vngodly men: but S. Paul gieth another rule, and bids vs walke vnblushingly in this present world, as lights in the midst of a crooked and peruerse generation. And though the whole world shold giue themselves to the practise of iniustice, yet he that is the child of God, must carry himselfe in his calling in such manner, that he may be a light to them with whom he lieth. Other more blinde and shamelesse, for the maintaining of their iniustice, calledge the example and practise of our Saviour Christ, in sending for another mans Aile and the Colt, whē he went to Ierusalem. But who doth not see the notorious abuse of this place of Scripture? For our Saviour Christ did this as Lord, not onely of the beast, but also of the owner. And therefore when he sent his Disciples, at the same time he inclined the heart of the owner, to be willing to let them go: shewing thereby himselfe to be the Lord, that hath the hearts of all men in his hand, & consequently the gouernour of all things else. Other allegations for the defence of iniustice are of no moment. Now then, we must enter into examination of all the workes of our callings, & finding what stands not with equity & iustice we are to forsake it. And the better to perswade vs hereunto, these reasons may be vied. First of all, it is Gods commandement, that eury man shold deale iustly in the workes of his callings: as Paul saith to Titus, The grace of God that bringeth salvation vnto all men hath appeared, & teacheth vs, that we should deny vngodlines and worldly lusts, and that we should line soberly, righteously, & godly in this present world. Again, Let no mā defraud or oppress his brother in anything. Now then, if we haue bin faulty in this kinde heretofore, let vs now begin to make conscience of this commandement. Secondly, we must consider with our selues, that so long as we practise iniustice in our particular calling, all our worship and seruice of God in prayer and thanksging, in hearing the word, & receiving the Sacraments, is an abominatio vnto the Lord. Hereupon he saith to the Iewes, I abhor your Sabbath, & new moones: and the reason is, because their hands were full of blood. Again, the Lord protesteth that the sacrifices offered vnto him by the Iewes, were, as if a man should cut off a dogs necke, and offer it him in a sacrifice, because they liued in their wickednesse. Thirdly, they that practise iniustice haue the curse of God to follow them. Paul saith, that the vnjust man shall neuer enter into the kingdome of God. And Moses saith, that they which vse false weights are an abomination to the Lord. Looke then how many practises of

Iniustice

Injustice be used in any mans calling, so many barres and stopes there bee to keepe him from the kingdom of God. Lastly, let vs marke what S. Paul saith of himselfe, that 2 Cor. 2. 11. In all things he had a care to please God, in consideration of the terror of the Lord: & that is as if he had said; I know in the last day I must come to the barre of Gods judgment, and there bee tried of all the things I doe, and therefore doe I endeavour to keepe a good conscience in all the works of my calling. And in the very same manner should every one of vs stirre vp our selues to the practise of justice, and to the avoiding of bad dealing in our callings: for at the last day, the bad practises of every man shall be made manifest, and we shall be judged according to that we haue wrought when we liued in the flesh. Thus much for the two vices to be avoided in every mans calling.

The virtues which the word of God requireth of vs in the practise of our callings, are many, but two especially: Faith, and Love. By faith, I meane not onely fauing faith; but another particular faith arising of it, whereby we must be perswaded, that our particular calling and the workes thereof, are pleasing vnto God: and that hee will giue a blessing vnto them for Christs sake. And whatsoever is not of this faith, is sin. When Nash is said to build an arke by faith, we must not onely vnderstand iustifying faith, but withall, another particular faith flowing from it: whereby he was perswaded, that the building of the Arke was a worke acceptable vnto God, and that hee should finde a blessing therein. And without this particular faith, no man can please God in any calling. Now there is a relation betweene faith, and the word: where faith is, there must be a word of God; and where the word is not, there can be no faith. And therefore that the actions of our callings may be done in faith, we must haue a word whereon to build our faith. And this word is twofold: a word of commandement, and a word of promise. The Commandement is that word of God, whereby the actions of every mans calling, are either exprefly commanded, or at least approoved. The promise, is a particular word, either directly propounded, or by iust consequent to bee gathered out of the Scripture; whereby God hath promised to blesse the labours and workes of our callings. And for knowledge of both these, must every one labour in his place. The Maiestie must haue a commandement from God in his word that must authorize him to draw the sword: and a promise of blessing and protection, when vpon good cause hee drawes the sword indeede. The like must the Minister haue for his calling, and the man of trade for his. And he that hath not both a commandement & promise, cannot possibly doe the workes of his calling in faith.

Now if any shall thinke this strange & hard, let them consider what is done in townes and corporations. Men of the fametrades, haue their Wardens and Masters of their Companies, yea decrees and ordinances, to which they binde and conformance themselves. Now if men be content to binde themselves to their owne ordinances, shall they not much more yield themselves to the commandements of God, and walke in their callings according to them? Againe, when men thus liue by faith, hauing regard to Gods commandements, it causeth them to doe their actions in obedience. And when they shall by the same faith rest vpon the promise of God, it will make them cast their workes on the Lord, and free them from carking & distrustfull cares, which pull the heart in peeces. And by this meanes also, they shall ease their mindes, when they lye vnder the crosses, that are incident vnto every calling since the fall of Adam: for in this promise we shall behold the blessing & goodness of God in the midst of our troubles. As the wood that Moses cast into the bitter waters, made them sweete: so the promise of God viewed by the eye of faith, sweeteneth the troubles and crosses of callings.

The second vertue is loue. Faith which is alone in justification, goeth not alone in life & conseruation, but loue & faith are both joynt together, for faith worketh by loue. And yet they are not one and the same vertue, but differ in their actions: as the man that serueth a Master vpon the ladder, hath vse of both his hands, with one he staith himselfe, with the other he teacheth vp his seruants: so hath every man in his calling the vse of two spiritual hands, the hand of faith, & the hand of loue: the hand of faith, keepeth him in compass, & staith the minde vpon the word of God; & the hand of loue reacheth out to selue to others in duties of loue towards God and man; and thus faith and loue differ. Now the practise of loue stands in two things. First, we must refer all the workes of our callings, to the honour, praise, and glory of God: and here is the principall thing wherein loue consists. And therefore Paul saith notably of himselfe, The love of Christ constraineth me, signifying thereby, that whereas Christ had loued him, as though his blood for him, that very loue did constrain him to refer that he could do, to the honor and praise of Christ. Now looke what Paul here saith, the same must every particular man in his calling say of himselfe: that the loue of Christ in shedding his blood for him, constrained him to doe all things for the honour & praise of his name. The second duty of loue is, to apply the workes & duties, and labours of our callings, to the good of the Church & Common-wealth, and the place whereof we are members. Thus Paul saith to the Galatians, Gal. 5. 13. Do seruice one to another by loue. And this is done, when we employ our labour, for the good of our brethren: and thus briefly we see how loue is put in practise.

If we shall examine our selues by these two points, it will appeare; that most men come short of their duties: for whereas it is the property of vsained loue, not to seeke his owne things, but the good of others: the common practise of men is to employ their paines for themselves, according to the common saying; Every man for himselfe, & God for vs al. Now are the euill daies, wherein men are louers of themselves. The moouing cause almost in every man that causeth him to do the duties of his calling, is the respect of priuate benefit. It is hard to finde a man that labours in his calling vpon loue to Gods glory and the good of his brethren. Thus we see how Gods word giues direction for the holy vse of our callings.

The second meane to sanctifie our callings, and the workes thereof, is Prayer. This prayer is that, whereby we do not onely pray vnto God for the pardon of our sins, and for the supply of such graces, as concerne life eternall, but particularly, for a blessing vpon the labours of our callings; whose beginning must be with prayer, and in due season end with thanksgiving. The commandement to this purpose is plaine, Whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Iesus giuing thanks to God, Col. 3. 17. The meaning is, that when we enterprize any business, either in speech or action, we must first call on God for his blessing, & giue him thanks in the end. David saith, Psal 127. 2. Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vaine that build it; and except the Lord keepe the Citie, the watchman keeps the watch in vaine. If Paul before hee took shipping praised on the shoare, then much more must we do it, in the maine and weighty workes of our callings. Parents in their families teach their children to say, Father I pray you blesse me, Mother I pray you blesse me. Well, Gods Church is his family, and men that liue therein are the children of God; he is the Father and the Master of that family: therefore let this practise of earthly parents teach vs, when we begin the actions of our calling, to goe to our heavenly Father for his blessing. This we must remember to practise, and so shall we sanctifie the workes of our callings.

The second thing required, in doing the workes of a mans calling in good manner, and which serues also for a good continuance in the calling, is Constancy. And it is nothing else, but a perseverance in good duties; which is the more needfull, because it is no commendation for vs, to make choise of a good and fit calling, and to enter into it, vntill wee goe through flitch in the duties thereof. For euen as the souldier in the field must not change his place, wherein hee is placed by the Generall, but must abide by it, to the ventring of his life: so must the Christian continue and abide in his calling, without change or alteration. There is a certaine lightnesse in the nature of man, whereby it cometh to passe, that many like better of other mens callings then of their owne: and herupon are moued vpon every light occasion to alter their calling. But in the text in hand, the holy Ghost meetes with this lightnesse, by commanding every man to continue constant in doing the duties of his particular calling; Let every man abide in that vocation wherein hee was called. And we must be careful to asoide three lets of Constancy: Ambition, Envy, Impatience. Ambition is a vice, whereby any man thinking better of himselfe, then there is cause he should, becomes male-content with his particular calling, and seekes for himselfe an higher place, and a better estate. An example of this Ambition we haue in our first parents: who by Satans allurements, became male-content with that estate wherein they were created, & fought to attaine to the condition of God himselfe. And this sinne of theirs cleanes fast to the nature of every man, and by it wee are easily carried to a dislike of our condition. Thus Abolom through Ambition, was moued to seeke his fathers kingdom, judging basely of his present estate; for out of naturall selfe-loue springeth Ambition. And for the better redressing of this vice in our selues, every man must enter into consideration of his owne estate: we must thinke our selues, that in respect of our bodies, we are but dust and ashes, and to dust wee must returne againe: that in respect of the disposition of our hearts, altogether set vpon sinne, we are farre more wretched then any other creature; and also that of our selues wee haue not any sufficiency for the doing of the least and smallest dutie of the basest calling in the world: for of our selues we are not sufficient to thinke one good thought, much lesse to performe a good dutie acceptable to God, in any calling whatsoever. And therefore we must consider with our selues, that in our particular callings, we are but as weake instruments in the hand of the Lord, who is the principall worker and agent. These and the like meditations might moue vs to contentation in the calling in which God hath placed vs.

The second impediment to Constancy, is Envy, which is a pining away of the heart, when we see others placed in better callings and conditions then our selues. This is a common sinne, and it is the cause of much distention in the common wealth. It is one of *Machiavel*s policies, to holde it necessarie in a common-wealth, that men of sundry degrees and callings, should enuy and maligne each other. But contrariwise it is a manifest hindrance to constancy in good duties, and hurtfull both to Church and common-wealth. And for the better redressing of this fault, we are to consider, that the greatest callings that bee, are not ordained for the maintenance of pride, & for the priuate benefit of men, but for the common good. Secondly, that such as are placed in the greatest callings, haue the greatest charges, and therefore are to yeeld vnto God the greatest account.

The third impediment of Constancy is impatience, which is a disquietnes of minde, arising fling from the continuall troubles that are incident to all callings, specially when men are not able to beare them, nor to brooke the injuries that are commonly done vnto them in word or deed. This very time maketh many a man to leaue his place. Such as goe to sea, for their delight, make choice of faire and calme daies; afterward beeing sicke, yea tossed with winde & weather; and in some danger of their liues, they with themselves on land again, being grieved they euer came on ship-board; professing if they come to land againe, neuer to come on sea any more. Euen so doth it fare with many men, both in Church and Common-wealth: they take a liking of this or that calling, they enter into it, hoping for pleasure, wealth, and approbation of men: now afterward finding themselves disappointed of their expectation, and to walke in callings with many troubles and discomforts, hereupon they become impatient, and either doe indeed, or greatly wish to leaue their callings. Now to remedy this vice, we must resolute to go on to do the duties of our callings, to go through such in all crosses or calamities that may befall vs any way: arming our selues with all meete and necessary patience. Thus Christ commanded his disciples to possesse their soules with patience. And Paul chaargeth the Philippians, to let their patient and equall minde be known to all men. The Surgeon that is to cut his patient, goes on to launch & to worke his cure, though his patient crie neuer so much: so must we in our particular callings go on with courage & constancie, to do the duties thereof, for the glory of God, & the good of men, though there be neuer so many lets & impediments to hinder vs: and as Paul saith, to passe through good report and bad report, through shame & rebuke.

And that we may thus constantly proceede in all good duties with all patience, wee must often remember, that the duties of any lawfull calling, be it neuer so base, are accepted and approoued of God. Our Saviour Christ himselfe complaineth on this manner, I haue spent my strength in vaine, I haue laboured in vaine, I haue spent my strength in vaine, Esa. 49-4. Here we see the little successe that the head and perfect Doctour of the Church had in his calling; but let vs see, how dath he comfort himselfe? surely thus in the words following, But my work is with my God: that is, howeuer men submit not themselves to my doctrine, yet my Father approoueth it. It was a thing that troubled Saint Paul, that his labor in the ministry did not turne to the good of all, but was to some the fauour of death to death: yet he comforts himselfe with this, that alwaies to God it was a sweet smelling fauour; and by the same consideration of Gods approbation, we should arme our selues with patience, that we may with good conscience goe on in good duties to the end. Thus much of the three impediments of Constancie.

To proceede yet further: Constancie here commanded, must be vnderstood with three things: with helps, vacations, changes. Touching helps, the ordinance of God is for the better continuance of callings, that culmes & tribute be paid to Magistrates necessary stipends, tythes and dues to ministers of the word: and Myser saith, Deut. 15. 7. that al such as doe the offices of their callings diligently, & for al this sal to decay, wanting the blessing of God vpon their labours, must be helped by lending freely, by forgiuing of debts, and other like curtesies. Let hard-hearted men thinke vpon this, that will not in such cases lend freely, but prey on such persons till they haue sucked their bones. These are the bane & plague of a common-wealth: these are they that make beggars and vagabonds. For where there is no free lending, there many a man goes to wracke. Vacations is to surcease fro doing the duties of a particular calling for some time or space: and it hath his warrant from Gods word, which alloweth vacation in three respects. First for religion sake, which is the principal vacation of al, & it is commanded in the fourth commandment, Remember the Sabbath day, that is, the day of rest, or of vacation, to keepe it holy. And here every man is bound in conscience before God, to surcease from the duties of his calling on the seauenth day, which is now in the new Testament, the Lords day, & so is to continue to the last iudgement. And this vacation is necessary euen in common reason; for without it there can be no good proceeding in religion. It is the meane to be gin, continue, & increase both knowledge and grace. He that hath the most excellent gifts of nature, that neuer be able to attaine to learning, vnlesse he set himselfe apart, and giue himselfe to study: much more, then the knowledge of the mysteries of the kingdome of heauen cannot be obtained, vnlesse men at some times lay aside all worldly affaires, specially on the Sabbath daies. Therefore it is for the good of families, towns, countries, and kingdomes, that the Lords day be kept, and consequently it stands vs in hand to take the benefit of this vacation, & to vse it for the increase of faith, repentance, and obedience, if we desire the saluation of our owne soules. God, who is the soueraigne King ouer all, might haue inioyned vs a perpetuall labour from one day to another for all the daies of our liues: but tendering our good and saluation, he inioyned vs to labour fixe daies, commanding a vacation on the seauenth.

The second vacation is in respect of recreation, which also hath his warrant when it is lawfully vfed. God commandeth every man to labour in his calling, and to eate his owne bread in the sweate of his browes: and in commanding labour, he alloweth the meane that make vs fit to labour. And therefore withall he admitteth lawfull recreation, because it is a necessary meane to refresh either bodie or minde, that we may the better doe the duties which pertaine vnto vs. Of recreation I haue spoke else: where therefore it shal suffice now briefly briefly to propound a canear, or two. Touching recreation, these canears must be remembered. First of al, it must be moderate, otherwise it is a meane to call and draw us from our callings. Secondly, it must be in things lawfull. Thirdly, it must be on the daies of labour: for labour is then onely commanded, and therefore recreation which is a surceasing from labour for a time, and serueth onely to make vs more able to continue in labour, must be on the fixe daies, & not on the Sabbath: at which time, because we must abstaine from ordinary labours of our callings, we are much more to abstaine from our accustomed recreations: for where that which is most necessary and principall is forbidden, there the lesse necessary is forbidden also: but labour is the more necessary and principall, and recreation serueth for labour. This being so, it is a notable abuse of many, to make the Lords day, a fet day of sport and pastime, which should be a day set apart for the worship of God, and the increase in duties of religion. And this is specially the fault of householders, which hauing employed their seruants to labour fixe whole daies together, giue them the seauenth day, which is the Lords day, for recreation.

A third vacation is in time of necessity, when men are disabled by reason of sickness, age, imprisonment, or ony other iust impediment. And the ordinance of God is, that such persons as haue the trembling hand (as Myser speaketh, Leuit. 25. 35) should be maintained with such things as be necessary to life and health, by the labour of other meane callings. This thing must not be marvelled at, for the goods we haue are not our owne, but the Lords: wee are but keepers and stewards of them. And it is Gods will that the poore should haue title to a part of euery mans goods: and for this cause it is a shame if they haue not releefe without rousing, begging, or crying.

And here two questions are to be scanned, that are much spoken of, and often mooued. First, whereas it is a general duty to visit our neighbours in time of sicknesse, it is demanded, whether it is lawfull at all to surcease from this duty in time of plague or pestilence? I answer, there may be and is a lawfull vacation from this duty, and that with good conscience for some time, & vpon some occasion. For first of all, it is lawfull to maintaine our owne liues, so be without the hurt or hinderance of the liues of other men: now to flye in time of contagious pestilence, is to preferre the life of some without the hurt of any. Secondly, in common dangers, as in time of famine, fire, and sword, men fort their safety may flye from their neighbours, & therefore by like proportion, we may flye in the time of contagious sicknesse. Thirdly, in the Church of the Iewes the Leper was put apart from the societie of men: and that in effect, was as much, as if all the Iewes had withdrawn themselves from his societie: And therefore now it is not simply vnlawfull to die in time of contagious pestilence. It is alleged, that to flye is a flat distrust of God, as though wee would not preferre and defend vs. I answer, that distrust of God is not a fault in the action of flying, but in the persons that flye. Men that labour for meate and drinke, doe many times distrust the goodnesse of God: yet the fault is not in the labour it self, but in the parties that endure the labour. Secondly, it is alleged, that to flye is to forsake those to whom owe are vntied in the bond of neighbourhood, which is vnlawfull. I answer, when the parties visited haue sufficient helpe appointed by the Magistrate, both for their bodies and soules, then to flye is not to forsake, and in such cases, parties visited are not to desire the presence of their neighbours. It is alleged, that Dauid neuer fled away when the people were smitten with the plague. I answer, There be special reasons thereof. First, that plague was sent by God vpon a suddaine. Secondly, his very fine was the cause of the said plague vpon the people. Thirdly, Dauid had no cause to flye, because hee then was assured that himselfe should escape. Thus then the visiting of neighbours and friends, though it be a needfull duty, sometimes admits vacations, in which wee may with good conscience goe aside, and seek the fauour of our owne selues: and those that belong vnto vs: if so be necessary helpe be otherwise provided for the sicke.

The second question is, whether the Ministers of the Gospel may flye in time of persecution? I answer, they may, if they be freed from the bonds of their callings, whereby they are tied to their charges. Thus Myser fled to Midian; and Paul out of Damascus: and our Saviour Christ from among the Iewes. Secondly, I adde, that Ministers not freed from their callings, may by the consent of their people, for a time go aside, for their owne safety, & the further good of men, till the brunt of the persecution be ouer: specially if they in particular be ayimed at. While Demetrius had raised a tumult in Ephesus about Diana, and the people had caught Pauls companions, Gaius and Aristarchus: Paul moued with zeale, would haue entered into the midst of the preache; but as S. Luke saith, certaine brethren oueruled him, and would not suffer him to enter, but cawed him to withdraw himself. Thus then it is manifest, that in common dangers, publike callings admit their vacations in sundry causes. Thus much of vacations, now I come to changes.

A change of calling, is a lawfull going from one calling to another. It is not the Apostles meaning to barre men to diuert from this or that calling, but he giues them an stem to keepe them from changing vpon euery light conceit, and euery suddaine occasion. And that changes may lawfully be made, it appears thus: Amos by calling was first a heard man, but after a Prophet, the Disciples were first fisher-men, and after Apostles. Our Sauour Christ himself was by calling a Carpenter, in his first and priuate life, all he was thirty yeares old: yet after his baptisme, he shewed himselfe to be the Messias, and Saviour of the world. Neuerthelesse, a change may not be made, but vpon vrgent and weightie causes; and they are two especially; Private necessity, is when men cannot maintaine themselves and theirs by the callings in which they are; for then they may betake themselves to other callings. Thus a Merchant man may become an husbandman, and an husbandman, a Merchant. Thus a Physitian may become a minister of the Gospel. And Paul an Apostle, vpon private necessity, returned to the calling of a Tent-maker; yet so as he performed his ministry, when occasion was offered.

The second cause of making chancelawfull, is the publike good. Thus may a private man become a Magistrate. And it must bee remembered, that so oft as we change, it must bee to better and more excellent callings, in which we may glorifie God more, and bring greater benefit to the Church and Common-wealth. Thus Paul biddeth the Corinthians to seeke for the best gifts, which might serue for the best callings. And here the fault of some is to be reprooed, that hauing notable gifts of nature and learning, because they would attaine to worldly wealth, make themselves Merchants, or factors to merchants, or seruemen to great persons; whereas for their gifts, they might do God better seruice in the greatest callings of the Church. And thus much of constancy.

The consideration of this, that we are bound to be constant in duties of our particular callings, must reach vs much more to be constant in the generall duties of Christianity. And therefore let vs all be carefull, not onely profess the true religion for the present time, but to continue constant in this professio vnto the end. Our generall calling admits no vacation nor change as our particular callings do. Well then, in that we profess our selues to be members of Christ, in these our happy daies of peace let vs arme our selues against the euill daies to come, that we may be faithfull to the end.

Again, in the generall calling, every man is bound in all good conscience, to obey God in all his commandments: here also must our constancy appeare, so long as we liue, that we may say with Paul, 1. Tim. 4. 7. I haue fought my course I haue fought a good fight. And with Hezekias on his death-bed, Isa. 38. 3. Lord remember how I haue walked before thee, with an upright heart: & haue done that which is acceptable in thy sight. God hath made a most mercifull promise of life euertlasting, which is the comfort of all comforts, & without which, the case of Gods children were of all most miserable. And this promise is made to them that continue faithfull vnto the end: these are they on whom God will bestow the crowne of life. And thus much for continuance in our callings.

A The last point to be considered, is the good ending thereof. And herein are two things required: The Resignement, and the Account. In the parable of the rich man; the Lord calleth his steward, and biddeth him giue an account of his stewardship, for he can be no longer steward: where wee see; besides the resignation of our callings, there must an account be made of our doings therein. Of these two in order. The Resignement of a calling, is nothing else, but the laying downe of the said calling, by ceasing to put in execution the workes and duties thereof. In the resignation of callings, two things must be considered. First, the time when. Secondly, the manner how. The time is not left in our owne choice: for we may not leave our callings when we please; but the prescribing thereof belongs to God: like as in the field, the fouldier may not leave his standing when hee will, vntill hee haue a warrant from the Capitaine. For as the case stands in one kinde of calling, so by proportion in the rest. Now in one particular calling, namely, in the office of the Leuite, the entrance into it, the continuance, and the ending of it, is in the will of God, who prescribes the time when hee must enter, namely, at the age of thirty yeares: and how long must he continue, twenty yeares: and when hee must end, namely, at fifty yeares. And therefore the prescribing of particular seasons and times of laying downe other callings, is not altogether without the will of God. Hence it follows, that no man is to lay downe the calling wherein he is placed, till he can say by some warrant in his conscience, that it is the good will and pleasure of God, that hee shall then resigne and cease to do the duties thereof any longer.

This rule hath his truth in all things whatsoever, whether pertaining to the Church or common-wealth. And by it we may iudge on the contrary, what may be thought of resignements of callings, both ciuill, and Ecclesiastical vpon no other ground, but the very wils of men, for the attainment of greater wealth, pleasure, and preferment.

C To go yet further in this point. Callings are of two sorts: changeable, & perpetual. Changeable callings are such as are imposed for a season: as for a yeare or two, or longer: and such callings are to be resigned, according to the appointment of them that imposed them. But in perpetual callings, the case stands otherwise, and other conditions are required. Neuerthelesse, there bee foure speciall times, in which such kinde of callings may be resigned. First, when men are vterly disabled, either by age, or by any vncurable disease of bodie or minde, or by want of gifts: then indeed whatsoever the calling be, either publike, or priuate ciuill, or Ecclesiastical, it may be laid downe. When Moses was stricken in yeares, and saw the end of his daies at hand, hee called the whole congregation, and telseth them that being an hundred and twenty yeares old, he was no more able to goe in and out before them:

D that

Numb. 8.

Deut. 31. 2. 7.

that is, doe the office of a Iudge, and Prince: and therefore resignes his office to Jehush, who indged the people in his stead.

The second time of resignation is, when any man is lawfully despoised for a crime or offence committed. Thus the Priests that offered sacrifice before the Lord, if they fell away to idolatry, were despoised from the office of the Priesthood, & euerafter were employed in some seruice in the Temple.

The third time of resignation, is the time of death: for when God calls vs from this life, we then receive a discharge from our particular callings: for after this life, the children of God cease from their labours, & in their death, begin their perpetual & eternal Sabbath. For the time of this life, by Gods commandment, we rest euery seventh day, and labour in the sixt; but after, we shal continually without ceasing, doe that, which now for subsistence, we doe on the Sabbath day: that is, honour, & praise, and glorifie the name of God, in euertlasting glory.

The fourth time of resignation, is at the last day of iudgement, to them that shal bee then aliuie: that is, the generall time of all resignments: for as S. Paul saith; Christ Iesus must then resigne his Kingdome vp into his fathers hands, & put downe all humane rule & authority & power: for then ciuill, Ecclesiastical, and economical states and callings, in regard of government, must haue an end. Yea, Christ himselfe, in regard of the manner of his regiment, must giue vp his kingly office, and the execution both of his priesthood, and propheticall office, must then also haue an end, though the vertue and fruit thereof shal abide for euer. Then there shall be no more prince, nor people; magistrate, nor subiect; master, and seruant; parents, and children; but God shal be all in all to the elect. Thus we see the time of resignments the manner followes.

The manner is, to resigne them, in, and with the testimony of a good conscience: which is, when our consciences beare witness, that we haue in the workes of our callings, kept our selues vnblameable and haue ideauoured in all things, to do the will of God. Examples we haue of this in the Scripture. When Sammel was no longer able to iudge the people, hee called the whole congregation of the Israelites, protesting vnto them, that hee had not taken any mans oxe or asse, received any bribes, or done any man wrong, but in all things, kept a good conscience. And answerable to this protestation was the peoples testimony. And S. Paul, when hee drew neere to the end of his daies, saith; hee had now fought a good fight, & kept the faith; and that now it remained onely, that God should giue him a crown of righteousness, laid vp for all those that loue the appearing of the Lord Iesus. Now in the day of iudgement, it shal not suffice, that men and women are found in the workes of their callings (though that is farre better, then to bee employed in the workes of vngodlinesse) I say,

A it shal not suffice: for at the last day, two shal bee in the field, in the workes (no doubt) of their callings; yet the one shal bee taken, the other refused: two women shal bee grinding at the mill, the one shal be taken, the other refused. Therefore, besides the practise of a lawfull calling, care must be had to keepe a good conscience to the end, both before God and man. And thus much of resignments.

The second & last point is, the Account that every man must make of the workes of his calling. Now, that such an account is to be made, it appeares in the parable of the rich man. And S. Paul saith; Every man must goe to iudgement, & giue an account for himselfe. And Salomon tels the yong man, toying in his owne waies, that for at this, hee shal come to iudgement. Few are truly perswaded of this last and great account, because it is deferred: but we ought to be of better resolution, and prepare our selues for it.

Touching this Account, two things must be considered. First, what is the account. Secondly, how it is made. The giuing of an account, is nothing els, but an action of the reasonable creature, especially of man, wherein hee must be answerable and accountant to God for all his actions, both of his general, & of his particular callings. And by the law of nature, wee are bound to this: yea, if inferior officers in the Common-wealth, become accountable to the highest Magistrates for all their doings, then much more must every creature become accountable to God his Creator, for the duties of his calling, wherein hee doth him homage and seruice.

There are foure things required in this account. I. The presentment of euery mans person before God. II. The manifestation of all the workes that they haue done. III. The examining and rendring to euery man according to his works. For the first; the presentation of all persons, before the tribunal of Christ, shal bee brought to passe by the power of God: for as in the beginning every creature had his being by the word of God, so shal it bee in the day of iudgement: God shal but speake the word, and all reasonable creatures, liuing and dead though many thousand yeares before, shal present themselves before him, to giue account of all the actions done in this life. Secondly, when all men and Angels are set before the presence of Christ, then shal every worke that they haue done, be made manifest, euen the most secret workes of all; as Ecclesiastes saith: God will bring every secret thing to light. And if any thinke it strange, wee must know, that God hath bookes of record, wherein all mens thoughts, and words, and deedes good or badde, secret or open, are inrolled. And of these speaketh Daniel when hee saith: that hee saw the Auncient of daies; and the bookes laid open. We may not imagine that these be materiall bookes like to the registers of men, or the bookes of Captaines in the field, wherein are set downe the names of their souldiers, & their expences. But by these books we must understand: first of all, the infinite knowledge and providence of God; secondly, the consciences of men, to testify of our doings, & be as a thousand witnesses. The third thing that is done in this account, is the trial of every mans worke, in respect of obedience, or disobedience. The trial shall be made by the wil of God, revealed partly in the law, and partly in the Gospel, which is the rule to discern good and euill workes. The fourth and last action, is the giuing of reward to every man, according to his workes. He that hath bene a faithfull seruant, shall heare the voice of Christ, saying vnto him; Matth. 25. 21. It is well done, thou good and faithfull seruant, thou hast bene faithfull in a little, enter into thy masters ioy. But he that hath bene vnfaithfull, or vniust in the workes of his calling, shall heare the same voice of Christ, saying; Take him, bind him hand and foot, and cast him into utter darkenesse. And thus we see what this account shall be.

Now then, let vs a little search how we may be able to make a good account before God at the last day. For the doing whereof, we must take a fore-hand reckoning of our selues, in the time of our life. For in common experience we see, that such as desire to make iust reckonings with others, doe reckon first with themselves. In this fore-had reckoning, three things must be done. First, we must draw out the bill of our receipts and expences. The bills of receipt are framed thus: we must call to remembrance, what graces, blessings, and gifts, we haue receiued of God, whether temporall, or spirituall. For temporall blessings, we must thoroughly bethinke vs of our peace, health, wealth, liberty and good name, and all things of this kinde. For things spirituall, we must consider what knowledge, faith, hope, loue & repentance God hath bestowed vpon vs: as also what gifts we haue receiued for the discharge of our callings: yea, of all other things that we haue enjoyed, we must take a full and iust receipt; for they are the talents of our Lord, and he looks for a reckoning. This done, we are next to frame our bills of expences: which are nothing else, but large considerations of our owne finnes, calling them all to our remembrance, as much as we can, whether committed against God or man, with all the abuses of our gifts, all our ignorances, negligences and frailties whatsoeuer. Tradersmen, for their temporall estates, keepe in their shoppes bookes of receipts and expences: shall not we then much more doe the like for our spirituall estates? Iob 3. If he dispute with God, he cannot answer one word for a thousand; whereby he insinuates thus much, that hee had looked into the whole course of his life, & had found euen thousands of finnes in himselfe. When the Prophet David saith, Psal. 19. 12. Who knoweth the errors of this life? the signifieth that he had exercised himselfe in searching out his owne offences and transgressions. Ezra could not haue said, that his finnes, and the finnes of the people, were as an huge mountain: but that he first took a narrow account of his owne life, and of the liues of the people. And so must every one of vs doe for all the things that euer wee did. The consideration of our earthly matters, makes vs know our worldly estate: and so wil the consideration of our daily offences, & our spirituall estate, giue vs some light and knowledge, how the case will stand with vs, when we shall appeare before the great God of all the world, to giue vp our account.

Now, when these two bills of our accounts are made, we must consider in the next place, whether wee bee able to make an euen reckoning with God, or no. Thus doing, we shall find that our reckonings wil be farre short of that, which God requireth at our hands. Few there be that thinke on these things: for men commonly perswade themselves, that all shall goe well with them at the day of iudgement, and that they shall make a short and easie reckoning, because God is merciful. It is hard to find men whose hearts are touched, or their eyes open to see and beleue: First, that they must make an account: And secondly, that they are vnterly vnable to doe it; as Iob was, that could not excuse one of a thousand of his offences before God. Let vs therefore labour to see our vneuen and skant reckonings, & to shake off that spiriual drowlines which possesseth our mindes, that wee cannot so much as say; what haue I done? and how stands the case betwene God and me? and when we haue attained to this knowledge, that we are vnable to make a iust reckoning with God: in the 3. place, wee must cleaue to our surety Christ Iesus, the onely sonne of God, God and man: & for the time of this life, we must humble our selues before God and pray vnto him, that he would accept the onely satisfaction of Christ in his death and passion, as a sufficient payment for all our finnes and wants whatsoeuer: for thus we are taught to pray; Forgiue vs our debts. And we must not onely be hearers of these things, but doers also. And the better to perswade vs to the practise of these three duties, let vs consider, that this account at the last day, shall be a strait account: for as Christ saith; We must giue an account for every idle word. And S. Paul saith, The law is an hand-writing of condemnation: that is, a bill of our owne hand against vs: for by the law, we are debtors to God; and either wee must fulfill the iustice thereof, or else, according to the tenour of the law, vnder goe eternall iudgement, vntill wee be acquitted by the obedience of a Mediator. If we thinke to escape this account, by absenting our selues, we are deceived: for then, not so much as one man in all the world, shall bee wanting. Many shall then wish with all their hearts, that hills and mountaines would fall vpon them, and grind them to powder, that they might be hid from the presence of the Lord. But that will not serue. All, without exception,

Ezra 9.6.

Mat. 12. 36. Col. 2. 14

must needs come to this account, not one shall be freed. And we may not thinke, that Christ wil either not know, or remember our particular offences. We vse to make faire weather with men, and to keepe close our doings from the eyes of the world; but the Lord wil descry our most secret finnes: in him is no want of knowledge or discerning: he can finde out Adam, though he be in the thicket of paradise, and descry him in the midst of his fig-leaves. At this great day of account, every secret thing shall be made manifest. What shall we then do? Some do pleade, that they are no great sinners, they are no whore-mongers, no adulterers, nor blasphemers, nor theues; and therefore they hope to make an account good enough. But (alas) this is a fond and a poore excuse; for the wages of the least sin, is death. And he that breaketh the law but once, and that in thought onely, is guiltie of eternall condemnation: and therefore it will not goe for payment to say, we are not great sinners, as other men be. What then shall we say? that we haue walked in our callings, and alwaies had a good meaning, and did no man hurt; and therefore we hope that God wil be mercifull? This indeede is the common excuse, but it is not sufficient payment with God: for as Iohn saith, Matth. 3. 10. The axe is laid to the root of the tree; and he saith not further, that every tree shall stand, which bringeth not forth bad fruit; but, every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit, shall be cut downe, and cast into the fire. In a word, let vs deniue what we can, it wil not serue

the turne. Wilt thou make vp thy reckoning with almes-deeds, and good workes, according to the opinion of many, that Locke to be saved by their workes? but they are no currant payment in this account; because one breach of the law, marres all the good workes we doe. And he that will be iustified by workes, is bound to fulfill the whole law, in the rigour thereof. Besides this, the best workes we doe, are in themselves defiled in the sight of God. What then shall we doe? shall we vndergoe the curse of the law? Some of a desperate minde say, if the worst come, there is but one out of the way: but far be it from vs, thus to thinke or speake: for the curse of the law, and the wrath of God, is most horrible and eternall, without rest or ease. All the fire in the world, is but ice, in regard of that spiriual and eternall fire of hell. Thus then, hauing turned our selues every way, and finding no helpe in any thing, we must flie vnto our surety, Christ Iesus, who was content to stand in our roome vpon the Crosse, and there to shed his blood for the redemption of our finnes.

Thus in this life, while the day of grace remaineth, are we to make a fore-hand reckoning with our selues, in our owne persons, neuer resting, till we haue assurance in our consciences, that the bookes in heauen are cancelled; and that God is content to account of Christ his satisfaction, as a payment for our finnes. And this being done, we shall be able to make a good account before the Lord, at the last day of iudgement.

FINIS.

Amen. Amen.
